SCOOP, a hollow vessel for ladling out water, a large ladle. (F.—Scand.) ME. scope. 'Scope, instrument, Vatile, Alveolus;' Prompt. Parv. The pl. scopes, and the verb scopen, to ladle out water, occur in Manning's Hist. of England, ed. Furnivall, 8164, 8168 (Stratmann). — OF. escope (F. écoppe), a scoop (Hatzfeld). — Swed. skopa, a scoop; MSwed. skopa, with sense of L. haustrium (Ihre). — MDu. schoepe, a scoop, Hexham; MHG. schuofe. Cf. G. schöpfen, to draw water. — Teut. **skōp*, 2nd grade of Teut. **skap*-, as in OSax. skeppian (for **skap-jan*), Du. scheppen, OHG. schephan (pt. t. scuof), to draw up water. Der. scoop, vb., ME. scopen, as above; coal-scoop.

SCOPE, view, space surveyed, space for action, intention. (Ital.—Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 52. 'Wherein . . . we haue giuen ouer large a skope;' Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 460. Florio has Ital. scopo, 'a marke or but to shoote at, a scope, purpose, intent.' We seem to have taken it from Ital., as it is not a F. word, and has a more limited sense in Gk. — Gk. σκοπός, a watcher, spy; also a mark to shoot at. — Gk. **skōp*-, second grade of **skēp*-, as in σκεπτομαι, I consider, see, spy. Cf. Sceptic.

SCORBUTIC, pertaining to, or afflicted with scurvy. (Low L.—Scand.?) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: 'Scorbute (scorbutus), the disease called the scurvy; scorbutil, pertaining, or subject to that disease.' Cf. 'the Scuruie or Scorbute;' Purchas's Pilgrimage, bk. ix. c. 13. § ii (1617); p. 1086. Formed with suffix -ic from Low L. scorbūtus, a Latinized form which some think was derived from MDu. scheuren, to break, and bot, a bone (Weigand); which is very unlikely. β. It appears rather to have been formed with L. suffix -ūtus (cf. ac-ūtus) from Swed. skorf (Dan. skurv, ME. scurf), i. e. 'scurf'; so that scorbūtus would express (1) scurvy, adj., and (2) scurvy, sb. This L. form was further debased so as to give Low G. schorbock, scurvy, also spelt schärbuuk, scharbock; see Bremen Wörterbuch, s. v. schärbuuk. Cf. MDu. scheur-buyck, 'the scurvie in the gums,' Hexham; Du. scheurbuik. Also G. scharbock, scurvy, tartar on the teeth. γ. The Low G. schürbuuk is due to a popular etymology; viz. from scheren, to separate, part aside, tear, rupture, and buuk, the belly; so also Du. scheur-buik, from scheuren, to tear, rend, crack, and buik, the belly. The verbs are allied to E. Shear. The Low G. buuk, Du. buik, G. bauch, are the same as Icel. búkr, the trunk of the body, for which see Bulk (2). But see Scurvy. Der. scorbutil-al.

SCORCH, to burn slightly, burn the surface of a thing. (F.—L.) ME. scorchen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. ii. met. 6, l. 18 (foot-note), as a variant of scorklen; Romans of Partenay, 3678. — OF. escorcher, escorcer, 'to flay or pluck off the skin;' Cot. Cf. Span. escorchar, Ital. scorticare, to flay. β. These are due to Late L. excorticāre, to take off the skin; Ducange. — L. ex, off; and cortic-, stem of cortex, bark, rind, husk. But the peculiar sense was prob. due to confusion with ME. scorklen, to scorch (above), and ME. scorcned, dried up, parched, Ormulum, 8626. These words seem to be of Scand. origin, and allied to Norw. skrokkna, to shrivel, skrokken, shrunk; which are further allied to Shrink. Perhaps further confused with ME. scorch (scortch), to score, scratch; see Notes on E. Etym., p. 259. Cf. prov. E. scorch, to shrivel up, and scorch, to scratch. See Scotch.

SCORE, a notch or line cut; a reckoning; twenty. (Scand.) ME. score; 'ten score tymes;' P. Plowman, B. x. 180. It is supposed that, in counting numbers by notches on a stick, every twentieth number was denoted by a longer and deeper cut or score. At Lowestoft, narrow passages cut in the side of the slope towards the sea are called scores. AS. scoru, twenty; which occurs, according to Napier, in a MS. of the AS. version of the Rule of St. Bennet, but is borrowed from Scandinavian. — Icel. skor, skora, a score, notch, incision; Swed. skåra, Dan. skaar, the same. From Teut. **skor*-, weak grade of **skeran*-, to shear, cut; see Shear. Der. score, to cut, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 2; also to count by scoring, Chaucer, C. T. 13346 (B 1606).

SCORIA, dress, slag from burnt metal. (L.—Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 4. — L. scōria. — Gk. σκωρία, filthy refuse, dross, scum. — Gk. σκῶπ, dung, ordure. — AS. scearn, dung.

SCORN, disdain, contempt. (F.—OHG.) ME. scorn (dat. scorne), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 169, l. 1; schorn (scharn), Ancren Riwe, p. 126, l. 24; (skarn), Ormulum, 4402; (scarn), scorn, Layamon, 17307. — OF. escorne, scorn; Cot. — OF. escorner, to humiliate, mock at; orig. 'to deprive of horns;' from L. ex, out (of), and cornu, a horn. β. But the ME. scarn in the same sense is from the OF. escarn, scorn, derision, Burguy; whence OF. escarnir, escharnir, to deride. We find OF. pp. pl. escharnys, glossed by E. scornid, in Wright's Vocab. i. 144, l. 8. Cf. Ital. scherno, derision. — OHG. skern, mockery, scurrility; whence OHG. scernōn, to deride. Der. scorn, verb, ME. scornen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 81; skarnen, Ormulum, 7397, from OF. escarnir, escharnir; also scorn-ful, K. Lear, ii. 4. 168; scorn-ful-ly; scorn-er, P. Plowman, B. xix. 279.

SCORPION, a stinging insect, a sign of the zodiac. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. scorpion, K. Alisaunder, 5263. — F. scorpion, 'a scorpion;' Cot. — L. scorpiōnem, acc. of scorpio, another form of scorpius, a scorpion. — Gk. σκορπίος, a scorpion, a prickly sea-fish, a prickly plant.

SCOTCH, to cut with narrow incisions. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 198; Macb. iii. 2. 13; cf. scotch, sb., a slight cut, Antony, iv. 7. 10. ME. scocchen; as in 'scocched it with knyues,' cut it about with knives; Hoccleve, De Regim. Princ., p. 134, l. 3727. In the Babees Book, p. 80, we find: 'With knyfe scortche not the boorde,' do not score the table with your knife. It seems to be an extension from scor-en, to score, affected by the verb scorch, to flay; perhaps even by the verb scutch. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 259. See Score. Cf. prov. E. scorch, to scotch; in E. D. D.

SCOT-FREE, free from payment. (Hybrid; F.—Teut. and E.) Scot means 'payment;' we frequently find scot and lot, as in Shak. 1 Hen. IV, v. 4. 115; Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 7. 11; see a paper by D. P. Fry on scot and lot, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 167. The phrase occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 491, in the Laws of Will. I. § v; 'omnis Francigena, qui tempore Eadwardi propinqui nostri fuit in Anglia particeps consuetudinum Anglorum, quod ipsi dicunt an hlote et an scote, persolvat secundum legem Anglorum.' Here an = on, in, by. See also Liber Albus, ed. Riley, pp. 128, 269. Scot is a F. form. — AF. and OF. escot (F. écot), a payment, esp. a payment into a common fund, into which it is shot; whence escotter, 'every one to pay his shot, or to contribute somewhat towards it,' Cot.; disner à escot, 'a dinner at an ordinary, or whereat every guest pays his part,' id.; so that scot = a tavern-score, is certainly the same word; cf. 'Simbolum, escot de taverne,' Wright's Voc. i. 134. — Icel. skot, a shot, a contribution. — Du. schot; G. schoss, a scot, shot; AS. sceot, which gave the form shot. — Teut. **skut*-, weak grade of **skeut-an*-, to shoot. See Shoot. ¶ The phrase scot and lot, as a whole, presents some difficulty, and has been variously interpreted; the lit. sense is 'contribution and share;' I suppose that originally scot meant a contribution towards some object to which others contributed equally, and that lot meant the privilege and liability thereby incurred; mod. E. subscription and membership. See Mr. Fry's paper, which is full of information. Doublet, shot.

SCOUNDREL, a rascal, worthless fellow. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 36; and in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Not common in old authors; used by Cotgrave to translate F. maraud. Formed, with agential suffix -el, from prov. E. and Scottish skunner or scowner, to loathe, shun; also, to cause loathing; with excrescent d after n. This word scunner was also used as a sb., to express an object of dislike.

β. Thus Brockett gives: 'Scunner, to nauseate, feel disgust, to loathe, to shy, as a horse in harness. It is also applied, figuratively, to a man whose courage is not at the sticking place, one who shrinks through fear.' So also Jamieson has: 'Scunner, Scouner, to loathe, shudder, hesitate, shrink back through fear; Scunner, Skonner, sb., loathing, a surfeit; also, any person or thing which excites disgust.' Also: 'Scunner, vb. trans., to disgust, cause loathing.' To which the suffix -el has been added; cf. cocker-el. γ. The verb scunner is the frequentative form from a verb = AS. scunian, to shun; the sk sound being preserved (as usual) in the North of England. Hence scoun-d-r-el = scun-er-el, one whom one constantly shuns, or merely 'a shunner,' a coward. The word is rather Scand. than E.; having sc, not sh. In Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 651, we have: 'And skunnyrrit tharfor na kyn thing' = and did not shrink through fear one bit on that account; where the Edinb. MS. has scounryt; showing that skunnyr = scouner. And again, in the same, v. 211, where one MS. has schonand (shunning), the other has skownrand (scunnering), both words meaning 'dreading'; showing that skowner is the frequentative of scun = shun. Cf. Icel. skunda, to speed, to hasten, Swed. dial. skunna sig, to hasten away. See Shun.

SCOUR (1), to cleanse by hard rubbing, to make bright. (L.) ME. scouren; 'scowryn away ruste'; Prompt. Parv. 'As any bason scoured newe'; Rom. of the Rose, 540. Cf. OF. escurer, 'to scowre'; Cot.; also Span. escurare; MItal. scurare, 'to skoure dishes, to rub or cleanse harnesses,' Florio. [Hence also Swed. skura, Dan. skure, to scour; the word not occurring in Icelandic.] — L. excūrāre, to take great care of, of which the pp. excūrātus occurs in Plautus; see Diez. — L. ex, here used as an intensive prefix; and cūrāre, to take care, from cūra, care. See Ex- and Cure. ¶ The ou in ME. scouren is much better explained by supposing a derivation from L. excūrāre directly; or rather, from Late L. scūrāre, to scour (Duc.), a monkish form of the same. Der. scour-er.

SCOUR (2), to run hastily over. (F.—L.) 'When swift Camilla scours the plain'; Pope, Ess. on Criticism, 372. 'Apon the moss a scurrou sone fand he; To scour the land Makfadjane had him send'; Blind Harry, Wallace, vii. 796. — OF. escourre, escorre, to run, run out. — L. excurrere, to run out, make excursions. — L. ex, out; currere, to run. See Excursion. Der. ME. scurr-our (= scour-er); cf. Ital. scorridore, a scout. See Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 261; and p. 264 (s. v. Scur).

SCOURGE, a whip, instrument of punishment. (F.—L.) ME. scourge, Wyclif, John, ii. 15; schurge, O. E. Homilies, i. 283, l. 11; Ancren Riwe, p. 418. — AF. escorge, Langtoft, ii. 430; OF. escorgie (see Littré), mod. F. escourgée, écourgée, a scourge. Cot. has escourgée, 'a thong, latchet, scourge, or whip.' Cf. MItal. scoria, 'a whip, scourge,' scoriare, 'to whip,' scoriata, scoriada, 'a whipping; also, the same as scoria, i.e. a whip; Florio. β. The MItal. scoriata answers to L. excoriata, lit. flayed off, hence a strip of skin or shred of leather for a whip; pp. of excoriāre, to strip off skin. — L. ex, off; and corium, skin; see Ex- and Cuirass. γ. We might explain the MItal. verb scoriare directly from L. excoriāre, to excoriate, to flay by scourging. Der. scourge, ME. scourgen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 263, l. 5304.

SCOUT (1), a spy. (F.—L.) ME. scoute (spelt scout, but riming with oute), Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 2218. — OF. escoute, 'a spie, eave-dropper, also, a scout, scout-watch'; Cot. Verbal sb. from escouter, 'to hearken'; id. — L. auscultāre, to hearken; see Auscultation. β. The transfer in sense, from listening to spying, causes no difficulty; the OF. escoute means both listener and spy.

SCOUT (2), to ridicule, reject an idea. (Scand.) In Todd's Johnson; noted as a vulgar word. Cf. Lowland Scotch scout, 'to pour forth any liquid forcibly'; Jamieson. The latter sense is closely related to shoot. — Icel. skūta, skūti, a taunt; cf. skūta, to jut out, allied to skota, skotra, to shove, skot-yrði, scoffs, taunts, and to the strong verb skjóta (pt. t. skaut, pl. skutu, pp. skotinn), to shoot. Cf. Swed. skjuta, (1) to shoot, (2) to shove, push; skjuta skulden på, to thrust the blame on; Dan. skyde, (1) to shoot, (2) to shove; skyde skylden på, to thrust the blame on; skyde vand, to repel water. Thus the sense is to shoot, push away, reject. See Shoot.

SCOUT (3), a projecting rock. (Scand.) In place-names, as Raven-Scout. 'The steep ridges of rocks on Beetham-fell (Westmoreland) are called scouts'; A Bran New Wark (E. D. S.), l. 193, footnote. — Icel. skūta, to jut out; see Scout (2).

SCOWL, to look angry, to lower or look gloomy. (Scand.) ME. scoulen; spelt scowle, Prompt. Parv. The devils who gather round a dying man are said to 'skoul and stare'; Pricke of Conscience, 2225. — Dan. skule, to scowl, cast down the eyes. Cf. Icel. skolla, to skulk, keep aloof, skolli, a skulker, a fox, the devil; Du. schuilen, to skulk, lurk, lie hid. That these are connected words is shown by Low G. schulen, to hide oneself, not to let oneself be seen, and the prov. G. (Ditmarsch) schulen, to hide the eyes, to look slyly as if peeping out of a hiding-place, look out. β. From the sb. seen in EFries. schül, Du. schuil, Dan. skjul, shelter (whence Dan. skjule, to hide), Icel. skjöl, a shelter, cover. Teut. base **skeul-*, **skül-*; from ✓SKEU, to cover. Thus the sense is 'to peep out of a hiding-place,' or to look from under the covert of lowering brows. Der. scowl, sb.; also scul-k, q. v.

SCRABBLE, to scrawl. (Scand.) In 1 Sam. xxi. 13; where the marginal note has 'made marks.' Cf. prov. E. scrabble, to scratch, frequentative of scrab, to scratch, i.e. to scrape (Halliwell). — Norw. skrabba, to scrape (Röss); Dan. skrabe, to scrape; Du. schrabben. Variant of prov. E. scrapple, to scrape (E. D. D.); which is a frequentative of Scrape, q. v. Cf. scrabble, to scribble; E. D. D.

SCRAGGY, lean, rough. (Scand.) Cotgrave translates F. escharde by 'a little, lean, or skraggie girle, that looks as if she were starved.' Cf. Prov. E. scrag, a crooked, forked branch, also, a lean thin person (Halliwell); shrags, the ends of sticks. Allied to prov. E. scrog, a stunted bush, scroggy, abounding in underwood, scrogs, blackthorn, scroggy, twisted, stunted, scrog-legs, bandy-legs (id.). ME. scroggy, covered with underwood, or straggling bushes. 'The wey toward the Cite was strong, thorny, and scroggy'; Gesta Romanorum, ed. Herrtage, p. 19, l. 19. — Swed. dial. skragger, a weak old man, skragga, to walk with difficulty; Norw. skragg, a poor weak creature, skraggen, scraggy (Röss). Cf. Icel. skröggligr, scraggy; North Fries. skrog, a lean man; Dan. skrog, a carcase, a poor creature. See Shrug, Shrink. Der. scraggi-ness.

SCRAMBLE, to catch at or strive for rudely, struggle after, struggle. (E.) 'And then she'll scramble too'; Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 3. 'I'll scramble yet amongst them'; id. Captain, ii. 1 (Jacomio). 'The cowardly wretch fell down, crying for succour, and scrambling through the legs of them that were about him'; Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii. (R.). Not found in ME. A frequentative form of prov. E. scramb, to pull, or rake together with the hands, scramp, to catch at, to snatch at; E. D. D. It may also be regarded as a nasalised form of prov. E. scrabble, to scramble (Somerset), allied to scraffle, to scramble, and scrapple, to grub about, which is the frequentative of prov. E. scrap, to scratch. Halliwell cites 'to scrappe as a henne dose' from a MS. Dict. of A. D. 1540; which is merely E. scrape. And see Scrabble. Der. scramble, sb.; scrambl-er.

SCRANNEL, thin, poor, wretched. (Scand.) In Milton, Lycidas, 124. Cf. prov. E. scrannel, lean, wretched, weak (of the voice); scranny, meagre. — Swed. dial. skran, weak; Norw. skran, thin, lean, dry; skranaleg, lean (Röss); Dan. skranten, sickly, weakly. Cf. Swed. dial. and Norw. skrinn, thin, lean, weak, dry. And cf. AS. scrimman (pt. scramm), to shrink.

SCRAP, a small piece, shred. (Scand.) ME. scrappe. 'And also þif I myst gadre eny *scrappe*s of the releef of the twelf cupes,' i.e. any bits of the leavings of the twelve baskets (in the miracle of the loaves); Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 15. (Rather Scand. than E.) — Icel. skrap, scraps, trifles, from skrapa, to scrape, scratch; Dan. skrab, scrapings, trash, from skrabe, to scrape; Swed. afskrap, scrapings, refuse, dregs, from skrapa, to scrape. See Scrape.

SCRAPE, to remove a surface with a sharp instrument, shave, scratch, save up. (Scand.) ME. scrapien, scrapen, also shrapien, shrapen (Stratmann). 'But ho so scrape my mawe' = unless one were to scrape my maw; P. Plowman, B. v. 124. Spelt shreapien, Ancren Riwe, p. 116, l. 15. (Rather Scand. than E.) — Icel. skrapa, to scrape; Swed. skrapa; Dan. skrabe. + Du. schrapen, to scrape. From Teut. **skrap-*, 2nd grade of the strong vb. **skrep-an-*, to scrape, as in AS. scrapian, pt. t. scrap, to scratch; O. E. Texts. Der. scrap-ing, scrap-er; also scrap, q. v., scrabb-le, q. v., scramb-le, q. v.

SCRATCH, to scrape with a pointed instrument or with the nails. (1. Scand.; 2. MDu. — MHG.) Scratch has resulted from the confusion of ME. scratten, to scratch, with ME. cracchen, with the same sense. 1. ME. scratten, to scratch, Prompt. Parv.; Pricke of Conscience, 7378; Ancren Riwe, p. 186, note b. This form scratten appears to be for s-kratten, made by prefixing AF. es- (for L. ex), intensive prefix, to the Swed. kratta, to scrape (see below). 2. ME. cracchen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 154, 186. Apparently for **cratsen*. — MDu. kratsen, to scratch (Hexham); whence Du. krassen, Swed. kratsa, and Dan. kradse, to scrape. — MHG. kratzen, OHG. chrätzōn, to scratch. + Swed. kratta, to rake, scrape, scratch, cf. kratta, sb., a rake. All from a Teut. base **krat*, perhaps from a Teut. str. vb. **kret-an-* (pt. t. **krat*, pp. **krot-anoz*); cf. Icel. krot-a, to engrave. ¶ Hence scratten and cracchen are from the same base and mean much the same thing, so that confusion between them was easy enough. Der. scratch, sb., scratch-er. Doublet, grate (2).

SCRAWL, to write hastily or irregularly. (E.) A late word, used by Swift and Pope (Rich., and Todd). The aw (= au) denotes a long vowel or diphthong; better spelt scrall, with a as in all.

'To scrawl, or scrawl, to scribble, to write after a sorry careless manner;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It appears to be a contraction of Scrabble, q.v. Cf. also E. scribble, and prov. E. scribble-scribble, scribbling (North); and North Fries. skrawe, by-form of skrape, to scrape. Or perhaps prov. E., from Dan. skrolle, a poor worthless book (Larsen); MDan. skrold, a diffuse, poor letter (Kalkar).  $\beta$ . The form seems due to confusion with prov. E. scrawl, to crawl (West) in Halliwell; he cites 'To scrall, stir, motito' from Coles, Lat. Dict. To which add: 'The ryuer shall scaule [swarm] with frogges,' Exod. viii. 3; in Coverdale's version. This word is merely E. crawl, with prefixed s (AF. es-, L. ex) added in some cases with the idea of giving greater emphasis; see Crawl. Der. scrawl, sb., scrawl-er.

SCREAM, to cry out shrilly. (Scand.) ME. scremen, Polit. Songs, p. 158, l. 9; screamen, Hali Meidenhad, p. 37, last line but one. — Icel. skræma, to scare, terrify; Swed. skrämna, Dan. skræmme, to scare.  $\beta$ . Hence it appears that the E. word has preserved what was doubtless another sense of these Scand. words, viz. 'to cry aloud,' as the means of imposing or of expressing terror; we still commonly use scream with especial reference to the effects of sudden fright. Cf. Swed. skrän, a scream, skräna, to scream, to whimper, which is merely a parallel form; Jutland skreme, to whine, to speak hoarsely (Kok). Cf. Screech, Shriek. Der. scream, sb.

SCREECH, to shriek, cry aloud. (Scand.) 'Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud;' Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 383; where the first folio has scritch-owle, scritch-ing. Also spelt srike, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 4. 18. Baret (1580) has sriek. ME. scriken, skryken, schriken, scriken, Chaucer, C. T. 15406 (B 4590); spelt shriken, O. E. Homilies, ii. 181, l. 2. Also skriche, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 1290. Cf. Lowl. Sc. scraik. — Icel. skrækja, to shriek; cf. skrikja, to titter (said of suppressed laughter); Swed. srika, to shriek; Dan. skrige, to shriek; skrige af Skrak, to shriek with terror. Cf. Gael. sgriach, sgreuch, to screech, scream. See Shriek. + Gk.  $\kappa\rho\iota\varsigma\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$  (for  $\kappa\rho\iota\gamma\epsilon\upsilon\upsilon$ ), to shriek;  $\kappa\rho\iota\gamma\eta$ ,  $\kappa\rho\iota\gamma\mu\acute{o}\varsigma$ , a shrieking. Der. screech, sb., answering to Swed. skrik, Dan. skrig, Irish sgreach, Gael. sgreuch; also screech-owl. And see shrike. Doublet, shriek, which is merely a variant, due to the alteration of sc to sh at the beginning and the preservation of k at the end.

SCREED, a shred, a harangue. (E.) The Northern form of Shred, q.v.

SCREEN, that which shelters from observation, a partition; also, a coarse riddle or sieve. (F.—Teut.) 1. ME. scren; spelt screne, Prompt. Parv., p. 450; Wright's Vocab. i. 197, col. 2. — OF. escren (Littre); MF. escran, 'a skreen to set between one and the fire, a tester for a bed;' Cot. Mod. F. écran. Also found as OF. escranne (Godefroy). Prob. from OHG. skrank, G. schranke, a barrier, rail, fence, limit, place railed off. In the sense of coarse sieve, it is spelt skreine in Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 17, st. 16 (E. D. S.), and is the same word as the above. 'A screen for gravel or corn is a grating which wards off the coarser particles and prevents them from coming through;' Wedgwood. Der. screen, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 3.

SCREES, the loose débris on the side of a mountain. (Scand.) For screeches, the th being lost as in clothes. — Icel. skriða, a land-slip on a hill-side. — Icel. skriðr, weak grade of skriða, to creep, glide; cognate with Dan. skride and G. schreiten. See E. D. D., s.v. scree, and s.v. scridan; and Notes on E. Etym., pp. 262, 263.

SCREW (1), a cylinder with a spiral groove or ridge on its surface, used as a fastening or as a mechanical power. (F.—L.?) Better spelt scue, as in Cotgrave; the spelling screw is due to association with dew, flew, &c. Spelt screw in Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. screu; 'unum screu ferreum;' York Wills, i. 194 (1393). — OF. escroe, Godefroy; MF. escroue, 'a scue, the hole or hollow thing wherein the vice of a presse, &c. doth turn;' Cot. Mod. F. écrou.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin. Diez derives it from L. scrobem, acc. of scrobs, a ditch, trench, also a hole; but the derivation (in Kluge) from L. scrōfa, a sow, is far more likely; from the action of sows in rooting things up. Cf. 'scrobs: fossa quam scrofe maxime faciunt.. Hic scrobs, a swyn-wroting;' Cathol. Anglicum, p. 99, note 11. The Teut. words (G. schraube, Du. schroef, Low G. skruve) seem to be late and unoriginal. See Scrofula. ¶ For the loss of f, see Scroyles. The E. word is certainly from the F., as Scheler rightly remarks. Der. screw, verb, Macb. i. 7. 60; screw-driv-er, screw-propell-er, screw-steamer.

SCREW (2), a vicious horse. (E.) A well-known term in modern E., not noticed in Johnson or Halliwell. The same word as shrew, a vicious or scolding woman, spelt screwe in Political Songs, ed. Wright, p. 153, l. 13; and cf. prov. E. screw-mouse, a shrew-mouse. See Shrew. The sc (for sh) is due to Scand. influence. Doublet, shrew.

SCRIBBLE, to write carelessly. (L.; with E. suffix.) 'Scribled forth in hast at aduenture;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 56 e. Formed with the frequentative suffix -le from scribe, sb., or from L. scribere, to write. Similarly, we find G. schreibler, a scribbler, from schreiben, to write. See Scribe. Der. scribble, sb., scribble-er.

SCRIBE, a writer, a clerk, an expounder of the Jewish law. (L.) First in use as a scriptural term, and taken directly from Latin; Littre does not trace the F. scribe beyond the 16th century. ME. scribe, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19. — L. scriba, a writer, Matt. viii. 19 (Vulgate). — L. scribere, to write (pp. scriptus), orig. to scratch marks on a soft surface, to cut slightly. Cf. Scarify. Der. scribb-le, q.v.; and see scrip (2), script, script-ure, scriv-en-er. Also (from L. scribere), a-scribe, circum-scribe, de-scribe, in-scribe, pre-scribe, pro-scribe, sub-scribe, trans-scribe (for trans-scribe); also (from pp. scriptus) a-script-ion, circum-script-ion, con-script, de-script-ion, in-script-ion, manu-script, non-de-script, pre-script-ion, pre-script-ive, pro-script-ion, post-script, re-script, sub-script-ion, super-script-ion, trans-script, trans-script-ion, &c. Also shrive, shrift, Shrove-tide.

SCRIMMAGE, the same as Skirmish, q.v.

SCRIP (1), a small bag or wallet. (E.) ME. scrippe, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1061; Chaucer, C. T. 7319 (D 1737). AS. scripp, Ælfric, Hom. i. 394. + Icel. skreppa, a scrip, bag; Norweg. skreppa, a knapsack (Aasen); Swed. dial. skräppa, a bag (Rietz), Swed. skräppa, a scrip; MSwed. skreppa (Ihre); Low G. schrap, a scrip (Brem. Wört.); NFries. skrap. The orig. sense is 'scrap,' because made of a scrap or shred of skin or other material. See Scrap, Scarf (1). The sound of the AS. sc was affected by the Norse sk.

SCRIP (2), a piece of writing, a schedule. (F.—L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 3. The same word as script, the t dropping off in common talk; see Script.

SCRIPT, a piece of writing. (F.—L.) 'This loving script;' Beaum. and Fletcher, A Wife for a Month, i. 2. — MF. escript, 'a writing;' Cot. — L. scriptum, a thing written, neut. of scripsit, pp. of scribere, to write; see Scribe. Der. manu-script, re-script, trans-script.

SCRIPTURE, writing, the Bible. (F.—L.) Scripture, in the sense of 'bible,' is short for holy scripture, or rather, The Holy Scriptures. ME. scripture; the pl. scripturis is in Wyclif, Luke, xxiv. 27. — OF. escripture, 'writ, scripture, writing;' Cot. — L. scriptura, a writing; cf. L. scripturus, fut. part. of scribere, to write; see Scribe. Der. scriptur-al.

SCRIVENER, a scribe, copyist, notary. (F.—L.) Properly a scriven; the suffix -er (of the agent) is an E. addition. ME. skrivenere, Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, st. 28, l. 194; formed with suffix -ere from ME. scriueyn, Ayeubite of Inwyte, p. 44, l. 30. — OF. escrivain, 'a scrivener;' Cot. [Cf. mod. F. écrivain, Span. escribano, Ital. scrivano.] — Late L. scribānum, acc. of scribānus, a notary; extended from scriba, a scribe; see Scribe.

SCROFULA, a disease characterised by chronic swellings of the glands. (L.) Called 'the king's evil,' because it was supposed the touch of a king could cure it; see Phillips, Dict., &c. In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount (1674) has the adj. scrofulous. — L. scrōfula; usually in pl. scrōfulæ, scrofulous swellings. The lit. signification of scrōfula is a little pig; dimin. of scrōfa, a breeding sow. The reason for the name is not certainly known, but perhaps it is from the swollen appearance of the glands. It is remarkable that the Gk. name ( $\chi\omicron\iota\pi\acute{\alpha}\delta\epsilon\varsigma$ ) for swollen or scrofulous glands appears to be similarly connected with  $\chi\omicron\iota\pi\omicron\varsigma$ , a pig.  $\beta$ . The L. scrōfa has been explained as 'a digger,' from the habit of swine, who are fond of 'rooting' or turning up the earth; allied to scrobis, a ditch. But we can hardly connect -ōf- with -ob-. Der. scroful-ous; and see screw (1).

SCROLL, a roll of paper or parchment, a schedule. (F.—Teut.) Scroll, formerly also scrowl, is a contraction of scrou-el, a dimin. form (with suffix -el) of scroue or scroue, the earlier form of the word. ME. scroule, Voc. 682. 26; but the ME. scroue, scroue, is older. Palsgrave (A. D. 1530) gives both scrolle and scroue, and equates both to F. rolle. Fabyan also has both forms: 'He [Rich. II.] therefore redde the scroule of resygnacyon hymselfe,' an. 1398 (ed. Ellis, p. 547); 'wherefore, knowynge that the sayd Baylyl vsed to bere scrowys and prophecy aboute hym,' an. 1449 (id. p. 624). ME. scroue, scroue; spelt scrow, Prompt. Parv.; pl. scrowis, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5 (earlier version only); scroue, Ancren Riwe, p. 282, last line. — OF. escroue, 'a scrowle;' Cot. Spelt escroe in the 14th cent. (Littre); mod. F. écrou; the Low L. escrōa occurs A. D. 1386 (Ducange). To which must be added that the dimin. form escroele actually occurs, in the sense of strip, as cited by Littre, s.v. écrou; thus proving the origin of E. scroll beyond all doubt.  $\beta$ . Of Teut. origin. — MDu. schroode, a strip, shred, slip of paper (Oudemans); allied to schroden, to cut off (id.). Cf. OHG. scrōt, the same; and E. screed. See Shred, Shard.

SCROYLES, scabby fellows, rascals. (F.—L.) In King John, ii. 1. 373; and see Nares. — OF. pl. escroelles (see écrouelle in Hatzfeld), MF. escrouelles, 'the king's evil,' Cot.; i.e. scrofula; hence, men afflicted with scrofula. — Late L. type **scrōfellas*, acc. pl.; for L. scrōfulas, acc. pl. of scrōfula. See Scrofula. See Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 263.

SCRUB (1), brushwood. (Scand.) Prov. E. scrub; and cf. Wormwood Scrubs. The Scand. equivalent of E. shrub. — MDan. skrubbe, Dan. dial. skrub, brushwood; Norw. skrubba, dwarf cornel. See Shrub. Der. scrubb-y, dwarfed, mean; scrub-bed, insignificant, Merch. Ven. v. 162. And note Lowl. Sc. scrubber, 'a handful of heath tied tightly together for cleaning culinary utensils'; Jamieson. Prob. allied to scrub (2), as broom is to the plant so called. Cf. scrublanda, i.e. scrub-land; Liber Custumarum, p. 658.

SCRUB (2), to rub hard. (Scand.) ME. scrōbben, to rub down a horse; King Alisaunder, 4310. Not found in AS. — MDan. skrubbe; Swed. skrubba, to scrub; cf. Dan. skrubbet, rough, 'scrubby.' + Du. schrobben, to scrub, wash, rub, chide; Low G. schrubben; NFries. skrobbe. According to Franck, it is allied, by gradation, to Du. and EFries. scrabben, to scratch; see Scrabble, Scrape. And see Scrub (1).

SCRUFF, SCRUFFT, the nape of the neck. More correctly scuff, scuft. See Scuft.

SCRUPLE, a small weight, a doubt, perplexity, reluctance to act. (F.—L.) 'A scrupul weieth a peny; iii. scrupilis maken a dragme;' Medical Workes, ed. Henslow, p. 131. 'It is no conscience, but a foolish scruple;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1435 c. 'Would not haue bene too scrupulous;' Frith, Works, p. 143, col. 2. — F. scrupule, 'a little sharp stone falling into a mans shooe, and hindering him in his gate [gait]; also, a scruple, doubt, fear, difficulty, care, trouble of conscience; also, a scruple, a weight amounting unto the third part of a dram;' Cot. — L. scrūpulum, acc. of scrūpulus, a small sharp stone; hence, a small stone used as a weight, a small weight; also, a stone in one's shoe, an uneasiness, difficulty, small trouble, doubt. Dimin. of scrūpus, a sharp stone. Scrūpus is allied to scrūta; see Scrutiny. Der. scruple, vb., to make a scruple of; scrupulous, from F. scrupu-leux, 'scrupulous,' Cot., from L. scrūpulosus; scrupulous-ly, -ness.

SCRUTINY, a strict examination, careful inquiry. (L.) Spelt scruteny, Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 782; cf. MF. scrutine, 'a scrutiny;' Cot. Englished from L. scrūtīnium, a careful inquiry. — L. scrūtūri, to search into carefully, lit. to search among broken pieces. — L. scrūta, broken pieces, old trash; allied to AS. scrēade, a shred; see Shred. Der. scrutin-ise, scrutin-eer. And see in-scrut-able.

SCUD, to run quickly, run before the wind in a gale. (Scand.) In Shak. Venus, 301. 'Scudding from place to place;' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegmes, Pompeius, § 2. We also have prov. E. scud, a slight rapid or flying shower of rain (Shropshire, and elsewhere); Lowland Sc. scuddin-stanes, thin stones made to skim the surface of water, as an amusement, answering exactly to Dan. skudsteen, a stone quoit. A frequentative of scud is prov. E. scuttle, to walk fast, to hurry along, often used with precisely the same force as scud; also scuddle, to run away quickly, is given in Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. Hence scud is a weakened form of scut or scoot; cf. prov. E. 'to go like scooter, i.e. very quick, East' (Halliwell); and scoot is only a Scand. equivalent of shoot. Precisely the same voicing of t to d occurs in Danish, and the nautical term to scud is of Danish origin. — Norw. skudda, to push, shove; cf. Dan. skyde, to shoot, to push, to shove; skyde i frø, to run to seed; skyde vand, to repel water; skyde over stevn (lit. to shoot over the stem), to shoot ahead, i.e. scud along, as a nautical term; Dan. skud-, a shooting, used in compounds, as in skud-aar, leap-year, skud-steen, a 'scudding-stane.' Cf. Swed. dial. skudda, to shoot the bolt of a door; Swed. skuita, to leap, Swed. dial. skuta, a sledge (Rietz), allied to Swed. skjuta, to shoot, and to Icel. skjöta, to shoot, also to slip or scud away, abscond. See Shoot. Der. scutt-le (3), q.v.

SCUFFLE, to struggle, fight confusedly. (Scand.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 1. The frequentative form of scuff, preserved in prov. E. scuff, to shuffle in walking, West; Halliwell. — Swed. skuffa, to push, shove, jog; allied to E. shove. + MDu. schuffelen, to drive on, also, to run away, i.e. to shuffle off; allied to Du. schuiven, to shove. Thus to scuffle is 'to keep shoving about.' See Shuffle, Shove. Der. scuffle, sb., Antony, i. 1. 7.

SCUFT, SCUFF, SCRUFF, SCRUFFT, the nape of the neck. (Scand.) The orig. form seems to have been scuft; a form which occurs even in Gothic. 'Scuft of the neck;' Grose's Gloss. (1790). — ONorse skoft (pron. skoft), hair of the head; mod. Icel. skott, a fox's tail; NFries. skuft, nape of a horse's neck. + G. schopf, a tuft of hair; OHG. scuft, hair; Goth. skuft, hair of the head. Allied to Sheaf; cf. Icel. skauf, a fox's brush.

SCULK, SKULK, to hide oneself, lurk. (Scand.) ME. sculken, skulken, Pricke of Conscience, 1788; Gower, C. A. ii. 93; bk. iv. 2720; whence the sb. scolkyng, Rob. of Glouc. p. 256, l. 5130. — Dan. skulke, to sculk, slink, sneak; Norw. skulka; Swed. skolka, to play the truant. Allied to Icel. skolla, to sculk, keep aloof. Extended from the Teut. base seen in Du. schuilen, Low G. schulen, to sculk, to lurk in a hiding-place; allied to Dan. skjul, Icel. skjöl, a place of shelter; see further under Scowl, which exhibits the shorter form. SCULL (1), the cranium; see Skull.

SCULL (2), a small, light oar. (Scand.) 'Scull, a little oar, to row with; Sculler, a boat rowed with sculls, or the waterman that manages it;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in the phrase 'rowing scull,' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 351. We also find 'the old sculler,' i.e. Charon; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1 (Cupid's 7th speech). Dryden oddly uses sculler with the sense of 'boat;' tr. of Virgil, Georg. b. iv. l. 735. 'Scull to rowe with, auiron; Scullar, batellier;' Palsgrave. 'To rowe . . . with a skulle;' Piers of Fulham, l. 275; in Hazlitt's Early E. Pop. Poetry, ii. 12. β. Prob. named from the slightly hollowed blades. G. Douglas has scull in the sense of 'cup;' tr. of Virgil, bk. iii. ch. 1. l. 125. Cf. Swed. skål, a basin, bowl; hufvud-skål, scull (of the head); våg-skål, the scale of a balance; skålig, concave. Also Norw. skul, a husk, shell of fruit. Larsen gives Dan. skullermand, a waterman. Der. scull, verb; scull-er as above. See Skull.

SCULL (3), a shoal of fish. (Du.) In Shak. Troilus, v. 5. 22. ME. sculle, Prompt. Parv. A variant of School (2), q.v.

SCULLERY, a room for washing dishes, and the like. (F.—L.) Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave has: 'The scullery, escuellerie.' Spelt scollery; Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, ed. F. S. Ellis, p. 23. Formed with suffix -ie (cf. pantr-y) from OF. escuelier, one who has charge of the dishes and plates (Godefroy); cf. escuelerie, the office of keeping the dishes (id.). — Late L. scutellarius, the same (Ducange). — L. scutella, a dish (whence OF. escuelle, F. écuelle); dimin. of scutra, a tray. ¶ Godefroy also has esquelier (= escuelier); hence ME. 'squyllare, dysche wescheare,' i.e. dish-washer; in Prompt. Parv. Cf. 'The squyler of the kechyn;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 5913. 'The pourvayours of the buttlarye [buttery] and . . . of the squylerey;' Ordinances and Regulations of the Royal Household, 4to, 1790, p. 77; 'Sergeant-squylloure,' in the same, p. 81. And see Halliwell. Scullion is of different origin; see below.

SCULLION, a kitchen menial. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 616. 'Their smooked scolions faces, handes, and feete;' Barnes. Works, p. 341, col. 2. 'Scollyon of the kechyn, souillon;' Palsgrave. This word has undoubtedly been long understood as if it were connected with scullery, and the connexion between the two words in the popular mind may have influenced its form and use. But it is impossible to connect them etymologically; and Wedgwood well says that 'it has a totally different origin,' which he points out. — MF. escouillon, 'a wispe, or dishclout, a maukin or drag, to cleanse or sweepe an oven;' Cot. 'In the same way malkin, maukin, is used both for a kitchen-wench and for the clout which she plies;' Wedgwood. β. The MF. escouillon is the same as escouvillon, Cot. The latter form answers to Span. escobillon, a sponge for a cannon; formed with suffix -on (L. -ionem) from escobilla, a small brush, dimin. of escoba (OF. escouve), a brush, broom, which is cognate with Ital. scopa, a broom, a birch-tree. — L. scōpa, used in pl. scōpæ, thin twigs, a broom of twigs. Allied to L. scāpus, a stem, stalk; and to Sceptre.

SCULPTURE, the art of carving figures. (F.—L.) ME. sculpture, Gower, C. A. ii. 83; bk. iv. 2422. — F. sculpture, for which Littré cites nothing earlier than the 16th century; but it must have been in earlier use; see Hatzfeld. — L. sculptūra, sculpture; cf. L. sculptūrus, fut. part. of sculperē, to cut out, carve in stone; allied to scalperē, to scratch, grave, carve, cut; whence E. scalp-el. Der. sculpture, verb; sculpt-or, from L. sculptor; sculptur-al.

SCUM, froth, refuse on the surface of liquids. (Scand.) 'Scome or scum of fletyng [floating], Spuma;' Prompt. Parv. 'Scummyn lycyrys, Despumo;' id. Dat. scome, Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 44, l. 23. — Dan. skum, scum, froth, foam; Icel. skūm, foam (in Egilsson's Dict.); Swed. skum. + OHG. scūm, G. schaum (whence F. écume); Du. schuim. β. Lit. 'a covering.' — ✓SKEU, to cover; Fick, iii. 336. ¶ The L. spūma is related to E. foam, not to scum. Der. scum, verb; scumm-er; skim.

SCUPPER, a hole in the side of a ship to carry off water from the deck. (F.—Scand.) 'Scuppers, the holes through which the water runs off the deck;' Coles, ed. 1684. Called scooper-holes; Phillips (1706). 'Our galley's scupper-holes;' Marston, Antonio and Mellida, i. 1. 13. 'Skopper-lethers and skopper-nayles;' Naval Accounts (1497); p. 298. The sense is 'scooper-hole.' — OF. escoppe, escoppe, a scoop for baling out water (Supp. to Godefroy). — Swed. skopa, a scoop. Cf. MDu. schoepe, a shovel; Hexham. See Scoop. Cf. Prov. E. scupper, a scooper, a scoop; scuppit, a small shovel or scoop.

SCUR, to run rapidly over. (F.—L.) 'Scur o'er the fields of corn;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, i. 1. The same word as skirr and scour; see Scour (2). Der. scur-ry.

SCURF, small flakes of skin; flaky matter on the skin. (Scand.) ME. scurf. 'Scurf of scabbys, Squama;' Prompt. Parv.; Cursor Mundi, 11823. —Swed. skorf; Dan. skurv, scurf; Icel. skurfur, pl. + AS. scurf, scurf (from Norse), A. S. Leechdoms, i. 116. Cf. 'mycel sceorfa on his heafde hæfde' = he had much scurf on his head; Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. v. c. 2. Du. schurft, scurf; G. schorf. β. From Teut. **skurf*-, weak grade of **skerfan*-, as in AS. sceorfan (pt. t. scearf, pt. t. pl. scurfon), to scarify, gnaw. Der. scurf-y, scurf-i-ness. Also scurv-y, q.v.

SCURRILE, buffoon-like. (L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 148. —L. scurrilis, buffoon-like. —L. scurra, a buffoon. Allied to OHG. scern, derision; see Scorn. Der. scurril-i-ty, L. L. L. iv. 2. 55, from L. acc. scurritūtem; scurril-ous, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 215; scurrilous-ly.

SCURVY, afflicted with scurf, mean. (Scand.) 'All scurvy with scabbies;' Skelton, Elinour Rummung, 140. The same word as scurfy, with change from f to v; cf. Swed. skorfvig, scurfy, from skorf, scurf. See Scurf. Hence, as a term of contempt, vile, mean, Temp. ii. 2. 46, and very common in Shak. Cf. Low G. schorfig, schorvig, adj.; from schorf, scurf; Dan. skurvet, scurfy. Der. scurvy, Phillips, ed. 1706, the name of a disease, from the pitiful condition of those afflicted with it; and hence, probably, the Low L. medical term scorbūtus; see Scorbutic. Also scurvi-ly, -ness.

SCUTAGE, a tax on a knight's fee. (Late L. —L.) See Cowell's Interpreter and Blount's Nomolexicon. —Med. Latin scūtāgium, a form of **scūtaticum*, due to OF. escuage, with the same sense. —L. scūtum, a shield. See Esquire.

SCUTCH, to dress flax. (F. —Scand.) From the sb. scutch, an instrument for beating flax; Cent. Dict. —OF. escouche, eschuche, a swingle (Godefroy); Norm. dial. écouche, écoche (Moisy). Cf. escucher, vb.; Wright, Voc. i. 156. —Norw. skuku, skoka, a swingle. Otherwise in Hatzfeld; s. v. écouche.

SCUTCHEON, a painted shield. (F. —L.) ME. scotchyne, sockhone, Prompt. Parv. The same as Escutcheon, q.v.

SCUTIFORM, shield-shaped. (F. —L.) In Blount, ed. 1674. 'Scutiforme os, the whirl-bone of the knee;' Phillips, ed. 1706. —MF. scutiforme, 'fashioned like a scutcheon, shield-fashion;' Cot. —L. scūti-, for scūtum; a shield; and form-a, form, shape; see Escutcheon and Form.

SCUTTLE (1), a shallow basket, a vessel for holding coal. (L.) ME. scotille. 'Hec scutella, a scotille;' Wright's Vocab. i. 257, col. 1. A Northern form. Cf. Icel. skutill; AS. scutel, a dish, bowl. 'Catinus, scutel;' Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. 1. —L. scutella, a salver or waiter; dimin. of scutra, a tray, dish, or platter, also spelt scuta. Der. coal-scuttle. Doublet, skillet.

SCUTTLE (2), an opening in the hatchway of a ship. (F. —Span. —Teut.) 'Scuttles, square holes, capable for the body of a man to pass thorough at any hatch-way, or part of the deck, into any room below; also, those little windows and long holes which are cut out in cabbins to let in light;' Phillips, ed. 1706. And in Cotgrave. 'The skottelles of the haches;' Naval Accounts (1497); p. 323. —MF. escoutilles, pl., 'the scuttles, or hatches of a ship; th'overtures or trap-doors, whereat things are let down into the hold;' Cot. Mod. F. écoutille. —Span. escotilla, escotillon, 'a hole in the hatch of a ship, also the hatch itself,' Minshew. β. The word appears to be Spanish; and we find another form in escotadura, the large trap-door of a theatre or stage (Neuman). Another sense of escotadura is the sloping of a jacket or pair of stays; and the form of the word is such as to be due to the verb escotar, to cut out a thing so as to make it fit, to slope, to hollow out a garment about the neck (a different word from Span. escotar, to pay one's reckoning, for which see Scot-free). The orig. sense is 'to cut a hole in a garment to admit the neck,' from the sb. escote, the sloping of a jacket, a tucker such as women wear above the bosom. This sb. is derived, as Diez points out, from the Teutonic; cf. Goth. skauts, the hem of a garment, Du. schoot, the lap, the bosom, G. schooss, the same; so that the orig. sense of Span. escote is 'a slope to fit the bosom,' a hole for the neck. ¶ So in Diez; see Sheet. Der. scuttle, verb, to sink a ship by cutting scuttles or holes in it.

SCUTTLE (3), to hurry along, scud away. (Scand.) Cf. Swed. skutta, to leap; Swed. dial. skutta, to take a long jump; allied to scuddle (Bailey), which is the frequentative of Scud, q.v. 'How the misses did huddle, and scuddle, and run;' Anstey's New Bath Guide, letter 13 (Davies). Davies also gives scutter, a hasty run.

SCYTHE, a cutting instrument for mowing grass. (E.) The intrusion of the letter c is due to false spelling; it should be sythe or sihe. Spelt sythe in L. L. L. i. 1. 6 (first folio, ed. 1623). ME. sihe, P. Plowman, C. iv. 464; sybe, Havelok, 2553. AS. sīðe, sīþe, a scythe; 'Falcstrum, sīþe,' Wright's Vocab. i. 85, l. 3. The AS. sīðe is for sigðe (a form actually found in the Epinal gloss), and the long i shows the loss of g; it means 'the cutting instrument.' From the Teut. base SEG, to cut = √SEQ, to cut. See Saw (1), Section. Fick, iii. 314. + Du. zeis; Icel. sigðr, sigð, a sickle; Low G. seged, segd, also seed, seid, a kind of sickle; Brem. Wörterbuch. From the same root we have OHG. segansa, MHG. segense, G. sense, a scythe; OHG. seh, MHG. sech, a ploughshare; as well as E. saw, sickle. Der. scythe, verb, Shak. Complaint, l. 12; scythe-tusked, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 79.

SE-, away, apart, prefix. (L.) From L. sē-, short for sēd, without, which is retained as a prefix in sed-ition. Sēd is mentioned by Festus as having been used with the sense 'without.' Der. se-cede, se-clude, se-cret, se-cure, sed-ition, se-duce, se-gregate, se-lect, se-parate; and see sever.

SEA, a large lake, ocean. (E.) ME. see, Chaucer, C. T. 3033 (A 3031). AS. sæ, sea, lake. + Du. zee; Icel. sar; Dan. sø; Swed. sjö; G. see; Goth. saiws. β. All from a Teut. type **saiwiz*, sea. Der. sea-board, from F. bord, the shore = Du. boord, edge, brim (see Border); sea-coast, sea-faring, sea-girt, -green, -horse, -kale, -king, -level, -man, -man-ship, -mark, -room, -serpent, -shore, -sick, -side, -unicorn, -urchin, -ward, -weed, -worthy; &c.

SEAL (1), a stamp for impressing wax, impressed wax, that which authenticates. (F. —L.) ME. seel (better than sele), Chaucer, C. T. 10445 (F 131). 'Seled with his seale,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, i. 29, l. 12. —OF. seel, 'a seal, or signet;' Cot. Mod. F. sceau; Span. sello, sigilo; Ital. sigillo. —L. sigillum, a seal, mark; lit. 'a little sign;' allied to signum, a sign, mark; see Sign. Der. seal, verb, ME. selen, as above; seal-engraving, seal-ing-wax.

SEAL (2), a sea-calf, marine animal. (E.) ME. sele, Havelok, 755; which represents AS. sēole, dat. of AS. seolh, a seal; Grein, ii. 438. + Icel. selr; Dan. sæl; also sælhund (seal-hound); Swed. själ, själhund; OHG. selah. Teut. type **selhoz*.

SEAM (1), a suture, a line formed by joining together two pieces, a line of union. (E.) ME. seem, Wyclif, John, xix. 23. AS. sēam, Ælfric's Hom. i. 20, l. 4 from bottom. + Du. zoom; Icel. saumr; Dan. and Swed. söm; G. saum. β. All from a Teut. type **saumoz*, m., a sewing, suture (Fick, iii. 325); formed, with suffix -moz, from sau, 2nd grade of root **seu*, **siw*; Idg. root SIW, to sew. Cf. L. su-ere, to sow, Skt. sū-tra-, a thread; see Sew. Der. seam-less, seam-y; also seam-str-ess, q.v.

SEAM (2), a horse-load. (Late L. —Gk.) ME. seem; dat. seme, P. Plowman, B. iii. 40. AS. sēam. Borrowed (like G. saum) from Late L. sauma, late form of sagma, a horse-load. —Gk. σάγμα, a pack-saddle. See Sumpter.

SEAMSTRESS, SEMPSTRESS, a woman who sews seams. (E.; with F. suffix.) 'Seamster, and Seamstress, a man or woman that sows, makes up, or deals in linnen-clothes;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Only seamster is given in Minshew, ed. 1627. The suffix -ess is a F. fem. suffix, F. -esse (from L. -issa, Gk. -ισσα), as in prince-ess, mar-chion-ess. ME. semster, Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, l. 1585. AS. sēamestre. We find: 'Sartor, seamere,' and 'Sartrix, seamestre;' Wright's Vocab. i. 74. [Whence sēamestres, Diplomatarius Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 568, l. 10.] Formed from AS. sēam, a seam, by the addition of the AS. suffix -estre, explained under Spinster. See Seam (1).

SÉANCE, a sitting, session. (F. —L.) Modern. —F. séance, a session. —F. séant, pres. pt. of seoir, to sit. —L. sedēre, to sit. See Sit.

SEAR, SERE, withered. (E.) Spelt sere, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Jan. 37. ME. seer; spelt seere, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 18, l. 25; seer, Rom. Rose, 4749. AS. sēar, sere; best preserved in the derived verb; see below. + Du. sore, dry (Oudemans); zoor, 'dry, withered, or seare;' Hexham; Low G. soor, dry; Brem. Wört. β. Teut. type **sauzoz*; Idg. type **sausos*. Allied to Russ. suxoi, dry; Lith. sausas, dry; Gk. αῖος (for **αῠσος*), dry; Skt. gush (for **sush*), to become dry. (√SEUS.) From the same root is Gk. αῠεω, to parch, αῠστηρός, dry, rough, whence E. austere. The Zend hush, to dry, proves that SEUS is the root; Curtius, i. 490. Brugmann, i. § 213. Der. sear, verb, to dry up, cauterise, render callous, Rich. III, iv. 1. 61, ME. seeren, Prompt. Parv., AS. sēarian, to dry up, to wither or pine away, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, iv. 6. 15. See Austere; and Sorrel (2).

SEARCH, to seek, examine, explore. (F. —L.) ME. serchen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 268, last line but one; better spelt cerchen, as in Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 159, Mandeville's Travels, p. 315. —AF. cercher, Stat. Realm, i. 219; sercher, id. 274. —OF. cercher (Burȝ 1y); mod. F. chercher, to seek. Cf. Norm. dial. sercher, cercher, Ital. cercare, to seek, to search; Prov. cercar, cerquar, sercar, to search (Bartsch); Span. cercar, to encircle, surround. —L. circāre, to go round; hence, to go about, explore. —L. circus, a circle, ring; circum, round about. See Circum-, Circus, Ring. Note AF. sercher, ME. serchen; A Nominale, ed. Skeat, ll. 434, 435. Der. search, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 10; search-ing, search-er, search-warrant. Also re-search, shark.

SEASON, proper time, fit opportunity. (F.—L.) ME. sesoun, Chaucer, C. T. 1045 (A 1043); P. Plowman, B. prol. 1; seysoun, King Alisaunder, 5251.—OF. sezon, seizon, saison; mod. F. saison, 'season, due time'; Cot. Cf. Span. sazon, Port. sazão, sezão; OProv. sadons, sasos, sazos (Bartsch).—Late L. stationem, acc. of statio, a season, time of year, occurring A.D. 1028 (Ducange). The same as L. statio, a sowing, planting, Verg. Georg. i. 215, ii. 319 (hence, the time of sowing or spring-time, which seems to have been regarded as the season, par excellence). Allied to L. satus, pp. of serere, to sow. From √SE, to cast, sow; whence also seminal, seed, sow. See Sow (1). ¶ Besides the word season, we also find Span. estacion, used in the sense of 'season' or time as well as 'station'; and Ital. stagione, 'a season or time of the year', Florio. These are, of course, from L. stationem, acc. of statio, a station, hence applied, we must suppose, to the four stations, stages, or seasons of the year; see Station. And it is probable that the use of this word affected and extended the senses of season. I have been informed that the prov. E. season is still occasionally used in Kent in the sense of 'sowing-time.' Moreover, AF. seson occurs with the sense 'sowing-time'; see Royal Wills, ed. Nichols, pp. 34, 35. Der. season, verb, Merch. Ven. v. 107, Ascham, Toxophilus, b. ii., ed. Arber, p. 124; season-able, season-abl-y, season-able-ness; also season-ing, that which 'seasons,' or makes food more suitable and palatable.

SEAT, a chair, bench, &c., to sit on. (Scand.) ME. sete; spelt seete, Wyclif, Rev. ii. 13.—Icel. sæti, a seat; Swed. säte; Dan. sæde.—Icel. sāt-, 3rd grade of sitja, to sit; see Sit. [The usual AS. word is setl, for which see Settle.] +MDu. saet, sate; MHG. sāze. Der. seat, verb, Macb. i. 3. 136; dis-seat, Macb. v. 3. 21; un-seat.

SEBACEOUS, pertaining to tallow, fatty. (L.) From L. sebace-us, fatty.—L. sebum, tallow, fat. Prob. allied to E. soap. See Soap.

SECANT, a line that cuts another, or that cuts a circle. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. secant-, stem of pres. part. of secāre, to cut; see Section. (√SEQ.) Brugmann, i. § 635. See Saw, Scythe, Sickle, Sedge.

SECEDE, to withdraw oneself from others, go apart. (L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson.—L. sēcēdere, pp. sēcensus, to go away, withdraw.—L. sē-, apart; and cēdere, to go, go away. See Se- and Cede. Der. seced-er; also secess-ion, in Minshew, ed. 1627, from L. acc. sēcēssionem, nom. sēcēssio, formed from pp. sēcensus.

SECLUDE, to keep apart. (L.) 'Secluded from the Scriptures,' Frith's Works, p. 3, col. 2.—L. sēclūdere, to shut off.—L. sē-, apart; and clūdere, to shut; see Se- and Clause, Close (1). Der. seclus-ion, formed like sēclūsus, pp. of sēclūdere.

SECOND, next after the first, the ordinal number corresponding to two. (F.—L.) ME. second; spelt seconde, Wyclif, John, iv. 54; seconde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 282, l. 5724. Not a very common word, as other was usually employed instead, in early times; second being the only ordinal number of F. origin. (See Other).—F. second, masc., seconde, fem., 'second'; Cot.—L. secundus, following, second; so called because it follows the first. Formed from sec-, from the base of sequi, to follow, with gerundive suffix, with the force of a pres. part. Brugmann, ii. § 69 (2). See Sequence. Der. second, sb., used with reference to minutes, or first small subdivisions of an hour, &c., from F. seconde, 'the 24 part of a prime, a very small weight used by goldsmiths and jewellers,' Cot. Also second, verb, Merry Wives, i. 3. 114; second-er; second-ar-y, second-ar-i-ly, Tyndall, Works, p. 120, col. 1; second-ly; second-hand, i.e. at second hand; second-sight.

SECRET, hidden, concealed, unknown. (F.—L.) Spelt secrette in Palsgrave. The ME. form is almost invariably secree, Chaucer, C. T. 12077 (C 143); spelt secre, P. Plowman, A. iii. 141; but we find secret in P. Plowman, B. iii. 145, C. iv. 183.—OF. secret (fem. secreie, Burguy), 'secret'; Cot.—L. sēcrētus, secret; orig. pp. of sēcernere, to separate, set apart.—L. sē-, apart; and cernere, to separate, sift; see Se- and Concern. Der. secret, sb., ME. secree, Chaucer, C. T. 16915 (G 1447), from L. sēcrētum, sb., orig. neuter of sēcernere; secret-ly, secret-ness; secrec-y, Hamlet, i. 2. 207, a coined word, by analogy with constancy, &c.; secrete, verb, formed from L. sēcernere, considered as pp. of sēcernere; secret-ion, from MF. secretion, 'a separating, also a thing separated or set apart,' Cot.; secret-ive, secret-ive-ly, secret-ive-ness, secret-or-y; also secret-ar-y, q. v.

SECRETARY, orig. a private amanuensis, confidant. (F.—L.) The sense of the word is now much widened; it is frequently used where little privacy is intended. In Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 2. 116, iv. 1. 102. Palsgrave has: 'Secretarye, secretayre;' secretarye also occurs in a 15th-century poem called The Assembled of Ladies, l. 337.—F. secrétaire, 'a secretary, clerk'; Cot.—Late L. sēcrētārium, acc. of sēcrētārius, a confidential officer; cf. L. sēcrētārium, a secret place, consistory, conclave.—L. sēcrēt-us, secret; with suffix -ārius; see Secret. Der. secretary-ship; secretari-al.

SECT, a party who follow a particular teacher, or hold particular principles, a faction. (F.—L.) It is tolerably certain that the sense of the word has been obscured by a false popular etymology which has connected the word with L. secāre, to cut; and it is not uncommon for authors to declare, with theological intolerance and in contempt of history, that a sect is so called from its being 'cut off' from the church. But the etymology from secāre is baseless. Palsgrave well defines sette as 'a company of one opynion.' ME. secte, used convertibly with sute (= suite) in P. Plowman, C. viii. 130, B. v. 495; see my note on the line. Both secte and sute are here used in the sense of 'suit of clothes.'—F. secte, 'a sect or faction; a rout or troupe; a company of one (most commonly bad) opinion'; Cot.—Late L. secta, a set of people, a following, suite; also, a quality of cloth, a suit of clothes; also, a suit or action at law; L. secta, a party, faction, sect, lit. 'a following.'—L. sec- (as in sec-undus), base of sequi, to follow, with suffix -ta. Cf. Gk. ἐπέρης, a follower, attendant, from ἐπομαι, I follow; see secta in Bréal, s. v. sequor. See Sequence. Der. sect-ar-y, Hen. VIII, v. 3. 70, from F. sectaire, 'a sectary, the ringleader, professor, or follower of a sect,' Cot.; sect-ar-i-an, sect-ar-i-an-ism. Doublets, sept, set.

SECTION, a cutting, division, parting, portion. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and Cotgrave.—F. section, 'a section, cutting.'—L. sectionem, acc. of sectio, a cutting; cf. sectus, pp. of secāre, to cut.—√SEQ, to cut; whence also Russ. sieche, to hew, Lithuan. sykis, a stroke, cut, and E. saw, sickle, scythe, sedge. Brugmann, i. § 635. Der. section-al, section-al-ly; also sec-tor, from L. sector, a cutter, used in Late L. to mean a sector (part) of a circle; seg-ment, q. v. From the same root are sec-ant, co-sec-ant; bi-sect, dis-sect, inter-sect, tri-sect; in-sect; also saw, sickle, sedge, scythe, risk.

SECULAR, pertaining to the present world, not bound by monastic rules. (F.—L.) In Levins. ME. secular, seculer, seculere; Chaucer, C. T. 9127, 15456 (E 1251, B 4640).—AF. seculer, Year-books of Edw. I, i. 59, 133; MF. seculier, 'secular, lay, temporal'; Cot.—L. saeculāris, secular, worldly, belonging to the age.—L. saeculum, a generation, age. β. Better written sēculum; from √SE, to sow (Bréal); see Sow. Der. secular-ly, -ise, -is-at-ion, -ism. SECURE, free from care or anxiety, safe, sure. (L.) In Levins; accented secur in Hamlet, i. 5. 61.—L. sēcūrus, free from care.—L. sē-, free from; and cūra, anxiety; see Se- and Cure. Der. secure-ly, -ness; secur-able; secur-i-ty, from MF. securité, 'security,' Cot., from L. acc. sēcūritātem. Doublets, sicker, sure.

SEDAN, SEDAN-CHAIR, a portable vehicle, carried by two men. (F.) In Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, sat. i. 186. Named from Sedan, a town in France, N.E. of Paris; first seen in England, A.D. 1581; regularly used in London, A.D. 1634 (Haydn). Evelyn speaks of 'sedans, from hence [Naples] brought first into England by Sir Sanders Duncomb,' Diary, Feb. 8, 1645. Cf. F. sedan, cloth made at Sedan (Littre).

SEDATE, quiet, serious. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount (ed. 1674) has sedateness and sedation, of which the latter is obsolete.—L. sēdātus, composed, calm; pp. of sēdāre, to settle, causal of sēdere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Sit. Der. sedate-ly, -ness. Also sedat-ive, i.e. composing, from F. sēdatif, 'quieting, asswaging'; Cot. And see sedentary, sediment, see (2).

SEDENTARY, sitting much, inactive. (F.—L.) Spelt sedentarie, Minshew, ed. 1627; and occurring in Cotgrave.—F. sēdētaire, 'sedentary, ever-sitting'; Cot.—L. sēdētārius, sedentary.—L. sēdēt-, pres. part. of sēdere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; with suffix -ārius; see Sit. Der. sedentari-ly, -ness.

SEdge, a kind of flag or coarse grass in swamps. (E.) ME. segge, Prompt. Parv.; Voc. 570. 48. The pl. segges occurs as late as in Baret (1580). Segge represents AS. sege, g., dat., and acc. of secg, sedge; Gloss. to A.S. Leechdoms, vol. iii. +Low G. segge, sedge; in the dialect of Oldenburg; Bremen Wörterbuch. And cf. Irish seasg, seisg, sedge; W. hesg. β. The AS. cg=gg; Teut. type **sag-jā*, f.; lit. sense, 'cutter,' i.e. sword-grass, from the sharp edge or sword-like appearance; cf. L. gladiolus, a small sword, sword-lily, flag. From the Teut. base **sax*-, 2nd grade of Teut. root **seχ*, to cut=√SEQ, to cut; see Saw (1), Section. Der. sedg-ed, Temp. iv. 129; sedg-y.

SEDIMENT, dregs, that which settles at the bottom of a liquid. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—MF. sediment, 'a sitting or settling of dregs'; Cot.—L. sedimentum, a settling, subsidence.—L. sēdere, to sit, settle; with suffix -mentum. See Sit. Der. sediment-ar-y.

SEDITION, insurrection, rebellious conduct against the state. (F.—L.) ME. sedicioun, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 7, in some MSS.; others have seducioun.—OF. sedition, 'a sedition, mutiny'; Cot.—L. sēditionem, acc. of sēditio, dissension, civil discord, sedition. β. Lit. 'a going apart,' hence dissension; just as amb-ition is 'a going about.' —L. sēd-, apart; and it-um, supine of īre, to-go, from ✓EI, to go. See Se- and Ambition. Der. sediti-ous, Com. Errors, i. 1. 12, from MF. seditieux, 'seditious,' Cot.; sediti-ous-ly.

SEDUCE, to lead astray, entice, corrupt. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570; Fryth's Works, p. 95, l. 16; Surrey, Ps. 73, l. 5 from end. —L. sēducere, to lead apart or astray; pp. sēductus. —L. sē-, apart; and dūcere, to lead; see Se- and Duct. Der. seduc-er; seduce-ment, a coined word; seduct-ion, from MF. seduction, 'seduction,' Cot., from L. acc. sēductiōnem, allied to the pp. sēductus. Also seductive, a coined word, from the pp. sēductus; seduct-ive-ly.

SEDULOUS, diligent, constantly attentive. (L.) Used by Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 4 (R.). [The sb. sedulity is in Minsheu and Cotgrave.] Englished from L. sedulus, diligent, by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, &c. Cf. sēdulō, adv. busily; from sē, apart from, and dolō, abl. of dolus, fraud. Brugmann, i. § 244. Der. sedulous-ly, -ness; also sedul-i-ty, from MF. sedulité, 'sedulity,' Cot., from L. acc. sēdulitatem.

SEE (1), to perceive by the eye. (E.) ME. seen, sen, se; pt. sei, sey, say, seigh, sigh, sei, saugh, sauh, saw; pp. sein, sejen, sen, seien, seie; Chaucer, C. T. 193, &c. AS. sēon; pt. t. sēah, pl. sāwon, pp. gesegen, geseven; Grein. + Du. zien, pt. t. zag, pp. gezien; Icel. sja, pt. t. sā, pp. sēnn; Dan. se; Swed. se; OHG. sehan; G. sehen; Goth. saihwān, pt. t. sahw, pl. sēhwum, pp. saihwans. β. All from a Teut. type **sehwan-* (pt. t. **sahw*); Fick, iii. 315; Brugmann, i. § 665. Der. se-er, lit. one who sees, hence, a prophet, 1 Sam. ix. 9, spelt sear in the edit. of 1551; see-ing. And see sight.

SEE (2), the seat of a bishop. (F.—L.) Used by Spenser in the sense of 'seat' or throne; F. Q. iv. 10. 30. ME. se, Chron. of England, 363, in Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. ii; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 119; P. Pl. Crede, 558. —OF. sed, se, a seat, see (Burguy). —L. sēdem, acc. of sēdes, a seat. —L. sēd-, as in sēd-i, pt. of sēdere, to sit; cognate with E. Sit, q. v.

SEED, a thing sown, germ, first original or principle, descendants. (E.) ME. seed, Chaucer, C. T. 598 (A 596). AS. sēd, seed; Grein, ii. 394. + Du. zaad; Icel. sæði, sāð; Dan. sæd; Swed. såd; G. saat. Cf. Goth. mana-sēths, the world, lit. 'man-seed'; L. sēmen, seed. The AS. sēd answers to the Teut. type **sē-dom*, neut.; from Teut. **sæ-* = Idg. SĒ, to sow. See Sow. Der. seed-bud, -ling, -lobe, -s-man, -time; also seed-y, looking as if run to seed, hence shabby.

SEEK, to go in search of, look for, try to find. (E.) ME. seken, Chaucer, C. T. 17. AS. sēcan, to seek, pt. t. sōhte, pp. gesōht; Grein, ii. 418. + Du. zoeken; Icel. sækja, written for soekja; Dan. søge; Swed. söka; OHG. suohhan, MHG. suochen, G. suchen; Goth. sōkjan; Teut. type **sōk-jan-*; from **sōk-* = Idg. sāg-, as in L. sāg-īre, to perceive, Gk. ἡγέομαι, I consider. Cf. OIrish sagim, I seek for. Seek is a weak verb, with mutation from ō to ē in the infin. mood. Der. seek-er, be-seech.

SEEL, to close up the eyes. (F.—L.) 'Come, seeling night;' Macb. iii. 2. 46. Spelt cele in Palsgrave. Orig. a term in falconry, to close up the eyelids of a hawk (or other bird) by sewing up the eyelids; see Sealed-dove in Halliwell, and seel in Nares. —MF. siller; siller les yeux, 'to seel, or sow up, the eye-lids, thence also, to hood-wink, blind;' Cot. Also spelt ciller, 'to seele or sow up the eye-lids;' id. The latter is the better spelling. —OF. cil, 'the brim of an eye-lid, or the single ranke of haire that growes on the brim;' id. —L. cilium, an eye-lid, an eye-lash; perhaps allied to Gk. ῥά κύλα, the parts under the eyes. See Supercilious.

SEEM, to appear, look. (E.) The old sense 'to be fitting' is preserved in the derivative seemly. ME. semen, Chaucer, C. T. 10283 (E 2409). AS. sēman, gesēman, to satisfy, conciliate; Grein. Hence the idea of 'suit,' whence that of 'appear suitable,' or simply 'appear.' These senses are probably borrowed from the related adj. seemly, which is rather Scand. than E.; see Seemly. + Icel. sæma, for soema, to honour, bear with, conform to; closely related to sæmr, adj., becoming, fit, and to sōma, to beseem, become, befit. β. Here ē is (as usual) the mutation of ō, and the Teut. type is **sōm-jan*; from sōm, 2nd grade of sam-, as in E. same; cf. Icel. sōma, to beseem, and Icel. sama, to beseem, samr, same; see further under Seemly. Der. seem-ing; also seem-ly, q. v.; be-seem, q. v.

SEEMLY, becoming, fit. (Scand.) ME. semlich, Ancren Riwe, p. 94, note i; semli, semely, Chaucer, C. T. 753 (A 751). —Icel. sæmiligr, seemly, becoming; a longer form of sæmr, becoming, fit, with suffix -ligr answering to AS. -lic, like, and E. -ly; where sæm- is the mutated form of **sōm-* (as in Icel. sōma, to befit), 2nd grade of **sam-*, as in Icel. sama, to beseem, befit, become; cognate with Goth. samjan, to please, lit. 'to be the same,' hence to be like, to fit, suit, be congruent with. —Icel. samr, the same, cognate with E. Same, q. v. ¶ Thus seemly = same-like, agreeing with, fit; and seem is to agree with, appear like, or simply, to appear; the AS. sēman, to conciliate, is the same, with the act. sense 'to make like,' make to agree. Der. seemly, adv. (for seem-li-ly); seemli-ness, Prompt. Parv.

SEER, a prophet, lit. 'one who sees.' (E.) See See.

SEESAW, motion to and fro, or up and down. (E.) In Pope, Prol. to Satires, 323. A reduplicated form of saw; from the action of two men sawing wood (where the motion is up and down), or sawing stone (where the motion is to and fro). See Saw (1). It is used as adj., verb, and sb.; the orig. use was perhaps adjectival, as in Pope.

SEETHE, to boil. (E.) The pt. t. sod occurs in Gen. xxv. 29; the pp. sodden in Exod. xii. 9. ME. sethen, Chaucer, C. T. 385 (A 383); pt. t. sing. seeth, id. 8103 (E 227), pl. sothen, soden, P. Plowman, B. xv. 288, C. xviii. 20; pp. soden, sothen, id. B. xv. 425. AS. sēoðan, pt. t. sēað, pp. soden; Grein, ii. 437. + Du. zieden; Icel. sjóða, pt. t. sauð, pl. suðu, pp. soðinn; Dan. syde; Swed. sjuda; OHG. siodan; G. sieden. Teut. type **seuthan-*, pt. t. **sauth*, pp. **sud-anoz*. Allied to Goth. sauths, sauds, a burnt-offering, sacrifice, Mark, xii. 33. Der. sod, suds.

SEGMENT, a portion, part cut off. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. —L. segmentum, a piece cut off; for **sec-mentum*. —L. sec-āre, to cut; with suffix -mentum; see Section.

SEGREGATE, to separate from others. (L.) Not common. In Sir T. More, Works, p. 428 d; where it occurs as a pp., meaning 'separated.' —L. sēgregātus, pp. of sēgregāre, to set apart, lit. 'to set apart from a flock.' —L. sē-, apart; and greg-, stem of grex, a flock; see Se- and Gregarious. Der. segregat-ion, from MF. segregation, 'a segregation,' Cot., from L. acc. sēgregatiōnem.

SEGUIDILLA, a lively Spanish dance. (Span.—L.) Moore has the F. form seguadille; Remember the Time, l. 5. —Span. seguidilla, a merry Spanish tune and dance, with a refrain. Dimin. of seguida, a continuation, succession (of the refrain). —Span. seguir, to follow. —L. sequi, to follow. See Sequence.

SEIGNIOR, a title of honour. (F.—L.) ME. seignour, King Alisaunder, 1458; the derived word seignory is much commoner, as in Rob. of Brunne, p. 24, l. 18, Rob. of Glouc. p. 186, l. 3858. —OF. seignour, MF. seigneur, 'a lord, sir, seignior;' Cot. —L. seniorem, acc. of senior, elder, hence, an elder, a lord; see Senior. Der. seignior-y, as above, from OF. seignorie, MF. seigneurie, 'seigniory,' Cot.

SEINE, a large fishing-net. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. seyne; Wright's Vocab. i. 159. —F. seine. —L. sagēna. —Gk. σαγήνη, a large fishing-net.

SEIZE, to lay hold of, grasp, comprehend. (F.—OHG.) ME. saysen, seysen, orig. a law term, to give seisin or livery of land, to put one in possession of, also to take possession of; hence, to grasp; see Havelok, 251, 2513, 2518, 2931. —OF. seisir, saisir, to put one in possession of, take possession of (Burguy). —Low L. sacire, to take possession of. Usually referred to Teut. **satjan-*, OHG. sazzan (Goth. satjan, AS. settan), to set, put, place, cognate with E. Set. This may have given the Low L. form, though it would not give the OF. form directly. Der. seiz-er, seiz-able, a coined word; seiz-ure, Troil. i. 1. 57, a coined word, answering to the F. infin. saisir just as pleasure does to plaisir. Also seis-in, seiz-in, possession of an estate, a law term, ME. seisine, spelt seysyne in Rob. of Glouc. p. 382, l. 7851, from OF. seisine, the same as saisine, 'seisin, possession,' Cot.; where the suffix -ine answers to L. -ina; cf. Ital. agina, seisin, possession.

SEJANT, sitting; a term in heraldry. (F.—L.) AF. seiant, pres. pt. of AF. seier, variant of OF. seoir, to sit (Godefroy). —L. sēdere, to sit. See Séance, Sit.

SELAH, a pause. (Heb.) In Ps. iii. 2; and elsewhere in the psalms. The meaning of the word is unknown, and cannot be certainly explained. Usually taken to indicate 'a pause.' See Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

SELDOM, rarely, not often. (E.) ME. seldom, P. Plowman, A. viii. 124; selden, B. vii. 137; selde, Chaucer, C. T. 1541 (A 1539). AS. seldan, seldon, seldum, seldom; Grein, ii. 426. β. The AS. seldum is formed with an adverbial suffix -um which was orig. the inflectional ending of the dat. plural; just as in hwil-um, mod. E. whilom, lit. 'at whiles' or at times, wundr-um, wondrously, lyl-um, little, micl-um, much, and the like; see March, A. S. Gram. § 251. This form easily passed into seldon or seldan, just as AS. onsundr-on, asunder, stands for on sundrum. γ. This takes us back to an adj. seld, rare, only found as an adverb. 'Pæt folc wundraþ þæs þe hit seldost gesihð' = the people wonder at that which it most seldom sees; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxix. § 3; where seldost is the superl. form of the adverb. We also find such compounds as seld-cūð, rare, seld-sine, seldom seen; Sweet, A. S. Reader. + Du. zelden, adv.; Icel. sjaldan, adv., seldom; Dan. sjelden, adv.; Swed. sällan (for säldan), adv.; G. selten; OHG. seltan. δ. All these are adverbial forms from a Teut. adj. **seldoz*, rare, strange, appearing in Goth. silda- in comp. silda-leiks, wonderful, orig. perhaps 'of strange form.'

SELECT, choice. (L.) In Shak. Haml. i. 3. 74.—L. sēlectus, select, chosen; pp. of sēligere, to choose.—L. sē, apart; and legere, to choose. See Se- and Legend. Der. select-ness; also select, verb, Cor. i. 6. 81; select-ion, sb., from L. acc. sēlectionem.

SELF, one's own person. (E.) ME. self, sometimes used in the sense of 'same' or 'very'; dat. selue; 'right in the selve place' = just in the very place, Chaucer, C. T. 11706 (F1394). AS. self, also seolf, sif, siolf, sylf, self; Grein, ii. 427, where numerous examples are given. +Du. zelf; Icel. sjálfr; old form sjælfr; Dan. selv; Swed. sjelf; Goth. silba; G. selbe, selbst. The origin is unknown. Der. self-denial, self-evident, self-existent, self-possession, self-righteous, self-same, self-sufficient, self-willed. Also self-ish, in Hacket's Life of Archbp. Williams, pt. ii. p. 144 (Trench, Eng. Past and Present); self-ish-ness, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 1052. Also my-self, AS. min self, where min is the possessive pron. of the 1st person; thy-self, AS. þin self, where þin is the possessive pron. of the second person; him-self, where the AS. phrase is hē self, nom., his selfes, gen., him selfum, dat., hine selfne, acc. (see Grein); her-self, due to AS. hyre selfre, dat. fem.; &c. For the use of these forms in ME. and AS., see examples in Stratmann and Grein. Also selv-age, q. v.

SELL (1), to hand over or deliver in exchange for money or some other valuable. (E.) ME. sellen, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 33; sillen, Matt. xix. 21. AS. sellan, sillan, syllan, to give, hand over, deliver; Grein, ii. 429. +Icel. selja, to hand over to another; Dan. sælge; Swed. sälja; MHG. sellen; OHG. saljan. +Goth. saljan, to bring an offering, to offer a sacrifice. β. All from a Teut. type **saljan-*, to offer, deliver, hand over. This is a causal form, allied to the sb. which appears in E. as Sale, q. v. Der. seller.

SELL (2), a saddle. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 11, 3. 12. ME. selle, a seat, Wyclif, 2 Macc. xiv. 21.—OF. selle, 'a stool, a seat, also, a saddle'; Cot.—L. sella, a seat. For **sed-la*, from sedēre, to sit; see Settle (1), and Sit. Brugmann, i. § 475.

SELVAGE, SELVEDGE, a border of cloth, forming an edge that needs no hem. (Du.) In Exod. xxvi. 4, xxxvi. 11; spelt seluege in the edit. of 1551; selvage in G. Douglas, Prol. to Aen. xii. l. 16. It merely means self-edge, but it was borrowed from Dutch. 'The self-edge makes show of the cloth'; Ray's Proverbs, ed. 1737.—MDu. selfegge, the selvage, spelt self-egghe in Kilian; from self, self, and egge, edge. [The more usual Du. word is zelfkant, for selfkant.] 'Egge, an edge, or a selvage; kant, the edge, brinke, or seame of anything; de zelfkant, the selvage of cloath'; Hexham. See Self and Edge.

SEMAPHORE, a kind of telegraph. (F.—Gk.) A late word, not in Todd's Johnson. A F. name (ab. 1803) for a telegraph worked with arms projecting from a post, the positions of the arms giving the signals. Coined from Gk. σημα, a sign; and φορά, a carrying, from φέρειν, to bear, carry, cognate with E. Bear, vb.

SEMBLANCE, an appearance. (F.—L.) ME. semblaunce, Rom. of the Rose, 425.—OF. semblance, 'a semblance, shew, seeming'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -ance (= L. -antia) from sembl-er, 'to seem, or make shew of; also, to resemble'; Cot.—L. simulāre, to assume the appearance of, simulate; see Simulate. Cf. re-semblance.

SEMI, half. (L.) L. sēmi-, half; reduced to sēm- in L. sēmēsus. +Gk. ἡμι-, half; AS. sam-, half; as in sam-wis, half wise, not very wise; Grein, ii. 388, 390; Skt. sāmi, half; which Benfey connects with sāmya-, equality, from sama-, even, same, equal, like, cognate with E. Same. Thus semi- denotes 'in an equal manner,' referring to an exact halving or equitable division; and is a mere derivative of same. Doublet, hemi-.

SEMIBREVE, half a breve, a musical note. (Ital.—L.) From Ital. semibreve, 'a semibriefe in musike'; Florio, ed. 1598.—Ital. semi-, half; and breve, a short note. See Semi- and Breve. ¶ Similar formations are seen in semi-circle, semi-circumference, semi-colon, semi-diameter, semi-fluid, semi-quaver, semi-tone, semi-transparent, semi-vocal, semi-vowel; all coined words, made by prefixing semi-, and presenting no difficulty.

SEMINAL, relating to seed. (F.—L.) Sir T. Browne has seminality, sb., Vul. Errors, b. vi. c. 1. § 3.—MF. seminal, adj. 'of seed'; Cot.—L. sēminālis, relating to seed.—L. sēmin-, stem of sēmen, seed.—L. base sē-, appearing in sē-uī, pt. t. of serere, to sow; and suffix -men. Serere is cognate with E. Sow, q. v. Der. seminar-y, q. v. Also semin-at-ion (rare), from L. sēmin-ātio, a sowing, which from sēmināre, to sow, derived from sēmen.

SEMINARY, a place of education. (L.) The old sense was a seed-garden. 'As concerning seminaries and nourse-gardens'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 10.—L. sēminārium, a seed-garden, nursery garden, seed-plot; neut. of sēminārius, belonging to seed.—L. sēmin-, stem of sēmen, seed; and suffix -ārius. See Seminal.

SEMOLINA, large grains left after the finer flour has passed through the sieve. (Ital.—L.) Modern; for semolino.—Ital. semolino, m., small seed, paste for soups, dimin. of semola, bran.—L. simila, fine wheaten flower.—Gk. σμιδαλις, the same. See Simnel.

SEMPITERNAL, everlasting. (F.—L.) In Minshew and Cotgrave. Altered from F. sempiternel, 'sempiternal'; Cot. L. sempitern-us, everlasting; with suffix -ālis.—L. sempi-, for semper, ever; with suffixes -ter- and -nus; cf. noct-tur-nus (for **noct-tur-nus*) from the stem noct-. β. L. sem-per is perhaps for **sem-perti*, 'in one (continuous) part, in one sequence, ever'; from sem- 'one,' as in semel, once, and **perti*, allied to 'part.' Brugmann, i. § 1023 (12); ii. § 160 (1).

SEMPSTER, SEMPSTRESS, the same as Seamstress, q. v. SENARY, belonging to six. (L.) The senary scale (scale by sixes) is a mathematical term.—L. sēnārius, consisting of six each.—L. sēni, six each; for **sex-ni*.—L. sex, six, cognate with E. six; see Six.

SENATE, a council of elders. (F.—L.) ME. senat; spelt senacht, Layamon, 25388.—OF. senat, 'a senat'; Cot.—L. senātum, acc. of senātus, the council of elders.—L. sen-, base of sen-ex, old, sen-ium, old age; with pp. suffix -ātus; so that sen-ātus = grown old. Cf. Vedic Skt. sana-, old (Benfey), OGk. ēvos, old; Goth. sin-eigs, old, sin-ista, eldest; OIrish sen, Irish and Gael. sean, W. hen, old. See Senior. Der. senat-or, ME. senat-our, Chaucer, C. T. 5430 (B 1010), from OF. senatour (Littré), from L. acc. senātōrem; altered to senator to make it like the L. nom. case. Hence senator-ship, senator-i-al, senator-i-al-ly. Brugmann, i. § 117.

SEND, to cause to go, despatch. (E.) ME. senden, pt. t. sende, sent; pp. sent; Chaucer, C. T. 5511 (B 1091), AS. sendan, pt. t. sende, pp. sended, Grein, ii. 431. +Du. zenden; Icel. senda; Dan. sende; Swed. sända; Goth. sandjan; MHG. senten, G. senden. Teut. type **sandjan*, for **santhjān-*, by Verner's Law; from **santh*, 2nd grade of **senthān-*, to go. Hence send is a causal verb; lit. 'to make to go.' β. The Teut. **senthān-*, to go, pt. t. **santh*, is a lost str. vb. of which the prime grade appears in Goth. sinths (for **senthōz*), AS. sīð (for **sind*), a journey, way; Teut. type **senthōz*, m.; Idg. **sentos*, a way, as seen in OIrish sēt (for **sent*), W. hynt, Bret. hent (for **sent*), a way. Cf. G. gesinde, followers; Goth. gasinthja, a travelling companion. See Sense.

SENDAL, CENDAL, a kind of rich thin silken stuff. (F.—Low L.—Skt.) See Sendall and Cendal in Halliwell. ME. sendal, P. Plowman, B. vi. 11; Chaucer, C. T. 442 (440).—OF. sendal (Roquefort); also cendal (Burguy). Cf. Port. cendal, fine linen or silk; Span. cendal, light thin stuff; Ital. zendalo, zendado, 'a kind of fine thin silken stuff, called taffeta, sarcenet, or sendall,' Florio.—Low L. cendalum; also spelt cendūle, cendātum, sendātum, sendādum, cindādus, cindātus. Cf. also Gk. σινδών, fine linen. So called because brought from India.—Skt. sindhū-, the river Indus, the country along the Indus, Scinde. See Indigo.

SENESCHAL, a steward. (F.—Teut.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 1. 12. ME. seneschal, P. Plowman, C. i. 93.—OF. seneschal, 'a seneschall, the president of a precinct'; Cot. Cf. Span. senescal, Ital. siniscalco, a seneschal, steward. The orig. signification must have been 'old (i. e. chief) servant,' as the etymology is undoubtedly from the Goth. sins, old (only recorded in the superl. sin-ista, eldest), and skalks, a servant. The Goth. sins is cognate with L. sen-ex, old. The word mar-shal is a similar compound. See Senior and Marshal.

SENIOR, elder, older. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 2. 10; cf. senior-junior, L. L. L. iii. 182; spelt seniour, Tyndale, Mark, vii. 3 (1526); senyor, Monk of Evesham (ab. 1412), c. x. ed. Arber, p. 31.—L. senior, older; comparative from the base sen-, old, found in sen-ex, old, sen-ium, old age. From the Idg. type **senos*, old; see Senate. Der. senior-i-ty. Doublets, signor, señor, seignior, sire, sir.

SENNA, the dried leaflets of some kinds of cassia. (Ital.—Arab.) Spelt sena in Phillips, ed. 1706; the older name is seny or senie, ME. senee, Libell of E. Policy, l. 362, which is a F. form, from OF. senné (Cot.). Minshew's Span. Dict. has 'sen, seny'; ed. 1623.—Ital. sena (Florio).—Arab. sanā, senna; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 361; Rich. Dict. p. 851.

SENNET, a signal-call on a trumpet. (F.—L.) In stage-directions; see King Lear, i. 1. 33, and Wright's note. And see Nares. Also spelt cynet, sinet, synnet, signate.—OF. sinet, senet, segnet (Godefroy, s. v. segnet), lit. a signet, a little sign (hence, signal); dimin. of F. seing, signe.—L. signum, a sign; see Sign. See Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 264.

SENNIGHT, a week. (E.) Spelt senyght in Palsgrave; synyght, Sir Amadas, 590 (Weber); a contraction of seven night; see Seven and Night.

SENSE, a faculty by which objects are perceived, perception, discernment. (F.—L.) It does not appear to be in early use; Palsgrave gives sensualness and sensuality, but not sense. Levins has sensible and sensual, but also omits sense. Yet it is very common in Shakespeare. 'And shall sensitive things be so sencelesse as to resist sence?' Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, poem ix. l. 137; ed. Grosart, ii. 25.—F. sens, 'sence, wit'; Cot.—L. sensum, acc. of sensus, feeling, sense; cf. sensus, pp. of sentire, to feel, perceive. β. From the Idg. base **sent-*, to direct oneself towards, whence also not only G. sinn, sense, G. sinnen, to think over, reflect upon, but also Idg. **sentos*, a way, and E. send; see SEND. Der. sense-less, sense-less-ly, sense-less-ness; sens-ible, Gower, C. A. iii. 88; bk. vii. 127, from F. sensible, 'sensible,' Cot., from L. sensibilis; sens-ibl-y, sensible-ness, sensibil-ity. Also sens-it-ive, from F. sensitif, 'sensitive,' Cot.; sens-it-ive-ly, sens-it-ive-ness; sens-at-ion, Phillips, from L. **sensatio*, a coined word from L. sensatus, endued with sense; sens-at-ion-al, sens-at-ion-al-ism. Also sens-or-i-um, from Late L. sensōrium, the seat of the senses (White); sens-or-i-al. And see sens-u-al, sent-ence, sent-i-ment. From the same source we also have as-sent, con-sent, dis-sent, re-sent; in-sens-ate, non-sense, pre-sent-i-ment, scnt.

SENSUAL, affecting the senses, given to the pleasures of sense. (L.) In Levins; Palsgrave has sensualness and sensuality (sensitivity) in his list of sbs.; and sensuall in his list of adjectives. From Late L. sensuālis, endowed with feeling; whence sensuālitās, sensibility (White). Formed (with suffix -ālis), from sensu-, for sensus, sense; see SENSE. Der. sensual-ly; sensual-i-ty, from F. sensualité, 'sensitivity,' Cot.; sensual-ness, sensual-ise, sensual-ism, sensual-ist. Also sensu-ous, a coined word, used by Milton; see Rich. and Todd's Johnson.

SENTENCE, an opinion, maxim, decree, series of words containing a complete thought. (F.—L.) ME. sentence, Ancren Riwle, p. 348, l. 14.—F. sentence, 'a sentence,' Cot.—L. sententia, a way of thinking, opinion, sentiment. For **sententia*, from the stem of the pres. part. of sentire, to feel, think; see SENSE. Der. sentence, vb., Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 55; sententi-ous, As You Like It, v. 4. 66, from F. sententieux, 'sententious,' Cot., from L. sententiosus; sententi-ous-ly, -ness. Also sentient, feeling, from stem of pres. part. of sentire, to feel.

SENTIMENT, thought, judgement, feeling, opinion. (F.—L.) ME. sentement, Chaucer, Prol. to Legend of Good Women, l. 69. [Afterwards conformed to a supposed L. form **sentimentum*, not used.]—OF. sentement, 'a feeling,' Cot.; F. sentiment. Formed as if from L. **sentī-mentum*, a word made up of the suffix -mentum and the verb sentī-re, to feel. See SENSE. Der. sentiment-al, sentiment-al-ly, sentiment-al-ism, -ist.

SENTINEL, one who keeps watch, a soldier on guard. (F.—L.) Ital.—L. Spelt centonell, Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 41; centronel, Marlowe, Dido, ii. 1. 323; sentinel, Macb. ii. 1. 53.—MF. sentinelle, 'a sentinell, or sentry,' Cot.—Ital. sentinella, 'a watch, a sentinell, a souldier which is set to watch at a station,' Florio. Cf. Span. centinela, a sentinel; MF. sentinelle, a watch-tower (Godefroy). Usually explained from L. sentire, to perceive; as if a sentinel meant a watcher, scout; but this does not account for the -in-. See Körting, §§ 8597, 8611. β. Derived by Wedgwood from OF. sentine, a path (Roquefort), due to L. sēmita, a path; this does not help us; for the word is Italian, not French. At the same time, it would be possible to derive the form centronel (in Marlowe) from OF. sentron, a path (Godefroy). See SENTRY. γ. Perhaps from Ital. sentina, in the sense of 'rascal rout of camp-followers,' or 'a place where such used to congregate;' if the sentinel had to watch them; see Florio and Lewis.

SENTRY, a sentinel, soldier on guard. (F.—L.) Spelt sentrie, in Minshew, ed. 1627; senteries, pl., Milton, P. L. ii. 412; sentry in Cotgrave, s. v. sentinelle. Perhaps from MF. sentier, adj., 'of, or in, a path,' Cot. Or from OF. senteret, a path; with reference to the sentinel's beat, or his guarding the approaches. The former answers to Late L. sēmītārius, adj. (Lewis); whence the neuter sēmītārium (F. sentier), a path (Ducange).—L. sēmita (whence OF. sentē), a path. Der. sentry-box.

SEPAL, a calyx-leaf, division of a calyx; in botany. (F.—L.) F. sepale, a sepal. Coined (to pair with pet-al, F. pétale) by taking part of L. sēp-ar, separate, and adding -ale. Thus sepal is (practically) short for **sēpar-al*, where sēpar- was regarded as a part of L. sēpar-āre, to separate. See SEPARATE.

SEPARATE, to part, divide, sever. (L.) We should have expected to find separate first used as a pp., in the sense 'set apart;' but I find no very early example. Levins, Shakespeare, and Minshew recognize only the verb, which occurs as early as in Tyndale, Workes, p. 116, col. 2; see Richardson.—L. sēparātus, pp. of sēparāre, to separate.—L. sē-, apart; and parāre, to provide, arrange. See SE- and PARADE, PALE. Der. separate, adj., from pp. sēparātus;

separate-ly; separat-ion, from MF. separation, 'separation,' Cot.; separat-ism, separat-ist. Also separ-able, from L. sēparābilis; separabl-y. Doublet, sever.

SEPOY, one of the native troops in India. (Pers.) 'Sepoys (a corruption of sipāhi, Hindostanee for a soldier), the term applied to the native troops in India;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is, however, a Persian one.—Pers. sipāhi, 'a horseman, one soldier;' properly an adj., 'military, belonging to an army;' Rich. Dict. p. 807.—Pers. sipāh, supāh, an army; sipah, supah, sapah, an army; id. pp. 807, 808; Horn, § 699. ¶ The Pers. ā being sounded nearly as E. au in maul, the spelling sepo gives the right sound very nearly.

SEPT, a clan. (F.—L.) It is chiefly used of the Irish clans. Spenser has 'the head of that sept;' and again, 'whole nations and septs of the Irish;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611, col. 1. 'The Irish man . . . termeth anie one of the English sept,' &c.; Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, cap. 8. 'Five of the best persons of every sept' [of the Irish]; Fuller's Worthies; Kent (R.). 'All of the old Irish septs of Ulster;' Clarendon, Civil Wars, iii. 430 (R.). Wedgwood says: 'a clan or following, a corruption of the synonymous sect.' He cites from Notes and Queries (2nd Series, iii. 361, May 9, 1857), two quotations from the State Papers, one dated A. D. 1537, which speaks of 'M'Morgho and his kinsmen, O'Byrne and his septe,' and another dated A. D. 1536, which says 'there are another secte of the Berkes and divers of the Irishry towards Sligo.'—OF. septe, variant of secte, a sect; Supp. to Godefroy. See SECT. Wedgwood adds: 'The same corruption is found in Prov. cepte. "Vist que lo dit visconte non era eretge ni de lor cepte" = seeing that the said viscount was not heretic nor of their sect; Sismondi, Litt. Provenç. 215.' Ducange has Late L. septa for Ital. setta (< L. secta). ¶ Perhaps influenced by L. septum, an enclosure; from sēpire, sāpire, to hedge in, from sēpes, sāpes, a hedge. Doublet, sect.

SEPTEMBER, the ninth month. (L.) ME. Septembre, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. l. 3. It seems to be meant for the Latin, not the French form; the other months being mostly named in Latin.—L. September, the name of the seventh month of the Roman year.—L. septem, seven, cognate with E. seven; and the suffix -ber, of uncertain origin. See SEVEN.

SEPTENARY, consisting of seven. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, iv. 12. 12. A mathematical term.—L. septēnārius, consisting of seven.—L. septēnī, pl., seven apiece, by sevens; for **septem-nī*.—L. septem, seven. See SEVEN.

SEPTENNIAL, happening every seven years, lasting seven years. (L.) Used by Burke; see Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -al, from L. septenni-um, a period of seven years.—L. septenni-s, adj., of seven years.—L. sept-, for septem, seven; and annus, a year. See SEVEN and ANNUAL. Der. septennial-ly.

SEPTIC, putrefying. (Gk.) Modern.—Gk. σηπτικός, characterised by putridity.—Gk. σηπρός, rotten; from σήπειν, to cause to rot.

SEPTUAGENARY, belonging to seventy years. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9, § 4, last line.—L. septuagēnārius, belonging to the number seventy.—L. septuagēnī, seventy each; distributive form of septuagintā, seventy.—L. septuā-, due to septem, seven; and -ginta = -cinta, short for **decinta*, tenth, from decem, ten. See SEVEN and TEN. Der. septuagenari-an. So also septuagesima, lit. seventieth, applied to the Third Sunday before Lent, about 70 days before Easter; from L. septuagēsima (diēs), fem. of septuagēsīmus, seventieth, ordinal of septuagintā, seventy. Also septua-gint, the Greek version of the Old Testament, said to have been made by 70 translators; used by Burnet (Johnson).

SEPULCHRE, a tomb. (F.—L.) ME. sepulcre, in early use; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 95, l. 11.—OF. sepulcre, MF. sepulchre, 'a sepulcher, tomb;' Cot.—L. sepulcrum (also ill-spelt sepulchrum), a tomb.—L. sepul-, appearing in sepul-tus, pp. of sepelire, to bury; with suffix -crum. Der. sepulchr-al, from F. sepulchral, 'sepulchral,' Cot.; also sepult-ure, Rob. of Glouc. p. 166, l. 3466, from MF. sepulture, 'sepulture, a burying,' Cot., from L. sepultura, burial, due to pp. sepultus.

SEQUEL, consequence, result. (F.—L.) Spelt sequele in Levins, and by Surrey; see Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 218, l. 8; and in Dictes and Sayings, pr. by Caxton, fol. 3 b, l. 10.—OF. sequele, 'a sequell;' Cot.—L. sequēla, that which follows, a result.—L. sequi, to follow; see SEQUENCE.

SEQUENCE, order of succession, succession. (F.—L.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 96; Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 422, l. 5.—OF. sequence, 'a sequence at cards;' sequences, pl., 'answering verses,' Cot.; with which cf. the passage in Gascoigne.—L. sequentia, sb., a following.—L. sequenti-, stem of pres. part. of sequi, to follow.

—SEQ, to follow; whence Skt. sach, to follow; Lith. sek-ti, to follow, Irish seich-im, I follow; Gk. ἐπομαι, I follow. Der. sequent, following, from the pres. part. of sequi. Also (from sequi) con-sec-utive, con-sequ-ence, ex-ec-ute (for ex-sec-ute), ex-equ-ies (for ex-sequ-ies), ob-sequ-ies, per-sec-ute, pro-sec-ute, sequ-el, sequ-ester, sub-sequ-ent. Also as-soc-iate, dis-soc-iate, soc-iable, soc-ial, soc-iety; intrin-sic. Also sect, sec-ond, sue, en-sue, pur-sue, pur-suit; suit, suit-a-ble, suit-or, suite, pur-suit. See Sue. Brugmann, i. § 118.

SEQUESTER, to set aside or apart. (F.—L.) 'Him hath God the father specially sequestered and seuered and set aside;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1046 f. And see sequestration in Blount's Nomolexicon. We find also: 'Hic sequestarius, a sequesterer,' in the 15th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 210, col. 2; and see Wyclif, 1 Macc. xi. 34.—MF. sequestrer, 'to sequestrer (sic), or lay aside;' Cot.—L. sequestrāre, to surrender, remove, lay aside; cf. L. sequester, a mediator, agent or go-between, also a depository or trustee. Allied to sequi, to follow (Bréal). Der. sequester-ed, set apart, retired; sequester, sb., seclusion, Oth. iii. 4. 40; also sequestr-ate, sequestr-at-or, sequestr-at-ion.

SEQUIN, a gold coin of Italy. (F.—Ital.—Arab.) Also spelt chequin, Shak. Pericles, iv. 2. 28; also zechin, which is the Ital. form.—F. sequin, 'a small Italian coin;' Cot.—Ital. zecchino, 'a coin of gold currant in Venice;' Florio.—Ital. zecca, 'a mint or place of coining;' id.—Arab. sikka(t), pronounced sikkah, 'a die for coins;' Rich. Dict. p. 838. Hence also sicca rupee (Yule).

SERAGLIO, a place of confinement, esp. for Turkish women. (Ital.—L.) A. The peculiar use of this word, in mod. E., is due to a mistake. The orig. sense is merely an enclosure, and it was sometimes so used. 'I went to the Ghetto [in Rome], where the Jewes dwell as in a suburbe by themselves. . . I passed by the Piazza Judea, where their seraglio begins; for, being inviron'd with walls, they are lock'd up every night;' Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 15, 1645. We find it in the modern sense also: 'to pull the Ottoman Tyrant out of his seraglio, from between the very armes of his 1500 concubines;' Howell, Foreign Travel (1642), sect. ix; ed. Arber, p. 45.—Ital. serraglio, 'an inclosure, a close, a padocke, a parke, a cloister or seclude;' Florio, ed. 1598. β. There was at that date no such restricted use of the Ital. word as our modern sense indicates. Cotgrave, indeed, translates MF. serrail by 'the palace wherein the great Turk mueth up his concubines;' yet he also gives serrail d'un huis, the bolt of a door, which is the older sense. γ. The Ital. serraglio is formed with suffix -aglio (L. -āculum) from the verb serrare, 'to shut, lock, inclose;' Florio. Cf. Late L. serācula, a small bolt.—Late L. serāre, to bar, bolt, shut in.—L. sera, a bar, bolt.—L. serere, to join or bind together; see Series. B. It is clear that the modern use of seraglio was due to confusion with Pers. (and Turkish) sarāy or serāi, 'a palace, a grand edifice, a king's court, a seraglio;' Rich. Dict. p. 821. See Horn, § 727. It is equally clear that the Pers. word is not the real source of the Italian one. See Serried.

SERAI, a court for the accommodation of travellers, a caravan-seray. (Pers.) Also used to mean 'seraglio,' as in Byron, The Giaour: 'When Leila dwelt in his Serai.' From Pers. serāi, lit. a palace. Horn, § 727. See Seraglio, B.

SERAPH, an angel of the highest rank. (Heb.) Spenser has seraphims, Hymn of Heavenlie Beautie, l. 94. The A. V. has seraphims, Isa. vi. 2; seraphim being the Hebrew plural, out of which has been evolved the E. sing. seraph.—Heb. serāphīm, seraphs, exalted ones. 'Gesenius connects it with an Arabic term meaning high or exalted; and this may be regarded as the generally received etymology;' Smith, Dict. of the Bible. Cf. Arab. sharaf, 'being high or noble;' Rich. p. 888. Der. seraph-ic, seraph-ic-al, seraph-ic-al-ly.

SERASKIER, a Turkish general. (F.—Turk.—Pers. and Arab.) In Byron, Don Juan, viii. 98.—F. sérasquier (Littre).—Turk. ser'ask(i)er, general (where the i is slight).—Pers. ser, head; and Arab. asker, army (Devic); i.e. 'head of the army.'

SERE (1), withered; the same as Sear, q. v.

SERE (2), a bird's claw; the catch of a gunlock. (F.—L.) For 'bird's claw,' see serre in Nares. 'Tickled [read tickle, i.e. ticklish] o' the serre;' Hamlet, ii. 2. 337 (see Wright's note); i.e. like a gunlock of which the catch is easily released.—MF. serre, 'a hawkes talon,' Cot.; because it holds fast.—F. serrer, 'to bind fast, lock;' Cot.—L. serrāre, to lock; see Serried.

SERECLOTH, waxed cloth; see Cerecloth, Cere.

SERENE, calm. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 25, v. 123, 734.—L. serēnus, bright, clear, calm (of weather). See Brugmann, i. § 920 (4). Der. serene-ly, -ness; seren-i-ty, from MF. serenité, 'serenity,' Cot., from L. acc. serenitatem. Also seren-ade, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from MF. serenade (Cot.), which from Ital. serenata, 'music given under gentlewomens windowes in a morning or evening,' Florio; properly pp. of Ital. serenare, 'to make cleere, faire, and lightsome, to looke cheerfullie and merrilie,' id. Milton uses the Ital. form serenate, P. L. iv. 769. Hence serenade, verb.

SERF, a slave attached to the soil. (F.—L.) Given in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. It occurs in Caxton's Golden Legend, St. John Evang., § 5.—F. serf, 'a servant, thrall;' Cot.—L. seruum, acc. of seruus, a slave; see Serve. Der. serf-dom, a coined word, with E. suffix -dom.

SERGE, a cloth made of twilled worsted or silk. (F.—L.—Gk.—Chinese.) Now used of stuff made of worsted; when of silk, it is called silk serge, though the etymology shows that the stuff was orig. of silk only. In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 27.—F. serge, 'the stuff called serge;' Cot.—L. serica, fem. of sericus, silken; we also find serica, neut. pl., silken garments.—L. Sericus, of or belonging to the Seres, i.e. Chinese.—Gk. Σήρες, pl. Chinese. Cf. σήρ, a silkworm. From the Chinese se, sei, silk. See Silk.

SERGEANT, SERJEANT, a lawyer of the highest rank; a non-commissioned officer next above a corporal. (F.—L.) Orig. a law-term, in early use. ME. sergantes, pl., officers, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 177, l. 2; sergeant, Chaucer, C. T. 311 (A 309).—OF. sergant, serjant (Burguy), later sergent, 'a sergeant, officer;' Cot.—Late L. seruientem, acc. of seruiens, a servant, vassal, soldier, apparitor; Ducange. The Late L. seruiens ad legem = sergeant-at-law.—L. seruiens, pres. part. of seruīre, to serve; see Serve. Der. sergeant-major, sergeant-y, sergeant-ship. Doublet, servant.

SERIES, a row, order, succession, sequence. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. series, a row, series.—L. serere, pp. sertus, to join together, bind.—Gk. εἶπευ, to fasten, bind (for **σέπευ*); cf. Lith. seris, thread; Icel. sörvi, a necklace; Skt. sarit, thread). Der. seri-al, arranged in a series; modern, not in Todd's Johnson; hence serial-ly. Der. (from same root) ser-aglio, serr-i-ed. Also (from pp. sertus) as-sert, con-cert, de-sert (1), dis-sert-at-ion, exert (for ex-sert), in-sert.

SERIF, the short cross-line at the end of a stroke of a printed letter. (Du.) Letters made without this cross-stroke are called sans-serif (from F. sans, without). Most probably, ser- represents the E. (or F.) equivalent of Du. schr- in schreef, a dash, a short line; MDu. schreve, a line. Allied to OHG. screvōn, to scratch, incise. Cf. Low G. schreve, a line to mark how far one goes; aver'n schreve, over (beyond) the stroke, too far.

SERIOUS, weighty, solemn, in earnest. (F.—L.) 'So serious and earnest remembrance;' Sir T. More, p. 480 g. 'Seryouse, earnest, serieux;' Palsgrave.—OF. serieux (mod. F. serieux), omitted by Cotgrave, but recorded by Palsgrave, and in use in the 14th cent. (Littre).—Late L. seriōsus, serious; Ducange.—L. serius, grave, earnest. β. Root uncertain; the long e in serius induces Fick to compare it with G. schwer (OHG. swāri), weighty, heavy; cf. Lith. swarūs, heavy; see Fick, i. 842. Der. serious-ly, -ness.

SERMON, a discourse on a Scripture text. (F.—L.) ME. sermoun, sermun; in early use; see Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 186, title. The verb sermonen, to preach, occurs in O. E. Homilies, i. 81. l. 14.—F. sermon, 'a sermon;' Cot.—L. sermōnem, acc. of sermo, a speech, discourse. For **swer-mo*; and allied to E. Swear. See Walde, Et. Dict.

SEROUS, adj.; see Serum.

SERPENT, a reptile without feet, snake. (F.—L.) ME. serpent, Chaucer, C. T. 10826 (F 512).—F. serpent, 'a serpent;' Cot.—L. serpentem, acc. of serpens, a serpent, lit. a creeping thing; pres. part. of serpere, to creep.—✓SERP, to creep; whence Skt. srp, to creep, Gk. ἐρπειν, to creep, Skt. sarpa-, a snake. Brugmann, i. § 477. Der. serpent-ine, adj., Minsheu, from F. serpentin, L. serpentinus; serpent-ine, a name for a kind of gun, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 124, l. 159.

SERRATED, notched like a saw. (L.) A botanical term; see examples in R.—L. serrātus, notched like a saw.—L. serra, a saw. Der. serrat-ion.

SERRIED, crowded, pressed together. (F.—L.) 'Their serried files;' Milton, P. L. vi. 599. Spelt serred in Blount.—F. serrer, 'to close, compact, presse neer together, to lock;' Cot.—Late L. serāre, to bolt.—L. sera, a bar, bolt.—L. serere, to join or bind together; see Series; and cf. Seraglio.

SERUM, whey, the thin fluid which separates from the blood when it coagulates. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. serum, whey, serum.—Gk. ὀρός, whey; Skt. sara(s), adj. flowing; sb. whey. (But see Brugmann, i. § 466.) Der. ser-ous.

SERVAL, the S. African tiger-cat. (F.—Port.—L.) A name now applied to the tiger-cat of S. Africa. But in a tr. of Buffon (1792), ch. xx, we read:—'The maraputia, which the Portuguese in India call serval (says Vincent Maria) is a wild and ferocious animal, much larger than the wild cat.' The word is therefore Portuguese. Vieyra gives lobo cerval, 'the lynx;' where lobo means wolf (L. lupus), and cerval (like Span. cerval) is said to be an adj., from cerva, a hind.

—L. cerua, a hind. Cf. L. lupus ceruarius (F. loup cervier), a lynx (Pliny); because it hunts deer. See Hart.

SERVE, to attend on another, wait upon obediently. (F.—L.) ME. seruen, Havelok, 1230; seruien, Ancren Riwe, p. 12, l. 4 from bottom. —F. servir, to serve. —L. seruire, to serve. Cf. L. seruus, a servant, slave, seruare, to keep, protect. Der. serv-ant, ME. seruaunt, seruant, Chaucer, C. T. 11104 (F 792); Ancren Riwe, p. 428, l. 9, from F. servant, serving, pres. part. of servir, to serve; serv-er; serv-ice, ME. seruise, Layamon, 8071, from OF. seruise, service, from L. seruitium, service, servitude; service-able, Levins; dis-service. Also serv-ile, Levins, from L. seruilis; servile-ly, servil-i-ty; serv-it-or, prob. suggested by F. serviteur, 'a servant, servitor' (Cot.), rather than borrowed directly from L. seruitor; serv-it-ude, spelt servitude, Chaucer, C. T. 8674 (E 798), from F. servitude, from L. acc. seruitudinem. Also serf, sergeant; con-serve, de-serve, dis-serve, mis-serve, ob-serve, pre-serve, re-serve, sub-serve; de-sert (2), un-de-serv-ing, un-de-serv-ed, &c.

SERVICE-TREE, a kind of wild pear-tree. (L. and E.) Here service is a curious substitution for ME. serues (in Northern dialect servis), which is the pl. of a form **serf* or **serve* (not used) representing the AS. syrf, a service-tree, also called in AS. syrf-trēow. Here syrf is not an E. word, but adapted from L. sorbus, a service-tree. The ME. serues = L. sorba, berries of the same. For details see Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 266.

SESSION, the sitting or assembly of a court. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 2. 86. —F. session, not noticed by Cotgrave, though in use in the 12th cent. (Littré). —L. sessiōnem, acc. of sessio, a sitting, session; cf. sessus, pp. of sedere, to sit, cognate with E. Sit, q.v.

SET (1), to place, fix, plant, assign. (E.) ME. setten, pt. t. sette, pp. set. 'Thei setten Jhesu on hym;' Wyclif, Luke, xix. 35. AS. settian, to set; Grein, ii. 432. Causal of AS. sittan, to sit; for **satian*, from sat, oldest form of pt. t. of sittan. See Sit. +Du. zetten; Icel. setja; Dan. satte; Swed. sätta; G. setzen; Goth. satjan. Teut. type **satjan-*; from **sat*, 2nd grade of **setjan-*, to sit. Der. set, sb., Rich. III, v. 3. 19; set-off, sb., sett-er, sb., sett-ing. Also sett-ee, a seat with a long back (Todd's Johnson), of which the origin is by no means clear; it seems to be an arbitrary variation of the prov. E. settle, used in the same sense, with a substitution of the suffix -ee for -le; this suffix (= F. -é, L. -ātus) is freely used in English, as in refer-ee, trust-ee; but it makes no good sense here. See Settle (1).

SET (2), a number of like things. (F.—L.) 'A set of beads;' Rich. II, iii. 3. 147. When we speak of 'a set of things,' this is a peculiar use of Sect, q.v. (Not allied to the verb to set). —OF. sette, variant of OF. secte, a sect; Supp. to Godefroy. —L. secta, which often had the sense of 'set' in old wills. Cf. Ital. setta. See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 269. A set = a suit; see Suit.

SETON, an artificial irritation under the skin. (F.—L.) 'Seton, is when the skin of the neck, or other part, is taken up and run thro' with a kind of pack-needle, and the wound afterwards kept open with bristles, or a skean of thread, silk, or cotton,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. —F. seton, in use in the 16th cent.; Littré cites 'une aiguille à seton enfilée d'un fort fil' = a needle with a seton, threaded with a strong thread; where seton is a thick thread. Formed from a Late L. type **sēto* (acc. sētōnem); derived from L. sēta, a bristle, thick stiff hair, which in Late L. also meant silk (Ducange). See Satin.

SETTEE, a kind of seat. (E.) 'The soft settee'; Cowper, The Task, i. 75; see under Set (1).

SETTLE (1), a long bench with a high back. (E.) Also used generally in the sense of 'seat' or 'bench'; see Ezek. xliii. 14, 17, 20, xlv. 19. 'Settle, a seat;' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17. ME. setel, setil. 'Upon the setil of his magesté' = upon the seat of His majesty, i.e. upon His royal seat; Pricke of Conscience, 6122. 'On þe sette of unhele' = in the seat of ill-health; O. Eng. Hom. ii. 59. AS. sell, a seat, Grein, ii. 432. +Goth. sitts, a seat, throne; OHG. sezzal; G. sessel; Du. zetel. β. All from Teut. root **set*, Idg. √SED, to sit; cf. L. sel-la (for **sed-la*), whence E. sell, a saddle; see Sell (2) and Sit. Der. settle (2). Doublet, sell (2).

SETTLE (2), to fix, become fixed, adjust. (E.) Two distinct words have been confused; in the peculiar sense 'to compose or adjust a quarrel,' the source is different from that of the commoner verb, and more remote. A. ME. setlen, trans. to cause to rest, intrans. to sink to rest, subside. 'Til þe semli sunne was settled to reste' = till the seemly sun had sunk to rest, Will. of Palerne, 2452. 'Him thoughte a goshaue . . . Sellith on his beryng' = it seemed to him that a goshawk settles down on his cognisance (?), King Alisaunder, 484; and see l. 488. AS. setlan, to settle down, to fix. 'Seilaþ sē-mearas' = the mariners fix (or anchor) their vessels (Grein). Cf. AS. sell-gang, the going to rest of the sun, sunset; from AS. setel, a seat; Grein, ii. 432. Thus the lit. sense of settle is 'to take a seat' or 'to set as in a fixed seat.' See Settle (1). B. At the same time, the peculiar sense 'to settle a quarrel' appears to have been borrowed from ME. saytlen, sahltlen, saujtlen, to reconcile, make peace, P. Plowman, B. iv. 2 (footnote). 'Now saghtel, now strife' = now we make peace, now we strive; Pricke of Conscience, 1470. Sajltel = appeased, reconciled, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 230, 1139. AS. sahltian, to reconcile; 'gōde men . . . sahltoden heom' = good men reconciled them; A. S. Chron. an. 1066; MS. Laud 636, ed. Thorpe, i. 337; see also p. 384, l. 19. —AS. sah, reconciliation; A. S. Chron. ed. Thorpe, i. 385, l. 2; a word borrowed from Icel. sätt, sætt, reconciliation, peace; which Noreen (§ 73) connects with L. sanctus, holy. Also sometimes spelt seht, the verb occurring as sehtlian (Toller). β. That these two verbs were actually confused, we have evidence in the fact that, conversely, the ME. saytlen, to reconcile, was also used in the sense of subside or become calm. 'þe se sajltel therwith' = the sea subsided; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 232. We even find the intermediate form sattile; 'Muche sorþe þenne sattiled vpon segge Ionas' = much sorrow then settled on the man Jonah; id. C. 409. Der. settl-er; settle-ment, with F. suffix -ment.

SEVEN, a cardinal number, six and one. (E.) ME. seuen, seuene; P. Plowman, B. iv. 86. The final -e is prob. the mark of a pl. form; both forms occur. AS. seofon, also seofone, seven; Grein, ii. 437; the final -e marks the plural, and is unoriginal; early form, sibun. +Du. zeven; Icel. sjö, sju; Dan. syv; Swed. sju; OHG. sibun, G. sieben; Goth. sibun. +L. septem; Gk. ἐπτά; W. saith; Gael. seachd; Irish seacht; Russ. sem(e); Lithuan. septyni; Skt. saptan. β. All from Idg. type **septam*, seven; origin unknown. Der. seven-fold, AS. seofon-feald; seven-teen, AS. seofon-týne, from seofon, seven, and týn, ten; seven-teen-th, AS. seofon-tēoða, but formed by analogy, by adding -th to seventeen; seven-ty, AS. hundseofontig (by dropping hund, for which see Hundred); seven-ti-eth. Also seven-th, formed by adding -th; AS. seofoða.

SEVER, to separate, cut apart. (F.—L.) 'I sever, I departe thynges asonder, Ie separe;' Palsgrave. ME. seueren, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1797. —OF. seurer (Burguy). Cf. Ital. severare, seurare. —L. sēparāre, to separate; see Separate. Der. sever-al, sever-al-ly, of which Sir T. More has seuerally, Works, p. 209 h; from OF. severale, Late L. sēparāle, a thing separate or a thing that separates (Ducange); as if from a L. adj. **sēparālis*. Also severance; dis-sever; dis-sever-ance; cf. OF. desseurance (Burguy). Doublet, separate.

SEVERE, austere, serious, strict. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 301. —OF. severe, 'severe,' Cot.; mod. F. sévère. —L. seuērus, severe; orig. revered, respected (of persons), hence serious, grave (in demeanour). Der. severe-ly; sever-i-ty, from MF. severité, 'severity;' Cot.

SEW (1), to fasten together with thread. (E.) Pronounced so. ME. sowen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 9; more commonly sewen, id. C. ix. 8; Wyclif, Mark, ii. 21. AS. siwian, Mark, ii. 21; Gen. iii. 7. +Icel. syja; Dan. sy; Swed. sy; OHG. siuwan, siwan; Goth. siujan. +L. suere; Lithuan. suti; Russ. shit(e); Skt. siv, to sew, whence sūtra, thread. Cf. Gk. κασ-σέω, to sew together. And see Hymen. β. All from the √SIW, to sew; Fick, i. 229. Der. sew-er, sew-ing; also seam, q.v.

SEW (2), to follow; the same as Sue, q.v.

SEWER (1), an underground passage for water, large drain. (F.—L.) Frequently spelt shore, which represented a common pronunciation; still preserved in Shore-ditch = sewer-ditch, in London. Spelt sure, Troil. v. 1. 83, ed. 1623. [To be kept distinct from the verb sew, to drain, to dry. 'Sew ponds' = drain ponds, Tusser's Husbandry, cap. 15. § 17 (E. D. S.); p. 32. Note also sew, sb., as in 'the towne sinke, the common sew,' Nomenclator, ed. 1585, p. 391; cited in Halliwell, s. v. seugh. These are prob. from OF. essuier, esuer, to dry (Burguy); gen. used in the sense 'to wipe dry,' but the true etym. sense is to drain dry, deprive of moisture, as in English. Cot. has essuier, 'to dry up.' —L. exsūcāre, exsuccāre, to deprive of moisture, suck the juice from. —L. ex, out, away; and sūcus, juice, moisture, from the same root as L. sūgere, to suck, and E. suck; see Suck.] β. But sewer, sb., is really an adaptation of OF. seuwiere, a sluice of a fishpond, for letting off water; also spelt sewiere; see examples in Godefroy, s. v. sewiere, and in Ducange, s. v. seweria. —L. **ex-aquāria*; like E. ewer from L. aquāria. Cf. Late L. exaquā-torium, a channel for draining; from ex out, and aqua, water. Der. sewer-age; also sew-age, formed directly from the verb sew. ¶ The F. suffix -age in these words is an indication of the F. origin of sew and sewer.

SEWER (2), the officer who formerly set and removed dishes, tasted them, &c. (F.—L.) In Halliwell. Baret (1580) has: 'The Sewer of the kitchen, Anteambulo fercularius; The Sewer which tasteth the meate, Escuyer de cuisine.' 'Seware, at mete, Depositor, dapifer, sepulor;' Prompt. Parv., p. 454. On the same page we have:

'Sewyn, or sette mete, Ferculo, sepulo; and: 'Sew, cepulatum.' A. It is therefore clear, that, in the 15th century, the word sew-er was regarded as being formed from a verb to sewe, that had really been evolved from sewer, sb. But we find, in the N. E. Dict., s. v. asseour, that the two forms asseour and sewer were used to denote 'one who sets meat on a table;' evidently allied to sewyn, to set meat, above. Of these asseour is the fuller form.—OF. asseour, used in speaking of the service of a table; 'qui fait asseoir;' Godefroy.—OF. asseoir, to seat, set.—L. assidere, to sit beside, to attend upon; cf. Assiduous.—L. ad, near; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. Hence sewer is 'one who sets a table;' of F. origin; possibly confused with the native sb. sew, pottage, from AS. sēaw, juice.

SEX, the distinction between male and female, characteristics of such a distinction. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 49.—F. sexe, 'a sex, or kind;' Cot.—L. sexum, acc. of sexus, sex. Cf. secus, n., sex. Perhaps orig. 'a division;' from secare, to cut. Der. sex-u-al, a late word, from L. sexu-ālis, formed with suffix -ālis from sexu-, decl. stem of sexus; sex-u-al-ly, sex-u-al-i-ty.

SEXAGENARY, belonging to sixty. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. sexāgenārius, belonging to sixty.—L. sexāgenī, sixty each; distributive form from sexāgintā, sixty.—L. sex, six; and -ginta, for -cinta, short for **decinta*, tenth, from decem, ten. See Six and Ten. Der. sexagenari-an, Phillips.

SEXAGESIMA, the second Sunday before Lent. (L.) So called because about the sixtieth day before Easter. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and earlier, in Prayer-books.—L. sexāgēsima, lit. sixtieth; agreeing with dies, day, understood. Fem. of sexāgēsimus, sixtieth. Allied to sexāgintā, sixty. See Sexagenary. Der. sexagesim-al.

SEXENNIAL, happening every six years, lasting six years. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, with suffix -al, from L. sexenni-um, a period of six years.—L. sex, six; and annus, a year (becoming enni- in composition). See Six and Annals. Der. sexennial-ly.

SEXTANT, the sixth part of a circle. (L.) Chiefly used to mean an optical instrument, furnished with an arc extending to a sixth part of a circle. But in earlier use in other senses. 'Sextant, a coin less than that called quadrant by the third part . . the sixth part of any measure;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. sextant-, stem of sextans, the sixth part of an as, a coin, weight. Formed with suffix -ans (like that of a pres. part. of a verb in -āre) from sext-, stem of sextus, sixth, ordinal of sex, six. See Six. Der. (from sext-us) sext-ile, Milton, P. L. x. 659; also sextuple, q. v.

SEXTON, a sacristan; see Sacristan.

SEXTUPLE, sixfold, having six parts. (L.) 'Whose length . . is sextuple unto his breadth;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 5. § 12. Coined from sextu-s, sixth, just as quadruple is from quadr- (used for quartus) with the sense of fourth. The suffix -ple answers to L. -plex, stem of -plex, as in du-plex, com-plex. See Quadruple and Sextant.

SFORZANDO, with special emphasis; in music. (Ital.—L.) Ital. sforzando, lit. 'constraining' or 'forcing;' pres. part. of sforzare, to force, lit. 'to force out.'—L. ex, out, strongly (whence Ital. s-); and Late L. fortia, force (Ital. forza), from L. fortis, strong. See Force.

SH

SHABBY, mean, paltry. (E.) Merely a doublet of scabby, by the usual change of AS. sc to E. sh. Shabby is the native E. equivalent of the Scand. scabby. 'They were very shabby fellows, pitifully mounted, and worse armed;' Lord Clarendon, Diary, Dec. 7, 1688. Cf. 'They mostly had short hair, and went in a shabbed condition;' A. Wood, Athen. Oxon. Fast. ii. 743 (Todd). We find shabbyd for scabbed in P. Plowman, C. x. 264. From AS. sceab, scæb, a scab, itch. See Scab. Der. shabbi-ly, shabbi-ness.

SHACKLE, a fetter, chain to confine the limbs, clog. (E.) ME. schakkyl, schakle, Prompt. Parv.; pl. scheakeles, Ancren Riwle, p. 94, l. 25. AS. sceacul, a bond; Voc. 107. 10. For an older form **scacul*. +Icel. skökull, the pole of a carriage; Swed. skakel, the loose shaft of a carriage; Dan. skagle, a trace (for a carriage); MDu. schakel, 'the links or rings [read link or ring] of a chaine;' schakelen van een net, 'the meshes [meshes] of a net;' Hexham. β. The orig. sense is a loose band or bond, hence a trace, single link of a chain, loose-hanging fetter. Perhaps named from its shaking about, as distinct from a firm bond; cf. Low G. shake, shank. From AS. sceacan, scacan, to shake. See Shake. Cf. Icel. skökull, from skaka; Dan. skagle, from skage, to shift, orig. to shake; Swed. dial. skak, a chain, link (Rietz). Der. shackle, verb, ME. schaklen, Prompt. Parv.

SHAD, a fish. (E.) 'Like bleeding shads;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 2 (Clara). 'And there the eel and shad sometimes are caught;' John Dennys, Secrets of Angling (before A. D. 1613); in Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, i. 171. 'A shadde, a fish, acon;' Levins. AS. sceadd, a shad; Thorpe, Diplom. Ævi Saxonici, p. 544. Cf. prov. G. shade, a shad (Flügel). We also find Irish and Gael. sgadan, OIrish scatán, with the sense of 'herring;' W. ysgadan, pl. herrings.

SHADDOCK, a tree of the orange genus; also its fruit. (E.) Sir H. Sloane mentions the shaddock-tree in his Catalogus Plantarum (1696). In Stedman's Surinam (1796), i. 22, he tells us that it was brought to the W. Indies by a Captain Shaddock; this was in the 17th century (before 1696).

SHADE, SHADOW, obscurity, partial darkness. (E.) These are but two forms of one word; the latter form representing the dat. case. ME. schade, Will. of Palerne, 22; schadue, id. 754. From AS. sceadu, shadow, fem. (Grein, ii. 398, 401), we have the ME. shade, E. shade. From AS. dat. sceadwe we have ME. schadwe, E. shadow; cf. also ME. scheadewe, Ancren Riwle, p. 190, l. 24. +Du. schadu, shadow; G. schatten, shade; OHG. scato (gen. scatewes), shade; Goth. skadus. +Irish and Gael. sgath, shadow, shade, shelter; OIrish scáth, Corn. scod, shade; Gk. σκότος, σκορία, darkness, gloom. β. All from Idg. base **sko-*. Der. shade, verb, Court of Love, l. 1272; shad-er; shad-y, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 7; shad-i-ly, -ness; shadow, verb, ME. shadowen, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 42, AS. sceadwian, scadwian, Ps. xc. 4 (ed. Spelman); over-shadow, AS. oferseadwian, Mark, ix. 7; shadow-y, ME. shadewy, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4, l. 40. Doublet, shed (2).

SHADOOF, a contrivance for raising water. (Arab.) From Arab. shādūf (not in Rich. Dict.); an Egyptian-Arabic word; see Lane's Modern Egyptians.

SHAFT, an arrow, smoothed pole, column, cylindrical entrance to a mine. (E.) The orig. sense is 'shaven' rod, a stick smoothed into the shape of a spear-pole or an arrow. ME. shaft, schafft, an arrow, Chaucer, C. T. 1364 (A 1362); Parl. of Foulles, 180. AS. sceaft, a shaft of a spear, dart; Grein, ii. 403. For scaf-t, formed with suffix -t (Idg. -to-) from scaf-, stem of pp. of scafan, to shave; see Shave. +Du. schacht (for schaft, like Du. lucht for luft, air); from schaven, to smooth, plane; Icel. skapt, better schaft, a shaved stick, shaft, missile; Dan. skaft, a handle, haft; Swed. skäft, a handle; G. schaf. Teut. types **skaf-toz*, m., **skaf-tom*, n. Prob. further allied to Gk. σκήπτρον, a sceptre, Dor. σκᾶν-ρον, a staff, sceptre; L. scāp-us, a shaft, stem, stalk. ✓SQAP; as in Lith. skapoti, to shave, cut. ¶ The ME. schaft, in the sense of 'creature,' is from AS. sceppan, to shape, make; see Shape. Der. shaft-ed.

SHAG, rough hair, rough cloth. (E.) 'Of the same kind is the goat-hart, and differing only in the beard and long shag about the shoulders;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 33 (Of the shag-haired and bearded stagge like to a goat). 'With rugged beard, and hoarie shagged heare;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 34. Shak. has shag for shaggy, Venus, 295; also shag-haired, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 367. I know of no instance in ME. AS. sceacga; 'Coma, feax, sceacga; Comosus, sceacgede;' Voc. 379. 41; 380. 14. +Icel. skagg, Swed. skägg, a beard; Dan. skjæg, a beard, barb, awn, wattle; cf. Icel. skaga, to jut out, project; whence also Icel. skagi, a low cape or head-land (Shetland skaw). The orig. sense is 'roughness.' See Shaw. Der. shagg-y, shagg-i-ness; also shagg-ed, as above. Shag tobacco is rough tobacco; cf. Shakespeare's 'fetlocks shag and long;' Venus, 295.

SHAGREEN, a rough-grained leather, shark's skin. (F.—Turkish.) 'Shagreen, a sort of rough-grained leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706. He also spells it chagrin.—F. chagrin, shagreen. It was orig. made of the skin (of the back only) of the horse, wild ass, or mule; afterwards, from the skin of the shark. See the full account in Devic, Supp. to Littré.—Turk. sāghrī, saghrī, the back of a horse; also, shagreen, Zenker, Turk. Dict. p. 561; and Devic. Cf. Pers. saghrī, shagreen; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 354. See Chagrin.

SHAH, a king of Persia. (Pers.) Spelt shaw in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665.—Pers. shāh, a king; Palmer, Pers. Dict. col. 374. Remarkably shortened from OPers. khsāyathiya, a king; prob. orig. an adj., signifying 'mighty;' and formed (with lengthened ā) from khsayathī, might, sb.; allied to Skt. kshatra-m, dominion.—OPers. khsi (Skt. kshi), to rule, have power. Cf. Gk. κράωμαι, I possess. Horn, § 772; Brugmann, i. § 920. Der. check, check-er, check-ers, check-mate, chess; also pa-sha or pa-cha. Doublet, check, sb.

SHAKE, to agitate, jolt, keep moving, make to tremble; also to shiver, tremble. (E.) ME. schaken, shaken; pt. t. schook, shook, Chaucer, C. T. 2267 (A 2265); pp. schaken, shaken, shakē, id. 408.

AS. sceacan, scacan, pt. t. scōc, pp. sceacen, scacen; Grein, ii. 401. +Icel. skaka, pt. t. skök, pp. skakinn; Swed. skaka; Dan. skage, to shift, veer. Teut. type **skakan-*. Cf. also Skt. khaj, to move to and fro, hence, to churn; from ✓SKAG, to move to and fro. Fick, iii. 329, i. 804. Der. shake, sb., a late word, Herbert, Church Porch, st. 38; shak-y, shak-i-ness; shack-le. Also Shake-speare. Also shock, q. v., shog, q. v., jog, q. v., shank, q. v.

SHAKO, a kind of military cap. (F.—Hung.—Slav.) Modern; F. shako or schako (Littre).—Hungarian csako (pron. chaako), a cap, shako; see Littre and Mahn's Webster. Spelt tsākō, and explained as a Hungarian cap, in Dankovsky's Magyar Lexicon, ed. 1833, p. 900. He supposes it to be of Slavonic origin, not a real Magyar word. Miklosich (p. 27) gives the Oslav. form as caconinū.

SHALE, a rock of a slaty structure. (G.) A term of geology, borrowed (like gneiss, quartz, and other geological terms) from German.—G. schale, a shell, peel, husk, rind, scale; whence schalgebirge, a mountain formed of thin strata. Cognate with E. shale, a shell, Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 18; prov. E. shale, thin strata (E. D. D.); also with scale; see Scale (1). Der. shal-y. Doublet, scale (1).

SHALL, I am bound to, I must. (E.) ME. shal, schal, often with the sense of 'is to'; Chaucer, C. T. 733 (A 731); pt. t. sholde, scholde, shulde (mod. E. should), id. 964 (A 962). AS. sceal, an old past tense used as a present, and thus conjugated; ic sceal, þū scealt, hē sceal; pl. sculon, sculun, or sceolun. Hence was formed a pt. t. scolde, or sceolde, pl. sceoldon. The form of the infin. is sculan, to owe, to be under an obligation to do a thing; Grein, ii. 413. Hence mod. E. I shall properly means 'I am to,' I must, as distinguished from I will, properly 'I am ready to,' I am willing to; but the orig. sense of compulsion is much weakened in the case of the first person, though its force is retained in thou shalt, he shall, they shall. The verb following it is put in the infin. mood; as, ic sceal gān=I must go; hence the mod. use as an auxiliary verb. +Du. ik zal, I shall; ik zoude, I should; infin. zullen; Icel. skal, pl. skulum; pt. t. skyldi, skyldu; infin. skulu; Swed. skall; pt. t. skulle; infin. skola; Dan. skal; pt. t. skulde; infin. skulle; G. soll, pt. t. sollie; infin. sollen (the k being lost, as in Dutch); Goth. skal, pl. skulum; pt. t. skulda; infin. skulan. β. All from Teut. type **skal*, I owe, am in debt, am liable; a sense which is clearly preserved in AS. scyld, guilt, i.e. desert of punishment, G. schuld, guilt, fault, debt. We also find Lithuan. skelū, I am indebted, skelėti, to owe, be liable. See Fick, iii. 334. γ. Probably further allied to L. scelus, guilt, and Skt. skhal, to stumble, err, fail.

SHALLOON, a light woollen stuff. (F.) 'Shalloon, a sort of woollen stuff, chiefly used for the linings of coats, and so call'd from Chalons, a city of France, where it was first made;' Phillips, ed. 1706. We find chalons, i.e. a coverlet made at Chalons, even in Chaucer, C. T. 4138 (A 4140).—F. Chalons, or Chalons-sur-Marne, a town in France, 100 miles E. of Paris. 'Sa seule robe . . . était de ras de Chalons;' Scarron, Virg. iv. (Littre, s. v. ras, § 9). Cf. AF. Chalouns, cloth of Chalons, Liber Albus, pp. 225, 231. Chalons takes its name from the tribe of the Catalauni, who lived in that neighbourhood.

SHALLOP, a light boat. (F.—Du.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 27. —F. chaloupe, 'a shallop, or small boat;' Cot.—Du. sloep, a sloop; MDu. sloep, 'a sloop;' Hexham. ¶ Hence also Span. chalupa (also Port. chalupa), 'a small light vessel, a long boat,' Neuman. Minshew's Span. Dict., ed. 1623, has chalupa, 'a flat-bottomed boat.' The occurrence of shallop in Spenser's F. Q. shows that it is rather an old word in our own language. The Ital. form is scialuppa. Doublet, sloop, q. v.

SHALLOT, SHALOT, a kind of onion. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) Added by Todd to Johnson; it is also spelt eschalot.—MF. eschalote, eschalotte, 'a cive or chive,' i.e. a kind of onion; Cot. Mod. F. échalote. The form eschalote is a variant, or corruption, of OF. escalogne, a shallot; Roquefort.—L. ascalōnia, a shallot; fem. of Ascalōnius, adj., belonging to Ascalon. 'Ascalonia, little onions or shallons, taking that name of Ascalon, a city in Jury;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 6.—Gk. Ἀσκάλων, Ascalon, one of the chief cities of the Philistines, on the W. coast of Palestine; Smith, Class. Dict.—Heb. Ashqelōn. See Joshua, xiii. 3; &c.

SHALLOW, not deep. (E.) ME. schalowe. 'Schold, or schalowe, noȝte depe;' Prompt. Parv. p. 447; Trevisa, iii. 131, l. 7; shald, Barbour, Bruce, ix. 354. Not found in AS.; but evidently from a base **sceal-*, which occurs again in ME. schol-d, schal-d (above), of which the AS. form was sceald, shallow. This AS. sceald is not in the Dict., but frequently occurs in A. S. Charters; as shown by Mr. Stevenson, Phil. Soc. Trans., 1895-8, p. 532. Thus, in Birch, Cart. Saxon. ii. 485, we find: 'on scealdan ford;' and in the same, i. 593, we have: 'æt scealdan flōte.' AS. sceald represents a Teut. type **skal-pōz* (Idg. type **skaltós*). Cf. also prov. E. shall, shaul, shallow. Perhaps allied to Low G. schaal, schalig, G. schal, insipid, stale, said of liquids when little is left in the vessel. Der. shallow-ness. And see shoal (2).

SHALM, the same as Shawm, q. v.

SHAM, to trick, verb; a pretence, sb. (E.) 'Sham, pretended, false; also, a flam, cheat, or trick; To sham one, to put a cheat or trick on him;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A meer sham and disguise;' Stillingfleet, vol. iv. ser. 9 (R.). 'They . . . found all this a sham;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1688 (R.). Earlier, in 1677, we find: 'Shamming is telling you an insipid, dull lye with a dull face, which the sly wag the author only laughs at himself; and making himself believe 'tis a good jest, puts the sham only upon himself;' Wycherley, The Plain Dealer, iii. 1. We find also the slang expression 'to sham Abraham'=to pretend to be an Abraham-man, or a man from Bedlam hospital; see Abraham-men in Nares, and in Hotten's Slang Dictionary. To sham appears to be merely the Northern E. form of to shame, to put to shame, to disgrace, whence the sense 'to trick' may easily have arisen. Sham for shame is very common in the North, and appears in Brockett, and in the Whitby, Mid-Yorkshire, Swaledale, and Holderness Glossaries (E. D. S.). 'Wheea's sham is it'=whose fault is it? Whitby Gloss. Cf. Icel. skömm, a shame, outrage, disgrace. See Shame. ¶ The explanation in North's Examen, 1740, p. 256, is neither clear nor helpful; he confuses sham with ashamed.

SHAMBLE, to walk awkwardly. (E.) A weakened form of scamble, to scramble; cf. prov. E. scambling, sprawling, Hereford (Hall.). 'By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich old banker, Gomez;' Dryden, Span. Friar, Act i. sc. 2. Scamble, to scramble, struggle, is in Shak. Much Ado, v. 1. 94; K. John, iv. 3. 146; Hen. V, i. 1. 4. It seems to be an E. word; see Shamble and Scamble in the E. D. D. But it is difficult to find cognate words in other languages. Cf. skimble-skamble, wandering, wild, confused, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 154.

SHAMBLES, stalls on which butchers expose meat for sale; hence, a slaughter-house. (L.) 'As summer-flies are in the shambles;' Oth. iv. 2. 66. Shambles is the pl. of shamble, a butcher's bench or stall, lit. a bench; and shamble is formed, with excrescent b, from ME. schamel, a bench, orig. a stool; see Ancren Riwe, p. 166, note e. AS. scamel, a stool; fōl-scamel, a foot-stool; Matt. v. 35.—L. scamellum, a little bench or stool (White); allied to scamnum, a step, bench, scabellum, a foot-stool. The orig. sense is 'prop.' Cf. L. scāpus, a shaft, stem, stalk; Gk. σκῆπτειν, to prop, also to throw. Brugmann, i. § 241 (a).

SHAME, consciousness of guilt, disgrace, dishonour. (E.) ME. schame, shame, Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 9. AS. sceamu, scamu, shame; Grein, ii. 403. +Icel. skömm (stem skamm-) a wound, shame; Dan. skam; Swed. skam; G. scham. β. Teut. type **skamā*, i., shame; Fick, iii. 332. Allied to Goth. skanða, shame, G. schande. Der. shame, verb, AS. sceamian, scamian, Grein; shame-ful, spelt scheome-ful, Ancren Riwe, p. 302, l. 23; shame-ful-ly, shame-ful-ness; shame-less, AS. scam-lēas, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxxi (ed. Sweet, p. 204); shame-less-ly, shame-less-ness; also shame-faced, q. v. And see sham.

SHAMEFACED, modest. (E.) A corruption of shamefast, by a singular confusion with face, due to the fact that shame is commonly expressed by the appearance of the face; see Face. We find shamefastness in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 50; shame-faced in Shak. Rich. III, i. 4. 142, where the quarto ed. has shamefast (Schmidt). ME. schamefast, shamefast, Chaucer, C. T. 2057 (A 2055). AS. scamfast, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxxi (ed. Sweet, p. 204).—AS. scaumu, shame; and fæst, fast, firm; see Shame and Fast. Der. shamefaced-ness.

SHAMMY, SHAMOY, a kind of leather. (F.—G.) So called because formerly made from the chamois. 'Shamois, or Chamois, a kind of wild goat, whose skin, being rightly dressed, makes our true Chamois leather;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Shamoy, or Shamoy-leather; a sort of leather made of the skin of the Shamoy;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. chamois, 'a wilde goat, or shamoy; also the skin thereof dressed, and called ordinarily shamoy leather;' Cot. Cf. F. chamoiser, to prepare chamois leather; Littre. See Chamois. ¶ Taylor professes to correct this etymology, and, without a word of proof, derives it 'from Samland, a district on the Baltic,' with which it has but two letters, a and m, in common. There is no difficulty, when it is remembered that shamoy-leather could only have been prepared from the chamois at first; other skins were soon substituted, as being cheaper, when a larger demand set in. I see no force in Wedgwood's objection, that chamois skins were too scarce for general use. Imitations are always common. Cf. G. gemsenleder, chamois leather; from gemse, a chamois!

SHAMPOO, to squeeze and rub the body of another after a hot bath; to wash the head thoroughly with soap and water. (Hindustani.) A modern word; the operation takes its name from the squeezing or kneading of the body with the knuckles, which forms a part of it, as properly performed.—Hind. chāmpnā, '(1) to join, (2) to stuff, thrust in, press, to shampoo or champoo'; Shakespear, Hind. Dict. ed. 1849, p. 846. The initial letter is rightly ch, as in church. Yule notes that E. shampoo may represent Hind. chāmpo, the imperative of the above verb.

SHAMROCK, a species of clover. (C.) 'Yf they founde a plotte of water-cresses or shamrokes'; Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 654, col. 2.—Irish seamrog, trefoil, dimin. of seamar, trefoil; Gael. seamrag, shamrock, trefoil, clover.

SHANK, the lower part of the leg, a stem. (E.) ME. shanke, shanke, Havelok, 1903. AS. sceanca, scanca; John, xix. 31, 32. Esp. used of the bone of the leg. +Du. schonk, a bone; Dan. skank, the shank; Swed. skank, leg. Allied to G. schinken, the ham, schenkel, the shank, leg; Low G. schake, shank. Perhaps ultimately related to Shake. Der. skink-er, nun-cheon.

SHANTY, a hut. (Irish.) From Irish sean, old, and toigh, a house. Similar compounds, beginning with sean, are common in Irish; and the compound seantoigh, an old ruinous hut, is in actual use (Archiv f. n. Sprachen, cvii. 112).

SHAPE, to form, fashion, adapt. (E.) Formerly a strong verb. ME. shapen, schapen; pt. t. shoop, Chaucer, C. T. 16690 (G 1222); pp. shapen, shape, id. 1227 (A 1225). A new formation from the ME. sb. schap (AS. ge-sceap); or from the pp., on the analogy of sceacan, to shake. The AS. verb is sceppan, sceppan, which has a weak infin. (=Goth. skapjan or ga-skapjan). But the verb is strong, with pt. t. scōp, sceōp, and pp. scapen, sceapen. +Icel. skapa, pt. t. skōp; Swed. skapa; Dan. skabe; G. schaffen, to create; pt. t. schuf, pp. geschaffen; cf. Goth. gaskapjan. Teut. type **skapen*- (also **skapjan*-), pt. t. **skōp*. Cf. Lith. skabėti, to cut, hew. Brugmann, i. § 701. Der. shape, sb., AS. gesceap, a creature, beauty, Grein; shap-able; shap-er; shapely, ME. schaply, Chaucer, C. T. 374 (A 372); shape-li-ness; shape-less, shape-less-ness. Hence also the suffix -ship, AS. -scipe (as in friend-ship, i. e. friend-shape), cf. G. freund-schaft; and the suffix -scape in land-scape, q. v.

SHARD, SHERD, a fragment. (E.) Commonly in the comp. pot-shard. 'Shards of stones, Fragmentum lapidis; a shard of an earthen pot'; Baret (1580). The pl. shards is in Hamlet, v. 1. 254. ME. scherd, Prompt. Parv. p. 445. AS. sceard, a fragment; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xviii. § 1 (bk. ii. pr. 7); cf. sceard, cut, notched. Lit. 'cut thing'; from Teut. **skar*, 2nd grade of **sker-an*-, to cut. See Shear. Cf. Icel. skarð, a notch, skarðr, sheared, diminished.

SHARE (1), a portion, part, division. (E.) Spelt schare in Palsgrave; very rare in ME. in this sense; schar, i. e. the groin, Wyclif, 2 Kings, ii. 23, is the same word. AS. scearu, a rare word; occurring in the comp. land-scearu, a share of land; Grein. From Teut. **skar*, 2nd grade of **sker-an*-, to shear; see Shear. And see below. Der. share, verb, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 5; shar-er, share-holder.

SHARE (2), a plough-share. (E.) ME. schare, share; P. Plowman, B. iii. 306. AS. scear, a plough-share; Ælfric's Gloss., 1st word. From Teut. **skar*, 2nd grade of **sker-an*-, to shear; see Shear.

SHARK, a voracious fish, hound-fish. (F.—L.) The name of the fish is from the Tudor E. verb shark, to prowl; to shark for a dinner, to try to get one; to shark for a living. 'Because they should not think I came to sharke Only for vittailles'; Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 85. 'They shark for a hungry diet'; Ben Jonson, Mercury Vindicated. Prob. from North F. (Picard) cherquier, equivalent to OF. cercher (E. search), mod. F. chercher. Cf. chercher le broust, 'to hunt after feasts'; Cot. Godefroy has two exx. of the spelling cherquier. Cf. also Ital. cercare del pane, 'to shift for how to live,' i. e. to shark (Torriano).—L. circare, to go round, go about.—L. circus, a ring; see Circus. And see Search. Thus shark is only a variant of search, but was used in a special sense. Hence shark (1), a greedy fellow, one who lives by his wits, described in ch. 14 of Earle's Micro-cosmographie (1628); (2) a greedy fish (in Florio, s. v. Citaro). Der. shark-ing, voracious, greedy, prowling; one of the Dramatis Personæ of Love's Cure (by Beaum. and Fletcher) is 'Alguazeir, a sharking panderly constable'; shark up=to snap up, Hamlet, i. 1. 98. And hence shark=a sharper, as a slang term. Some connect the last word with G. schurke, a rogue; but without any attempt to explain the difference of vowels. Sewel's Du. Dict. has: 'schurk, a shark, a rascal'; but this is merely a translation, not an identification.

SHARP, cutting, trenchant, keen, severe, biting, shrewd. (E.) ME. sharp, scharp, Chaucer, C. T. 1653. AS. scearp; Grein, ii. 404. +Du. scherp; Icel. skarpr; Swed. and Dan. skarp; G. scharf. Teut. type **skarpoz*. Perhaps allied to scrape. See Scrape. Der. sharp-ly, sharp-ness; sharp-er, one who acts sharply, a cheat; sharp-set, -sighted, -witted; sharp-en, to make sharp, Antony, ii. 1. 25.

SHATTER, to break in pieces. (E.) The Southern E. form of scatter; with a difference of meaning. ME. schateren, to scatter, to dash, said of a falling stream; Gawayn and Grene Knight, 2083. AS. scaterian, to scatter, squander; A. S. Chron. an. 1137. Milton uses shatter with the sense of scatter at least twice; P. L. x. 1066, Lycidas, 5; so also prov. E. shatter, to scatter (Kent). See Scatter. Doublet, scatter.

SHAVE, to pare, strip, cut off in slices, cut off hair. (E.) ME. shaven, schaven, formerly a strong verb; pt. t. schoof (misspelt schoofe), Wyclif, 1 Chron. xix. 4, earlier text; the later text has shauyde. The strong pp. shaven is still in use. AS. sceafan, scafan; pt. t. scōf, pp. scafen; the pt. t. scōf occurs in Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. i. c. 1, near the end. +Du. schaven, to scrape, plane wood; Icel. skafa; Swed. skafva, to scrape; Dan. skave, to scrape; Goth. skaban, 1 Cor. xi. 6; G. schaben. β. All from Teut. base SKAB, answering to ✓SQAP, to cut, dig, whence Lithuan. skapoti, to shave, cut, Russ. skopite, to castrate, Gk. σκάπτειν, to dig. Brugmann, i. §§ 569, 701. Der. shav-er, shav-ing; also shave-l-ing, with double dimin. suffix, expressive of contempt, applied to a priest with shaven crown, in Bale, King John, ed. Collier, p. 17, l. 16. Also scab, shab-by, shaf-t.

SHAW, a thicket, small wood. (E.) ME. schawe, shawe, Chaucer, C. T. 4365 (A 4367). AS. scaga, a shaw; Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 161, l. 5. +Icel. skögr, a shaw, wood; Swed. skog; Dan. skov. Allied to Icel. skagi, a ness (Noreen); NFries. skage, a nook of land; cf. Icel. skaga, to jut out. Allied to Shag.

SHAWL, a covering for the shoulders. (Pers.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.—Pers. shāl, 'a shawl or mantle, made of very fine wool of a species of goat common in Tibet'; Rich. Dict. p. 872. See Yule. The Pers. ā resembles E. aw, showing that we borrowed the word immediately from Persian, not from F. châle.

SHAWM, SHALM, a musical instrument resembling the clarinet. (F.—L.—Gk.) It was a reed-instrument. In Prayer-Book version of Ps. xcvi. 7. 'With shaumes and trumpets, and with clarions sweet'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 13. The pl. form shalmyes occurs in Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 128. Shalmye appears to have been abbreviated to shalme, shaume.—OF. chalemie, 'a little pipe made of a reed, or of a wheaten or oaten straw'; Cot. Also chalemelle, chalumeau; Cot. All allied to F. chaume (for **chalme*), straw, a straw.—L. calamus, a reed; borrowed from Gk., the true Lat. word being culmus.—Gk. κάλamos, a reed; καλάμη, a stalk or straw of corn. Cognate with E. Haulm, q. v. ¶ The G. schalmei is also from French. Doublet, haulm.

SHE, the fem. of the 3rd pers. pronoun. (E.) ME. she, sche, sheo; Chaucer, C. T. 121; sho, Havelok, 125; scho, id. 126; also sce, A. S. Chron. an. 1140. In the Northumbrian dialect, we find ME. scho used as a dem. pronoun, though the AS. sēo is the fem. of the def. article. β. The AS. sēo should have become see, but this form never occurs; rather it became siō (John iv. 23, Lindisfarne MS.); whence (perhaps influenced by the Icel. dem. pron. sjā, that) came Northumb. ME. scho, sho; and this seems to have suggested the Midland sche, she, the true Southern forms being heo, he, which actually occur, and were easily confused with he, masc. γ. The AS. sēo, fem. of se, used as def. article, was orig. a demonstrative pronoun, meaning 'that.' +Du. zij, she; Icel. sū, sjā, fem. of sā, dem. pron.; G. sie, she; Goth. sō, fem. of sa, dem. pron. used as def. article; Gk. ἡ, fem. of ὁ, def. art.; Skt. sā, she, fem. of sa, he. For Icel. sjā, see Noreen, § 399. And see Sweet, E. Gr. § 1068.

SHEAF, a bundle of things collected together, esp. used of grain. (E.) ME. scheef, shef (with long e), Chaucer, C. T. 104. AS. sceāf, Gen. xxxvii. 7; spelt sceab in the 8th cent., Corpus Gloss., 197. +Du. schoof; Icel. skauf; G. schaub. The sense of 'sheaf' is a bundle of things 'shoved' together. Teut. type **skauþoz*, m. From **skauþ*, 2nd grade of **skūþan*-, to shove; see Shove. ¶ The pl. sheaves answers to AS. pl. sceāfas. Der. sheaf, verb, As You Like It, iii. 2. 113; sheaf-y.

SHEAL, a temporary summer hut. (Scand.) In Halliwell; Jamieson has also sheil, shielling, sheelin; spelt shieling in Campbell, O'Connor's Child, st. 3. Spelt scheill, Henrysoun, Upland Mouse, st. 6. Connected in the Icel. Dict. with Icel. skāli, Norweg. skaale, a hut; but rather from Icel. skjöl, a shelter, cover, Dan. skjul, a shelter, Swed. skjul, a shed, shelter; cf. Icel. skýli, a shed, shelter, skýla, to screen, shelter, skýling, a screening. These words are from the ✓SKEU, to cover; cf. Skt. sku, to cover; Fick, iii. 337. See Sky. ¶ For the form, cf. Icel. skjöla, a pail or bucket, called in Scotland a skiel or skel.

SHEAR, to cut, clip, shave off. (E.) ME. scheren, sheren, pt. t. schar, shar, pp. schoren, now contracted to shorn; Chaucer, C. T. 13958 (B 3142). AS. scean, sciran, pt. t. scær, pl. scæron, pp. scoren; Gen. xxxviii. 13; Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 145, l. 14. +Du. scheren; Icel. skera; Dan. skære; G. scheren. Teut. type **skeran*-, pt. t. **skar*, pp. **skor-anoz*. Allied to OIrish scar-aim,

I separate; Gael. sgar, to sever; W. ysgar, to part; Gk. κείρειν (for σέρπειν). — ✓SQER, to cut. Brugmann, i. § 631. Der. shear-er; shears, ME. sheres, P. Plowman, C. vii. 75, pl. of shear = AS. sceara, used to translate L. forfex, Voc. 336. 27; shear-ling, a sheep only once sheared, formed with double dimin. suffix -ling. Allied words are Scar (2), Share, Sheer (2), Shard, Shore, Short, Score, Skerry, and others.

SHEATH, a case for a sword or other implement, case, scabbard. (E.) ME. schethe, Wyclif, John, xviii. 11. AS. scēð, scēð, scēað, a sheath; Grein, ii. 399. + Du. scheede; Icel. skeiðir, fem. pl.; Dan. skede; [Swed. skida]; G. scheide. Teut. type **skaiðā*, f., orig. 'that which separates,' applied to the husk of a bean, as in Swed. skida, which also means 'a husk.' Since such a husk has two sides, we see why the Icel. skeiðir is only used in the plural; and these sides of a case must be separated before a knife or sword can be introduced, if the material of the scabbard is at all loose. All from Teut. base **skaith-* [except Swed. skid-a < weak grade **skith-*]; for which see Shed (1). Der. sheathe, verb, Mach. v. 7. 20; spelt sethe in Palsgrave; sheath-ing.

SHEAVE, a wheel of a pulley. (E.) A technical term; see Webster. A variant of prov. E. shive, a slice (Halliwell); see E. D. D., and see further under Shive, Shiver (2).

SHEBEEN, a liquor-shop. (Irish.—E.) Apparently a dimin. (with suffix -in) of Irish seapa, a shop. — E. shop; see Shop.

SHED (1), to part, scatter, cast abroad, pour, spill. (E.) The old sense 'to part' is nearly obsolete, except in water-shed, the ridge which parts river-systems. 'Shed, to distinguish,' Ray, Gloss. B. 15 (E. D. S.). Spelt shed in Baret (1580). ME. scheden, Rob. of Glouc. p. 57, l. 1332; P. Plowman, B. vi. 9; pt. t. shadde, shedde, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 288; pp. shad, Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 148; also shed. AS. sceādan, scādan, to part, separate, distinguish (hence, to scatter); pt. t. scēð, scēad, pp. sceāden, scāden; a strong verb; Grein, ii. 398; but we find the weak pt. t. shadde and the pp. shad as early as in the Ormulum, ll. 3200, 4939. The vowel of the mod. E. word has been shortened, as in red from AS. rēad, bread from brēad, and head from hēafod; this shortening began in the weak pt. t. shedde and the pp. shed. + OSax. skēdan, OFries. skētha, scēda, to part; G. scheiden; Goth. skaidan. Cf. Lithuan. skėdziu, I separate; L. scindere, Gk. σχίζειν, to cleave, split, part. All from Teut. base **skaith*, varying to **skaid* (see Shide); allied to Idg. base **skhid*, to cleave. See Brugmann, i. §§ 201, 599. Der. shedder.

SHED (2), a slight shelter, hut. (E.) Allied to shade. 'Sheds stuffed with lambs and goats,' Chapman, tr. of Odyssey, ix. 314; cf. prov. E. cow-shade, a cow-shed (Leic.). It appears to be a Kentish form, like OKentish bend for band, mere for mare, leddre for ladder, &c.; see Intro. to Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, pp. v, vi. In the same work, p. 95, l. 28, we find ssed (= shed) for shade; ssede, dat. p. 97, l. 1; and ssed in the sense of 'shadow,' p. 137, l. 15. AS. scead, scēd, shade; fig. shelter (Toller); allied to AS. sceadu, shade. See Shade. β. Or shed may be a Kentish form of prov. E. shud, a shed (E. D. D.), ME. schudde, a shed, Prompt. Parv., which answers to an AS. form **scydd*.

SHEEN, fairness, splendour. (E.) 'The sheen of their spears,' Byron, Destruction of Sennacherib. And in Hamlet, iii. 2. 167. But properly an adj., signifying 'fair,' as in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 10, ii. 2. 40. ME. schene, adj., fair, beautiful, Chaucer, C. T. 974 (A 972). AS. sceāne, scēone, scōne, scýne, fair; Grein, ii. 416. Lit. 'showy,' fair to sight, and allied to Show, q. v. (But doubtless frequently supposed to be allied to shine, which the vowel-sound shows to be impossible; observe the cognate forms.) + OSax. scōni, adj.; Du. schoon, adj.; G. schön, adj.; Goth. skains, beautiful. Teut. type **skau-niz* (Kluge); or **skau-n-joz* (Streitberg). See Fick, iii. 336.

SHEEP, a well-known animal. (E.) ME. scheep, sheep, pl. scheep, sheep; Chaucer, C. T. 498 (A 496). AS. scēap, scēp, pl. scēap, scēp, a neuter sb., which is unchanged in the plural, like deer; Grein, ii. 404. + OSax. skūp; Du. schaap, a sheep, a simpleton; G. schaf; OHG. scāf. Teut. type skāpōm, n. Origin unknown; the Pol. skop, Lith. skapas, sheep, are borrowed from Teutonic. Der. sheep-cote, sheep-fold; sheep-ish, -ly, -ness; sheep-master, shearer, -shearing, -walk. Also shep-herd.

SHEER (1), bright, clear, pure, simple, perpendicular. (Scand.) 'A sheer descent' is an unbroken one, orig. a clear one; the old meaning being 'bright.' And see Trench, Select Glossary. 'Sheer, immaculate, and silver fountain;' Rich. II, v. 3. 61. ME. scheere, shere. 'The shere sonne;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. i (How Edipus expounded the probleme). [Rather Scand. than E. The initial sh is due to AS. scīr (below).] — Icel. skærr, bright, clear; Swed. skär; Dan. skær, bright, pure; Teut. type **skairiz*. Allied to Icel. skirr, clear, bright (which is cognate with AS. scīr, bright (Grein), Goth. skeirs, G. schier); Teut. type **skeiroz*. β. Here **skai-riz* is from **skai-*, the 2nd grade, and **skei-roz* from **skei-*, the prime grade, of Idg. root SKEI, to shine. Cf. Icel. skī-na (= AS. scī-nan), to shine; so that the orig. sense is 'shining.' See Shine. Der. sheer, adv.; also Sheer-Thursday, the old name of Maundy Thursday, lit. 'pure Thursday;' cf. Icel. skira, to cleanse, baptize, Skírdagr or Skírþorsdagr, Sheer-day or Sheer-Thursday, Dan. Skærtorsdag. See my note on P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140; p. 379 of 'Notes.'

SHEER (2), to deviate from one's course. (Du.) A nautical term. 'Among sea-men, a ship is said to sheer, or go sheering, when in her sailing she is not steadily steered, &c.,' Phillips, ed. 1706. — Du. scheren, to shear, cut, barter, jest; to withdraw, or go away; to warp, stretch. 'Scheerje van hier, away, get you gone;' Sewel. This answers to mod. E. sheer off! Thus sheer is only a particular use of Du. scheren, cognate with E. Shear. So also G. schere dich weg, get you gone; schier dich aus dem Wege, out of the way! (Flügel).

SHEET, a large piece of linen cloth; a large piece of paper; a sail; a rope fastened to a sail. (E.) ME. schete, shete, Chaucer, C. T. 4138 (A 4140). AS. scēte, scýte; 'Sindo, scýte,' Voc. 124. 24; 'Sindonem, scētan' (Kentish Glosses), Voc. 86. 35; 'Sandalium, scēte,' Corpus gloss., 1776. 'On scēte minum,' in my bosom (L. in sinu meo); Ps. lxxxviii. 49, ed. Spelman. 'On clænre scýtan befold' = enfolded in a clean sheet; Gospel of Nicodemus, c. xiii. ed. Thwaites, p. 6. 'On scētan bewunden,' wound in a sheet; The Shrine, p. 69. Sheet answers to the Kentish and Omerc. form scēte, not to Wessex scýte. The sense of 'bosom' is due to the use of scýte to signify the fold of a garment. It is closely allied to AS. scēat, a much commoner word, meaning (1) a projecting corner, angle, nook of ground, (2) fold of a garment; Grein, ii. 405. β. The orig. sense is 'projection,' or 'that which shoots out,' then a corner, esp. of a garment or of a cloth; after which it was extended to mean a whole cloth or sheet. The nautical senses are found in AS. sceāta, explained 'pes veli'; scēat-line, explained 'propes,' Voc. 288. 24, 25. γ. The vowels ē, y, are due to a mutation from ēa; and all may be compared with AS. scēat, pt. t. of scēotan, to shoot; see Shoot. Cognate with the form scēat- are Icel. skaut, a sheet, corner of a square cloth, corner, sheet or rope attached to the corner of a sail, skirt or sleeve of a garment, a hood; Swed. skot, the sheet of a sail; Du. schoot, a shoot, sprig, sheet, bosom, lap; G. schoosz, flap of a coat, lap, bosom; Goth. skauts, the hem of a garment; all from Teut. **skaut*, 2nd grade of **skeutan-*, to shoot; see Shoot. Der. sheet, verb, Hamlet, i. 1. 115, Antony, i. 4. 65; sheet-ing; sheet-lightning, lightning which spreads out like a sheet. Also sheet-anchor, the same as shoot-anchor, an anchor to be shot out or lowered in case of great danger; 'This saying they make their shoot-anker,' Abp. Cranmer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 117 (cited by Todd); also in Roister Doister, i. 1. 28. The form sheet-anchor is due to ME. schēten, to shoot; see Shoot.

SHEIK, a chief. (Arab.) In books of travel. — Arab. sheikh, an elder, a chief; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 394; shaykh, a venerable old man, a chief; Rich. Dict. p. 920. The orig. sense is 'old.'

SHEKEL, a Jewish weight and coin. (Heb.) See Exod. xxx. 13. The weight is about half an ounce; the value about half a crown. — Heb. shegel, a shekel (weight). — Heb. shāqal, to weigh. [Both ees are short.]

SHEKINAH, SHECHINAH, the visible glory of the Divine presence. (Heb.) Not in the Bible, but in the targums; it signifies the 'dwelling' of God among His people. — Heb. shek(h)ināh, dwelling, the presence of God. — Heb. shāk(h)an, to dwell.

SHELDRAKE, a kind of drake. (E.) ME. scheldrak; 'Hic umnis, scheldrak;' Voc. 762. 39. For sheld-drake, i.e. variegated or spotted drake; hence the ME. form shelde-drake, Rel. Antiq. ii. 82, col. 2. 'Sheldapple [prob. for sheld-dapple], the chaffinch;' Halliwell. 'Sheld, flecked, party-coloured;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. Sheld in this case is just the same as ME. sheld, a shield; and the allusion is, probably, to the ornamentation of shields, which is doubtless of great antiquity. The AS. scyld or scild is a shield; but is also used, in a curious passage, to denote a part of a bird's plumage. 'Is se scyld ufan frætsum gefēged ofer þæs fūgles bæc' = the shield above is curiously arranged over the bird's back; Poem on the Phoenix, l. 308 (Grein). So also Icel. skjöldungur, a sheldrake, allied to skjöldotr, dappled, from skjöldr, a shield, spot, patch; Dan. en skjoldet ko, a brindled cow, from skjold, a shield; G. schildern, to paint, depict, from G. schild, a shield, escutcheon. See Shield.

SHELF, a ledge, flat layer of rock. (E.) ME. schelfe, shelfe; pl. shelves, Chaucer, C. T. 3211. AS. scylfe (for scilfe), a plank or shelf; Grein, ii. 416. + Low G. schelf, a shelf, Bremen Wörterbuch; allied to schelfern, to scale off, peel. Cf. Lowland Sc. skelue, a thin slice, skelue, to separate in laminæ (Jamieson); Du. schilfer, a scale; prov. G. schelfe, a husk, shell, paring; schelfen, schelfern, to peel off. Closely allied to shell and scale; the orig. sense is 'a husk,' thence a flake, slice, thin board, flat ledge, layer. See Shell. The Gael.

sgealb, a splinter, or (as a verb) to split, is from the same root. ¶ We occasionally find shelf, not only in the sense of a layer of rock, but in the sense of 'sand-bank' or 'shoal.' Dryden speaks of 'a shelvy coast' as equivalent to 'shoaly ground'; tr. of Virgil, Æn. v. 1125, 1130. He adds that Æneas 'steers aloof, and shuns the shelf,' l. 1132. There is confusion here with the verb to Shelve, q. v. Cf. 'shelvy and shallow,' Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15.

SHELL, a scale, husk, outer covering, a bomb. (E.) ME. schelle, shelle; P. Plowman, B. v. 528; Gower, C. A. iii. 76; bk. vi. 2228. AS. scell, scyll; Grein, ii. 399. + Du. schel; Icel. skel; Goth. skalja, a tile; Luke, v. 19. Teut. type **skaljā*, f. The sense is 'thin flake'; cf. Swed. skala, to peel off; see Skill. And see Scale (1). Der. shell-fish, -work; shell, verb; shell-y.

SHELTER, a place of protection, refuge, retreat, protection. (E.) This curious word is perhaps due to a corruption of ME. sheld-trume, a body of troops used to protect anything, a guard, squadron. The corruption took place early, possibly owing to some confusion with the word squadron (of F. origin), with which it seems to have been assimilated, at least in its termination. Thus sheld-trume soon became scheldtrome, sheltrome, sheltrone, sheltroun, the force of the latter part of the word being utterly lost, so that at last -roun was confused with the common suffix -er, and the word shelter was the result. β. See examples in Stratmann, s. v. schild. To which add: schiltrum, Barbour's Bruce, xii. 429; scheltrone, sheltron, sheltrun, Allit. version of Destruction of Troy, 3239, 5249, 5804, 10047; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1813, 1856, 1992, 2106, 2210, 2922. It occurs also in Trevisa's description of the battle of Hastings, and was quite a common word, known from Aberdeen to Cornwall. Loss of the true form caused loss of the true sense, so that it came to mean only a place of protection, instead of a body-guard or squadron. Note the use in P. Plowman, B. xiv. 81: 'make owre faithe owre scheltroun,' make our faith our defence. Also: 'scheltrun schouris to shelde,' shelter to keep off showers (Halliwell). A sense of its derivation from shield survives in modern use. From AS. scild-truma, lit. a shield-troop, troop of men with shields or selected for defence; compounded of AS. scild, a shield, and truma, a band of men, Jos. xi. 10. The word truma does not appear to be a mere modification of the L. turma, but is allied to AS. trum, firm, getrum, a cohort, band of men (Grein); and to E. trim. See Shield and Trim.

SHELVE, to slope down, incline downwards gradually. (E.) We speak of a shelving shore, i. e. a shallow or sloping shore, where the water's depth increases gradually. 'The shore was shelvy and shallow,' Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15. We have shelving in Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 1. 115, which is explained by Schmidt as 'projecting like a shelf.' It seems to be from shelf, sb., but the connexion is not clear. A shelf sometimes meant a sand-bank; and the sense of 'slope' may refer to the sloping sides of the same. Cf. 'tawny sands and shelves,' Milton, Comus, 117. 'What bark beares sayle in tempeste on the shelues?' Higgins, Mirror for Magistrates; Severus, st. 8. In Lowl. Sc. we find skelf, a shelf, a ledge in a cliff, and skelve, vb., to shelve, to tilt; also skelvy, adj., applied to rocks that form a shelf or ledge. β. Torriano explains Mital. stralare by 'to shelve or go aside, aslope, awry'; a sense which may have been suggested by MDu. scheel, awry, G. schel, scheel, Bavar. schelb, awry. See Shelf.

SHEPHERD, a sheep-herd, pastor. (E.) ME. schepherd, shepherd, Chaucer, C. T. 506 (A 504). AS. scēaphyrde, a keeper of sheep, Gen. iv. 2. - AS. scēap, a sheep; and hyrde, a herd, i. e. guardian. See Sheep and Herd (2). Der. shepherd-ess, with F. suffix.

SHERBET, a kind of sweet drink. (Arab.) In Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 203, 327; Sandys, Trav., p. 136. - Arab. sharbat, a drink, draught, sherbet, syrup; Rich. Dict. p. 887. - Arab. root shariba, he drank; id. Allied to syrup, q. v. Also to shrub, in the term 'rum-shrub,' see shrub (2).

SHERD, SHARD, a fragment. (E.) See Shard.

SHERE-THURSDAY; see Sheer (1).

SHERIFF, an officer in a county who executes the law. (E.) ME. shirreve, Chaucer, C. T. 361 (A 359). AS. scīr-gerēfa, a shire-reeve. In Ælfric's Glossary we find: 'Consul, gerēfa,' also 'Proconsul, under-gerēfa,' also 'Prætor, burh-gerēfa,' and 'Preses, scīr-gerēfa,' Voc. col. 110. - AS. scīr, a shire; and ge-rēfa, a reeve, officer; see Shire and Reeve. Der. sheriff-ship, sheriff-dom. Also sheriff-al-ty, generally written shrievalty, spelt shrevalty in Fuller, Worthies of England (R.); the suffix is F., as in common-al-ty. Dryden has the extraordinary adj. shriev-al, The Medal, 14.

SHERRY, a wine of Spain. (Span. - L.) Formerly sherris, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 111. The final s was dropped, from a fancy that it was the pl. ending, just as in the case of pea for pease, &c. So called from the town of Xeres, in Spain, whence it was brought. There are two towns of that name; but the famous one is Xeres de la Frontera, in the province of Sevilla, not far from Cadiz. The Spanish x is now a guttural letter (like G. ch); but formerly was like the E. sh. β. Dozy shows that Xeres = L. Cæsaris, by loss of the syllable -ar-, much as Cæsar Augusta became, by contraction, Saragossa; see Dozy, Recherches sur l'histoire et la littérature de l'Espagne, Leyden, 1860, i. 314. Cæsaris is the gen. case of L. Cæsar. Der. sherris-sack, i. e. dry sherry, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 104; see Sack (3).

SHEW, the same as Show, q. v.

SHIBBOLETH, the criterion or test-word of a party. (Heb.) In Milton, Samson Agonistes, 289. See the story in Judges, xii. 6. - Heb. shibboleth, (1) an ear of corn, (2) a river. From the obsolete root shābhal, to increase, grow, flow. ¶ Any word beginning with sh would have done as well to detect an Ephraimite.

SHIDE, a thin piece of board. (E.) 'Shide, a billet of wood, a thin board, a block of wood; still in use,' Halliwell. Spelt skyde in Palsgrave. ME. shide, schide, Gower, C. A. i. 314; bk. iii. 1033; P. Plowman, B. ix. 131. AS. scīd, a billet of wood, in a gloss; Voc. 266. 33; whence scīd-weall, a fence made of palings; Voc. 146. 28. + Icel. skið, a billet of wood; G. scheit, the same. Cf. OIrish sciath, a shield. From the same root as Sheath and Shed. Fick, iii. 335. Thus the orig. sense is 'a piece of cleft wood, a log, billet.' Doublet, skid.

SHIELD, a piece of defensive armour held on the left arm. (E.) ME. schelde, sheelde, Chaucer, C. T. 2506 (A 2504). AS. scild, seld, a shield; Grein, ii. 407. + Du. schild; Icel. skjöldr, pl. skildir; Dan. skjold; Swed. sköld; Goth. skildus; G. schild. β. All from a Teut. type **skelduz*, a shield; Fick, iii. 334. The root is doubtful; it is usual to connect it with shell and scale, as denoting a thin piece of wood; cf. Lith. skelti, to split. Fick suggests a connexion with Icel. skella, skjalla, to clash, rattle, from the 'clashing of shields' so often mentioned; cf. G. schelle, a bell, allied to schallen, to resound. This seems unlikely. Der. shield, verb, K. Lear, iv. 2. 67; shield-bearer, shield-less. Also shel-ter, q. v., shill-ing, q. v.

SHIELING, the same as Sheal, q. v.

SHIFT, to change, change clothes, remove. (E.) The old sense was 'to divide,' now lost. ME. schiften, shiften, to divide, change, remove. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 446, it is explained by 'part asunder,' or 'deal,' i. e. divide, as well as by 'change.' 'Hastilich he schifte him' = hastily he removed himself, changed his place, P. Plowman, B. xx. 166. And see Chaucer, C. T. 5686 (D 104). AS. sciftan, scyftan, to divide; 'bēo his æht gescyft swiðe rihte' = let his property be divided very justly; Laws of Cnut (Secular), § 71; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 414, l. 1. + Du. schiften, to divide, separate, turn; Icel. skipta (for skifta), to part, share, divide; also to shift, change; so that the mod. use of shift is prob. Scandinavian; Swed. skifta, to divide, to change, shift; Dan. skifte (the same). β. The sense of 'divide' or 'part' is the orig. one. Allied to Icel. skifa, to cut into slices, Icel. skífa, a slice, and prov. E. shive, a slice. See Shiver (2). Cf. also Icel. skípa, to arrange, appoint; which may have influenced the sense. Der. shift, sb., a change, Timon, i. 1. 84; esp. a change of linen, and commonly restricted to the sense of chemise; shift-less; shift-y.

SHILLELAGH, an oaken stick used as a cudgel. (Irish.) In The Rejected Addresses (Living Lustres, st. 9). Named from Shillelagh, a barony in Wicklow famous for oaks. The Irish name Siol-Elaigh means 'the descendants of Elach.' - Irish siol, seed, descendants; and Elach, proper name. See Joyce, Irish Local Names. The OIrish síl, seed, is from √SE, to sow.

SHILLING, a silver coin worth 12 pence. (E.) ME. shilling, shillyng; P. Plowman, B. xii. 146. AS. scilling, scylling, Luke, xv. 9. + Du. schelling; Icel. skillingr; Dan. and Swed. skilling; Goth. skillinggs (for skillings); G. schilling. β. The suffix -ling is a double diminutive, the same as in AS. feorð-ling (or feorð-ing), a farthing. The base is perhaps SKEL, to divide, as in Lith. skel-ti, to split, Icel. skilja, to divide; see Skill. γ. The reason for the name is not certain; Ihre suggests that the old coins were marked with a cross, for the convenience of dividing them into four parts, as suggested by the AS. name feorðling, a fourth part or farthing. It is more likely that the word merely meant 'small piece,' as AS. styce, a mite (Mark, xii. 42), merely means a 'bit' or 'small piece.' δ. The derivation from SKEL is strongly supported by the occurrence of Swed. skiljemynt, Dan. skillemynt, in the sense of 'small change' or 'small money,' and by the occurrence of numerous other derivatives from the same base. Cf. Gk. κέρμα, small coin, from κείρειν, to cut.

SHILLYSHALLY, to act irresolutely. (E.) Coined from the phr. shill I, shall I, which is a reduplicated form of shall I, used interrogatively. 'I thought it would be foolish to stand shilli shalli any longer,' Macklin, Love à la Mode, Act i; Sir Callaghan (reads a letter). And in Congreve, Way of the World, iii. 3 (Sir Wilfull).

SHIMMER, to glitter, shine faintly. (E.) ME. shimeren; whence shimeryng, Chaucer, C. T. 4295 (A 4297); spelt shemering in Tyrwhitt. AS. scimrian, to glitter (Toller). It is the frequentative form of scīman, to shine, Luke, xvii. 24 (Lindisfarne MS.), and Grein, ii. 408. — AS. scīma, a light, brightness, Grein, ii. 408. From the base sci- of sci-nan, to shine; see SHINE. + Du. schemeren, to glimmer; Swed. skimra, to glitter; G. schimmern, to glimmer; from OHG. scīman, to shine, scīmo, a bright light. And cf. Icel. skīmi, skīma, a gleam of light, Goth. skeima, a torch or lantern; Irish sgeimh, sgríamh, beauty, OIrish scīam.

SHIN, the large bone of the leg, front of the lower part of the leg. (E.) ME. shīne; dat. shinne, Chaucer, C. T. 388; pl. shinnes, id. 1281 (A 386, 1279). AS. scīnu, Voc. 216. 3; 'Tibiae, scīna, oððe scīn-bān' [shin-bones]; id. 160. 19. Allied to AS. scīa, shin, O. E. Texts, p. 54; so that the Teut. base is **skei-*. + Du. scheen; Swed. skēn-ben, shin-bone; Dan. skinne-been, shin-bone; G. schiene; OHG. scīna, scēna. β. Origin uncertain; but note the use of G. schiene, a splint, an iron band, Dan. skinne, the same, Dan. hiulskinne, the tire of a wheel. It is probable that shin and skin are allied; the orig. sense may have been 'thin slice'; from √SQEI, to cleave, split; cf. L. dē-sci-scere, to separate oneself from. 'The shin-bone [is] so called from its sharp edge, like a splint of wood. The analogous bone in a horse is called the splint-bone;' Wedgwood. See SKIN.

SHINE, to gleam, beam, glow, be bright. (E.) ME. schinen, shinen; pt. t. schone (better schoon), Wyclif, Matt. xvii. 2, pl. shinen (with short i), Gower, C. A. iii. 68; bk. vi. 1985; pp. shinen (rare). AS. scīnan, pt. t. scān, pp. scinen, to shine, Grein, ii. 408. + Du. schijnen; Icel. skīna; Dan. skinne; Swed. skīna; Goth. skeinan; G. scheinen. Teut. type **skeinan-*. β. All from Teut. base SKEI, to shine; cf. Skt. chhāya-, faint light. Der. shine, sb., Timon, iii. 5. 101; shin-y, Antony, iv. 9. 3. Also sheer (1), shimmer.

SHINGLE (1), a wooden tile. (L.) Formerly a common word; a shingle was a piece of wood, split thin, and cut into a square shape; used like modern tiles and slates, esp. for the fronts of houses. ME. shingle; spelt shyngil, K. Alisaunder, 2210; hence 'shyngled shippe,' P. Plowman, B. ix. 141. 'Scindula, shyngul;' Voc. 610. 13. A corrupt pronunciation for shindle or shindel, as shown by the corresponding G. schindel, a shingle, splint. [Both E. shingle and G. schindel are non-Teutonic words.] — L. scindula (as if from scindere, to cleave); but really a later spelling of scandula, a shingle, wooden tile. Minshew (1627) has the form shindle; and see Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xvi. c. 10: Of Shindles.

SHINGLE (2), coarse round gravel on the sea-shore. (E.) I find no early use of the word. Phillips, ed. 1706, notes that shingles is 'the name of a shelf or sand-bank in the sea, about the Isle of Wight,' which is a confused statement. But the older spelling was chingle (with ch). G. Douglas has 'a dry chyngill or bed of sand,' tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. x. ch. 6. 34. Cf. prov. E. chingle, shingle; Lowl. Sc. chingle, sometimes pronounced channel. Prob. from the vb. to chink, from the sound made when one walks on it. β. Perhaps influenced (as to sound) by the synonymous Norw. singl or singling, coarse gravel, small round stones (Aasen); named from the crunching noise made in walking along it. Cf. Norw. singla, to make a ringing sound, like that of falling glass or a piece of money (Aasen); Swed. dial. singla, to ring, rattle; singel-skälla, a bell on a horse's neck, singel, the clapper of a bell (Rietz). The verb singla is merely the frequentative of Swed. dial. singa, Swed. sjunga, Icel. syngja, to sing; see SING.

SHINGLES, an eruptive disease. (F.—L.) 'Shingles, how to be cured;' Index to vol. ii of Holland's tr. of Pliny, with numerous references. It is a peculiarity of the disease that the eruption often encircles the body like a belt, for which reason it was sometimes called in Latin zōna, i. e. a zone, belt. A form of sengles, pl. of the old word sengle, a girth. — ONorth F. chengle, chingle; OF. cengle, 'a girth'; also spelt sangle, 'a girth, a sengle'; Cot. See cengle in Godefroy. Mod. F. sangle. — L. cingula, a belt, girdle. — L. cingere, to surround; see CINCTURE. Cf. the old word surcingle, a long upper girth (Halliwell).

SHIP, a vessel, barge, large boat. (E.) ME. schip, ship; pl. shippes, Chaucer, C. T. 2019 (A 2017). AS. scīp, scyp, pl. scīpu; Grein, ii. 409. + Du. schip; Icel. skip; Dan. skib; Swed. skepp; Goth. skip; G. schiff; OHG. scif. β. All from Teut. type **skipom*, n. Root unknown. Der. ship, verb, Rich. II, ii. 2. 42; shipp-er; ship-board, ship-broker, -chandler, -man, -master, -mate, -ment (with F. suffix -ment); ship-money, -wreck, -wright, -yard; shipp-ing. And see equip. Doublet, skiff; (of shipper), skipp-er, q. v.

SHIRE, a county, division of land. (E.) ME. schire, shire; Chaucer, C. T. 586 (A 584). AS. scīr, A. S. Chron. an. 1010; older sense, office, charge, administration; see Bosw. and Toller,

A. S. Dict. 'Procuratio, scīr;' Voc. 40. 32 (8th century). Allied to OHG. scīra, business; see Schade. Root unknown. The vowel-sound shows that it is in no way allied to SHEAR or SHARE, as has been repeatedly alleged. Note that the oldest sense is 'business.' Cf. AS. scīrian, to distribute, assign, appoint, allot; G. schirrmmeister, a steward; anschirren, to harness a horse. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 270. Der. sher-iff, for shire-reeve, see sheriff; also shire-mote, for which see meet.

SHIRK, to avoid, get off, slink from. (F.—L.) Formerly spelt sherk, which appears to be merely the same word as shark, to cheat, swindle; see Nares. Abp. Laud was accused of fraud in contracting for licences to sell tobacco; and it was said of him, 'that he might have spent his time much better . . . than thus sherking and raking in the tobacco-shops;' State-Trials, 1640, Harbottle Grimstone (R.). See SHARK. So also clerk as compared with Clark, a proper name; ME. derk = mod. E. dark; ME. berken, to bark, &c.; also mod. E. shirt from ME. sherte. Shirk = sherk, shark; E. D. D.

SHIRT, a man's garment, worn next the body. (E.) ME. schirte, shirte, also sherte, shurte. Spelt shirte, Havelok, 768; sherte, Chaucer, C. T. 1566; shurte, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 139, l. 16. AS. scyrta (Toller). — AS. scort, short. + Icel. skyrtá, a shirt, kirtle; Swed. skjorta; Dan. skjorte; G. schurz, schürze, an apron; cf. schürzen, to tuck up. β. So called from its being orig. a short garment; see SHORT. Der. shirt-ing, stuff for making shirts. Doublet, skirt.

SHITTAH-TREE, SHITTIM-WOOD. (Heb.—Egyptian.) Shittim is a plural form, referring to the clusters of groups of the trees; we find shittim-wood in Exod. xxv. 10, &c. The sing. shittah-tree only occurs once, Isaiah, xli. 19. — Heb. shittāh, pl. shittīm, a kind of acacia. [The medial letter is teth, not tau.] For **shintāh*; cf. Arab. sant, a thorn, acacia; Rich. Dict., p. 853. Of Egypt. origin. — Egypt. shonte, shonti; Gesenius, ed. 8, p. 830.

SHIVE, a slice; SHEAVE, a pulley; see SHIVER (2).

SHIVER (1), to tremble, shudder, quiver. (E.) Spelt sheuer (= shever) in Baret (1580). This word seems to have been assimilated to the word below by confusion. It is remarkable that the ME. forms are distinct, viz. (1) cheueren or chiueren (chiveren), to tremble, and (2) sheueren or shiuieren, to splinter. Whereas the latter word truly begins with sh, the present word is alliterated with words beginning with ch, and is spelt with ch, appearing as chiueren, cheueren, and chiuelen. 'Lolled his chekes; Wel sydder than his chyn, þei chiueled for elde' = his cheeks lolled about, (hanging down) even lower than his chin; and they shivered through old age; P. Plowman, B. v. 193 (where other MSS. have chyueleden, cheuerid). 'Achilles at tho choise men cheuert for anger' = Achilles shivered (shook) with anger at those choice men; Destruction of Troy, 9370. 'And I haue cheueride for chele' = and I have shivered with cold; Morte Arthure, 3391. 'The temple-walles gan chiuere and schake;' Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 144, l. 386. 'Chyuieren in yse' = to shiver in ice; O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 177, l. 142. 'Heo quakeden and chyuereden faste,' they quaked and shivered fast; South E. Legendary, p. 210, l. 1. β. The persistence of the initial ch is remarkable; and takes us back to an earlier form **keueren*, **kiveren*, to shake continually, the suffix -er being frequentative. From an AS. base **cef-* or **cif-* (Teut. **keō* or **kīō*), of which we have no clear trace; perhaps cf. Du. kevelen, to move the jaw continually. Prob. an imitative word, like quiver. Perhaps cf. also Norw. and Swed. dial. kippa, to snatch, twitch with the limbs, quiver convulsively (Aasen, Rietz). ¶ The resemblance to MDu. schoeveren, 'to shiver, or to shake' (Hexham), appears to be accidental.

SHIVER (2), a splinter, small piece, esp. of wood. (E.) The verb to shiver means to break into shivers or small pieces; the sb. being the older word. A shiver is a small piece, or small slice; gen. now applied to wood, but formerly also to bread. ME. shiuer (with u=v); 'And of your softe breed [bread] nat but a shiuer;' Chaucer, C. T. 7422 (D 1840). The pl. scifren, shivers, pieces of wood, is in Layamon, 4537; spelt sciuren (= sciuren), id. 27785. β. Shiver is the dimin. of shive, a slice; 'Easy it is of a cut loaf to steal a shive,' Titus Andron. ii. 1. 87. Spelt 'a sheeve of bread;' Warner's Albion's England (R.). 'A shive, or shiuir, Segmen, segmentum;' Baret (1580). This shive is the same as the technical E. word sheave, a pulley, orig. a slice of a tree, disc of wood. Not in AS. Cf. EFries. schife, schive, schif, NFries. skiv, skeev. + Icel. skífa, a slice; cf. skífa, to cut into slices; Du. schíif, Dan. skive, Swed. skifva, G. scheibe, a slice. γ. Teut. base **skeib*; Idg. root **skeip*; whence Gk. σκοῖν-os, a potter's disc (Hesychius). The G. schiefer, a slate, a splinter, is a related word, from the same base; and note OHG. scivero, a shiver. Der. shiver, verb, ME. schiuieren, shiuieren, Chaucer, C. T. 2607 (2605); shiver-y, easily falling into fragments. And see SHIFT.

SHOAL (1), a multitude of fishes, a troop, crowd. (E.) Gen.

applied to fishes, but also to people. 'A shole of shepeheardes;' Spenser, Shep. Kalendar, May, l. 20. The same word as AS. scolu, or sceolu, a troop, throng, crowd. [Distinct from AS. scōl, school; see School.] β. A Germanic word; cf. OSax. skola, a troop. Cf. 'a scoll of fysh;' Book of St. Alban's, f 7, col. 1. So also Du. school, a shoal; and the sailors' phrase 'a school of fishes,' given by Halliwell as a Lincolnshire word. So also Irish sgol, 'a scull or great quantity of fish.' See Scull (3). Teut. type **skulā*, f., prob. 'a division;' from **skul-*, weak grade of **skel-an-*, to divide. Der. shoal, verb, Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxi. l. 191.

SHOAL (2), shallow; a sandbank. (E.) Properly an adj. meaning 'shallow;' and, indeed, it is from the same base as shallow. Spelt shole, adj., Spenser, On Mutability, c. vi. st. 40. Spelt schold (an older form), in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Schold, or schalowe, noyte depe.' The orig. final d is also found in Lowland Sc. schald, shallow, also spelt schawd. 'Quhar of the dik the schawdest was' = where was the shallowest part of the dike, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 354; where the Edinb. MS. has shaldest. Another Sc. form is shaul; as 'shaul water maks mickle din,' Sc. proverb, in Jamieson. The forms shaul, shoal result from the loss of the final d. AS. sceald, shallow; found in place-names. 'On scealdan ford,' to the shallow ford; Birch, Cart. Sax. ii. 485; whence Shalford, Surrey. See Shallow. Cf. Pomeran. scholl, shallow water. Hence the use of shoal as a sb., meaning (1) a shallow place; (2) a sandbank, from its sloping. It has the former sense in Hen. VIII. iii. 2. 437; the latter in Macb. i. 7. 6. Cf. shold, a sandbank; Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 547. Der. shoal, verb, to grow shallow; shoal-y, adj., Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. v. 1130; shoal-i-ness.

SHOAR, a prop; the same as Shore (2).

SHOCK (1), a violent shake, concussion, onset, offence. (E.) We find only ME. schokken, verb, to shock, jog, move or throw with violence, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1759, 3816, 3852, 4114, 4235. Not found in AS.; but the form is English. Cf. EFries. schokken, to shock, jolt. Also Du. schok, a shock, jolt; schokken, to jolt, agitate, shake; Icel. skykk, a jolt, only used in dat. pl. skykkjum, tremulously; Low G. schokken, schukken; OHG. scoc, sb. (whence F. choc, sb., choquer, vb.); Low G. schocken, to swing (Lübben), whence G. schaukel, a swing. See Du. schok in Franck. Der. shock, sb., shock-ing. Doublet, shog, q.v.

SHOCK (2), a pile of sheaves of corn. (E.) 'A shocke of corne in the field;' Baret (1580). ME. schokke, Prompt. Parv.; pl. shockes, Nominales, ed. Skeat, l. 314. Not found in AS. However, it is found in MDu. shocke, 'a shock, a cock, or a heape,' Hexham; whence schocken, 'to shock, to cock, or heape up.' So also Swed. stock, a crowd, heap, herd. The orig. sense must have been a heap violently pushed or tossed together, from MDu. schocken, Du. schokken, to jolt, move, agitate; and the word is doubtless allied to Shock (1). Similarly sheaf is formed from the verb shove. β. A shock (cf. Dan. dial. shok, NFries. stock, a set of 6 sheaves) generally means 12 sheaves; but G. stock, Dan. skok, Swed. stock mean threescore or 60.

SHOCK (3), a rough, shaggy-coated dog. (E.) A not uncommon name for a dog. Spelt shough in Macb. iii. 1. 94. 'My little shock;' Nabbes' Bride, 1640, sig. H (Halliwell). Shock-headed is rough-headed, with shaggy or rough hair. Perhaps from shock, a heap, pile (above).

SHODDY, a material obtained by tearing into fibres refuse woollen goods. (E.) Prob. so called from being, at first, the waste stuff shed or thrown off in spinning wool (Chambers). Cf. Devon shod, shed, spilt; ME. schode, division of the hair, Chaucer, C. T. 2009 (A 2007); Lowland Sc. shoad, a portion of land. See Shed. ¶ Another similar material is called mungo; perhaps 'mixture,' from AS. ge-mang, a crowd, lit. a mixture; allied to mingle.

SHOE, a covering for the foot. (E.) ME. scho, shoo, Chaucer, C. T. 255 (A 253); pl. shoon, schon, shon, Will. of Palerne, 14, Havelok, 860; also sceos, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 37, l. 4 from bottom. AS. sceō, pl. sceōs, Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. We also find pl. gescy, Matt. iii. 11; and gescygan, verb, to shoe, Diplomatarium, p. 616. +Du. schoen; Icel. skör, pl. skūar, skör; Swed. and Dan. sko; Goth. skōhs; G. schuh, OHG. scōh, scuoch. The Teut. type is **skōhoz*, m. Der. shoe, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 188; shod (for shoe-d); shoe-black, -horn.

SHOG, to shake, jog, move off or away. (E.) 'Will you shog off?' Hen. V. ii. 1. 47. 'I shogge, as a carte dothe,' i. e. jolt; Palsgrave. 'The boot . . . was schoggid with wawis;' Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24. A variant of ME. schokken, to shock, jolt. See Shock (1).

SHOOT, to dart, let fly, thrust forward. (E.) Palsgrave has shote; but ME. has the by-form shēten, schēten; spelt shete, Chaucer, C. T. 3936 (A 3938). Just as ME. chesen, to choose, is from AS. cēosan, whilst E. choose represents cēosan (with eō for ēo), so here. The mod. E. shoot is from AS. sceōtan, but ME. scheten is from AS.

sceōtan, to shoot, dart, rush; pt. t. sceāt, pp. scoten. (The pp. scoten is preserved in shotten herring, a herring that has spent its roe, i Hen. IV. ii. 4. 143.) +Du. schieten, pt. t. shoot, pp. geschoten; Icel. skjöta, pt. t. skaut, pp. skotinn; Dan. skyde; Swed. skjuta; G. schossen. All from a Teut. type **skeutan-*, pt. t. **skaut*, pp. **skutanoz*. Brugmann, i. § 623. Der. shoot, sb., ME. schote, Morte Arthure, 3627; off-shoot, q. v.; shoot-er, L. L. l. iv. 1. 116; shoot-ing; and see shot, shut, shutt-le, sheet, scot, scud, skitt-ish, skitt-les.

SHOP, a stall, a place where goods are sold. (E.) ME. schoppe, shoppe, Chaucer, C. T. 4420 (A 4422). AS. sceoppa, a stall or booth; but used to translate L. gazophilacium, a treasury, Luke, xxi. 1. Allied to AS. scypen, a shed for cattle; 'ne scypene his neatum ne timbreþ' = nor builds sheds for his cattle, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. i. c. i. +Low G. schup, a shed; Brem. Wörterb.; G. schuppen, a shed, cart-house; OHG. scopp, whence OF. eschoppe, eschope, 'a little low shop,' Cot. Der. shop, verb; shop-lift-ing, stealing from shops, for which see Lift (2); shop-walker.

SHORE (1), the boundary of land adjoining the sea or a lake, a strand. (E.) ME. schore, Allit. Poems, A. 230; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2161. Not in AS. The orig. sense is 'edge,' or part shorn off; from scor-en, pp. of sceran, to shear. Cf. scoren clif (= shorn cliff), a precipice, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 33, l. 4; mod. E. Shorncliff (Kent). See Shear, Score. Der. shore, verb, to set on shore, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 869.

SHORE (2), SHOAR, a prop, support. (E.) ME. schore. 'Schore, under-settyng of a thyng þat wolde falle, Suppositorium;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hit hadde shories to shoue hit vp' = it (a tree) had props to keep it up; P. Plowman, C. xix. 20. Shorier is a sb. formed from schorien, verb, to under-prop, which (by its form) is a denominative verb from the sb. schore. Not found in AS.; but an E. word. Cf. EFries. schör, schore, a prop. Cf. AS. scorian, to project, jut out. +Du. schoor, a prop; MDu. schooren, to underprop. Cf. also Icel. skorða, a stay, prop, esp. under a ship or boat when ashore; whence skorða, verb, to under-prop, shore up; Norw. skorda, skora, a prop (Aasen). Der. shore, verb.

SHORE (3), a corruption of Sewer, q. v.

SHORT, curt, scanty, not long, cut down, insufficient. (L.) ME. schort, short, Chaucer, C. T. 748 (A 746). AS. sceort, short, Grein, ii. 407. Cf. Icel. skorta, to be short of, to lack, skortir, shortness, want; OHG. scurz, short. Teut. type **skurtoz*; which looks like a derivative (with suffix -toz) from the weak grade of Teut. base **sker-*, to shear; see Shear. Cf. also Icel. skarðr, diminished, cut down.

¶ But as the G. kurz, short, is from L. curt-us, short, it is usual to explain E. short as if from a Late L. type **ex-curtus*; from the same Idg. ✓SQER. Der. short-ly, adv., ME. shortly, Chaucer, C. T. 717 (A 715), from AS. sceortlice; short-ness; short-coming, -hand, -sight-ed, -wind-ed. Also short-en, verb, cf. ME. shortien, Chaucer, C. T. 793 (A 791), AS. sceortian (Bosworth); where, however, the mod. final -en does not really represent the ME. suffix -en, but is added by analogy with ME. verbs in -nen, such as waknen, to waken; this suffix -en was at first the mark of an intransitive verb, but was afterwards made to take an active force.

SHOT, a missile, aim, act of shooting. (E.) ME. schot, shot, a missile, Chaucer, C. T. 2546 (A 2544). AS. ge-sceot; 'nim þin gesceot' = take thy implements for shooting; Gen. xxvii. 3. Cf. AS. scot-, stem of pp. of sceōtan, to shoot; see Shoot. +OFries. skot, a shot; Icel. skot, a shot, a shooting; Du. schot, a shot, shoot; G. schoss, schuss, a shot. All from Teut. **skut-*, weak grade of **skeutan-*, to shoot. A doublet of scot, a contribution; see Scot-free. Der. shot, verb, to load with shot; shott-ed.

SHOULDER, the arm-joint, joint in which the arm plays. (E.) ME. shulder, shuldre, Havelok, 604. AS. sculder, sculdor, Gen. ix. 23. +Du. schouder; Swed. skuldra; Dan. skulder; G. schulter. Perhaps allied to OHG. skerti, the shoulder. Root unknown. Der. shoulder, verb, Rich. III. iii. 7. 128; shoulder-blade, -belt, -knot.

SHOUT, a loud outcry. (E.) Spelt shoute, showte in Palsgrave. ME. shouten, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 614. The AS. form **scūtian* does not occur. Perhaps we may compare it with Icel. skūta, skūti, a taunt. (The Icel. skūta, vb., means to jut out.) See Scout (2). Der. shout, sb. shout-er.

SHOVE, to push, thrust, drive along. (E.) ME. shouen, schouen; 'to shoue hit vp' = to prop it up; P. Plowman, C. xix. 20. The usual strong form is schouen, showuen (with latter u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 3910 (A 3912), pt. t. shof (printed shove in some editions), id. Parl. of Foules, 154; pp. shouen (shoven), shoue, id. C. T. 11593 (F 1281). AS. scūfan, pt. t. scēaf, pl. scufon, pp. scofen, Grein, ii. 412. +Du. schuiven; Icel. skúfa, skýfa; Dan. skuffe; Swed. skuffa; G. schieben, pt. t. schob, pp. geschoben; OHG. sciufan; Goth. skuban. Teut. type **skeuban-*, or **skūban*, pt. t. **skauþ*, pp. **skubanoz*. Allied to Lith. skubùs, quick, hasty, industrious; Skt. kshubh, to become agitated; the causal form signifies to agitate, shake, impel; hence kshobha-, agitation. Thus the primary sense was 'to shake' or 'push.' Der. shove, sb.; shove-groat, a game in which a groat (piece of money) was shoved or pushed about on a board; also shov-el, q.v.; sheaf, q.v.

SHOVEL, an instrument with a broad blade and a handle, for shoving and lifting; a sort of spade. (E.) ME. schouel (with u=v). 'With spades and with schoueles;' P. Plowman, B. vi. 192. AS. scofl; 'Trulla, scofl,' Wright's Voc. i. 289. Cf. AS. scof, base of pp. of scūfan, to shove; with suffix -l. + Du. schoffel; Westphal. schufel; cf. G. schaufel. See Shove. Der. shovel, verb, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 469. Also shovel-er, a kind of duck, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. x. c. 40; shouelar, Skelton, i. 63; named from its broad beak.

SHOW, SHEW, to exhibit, present to view, teach, guide, prove, explain. (E.) Shew is the older spelling; sometimes shew is used to denote the verb, and show for the sb., but without any difference of pronunciation in mod. English. ME. schewen, shewen; Chaucer, C. T. 9380 (E 1506); P. Plowman, B. i. 2. AS. scēawian, to look, see, behold; the later sense is to make to look, point out. 'Scēawiað þā lillian' = behold the lilies; Luke, xii. 27. + Du. schouwen, to inspect, view; Dan. skue, to behold; G. schauen, to behold, see. Cf. Goth. us-skaws, cautious, wakeful. Teut. base **skaw*-; Idg. base **sgou*; cf. Gk. θvo-σκόος, an inspector of an offering; L. cau-ere, to take heed, cau-tus, watchful; Gk. κοέω, I observe; Skt. kau-i, wise. From the same root we have cau-tious. Brugmann, i. §§ 163, 639. Der. show, sb., ME. schewe, Prompt. Parv.; show-bill; shew-bread, Exod. xxv. 30; show-y, Spectator, no. 434; show-i-ly; show-i-ness; shee-n; scaw-enger.

SHOWER, a fall of rain. (E.) Orig. a monosyllable, like flower. ME. shour, schour, Chaucer, C. T. i. AS. scūr, Grein, ii. 414. + Du. schoer; Icel. skūr; Swed. skur; Goth. skūra, a storm; skūra windis, a storm of wind, Mark, iv. 37; G. schauer; OHG. scūr. Teut. type **skū-roz*, m. Perhaps allied to Lith. szau-ti, to shoot. Brugmann, i. § 627 (1). Cf. Lith. szaurys, north wind. Der. shower, verb, Hen. VIII, i. 4. 63; shower-y.

SHRAPNEL, a bursting shell charged with bullets. (E.) Named after the inventor, Gen. Shrapnel, who died in 1842. See Dict. Eng. Biog. The date of the invention is about 1803; it was used in 1804.

SHRED, a strip, fragment, piece torn or cut off. (E.) The vowel was once long, as in the variant screed (Halliwell). ME. shrēde, Havelok, 99. AS. scrēade, a piece, strip. 'Scēda, scrēade;' also 'Presegmina, præcisiones, scrēadan' (plural); Voc. 164. 6; 151. 20; whence AS. scrēadian, to shred. + MDu. schroode (Kilian); whence schrooder, 'a lopper or pruner of trees,' Hexham; G. schrot, a piece, shred, block; whence schrotten, to grind, cut, saw. β. All from a Teut. base **skraud*, 2nd grade of **skreud*-; for which see Shroud. Allied to L. scrūta, broken pieces; see Scrutiny. Der. shred, verb, ME. shredde, Chaucer, C. T. 8013 (E 227), AS. scrēadian; also scroll, q.v. Doublet, screed.

SHREW, a scold, scolding woman. (E.) ME. shrewe, schrewe, adj., wicked, bad; applied to both sexes. The Wife of Bath said her fifth husband was 'the moste shrewe,' the most churlish of all; Chaucer, C. T. 6087 (D 505). Cf. P. Plowman, B. x. 437; Prompt. Parv. Spelt shrewe, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 154, l. 4. AS. scrēawa, a shrew-mouse; 'Mus araneus, scrēawa;' Voc. 122. 20. Somner explains scrēawa as 'a shrew-mouse, which, by biting cattle, so envenoms them that they die,' which is, of course, a fable. But the fable is very old; the L. name arāneus means 'poisonous as a spider;' and Aristotle says the bite of the shrew-mouse is dangerous to horses, and causes boils; Hist. Anim. viii. 24. 'In Italy the hardy shrews are venomous in their biting;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 58. β. The ME. schrewen, to curse, whence E. be-shrew, is merely a derivative from the sb., with reference to the language used by a shrew. ¶ Wedgwood refers to a curious passage in Higden's Polychronicon, i. 334. The L. text has mures nocentissimos, which Trevisa translates by wel schrewed mys = very harmful mice. Der. shrew-d, be-shrew; also shrew-ish, Com. Errors, iii. 1. 2; shrew-ish-ly, -ness; also screw (2).

SHREWD, malicious, wicked; cunning, acute. (E.) The older sense is malicious, mischievous, scolding or shrew-like, as in Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 323, &c. ME. schrewed, shrewed, accursed, depraved, wicked; 'schrewede folk' = wicked people, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. i. pr. 4. l. 136; cf. schrewednesse, wickedness, id. l. 139. Schrewed is lit. 'accursed,' pp. of schrewen, to curse, beshrew; Chaucer, C. T. 15432 (B 4616); and the verb is formed from the ME. adj. schrewe, evil, malicious; see Shrew. Der. shrewd-ly, -ness.

SHREW-MOUSE, an animal like a mouse; see Shrew.

SHRIEK, to screech, cry aloud, scream. (E.) A doublet of screech. Spenser has shriek, F. Q. vi. 4. 8; but also scrike, vi. 4. 18. Baret (1580) has scriek. ME. skriken, Chaucer, C. T. 15406 (B 4590); where other spellings are schrichen, schriken; also shryke, Polit.

Songs, p. 158. An E. form. See Screech. Der. shriek, sb., Macb. iv. 3. 168. Also shrike, q. v. Doublet, screech.

SHRIEVALTY, sheriffalty; see Sheriff.

SHRIFT, SHRIVE; see Shrove-tide.

SHRIKE, the butcher-bird. (E.) Named from its shrill cry. A native form; AS. scrie, Voc. 52. 13. Cf. Westphal. schrik, a shrike; Icel. skrikja, a shrieker, also, the shrike or butcher-bird, from skrikja, to titter, but properly to shriek, and allied to Icel. skrækja, to screech. See Shriek, Screech.

SHRILL, acute in sound, piercing, loud. (E.) ME. shrill, schril; pl. shrille, Chaucer, C. T. 15401 (B 4585); also shirle, in Levins and Palsgrave. The Southern form of Lowland Sc. skirl, a shrill cry; skirl, to cry shrilly. Cf. AS. scralletan, to make a loud outcry (Grein). Also Low G. schrell, shrill, Bremen Wörterbuch; prov. G. schrill, shrill, schrillen, to sound shrill (Flügel). β. The form skirl is Scand.; cf. Norw. skryla, skræla, to cry shrilly. γ. From Teut. root **skrel*, to cry loudly; AS. scrall-etan is from the second grade **skral*. δ. We also find a Teut. str. vb. **skell-an*, to resound (OHG. scellan), pt. t. **skall*; whence not only G. schallen, to resound, schall, an echo, but also ME. schil, shil, shrill. We find the adv. shulle, shrilly (with various readings schille, schrille), in P. Plowman, C. vii. 46. The base SKEL is also represented by the Icel. strong verb skjalla, skella, pt. t. skall, pp. skolinn. Cf. Lithuan. skaliti, to bark, give tongue, said of a hound. Der. shrill-y, shrill-ness.

SHRIMP, a small shell-fish. (E.) ME. shrimp, Chaucer, C. T. 13961 (B 3145). Cf. Lowland Sc. scrimp, to straiten, pinch; scrimp, scanty; 'scrimpit stature' = dwarfish stature, Burns, To Jas. Smith, l. 14. It is an E. word; but, instead of **scrimpan*, we find AS. scrimman, used as equivalent to scrinan, to shrink, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 6, l. 15. Shrimp is just a parallel form to shrink. β. Rietz makes no doubt that there was an OSwed. skrimpa, to contract, a strong verb, as well as a shorter form skrina. Traces of OSwed. skrimpa occur in Swed. skruppen, Dan. skruppen, shrivelled. Dan. dial. skrimpe, a lean cow; Norw. skrampen, lean, skrampa, skrumpa, an old lean animal (Ross). See Shrink. γ. Even in English we have clear traces of the same strong verb, since (besides shrimp) we find prov. E. shrammed, benumbed with cold, prov. E. shrumpe, to shrug, shrink, and scrump, to shrivel. So also G. schrumpe, a wrinkle, schrumpfen, to shrink; MHG. schrimpfen, to shrink; Westphal. schrempe, to shrivel. Cf. Westphal. krimpe, a shrimp.

SHRINE, a place in which sacred things are deposited, an altar. (L.) ME. schrin; dat. schryne, K. Alisaunder, 4670. AS. scrin, the ark (of the covenant), Jos. iii. 8, iv. 7. = L. scrinium, a chest, box, case. Der. en-shrine.

SHRINK, to wither, contract; to recoil. (E.) ME. shrinken, to contract, draw together; pt. t. shronk, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 1, l. 9; pp. shrunken, Gower, C. A. i. 98; bk. i. 1683. AS. scrincan, pt. t. scranc, pp. scruncen, to contract, shrivel up; chiefly in comp. for-scrincan, pt. t. forscranc, Mark, iv. 6. + MDu. schrinken, 'to grow lesser or to shrinke,' Hexham. And cf. Swed. skrynka, a wrinkle; skrynkla, to wrinkle, to rumple; Norw. skrökka, to shrink. Teut. type **skrinkan*-, pt. t. **skrank*, pp. **skrunkanoz*, to shrivel, wrinkle, draw together; parallel to the base appearing in Shrimp, q. v.; and see Scraggy. Further allied to Shrug.

SHRIVE, to confess; see Shrove-tide.

SHRIVEL, to wrinkle, crumple up. (E.) Shak. has shrivel up, Per. ii. 4. 9. It does not seem to appear in Middle English. It is a frequentative form, with the usual suffix -el, from an AS. base **scruf*-; as shown by the cognate Swed. dial. skryula, to shrivel up, to wrinkle; and skryula, a wrinkle. Allied to Swed. skrof, Swed. dial. and Norw. skrov, a carcass; prov. E. scriff, scruff, to shrink together. Possibly allied to Shrub (1). Cf. scrubby.

SHROUD, a garment, the dress of the dead. (E.) The word had formerly the general sense of garment, clothing, or covering. ME. shroud, schroud, P. Plowman, B. prol. 2; shrud, Havelok, 303. AS. scrūd, a garment, clothing, Grein, ii. 412. + Icel. skrūd, the shrouds of a ship, furniture of a church; Norweg. skrud, dress, ornament; Dan. and Swed. skrud, dress, attire. β. Closely allied to shred; and the orig. sense was a shred or piece of cloth or stuff, a sense nearly retained in that of winding-sheet. Chapman has shroud in the very sense of shred or scrap of stuff, tr. of Homer's Odyssey, b. vi. l. 274. Moreover, a shred is a piece roughly cut off; cf. G. schrot, a cut, a piece, schrotten, to cut. The Teut. base is **skreud*, to cut; the 2nd grade **skraud* appears in Shred. Der. shroud, verb, AS. scrýdan, Matt. vi. 30; en-shroud. Also shrouds, s. pl., K. John, v. 7. 53, part of the rigging of a vessel.

SHROVE-TIDE, SHROVE-TUESDAY, a time or day (Tuesday) on which shrift or confession was formerly made. (L. and E.) Shrove-tide is the tide or season for shrift; Shrove-Tuesday is the day preceding Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent. Shrove is here used as a sb., conformed to shrove, the pt. t. of the verb to shrive; except in the two above compounds, the sb. invariably takes the form shrift. β. The verb to shrive (pt. t. shrove, pp. shriven) is ME. schriuen, shriven, of which we find the pt. t. shrof, shroof in P. Plowman, B. iii. 44 (footnote), and the pp. shriuen in Chaucer, C. T. 7677 (D 2095). AS. scrifan, to shrive, to impose a penance or compensation, to judge; pt. t. scrāf, pp. scrifen; Grein, ii. 411. Teut. type **skreiban-*, pt. t. **skraib*, pp. **skribanoz*. γ. But although it thus appears as a strong verb, it does not appear to be a true Teut. word. It was rather borrowed (at a very early period) from L. scribere, to write, to draw up a law (hence, prescribe); whence also G. schreiben (also conjugated as a strong verb), to write. See Scribe. B. The sb. shrift is ME. shrift (dat. shrifte), P. Plowman, C. xvii. 30; AS. scrift, confession, Laws of Æthelred, pt. v. § 22, pt. vi. § 27, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 310, 322; and just as the AS. verb scrifan is due to L. scribere, so AS. scrift may be due to the L. pp. scriptus. The Icel. skript or skrift, Swed. skrift, Dan. skrifte, shrift, are all borrowed from AS.

SHRUB (1), a low dwarf tree. (E.) ME. shrob, schrub, P. Plowman, C. i. 2. AS. screybb, a shrub; see Bosworth-Toller, and Mr. Stevenson's remarks in Phil. Soc. Trans. 1895-8, p. 536. (Cf. E. shul, from AS. scyttan.) We also have the place-name Wormwood-scrubbs, near London. +Norweg. skrubba, the dwarf cornel (Aasen). Dan. dial. skrub, brushwood; MDan. skrubbe, a thicket (Kalkar). β. Cf. also prov. E. shruff, light rubbish wood, scroff, refuse of wood. Possibly related to Shrivel. Der. shrubby; shrubby-er-y, a coined word, by the analogy of vin-er-y, pin-er-y, and the like. Also scrub, q. v.

SHRUB (2), a drink made of lemon-juice, spirit, sugar, and water. (Arab.) Chiefly made with rum. In Johnson's Dict. — Arab. shirb, shurb, a drink, a beverage. — Arab. root shariba, he drank; Rich. Dict. p. 887. Doublet, syrap. And see sherbet.

SHRUG, to draw up, contract. (Scand.) In Temp. i. 2. 367; Cor. i. 9. 4. Generally used of drawing up the shoulders, but the true sense is to shrink. 'The touch of the cold water made a pretty kinde of shrugging come over her body'; Sidney's Arcadia, b. ii. ed. 1638, p. 138. 'Shruggyn, Frigulo'; Prompt. Parv. An adaptation (with sh for sk) from the Scand., as shown by gg<kk<nk. Cf. Dan. skrugge, skrukke, to stoop; skruk-rygget, humpbacked; Swed. dial. skrukka, skrugga, to huddle oneself up, to sit in a crouching position, allied to skrinka, to shrink (Rietz); see Shrink. Cf. Icel. skrukka, an old shrimp; Norw. skrukken, shrunken.

SHUDDER, to tremble with fear or horror. (OLow G.) 'Alas! they make me shoder'; Skelton, Colin Clout, 68. ME. shoderen, shuderen; pt. t. shoderide, Morte Arthure, 2106; pres. part. schurinde, Seint Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 15, l. 12. Not found in AS. It is a frequentative verb, formed with the usual suffix -er from the Teut. base **skud-*, to shake, appearing in OSaxon skuddian. 'Skuddiat it fan iuwun skóhun' = shake it [the dust] from your shoes; Heliand, 1948. MDu. schudden, 'to shake or to tremble', Hexham; he also gives 'schudden een boom, to shake a tree, schudden van koude, to quake for colde; schudden het hooft, to shake or nod ones head; schudderren, to laugh with an open throat that his head shakes'; Dan. dial. skuddre, to shake (one) violently; EFries. schüdden, to shake, schüddern, to tremble, shudder. +OHG. scuttan, G. schütten, to shoot corn, pour, shed, discharge; schüttern, to shake, tremble, quake. The G. schaudern is borrowed from Low G. schuddern. Der. shudder, sb.

SHUFFLE, to push about, practise shifts. (Scand.) 'When we have shuffled off [pushed or shoved aside] this mortal coil'; Hamlet, iii. 1. 67. Merely a doublet of Scuffle, and the frequentative of shove; but of Scand., not E. origin, as shown by the double f. The sh is modified from Scand. sk. Cf. EFries. schuffeln, to shuffle along, from schufen, to shove, push. The sense is 'to keep pushing about,' as in 'shuffle the cards.' [It seems to have taken up something of the sense of shiftiness, with which it has no etymological connexion.] See Scuffle, Shove. Der. shuffle, sb.; shuffler.

SHUN, to avoid, keep clear of, neglect. (E.) ME. shunien, shonien, P. Plowman, B. prol. 174. AS. scunian, not common except in the comp. on-scunian, to detest, refuse, reject, Gen. xxxix. 10. In Ps. lxx. 2, ed. Spelman, the L. revereantur is translated by andracian, with the various readings sconnyr, forwandian, and scunian. The pp. gescunnen is in Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 318, last line. Cf. prov. E. scun, to shun; scunner, to loathe; see Scoundrel. Der. shun-less, Cor. ii. 2. 116; schoon-er; scoundrel.

SHUNT, to turn off upon a side-rail. (E.) As a word used on railways, it was borrowed from prov. E. shunt, to turn aside. But the word itself is old. ME. shunten, to start aside, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1902; schounten, schownten, schonten, schunten, Morte Arthur, 736, 1055, 1324, 1759, 2106, 2428, 3715, 3816, 3842; shunt, Destruction of Troy, 600, 729, 10377, 10998. 'If at 3e shap 3ow to shount' = if ye intend to escape; Wars of Alexander, 2143; and see Ancren Riwele, p. 242, note d. β. Shunten seems to be a modification of shunden, being easier to pronounce quickly. The orig. sense is to speed, hasten, flee, escape. AS. scyndan, to hasten (Beowulf, 2570), also to urge, incite. +Icel. skunda, to speed. It seems to be a nasalised form of Scud.

SHUT, to fasten a door, close. (E.) ME. shuten, shitten. 'To close and to shutte'; P. Plowman, B. prol. 105. 'The 3atis weren schit' = the gates were shut; Wyclif, John, xx. 19. AS. scyttan, to shut; 'sero, ic scytte 'sum loc oððe hæpsige,' i.e. I shut a lock or hasp it; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 220. To shut a door was to fasten it with a bolt or sliding bar, called a shuttle or shittle (see Shuttle), which took its name from being shot across. We still say 'to shoot a bolt.' The AS. scyttan stands for **scut-ian* (by the usual change from u to y); derived from Teut. **skut-*, weak grade of **skeutan-*, to shoot. See Shoot. +Du. schutten, to shut in, lock up; schut, a fence, screen, partition, MDu. schut, an arrow, dart (Hexham), from schieten, to shoot; G. schützen, to protect, guard, shut off water; schutz, a guard, sluice, flood-gate, OHG. scuz, a quick movement, from schieszen, OHG. sciozan, to shoot. Der. shutt-er; shutt-le, q. v.

SHUTTLE, an instrument for shooting the thread of the woof between the threads of the warp in weaving. (E.) In Job, vii. 6. So called from its being shot between the threads. 'An honest weaver . . . As e'er shot shuttle'; Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act v. sc. 1. Also spelt shittle; in Palsgrave, 'shyttell for a weaver.' ME. schitel; spelt scytyl, Prompt. Parv. p. 447, also schetyl, id. p. 470, l. 2. The same word as ME. schitel, a bolt of a door, similarly named from its being shot across. 'Schytyl, of sperynge [sparring, barring], Pessulum'; Prompt. Parv. The AS. form was scyttel (also scytel), in the sense of bar, bolt; also found in the longer form scyttels, pl. scyttelsas. See Toller. β. The word scyttel or scytel (for **skut-il-*) is from Teut. **skut-*, weak grade of **skeut-an*, AS. sceōtan, to shoot; see Shut, Shoot. +Dan. skytte, skyttel, a shuttle; Swed. dial. skyttel, sköttel; cf. Du. schiet-spoel, a shuttle, lit. 'shoot-spool', Swed. skotts-pole, a shuttle, 'shoot-spool.' Der. shuttle-cock, q. v.

SHUTTLE-COCK, a piece of wood or cork stuck with feathers, used as a plaything. (E.) Spelt shyttelcocke in Palsgrave; shuttlecock, Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 804. Prob. called cock from being stuck with feathers and flying through the air. [Not shuttle-cork, as Todd fancies, contrary to evidence and probability; for they were most likely at first made of wood, and struck with a wooden battledore. See Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, bk. iv. ch. 1. § 22.] Called shuttle from being shot backwards and forwards like a weaver's shuttle. 'Schytle, chydys game, Sagitella'; Prompt. Parv. See Shuttle; and see Skittles.

SHY, timid, cautious, suspicious. (Scand.) In Shak. Meas. iii. 2. 138; v. 54. ME. skyg, scrupulous, careful to shun (evil), Allit. Poems, B. 21. It is rather a Scand. than an E. word, with sh for sk; we also find ME. schey, skey, shy (said of a horse), Prompt. Parv. p. 444; spelt scheounh (also of a horse), Ancren Riwele, p. 242, l. 9; answering to the rare AS. sceoh, timid, Grein, ii. 405. — Dan. sky, shy, skittish; Swed. skygg, skittish, starting, shy, coy; Swed. dial. sky, the same (Rietz). +EFries. schöi; Du. schuw; G. scheu, shy, timid, MHG. schiech. Teut. types **skeuh-joz*, **skeuh-oz*. β. Hence OHG. sciuhān, to frighten, or (intransitively) to fear, shy at, whence (through the French) we have E. eschew. Der. shy-ly, shy-ness; shy, verb (cf. Swed. sky, to shun); and see eschew, skew.

SI-SY

SIAMANG, a large ape. (Malay.) Malay siāmang.

SIB, related. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 26. See further under Gossip. Der. gos-sip.

SIBILANT, making a hissing sound. (L.) We call s and z 'sibilant' letters. Bacon has 'sibilation or hissing sound'; Nat. Hist. § 176. — L. sibilant-, stem of pres. part. of sibilāre, to hiss. — L. sibilus, adj. hissing; formed from a base **sib-*, which is probably imitative of a whistling sound. Der. sibil-at-ion.

SIBYL, a pagan prophetess. (L.—Gk.) Shak. has both Sibyl and Sybilla; Oth. iii. 4. 70; Merch. Ven. i. 2. 116. Cotgrave has: 'Sybille, Sybill, one of the 10 Sybillæ, a prophetesse.' Trevisa translates L. Sibylla by Sibil; ii. 399. The word was rather borrowed directly from L. than through the F., being known from Virgil. — L. Sibylla, a Sibyl; Virgil, Æn. vi. 10. — Gk. Σίβυλλα, a Sibyl. Origin uncertain; see Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. i. 109. Postgate compares it with L. per-sibus, very wise (Festus) and L. sap-ere, to be wise; so that σίβ-υλλα would mean 'wise woman.' Der. sibylline, adj.; from L. Sibyllinus.

SICCA, in phr. sicca rupee, newly coined rupee. (Hind.—Pers.—Arab.) Hind. sikka, a die for coining.—Pers. sikka(h), the same.—Arab. sikka(h), the same. Rich. Dict. p. 839. See Sequin.

SICK, affected with disease, ill, inclined to vomit. (E.) ME. sik, sek; pl. seke, Chaucer, C. T. 18. AS. sēoc; John, xi. 1. +Du. ziek; Icel. sjúkr; Dan. syg; Swed. sjuk; G. siech; Goth. siuks. β. All from a Teut. type **seukoz*, ill; from the Teut. base **seuk-*, to be sick or ill, appearing in the Goth. strong verb siukan, to be ill, pt. t. sauk, pp. sukans. Fick, iii. 325. Der. sick-ness, AS. sēcnes, Matt. viii. 28; sick-en, verb (intrans.), Mach. iv. 3. 173, (trans.) Hen. VIII, i. 1. 82; sick-ish, -ly, -ness; sick-ly, adj., ME. sekly, Will. of Palerme, 1505; sick-li-ness, Rich. II, ii. 1. 142.

SICKER, SIKER, certain, secure. (L.) Siker is a well-known Lowland Sc. word. ME. siker, Chaucer, C. T. 11451 (F 1139); Layamon, 15092. AS. sicor. Not a Teut. word, but borrowed from a Late L. sēcūrus, for L. sēcūrus; see Secure. The OFries. siker, sikur, Du. zeker, G. sicher (OHG. sichur), Swed. säker, Dan. sikker, W. sicr, are all borrowed from the Latin, which accounts for their strong likeness in form to one another. Doublets, secure, sure.

SICKLE, a hooked instrument for cutting grain. (L.) ME. sikil, Wyclif, Mark, iv. 29. AS. sicol, Mark, iv. 29.—L. secula, a sickle (White); formed, with suffix -u-lā of the agent, from sec-āre, to cut; see Secant. ¶ The G. sichel is also from Latin; the native words from the same root are saw (1), scythe, and sedge.

SIDE, the edge or border of a thing, region, part, party. (E.) ME. side, syde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 8; Chaucer, C. T. 560 (A 558). AS. side, John, xix. 34, xx. 20. +Du. zijde; Icel. siða; Dan. side; Swed. sida; G. seite, OHG. sita. Teut. type **sidōn-*, f. It is probable that the orig. sense was 'that which is extended,' as it certainly seems to be closely connected with AS. sid, long, wide, spacious, ME. siid, spelt syd in the Prompt. Parv., but now obsolete; Icel. siðr, long, hanging down. Der. side-board, Milton, P. R. ii. 350; side-box, one-sid-ed, many-sid-ed, side-saddle, side-ways, side-wise, sid-ing. Also side, verb, Cor. i. 1. 197, iv. 2. 2; side-ling, side-long, adv., Milton, P. L. vi. 197, ME. sideling, sidlinges, spelt sydlynges, Morté Arthur, 1039, where the suffix -ling or -long is adverbial, as explained under Headlong. Hence sidelong, adj. Also a-side, q. v., beside, q. v. Also side-s-men, officers chosen to assist a churchwarden, Blount, Nomolexicon, where a ridiculous explanation from synods-men (!) is attempted, quite unnecessarily; see Notes and Queries, 5 S. xi. 504. They were also called side-men or quest-men; Halliwell. Cf. L. assessor, one who sits beside another.

SIDEREAL, starry, relating to the stars. (L.) Milton has sideral, P. L. x. 693. Phillips, ed. 1706, has sideréal, siderean. Sideral is from L. siderālis, and is a correct form; sidere-al is coined from L. sidere-us, adj. All from sider-, for **sides-*, stem of sidus, a constellation, also, a star. Der. (from L. sidus) con-sider.

SIEGE, a sitting down, with an army, before a fortified place, in order to take it. (F.—L.) The lit. sense is merely 'seat'; see Trench, Select Glossary. We find it in this sense in Shak. Meas. iv. 2. 101; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 39. ME. sege, (1) a seat, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 31; (2) a siege, Barbour's Bruce, iv. 45, ix. 332. In Ancrén Riwele, p. 238, l. 1, sege means 'a throne.'—AF. sege, Gaimar, 3110, also siege; OF. siege, masc., a seat, throne; mod. F. siège. Cf. Ital. sedia, fem., seggio, masc., a chair, seat. Not immediately from L. sedes, but from a verb answering to a L. type **sedicāre*; we find also Late L. assedium, a siege, which (like L. obsidium, a siege) is from L. sedēre, to sit, cognate with E. Sit, q. v. Der. be-siege.

SIENNA, a pigment used in painting. (Ital.) Raw sienna and burnt sienna are the names of two pigments, made from earth, and properly from earth of Sienna, which is the name of a place in Tuscany, due S. of Florence.

SIERRA, a chain of hills. (Span.—L.) Span. sierra, a saw, ridge of hills.—L. serra, a saw. See Serrated.

SIESTA, orig. a noon-day nap. (Span.—L.) 'What, sister, at your siesta already?' Elvira, A. i; Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, xv. 22. Now usually applied to a nap in the afternoon.—Span. siesta, 'the hottest part of the day, the time for taking a nap after dinner, generally from 1 to 3 o'clock'; Neuman.—L. sexta, i. e. sexta hora, sixth hour, noon; reckoning from 6 A. M.; so that the orig. sense was 'noonday nap.' Sexta is fem. of L. sextus, sixth.—L. sex, six; see Six. For a shifting of time in the reverse direction, see Noon.

SIEVE, a strainer for separating coarse particles from fine ones. (E.) ME. sive, Chaucer, C. T. 16408 (G 940); her-seve, a hair-sieve, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, p. 7. AS. sife; 'Cribra, vel cribellum, sife,' Voc. 330. 32; spelt sibi in the 8th cent., id. 16. 3. +Du. zeef; G. sieb, MHG. sip. Teut. types **sibes*, **sibos*, n. Cf. Lith.

sijoti, to sift. Perhaps allied to AS. sīhan, sēon, G. seihen, to filter. See Kluge. Der. sif-t, q. v.

SIFT, to separate particles as with a sieve. (E.) ME. siften, Chaucer, C. T. 16409 (G 941); sive (= sieve) being in the line above. AS. siftan, syftan, Exod. xii. 34.—AS. sif-e, a sieve. +Du. ziften, to sift, zift, a sieve; from zeef, a sieve. See Sieve. β. We also find Dan. sigte, to sift, sigte, sb., a sieve or riddle; Swed. sikta, to sift, sikt, a sieve; Icel. sikta, sigta, to sift; all from G. sichten, to sift; which again is from Du. ziften.

SIGH, to inhale and respire with a long deep breath. (E.) ME. sighen, sijen, siken; in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 263, we have syked, with various readings sijede, sighede; also syhede, sijte, id. C. xxi. 276; sighte, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1080. The ME. siken thus made sigh-te as one form of the pt. t., whence a new infin. sigh-en was evolved by back-formation. From AS. sican, to sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8; ed. Sweet, p. 92, l. 35. It is a strong verb; pt. t. sāc, pp. sicen; with a frequentative form siccettan, to sigh, sob. β. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Swed. sucka, Dan. sukke, to sigh, groan. Der. sigh, sb., ME. sike, Chaucer, C. T. 11176 (F 864).

SIGH-CLOUT; see Notes on E. Etym., p. 271.

SIGHT, act of seeing, that which is seen; view, spectacle. (E.) ME. sight, Chaucer, C. T. 4982 (B 562). AS. siht, or rather ge-siht, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 4; cap. xli. § 4. But it is almost always spelt gesihð, gesiehd, gesyhð; Grein, i. 454. From Teut. type **seh-iphā*, fem. (Sievers); allied to sēon (Goth. saihwān, for **sehwan*), to see; see See. +Du. gezigt; Dan. sigte; Swed. sigt; G. sicht; OHG. siht. Der. sight, verb; sight-ed, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 388; sight-hole, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 71; sight-less, Mach. i. 5. 50; sight-ly, K. John, ii. 143; sight-li-ness.

SIGN, a mark, proof, token, omen, notice. (F.—L.) ME. signe, Chaucer, C. T. 10365 (F 51); Ancrén Riwele, p. 70, l. 1.—OF. signe, 'a signe, mark'; Cot.—L. signum, a mark, token. Brugmann, i. § 762 (3). Der. sign, verb, K. John, iv. 2. 222; sign-board, sign-manual, sign-post. Also sign-at-ure, from F. signature, 'a signature,' Cot.; from L. signatūra, from signāre, to sign, from signum. And see sign-al, sign-et, sign-i-fy, re-sign.

SIGNAL, a token, sign for giving notice. (F.—L.) ME. signal, Gower, C. A. iii. 57; bk. vi. 1668.—F. signal, 'a signall'; Cot.—Late L. signāle, neut. of L. signālis, belonging to a sign.—L. signum, a sign; see Sign. Der. signal, verb; signal-ly, signal-ise.

SIGNET, a seal, privy-seal. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 49; and in Palsgrave. ME. signett, Mandeville, Trav. c. viii. p. 82.—F. signet, 'a signet, seal, stamp'; Cot. Dimin. of F. signe; see Sign.

SIGNIFY, to indicate, mean. (F.—L.) ME. signifien; spelt signefye, Rob. of Glouc. p. 345, l. 7075. And see O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28, ll. 3, 8, 11, 12.—F. signifier, 'to signifie, betoken'; Cot.—L. significāre, to show by signs.—L. signi-, for signum, a sign; and -fic-, for facere, to make; see Sign and Fact. Der. signific-ant, from L. significans, stem of pres. part. of significāre; hence significant, sb., 1 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 26; significance, from F. significance (Cot.), a false form which supplanted the true OF. signifiance (Cot.), whence ME. signefiance, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 28, l. 20, all from L. significāntia; significat-ion, ME. significacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 14985 (B 4169), from F. signification < L. acc. significātiōnem; signific-at-ive, from L. significātīvus.

SIGNOR, SIGNIOR, sir. (Ital.—L.) Spelt signior, Two Gent. iii. 1. 279; &c.—Ital. signore, sir, a lord.—L. seniōrem, acc. of senior, an elder; see Senior. ¶ Cf. ME. seignour, King Alisaunder, 1458; from French. Span. señor, fem. señora. Der. signor-a, from Ital. signora, a lady, fem. of signore. Doublets, sir, sire, señor, senior, seignior.

SILENCE, stillness, muteness. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. silence, Ancrén Riwele, p. 22, l. 6.—F. silence, 'silence,' Cot.—L. silentium, silence, a being silent.—L. silent-, stem of pres. part. of silēre, to be still. +Goth. silan, only in the compound ana-silan, to become silent, Mark, iv. 39. Thus the base is SIL. Der. silent (in later use, though etymologically a more orig. word), L. L. L. ii. 24, from L. silent-, stem of pres. part. of silēre; silent-ly.

SILEX, flint, quartz. (L.) Merely L. silex, flint (stem silic-). Brugmann, i. § 980. Der. silic-a, silic-i-ous, coined from the stem.

SILHOUETTE, a shadow-outline or profile filled in with a dark colour. (F.) This cheap and meagre form of portrait, orig. made by tracing the outline of a shadow thrown on to a sheet of paper, was named, in derision, after Etienne de Silhouette, minister of finance in 1759, who introduced several reforms which were considered unduly parsimonious. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present; Sismondi, Histoire des Français, tom. xix. pp. 94, 95.

SILK, the delicate, soft thread produced by certain caterpillars, and the stuff woven from it. (L.—Gk.—Chinese.) ME. silk, Chaucer, C. T. 10927 (F 613). AS. seolc (for **siluc*, as meolc for **miluc*), silk. 'Bombix, seolc-uyrm; Sericum, seolc;' Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 1.

Cf. Icel. silki, Swed. silke, Dan. silke; all of which, like AS. seolc, are adaptations of L. sēricum, silk, by the common change of r into l. β. L. sēricum is the neut. of Sēricus, of or belonging to the Sēres. — Gk. Σήρες, pl., the name of the people from whom the ancients first obtained silk; gen. supposed to be the Chinese. Professor Douglas writes: 'The L. Sēres and Sēricum are probably derived from the Chinese word for silk, which is variously pronounced se (English e), sei, sai, sat, sz, &c.; see Williams, Chin. Dict. p. 835.' Cf. Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 182. γ. Kluge derives Icel. silki from Slavonic; but Miklosich derives Oslav. shelkū, Russ. shelk', from the Scandinavian. The true source is L. sēricum, whence also OIrish sīric, silk. Der. silk-mercer, silk-weaver; silk-worm, AS. seolc-wyrm, as above; silk-en, AS. seolcen, Voc. 151. 9; silk-y, silk-i-ness. Also serge, q. v.

SILL, the timber or stone at the foot of a door or window. (E.) The true sense seems to be 'base' or 'basis'; sometimes 'floor.' ME. sille, syll. 'Syll of an howse, Silla, soliva;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt selle, Chaucer, C. T. 3820 (A 3822), which is a Kentish form. AS. syll, a base, support. 'Basis, syl;' Voc. 8. 27; in a later gloss: 'Bassis, sulle;' Voc. 552. 12. + Icel. syll, svill, a sill, door-sill; Swed. syll; Swed. dial. svill (Rietz); Dan. syld, the base of a frame-work building; G. schwelle, OHG. swelli, a sill, threshold, beam. Cf. Goth. gasuljan, to found, lay a foundation for, Matt. vii. 25; Luke, vi. 48. β. The OHG. swelli is from a Teut. base **swal*, but AS. syll from a weak grade **swul*; implying a strong verb **swel-an*, to found (?), pt. t. **swal*, pp. **swulanoz*. AS. syll represents **swul-jā*, fem. γ. The connexion with L. solea, the sole of the foot, is doubtful. ¶ Not to be confused with AS. syl, a pillar, column, in Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1. § 4; this is a different word, with a different sense, though possibly connected; it answers to G. säule, a pillar. Der. ground-sill, q. v.

SILLABUB, SYLLABUB, a mixture of wine with milk and sugar. (E.) Spelt sillibub in Minshew, ed. 1627, who derives it from swilling bubbles. But the form is corrupt, a better form being sillibouk. 'Sillibouke or sillibub, Laict aigre;' Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. Cotgrave gives: 'Laict aigre, whay; also, a sillibub or merri-bouke.' Halliwell gives 'sillybauk, a sillabub,' as a Lincolnshire word. It is obvious that a corruption from bouk to bub is easy, whereas a change from bub to bouk is unlikely. We may therefore assume sillibouk as the older form, at the same time noting that another name for it is merribouk. Cf. 'merrybauks, a cold posset, Derbyshire;' Halliwell. β. The prov. E. bouk is a well-known word for 'belly'; Mr. Peacock notes bouk as the Lincolnshire form; so that merri-bouk = 'merry belly,' and perhaps silli-bouk = 'happy belly,' from an old sense of silly (below). It is evidently a jocose name.

SILLY, simple, harmless, foolish. (E.) The word has much changed its meaning. It meant 'timely'; then lucky, happy, blessed, innocent, simple, foolish. ME. sely, Chaucer, C. T. 3601, 4088 (A 4090), 5952 (D 370); Havelok, 477; P. Plowman's Crede, 442; and see sely, seely, seilye in Gloss. to Spec. of English, ed. Skeat. AS. sēlig, more usually gesēlig (the prefix ge- making no difference), happy, prosperous, fortunate; see Sweet, A. S. Reader. Formed with the common adj. suffix -ig (E. -y) from AS. sēl, a time, season, occasion, happiness (very common); Grein, ii. 395. + Du. zalg, blessed; Icel. sáll, blest, happy; sæla, bliss; Swed. sáll, blest, happy; G. selig, OHG. sālik, good, excellent, blest, happy; Goth. sēls, good, kind. β. All from a Teut. base **sæl-*; of unknown origin. Der. silli-ly, -ness.

SILLO, a pit for storing grain or fodder. (Span. — L. — Gk.) Span. silo, 'a granier to lay up corn in;' Minshew (1623). — L. sirum, acc. of sirus. — Gk. σῖρος, a pit for keeping corn in. Der. en-sil-age.

SILT, sediment, sand left by water that has overflowed. (Scand.) ME. silte, badly spelt cilte. 'Cilte, soonde [sand], Glearea;' Prompt. Parv. p. 77. It can hardly be other than the MSwed. sylla, mud, also a marshy place (Ihre); Dan. syllt, a salt marsh (Larsen); Dan. dial. syllt, a stretch of low coast-land, over which the sea sometimes flows; Norw. sylla, the same (Ross). Cf. Low G. sulte, a brine-pit; G. sülze, brine, also brine-pit. All from a Teut. base **sult-*, which is a weakened form of **salt-*, i. e. salt. See Kluge. So also we find Du. zilt, adj. salt, related to Du. zout, salt; and AS. sylltan, to salt, from sealt, salt. Cf. prov. E. silt, a salting-tub. It must have referred orig. to salt deposited as a sediment by sea-water in brine-pits or very shallow pools.

SILVAN, SYLVAN, pertaining to woods. (L.) 'All syllvan offsprings round;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. xix. 599. [The spelling with y is false, and due to the habit of spelling L. silva with y, in order to derive it from Gk. ὕλη, a wood, with which it is (at most) only cognate.] — L. siluānus, belonging to a wood, chiefly used of the wood-god Silvanus. — L. silua, a wood. + Gk. ὕλη, a wood (?). The relationship of the L. and Gk. words is doubted by some, and the root is uncertain; see Brugmann, i. § 102 (1), note. Der. (from L. silua) savage, q. v.

SILVER, a well-known white metal. (E.) ME. siluer, Chaucer, C. T. 16707 (G 1239). OMerc. syfur, Matt. x. 9 (Rushworth MS.); AS. seolfor; early form siolofr. + Du. zilver; Icel. silfr; Dan. sølv; Swed. silfver; G. silber; Goth. silubr. + Russ. serebro. The origin is wholly unknown; Uhlenbeck thinks the Teut. forms are from Slavonic. Miklosich (p. 336) gives the Slav. type as **sirebro*, with varying forms in all the Slav. languages. Der. silver, verb; silver-ing; silver-ling, a small piece of silver, with double dimin. -l-ing (as in duck-l-ing), Isaiah, vii. 23, also in Tyndale's version of Acts, xix. 19, and Coverdale's of Judges, ix. 4, xvi. 5, the AS. form being syfiring, Gen. xlv. 22; silver-smith; silver-y. Also silver-n, adj., in some MSS. of Wyclif, Acts, xix. 24, AS. syfren, Gen. xlv. 2. ¶ A possible guess is that which derives silver from Gk. *Σαλίβη, old form of Ἀλίβη, a town on the S. coast of the Black Sea, which, according to Homer (Iliad, ii. 857), was the home of silver.

SIMILAR, like. (F. — L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. — F. similaire, 'similar;' Cot. As if from L. **similāris*, extended from simil-is, like, by the suffix -āris. Allied to simul, together, Gk. ἅμα, together, and E. same; from the Idg. base **samo-*, the same; see SAME. Cf. OIrish samail, W. hafal, like; Gk. ὁμαλός, even. Also L. sem-el, once, Goth. sim-lē, once; Gk. ἅπαξ, once, ἔν, neut., one; &c. Der. similar-ly, similar-i-ty; also simile, q. v., similitude, q. v. And see simul-ate, simul-ta-ne-ous, semblance, assemble, dis-semble.

SIMILE, a comparison. (L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 45. — L. simile, a like thing; neut. of similis, like; see SIMILAR.

SIMILITUDE, a comparison, parable. (F. — L.) ME. similitude, Chaucer, C. T. 10794 (F 480); Wyclif, Luke, viii. 4. — F. similitude, 'a similitude;' Cot. — L. similitudinem, acc. of similitudo, likeness. — L. similis, like; see SIMILAR.

SIMIOUS, monkey-like. (L.) Coined from L. simia, an ape. — L. simus (Gk. σιμός), flat-nosed.

SIMMER, to boil gently. (E.) Formerly also simber (see Richardson) and simper. Halliwell cites: 'Simper, to simmer, East;' also 'the creame of simpering milke, Florio, p. 189,' which is wrong as regards the edit. of 1598, which has: 'Cremore, the creame or simpring of milke when it seethes.' 'I symper, as lycour dothe on the fyre byfore it begynneth to boyle;' Palsgrave. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, and with excrescent p or b in some authors, from a base **simm* or **symm*, imitative of the sound of gentle boiling. Cf. Dan. summe, G. summen, Swed. dial. summa, to hum, to buzz; Bavar. semmern, to whimper.

SIMNEL, a kind of rich cake. (F. — L.) See Simnel in Halliwell. ME. simnel, Prompt. Parv.; simenel, Havelok, 779. — OF. simenel, bread or cake of fine wheat flour; Roquefort. — Late L. siminellus, bread of fine flour; also called simella; Ducange. β. Here siminellus stands for **similellus*, as being easier to pronounce; both **simil-ellus* and simel-la being derived from L. simila, wheat flour of the finest quality. Allied to Gk. σιμίδαλις, fine flour. And cf. G. semmel, wheat-bread.

SIMONY, the crime of trafficking in ecclesiastical preferment. (F. — L. — Gk. — Heb.) In early use; spelt symonye, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 89, l. 7. — F. simonie, 'simony, the buying or selling of spiritual functions or preferments;' Cot. — Late L. simōnia; Ducange. Named from Simon Magus (Gk. Σίμων), because he wished to purchase the gift of the Holy Ghost with money; Acts, viii. 18. — Heb. Shim'on, Simeon, Simon, lit. hearing, obedience; one who hears. — Heb. root shāma, to hear. Der. simoni-ac, simoni-ac-al.

SIMOOM, a hot, poisonous wind. (Arab.) See Southey, Thalaba, b. ii, last stanza, and the note. — Arab. samūm, a sultry pestilential wind, which destroys travellers; Rich. Dict. p. 850. So called from its poisonous nature. — Arab. root samma, he poisoned; id. p. 847.

SIMPER, to smile sillily or affectedly, to smirk. (Scand.) 'Yond simpering dame;' K. Lear, iv. 6. 120. 'With a made countenance about her mouth, between simpering and smiling;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. i. (R.). Cotgrave explains F. coquaine by 'a begger woman, also a cockney, simperdecockit, nice thing.' We find traces of it in Norweg. semper, fine, smart (Aasen); Dan. dial. semper, simper, 'affected, coy, prudish, esp. of one who requires pressing to eat: as, she is as semper as a bride;' Wedgwood. Also MSwed. semper, one who affectedly refrains from eating. β. All these are formed (with a suffix -er which appears to be the same as the E. suffix -er of the agent) from a base **simp-*, which is a nasalized form of **sip-*. Without the nasal, we find MSwed. sipp (also simp), a woman who affectedly refuses to eat (Ihre); Swed. sipp, adj. finical, prim; Dan. sippe, a woman who is affectedly coy (Molbeck). And note particularly Low G. sipp, explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch as a word expressing the gesture of a compressed mouth, and affected pronunciation; a woman who acts thus affectedly is called Jumfer Sipp, Miss Sipp, and they say of her, 'She cannot say sipp.' Also Low G. den Mund sipp trekken, to make a small mouth; De Bruut sitt so sipp, the bride sits so prim. Of imitative origin. ¶ We find also prov. G. zimpern, to be affectedly coy, zipp, prudish, coy (Flügel); but these are most likely borrowed from Low German, as the true High G. z answers to E. t. Der. simper, sb.

SIMPLE, single, elementary, clear, guileless, silly. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. simple, The Bestiary, l. 790; in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris.—F. simple, 'simple'; Cot.—L. simplicem, acc. of simplex (stem simplic-), simple; lit. 'one-fold,' as opposed to duplex, two-fold, double.—L. sim-, appearing also in L. sin-gulī, one by one, sem-per, always alike, sem-el, once, sim-ul, together; and -plic-, as in plic-āre, to fold. See Simulate and Ply. Der. simple-ness, simpl-y. Also simples, s. pl., simple herbs; whence simpl-er, simpl-ist, both in Minshew, ed. 1627. Also simplic-i-ty, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 171, from F. simplicité, from L. acc. simplicitātem; simpli-fy, in Barrow's Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 34 (Todd), a coined word, answering to late F. simplifier (Littré), where the suffix -fier = L. -ficāre, from facere, to make; see Fact. Hence simplific-at-ion. Also simple-ton, q. v. Brugmann, i. § 431 (1).

SIMPLETON, a foolish fellow. (F.—L.) 'A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down;' L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson). 'O ye pitiful simpletons;' Lady Alimony (1659), A. v. sc. 2. Formed with the F. suffix -on (<L. acc. -ōnem) from F. simplet, masc., simplette, fem., a simple person (Littré). Cotgrave only gives the fem. simplette, 'a little, simple wench, one that is apt to believe, and thereby soon deceived;' but Godefroy has OF. simplet, simple, credulous; and Corblet has Picard simplet, a foolish person. Cf. Span. simplon, a simpleton. These are formed from simple, simple, with the dimin. suffix -et or -ette. Thus simple-t-on exhibits a double suffix -t-on, which is very rare; yet there is at least one more example in the old word musk-et-on, a kind of musket, F. mousqu-et-on. β. There is also a phrase simple tony, with the same sense, as in Falstaff's Wedding, by Kenrick, A. iv. sc. 4 (near the end); A. D. 1766. But this seems to be later. We also find Tony (for Anthony) used in the same sense of 'foolish fellow;' as in Middleton, The Changeling, i. 2. Cf. prov. E. idle-ton, in E. D. D.

SIMULATE, to pretend, feign. (L.) Shak. has simulation, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 151. Simulate first occurs with the force of a pp.; 'because they had vowed a simulate chastyite;' Bale, Eng. Votaries, pt. ii (R.). —L. simulātus, pp. of simulāre, also similāre, to feign, pretend, make like.—L. similis, like. See Similar. Der. simulat-ion, from F. simulation, 'simulation,' Cot., from L. acc. simulatiōnem, a feigning; simulat-or. Also dis-simulat-ion. And see semblance, as-semble, diss-semble. Also simultaneous.

SIMULTANEOUS, happening at the same moment. (L.) 'Whether previous or simultaneous;' Hammond's Works, vol. iv. ser. 2 (R.); p. 570 (Todd). Englished directly from Late L. simul-tāneus, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, strenu-ous, &c. Formed from Late L. simult-im, at the same time, by analogy with L. mōment-āneus; and cf. E. instantaneous. β. The Late L. simultim is extended from L. simul, together, with adv. suffix -tim, as in minūtā-tim. See Simulate, Similar. Der. simul-taneous-ly.

SIN, wickedness, crime, iniquity. (E.) ME. sinne, synne; pl. synnes, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 2, 5, 6. AS. synn, sinn; gen., dat., and acc. synne; Grein, ii. 518. +Du. zonde; Icel. synd, older form synd; Dan. and Swed. synd; G. sünde, OHG. suntea. β. Thus the AS. synn represents a Teut. type **sundjā*, fem., or rather an Idg. type **səntjā*; where **sənt* is the weak grade of sent: sont. It is the abstract sb. allied to L. sons (stem sonti-), sinful, guilty, orig. 'being,' real; and Curtius refers this (along with Icel. sannr, true, very, Goth. sunja, the truth, sooth) to the ✓ES, to be; remarking that 'the connection of son(t)s and sonticus with this root has been recognized by Clemm, and established (Studien, iii. 328), while Bugge (iv. 205) confirms it by Northern analogies. Language regards the guilty man as the man who it was;' Gk. Etym. i. 470. Cf. Ion. Gk. ἐ-ὄντ-, stem of ἐὼν (for **ἐσ-ὄν*), being; pres. pt. of εἶμι, I am. See Sooth. Der. sin, verb, ME. sinnen, but also singen, sungen, sinegen (see P. Plowman, A. ix. 17, B. viii. 22, C. xi. 23), from AS. syngian, gesyngian, Grein, ii. 519. Also sin-ful, AS. synfull (Grein); sin-ful-ly, sin-ful-ness; sin-less, AS. synlēas; sin-less-ly, sin-less-ness; sinner, sin-offering.

SINCE, after that, from the time that, past, ago. (E.) Since is written for sins, to keep the final s sharp (voiceless); just as we write pence for pens, mice for mys, twice for twies, and the like. Again, sins is an abbreviation of ME. sithens, also spelt sithence in later English, with the same intention of showing that the final s was voiceless. Sithence is in Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 47; All's Well, i. 3. 124; sithens in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 51. β. Next, the word sithen-s arose from the addition of -s or -es (common as an adverbial ending, as in need-s, twi-es, thri-es) to the older form sithen, which was sometimes contracted to sin. We find sipen, Havelok, 399; sithen, Wyclif, Luke, xiii. 7; sith, Chaucer, C. T. 5234 (B 814); and see numerous examples in Stratmann, s. v. sippan. γ. Lastly, sithen or sipen is for sippen, the oldest ME. form, whence were made sipen, sithen, sithen-es, sithen-s, as well as (by loss of -n or -en) sithe, seþþe, sith, and (by contraction) sin or sen.—AS. siddan, siddon, syddan, seoddan, sioðdan, after that, since (very common), Grein, ii. 445. This siddan is a contraction from sīð ðan, for sīð ðon, after that; where ðon, that, is the instrumental case masc. of the demonstrative pronoun, also used as a def. article, for which see That. The AS. sīð, after, used as a prep., was orig. an adj., meaning 'late,' but here represents a comparative adv., meaning 'later, after.' We find sīð, after, later, both as adj. and adv., Grein, ii. 444. [Not the same word as AS. sīð, journey, time (Grein, ii. 443), which is cognate with Goth. sinth, discussed under Send.] This AS. sīð is cognate with Goth. seithus, late, whence the adv. seithu, late, Matt. xxvii. 57, John, vi. 16; also with G. seit, OHG. sīt, after. The G. seit-dem, since, is exactly the AS. sīð-ðan; in Gothic we find a somewhat similar compound in the expression ni thana-seiths, no longer, Mark, ix. 8. Other allied words are OIrish sir, long, W. hir, long, tedious; L. sēro, late, Skt. sāyam, adv. in the evening. Stokes-Fick, p. 294; Sievers, §§ 323, 337.

SINCERE, true, pure, honest, frank. (F.—L.) 'Of a very sincere life;' Frith's Works, p. 117, last line.—OF. sincere, syncere, 'sincere'; Cot. Mod. F. sincère.—L. sincērus, pure, sincere. If, as some have thought, sincērus means sine cēra, 'without wax,' it was orig. applied to honey (Bréal). Der. sincere-ly; sincer-i-ty, from F. sincerité, 'sincerity,' Cot., from L. acc. sincēritātem.

SINCIPUT, the fore-part of the head, from the forehead to the top. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Used as distinct from occiput, the back part of the head. The lit. sense is 'half-head.'—L. sinciput, half a head; contracted from sēmi-, half; and caput, the head. Brugmann, i. § 121. See Semi- and Capital. Compare Megrim.

SINDER, the correct spelling of Cinder, q. v. 'Thus all in flames I sinder-like consume;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew; Works, i. 117. 'Synders of the tyre;' Palsgrave. Note that the AS. sinder is cognate with Gk. ἀνθραξ, coal; from the common base **sendhro-* (Prellwitz).

SINE, a straight line drawn from one extremity of an arc or sector perpendicular to the radius at the other extremity. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1658. Englished from L. sinus, a bosom, properly a curve, fold, coil, curl, esp. the hanging fold of the upper part of a toga. The use of the word in the math. sense is peculiar. We may note the Arab. jayb, 'cutting, traversing,' as also having (like L. sinus) the two meanings of 'breast of a garment' and 'sine' in geometry. The L. sinus may have translated the Arabic. Doublet, sinus, q. v.

SINECURE, an ecclesiastical benefice without the cure of souls, salary without work. (L.) 'One of them is in danger to be made a sine cure;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act ii. sc. 2. Englished from L. sine cūrā, without cure of souls.—L. sine, prep. without, lit. 'if not,' compounded of sī, if, and ne, not; and cūrā, abl. case of cūra, cure; see Cure. Der. sinecur-ist, one who holds a sinecure.

SINEW, a tendon, that which joins a muscle to a bone. (E.) ME. sinewe; spelt synewe, Prompt. Parv. AS. sinu, seonu, sionu (dat. sinwe), a sinew; Grein, ii. 439. +Du. zenuw; Dan. sene; Swed. sena; G. sehne; OHG. senawa, senewa, senuwa. And cf. Icel. sin, asinew, pl. sinar. β. The Teut. type is **sinawā*, f. Perhaps allied to Skt. snāva(s), a tendon, which (however) answers better to G. schnur, a string. Der. sinew, verb, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 6. 91; sinew-y, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308.

SING, to resound, to utter melodious sounds, relate musically or in verse. (E.) The orig. sense is simply to ring or resound. 'We hear this fearful tempest sing;' Rich. II, ii. 1. 263. ME. singen, pt. t. sang, song, pl. sungen, pp. sungen, songen; Chaucer, C. T. 268, 1511 (A 266, 1509). AS. ingan, pt. t. sang, pl. sungon, pp. sungen; Grein, ii. 452. +Du. zingen, pt. t. zong, pp. gezongen; Icel. syngja, pt. t. saunga, söng, pp. sunginn; Dan. syng; Swed. sjunga; Goth. siggwan (written for **singwan*); G. singen. β. All from Idg. root **sengh(w)*, with labio-velar gh; so that the Gk. δμῆ, voice, may be related. Brugmann, i. §§ 676, 797. Der. sing-er, in place of the AS. sangere (which would have given a mod. E. songer); see Songstress. Songer, Sanger, Songster, Sangster occur as surnames. Also sing-ing, sing-ing-master, sing-song; singe. And see Song.

SINGE, to scorch, burn on the surface. (E.) For senge. ME. sengen; spelt seengyn, Prompt. Parv.; senge, Chaucer, C. T. 5931 (D 439). The curious pp. seind occurs as a substitute for senged; Chaucer, C. T. 14851 (B 4035). AS. segan, to singe, burn; occurring in the comp. besengan, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8. § 4; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 124, l. 18. In Matt. xiii. 6, the Lindisfarne MS. has besenced (for besenged), scorched, burnt or dried up. The AS. sengan stands for **sang-ian*, causal of singan (pt. t. sang), to sing. Thus the lit. sense is 'to make to sing,' with reference to the singing or hissing noise made by singed hair, and the sound given out by a burning log; see Sing.+Du. zengen, to singe, scorch, causal of zingen, to sing; G. sengen, to singe, scorch, parch, burn, causal of singen, to sing. Cf. Icel. sangr, singed, burnt.

SINGLE, sole, separate, alone. (L.) 'So that our eye be single;' Tyndale's Works, p. 75, col. 1. He refers to Matt. vi. 22, where the Vulgate has simplex, and Wyclif has simple.—L. singulus, single, separate, in Late Latin; in classical Latin we have only the pl. singuli, one by one. β. Singuli stands for **sin-culi* or **sin-clī*, where **sin-* corresponds to sim- in sim-plex, and is allied to sem-el, once, and to E. same; see Simple, Same. Der. single, verb, L. L. L. v. 1. 85; singl-y; single-ness, Acts, ii. 46; single-heart-ed, single-mind-ed; also single-stick, prob. so called because wielded by one hand only, as distinguished from the old quarter-staff, which was held in both hands. And see singul-ar. ¶ Spelt sengle in ME. and OF.

SINGULAR, single, alone, uncommon, strange. (F.—L.) ME. singuler; Gower, C. A. iii. 184; bk. vii. 2931. 'A singuler persone' = an individual, Chaucer, Tale of Melibee, Group B, 2625. —F. singulier, 'singular, excellent'; Cot.—L. singularis, single, separate. Formed with suffix -aris from singul-i, one by one; see Single. Der. singular-ly; singular-i-ty, from F. singularité, 'singularity, excellence,' Cot., from L. acc. singularitatem.

SINISTER, on the left hand, inauspicious, evil. (F.—L.) Common as an heraldic term. 'Some secret sinister informacion'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1447 b. 'By eny sinistre or euil temptacion'; Dictes of Philosophers, pr. by Caxton, fol. 7, l. 27.—F. sinistre, 'sinister, unlucky'; Cot.—L. sinistrum, acc. of sinister, left, on the left hand, inauspicious or ill-omened, as omens on the left hand were supposed to be. Cf. Dexter. Der. sinistr-ous, sinistr-al.

SINK, to fall down, descend, be overwhelmed; also, to depress. (E.) We have merged the transitive and intransitive forms in one; properly, we ought to use sink intransitively, and the trans. form should be sench or senk; cf. drink, drench. 1. ME. sinken, intrans., pt. t. sank, pp. sunken, sonken. The pt. t. sank is in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 67. This is the original and strong verb. AS. sincan, pt. t. sanc, pl. suncon, pp. suncen; Grein, ii. 451. +Du. zinken; Icel. sökkva (for **sinkva*), pt. t. sökk (for **sank*), pp. sökkinn; Dan. synke; Swed. sjunka; G. sinken; Goth. sigkwan, siggkwan (written for **sinkwan*, **singkwan*). Teut. type **senkwan*. Brugmann, i. § 421 (3). 2. The trans. form appears in the weak ME. senchen, not common, and now obsolete. 'Hi bisencheð us on helle' = they will sink us into hell; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 107, l. 18. AS. sencan, to cause to sink; 'bisenched on sæs grund' = caused to sink (drowned) in the bottom of the sea, Matt. xviii. 6. For **sancian*, formed from the 2nd grade sanc, as in the pt. t. of sincan, to sink. Cf. Goth. saggkwan, causal form of siggkwan. This verb still exists in Swed. sänka, Dan. sanke, G. senken, to immerse. +Lith. sekti (pres. senkü), to be drained away; cf. Skt. sich, to sprinkle. Brugmann, i. § 677; Streitberg, § 203. Der. sink-er. Also sink, sb., a place where refuse water sinks away, but orig. a place into which filth sinks or in which it collects, Cor. i. 1. 126.

SINOPLÉ, green, in heraldry. (F.—L.—Gk.) English heralds call 'green' vert; the term sinople is rather F. than E. It occurs in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox: 'of gold, of sable, of siluer, of yellow, asure, and cynope, thyse sixe colowrs'; ed. Arber, p. 85; and, spelt cinople and distinguished from grene, in Lydgate, Siege of Troy, b. ii. c. 11; fol. G 1.—F. sinople, 'sinople, green colour in blazon'; Cot.—Late L. sinōpis, signifying both reddish and greenish (Littré).—L. sinōpis, a kind of red ochre, used for colouring.—Gk. σινωπία, σινωπική, a red earth found in Cappadocia, and imported into Greece from Sinope.—Gk. Σινώπη, Sinope, a port on the S. coast of the Black Sea.

SINUS, a bay of the sea, &c. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: 'Sinus, . . . a gulph or great bay of the sea. . . . In anatomy, sinus is taken for any cavity in or between the vessels of an animal body. In surgery, it is when the beginning of an imposthume or ulcer is narrow, and the bottom large,' &c.—L. sinus, the fold of a garment, a bay, the bosom, a curve; &c. Der. sinu-ous; 'a scarfing of silver, that ran sinuously in works over the whole caparison,' Chapman, Mask of the Middle Temple, § 5; from F. sinuëux, 'intricate, crooked, full of hollow turnings, windings, or crinkle-crankles,' Cot.; from L. sinuōsus, winding, full of curves. Hence sinuos-i-ty, from F. sinuosité, a hollow turning or winding; Cot. Also sinu-ate, with a waved margin (botanical); sinu-at-ion; in-sinu-ate, in-sinu-at-ion. Doublet, sine.

SIP, to sup or drink in small quantities, to taste a liquid. (E.) ME. sippen, Chaucer, C. T. 5758 (D 176). It answers to AS. syþian, to absorb moisture (Toller), derived from sup-, weak grade of suphan, to sup; see Sup. And cf. Sop.+MDu. sippen, 'to sip, to sup, to tast little by little,' Hexham; from MDu. zuyppen, Du. zuipen, to sup; Swed. dial. syppa, to sup. Der. sip, sb.; sipp-er. And see sipp-el.

SIPHON, a bent tube for drawing off liquids. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. siphon, 'the cock or pipe of a conduit,' &c.; Cot. (He notes its use by Rabelais).—L. siphōnem, acc. of siphō, a siphon.—Gk. σίφων, a small pipe or reed.

SIPPET, a little sip, a little sop. (E.) Properly, there are two separate words. 1. A little sip. 'And ye wyll gyue me a syppet Of your stale ale'; Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 367. This is the dimin. of sip; with suffix -et, of F. origin. 2. A little sop, a piece of sopped toast. 'Green goose! you're now in sippets'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Rule A Wife, iv. 1, last line. This seems to be more immediately from AS. syþian, to absorb moisture; and allied to sop. Palsgrave has: 'Syppet, a litell soppe.'

SIR, SIRE, a respectful title of address. (F.—L.) Sire is the older form. ME. sire, as in 'Sire Arthure,' Layamon, 22485.—AF. sire, Polit. Songs, p. 232 (before 1307); F. sire, 'sir, or master'; Cot. Formed from L. senior, nom., lit. older; the F. seigneur being due to the accus. seniorem of the same word. It is now well established that the L. senior produced an OF. senre, of which sire is an attenuated form; the same word appears in the curious form sendra in the famous Oaths of Strasburg, A.D. 842; see Bartsch, Chrest. Française, col. 4, l. 17. See Littré, Scheler, and Diez. β. The last remarks that the word is prob. of Picard or Northern origin, since Picard sometimes puts r for ndr or nr, as in terons for tiendrons, tere for tendre. ¶ It may be added that this word gave the old French etymologists a great deal of trouble; the word was even written cyre to make it look like the Gk. κύριος, a lord! The Prov. sira, sire, Span. ser, Ital. ser, are merely borrowed from French; and Icel. sira, from Prov. or E.; see Sirrah. Doublets, senior, seignior, señor, signor; though these really answer only to the acc. form seniorem.

SIRDAR, a military commander. (Hind.—Pers.) Used in 1803 (Yule).—Hind. sardār (Forbes).—Pers. sardār, a chief.—Pers. sar, head (cf. Gk. κῆρα, Skt. śiras); -dār (suffix), possessing, holding.

SIREN, a fabulous nymph who, by singing, lured mariners to death. (L.—Gk.) ME. serein, which is from OF. sereine, 'a mermaid,' Cot. 'Men clepen hem sereins in Fraunce'; Rom. of the Rose, 684. But we took the mod. E. word immediately from the Latin. Spelt siren, Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 47.—L. sirēn.—Gk. σειρήν, a nymph on the S. coast of Italy, who enticed seamen by the magic sweetness of her song, and then slew them. At first the sirens were but two in number; Homer, Od. xii. 39, 167. It also means a wild bee, a singing-bird. β. Usually derived from σειρά, a cord, rope, as if they enticed mariners by pulling them; this is more likely to be a bad pun than an etymology. The orig. sense was probably 'bird'; see an article on 'Sirens,' by J. P. Postgate, in the Journal of Philology (Cambridge), vol. ix. Cf. G. schwirren, to chirp.

SIRLOIN, an inferior spelling of Surloin, q. v.

SIRNAME, a corruption of Surname, q. v.

SIROCCO, a hot, oppressive wind. (Ital.—Arab.) In Milton, P. L. x. 706. Spelt xirocque by E. G., tr. of Acosta, bk. iii. ch. 5 (1604).—Ital. sirocco, 'the south-east wind'; Florio. Cf. Span. siroco.—Arab. sharq, the east; Rich. Dict. p. 889. The etymology is well discussed in Devic, Supp. to Littré, who remarks that the introduction of a vowel between r and q, when the Arabic word was borrowed by European languages, presents no difficulty. Or there may have been some confusion with the closely-allied word shurūq, rising (said of the sun). 'The Eastern wind in the Mediterranean is hot and oppressive.—Arab. root sharāqa, (the sun) arose; Rich. Dict. p. 889. See Saracen.

SIRRAH, a term of address, used in anger or contempt. (Prov.—F.—L.) Common in Shak. Temp. v. 287; &c. Schmidt remarks that it is never used in the plural, is used towards comparatively inferior persons, and (when forming part of a soliloquy) is preceded by ah; as 'ah, sirrah'; As You Like It, iv. 3. 166; 'ah, sirrah, quoth-a,' 2 Hen. IV, v. 3. 17; cf. Romeo, i. 5. 31, 128. Minshew has: 'Sirra, a contemptuous word, ironically compounded of Sir and a, ha, as much as to say ah, sir, or ah, boy.' Minshew is not quite right; for the form sira is Provençal. It is also spelt sirra in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxv. c. 10 (in a story of Apelles), ed. 1634, vol. ii. p. 538, l. 7 from bottom.—Prov. sira, sirrah, a term of contempt; formerly sir, in a good sense; borrowed from F. in the 15th cent., or earlier. Not the true OProv. form (which was senher, with variants), but borrowed from F. sire.—L. senior; see Sir. β. The fact that it was used contemptuously is the very thing that shows its Prov. origin; for Mistral (s. v. sire) quotes from Thierry to show that sire (formerly sira) was a term of contempt applied by the men of Provence to the lords and governors from Paris. When St. Louis (Louis IX) was taken prisoner in the 13th century, the men of Marseilles sang a Te Deum for their deliverance (for the time) from the government of these sires. For two good examples of the offensive use of Prov. sira by two men who are disputing, see Bartsch, Chrest. Prov. (1875), 397. 34, 398. 13.

SIR-REVERENCE, save your reverence. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 2. 93. See Save-reverence in Nares, who shows that it was used also in the form save-reverence and save-your-reverence; the latter is in Romeo, i. 4. 42. 'This word was considered a sufficient apology for anything indecorous,' Nares. A translation of L. saluā reuerentiā, reverence to you being duly regarded. — L. saluā, fem. abl. of saluus, safe; and reuerentiā, abl. of reuerentia, reverence; see Safe and Reverence.

SIRUP, another spelling of Syrup, q. v.

SISKIN, a migratory song-bird. (Du.—Low G.—Slavonic.) Mentioned in a tr. of Buffon, Nat. Hist., London, 1792, ii. 90; and in Kilian. Spelt siskin in Phillips (1658). The Carduelis spinus; better Spinus viridis (Newton); also called aberdunvine; also Fringilla spinus. — MDu. cijsken, sijsken, Anglice siskin (Kilian); later Du. cysje (Sewel), with dimin. suffix -je for the older dimin. suffix -ken; Du. sijse (Calisch). — Low G. zieske, ziseke (Bremen). — Polish czyżik, dimin. form of czyż, a siskin; cf. Sloven. chizhek, Russ. chij. See Miklosich, p. 36. ¶ Thus the Du. form should have been cijske; it was a mistake to turn -ke into the dimin. suffix -ken; and a greater one to substitute -je.

SISTER, a girl born of the same parents with another. (E.) ME. suster, Chaucer, C. T. 873 (A 871); rarely sister, syster, as in Prompt. Parv., and in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 766. It is extremely remarkable how the Scand. form sister has modified the E. form suster. AS. sweostor, swuster (whence ME. suster); Grein, ii. 509; modified by Icel. systir, Swed. syster (Dan. søster). — Du. zuster; Goth. swistar; G. schwester; OHG. swester, swister. β. The Teut. forms are all from the base **swestr-*, answering to an Idg. base **swesr-* (without the t). Further related to Lithuan. sessis (gen. sesseres); L. soror (for older **swesor*); Skt. svasā, nom.; OIrish siur; W. chwaer. Der. sister-hood, -like, -ly; sister-in-law. Also cou-sin, q. v.

SIT, to rest on the haunches, rest, perch, brood. (E.) ME. sitten, pt. t. sat; pl. seten, Chaucer, C. T. 10406 (F 92; where Tyrwhitt prints saten); pp. seten, siten, id. 1454 (where Tyrwhitt prints sitten). AS. sittan, pt. t. sæt, pl. sæton, pp. seten; Grein, ii. 454. — Du. zitten; Icel. sitja, pt. t. sat, pp. setinn; Dan. sidde; Swed. sitta; Goth. sitan; G. sitzen; OHG. sizzan. Teut. type **setjan-*, pt. t. **sat*, pp. **setanoz*. From Idg. ✓SED, to sit, whence Skt. sad, Gk. ἔσθαι (for ἔδ-σθαι), L. sedere, Lithuan. sėdėti, Russ. sidiť (e), to sit. Der. sitt-er, sitt-ing. Also (from L. sedere) as-sess, as-siduous, as-size, dis-pos-sess, dis-sid-ent, in-sid-ious, pos-sess, pre-side, re-side, re-sid-ue, sed-ate, sed-entary, sed-iment, sess-ile, sess-ion, sub-side, sub-sid-y; super-sede; also siege, be-siege, seize, size (1), size (2), siz-ar. Also (from Gk. ἔσθαι) octa-hedron, tetra-hedron, poly-hedron, cath-(h)edral; chair, chaise. Also (from Teut. SET) set, settle (1); settle (2), in some senses; also seat, dis-seat, un-seat, soot; and see saddle.

SITE, a locality, situation, place where a thing is set down or fixed. (F.—L.) 'After the site, north or south,' Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. c. 17. — F. site, MF. sit. 'Sit, a site, or seat,' Cot. — L. situm, acc. of situs, a site. Perhaps allied to L. situs, pp. of sinere, to permit, of which an older meaning may have been to put, place. So Bréal. But see Brugmann, i. §§ 761, 920; where situs, sb., is compared with Gk. κρίσις, a foundation, and Skt. kshiti-, an abode, from kshi, to dwell. The L. pōnere (= **po-sinere*) is certainly a derivative of sinere. Der. situ-ate, situ-ation (see below); also the derivatives of pōnere, for which see Position. ¶ We frequently find the odd spelling scite.

SITH, since. (E.) In Ezek. xxxv. 6. See Since.

SITHE, the correct spelling of Scythe, q. v.

SITUATE, placed. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 2. 142. — Late L. situātus, pp. of situāre, to locate, place; a barbarous word, found A. D. 1317 (Ducange). — L. situ-, stem of situs, a site; see Site. Der. situat-ion, 2 Hen. IV, i. 3. 51, from F. situation, 'a situation,' Cot.

SIX, five and one. (E.) ME. six, sixe, P. Plowman, B. v. 431. AS. six, syx, sieax; Grein, ii. 454. — Du. zes; Icel. Dan., and Swed. sex; G. sechs; OHG. sehs; Goth. saihs. — Russ. shest (e); W. chwech; Gael. and Irish se; L. sex; Gk. ἕξ (for **σέξ*); Lithuan. szeszi; Pers. shash; Palmer's Dict. col. 382; Skt. shash. Idg. type **sweks*. See Brugmann, ii. § 170. Der. six-fold, six-pence. Also six-teen, AS. six-tine, six-týne (see Ten); six-teen-th; six-ty, AS. six-tig (see Forty); six-ti-eth; six-th, AS. six-ta, whence ME. sixte, sexte, Gower, C. A. iii. 121, bk. vii. 1082; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 300, now altered to sixth by analogy with four-th, seven-th, eigh-th, nin-th, ten-th, just as fif-th is altered from AS. fif-ta. Also (from L. sex) sex-agenarian, sex-agesima, sex-ennial, sex-tant, sex-tuple.

SIZAR, a scholar of a college in Cambridge, who pays lower fees than a pensioner or ordinary student. (F.—L.) Spelt sizer in Todd's Johnson. There was formerly a considerable difference in the social rank of a sizar, who once had to perform certain menial offices. At Oxford the corresponding term was servitor, defined by Phillips as 'a poor university scholar that attends others for his maintenance.' Formed from the sb. size. 'Size is a farthings worth of bread or drink, which scholars in Cambridge have at the buttery, noted with the letter S., as in Oxford with the letter Q. for half a farthing, and Qa. [Quadrans] for a farthing. And whereas they say in Oxford, to battel in the buttery-book, i.e. to set down on their names what they take in bread, drink, butter, cheese, &c., in Cambridge they call it sizing,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The word size is also in Minshew, and is a mere abbreviation of assize, i.e. quantity or ration of bread, &c. 'Assize of bread, i.e. setting downe the price and quantitie of bread,' Minshew, ed. 1627. See Assize, and Size (1).

SIZE (1), an allowance or ration of food; hence, generally, magnitude. (F.—L.) 'To scant my sizes,' K. Lear, ii. 4. 178; see Sizar. 'Syse of bredde and ale;' Palsgrave. Size is merely short for assize, ME. assise, the usual old word for an allowance, or settled portion of bread, &c., doled out for a particular price or given to a dependent. We even find it used, at a very early period, almost as a general word for provisions. 'Whan ther comes marchaundise, With corn, wyn, and steil, othir [or] other assise;' K. Alisaunder, 7074. Hence size came to mean dimension, magnitude, &c., as at present; also bulk, as in Merry Wives, iii. 5. 12. For the etymology, see Assize. Der. siz-ar, q. v.

SIZE (2), weak glue, a stiffening gluey substance. (Ital.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Syse for colours,' Palsgrave. Hence blood-sized, rendered sticky with gore; Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 99; 'o'er-sized with coagulate gore,' Hamlet, ii. 2. 484. Cotgrave has: 'assiette à dorer, size to gild with, gold size.' It is not a F. word, but borrowed, like some other painters' terms, from Italian. — Ital. sisā, 'a kind of syse or glew that painters vse,' Florio, ed. 1598. And Ital. sisā is an abbreviation of assisa, 'size that painters vse; also, an assise or manner; also, a liuerie, a guise or fashion, an assise or session;' id. He also gives assisare, 'to sise, to sesse, to assise, to sute well;' and assiso, 'seated, situated.' Assisa is the verbal sb. from assisare, which in its turn is from assiso, pp. of assidere, to situate. The sense is 'that which makes the colours lie flat,' so that, in Florio's phrase, they 'sute well.' The Ital. assidere is from L. assidēre, to sit at or near. — L. ad, near; and sedēre, to sit, cognate with E. Sit. We speak of 'making a thing sit,' which is just the idea here required. ¶ Thus sise (2), size (1), and assize are all, really, the same word. See Size (1), and Assize.

SJAMBOK, a whip. (Cape Du.—Malay.—Pers.) Modern. The Cape Du. sjambok seems to have been adopted from Malay chābok (Port. chabuco). — Pers. chābuk, alert, active; as sb., a horse-whip. See N. and Q., 9 S. iv. 456; Chaubuck in Yule, and Chabouk, Chaubuck in N. E. D.

SKAIN, SKENE, SKEIN, a dagger, knife. (Irish.) 'Skain, a crooked sword, or scimeter, used formerly by the Irish;' Halliwell. He cites the expression 'Irishmen, armed . . with darts and skaynes' from Hall, Hen. V, an. vi. § 3. 'Carrying his head-peece, his skeane, or pistoll;' Spenser, State of Ireland; Globe ed., p. 631, col. 2. 'Skeyne, a knyfe;' Palsgrave. 'j. baslard vocatum Iresch skene;' (1472), York Wills, iii. 202. — Irish (and Gael.) sgian, a knife; OIrish scian. — W. ysgien, a slicer, scimeter; cf. ysgi, a cutting off, a parer. β. Apparently from a base **skē*; cf. Gk. σχάω, I scratch. See Stokes-Fick, p. 309. Der. (possibly) skains-mate, a companion in arms, comrade, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see Skein.

SKATE (1), a large flat fish of the ray family. (Scand.) Spelt scāte in Levins, ed. 1570. ME. scate, Prompt. Parv. — Icel. skata, a skate; Norweg. skata (Aasen); Dan. skade. We find also Irish and Gael. sgat, a skate (from E.). ¶ The AS. sceadd is a shad, not a skate.

SKATE (2), SCATE, a frame of wood (or iron) with a steel ridge beneath it, for sliding on ice. (Du.—F.—Low G.) The word should be skates, with a pl. skateses; the final s has been mistaken for the pl. suffix, and so has dropped off, just as in other words; see Pea, Sherry, Cherry. Nares quotes the pl. scatzes in 1695. Spelt scheets in Evelyn's Diary, Dec. 1, 1662; skeates in Pepys' Diary, same date. 'Scate, a sort of pattern, to slide upon ice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cotgrave explains OF. eschasses by 'stilts, or scatches to go on;' here scatches is merely another form of skateses; 'the point in which stilts and skates agree is that they are both contrivances for increasing the length of stride,' Wedgwood. — Du. schaatsen, 'skates,' Sewel; where -en is the pl. suffix, so that the word itself is schaats, as in 'schaatsryder, a skates-slider;' Sewel [misprinted schaarsryder by an obvious error]. MDu. schaatsen, 'skates [with] which they slide upon the yce in Holland;' Hexham, ed. 1658. — OF. eschace (with ce pron. as tse), a stilt (12th cent.); whence F. échasse. — Low G. type **skak-jā* (Latinised as scacia in Ducange), a shank, leg; Low G. shake, the same. Compare E. shank, which inserts the nasal sound n; see Shank. Note the Low G. phrase de schaken voort teen, to go swiftly, lit. 'to pull one's shanks out;' and AS. sceacan, scacan, to shake, to go swiftly, to flee; see Shake, with which E. shank is allied. As to the sense, the words scatches and skates merely mean 'shanks,' i. e. contrivances for lengthening the leg. ¶ The Dan. sköite, a skate, older form skejte (Kalkar) is from E.; the Swed. word is skridsko or skid (see Skid).

SKEIN, SKAIN, a knot of thread or silk. (F. — C.?) Generally defined as 'a knot of thread or silk,' where probably 'knot' means a quantity collected together; a skein is a quantity of yarn, folded and doubled together. 'Layde downe a skeyne of threde, And some a skeyne of yarne;' Skelton, Elinor Rummung, 310. ME. skeyne, Prompt. Parv. — OF. esaigne (Godefroy), a skein (1354); MF. esaigne, 'a skain;' Cot. Prob. of Celtic origin; cf. Irish sgainne, 'a skein or clue of thread.' Cf. Gael. sgeinnidh, flax or hemp thread, small twine. If these are true Celtic words, they may be allied to Gk. σχοῖνος, a rope, a cord (Macbain). Der. (perhaps) skains-mates, companions in winding thread, companions, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see Skain. This solution is advocated in Todd's Johnson, which see; and cf. the phrase 'as thick [intimate] as inkle-weavers,' i. e. weavers of tape.

SKELETON, the bony frame-work of an animal. (Gk.) 'Skelitons of ev'ry kinde;' Davenant, Gondibert, ii. 5. st. 32. See Trench, Select Glossary. Spelt skeleton, sceleton in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — Gk. σκελετόν, a dried body, a mummy; neut. of σκελετός, dried up, parched. — Gk. σέλλειν (for σέλ-γειν), to dry, dry up, parch. Der. skeleton-key.

SKELLUM, a cheat. (Du. — G.) 'A Dutch skelum;' Coryat's Crudities; in Addit. to Nares. — Du. schelm, 'a rogue, a villain;' Hexham. — G. schelm, a rogue; OHG. scelmo, scalmo, a pestilence, carrion; hence a rogue (as a term of abuse). See Notes to Eng. Etym., p. 271.

SKEPTIC, the same as Sceptic, q. v.

SKERRY, an insulated rock. (Scand.) In Scott, The Pirate; song in ch. xii. — Icel. sker (dat. skeri), a skerry; see Scar (2).

SKETCH, a rough draught of an object, outline. (Du. — Ital. — L. — Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To make a sketch;' Dryden, Parallel between Painting and Poetry (R.). Not used much earlier. — Du. schets, 'a draught, scheme, model, sketch;' Sewel. [The E. sketch is a mere corruption of the Du. word, and stands for skets.] The same word as G. skizze, a sketch; which was prob. borrowed from the Dutch, who, as being fond of painting, introduced the term from the Italian. At any rate, both Du. schets and G. skizze are from Ital. schizzo, 'an ingroisement or first rough draught of anything;' Florio. — L. schedium, an extemporaneous poem, anything hastily made. — L. schedius, adj., made hastily. — Gk. σχέδιος, sudden, offhand on the spur of the moment; also near, close to. Cf. Gk. σχέδόν, near, hard by, lit. 'holding to.' These words, like σχέσις, habit, state, σχέ-τι-κός, retentive, are from the Gk. base σχε-, to hold, appearing in Gk. σχεῖν (= σχε-ειν), 2 aorist infin. of ἔχειν, to hold, and in E. sche-me. See Scheme. β. Thus scheme and sketch, the meanings of which are by no means remote, are from the same root, but by different paths. Der. sketch, verb; sketch-y, sketch-i-ness.

SKEW, oblique, wry. (MDu.) 'To look skew, or a-skew, to squint or leer;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It seems first to have been used chiefly as a verb. 'To skue, or walk skuing, to waddle, to go sideling along;' Phillips. 'To skewe, linis oculis spectare;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Our service Neglected and look'd lamely on, and skew'd at;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, A. ii. sc. 1 (Putskie). 'This skew'd-eyed carrion;' id., Wild-geese Chase, iv. 1 (Mirabel). ME. skewen, to turn aside, slip away, escape; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1562. Prob. of MDu. origin; not from Icel. skeifr, awry. — MDu. schouwen, 'to avoid or to shunne,' also as Du. schuwen, Hexham; Low G. schouen, schuwen, to avoid. + OHG. sciuhēn, MHG. schühen, to avoid, get out of the way, G. scheuen, to shun, avoid (whence G. scheu, shy); derived from the adj. appearing as MHG. schiech, timid. Thus ME. skewen, to escape, is really the verb corresponding to the adj. shy; to skew or skue is to shy as a horse, to start aside from. Cf. WFlem. schui, schu, shy; schuien, schuen, to avoid. See further under Shy, Eschew. Der. a-skew, q. v. Also skew-bald.

SKEWBALD, piebald. (Hybrid; MDu. and C.) In Halliwell. It means marked or spotted in a skew or irregular manner. From Skew and Bald, q. v. And cf. pie-bald. ¶ We find, however, ME. skewed, piebald (see Stratmann); perhaps from skew, ME.

variant of skie, a cloud, sky. If this is right, then skew-bald is connected with Sky rather than Skew.

SKEWER, a pin of wood or iron for holding meat together. (Scand.) In Dryden, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 633. Spelt skuer in 1411; Nottingham Records, vol. ii. Skewer is a by-form of prov. E. skiver, a skewer, E. D. D.; cf. skiver-wood, dogwood, of which skewers are made; Halliwell. And skiver is the Northern form of shiver, a splinter of wood, dimin. of Icel. skifa, Swed. skifva, a slice, a shive; see Shiver (2). The form skiver corresponds to Dan. skifer, Swed. skiffer, a slate, MDan. skever; MDu. scheversteen, 'a slate or a slate-stone,' Hexham; similarly named from its being sliced into thin flakes. Cf. Dan. dial. skivrt, small sticks; Norw. skivra, to cut into splinters (Ross). ¶ The spelling skiver occurs in W. Dampier, A New Voyage (1699); vol. ii. pt. 1, p. 31. Doublet, shiver (2). Der. skewer, verb.

SKID, a contrivance for locking the wheel of a carriage. (Scand.) Halliwell gives: 'skid-pan, the shoe with which the wheel of a carriage is locked.' Ray has: 'To skid a wheel, rotam sufflaminare, with an iron hook fastned to the axis to keep it from turning round upon the descent of a steep hill; Kent.' The latter sense is merely secondary, and refers to a later contrivance; the orig. skid was a kind of shoe placed under the wheel, and in the first instance made of wood. [The word skid is merely the Scand. form corresponding to the ME. schide, a thin piece of wood; see Slide.] — Icel. skið, a billet of wood; also, a kind of snow-shoe; Norw. skid, a snow-shoe (Aasen); MSwed. skid, a thin flat piece of wood (Ihre); Swed. skid, 'a kind of scate or wooden shoe on which they slide on the ice,' Widegren.

SKIFF, a small light boat. (F. — Ital. — OHG.) 'Olaus fled in a little skiffe;' Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 14. And in Minshew. — MF. esquif, 'a skiffe, or little boat,' Cot. — Ital. schifo, 'a skiffe;' Florio. — OHG. skif, schif, G. schiff, a ship; cognate with E. Ship, q. v. Der. skiff, verb, to cross in a skiff, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3. 37. Doublet, ship.

SKILL, discernment, discrimination, tact. (Scand.) ME. skil, gen. in the sense of 'reason,' Ancrén Riwlē, p. 204, l. 22; skile, id. p. 306, l. 17. — Icel. skil, a distinction, discernment; cf. skilja, to part, separate, divide, distinguish; Dan. skjel, a separation, boundary, limit; cf. skille, to separate; Swed. skäl, reason; cf. skilja, to separate. β. From √SQEL, to separate, divide, orig. to cleave, as appears by Lithuan. skelti, to cleave. Cf. Swed. skala, to peel. See Shell, Scale. Der. skil-ful, ME. skilfulle, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 311, l. 17; skil-ful-ly, skil-ful-ness; skil-less, Ormulum, 3715; skill-ed, i. e. endowed with skill, Rich. III, iv. 4. 116. Also skill, verb, in the phr. it skills not = it makes no difference, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 134; from Icel. skilja, to separate, which is frequently used impersonally, with the sense 'it differs.'

SKILLET, a small pot. (F. — L.) In Othello, i. 3. 273. Spelt skellet, Skelton, Elinour Rummung, 250. Halliwell explains it as a small iron or brass pot, with a long handle. — OF. escuellette, 'a little dish;' Cot. Dimin. of OF. escuelle, a dish. — L. scutella, a salver; dimin. of scutra, scuta, a tray, dish, platter. Hardly allied to scutum, a shield. Doublet, scuttle (1). ¶ The Suffolk word skillet, meaning a thin brass perforated implement used for skimming milk (Moor, Nall), perhaps acquired its peculiar sense from confusion with the Icel. skilja, to separate; but the sense of 'dish' will suffice, as the orig. skimmer must have been a simple dish. The fancy in Phillips, that a skillet [except when it means 'a bell'] is derived from Late L. skeletta, a little bell [from Du. schel, a bell], on the ground that skillets are made of bell-metal, is to be rejected. Othello's helmet can hardly have been made of bell-metal, and a skillet is usually of brass or iron.

SKIM, to clear of scum, to pass lightly over a surface. (Scand.) 'Skim milk;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 36. A derivative of scum; the change of vowel from u to i (y) is precisely what we should expect; but we only find a change of this character in the cognate EFries. schümen, to skim; and G. schäumen, to skim, from schaum, scum. Of Scand. origin; cf. Dan. skumme, to skim, from skum, scum; Swed. skumma mjölk, to skim milk, from skum, scum. The right form appears in MSwed. skymma, to overshadow, from skumm, obscurity; which seems to be from the same root as skum, scum. Note also Dan. dial. skimmel, a thin film on milk; and even Irish sgem-im, I skim, from sgeim, foam, scum. See Scum. ¶ We find a similar vowel-change in dint, ME. dunt; in fill, derived from full; in list, verb, from lust, sb.; in trim, verb, from AS. trum; &c. Der. skimmer; skim-milk, i. e. skimmed milk.

SKIMP, to curtail, stint. (Scand.) See E. D. D.; and cf. scrimp, which may have affected it. It seems to be founded on Icel. skemma, to shorten; from skamr, short. See Scant. So also Eng. dial. skimp, to joke, is from NFries. skempe, Icel. skemta, to amuse.

SKIN, the natural covering of the body, hide, bark, rind. (Scand.)

ME. skin, Chaucer, C. T. 3809 (A 3811); bere-skin or beres skin, a bear-skin, id. 2144 (A 2142). Spelt skine, Rel. Ant. ii. 79, col. 1. — Icel. skinn, a skin; Swed. skinn; Dan. skind. β. The Icel. skinn stands for **skinþ*-, by the assimilation common in that language; so also the Swed. skinn. Teut. type **skinþom*, neut.; Idg. type **skéntom*. Hence also G. schinden, to skin, flay; OHG. scintan, scindan, sometimes a strong verb, with pt. t. schant, pp. geschunden. Cf. also W. cen, skin, peel, scales; ysgen, dandruff. Der. skin, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147; skin-deep; skinn-er; skin-flint, a miser who would even skin a flint, if possible; skinn-y, Macb. i. 3. 45; skinn-iness.

SKINK (1), to draw or serve out wine. (Scand.) Obsolete. Shak. has under-skinker, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 26. Dryden has skinker, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 803. — Icel. skenkja, to serve drink; cognate with AS. scencan. The latter verb is fully explained under Nunchion, q. v.

SKINK (2), a kind of lizard. (Gk.) 'Th' Alexandrian skink;' Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas, i. 6 (C. D.). — Gk. σκίγκος, a kind of lizard; whence L. scincus (Pliny, viii. 25); written scinke in Holland's translation; spelt scinc, scinque in Cotgrave.

SKIP, to leap lightly, pass over quickly. (Scand.) ME. skippen, Chaucer, C. T. 3259; King Alisaunder, 768; pt. t. skipte, P. Plowman, B. xi. 103; scep, skyp, scope, Cursor Mundi, 19080. Of Scand. origin. Cf. Swed. dial. skopa, to skip, leap (as an animal), dance (Rietz); who cites MSwed. skuppa, skoppa, in the same sense; Norw. skopa, to skip away (Ross); MDan. skobe, to dance, skip (Kalkar). Icel. skoppa, to spin like a top, whence skoppa-kringla, a top, North E. scopperil spinner, a teetotum (Whitby Glossary), named from its skipping about. And cf. MHG. scüffen, to gallop. (The E. i is for y, mutation of u.) Perhaps MSwed. pp represents mp; cf. Swed. dial. skimpa, skumpa, to jump about. Der. skip, sb., skip-ing-rope.

SKIPPER, the master of a merchant-ship. (Du.) 'In ages pass'd, as the skipper told me, ther grew a fair forrest in that channel where the Texel makes now her bed;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 5, dated from Amsterdam, April 1, 1617. Thus Howell picked up the word in Holland. Found much earlier, spelt skyppe; Earl of Derby's Expeditions (1390); Camden Soc., p. 37. — Du. schipper, 'a mariner, a shipper, a saylour, a navigatour;' Hexham. Formed, with suffix -er (=E. -er) of the agent, from Du. schip, cognate with E. Ship, q. v. So also Swed. skeppare, from skepp, a ship (Ihre).

SKIRMISH, an irregular fight, contest. (F.—OHG.) Also spelt scrimmage; and even scaramouch is but the Ital. form of the ME. sb. This sb. appears as ME. scarmuch, a slight battle, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 934. Spelt scarmoge, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 34. — OF. escarmouche, 'a skirmish, bickering;' Cot. β. But the mod. form of the sb. is due to the ME. verb skirmishen, spelt skirmyshe in Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iv. 399. — OF. eskermis-, a stem of eskermir, to fence, to fight; whence also the ME. skirmen, to fence or skirmish; the pt. t. skirmiden occurs very early, in Layamon, 8406. Cf. MF. escrimer, 'to fence, or play at fence, also, to lay hard about him;' Cot. — OHG. scirman, MHG. schirmen, to defend, fight; especially, to defend oneself with a shield. — OHG. scirm, schirm, G. schirm, a shield, screen, shelter, guard, defence. γ. It thus appears that the orig. sense of skirmish is 'to fight behind cover,' hence to take advantage of cover or slight shelter in advancing to fight. δ. Diez and Scheler show clearly that the F. escarmouche, Ital. scaramuccia, are due to OHG. skerman, which is a mere variant of scirman. The ending of Ital. scaramuccia is a mere suffix; we find also Ital. scherm-ugio, a skirmish, scherm-ita, fencing, schermire, schermare, to fence, schermo, a defence, arms; also OF. escarm-ie, answering to Ital. scherm-ita. Der. skirmish-er. Doublets, scrimmage, scaramouch.

SKIRR, the same as Scur, q. v.

SKIRRET, SKERRET, a plant like the water-parsnep. (F.—Span.—Arab.) ME. skyrwyt; Voc. 567. 31; 580. 38. Also skirwhit, skirwhite; Sinonima Bartolomei, ed. Mowat, p. 20, l. 4; p. 33, l. 25. Spelt as if from Icel. skir hvitr, pure white. But this is probably a popular etymology; prob. adapted from OF. eschervis (Godefroy); MF. chervis, 'the root skirret or skirwicke;' Cot. The OF. eschervis is from Span. chirivia; from Arab. karawia (Devic); which is also the origin of our word caraway. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 271. And see Caraway.

SKIRT, the part of a garment below the waist, edge, border, margin. (Scand.) This is a doublet of shirt, but restricted to the sense of the lower part of the shirt or garment. Spelt skort, Hall's Satires, b. iv. sat. i. l. 28. ME. skyrte. 'Skyrte of a garment, Trames;' Prompt. Parv. — Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; Swed. skjorta, MDan. skyrte, Dan. skjorte, a shirt. β. The cognate G. schurz has the sense of 'apron;' and special attention was called to the lower part of the shirt by the etymological sense, which signifies 'a short garment;' see Shirt. And see remarks on Kirtle. The general sense of 'edge' comes from that of 'lower edge,' or place where the garment is cut short. Der. skirt, verb, Milton, P. L. v. 282.

SKIT, a taunt, a lampoon; see Skittish (below).

SKITTISH, frisking, full of frisks, said of a horse or unsteady person, fickle. (Scand.) 'Unstaid and skittish in all motions else;' Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 18. 'Some of theyr skyttyshe condycyons;' Fabyan's Chronicle, an. 1255-6, ed. Ellis, p. 339. 'Thy skittish youthe;' Hoccleve, de Regim. Principum, 590. Formed from the verb to skit, a Lowland Sc. word, meaning 'to flounce, caper like a skittish horse,' Jamieson. Of Scand. origin. We find nearly related words in Swed. skutta, to leap, Swed. dial. skutta, skötta, to leap, Swed. dial. skytta, to go a-hunting, to be idle, skyttila, to run to and fro; all of which (as Rietz says) are mere derivatives from Swed. skjuta, to shoot. To skit is a secondary verb, of Scand. origin, from the verb to shoot; and means to be full of shootings or quick darts, to jerk or jump about; hence the adj. skittish, full of frisks or capers. Cf. 'If she skit and recoil,' i. e. is shy; Chapman, May Day, ii. 3. See further under Shoot. β. We may also note Swed. skytt, Icel. skyti, skytja, skytta, Dan. skytte, an archer, marksman (lit. 'a shooter'), whence the verb to skit also means 'to aim at' or reflect upon a person. 'Skit, verb, to reflect on;' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 1; A. D. 1781. We even find MDan. skytte-vers, a jeering verse (Kalkar). This explains the sb. skit, 'an oblique taunt,' Jamieson. Cf. Dan. skotte til, to cast a sly look at (Larsen); AS. on-scyte, an attack, a calumny. Vigfusson notices E. skit with reference to Icel. sküti, sküta, skæting, a scoff, taunt; perhaps these also may be referred to the same prolific Teut. base **skeut*-. ¶ The surname Skeat, ME. skeet, swift, in King Alisaunder, 5637, Icel. skjötr, swift, fleet, is likewise from Icel. skjöta to shoot; and is closely related.

SKITTLES, a game in which wooden pins are knocked down by a ball. (Scand.) Formerly keels or kayles or kails; see Kails. Also kettle-pins or skittle-pins. Todd cites: 'When shall our kittle-pins return again into the Grecian skyttals?' Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 43. Halliwell gives kettle-pins, skittles. 'The Grecian skyttals' is an invention, evidently suggested by Gk. σκυτάλη, a stick, staff, from which Sadler probably imagined that skittles was 'derived,' in the old-fashioned way of 'deriving' all English words from Latin and Greek. As kittle-pins never came from Greek, there is no reason why it should be expected to 'return' to it. β. From comparison of skittles with kittle-pins, we may infer that the old name was skittle-pins, i. e. pins to be knocked down by a skittle or projectile. Skittle is, in fact, a doublet of shuttle, signifying, originally, anything that could be shot or thrown; thus the ME. schitel meant the bolt of a door. Cf. ME. schylle, a child's game, L. sagittella, Prompt. Parv.; though there is a doubt whether this refers to skittles or to shuttle-cock. γ. Shuttle is the English, but skittle the Scand. form.

— Dan. skytte, a shuttle, Swed. dial. skytte, sköttel, an earthen ball for a child's game (Rietz); MDan. skytte, a shuttle, an earthen or stone ball to play with; skytteleg, the game of skittles, skyttebane, a skittle-track; Icel. skutill, an implement shot forth, a harpoon, a bolt or bar of a door. — Teut. and Icel. skut-, weak grade of the strong verb skjöta, to shoot, cognate with E. Shoot, q. v. And see Shuttle. Also see Skittish. ¶ It follows that the skittle was orig. the ball which was aimed at the pins or 'skittle-pins;' and the skittle-alley was the course along which the ball ran.

SKUA, a bird, a kind of gull. (Scand.) 'Lestris cataractes, the common skua;' Engl. Encycl. s. v. Laridae. Shetland skooi; Faroese sküir (1604); see Newton, Dict. of Birds; Dan. skua (Larsen). Apparently a corruption of Icel. skúfr, a skua; also called skúmr, 'the skua, or brown gull;' Icel. Dict. I suppose the reference is to the colour; cf. Icel. skúmi, shade, dusk; Swed. skum, dusky; Norweg. skum, dull, dusky, chiefly used of the weather, but sometimes of colour. Perhaps allied to Sky.

SKUE, old spelling of Skew, q. v.

SKULK, the same as Sculk, q. v.

SKULL, SCULL, the bony casing of the brain, the head, cranium. (Scand.) ME. skulle, sculle, Chaucer, C. T. 3933 (A 3935); spelt schulle, Ancrén Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; scolle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 374. Named from its shell-like shape. — Swed. dial. skulle, variant of skölle, scull; Norw. skull, scull. From Teut. **skul*, weak grade of **skelan*- (pt. t. **skal*), to cleave, divide. From the base **skal* we have Swed. hufvud-skalle, the skull, Dan. hjerne-skæl, skull. See further under Scale (2). Der. scull (2), q. v.; also skull-cap.

SKUNK, a N. American quadruped. (N. American Indian.) Modern; imported from N. American. 'Contracted from the Abenaki seganku;' Webster. But this is an incorrect form of segongw; see N. and Q., 10 S. iii. 386. Abenaki is a dialect of the Algonquin race of N. American Indians, spoken in Lower Canada and Maine.

SKY, the clouds, the heavens. (Scand.) ME. skie, skye, in the sense of 'cloud;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 510. Used in the mod. general sense, King Alisaunder, 318. — Icel. ský, a cloud; Dan. and Swed. sky, a cloud. Allied to AS. scō, OSax. scio, a cloud; AS. scūa, scūwa, a shade, Grein, ii. 412; Icel. skuggi, shade, shadow. All from the √SQUEU, to cover; whence also scu-m, show-er, hide, and ob-scu-re; Fick, iii. 337. Cf. Skt. sku, to cover; L. ob-scū-rus. Der. sky-blue, -lark, -light, -rocket, -sail; sky-ward, toward the sky. Also sky-ey, adj., Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 9.

SLAB (1), a thin slip or flat piece of stone or wood. (F.—Teut.) Now gen. used of stone; but formerly also of timber. 'Slab, the outside plank of a piece of timber, when sawn into boards;' Ray, North-Country Words, ed. 1691; also written slap (Halliwell). Also used of pieces of tin; Ray, Account of Preparing Tin. 'Sawe slab of thy timber for stable and stie;' Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 16, st. 35. (E. D. S.) ME. slab, rare; but we find the expression 'a slab of ire,' i.e. a piece of iron, in Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 135, l. 141. Cf. also Prov. E. slappel, a piece, part, or portion, given as a Sussex word in Ray's South-Country Words; also slape, a flag-shaped slate (E. D. D.). The form slape was prob. the original one.—OF. esclape, 'éclat; de menus esclapes de bois,' i.e. thin slabs of wood (Godefroy). Hence Low L. scłapa, a shingle (Ducange). Cf. Prov. esclapo, a piece of cut wood, esclapa-bos, a wood-cutter, and esclapa, vb., to split wood (Mistral); Ital. schiap-pare, to cleave wood (Florio). Perhaps from the prefix es- (L. ex), an intensive; and Low G. klappen, to clap, to make an explosive sound (hence, to cleave noisily); cf. G. klaffen, to split. See Körtling, § 5282. Cf. Eclat.

SLAB (2), viscous, slimy. (Scand.) 'Make the gruel thick and slab;' Macb. iv. 1. 32. 'Slabby, sloppy, dirty;' Halliwell. From prov. E. slab, a puddle; whence, probably, Irish slab, slaiḃ, Gael. slaiḃ, mire, mud left on the strand of a river; Gael. slaiḃeach, miry.—Icel. slabb, dirt from sleet and rain; Swed. dial. and Norw. slabb, MDan. slab, mire (whence slab, slippery). Cf. ME. slabben, to wallow; EFries. slabben, Du. slabben, to lap up; Swed. dial. slabba, to splash, to soil. And see Slabber (below).

SLABBER, to slaver, to let the saliva fall from the mouth, to make wet and dirty. (E.) The forms slabber, slobber, slubber, are mixed up. Slubber (q.v.) is the Scand. form. Again, we have also the form slaver; also of Scand. origin; see Slaver. 'Her milkepan and creame-pot so slabbered and sost' [dirtied]; Tusser's Husbandry, April, sect. 48, st. 20. (E. D. S.) ME. slabben. 'Then come sleuthe al bislabeled'=then came Sloth, all be-slabbared; P. Plowman, B. v. 392; where another MS. has byslobred. Not found in AS. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, from ME. slabben: 'hy ine helle slabbeth,' they wallow in hell; Shoreham's Poems, p. 151; see Slab (above). Cf. MDan. slabre, to slabber; Swed. dial. slabbra i seg, to eat greedily and carelessly; EFries. and Westphal. slabbern, to lap, sup, or lick up; Low G. slabbern, slubbern, to slabber, lap, sip, frequent. of slabben, to lap; G. schlabbern, schlabben, to lap, to slabber. Also MDu. slabben, be-slabben, to slaver; een slabbe, or slab-doeck, a child's bib, or slaver's clout [where doeck=G. tuch, cloth]; Hexham. Hexham also gives slabben, 'to lappe as dogges doe in drinking, to sup, or to licke;' with the frequentative slabberen, 'to sup up hot broath.' So also prov. E. slap, to slop; Dan dial. slabbe, slappe, to lap up. Of imitative origin; cf. slobber, slubber, slaver.

SLACK, lax, loose. (E.) ME. slak. 'With slakke paas'=with slow pace; Chaucer, C. T. 2903 (A 2901). AS. sleac, slack, slow, Grein, ii. 455. 'Lentus, vel piger, sleac;' Voc. 170. 1.—Icel. slakr, slack; whence slakna, to slacken, become slack; Swed. and Dan. slak; Provincial G. schlack, slack (Flügel); MHG. slach, OHG. slah. β. All from a Teut. type **slakoz*. Allied to Lag and to Lax. Brugmann, i. § 193. Der. slack-ly, slack-ness. Also slack, verb, Oth. iv. 3. 88, spelt slacke in Palsgrave; of which slake is a doublet; see Slake. Also slack-en, properly 'to become slack,' though often used in the trans. sense; the ME. form is slekker (Stratmann). Also slag, q.v., slug, q.v.

SLADE, a dell, glade, valley. (E.) Common in prov. E.; also in the form slad. 'My smoother slades;' Drayton, Polyolbion, Song 13; l. 28 from end. Gower has the pl. slades; Conf. Amant. ii. 93; bk. iv. 2727. AS. slæd (dat. slade), a strath, a valley.—Westphal. slade, a ravine; Dan. dial. slade, a flat piece of land; Norw. slade, a slope, sladna, to slope down; Aasen says there is evidence of a strong verb with the stems **sled*, **slad*, **slod*, to slope; parallel to Slide. See Sled.

SLAG, the dross of metal, scoria. (Swed.) 'Another furnace they have, . . . in which they melt the slags, or refuse of the litharge;' Ray, On the Smelting of Silver (1674); in reprint of Ray's Glossaries, Glos. B. 15, p. 10. (E. D. S.) It also occurs in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil (1582), Æn. iii. 576; ed. Arber, p. 89, l. 4. The word is Swedish.—Swed. slag, dross, dross of metal, slag; järnslag, dross of iron; slaggarv, a heap of dross and cinders (Widgren); allied to Norw. slagga, to flow over. So called from its flowing over when the metal is fused; cf. Icel. slagga, to flow over, be spilt, slag, slagi, wet, dampness, water penetrating walls. Cf. Dan. slakker, slag (Larsen); Low G. slakke, G. schlacke, scoria. These suggest a connexion with Slack. ¶ Not allied to Swed. slag, a blow. Der. slagg-y.

SLAKE, to slacken, quench, mix with water. (E.) To slake or slack lime is to put water to it, and so disintegrate or loosen it. 'Quick-lime, taken as it leaves the kiln, and thrown into a proper quantity of water, splits with noise, puffs up, produces a large disengagement of vapour, and falls into a thick paste;' Weale, Dict. of Terms in Architecture, &c. Slake is an older spelling than slack (verb), of which it is a doublet. ME. slaken, to render slack, to slake. 'His wrappe for to slake;' Will. of Palerne, 728; spelt slakie, Layamon, 23345, later text. AS. sleacian, to grow slack or remiss; found in the comp. ásleacian, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 610, l. 16, ii. 98, l. 15.—AS. sleac, slack; see Slack. Perhaps affected by the cognate MDu. slaken, 'to slack, let slip, soften, become liquid.' β. There is also a ME. slekker, to quench, extinguish, Prompt. Parv. This is from AS. sleccan, Grein, ii. 455, which is a causal form. Cf. Icel. slökva, to slake; which, however, was orig. a strong verb, with pp. slokinn; still it is from the same Teut. base **slak-*. Also Swed. släcka, to quench, put out, allay, slack; a causal form, from slak, slack.

SLAM, to shut with violence and noise. (Scand.) 'To slam one, to beat or cuff one strenuously, to push violently; he slamm'd to the door; North;' Grose's Provincial Glossary, ed. 1790.—Norweg. slamba, to smack, bang, bang or slam a door quickly; also spelt slemma, slamra; Swed. dial. slämma, to slam, strike or push hastily, to slam a door (Aasen, Rietz); Icel. slamra, slambra, to slam. Cf. Swed. slamra, to prate, chatter, jingle; slammer, a clank, noise. To slam is to strike smartly, and is related to Slap; see Slap. Of imitative origin; note prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently; Halliwell.

SLANDER, scandal, calumny, false report, defamation. (F.—L.—Gk.) A doublet of scandal, as will appear. ME. sclaundre, Chaucer, C. T. 8598 (E 722); sclaundre, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 41; K. Alisaunder, 757.—OF. esclandre, 'a slander;' Cot. (We find the OF. forms escandele, escandle, escandre (Burguy); and lastly, by insertion of l, the form esclandre).—L. scandalum; see Scandal. Der. slander, verb, ME. sclaundren, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21; slander-er; slander-ous, from OF. esclandreux (Cot.); slander-ous-ly. Doublet, scandal.

SLANG, low, vulgar language, a colloquial and familiar mode of expression. (Scand.) Not in early use. In the Slang Dict., the earliest known instance is given as follows. 'Let proper nurses be assigned, to take care of these babes of grace [young thieves] . . . The master who teaches them should be a man well versed in the cant language commonly called the slang patter, in which they should by all means excel;' Jonathan Wild's Advice to his Successor; London, J. Scott, 1758. The same Dict. gives: 'Slang, to cheat, abuse in foul language; Slang-whanger, a long-winded speaker; also, out on the slang, to travel with a hawker's licence; slang, a watch-chain, a travelling-show.' [But the existence of this book (of 1758) is doubted. In 1762, Foote has: 'ay, but that's all slang [pretence], I suppose;' The Orators, A. i. sc. 1.] Probably derived from slang, 2nd grade of the verb to sling, i. e. to throw, cast. This is shown by Wedgwood, following Aasen. β. We find, for example, Norweg. sleng, a slinging, also an invention, device, stratagem; also, a little addition, or burthen of a song, in verse and melody; ettersleng (lit. after-slang), a burthen at the end of a verse of a ballad; slenga, to dangle (which shows why slang sometimes means a watch-chain); slengja, to sling, cast, slengja kjeften (lit. to sling the jaw), to use abusive language, to slang; slengjenamn, a nickname (lit. a slang-name), also, a name that has no just reason; slengjeord (lit. a slang-word), an insulting word or allusion, a new word that has no just reason, or, as Aasen puts it, forærmelige Ord eller Hentydninger, nye Ord som ikke have nogen rigtig Grund. The use of slang in the sense 'to cheat' reminds us of Icel. slyngur, slunginn, versed in a thing, cunning. And that all the above Norweg. and Icel. words are derivatives from sling is quite clear; see Sling. I see no objection to this explanation. Note also Swed. slanger, gossip. ¶ Taylor, in his Words and Places, gives, without any proof or reference, the following explanation. 'A slang is a narrow strip of waste land by the road-side, such as those which are chosen by the gipsies for their encampments. [This is amplified from Halliwell, who merely says: 'Slang, a narrow piece of land, sometimes called slanket.'] To be out on the slang, in the lingo used by thieves and gipsies, means to travel about the country as a hawker, encamping by night on the roadside slangs. [Amplified from the Slang Dict., which says not a word about these night-encampments. A travelling-show was also called a slang. It is easy to see how the term slang was transferred to the language spoken by hawkers and itinerant showmen.' To this I take exception; it is not 'easy to see.' On the other hand, it is likely that a slang (from the verb sling, to cast) may have meant 'a cast' or 'a pitch'; for both cast and pitch are used to mean a camping-place, or a place where a travelling-show is exhibited; and, indeed, 'a narrow slip of ground' is also called a slinget or slanget; E. D. D.

SLANT, to slope. (Scand.) 'Fortune beginneth so to slant,' i. e. fail; Libell of E. Policie, l. 757. We also have slant, adj. sloping; the verb should rather take the form to slent. Lowland Sc. slent, sklent, sklint, to give a slanting direction, to dart askance (in relation to the eyes), to pass obliquely, to render sloping (Jamieson). ME. slenten, to slope, to glide; 'it [a blow] slented doune to the erthe,' Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. xvii. c. 1; leaf 345. 'A fote ynto the erthe hyt sciente;' MS. Camb. Ff. ii. 38, fol. 113; cited in Halliwell, p. 711. [The insertion of c, as in sculenten, occurs again in ME. sculendre for mod. E. slender.]—Norw. slenta, to fall aside, or fall slanting (Ross); Swed. dial. slenta, slänta, lit. 'to cause to slide'; causal form of the strong verb slinta (pt. t. slant, pp. sluntit), to slide, slip with the foot (Rietz). Cf. MSwed. slinta, to slip with the foot (Ihre); Swed. slinta, to slip, miss one's step, to glance (as a chisel on a stone), to slip or glance (as a knife); Widegren. Also MDan. slanten, slack; slente, to slip aside, be slack; Swed. slutta (= slunta), to slant, slope. β. The E. adj. slant, sloping, answers to the Swed. dial. slant, adj. slippery, esp. used of a path; the connexion between sloping and slippery, in this case, is obvious. Der. slant-ly, slant-wise; also a-slant, q. v.

SLAP, to smack, to strike with the flat open hand. (E.) Rare in literature; but we find ME. slappe, sb., a smart blow; Palladius on Husbandry, b. iv. l. 763. It seems to be an E. word; it occurs both in Low and High German. + Low G. slapp, the sound of a blow, a sounding box on the ears. 'Slapp! sloog ik em an de snute, I hit him on the snout, slap!' Bremen Wörterbuch; G. schlapp, interj., slap! schlappe, sb., a slap; schlappen, verb, to slap. [Quite a different word from Swed. slapp, lax, loose, Dan. slap, slack, &c.] β. An imitative word, to express the sound of a blow; allied to slam; cf. prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently (Halliwell). Der. slap, sb., ME. slappe, as above; slap, adv., slap-bang, violently.

SLASH, to cut with a violent sweep, cut at random or violently. (F.—Teut.) ME. slashen; rare. In Wyclif, 3 Kings, v. 18, the L. dolāuerunt is translated by han ouerscorchide in the earlier text, with the various reading han slascht; the later text has hewiden. 'Hewing and slashing;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 15. 'Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slish, and slash;' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 90. 'But presently slash off his traitorous head;' Green, Alphonsus, Act ii; ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 23. 'Slash, a cut or gash, Yorksh.;' Halliwell. Slashed sleeves are sleeves with gashes in them, as is well known. OF. eschacier, to break in pieces (Godefroy).—OF. es- (< L. ex), very; and Teut. type **klakjan*, MHG. klecken, to break with a 'clack'; cf. F. claque, a clack, from MHG. klac, a clack, sudden noise. See Körting, § 5280. β. Perhaps confused with OF. eschieschier, eschicier, to slice; see SLICE. ¶ The Swed. slaska, to splash, accounts only for prov. E. slashy, wet, Lowland Sc. slash, to work in wet, slatch, to dabble in mire, slatch, to bedaub; which are words unrelated to the present one, but allied to prov. E. slosh and slush. Der. slash, sb. Slash, to whip, is perhaps an intensive form of LASH, q. v.

SLAT, a long, narrow strip of wood, a lath. (F.—Teut.) The same word as SLATE (below). Cf. prov. E. slat, a slate; ME. slat, a slate, Prompt. Parv.

SLATE (1), a well-known stone that is easily split, a piece of such stone. (F.—Teut.) ME. slat, usually sclat, Wyclif, Luke, v. 19. So called from its fissile nature.—OF. esclat, 'a shiver, splinter, or little piece of wood broken off with violence; also a small thin lath or shingle,' Cot. [A shingle is a sort of wooden tile.]—OF. eschlater; whence s'esclater, 'to split, burst, shiver into splinters;' Cot. This answers to a Late L. type **ex-clapitūre*, to break with a clap; from L. ex, very, and Low G. klapp, a clap, klappen, to clap. Körting, § 5282. See SLAB (1). The OF. esclat=mod. F. éclat; hence éclat is the same word. Der. slate-pencil, slat-er, slat-ing, slat-y. Doublets, éclat, slat.

SLATE (2), to set on a dog, to bait, damage, abuse. (E.) 'Of bole slating, bull-baiting; King Alisaunder, 200. AS. slātan, to cause to rend.—AS. slāt, 2nd grade of slitan, to slit, tear; see SLIT.

SLATTERN, a sluttish, untidy woman. (Scand.) It is used both by Butler and Dryden; Todd's Johnson (no reference). The final -n is difficult to account for; it is either a mere addition, as in bitter-n, or slattern is short for slatterin=slattering; unless it was borrowed directly from MDan. slatten, untidy, dirty; slatten-spād, a slattern (Kalkar). Ray, in his North-Country Words, has: 'Dawgos, or Dawkin, a dirty slatternly woman.' Kersey (1721) has: Slattern, a slattering woman.' Grose's Supp. (1790) has slatterkin. The word is formed from the verb to slatter, to waste, use wastefully, be untidy. 'Slatter, to waste; or rather, perhaps, not to make a proper and due use of anything; thus they say, take care, or you'll slatter it all away; also, to be negligent and slovenly;' Halliwell. 'Slatter, to wash in a careless way, throwing the water about;' Forby. Slatter is the frequentative (with the usual suffix -er) of prov. E. slat, to splash, to dash; cf. Icel. slætta, to slap, dab (liquids). Perhaps from slatt, as seen in Norw. slætta, str. verb (pt. t. slatt), to dangle, to hang loose (as clothes do); also, to be idle (Aasen); by-form of slenta, to slip, fall aside; see SLANT. Allied words are Dan. slat, a slop; slat, slatten, slattet, loose, flabby; slattes, to become slack; slatte, a slattern; Low G. slatje, a slattern. Also Icel. slattari, a tramp. Der. slattern-ly. Distinct from slut, but perhaps allied to it.

SLAUGHTER, a slaying, carnage, butchery. (Scand.) ME. slaghter, Pricke of Conscience, 3367; also slautir, spelt slawtyr in Prompt. Parv. The word is strictly Scand., from Icel. slátr, a slaughtering, butcher's meat, whence slátra, verb, to slaughter cattle. See Noreen, § 224. If the E. word had been uninfluenced by the Icel. word, it would have taken the form slaght or slought; in fact, the commonest forms in ME. are slagt, Rob. of Glouc. p. 56, l. 1286; slawhte, Gower, C. A. i. 348; directly from AS. slæht, Grein, ii. 455. β. The AS. slæht is cognate with Du. and Swed. slagt, G. schlacht. Teut. types **slah-toz*, m., **slah-tā*, f., a slaying (Fick, iii. 358); the Icel. slátr is a neut. sb., closely related, with the same sense. γ. All from the base SLAH, whence E. slay; see SLAY. Der. slaughter, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 302; slaughter-man, -house; slaughter-ous, Macb. v. 5. 14; slaughter-er.

SLAVE, a serf, one in bondage. (F.—L.—Gk.—Slavonic.) In Chaucer, Troil. iii. 391. In A Deuise of a Maske for the right honourable Viscount Mountacute, Gascoigne introduces the words slawe and slaueries; see Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 82, ll. 15, 20; i. 81, l. 13.—F. esclave, 'a slave;' Cot.—Late L. slavus, a Slavonian captive, a slave.—Late Gk. Σκλάβος, Έσκλαβήνος, a Slavonian, one of Slavonic race captured and made a bondman. 'From the Euxine to the Adriatic, in the state of captives or subjects . . . they [the Slavonians] overspread the land; and the national appellation of the Slaves has been degraded by chance or malice from the signification of glory to that of servitude;' Gibbon, Decline of the Roman Empire, c. 55. β. Gibbon here supposes slave to be allied to Russ. slava, glory, fame; but the true origin of Slavonian is unknown; Miklosich, p. 308. Der. slave, verb, K. Lear, iv. 1. 71; slav-er, slav-er-y, slav-ish, -ly, -ness; slave-trade; also en-slave.

SLAVER, to slubber. (Scand.) 'His mouthe slavers;' Pricke of Conscience, 784. Slaveryt [for slaveryth] is used to translate F. bave; Walter de Bibbesworth, l. 12, in Wright's Vocab. i. 143.—Icel. slafra, to slaver; cognate with Low G. slabbern, to slaver, slubber; see SLABBER. Der. slaver, sb., from Icel. slafir (also slefa), sb.; slaver-er. Doublet, slabber.

SLAY (1), to kill. (E.) Orig. to strike, smite. ME. sleen, slee, Chaucer, C. T. 663 (A 661); pt. t. sloun, slou (sleu in Tyrwhitt), id. 989 (A 987); pp. slain, id. 994 (A 992). AS. slēan (contracted form of **slahan*), to smite, slay; pt. t. slōh, slōg, pl. slōgon; pp. slegen; Grein, ii. 455, 456. + Du. slaan, pt. t. sloeg, pp. geslagen; Icel. slā; Dan. slaae; Swed. slå; Goth. slahan; G. schlagen; OHG. slahan. β. All from Teut. type **slah-an*, to smite; Fick, iii. 358. Cf. OIrish slig-im, I strike. Der. slay-er, ME. sle-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2007 (A 2005); also slaugh-t-er, q. v.; slay (2), q. v.; sledge-hammer, q. v.

SLAY (2), SLEY, a weaver's reed. (E.) 'Slay, an instrument belonging to a weaver's loom that has teeth like a comb;' Phillips. 'Slay, a weavers' tool;' Palsgrave.—AS. slæ; 'Pe[c]tica, slæ;' Voc. 262. 21; also slege, Voc. 188. 5; also (in the 8th century) 'Pectica, slahae,' id. 39. 19. So called from its striking or pressing the web tightly together.—AS. **slah-*, base of slēan, to strike, smite; see SLAY (1). 'Percusso feriunt insecti pectine dentes;' Ovid, Metam. vi. 58. Cf. Icel. slā, a bar, bolt. See Camb. Phil. Trans. 1899, p. 139 (231).

SLEAVE, SLEAVE-SILK, soft floss silk. (Scand.—G.) 'Ravell'd sleeve,' i. e. tangled loose silk, Macb. ii. 2. 37. See Nares and Halliwell.—Dan. dial. sløve, a knot, twist, tangle (in thread); Dan. dial. sløfgårn, yarn that runs into knots; Dan. sløife, a bow, a knot; EFries. sløve, sløfe, a slip-knot.—G. (dial.) schläufe, a slip-knot; with the same sense as G. schleife (Kluge). Cf. OHG. sloufan, causal of sloufan, to slip. See SLIP.

SLEAZY, poor, light, said of a material. (Silesia.) 'Such sleazy stuff;' Howell's Letters, vol. i. let. 1. 'Sleazie Holland, common people take to be all forrain linnen, which is sleight [slight] or ill wrought; whenas that only is properly Slesia or Silesia linnen cloth, which is made in, and comes from the Countrey Silesia in Germany;'

Blount's Gloss., ed. 1681. In fact, it is called Silesia still; see Silesia in C. D., where the name is said to be used in the United States; but it is used in England also.

SLED, SLEDGE, SLEIGH, a carriage made for sliding over snow or ice. (Du.) ME. slede, Prompt. Parv. Pl. sledis, Wyclif, 1 Chron. xx. 3; spelt sleddis in the later text. — MDu. sledde, a sledge; Du. slede. We also find Icel. sléði, Swed. släde, Dan. slæde. These forms are evidently from a Teut. root **sled*, whence would be formed the 2nd grade **slad*, and a weak grade **slud*, giving the strong verb **sledan*-, pt. t. **slad*, pp. **sludanoz*; quite distinct from E. slide, though a parallel formation and having a similar sense. Franck connects Du. slede with E. slide, without explaining the vowel. But it is obvious that the Norw. slodde, a kind of rude sledge (Larsen), cannot be related to the form slide. Cf. Irish and Gael. slaod, a sledge, from slaod, to slide. β. The different spellings may be thus explained. 1. The right form is sled. 2. The form sledge (perhaps from the pl. sleds) appears to be due to confusion with the commoner word sledge in the sense of 'hammer'; see Sledge-hammer. 3. The form sleigh is due to contraction by the loss of d. Thus the Norwegian and Low G. have both slede and slee; so also Du. sleekoets, a sleigh-coach, stands for sledekoets. The final gh is unmeaning.

SLEDGE-HAMMER, a mallet or heavy hammer. (E.) Properly sledge; sledge-hammer means 'hammer-hammer,' and shows reduplication. Sledge represents ME. slegge, Romans of Partenay, 3000; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vi. 199. AS. slegc (dat. slece), a heavy hammer; Voc. 448. 1. Lit. 'a smiter;' for **slag-jā*, fem.; from slag-, for slah-, base of AS. slēan, to smite, slay; see Slay (1). — Du. slegge, slei, a mallet; Swed. slägga, a sledge; Icel. sleggja. Cf. also G. schlägel, Du. slegel, a mallet; from the same verb. We even find G. schlag-hammer, with hammer suffixed, as in English.

SLEEK, SLICK, smooth, glossy, soft. (Scand.) 'I slecke, I make paper smothe with a sleke-stone, Je fais glissant;' Palsgrave. 'And if the cates skyn be slyk and gay;' Chaucer, C. T. (D 351), Ellesmere MS.; other readings slike, slyke. Tyrwhitt prints sleke, l. 5933. Spelt slike, adv., smoothly, Havelok, 1157. There is no AS. slic (see Napier); only AS. slician, to make smooth. — Icel. slikr, sleek, smooth; whence sliki-steinn, a fine whetstone (for polishing). Cf. MDu. sleyck, 'plaine, or even;' Hexham. β. The Du. slijk, Low G. slikk, G. schlick, grease, slime, mud, are closely related words; so also is the strong verb which appears in Low G. sliken (pt. t. sleek, pp. sleken), G. schleichen (pt. t. schlich, pp. geschlichen), OHG. slihhan, to slink, crawl, sneak, move slowly (as if through mire); see Slink. The Teut. type of the verb is **sleikan*-, pt. t. **slaik*, pp. **slikanoz*. The orig. sense of sleek is 'greasy,' like soft mud. In exactly the same way, from the base **slip*, we have Icel. sleipr, slippery (North E. slape), and slipa, to make smooth, to whet, Du. slippen, to polish, G. schleifen, to glide, to whet, polish.

SLEEP, to slumber, repose. (E.) ME. slepen, Chaucer, C. T. 10. Properly a strong verb, with pt. t. slēp, which has become slep in Prov. E., and occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 98. AS. slēpan, slēpan, pt. t. slēp; Grein, ii. 455. — Du. slapen; Goth. slēpan, pt. t. sai-slēp (with reduplication); G. schlafen; OHG. slāfan. β. In connexion with these is the sb. which appears as E. sleep, AS. slēp, Du. slaap, Goth. slēps, G. schlaf, OHG. slāf; of which the orig. sense is drowsiness, numbness, lethargy; as shown more clearly by the related adjective in Low G. slapp, G. schlaff, lax, loose, unbent, remiss, flabby. Cf. Russ. slabuii, weak, feeble, faint, slack, loose; also L. lābi, to glide; labāre, to totter. The Teut. type of the sb. is **slēpoz*, m.; and of the verb, **slēpan*-. Brugmann, i. §§ 200, 567. Der. a-sleep, q.v.; sleep-er, sleep-less, sleep-less-ly, sleep-less-ness; sleep-walk-er, sleep-walk-ing; sleep-y, sleep-i-ly, -ness.

SLEEPER, a block of wood on which rails rest. (E.) From the verb above. Cf. F. dormant, a sleeper, from dormir, to sleep. And see Coles.

SLEET, rain mingled with snow or hail. (E.) ME. sleet, Chaucer, C. T. 11562 (F 1250). The word is English; answering to OMer. **slēte*, AS. **slēte*, **slyte*, not found. Cf. EFries. slaitte, hail; Low G. sloten, pl., hailstones (Lübben); G. schlosse, hailstone. The E. word would result regularly from the Teut. type **slautjā*, orig. sense unknown. Cf. Norw. slūtr, sleet (Ross); from the related Teut. base **slūt*-, (appearing in the Du. sluiten, to close, shut; so that the orig. sense may have been 'blinding,' or closing the eyes).

SLEEVE, part of a garment, covering the arm. (E.) ME. sleeue, sleue (with u=v); Chaucer, C. T. 193. OMer. slēf; AS. slýf (for earlier slēf). 'On his twā slēfan,' in his two sleeves; Blickling Hom., p. 181, l. 17. 'On his twām slýfum'=in his two sleeves; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 376. Slēf-lēas, sleeveless; Voc. 151. 35. 'Manica, slýf;' id. 328. 13; pl. slýfa, id. 125. 5. We also find the verb slēfan, to put on, to clothe; Life of St. Guthlac, c. 16. The long e (ē) results from a mutation of AS. ēa=Teut. au, pointing back to a Teut. type **slaubjā*, f., from Teut. root **slēub*-, variant of **slēup*-, whence MHG. sloufe, a cover, allied to MHG. sloufen, to let slip, to cover. Cf. Goth. sluþan (pt. t. slauþ), to slip, creep into. It is thus allied to slip; from the slipping off and on of the sleeve, in dressing and undressing; compare the history of Smock. See Slip, and Slop (2). — MDu. sloove, 'a vaile, or a skinne; the turning up of anything;' whence slooven, 'to turne up ones sleeves, to cover ones head;' Hexham. Also MDu. sleve, 'a sleeve,' id.; G. schlaube, a husk, shell (Flügel). Der. sleeve-less, AS. slēflēas, as above. Horne Tooke explains a sleeveless errand (Troil. v. 4. 9) as meaning 'without a cover or pretence,' which is hardly intelligible; I suspect it to mean simply 'imperfect,' hence 'poor,' like a garment without sleeves; cf. AS. slēflēas, said of a garment. We find: 'sleevelesse wordes,' Usk, Test. of Love, ii. 8. 77; 'sleeveless rhymes,' Hall, Sat. iv. 1. 34; 'a sleeveles reson,' Rel. Antiq. i. 83; 'any sleevelesse excuse,' Lyly's Euphues, p. 114. In each instance it means 'imperfect, poor.'

SLEIGH, the same as Sled, q.v. Modern; Du. slee, for slede. The gh is unmeaning. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 273.

SLEIGHT, cunning, dexterity. (Scand.) ME. sleighte, Chaucer, C. T. 606 (A 604); sleizte, sleithe, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 98; sleizþe, Will. of Palerne, 2151; slehþe, Layamon, 17212 (later text, where the first text has liste, the E. word). — Icel. slægð (for slægð), slyness, cunning. Formed, with suffix -ð, from slægr (for slægr), sly; see Sly. Swed. slögd, mechanical art, dexterity (which is one sense of E. sleight); from slög, handy, dexterous, expert; Widegren. β. Thus sleight (formerly sleighth) is equivalent to sly-th, i.e. slyness. Der. sleight-of-hand. See Sloid.

SLENDER, thin, narrow, slight, feeble. (F.—OLow G.) ME. slendre, Chaucer, C. T. 589 (A 587), Richard Cœur de Lion, 3530. — OF. esclendre, 'sklendre,' Palsgrave, p. 323. — MDu. slinder, 'slender, or thinne;' Hexham. The same word is also used as a sb., meaning 'a water-snake;' whilst slinderen or slidderen means 'to dragge or to traine.' Allied to G. schlender, the train of a gown, an easy lounging walk; schlenderen, to saunter, loiter; also to Low G. slender, a long, easy, trailing gown, slindern, to slide on the ice, as children do in sport. β. Prob. nasalised derivatives from the base of the verb to slide; see Slide. But to some extent confused with Du. slenteren, to saunter along, and Swed. slinta, to slip, glance; see Slant and Slim. Der. slender-ly, -ness.

SLEUTH-HOUND. Explained under Slot (2).

SLICE, a thin, broad piece. (F.—OHG.) The sb. slice seems to be older than the verb. ME. slice, sclice, a thin piece, shiver, splinter. 'They braken speres to sclyces;' King Alisaunder, 3833. — OF. esclice, a shiver, splinter, broken piece of wood; from the verb eschicier, to slit, split, break (Godefroy). — OHG. **slizjan*, slizzen, related to slizan, to slit; cognate with E. Slit, q.v. Der. slice, verb; 'sliced into pieces,' Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxii. l. 298; slie-er.

SLICK, the same as Sleek, q.v.

SLIDE, to glide, slip along, fall. (E.) ME. sliden, slyden, Chaucer, C. T. 7958 (E 82); pt. t. slood, Wyclif, Lament. iii. 53, later text; pp. sliden, spelt slyden, ibid., earlier text. AS. slidan, pt. t. slād, pp. sliden; only found in compounds. The pt. t. æt-slād is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 512, l. 10; the pp. ā-sliden in the same, i. 492, l. 11. From the Teut. base SLEID, to slide (Fick, iii. 359); whence also AS. slide, a slip, slidor, slippery, Icel. slíðrar, fem. pl., a scabbard (into which a sword slides); G. schlitten, a sledge, schlittschuh, a skate (lit. slide-shoe); MDu. slinder, a water-snake, slinderen, slidderen, 'to dragge or to traine,' Hexham; &c. See Slender. β. Further related to Irish and Gael. slaod, to trail, Lithuan. slidus, slippery. Der. slide, sb., slid-er; also sled, sledge, or sleigh (under Sled); also slender, q.v.

SLIGHT, trifling, small, weak, slender. (OLow G.) ME. sligt, slygt. 'So smope, so smal, so seme slygt,' said of a fair young girl; Allit. Poems, A. 190. The orig. sense is even, flat, as a thing made smooth. — MDu. slicht, 'even, or plaine;' slecht, 'slight, simple, single, vile, or of little account;' slecht ende recht, 'simple and right, without deceit or guile;' Hexham. Thus the successive senses are flat or even, smooth, simple, guileless, vile; by a depreciation similar to that which changed the sense of silly from that of 'guileless' to that of 'half-witted.' The verb to slight was actually once used in the sense of 'to make smooth;' thus Hexham explains MDu. slichten by 'to slight, to make even or plaine.' — OLow G. sligt, even, smooth, simple, silly, poor, bad; Icel. sléttir, flat, smooth, slight, trivial, common; Dan. slet, flat, level, bad; Swed. slät, smooth, level, plain, wretched, worthless, slight; Goth. slaihts, smooth; Luke, iii. 5; G. schlecht, bad; OHG. sleht, smooth; G. schlicht, smooth, sleek, plain, homely. β. All from Teut. type **slēh-toz*, smooth. Of doubtful origin. Der. slight-ly, slight-ness; slight, verb, to consider as worthless.

SLIM, weak, slender, thin, slight. (Du.) Not in early use. Noticed in Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671, as being in common use in Lincolnshire. Halliwell has: 'Slim, distorted or worthless, sly, cunning, crafty, slender, thin, slight;,' also slam, tall and lean, the slope of a hill. The orig. sense was 'lax' or 'bending,' hence 'oblique,' or 'transverse;,' then sly, crafty, slight, slender (in the metaphorical sense of unsubstantial); and hence slender or slight in the common sense of those words. Thus Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy, says: 'that was a slim [slight, weak] excuse;,' Todd. Perhaps the earliest instance in which it approaches the modern sense is: 'A thin slim-guttled fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a henroost;,' L'Estrange [in Todd]. Perhaps the use of the word has been influenced by confusion with the (unrelated) word slender, which sounds somewhat like it. 'Slim, naughty, crafty, Lincolnsh.; also, slender;,' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735.—MDu. slim, 'awry, or byas-wise; craftie,' Hexham; [Dan. and Swed. slem, bad, vile, worthless; from German]; G. schlimm, bad, evil, sad, unwell; arch, cunning. Der. slim-ness.

SLIME, any glutinous substance, viscous mire, mucus. (E.) ME. slime, slyme, or slim (with long i); Gower, C. A. iii. 96; bk. vii. 338; spelt slim, Ancrén Riwe, p. 276, l. 18. AS. slim; as a various reading in Ps. lxxviii. 2 (Spelman).+Du. slim, phlegm, slime; Icel. slim; Swed. slem; Dan. slim, mucus; G. schleim. Cf. L. lima, a file; limare, to file smooth; and limus, mud. Brugmann, i. § 877. Allied to Lime (1) and Loam. Der. slim-y, slim-i-ness.

SLING, to fling, cast with a jerk, let swing. (Scand.) ME. slingen; pt. t. slang, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 132, l. 2; pp. slongen; Sir Percival, 672, in the Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell.—Icel. slyngva, slöngva, pt. t. slöng, slauga, pp. slunginn, to sling, fling, throw; MDan. slinge, to sling, cast, twist; Swed. dial. slinga (pt. t. slang), to sling. Cf. Dan. slynge, weak verb; Swed. slunga, weak verb.+G. schlingen, pt. t. schlang, pp. geschlungen, to wind, twist, entwine, sling. Teut. type **slengwan*; pt. t. **slang*. Allied, formally, to Lith. slinkti, to creep. Brugmann, i. § 424 (4). ¶ AS. slingan (rare), to creep, seems to be a variant of slinean (below). Der. sling, sb., King Alisaunder, 1191; sling-er. Also slang, q.v.

SLINK, to sneak, crawl away. (E.) 'That som of þew shall be riȝt feyn to sclynk away and hyde;,' Tale of Beryn, 3334. AS. slinean, Gen. vi. 7. A nasalised form of an AS. **slican*, to creep, not found, but cognate with the strong Low G. verb sliken (pt. t. sleek, pp. sleken) and the G. schleichen (pt. t. schlich, pp. geschlichen), to slink, crawl, creep, move slowly; see Sleek. Cf. Swed. dial. slinka (pt. t. slank), to hang loose, to slip. β. The AS. slinean was a strong verb; we still use slunk as the past tense; see Titus Andron. iv. 1. 63. Allied to Skt. laṅg, to limp, L. languere, to be languid. Perhaps allied to Sling.

SLIP, to creep or glide along, to slink, move out of place, escape; also, to cause to slide, omit, let loose. (E.) We have confused the strong (intransitive) and weak (transitive) forms; or rather, we have preserved only the weak verb, with pt. t. slipped, pp. slipped or slipt. The strong verb would have become **slipe*, pt. t. **slope*, pp. **slippen*, long disused; but Gower has him slipeth (used reflexively), riming with wipeth, C. A. ii. 347; bk. v. 6530. Gower also has he slipte (wrongly used intransitively), from the weak verb slippen; C. A. ii. 72; bk. iv. 2109; the pp. slipped (correctly used) is in Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, 244. ME. slippen, transitive weak verb, derived from an AS. strong verb **slipan* (not found; pt. t. **slāp*, pp. **slipen*), to slip, glide. The AS. adj. sliper, slippery, is from the weak grade of the pp.; it occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 92, l. 16. [It must further be remarked that there is another form of the verb, with a different root-vowel, occurring as AS. slūpan (pt. t. slēap, pp. slopan); Grein, ii. 457.] +Du. slippen (weak), to slip, escape; Dan. slippe (pt. t. slap), to let go, also to escape; Swed. slippa (weak), to get rid of, also to escape; OHG. slipfan, MHG. slipfen, to glide away; a weak verb, from OHG. slifan, G. schleifen, to slide, glance, also to grind, whet, polish (i.e. make slippery or smooth). In the last sense, to polish, we find also Du. slippen, Swed. slipa, Dan. slibe, Icel. slipa; the forms require careful arrangement. β. All these are from a Teut. base **slēip*-, to slip, glide. But the usual form of the base is **sleup*; whence Goth. sluipjan (pt. t. slauþ, pp. sluþans), to slip or creep into, 2 Tim. iii. 6; AS. slūpan, as above; Du. sluipen, to sneak; G. schlüpfen, to slip, glide. The base **sleup* corresponds to an Idg. base SLEUB, whence L. lūb-ricus, slippery; see Lubricate. Cf. Brugmann, i. §§ 553, 563. Der. slip, sb.; slip-knot, slip-shod; also slipp-er, a loose shoe easily slipped on, K. John, iv. 2. 197, called in AS. slype-scōh, a slip-shoe; Voc. 277. 29. Also slipp-er-y, adj., formed by adding -y (= AS. -ig) to ME. sliper (AS. sliper), slippery, which occurs, spelt slipper, as late as in Shak. Oth. ii. 1. 246, and Spenser, Shep. Kal., Nov. 153; slipper-i-ness. Also slope, q.v., sleeve, q.v., slops, q.v.

SLIT, to split, tear, rend, cut into strips. (E.) Just as we make slip do duty for two forms slip and slipe (see Slip), so we use slit in place of both slit and slite. ME. slitten, weak verb, Chaucer, C. T.

14402 (B 3674); from sliten, strong verb, whence the pp. slityn (with short i), Prompt. Parv. The latter is derived from AS. slitan, pt. t. slāt, pp. sliten (short i); Grein, ii. 456.+Icel. slita, pt. t. slait, pp. slitinn, to slit, rend; Dan. slide; Swed. slita, to tear, pull, wear; Du. slijden, to wear out, consume; OHG. slizan, G. schleissen, to slit, split; whence the weak verb schlitzen, to slit, slash, cleave. β. All from Teut. type **slēitan*-, pt. t. **slait*, pp. slitanoz. Der. slit, sb., AS. slite, Matt. ix. 16. Also slice, q.v.

SLIVER, a splinter, twig, small branch broken off, slice. (E.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 174. ME. sliver, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1013. Sliver is the dimin. of slive, just as shiver is of shive, and splinter of splint. Prov. E. slive, a slice, chip, from the verb slive, to cut or slice off; Halliwell. 'I slyve a . . floure from his braunche;,' Palsgrave. The verb slive is ME. sluven, to cleave, spelt slyven in Prompt. Parv.—AS. slifan (pt. t. slāf, pp. slifen), to cleave; as in tō-slāf, Voc. 406. 29. This verb appears to be exactly parallel to AS. slitan (pt. t. slāt, pp. sliten); see Slit.

SLOBBER, to sllobber, drivel, do carelessly. (E.) ME. sloberen (Stratmann). A variant of Slubber, q.v.

SLOE, a small sour wild plum. (E.) ME. slo, pl. slon (with long o), King Alisaunder, 4983. AS. slā, pl. slān. 'Moros, slān;' Voc. 269. 7. Also slāh, sing.; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 32.+Du. slee, formerly sleeu; Dan. slaaen; Swed. slän; G. schlehe; OHG. slēha. Teut. type **slaihā*. Fick compares it with Lithuan. slywa, a plum; Russ. sliva, a plum; the suffixes do not correspond. β. Sloe is 'the small astringent wild plum, so named from what we call setting the teeth on edge, which in other languages is conceived as blunting them; see Adelung;,' Wedgwood. Cf. MDu. sleeuw, 'sharpe or tart;,' slee or sleeuw, 'tender, slender, thinnor blunt;,' de sleeuwighedyt der tanden, 'the edgnesse or sowrenesse of the teeth;,' Hexham. The Du. sleeuw is the same word as E. slow; as if the sloe is the slow (i.e. tart) fruit. But the forms do not correspond (except in Dutch); and it can hardly be right. γ. The Russ. sliva seems to be related to L. lividus, blue; with reference to the colour; and sloe may be connected with livid likewise.

SLOGAN, a Highland war-cry. (Gaelic.) Englished from Gael. sluagh-ghairm, 'the signal for battle among the Highland clans.'—Gael. sluagh, a host, army (W. llu, OIrish sluag); and gairm, a call, outcry, from gairm, to call, cry out, crow as a cock. Cf. Irish gairm, W. garm, outcry; OIrish gair, W. gawr, clamour, allied to L. garrere, to prate. See Stokes-Fick, pp. 106, 320. The sense is 'cry of the host.'

SLOID, SLOYD, mechanical skill, esp. in wood-carving. (Swed.) Modern.—Swed. slöjd, sleight, skill; cognate with E. sleight, q.v.

SLOOP, a one-masted ship. (Du.—Low G.) 'Sloop, a small sea-vessel;,' Phillips, ed. 1706. Mentioned in Dampier, Voyages, an. 1680 (R.); and in Hexham.—Du. sloop; MDu. sloope, sloepken, 'a sloop, or a boate,' Hexham, ed. 1658. From Low G. sluip, slupe, a sloop; whence also F. chaloupe, whence E. shallop; see Shallop. The Low G. sb. is usually derived (as in the Bremen Wört.) from Low G. slupen, to glide along, orig. to slip; see Slip. Shallop seems to be older than sloop, as far as English usage is concerned. Doublet, shallop.

SLOP (1), a puddle, water or liquid carelessly spilt. (E.) ME. sloppe, a pool, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3923. AS. -sloppe, -slyppe, the sloppy droppings of a cow; occurring in cū-sloppe, a cow-slop (now cowslip), and oxan-slyppe, an ox-slop (now oxlip); Voc. 135. 26. We also find AS. slype, a viscid substance, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 18, l. 27, spelt slipe in the next line. β. From Teut. **slup*, AS. slop-, weaker grade of slūpan, to slip; see Slip. 'þā wearð heora heorte tō-slopan' = then was their heart dissolved, made faint; Joshua, v. 1. γ. Similarly, slop (2) is from a closely related verb. Perhaps slop, a pool, merely meant 'a slippery place,' a place slippery with wet and mire. Der. slop, verb, to spill water, esp. dirty water; slopp-y, slopp-i-ness. Also cow-slip, q.v., ox-(s)lip, q.v.

SLOP (2), a loose garment. (Scand.) Usually in the pl. slops, large loose trousers, 2 Hen. IV, i. 2. 34. ME. sloppe, Chaucer, C. T. 16101 (G 633). We find 'in stolum vel on oferslopum' = in stoles or over-slops, as a gloss to in stolis in the Northumbrian version of Luke, xx. 46. The word is Scand. rather than E., the AS. word being oferslype (dative case), Ælfric's Homilies, i. 456, l. 19.—Icel. sloppr, a slop, gown, loose trailing garment; whence yfirsloppr, an outer gown or over-slop.—Icel. slup-, weak grade of sleppa, to slip, a strong verb; so called from its looseness or its trailing on the ground. Cf. Du. slepen, to trail on the ground. Related to the AS. type **slipan* (?); see Slip. Cf. Streitberg, § 203.

SLOPE, an incline. (E.) 'Slope, or oblique;,' Minshew. ME. slope. 'For many times I have it seen That many have begiled been For trust that they have set in hope Which fell hem afterward a-slope; Rom. of the Rose, 4464. Here a-slope, lit. on the slope, means 'contrary to expectation,' or 'in a disappointing way.' It is the same idiom as when we talk of 'giving one the slip.' It is a derivative of the verb to slip; formed from the Teut. *slup- (in AS. slop-en, pp.), weaker grade of the verb appearing as AS. slūpan; see Slip. Thus a-slope is 'ready to slip;' and slope means an 'incline.' Der. slope, verb, Macb. iv. 1. 57; a-slope.

SLOT (1), a broad, flat wooden bar which holds together larger pieces, bolt of a door. (Du.) 'Still in use in the North, and applied to a bolt of almost any kind;' Halliwell. 'Slotte of a dore, locquet;' Palsgrave. Spelt slot, sloot; Prompt. Parv. — Du. slot, a lock (Sewel); de sloten van kisten, 'the locks of chests'; de sloten van huysen, 'the closures of houses'; Hexham. The Du. slot also means a castle. From Teut. *slut- (Du. slot-), weak stem of Teut. *slūtan- (Du. sluiten), to shut (pt. t. sloot, pp. gesloten). So also OFries. slot, from slūta, to shut; Low G. slot, from slūten. β. The Teut. type *slūtan-, to shut, appears in Du. sluiten; OFries. sluta; Low G. sluten; Swed. sluta (pt. t. slöt, pp. sluten); G. schliessen, MHG. sliezen, OHG. sliozan. γ. Cognate with L. claudere, to shut; from ✓SKLEUD; Brugmann, i. § 795 (2). See Close (1). ¶ Slot, with the sense of groove or slit, appears to be from Du. sloot, Low G. sloot, a ditch, trench, furrow; perhaps so called from its use as enclosing a field or piece of land; from sloot, 2nd grade of the same verb. Or perhaps the sense was affected by ME. slūten (pt. t. sloot), to slit.

SLOT (2), the track of a deer. (AF.—Scand.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — AF. esclot, the track of a deer (Godefroy). Modified from ME. slooth, slōth; also spelt sleuth, as in the derivative Lowland Sc. sleuth-hound (Jamieson). ME. sleuth, a track, Barbour's Bruce, vii. 21; whence sleuth-hund, sleuth-hund, slooth-hund, a hound for tracking deer, id. vi. 36, 484, 669. Also sloth, Cursor Mundi, 1254; Ormulum, 1194. — Icel. slōð, a track or trail in snow or the like; cf. slæða, to trail, slæður, a gown that trails on the ground. Swed. dial. slo, a track; prov. E. slood, a cart-rut.

SLOTHE (1), laziness, sluggishness. (E.) Lit. 'slowness.' ME. slothe, Chaucer, C. T. 15726 (G 258). For **slow-th*; formed directly from the adj. slow. In P. Plowman, B. v. 392, we find the form sleuthe, from AS. slēwð, sloth; from AS. slāw, slow (with mutation). Der. sloth, sb., an animal (below); sloth-ful, I Hen. VI, iii. 2. 7; sloth-ful-ly; sloth-ful-ness.

SLOTTH (2), a name sometimes given to the glutton (Gulo luscus); but usually to a S. American tardigrade edentate mammal that moves with difficulty on the ground. (E.) The same word as sloth (1) above. Prob. suggested by Span. perezoso, (1) slothful, (2) a sloth (Neuman, s. v. Sloth). Phillips (1706) has: 'Pigritia, slothfulness; also an American beast call'd a Sloth.'

SLOUCH, to have a clownish look or gait. (Scand.) Now a verb; but formerly also a sb. 'Slouch, a great, unwieldie, ill-fashioned man;' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Slouch, a great lubberly fellow, a meer country-bumpkin;' Phillips. The ch is for k; Levins has: 'Slouke, iners, ignarus.' Cf. also Lowl. Sc. sloatch, slotch, a lazy fellow. — Icel. slōkr, a slouching fellow; Norw. slōk, a lazy fellow; cf. sloka, to be sluggish (Aasen); also slōkje, the same as slōk (Ross); Swed. sloka, to hang down, droop, flag, slokig, hanging, slouching. — Icel. **slōk-*, 2nd grade of **slak-*, as in slakr, slack. See Slack. ¶ Perhaps influenced by OF. eslocher, eslochier, to loosen, also, to become loose (Godefroy); from L. ex, and G. locker, loose.

SLOUGH (1), a hollow place filled with mud, a mire. (E.) ME. slogh, slough, Chaucer, C. T. 7147, 14804 (D 1565, B 3988). AS. slōh (stem slōg); Kemble's A. S. Charters, 59, 123, 354, 554 (Leo). The formation of slough is precisely parallel to that of clough, which is related to the OHG. klīngo, with the same sense. In like manner, the AS. slōh is due to an older form **slonh*, corresponding to a Teut. base **slonx-*, for **slanx-*, from the strong verb which appears in the G. schling-en, to devour; so that the original sense was 'that which swallows up.' β. Similarly, G. schlund, a chasm, gulf, is derived from MHG. slinden, to devour, with a like sense; and Schmeller gives Bavar. schlung, with the same sense as G. schlund, i. e. a chasm; so also Bavar. schlunk = G. schlund; cf. Westphal. slenke, a ravine. The long o in slōh shows the loss of n. See Clough. And see schlingen in Kluge; where it appears to be doubtful if the sense 'to devour' is of early date.

SLOUGH (2), the cast-off skin of a snake; the dead part which separates from a sore. (Scand.) Pronounced sluf. Spelt slough, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 483; ed. Arber, p. 58. ME. slouh, slow, Pricke of Conscience, 520 (footnote), where it is used in the sense of caul or integument. 'Slughe, squama; slughe of eddyrs (snakes), exemie;' Cathol. Anglicum, p. 345; see the note. Spelt slughe, slohu, slouje, in the sense of skin of a snake; Cursor Mundi, 745. From its occurrence in these Northern poems we may presume that the word is Scandinavian. It answers in form to MDan. slug, a gap, opening, mouth, swallow; Dan. dial. slug, slough on an animal's horn. The Swed. dial. sluv, slough, is a different word.

β. [With the latter form sluv we may compare Low G. slu, sluwe, a husk, covering, the pod of a bean or pea, husk of a nut; answering to the Cleveland word slough, the skin of a gooseberry (Atkinson); MDu. sloove, 'a vaile or a skinne;' Hexham; cf. slooven, 'to cover ones head;' id.; G. schlaube (provincial), 'a shell, husk, slough.' The etymology of the latter set of forms is from the Teut. base **slēub*, noticed under Sleeve, q. v. The sense is 'that out of which a snake slips,' or a loose covering.] γ. But the E. slough and Jutland slug are allied to Dan. slug, gullet, sluge, to swallow; Norw. sluka, Low G. sluken, G. schlucken, to swallow, and, further, to G. schlauch, a skin, bag; MHG. slūch, a skin, bag. Cf. OIrish slucc-im, I swallow.

SLOVEN, a careless, lazy fellow. (Du.) Spelt sloven, slovin, in Palsgrave. 'Some sluggish *slovin*s, that slepe day and nyght;' Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 191. ME. sloveyn, Coventry Myst. p. 218. The suffix -eyn = F. -ain, from L. -ānus, as in ME. scriv-ein = OF. escriv-ain, from Late L. scrib-ānus; see Scrivener. This OF. suffix may have been added at first to give the word an adjectival force, which would soon be lost. — MDu. slof, sloef, 'a careless man, a sloven, or a nastie fellow,' Hexham; whence sloefachtiglick, 'negligent, or slovenly,' id. We also find the verb sloeven, 'to play the sloven;' id. Sewel gives Du. slof, careless; slof, sb., an old slipper, slof, sb., neglect, sloffen, to drabble with slippers. — Low G. sluf, slovenly; sluffen, sluffern, to be careless; sluffen, to go about in slippers, sluffen, slippers. Der. sloven-ly, sloven-li-ness.

SLOW, tardy, late, not ready. (E.) ME. slow, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 26; slaw, Prompt. Parv. (where it has the sense of blunt, or dull of edge). AS. slāw, Matt. xxv. 26. — Du. sluuw; Icel. slær, sljör; OSax. slēu; OHG. slēo, blunt, dull, lukewarm. Teut. type **slaiwoz*, blunt, weak, slow; Fick, iii. 358. Some think it allied to L. lænus, Russ. lievui, Gk. λαίος, left (of the hand); which is doubtful. Der. slow-ly, slow-ness. Also slow-th (for slow-th), q. v.

SLOW-WORM, a kind of snake. (E.) The allied words show that it cannot mean 'slow worm,' but the sense is rather 'slayer' or 'striker,' from its (supposed) deadly sting. Indeed, the Swedish word is equivalent to an E. form worm-slow, i. e. 'worm-striker' or stinging serpent, showing clearly that the word is compounded of two substantives. It was (and still is) supposed to be very poisonous. I remember an old rime: 'If the adder could hear, and the blind-worm see, Neither man nor beast would ever go free.' But it is quite harmless. Lowl. Sc. slayworm. ME. slowerme, Voc. 571. 33; slowurme, id. 766. 15. AS. slā-wyrm. We find: 'Stellio, slā-wyrm;' Voc. 122. 15; 321. 26. Here slā is (I suppose) contracted from slah-, from **slahan*, usually slēan, to smite; the sb. slag-a, a striker, occurs in Exod. xxii. 2; see Slay. — Swed. slå, usually ormslå, a blindworm (where orm = E. worm); from slå, to strike (Rietz, p. 618, where the dialectal form slo is given); Norweg. slo, a blindworm; also called ormslo (Aasen); from slaa, to strike. Cf. Icel. slægr, kicking, vicious (as a horse); from slā, to strike. (Doubtful.) ¶ Quite distinct from Swed. slō, blunt, dull, the cognate form with slow.

SLOYD, the same as Sloid, q. v.

SLUBBER, to do carelessly, to sully. (Scand.) 'I slubber, I fyle [defile] a thyng;' Palsgrave. And see Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 8. 39; Oth. i. 3. 227. — Dan. slubbre, to slubber; Swed. dial. slubbra, to be disorderly, to slubber, sllobber with the lips, a frequentative verb with suffix -ra (for -era) from slubba, to mix up liquids in a slovenly way, to be careless (Rietz). — Du. slobberen, 'to slap, to sup up;' Sewel; Low G. slubbern, to lap, sip. From the weak grade (**slub-*) of **slab*-in slabber; see Slabber.

SLUDGE, soft, greasy mud. (E.) ME. sluche; Destr. of Troy, l. 12529; apparently a corrupt form of sliche, with the same sense, spelt sliche, id. l. 13547; prov. E. slutch, also sleeche, sletch, slitch. North E. slik, Barbour, Bruce, xiii. 352. An E. word; cognate with North Fries. slick, EFries. slik, slime. — Du. slijck, prov. G. schlick, grease, Westphal. slick. See Sleek. ¶ The u may be due to prov. E. slud, mud, mire, Icel. sludda, a clot of mucus.

SLUG, to be inactive. (Scand.) 'To slug-in slouth;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 23. ME. sluggen, Prompt. Parv.; where we also find slugge, adj., slothful; sluggy, adj., the same; sluggydnesse, slugnes, sloth. Sluggi, adj., Ancrén Riwele, p. 258. 'I slogge, I waxe slowe, or draw behind;' Palsgrave. The verb is now obsolete. — Dan. slug, voiced form of sluk, appearing in slugöret, sluköret, with drooping ears; Swed. dial. slogga, to be sluggish; allied to Norweg. sloka, to go heavily, to slouch, Swed. sloka, to hang down, droop. Cf. Icel. slōkr, a slouching fellow; and see Slouch. Note also Low G. slukkern, slakkern, to totter, slukk, melancholy, downcast; from the weak grade of slakk, slack. See Slack. Der. slugg-ish, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 10; slugg-ish-ly, slugg-ish-ness. Also slugg-ard, Rich. III, v. 3. 225, with the F. suffix -ard (=OHG. -hart, cognate with E. hard); slugg-ard-y, ME. slogardie, Chaucer, C. T. 1044 (A 1042). Also slug, sb.

SLUG-HORN. (C.) An absurd perversion, by Chatterton (Battle of Hastings, pt. ii. st. 10) and Browning (Childe Roland of Lowl. Sc. slogorne, in G. Douglas, tr. of Æneid, bk. vii. c. xi. l. 87. And slogorne is a bad spelling of slogan, a battle-cry; see Slogan. Hence a 'slug-horn' is not a horn, but a cry; L. 'tessera'.

SLUICE, a sliding gate in a frame for shutting off, or letting out, water; a floodgate. (F.—L.) In Shak. Venus, 956; Lucrece, 1076. ME. scluse, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 255. —OF. escluse, 'a sluice, floodgate'; Cot. Cf. Span. esclusa, a sluice, floodgate. —Late L. exclūsa, a floodgate; lit. 'shut off (water)'; Hist. Mon. de Abingdon, ii. 92. —L. exclūsa, fem. of exclūsus, pp. of exclūdere, to shut out; see Exclude.

SLUMBER, to sleep lightly, repose. (E.) The b (after m) is excrement. ME. slumeren, Bestiary, 576; slumberen, slobren, P. Plowman, A. prol. 10, B. prol. 10. Frequentative form of ME. slumen, to slumber, Layamon, 17995, 18408, 32058. And this verb is from the sb. slume, slumber, spelt sloombe in Allit. Poems, C. 186. AS. slūma, sb., slumber; Grein, ii. 457. This is formed, with the substantival suffix -ma, from a Teut. base **sleu-*, to be silent; cf. Goth. slawan, to be silent, from the 2nd grade **slau-*. +Du. sluimeren; Dan. slumre, frequentative of slumme, to slumber; Swed. slumra, verb; slummer, sb.; G. schlummern, verb; schlummer, sb. Der. slumber, sb., slumber-er, slumber-ous.

SLUMP, a sudden fall, failure in stocks. (E.) From prov. E. slump, to fall suddenly, esp. into a ditch. Cf. Swed. and Dan. slump, a chance, an accident, Low G. slump. Of imitative origin; cf. Norw. slump, the noise made by plunging into water. See Slip.

SLUMS, dirty back-streets. (E.) Prob. allied to prov. E. slump, a muddy place, and (by gradation) to prov. E. slamp, wet, Low G. slam, mire (Lübben); Dan. and Swed. slam, from G. schlamm, mire. Cf. Bavarian schlumpen, to be dirty; prov. E. slammock, a slattern; Low G. slummerke, a slattern (Schambach).

SLUR, to soil, contaminate, reproach, pass over lightly with slight notice. (MDu.) 'With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes'; Dryden (in Todd). 'They impudently slur the gospel'; Cudworth, Sermons, p. 73 (Todd). 'Without some fingering trick or slur'; Butler, Misc. Thoughts; Works, ed. Bell, iii. 176. Cf. ME. sloor, slore, mud, clay, Prompt. Parv.; whence slooryyd, muddy, id. Prov. E. slur, thin washy mud; Halliwell, Forby. The orig. sense is 'to trail', or draggle; hence, to pass over in a sliding or slight way, also, to trail in dirt, to contaminate. —MDu. sleuren, slooren, to drag, trail, Du. sleuren, to trail; cf. MDu. sloorigh, 'filthie', Hexham. Also Low G. slüren, slören, to draggle, Swed. dial. slöra, to be negligent; Norw. slöra, to be negligent, to sully; EFries. sluren, slüren, to go about carelessly and noisily. From a base **sleu-*; perhaps the same as that in Slumber (Franck). Der. slur, sb.

SLUSH, mire, mud. (Scand.) Perhaps from MDan. slus, (1) sleet; (2) mud (Kalkar); Dan. dial. sluus, sleet. Or rather from Norw. slusk, mud, dirty roads or weather (Ross); related by gradation to Swed. slask, sloppiness, wet weather, slaska, to splash, to dabble in water; cf. prov. E. slosh, slush; slash, to splash.

SLUT, a slovenly woman, slattern. (Scand.) ME. slutte, Coventry Plays, 218 (Stratmann); and in Palsgrave. 'Slutte, Cenosis, Cenosa'; Prompt. Parv. Slutte occurs also in Hoccleve, Letter of Cupide; st. 34; l. 237. Hence sluttish, Chaucer, C. T. 16104 (G. 636). —Swed. dial. slåta, an idle woman, slut, slåter, an idler; Norweg. slott, an idler. Cf. Icel. slota, to droop, Swed. dial. slota, to be lazy, Norweg. sluta, to droop; allied to Dan. slat, loose, flabby, slatte, a slattern (Ferrall). β. The root-verb appears in Norweg. sletta (pt. t. slatt, pp. slottet), to dangle, hang loose like clothes, to drift, to idle about, be lazy (Aasen); and tt represents nt. Cf. Swed. dial. slinta (pt. t. slant, pp. sluntit), to slide, glide, slip aside, with its derivatives slanta, to be idle, and slunt, 'a lubber, lazy sturdy fellow', Widegren. γ. Thus E. slattern and Dan. slatte may be referred to slatt, slant, 2nd grade of sletta, slenta (whence also Icel. slentr, sloth); while E. slut, Norw. slott, may be referred to slott-, slunt-, weak grade of the same; cf. Low G. sluntje, a slut. All from the Teut. str. vb. **slentan-*, to slip aside, pt. t. **slant*, pp. **sluntanoz*. See Slant. Der. slutt-ish, -ly, -ness.

SLY, cunning, wily. (Scand.) ME. sleigh, Chaucer, C. T. 3201; sley, Havelok, 1084; sleh, Ormulum, 13498. —Icel. slagr (for slægr), sly, cunning; Swed. slög, cunning, dexterous. The Icel. slagr is from a Teut. type **slög-joz* (Noreen, § 360), where **slög-* may represent the 2nd grade of Teut. **slahan-*, to strike; see Slay. 'From the use of a hammer being taken as the type of a handicraft'; Wedgwood; and see Fick, iii. 358, who adduces G. verschlagen, cunning, crafty, subtle, sly, from the same root. ¶ But Swed. slug, cunning, Dan. slu, Du. sluw, G. schlau, sly, are unrelated. Der. sli-ly, sly-ness. Also sleight (i. e. sly-th), q. v.

SMACK (1), taste, flavour, savour. (E.) ME. smak, a taste; Prompt. Parv. AS. smæc, taste; Grein, ii. 457; whence the verb smecgan, smæccan, to taste. 'Gusto, ic gesmecege', Voc. 109. 11; ic smæcce, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 166, l. 6. +MDu. smæck, 'tast, smæck, or savour'; smæcken, 'to savour', Hexham; Du. smaken, to taste; [Dan. smag, taste, smage, to taste, Swed. smak, taste, smaka, to taste, from Low G. smakk, taste;] G. geschmack, taste, schmecken, to taste. Der. smack, verb.

SMACK (2), a sounding blow. (Scand.) We find smack, sb., a loud kiss, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 180. But the word does not seem to be at all old, and its supposed connexion with Smack (1) is disproved by the forms found. It has been confused with it, but is quite distinct. It seems to be of imitative origin, and may be an E. word, unless borrowed from Scandinavian. β. The related words are Swed. smacka, to smack [distinct from smaka, to taste]; Swed. dial. smakka, to throw down noisily, smäkk, a light quick blow with the flat hand, smäkka, to hit smartly; Dan. smække, to slam, bang [distinct from smage, to taste], smæk, a smack, rap [distinct from smag, taste]. Also Low G. smakken, to smack the lips [distinct from smekken, to taste]; MDu. smacken, Du. smakken, to cast on the ground, fling, throw [distinct from Du. smaken, to taste]; Du. smak, a loud noise. And see Smash. Apparently of imitative origin, as seen in Du. smak, Dan. smæk; allied to Lith. smog-ti, to strike, smack; smag-ōti, to strike with a whip. Cf. knack, crack. Der. smack, verb; cf. smatt-er, q. v., smash, q. v.

SMACK (3), a fishing-boat. (Du.) In Sewell's Du. Dict. Doubtless borrowed from Dutch, like hoy, skipper, boom, yacht, &c. —MDu. smacke, 'a kind of a long ship or boate', Hexham; smak, 'a hoy, smack', Sewel, ed. 1754. +Low G. smakk, a smack. β. Generally supposed to be a corruption for snack, allied to snake; cf. AS. snacc, a smack, small vessel, A. S. Chron. an. 1066, in the Laud MS., ed. Thorpe, p. 337; Icel. snekkja, a kind of sailing-ship, so called from its snake-like movement in the water. So also Swed. snäcka, Dan. snekke (or snække). ¶ For the interchange of sm- and sn-, see Smatter.

SMALL, little, unimportant. (E.) ME. smal; pl. smale, Chaucer, C. T. 9. AS. smæl, small, thin; Grein, ii. 457. +Du. smal, and Swed. smal, narrow, thin; Goth. smals, small; G. schmal, narrow, thin, slim. Teut. type **smaloz*. Further allied to Icel. smali, small cattle, sheep; Gk. μῆλον, a sheep; Russ. maluii, small. ¶ We also find Icel. smār, Dan. smaa, Swed. små, OHG. smāhi, small. Der. small-ness; small-pox (see Pox); small-age, q. v.

SMALLAGE, celery. (Hybrid; E. and F.—L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'Smallage, a former name of the celery, meaning the small ache or parsley, as compared with the great parsley, olus atrum'. See Turner's Nomenclator, A. D. 1548, and Gerarde's Herbal; Prior, Popular Names of British Plants. ME. smalege, Voc. 711. 15; smalache, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 94. —AS. smæl, small (see above); and F. ache, parsley, from L. apium, parsley.

SMALT, glass tinged of a deep blue, used as a pigment. (Ital.—OHG.) 'Smalt, a kind of blew powder-colour, us'd in painting; blue enamel'; Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —Ital. smalto, 'amell [enamel] for goldsmiths', Florio; allied to smalzo, butter. —Low G. smalt (Lübben), dial. form of G. schmalz, fat, butter; OHG. **smalzi*, smelzi, smalt. From the 2nd grade (smalz) of OHG. smelzan, str. vb., to become liquid; whence also OHG. smelzen, G. schmelzen, weak vb., to smelt. See Smelt (1). ¶ The Du. smalt (in the present sense) is borrowed from Italian. See Weigand.

SMARAGDUS, a precious stone, emerald. (L.—Gk.—Skt.—Semitic.) Also smaragd; ME. smaragde, An O. E. Miscellany, p. 98, l. 174. —L. smaragdus. —Gk. σμάραγδος, an emerald; also found in the form μάραγδος, which is from Skt. marakata(m), marakta(m), an emerald. Hence (says Uhlenbek) a Prakrit agmā maragadō, lit. emerald stone (from Skt. agmā, a stone); whence Gk. **σμάμαγδος*, shortened to σμάραγδος by loss of -μα- (repeated). Further, the Skt. marakata(m) is from Semitic **bāraqt*, as in Heb. bāreqet, an emerald, from bāraq, to flash. See Schade, OHG. Dict., p. 1430. See Emerald. Doublet, emerald.

SMART, to feel a pain, to be punished. (E.) ME. smerten, Havelok, 2647; spelt smeorten, Ancrén Riwle, p. 238, last line. Once a strong verb; the pt. t. smeart occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 21, l. 27. AS. smeortan (Toller). The AS. pt. t. would be **smeart*, and the pp. **smorten*. +Du. smarten, to give pain; smart, pain; Dan. smerte, vb. and sb.; Swed. smärta, vb. and sb.; OHG. smertzan, sometimes used as a strong verb (pt. t. smarz), G. schmerzen, to smart; OHG. smertza, G. schmerz, smart, pain. +L. mordere (with lost initial s), to bite, pain, sting; Skt. mṛd, to rub, grind, crush. β. All from ✓SMERD; see Fick, i. 836. Whence also Gk.

σμεδαλός, terrible. See Mordacity. Der. smart, sb., ME. smert, Chaucer, C. T. 3811 (A 3813); also smart, adj., ME. smerte, i. e. painful, Havelok, 2055. The use of the adjective has been extended to mean pungent, brisk, acute, lively, witty. Hence smart-ly, smart-ness.

SMASH, to crush, break in pieces. (E.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson. According to Webster, it is used by Burke. It is well known in the North (see Brockett and Jamieson), and is clearly a dialectal word transferred to more polite speech. Prob. due to L. mash, to mix up; by prefixing s-, intensive prefix, from OF. es-, L. ex. And prob. influenced by prov. E. smatter, in the sense 'to smash.' See Smattering. ¶ We may perhaps also notice the prov. Swed. smiska, to slap, occurring in the very sense of 'to smash glass' or to smash a window-pane, which is the commonest use of the word in ordinary E. conversation. Still nearer is the Norw. smaska, to smash; sla i smask, to break to bits (Ross). Cf. Smack (2).

SMATTERING, a superficial knowledge. (Scand.) From the old verb to smatter, to have a slight knowledge of; the orig. sense was 'to make a noise'; also, 'to prate.' 'I smatter of a thyng, I have lytell knowledge in it;' Palsgrave. 'For I abhorre to smatter Of one so deuyllyshe a matter;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 711. ME. smateren, to make a noise; Songs and Carols, ed. Wright, no. lxxii (Stratmann).—Swed. smattra, to clatter, to crackle. +G. schmettern, to smash, to resound. From a repetition of the imitative sound smat; cf. Smack (2). Cf. MHG. smetzen, to prattle. [Parallel to prat-ile, chat-ier. Note also Swed. snattra, Dan. snadre, to prattle; Swed. snakka, Dan. snakke, to prate, G. schneckchen.]

SMEAR, to daub with something greasy or sticky. (E.) ME. smerien, smeren, Ormulum, 994; also smirien; also smurien, Ancren Riwe, p. 372, l. 6. AS. smerian, Ps. xlv. 9; smirian, Mark, xvi. 1. A weak verb, from the sb. smeru, fat, Levit. viii. 25, whence ME. smere, fat, fatness, Genesis and Exodus, 1573. +Du. smeren, to grease, from smeer, fat; Icel. smyrja, to anoint, from smjör, smjör, grease; Dan. smøre, from smör, sb.; Swed. smörja, from smör, sb.; G. schmieren, from schmeer, sb., OHG. smero. β. The general Teut. form of the sb. is **smeruom*, n., fat, grease; Fick, iii. 356; allied to which are Goth. smairthr, fatness, smarna, dung. All from a base SMER; cf. Lithuan. smarsas, fat; Gk. μύρον, an unguent; OIrish smir, marrow; W. mër, marrow. Der. smear, sb., at present signifying the result of smearing, and a derivative of the verb; not in the old sense of 'grease.' And see smir-ch.

SMELL, an odour. (E.) ME. smel, Chaucer, C. T. 2429 (A 2427), Ancren Riwe, p. 104, l. 16; also smul, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 99, l. 1. Not found in AS., but prob. a true Eng. word. Allied to Du. smeulen, 'to smoke hiddenly,' i. e. to smoulder; EFries. smälen, Low G. smelen, to smoulder. β. The idea is evidently taken from the vapour given off by smouldering wood. See further under Smoulder. Der. smell, verb, ME. smellen, Chaucer, C. T. 3691, smullen, O. Eng. Hom. ii. 35, l. 3.

SMELT (1), to fuse ore. (Scand.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; but not noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671. I have little doubt that the word is really Swedish, as Sweden was the chief place for smelting iron ore, and a great deal of iron is still found there; (cf. Slag).—Dan. smelte, to fuse, smelt; Swed. smälta, to smelt, run, liquefy; smälta malm, to smelt ore; Widegren. +MDu. smiltēn, smelten, 'to melt, mollify, make liquid, or to found;' Hexham. (Note here the use of found where we should now say smelt). G. schmelzen, OHG. smalzjan, to smelt. β. All these are secondary or weak verbs, connected with an older strong verb appearing in the Swed. smälta, to melt, i. e. to become liquid, for which Rietz gives the pt. t. smalt and supine smultid, and cites OSwed. smälta (pt. t. smalt, pp. smultin). It also appears in G. schmelzen (pt. t. schmolz), to melt, dissolve, become liquid; Westphal. smelten (pt. t. smalt). γ. From the Teut. str. vb. **smeltan-* (pt. t. **smalt*, pp. **smultanoz*); whence also MDu. smalt, 'grease or melted butter'; smalts, smalsch, 'liquid, soft, or fatt' (Hexham); OHG. smalz, fat, grease; see Smalt. δ. We may also compare Gk. μέλδομαι, I become liquid; Gk. μέλδεν, to melt, render fluid. Brugmann, i. § 475. See Melt. Der. smalt, q. v.; enamel, q. v. And see mute (2).

SMELT (2), a kind of fish. (E.) ME. smelt, Prompt. Parv. AS. smelt. 'Sardina, smelt,' in a list of fish; Voc. 262. 4; 'Sardas, smeltas,' id. 45. 3. +Dan. smelt; Norweg. smelta (1), a mass, lump; (2) the name of various kinds of small fish, as Gadus minutus, also a small whiting. β. The name prob. means 'smooth'; cf. AS. smœolt, smylt, serene, smooth (of the sea), orig. liquid; from the verb to smelt; see Smelt (1). Also prov. E. smelt, a smooth spot on water (as caused by oil); smolt, smooth, shining, polished; smout (for smolt), the fry of salmon. The sand-smelt is also called silver-sides (C. D.). See Smolt.

SMEW, a small diving-bird. (E.) Also called smeë (E. D. D.), and smeeth or smeath. Drayton has 'the smeath;' Polyolbion, song 25, l. 67. [We find also EFries. smēnt, Du. smient, smēw. The Du. smient is explained as 'small duck,' from ODu. **smēhi anud*, small duck; where smēhi is cognate with OHG. smāhi, Icel. smār, small; and **anud* (**anid*) is cognate with AS. ened, G. ente, duck. Cf. G. schmalente, small wild-duck.] But smeeth resembles AS. smēde, smooth; and smeë may be the prov. E. smeë, smooth.

SMILE, to laugh slightly, express joy by the countenance. (Scand.) ME. smilen, Chaucer, C. T. 4044 (A 4046); Will. of Palerne, 991. Not a very old word in E.—Swed. smila, to smirk, smile, fawn, simper; Dan. smile. +MHG. smielen, smieren, smiren, to smile; L. mīrari, to wonder at; mīrus, wonderful; cf. also Gk. μειδάω, I smile; Skt. smi, to smile; Russ. smiekh, a laugh. (✓SMEI.) Der. smil-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2001 (A 1999); smile, sb., St. Brandan, l. 80; see smir-k.

SMIRCH, to besmear, dirty. (E.) 'And with a kind of umber smirch my face;' As You Like It, i. 3. 114. Allied to the old word smore. 'I smore ones face with any grease or soute [soot], or such lyke, le barbouille;' Palsgrave. And since smore is related to smear, it is clear that smirch (palatalised form of smir-k) is an extension from ME. smeren, to smear; see Smear.

SMIRK, to smile affectedly, smile, simper. (E.) ME. smirken; St. Katharine, 356. AS. smercian, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxiv. § 12 (lib. iii. pr. 11). Cf. ONorthumb. smerdon, 'deridebant'; Matt. ix. 24; MHG. smieren, to smile; see Smile. Der. smirk, sb.; also obsolete adj. smirk, trim, neat, Spenser, Shep. Kal., Feb. l. 72.

SMITE, to strike, beat, kill. (E.) ME. smiten, pt. t. smat, smot, pp. smiten. The pt. t. is spelt smoot, Wyclif, Luke, xxii. 50; with pl. smytēn (= smūten), id. xxiii. 48. AS. smītan, pt. t. smāt, pp. smīten; Grein, ii. 458. +Du. smijten; MSwed. smīta, to smite; Dan. smide, to fling; G. schmeissen, to smite, fling, cast; OHG. smīzan, to throw, to stroke, to smear. Cf. Goth. bismitan, to anoint, besmear, John, ix. 11. β. The orig. sense would appear to be 'to rub' or smear over, a sense which actually appears in the OHG. and Gothic; and even in AS. this sense is the usual one; note MSwed. smeta, to smear (Ihre), Icel. smīta, to steam from being fat or oiled. The connexion between 'to rub' and 'to smite' is curious, but the former sense is satirical; we had the phrase 'to rub down with an oaken towel,' i. e. to cudgel; and, in the Romance of Partenay, l. 5653, a certain king is said to have been 'so well anoynted' that he had not a whole piece of clothing left upon him; the orig. French text says that he was bien oingt. Der. smit-er.

SMITH, a worker in metals. (E.) ME. smith, Chaucer, C. T. 2027. AS. smið; Grein, ii. 457. +Du. smid; Icel. smiðr; Dan. and Swed. smed; G. schmied; MHG. smit, smid; Goth. -smiþa, in comp. aiza-smiþa, copper-smith. β. All from the Teut. type **smiþoz*, a smith; Fick, iii. 357. [It was once usual to explain this (after the method of Horne Tooke, which is known to be wrong) as he that smiteth, from 'the sturdy blows that he smites upon the anvil;' Trench, Study of Words. But there is no support for this notion to be had from comparative philology.] γ. Cf. further Icel. smið, smith's work; Du. smijdig, G. ge-schmeidig, malleable (with ī). From the obs. Teut. str. vb. **smiþan-*, pt. t. **smaith*, pp. **smidanoz*, to forge, only preserved in Swed. dial. smida, to forge (pt. t. smied, pp. smiden), Rietz; and in OSwed. smīþa, to forge (Noreen). Hence, as weak verbs, Swed. smida, Dan. smede, to forge. Cf. also OHG. smīda, metal, Gk. σμί-λη, a graver's tool. (✓SMEI.) Brugmann, i. § 849. Der. smith-y, ME. smiðde, Ancren Riwe, p. 284, l. 24, AS. smiðde, Voc. 141. 22; Icel. smiðja. Also gold-smith, silver-smith; &c.

SMOCK, a shirt for a woman. (E.) ME. smok, Chaucer, C. T. 3238. AS. smoc. 'Colobium, smoc vel syrc [sark]; Voc. 125. 1. For smocc; Teut. type **smugnoz*; and so called because 'crept into;' from **smug*, weak grade of **smueg*, to creep; cf. smogen, pp. of the strong verb smūgan, occurring in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxiv. § 1 (lib. iii. pr. 2). Cf. Shetland smook, 'to draw on, as a glove or a stocking;' Edmondston. +Icel. smokkr, a smock; allied to smoginn, pp. of smjūga, 'to creep through a hole, to put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through.' Cf. MSwed. smog, a round hole for the head; Ihre. Also Icel. smeygja, to slip off one's neck, causal of smjūga; OFries. in-smuge, sb., a creeping into. See further under Smug and Smuggle. Brugmann, i. § 899 (1).

SMOKE, vapour from a burning body, esp. wood or coal. (E.) ME. smoke, Chaucer, C. T. 5860 (D 278). AS. smoca (rare). 'Pone wīacan smocan wāces flæscas' = the warm smoke of weak flax; Be Dōmes Dæge, ed. Lumby, l. 51. Cf. AS. smoc-, stem of smocen, pp. of the strong verb smēocan (pt. t. smēac), to smoke, reek, Matt. xii. 20. [Hence also the various forms of the sb., such as smēac, smȳc; the latter occurs in Ælfred's Homilies, ii. 202, l. 4 from bottom. The secondary verb smocigan (derived from the sb. smoca) occurs on the same page, l. 24.] +Du. smook, sb.; Dan. smøg, sb.; smøge, weak verb, to smoke; G. schmauch, smoke. β. All from a Teut. str. vb. **smek-an-*, pt. t. **smauk*, pp. **smukanoz*. Cf. Lith. smaug-iu,

I choke; allied to Gk. σμήχειν (2 aor. ἐ-σμήγην), to burn slowly in a smouldering fire. Brugmann, i. § 849. Der. smoke, vb., AS. smoci-gan, as above; smok-er, smok-y, smok-i-ness.

SMOLT, a salmon in its second year, when it has assumed its silvery scales. (E.) From AS. smolt, serene, gentle; the prov. E. smolt not only means fair, serene, but also smooth, shining, and polished. See Smelt.

SMOOTH, having an even surface. (E.) ME. smothe, Rom. of the Rose, 542; also common in the form smethe, due to vowel-change from ō to æ (= ē), Rob. of Glouc. p. 424, l. 8781; Pricke of Conscience, 6349. AS. smēde, Luke, iii. 5, where the Northumb. versions have smoede; cf. 'Aspera, unsmōde,' Voc. 350. 29; un-smōdi, Corpus Gloss., 232. The preservation of the (older) vowel ō in mod. E. is remarkable. β. The form smōde, with long o, shows that (as in other, tooth, goose) an n has been lost; the form of the base is **smonth-*, for an older form **smanth-*, corresponding to an Idg. base **smant-*. γ. This Idg. base is remarkably exemplified in the G. Schmant (Bavar. schmand), a dialectal word corresponding to late MHG. smant, cream; allied to Bohem. smetana, cream; Miklosich, p. 189. Cf. Skt. manthaya-, butter; from manth, math, to churn. The Hamburg smōden, to smoothe (Richey) may be related. Der. smooth, verb, from the adj.; cf. AS. smēdian, Voc. 130. 36; smooth-ly; smooth-ness, AS. smēdnys, Voc. 177. 5.

SMOTHER, a suffocating smoke, thick stifling dust. (E.) Smother stands for smother, having lost an r, which was retained even in the 14th century. ME. smother; spelt smorpre, smorpur, P. Plowman, C. xx. 303, 305 (some MSS. have smolder, id. B. xvii. 321). Smor-ther is 'that which stifles'; formed, with the suffix -ther (Idg. -ter) of the agent, from AS. smor-ian, to choke, stifle, Matt. xiii. 7 (Rushworth MS.), preserved in Lowland Sc. smoor, to stifle; see Burns, Brigs of Ayr, l. 33. β. Cognate with AS. smorian are Du. smoren, to suffocate, stifle, stew, and G. schmoren, to stew. Cf. MDu. smoor, 'smother, vapour, or fume' (Hexham); Du. smeyren, to smother. Apparently from a root **smeur*, from an older root SMEU; see Smoulder, Smoke. Der. smother, verb, ME. smotheren, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251, l. 7. And see smoulder.

SMOLDER, to burn with a stifling smoke. (E.) 'I smolder, as wete wood doth; I smolder one, or I stoppe his brethe with smoke;' Palsgrave. ME. smolderen, Allit. Poems, B. 955; from the sb. smolder, a stifling smoke. 'Smoke and smolder,' P. Plowman, B. xvii. 321; where the later text has 'smoke and smorper' (= E. smother), id. C. xx. 303; and see Palladius on Husbandry, i. 929. [The Dan. smulder, to crumble, molder, from smul, dust, may be ultimately related, but is not the original of the E. word, being too remote in sense.] β. The E. smoulder (for **smol-ther*) is closely connected with Low G. smölen, smelen, to smoulder, as in dat holt smelet weg=the wood smoulders away (Bremen Wörterbuch); Du. smeulen, 'to smook hiddenly,' Sewel; Low G. smöln, to give out fumes (Danneil). See Smell. From a root **smeul*, from an older root SMEU; see Smother (above).

SMUDGE, to sully, to smear with dirt. (Scand.) ME. smogen, in Halliwell; a voiced form of smutch. Cf. Dan. smuds, smut, dirt, smudse, to soil; from G. schmutz, smut, dirt; MHG. smuz. Also ME. smod, dirt, Allit. Poems, ii. 711; EFries. and Low G. smudden, to soil; Du. smoddig, dirty. See Smut.

SMUG, neat, trim, spruce. (Low G.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 49; &c. 'I could have brought a noble regiment Of smug-skinnde Nunnes into my countrey soyle;' Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A. D. 1572; Works, i. 393. Spelt smoog, Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 484; ed. Arber, p. 59. A voiced form of smuk.—MDan. smug, smooth, pliable (Kalkar); and Outzen (s. v. smock) notices a South Dan. form smugg; from Low G. smuk, neat, trim; cf. MDu. smucken, 'to be smugg,' Hexham. Hence also G. schmuck, trim, spruce. β. The MHG. smucken meant not only to clothe, adorn, but also to withdraw oneself into a place of security, and is an intensive form from the older strong verb smiegen, to creep into (G. schmiegen, to wind, bend, ply, cling to). This MHG. smiegen is cognate with AS. smūgan, to creep. γ. This links smug with smock, which has the same change from g to k, as shown under that word. A smock, orig. so named from the hole for the neck into which one crept, became a general term for dress, clothes, or attire, as in the case of G. schmuck, attire, dress, ornament, adornment, &c.; and smug is merely the corresponding adjective, meaning 'dressed,' hence spruce, neat, &c. See further under Smock and Smuggle.

SMUGGLE, to import or export secretly, without paying legal duty. (Low G.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the phrase 'to smuggle goods.' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has: 'Smuglers, stealers of customs, well known upon the Thames.' Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1749, gives: 'Sluyken, to smuckle; sluyker, a smuckler.' [The word is not Dutch, the Du. smokkelen, to smuggle, being modern, and unnoticed by Sewel and Hexham. It is, however, plainly a sailor's word, and of Low G. origin.]—Low G. smuggeln (whence also Dan. smugle), to smuggle; a frequentative form (with usual suffix -le) from the weak grade of the old strong verb found in Norweg. smjuga (pt. t. smaug), to creep; whence also Dan. i smug, adv., secretly, privately, and smughandel, contraband trade. Closely allied to Dan. smøge, a narrow (secret) passage, Swed. smuga, a lurking-hole (Widegren), Icel. smuga, a hole to creep through, smugall, smugligr, penetrating. β. All from the weak grade of the strong verb found in Icel. smjuga (pt. t. smaug, pl. smugu, pp. smoginn), to creep, creep through a hole, put on a garment which has only a round hole to put the head through; cf. Swed. smuga, to sneak, to smuggle. Cognate with AS. smūgan, to creep (pt. t. smēag, pl. smugon, pp. smogen); MHG. smiegen, strong verb, to press into (Fick, iii. 357); all from Teut. base SMEUG, to creep. Cf. Lithuan. smukti, to glide (pr. t. smunkū, I glide), i-smukti, to creep in. See Streitberg, § 203, note 1. Der. smuggl-er; see smock, smug.

SMUT, a spot of dirt, esp. of soot. (E.) From the base smut-, ME. smot-, as in i-smotted, smutted, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 359; bi-smot-ered, besmuttered, Chaucer, C. T. 76. Cf. G. schmutz, dirt. β. Hence the form smutch. 'Smutche on ones face; barboyllement;' Palsgrave. 'Hast smutched thy nose;' Winter's Tale, i. 2. 121.—Swed. smuts, smut, dirt, filth, soil; whence smutsa, verb, to dirt, to sully. Cf. Dan. smuds, filth; whence smudse, to soil, dirty, sully. The Dan. form (not old) resembles E. smudge, to smear, to soil (Halliwell), and ME. smoge, with the same sense (id.); see Smudge. γ. The Swed. smuts, Dan. smuds, were borrowed from G. schmutz (above). ¶ Perhaps allied to Du. smet, a spot, and to ME. smitten, to contaminate; from a base **smet*. Der. smut, verb; smutt-y, smutt-i-ly, smutt-i-ness.

SNACK, a part, portion, share; see Snatch.

SNaffle, a bridle with a piece confining the nose, and with a slender mouth-piece. (Du.) 'A bitte or a snaffle;' Baret (1580). Short for snaffle-piece=nose-piece. 'With a snaffle and a brydle;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1366 e. And in Shak. Antony, ii. 2. 63. 'A snaffle, Camus; to snaffle, rudere;' Levins.—Du. snavel, a horse's muzzle; MDu. snabel, snavel, 'the nose or snout of a beast or a fish;' Hexham. Dimin. of MDu. snabbe, snebbe, 'the bill or neb of a bird;' id. + G. schnabel, bill, snout; Lith. snapas, a bill. Allied to Neb, q. v. And see Snap.

SNAG, an abrupt projection, as on a tree where a branch has been cut off, a short branch, knot, projecting tooth. (Scand.) 'Which with a staffe, all full of litle snags;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 23; cf. iv. 7. 7. [The word knag, which has much the same sense, occurs as knagg in Swedish; see Knag.] Hence the prov. E. verb snag, to trim, to cut off the twigs and small branches from a tree; the tool used (a kind of bill-hook) is called a snagger; hence also the Kentish snaggle, to nibble (Halliwell).—Norw. snag, a projecting point or end, a spike; cf. Norw. snage, a projecting tongue of land; Icel. snag-hyrndr, with spiky horns; Icel. snagi, a clothes-peg; Norw. snaga, to stick out (Ross).

SNAIL, a slimy creeping gastropod. (E.) ME. snayle, Prompt. Parv. The i (y) is due to an earlier g, precisely as in hail (i), nail. AS. snagl, snegel; Voc. 121. 31, 321. 29; snegl, Voc. 30. 18. Snagl (= **snag-il*) is a diminutive, with g for c, from AS. snaca, a snake, a creeping thing; see Snake. The lit. sense is 'a small creeping thing,' or little reptile. Cf. ME. snegge (prov. E. snag), a snail, Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 32; and G. schnecke, a snail, Swed. snäcka. + Icel. snigill, a snail; Dan. snegl, a snail; Swed. snigel, a slug; Westphal. snäel, a snail; Low G. snigge, a snail; NFries. snegge. Teut. types **snagiloz*, snegiloz, masc. See Noreen, § 252.

SNAKE, a kind of serpent. (E.) The lit. sense is 'a creeping thing,' which is also the sense of serpent and of reptile. ME. snake, Wyclif, Rom. iii. 13. AS. snaca, to translate L. scorpio, Luke, x. 19. The sense is 'creeper,' but the related verb is only found in OHG. snahhan, pt. t. snuoh, which presupposes a Teut. type **snakan-*, to creep, pt. t. **snōk*. + Icel. snäkr; also snōkr, Dan. snog, Swed. snok (from the base **snōk*); MDu. snake, a snake. And cf. Skt. nāga-s, a serpent. See Sneak. Der. snail.

SNAP, to bite suddenly, snatch up. (Du.) In Shak. Much Ado, v. 1. 116. 'A snapper-up of unconsidered trifles;' Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 26. 'I snappe at a thing to catche it with my tethe;' Palsgrave. Not an old word.—Du. snappen, to snap, snatch; 'to snap up, or to intercept,' Hexham. + Dan. snappe, Swed. snappa, from Low G. snappen; G. schnappen, MHG. snappen, to snap, snatch. β. All from Teut. base **snap*; see Snaffle. Der. snapp-ish, i. e. ready to bite or snap; snapp-ish-ly, ness. Also snap-dragon, a plant, so called because the lips of the corolla, when parted, snap together like a dragon's mouth; also a game in which raisins are snapped out of a flame, as if from a fiery dragon. Also snap-hance, a fire-lock (Nares), from Du. snaphaan, a fire-lock, MDu. snaphaen, 'a robber that snaps upon one in the highway, or a snap-haunce' (Hexham); from Du.

snappen, to snap, and haan, a cock, also a cock of a gun, allied to E. Hen, q. v. Also snaff-le, q. v. And see snip. It may be added that there may have been an old strong Teut. vb. **sneð-an*, pt. t. **snað*, pp. **snuðanoz*. Rietz, indeed, gives a similar verb as still found in Swed. dialects, viz. infin. snippa, pt. t. snapp, old pp. snuppit, with the sense to snap, to snatch. This at once accounts for E. snip; cf. also snub, and snuff (2), to snap or snip off the end of the wick of a candle. And cf. Snip, Snatch.

SNARE, a noose, trap. (E.) Properly a noose, a trap formed with a looped string. 'Hongide himself with a snare'; Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 5. AS. snear, a cord, string; Grein, ii. 459. + Du. snaar, a string; Icel. snara, a snare, halter; Dan. snaare; Swed. snara; OHG. snarahha, a noose; cited by Fick, iii. 350, Curtius, i. 392. β. From the Teut. base **snark-* (the h being preserved in OHG.); and this is from the 2nd grade of the Teut. strong verb **snerhan-*, appearing in OHG. snerhan, to bind tightly, to twist tightly; whence also Icel. snara, to turn quickly, twist, wring (though this is a weak verb). γ. The Teut. SNERH answers to Idg. SNERK, to draw together, contract, whence Gk. váκκη, cramp, numbness; see Narcissus. δ. The Idg. SNERK is an extension from SNER, to twist, wind; whence Lithuan. ner-ti, to thread a needle, draw into a chain. ε. And we may further note the OIrish snáthe, thread; from the SNĒ, to wind, spin, whence L. nēre, to spin, G. schnur, a string. Cf. Skt. snāva(s), a tendon, sinew. Der. snare, verb, Temp. ii. 2. 174. ME. snaren, Prompt. Parv.; snar-er, en-snare. Also (obsolete) snar-l, a noose, Trevisa, ii. 385.

SNARL, to growl as a surly dog. (E.) In Shak. K. John, iv. 3. 150. The -l is a frequentative suffix; the sense is 'to keep on snarring.' 'I snarre, as a dogge doth under a door whan he sheweth his tethe,' Palsgrave; spelt snar, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 12. 27. Of OLow G. origin; perhaps E., though not found in AS. Cf. MDu. snarren, 'to brawl, to scould, or to snarle'; Hexham; G. schnarren, to rattle the letter R, to snarl, speak in the throat; MHG. snar, a growling. Cf. also Icel. snörgla, to rattle in the throat; snörgl (pronounced snörl), a rattling sound in the throat. Evidently related to Sneer; and see Snort.

SNATCH, to seize quickly, snap up. (E.) ME. snacchen, Wars of Alisaunder, 6559; spelt sneccen, Ancrer Riwle, p. 324, l. 27. Snacchen is a palatalised form of **snakken*, and may be considered as an E. word, though not found in AS. The k is preserved in the sb. snack, a portion, lit. a snatch or thing snatched up; Lowland Scotch snak, a snatch made by a dog at a hart, a snap of the jaws, Douglas, tr. of Virgil, xii. 754 (L. text). 'Snack, a share; as, to go snacks with one,' Phillips, ed. 1706. + Du. snakken, to gasp, desire, long, aspire; 'de Visch snackt na het water, the fish gasps for water,' Hexham. β. From a Teut. base **snak-*, to catch at with the mouth, move the jaws, parallel to **snap-* (as in E. snap). These bases are imitative, with the notion of a movement of the jaws. Der. snatch, sb.; body-snatcher. Also snack, sb., as above. Also prov. E. sneek, the 'snap' or latch of a door.

SNEAK, to creep or steal away slyly, to behave meanly. (E.) In Shak. Troil. i. 2. 246. Variant of ME. sniken. 'Snioked in ant ut nedden' = adders creep in and out; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 251; which is from AS. snican, to creep; Grein, ii. 459. Supposed to be a strong verb (pt. t. **snāc*, pp. **snicen*); the Icel. pp. snikinn occurs, from an obsolete verb **snika*, with the sense of covetous, hankering after. We also find Icel. snikja (weak verb), to hanker after, to beg for food silently, as a dog does; Dan. snige sig, to sneak, slink. Also Swed. dial. sniga, to creep, strong verb (pt. t. snege); snika, to hanker after, strong verb (pt. t. snek). β. All from a Teut. verb **sneikan-* (pt. t. **snāk*, pp. snikanoz), to creep. Cf. Irish and Gael. snaigh, snaig, to creep, crawl, sneak (from E.). The mod. E. sneak would result from an AS. **snācan*, a derivative from the second grade **snāc*; whence also ME. snoken, to creep about; Wyclif, Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 83. Der. snake, q. v., snail, q. v.

SNEAP, to pinch, check. (Scand.) See Snub.

SNEER, to express contempt. (Scand.) 'Sneer, to laugh foolishly or scornfully,' Phillips, ed. 1706; prov. E. sneering-match, a grinning match (Forby). Rare. ME. sneren, to deride. 'pai snered me with snering swa, Bot gnaisted over me with thaire tethe tha' = they derided me so with sneering, also they gnashed upon me with their teeth; Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson (Surtees Soc.), Ps. xxxiv. 16; and see Ps. ii. 4. - Dan. snærre, to grin like a dog; Hunden snærrede ad hem, the dog showed its teeth at him (Molbech); cf. MDan. snærre, the same. Closely allied to the obsolete E. snar; for which see Snarl.

SNEEZE, to eject air rapidly and audibly through the nose. (E.) 'Looking against the sunne doth induce sneezing,' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 687. ME. snesen, Trevisa, v. 389 (Stratmann). In Chaucer, Group H, l. 62 (l. 17011, ed. Tyrwhitt), the right reading is fneseth, not sneseth. But snesen is doubtless either a modification of fnesen, or a parallel form to it; the initial s is perhaps due to Dan. snuse, to sniff, for which see Snout. β. We find also fnesynge, violent blowing, Wyclif, Job, xli. 9. - AS. fnōsan, to sneeze; whence fnōsung, sternutatio; Voc. 162. 40. Allied to AS. fnæst, a puff, blast, Grein, i. 307; Icel. fnasa, to sneeze, snort. + Du. fnuezen, to sneeze; Swed. fnysa, Dan. fnyse, to snort. γ. We thus arrive at a Teut. base **fneus-*, Idg. PNEUS, evidently a mere variant of HNEUS, to sneeze, Fick, iii. 82; for which see Neese. Cf. Gk. πνέω, I breathe; see Pneumatic. Der. sneeze, sb. And see neese.

SNIFF, to scent, draw in air sharply through the nose. (Scand.) Not common in old books. Johnson defines snuff, sb., as 'resentment expressed by sniffing.' ME. sneuen or sneuen (with u=v), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 37, l. 25; ii. 207, l. 16; this would give a later E. **sneve*, whence was formed sneevle, to snivel, given in Minsheu. - Icel. **snefja*, a lost verb; whence the pp. snaför, sharp-scented, (Acts, xvii. 21); snefill, a slight scent; Dan. snive, to sniff, snuff. Note MDan. snifte (Kalkar), Dan. snöfte, to sniff (whence E. snift, above), from MDan. snift, air, breath. And cf. Icel. snippa, to sniff with the nose, snapa, to sniff. Der. sniff, sb.; sniv-el, q. v.

SNIP, to cut off, esp. with shears or scissors. (Du.) Shak. has snip, sb., L. L. L. iii. 22; also snipt, pp., All's Well, iv. 5. 2. He connects it with snap, L. L. L. v. 1. 63. - Du. snippen, to snip, clip. Allied to Du. snappen, 'to snap up, or to intercept,' Hexham; see Snap. + EFries. snippen; Low G. snippeln, to cut small; G. schnippen, to snap; schnappen, to snap, to catch. Cf. also EFries. snip, sharp; snip, snippe, a small piece of land; Hamburg schnippen, to cut into small bits (Richey). ¶ It has probably been influenced in use by the similar word nip. Der. snip, sb.; snipp-et, a small piece, dimin. of snip, sb., Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 824. Also snip-snap, Pope, Dunciad, ii. 240.

SNIPE, a bird with a long bill, frequenting marshy places. (Scand.) ME. snype. 'Snype, or snyte, byrde, Ibex,' Prompt. Parv. 'Hic ibis, or hic ibex, a snype,' Voc. 701. 39. 'Snype, or snyte,' Baret (1580). [Snype and snyte are parallel names for the same bird; it is possible that the vowel of snype has been affected by that of snyte, which is the older word, found as AS. snyte, Voc. 3. 28.] - Icel. snipa, a snipe, found in the comp. mýri-snípa, a moor-snipe. Cf. Dan. sneppe, a snipe, Swed. snäppa, a sandpiper; from Du. snip, snepe, MDu. snippe, sneppe, snipe (Hexham); G. schnepfe, snipe. β. The word means 'a snipper' or 'a snapper'; the standard form appears in MDu. sneppe, formed by the addition of a suffix -pe (for -yā) and vowel-change, from the Teut. base SNAP, to snap up; see Snap. Cf. MDu. snabbe, snebbe, 'the bill of a bird,' Hexham; a word with the same sense of 'snapper.' See Snaffle.

SNITE (1), to wipe the nose. (E.) See Snout.

SNITE (2), a snipe. (E.) See under Snipe.

SNIVEL, to sniff continually, to have a running at the nose, to whimper. (Scand.) Formerly snevil; spelt sneuyll, Skelton, Colin Clout, 1223. ME. sneuelen (with u=v), P. Plowman, B. v. 135, footnote; other MSS. have nuelynge, neuelynge. Also snuvelen (Stratmann); answering to an AS. form **snyflan*; whence the derived sb. snyftung, in Napier's additions. - AS. snoft, mucus; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 24. Cf. Low G. snuven, to sniff; Swed. snöfla, Dan. snöule, to snuffle, which is a parallel form; see Snuffle. And cf. Snuff. Der. snivell-er, snivel, sb.

SNOB, a vulgar person. (Scand.) 'That old snob,' Howard, The Committee (1665); A. iv. sc. 1 (Song). Prov. E. snob, a vulgar ignorant person; orig. a journeyman-shoemaker (Suffolk); see E. D. D. 'Snop, a lad or servant, now mostly used ludicrously,' Thoresby's letter to Ray, 1703 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 17); 'Snape, a pert youth, North,' Halliwell. Lowland Sc. snab, a shoemaker's or cobbler's boy (Jamieson). Of Scand. origin. - Dan. dial. snopp, snupp, bashful, silly; MDan. snåb, foolish (Kalkar); Icel. snåpr, a dolt, idiot, with the notion of impostor or charlatan, a boaster, used as a by-word; Swed. dial. snöpp, a boy, anything stumpy. The same Icel. word means the pointed end of a pencil; both senses may be explained from Swed. dial. snöppa, to cut off, make stumpy, hence to snub. Cf. Swed. snopen, out of countenance, ashamed. See Snub, Snubnosed.

SNOOD, a fillet, ribbon. (E.) 'Her satin snood,' Sir W. Scott, Lady of the Lake, c. i. st. 19; and see note 25 (31). ME. snōd (12th century); Voc. 540. 39. AS. snōd. 'Vitta, snōd,' Voc. 107. 35. The orig. sense is 'a twist,' cf. OIrish snáthe, thread; from the Idg. root **snē*, **snā*, to spin, to twist; whence also G. schnür, a string. Cf. Skt. snāva-s, a tendon, a muscle; Gk. νέω, I spin, νήμα, thread, L. nēre, to spin. Note W. noden, a thread; ysnoden, a fillet. See Snares.

SNOOZE, to doze, to nap. (Scand.) Rietz gives Swed. dial. snusa, (1) to take snuff; (2) to draw breath loudly in sleep, like a child. Cf. Dan. snuse, to snuff, to sniff, to poke one's nose into a thing; just as the prov. E. snuzzle not only means 'to doze,' but also 'to sniff and poke with the nose,' like a dog. Cf. also Low G. snuss, with the same sense as snute, a snout; snusseln, to poke with the nose; W. Flem. snuisteren, snoesteren, to sniff after, like a dog. Allied to Dan. and Swed. snus, snuff; and prob. of imitative origin, like Sniff, Snuff.

SNORE, to breathe hoarsely in sleep. (E.) ME. snoren, Chaucer, C. T. 5210 (B 790). Substituted for **fnoren*. Cf. AS. fnora, as in 'Sternutatio, fnora'; Wright's Voc. 48. 14. The change from fn to sn occurs again in the case of the allied word sneeze (AS. fnēosan). In Chaucer (as above), MS. E. has snoreth, MS. C. has snortith, and MSS. Hn. Cp. have snorteth. β. Formed from the weak grade fnor- (<**fnus*), as seen in fnor-en, pp. of fnēosan, to sneeze; precisely as the word frore, frozen (Milton, P. L. ii. 595) is the pp. of frēosan, to freeze. See further under Sneeze; and Notes on E. Etym., p. 273. Influenced by Snort. Der. snore, sb., snor-er.

SNORT, to force air violently through the nose, as a horse. (Scand.) ME. snorten, to snore, Chaucer, C. T. 4161 (A 4163). Cf. Low G. snurten, snarten, to make an explosive noise. From the base **snur-*; as in Low G. snurren, to hum; MDu. snorren, to murmur. Cf. also (with k for t) Dan. snorke, to snort; Swed. snorka, to threaten (orig. to snort, fume, be angry); Du. snorken, to snore, snort; G. schnarchen, to snore, snort, bluster; Swed. snarka, to snore; prov. E. snork, to snort. And see Snarl. Der. snort-er; snort, sb.

SNOT, mucus from the nose. (E.) ME. snotte, snothe, Prompt. Parv. AS. ge-snot; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 54. OFries. snotte. +Du. snot; Low G. snotte; Dan. snot. Supposed to be allied to the pp. snoten of a lost strong verb, which would appear as AS. **snūtan*; see further under Snout.

SNOUT, the nose of an animal. (E.) ME. snoute, Chaucer, C. T. 14911 (B 4095); snute, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1082. AS. **snūt*; whence snūtan, vb., to snite, was formed by vowel-change; see Snite. EFries. snūte. +Swed. snut, a snout, muzzle; Dan. snude; Low G. snute; Westphal. snūte; Du. snuit, G. schnauze. β. From a Teut. str. vb. **snūtan-*, to sniff, pt. t. **snaut*, pp. **snutanoz*. From the prime grade **snūt-* we have E. snout; also Icel. snýta, to wipe the nose, Swed. snyta, Dan. snyde, the same, AS. snūtan, whence E. snite, to blow the nose (Halliwell). From the 2nd grade we have G. schnauze; and from the weak grade E. snot, mucus. γ. We find shorter forms in Dan. snue, to sniff, snuff, snort, Low G. snau, prov. G. schnau, a snout, beak; all from a base SNEU. And it is clear that prov. G. schnuff, a snout, E. snuff, sniff, snivel, Dan. snuse, to snuff or sniff, go back to the same base, which seems to have indicated a sudden inspiration of the breath through the nose. Cf. Lithuan. snukktis, a snout.

SNOW, a form of frozen vapour. (E.) ME. snow; hence snow-white, Chaucer, C. T. 8264 (E 388). AS. snāw; Grein, ii. 458. +Du. sneeuw; Icel. snær, snjár, snjör; Dan. snee; Swed. snö; Goth. snaiws; G. schnee. +Lithuan. snėgas; Russ. snieg; L. nix (gen. niuis); Gk. acc. νίφα, whence νίφας, a snow-flake; Irish and Gael. sneachd; W. nyf. β. All from the ✓SNEIGwH, to snow, whence L. ningit, it snows (with inserted n), Lithuan. snigti, sningti, to snow, Greek νίφει, νίφει, it snows, Zend. gnizh, to snow; Fick, i. 828. Brugmann, i. § 394. Der. snow, verb; snow-blind, -drift, -drop, -plough, -shoe, -slip; also snow-y, snow-i-ness.

SNUB, to check, scold, reprimand. (Scand.) 'To snub one, to take one up sharply'; Phillips, ed. 1706; spelt snubbe in Levins, ed. 1570. Another form is sneb or snib; spelt snebbe, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. 1. 126; snib, id. Mother Hubbard's Tale, 372. ME. snibben, Chaucer, C. T. 523. — Dan. snubbe, to nip off, to snub (Larsen); also snibbe, 'to set down, blow up,' i. e. reprimand (whence E. snib); Swed. snubba, to snub, to check; NFries. snubbe, Icel. snubba, to snub, chide. The orig. sense was to snip off the end of a thing; cf. Icel. snubböttr, snubbed, nipped, the pointed end being cut off; Swed. dial. snubba, to snip or clip off; EFries. snubbeln, to snatch away, to snap. β. A form allied to snub appears in sneap, to check, pinch, nip, L. L. i. 1. 100; Wint. Tale, i. 2. 13. This is from Icel. sneypa, orig. to castrate, then used as a law-term, to outrage, dishonour, and in mod. usage to chide or snub a child; whence sneypa, a disgrace. This is a related word, and cognate with Swed. snöpa, to castrate, Swed. dial. snöppa, to cut off, to snuff a candle; Icel. snupra, to snub, chide. Der. snub, sb.; also snub-nosed, q. v.

SNUB-NOSED, having a short nose. (Scand. and E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. It means, literally, with a short or stumpy nose, as if cut off short. Cf. snubbes, s. pl., the short stumpy projections on a staff that has been roughly cut and trimmed, Spenser, F. Q. i. 8. 7. Snub is from the Swed. dial. snubba, to clip, snip; whence Swed. dial. snubba, a cow without horns or with cut horns, Icel. snubböttr, snipped, clipped, with the end cut off. See Snub above. And see Nose.

SNUFF (1), to sniff, draw in air violently through the nose, to smell. (Du.) 'As if you snuffed up love by smelling love'; L. L. L. iii. 16. Spelt snuffe in Levins, ed. 1570; snoffe and snuffe in Palsgrave. — MDu. snuffen, 'to snuffe out the filth out of one's nose' (Hexham); cf. Du. snuf, smelling, scent, snuffelen, to smell out; allied to MDu. snuyven, Du. snuiwen, to snort. +Swed. snufva, a cold, catarrh; snufven, a sniff or scent of a thing; Swed. dial. snavla, snöfla, snuffla, to snuffle (which is the frequent. form); Dan. snöfle, to snuffle; G. schnauben, schnaufen, schnieben, to snuff, snort; from a Teut. base **sneub-*; Idg. base **sneup-*. We also find G. schnupfen, a catarrh, schnupfen, to take snuff; prov. G. schnuffeln, schnüffeln, to snuffle, to smell (Flügel). Der. snuff-le, the frequentative form; snuff, sb., powdered tobacco; snuff-box, snuff-y.

SNUFF (2), to snip the top off a candle-wick. (E.) ME. snuffen, to snuff out a candle, Wyclif, Exod. xxv. 38, note y (later version); the earlier version has: 'where the snoffes ben quenched' = where the candle-snuffs are extinguished. β. This form snuffen is a parallel form to **snuppen*, **snoppen*, which agrees with prov. E. snop, to eat off, as cattle do young shoots (Halliwell). — Swed. dial. snöppa, to snip or cut off, esp. to snuff a candle (Rietz); cf. Norw. snuppa, snubba, to dock, cut off a top (Ross); snupp, a stump (Aasen); Hamburg snüffe, the peak of a shoe (Richey); Dan. snubbe, to nip off, the same word as E. snub; see Snub. Der. snuff (of a candle), sb., ME. snoffe, as above; snuff-dishes, Exod. xxv. 38; snuff-ers, Exod. xxxvii. 23.

SNUG, comfortable, lying close and warm. (Scand.) 'Where you lay snug'; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Past. iii. 24. Shak. has 'Snug the joiner'; Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 66. Cf. prov. E. snug, tight, handsome, Lancashire (Halliwell); snog, tidy, trimmed, in perfect order (Cleveland Glossary). Of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. snöggr, smooth, said of wool or hair; MSwed. snygg, short-haired, smooth, trimmed, neat, Swed. snygg, cleanly, neat, genteel; Norweg. snögg, short, trim; Dan. snög (also snyg), neat, smart, tidy (Molbeck); EFries. snügge, snigge, smooth, neat. Cf. Norw. snugga, to arrange, get ready. β. The orig. sense was 'trimmed' or 'cropped'; cf. prov. E. snag, to trim; South E. snig, to cut or chop off, whence Devon. snig, close and private (i. e. snug); see Halliwell. See Snag. Der. snug-ly, snug-ness.

SO, thus, in such a manner or degree. (E.) ME. so, Chaucer, C. T. 11; Northern sa, Barbour's Bruce (passim); also swa, Chaucer, C. T. 4028 (A 4030), where the Northern dialect is imitated. AS. swā, so; Grein, ii. 497. +Du. zoo; Icel. svā, later svō, svo, so; Dan. saa; Swed. så; G. so; Goth. swa, so; swē, just as; swa-swē, just as. Teut. types **swæ*, swō, swa. Cf. Gk. ὥς. β. From an oblique case of the Teut. **swaz*, Idg. **swos*, one's own (a reflexive pronominal base); whence Skt. sva-, one's own self, own, L. suus, one's own. Thus so = 'in one's own way.' See Prellwitz (s. v. ὥς); Brugmann, i. § 362.

SOAK, to steep in a fluid. (E.) It also means to suck up; imbibe. 'A sponge, that soaks up the king's countenance'; Hamlet, iv. 2. 16. This is the orig. sense; the word is a derivative of to suck. ME. soken, (1) to suck, (2) to soak; 'Sokere, or he that sokythe, sugens'; Prompt. Parv. 'Sokyn yn lycure, as thyng to be made soft', id. From AS. socian, to soak, tr. and intr.; see Bosworth-Toller. Allied to AS. soc-, weak grade of sūcan, to suck. Cf. AS. āsūcan, āsūgan, to suck dry, whence the pp. āsocene, āsogene; Grein, i. 43. β. There is also the sb. soc, or gesoc, a sucking, Gen. xxi. 7, 8. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 273. See Suck. Der. soak-er.

SOAM, a horse-load. (Late L. — Gk.) The Western E. equivalent of E. seam, AS. sēam; see Seam (2).

SOAP, a compound of oil or fat with soda or potash, used for washing. (E.) ME. sope, Rob. of Glouc. p. 6, l. 143. [The long o is due to AS. ā, as in stone from AS. stān, &c.] AS. sāpe, soap; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 472, l. 6. +Du. zeep; [Icel. sāpa, Dan. sæbe, Swed. såpa; borrowed from AS.]; G. seife, OHG. seifa. β. Teut. type **saipōn*, f.; from **saip*, 2nd grade of Teut. **seipan*, to trickle (MHG. sifen, Low G. sipen, to be moist, OFries. sipa); see Seife in Kluge. γ. The L. sāpo (see Pliny, xxviii. 12. 51) was borrowed from the Teutonic, not (as Pliny says) from Celtic. (From the L. acc. sāpōnem came F. savon, Ital. sapone, Span. xabon, &c.) The truly cognate L. word would appear to be sebum, tallow, grease. The W. sebon, Gael. siopunn, siabunn, Irish siabunn, seem to be borrowed from the L. acc. sāpōnem. Der. soap, verb; soap-y.

SOAR, to fly aloft. (F. — L.) ME. soren. 'As doth an egle, whan him list to sore'; Chaucer, C. T. 10437 (F 123). A term of hawking, and accordingly of F. origin. — F. essorer, 'to expose unto, or lay out in, the weather; also, to mount or sore up'; Cot. Cf. Ital. sorare, 'to soar in the aire'; Florio. — Late L. **exaurāre* (not found), to expose to the air; regularly formed from ex, out; and aura, a breeze, the air. β. The Lat. aura was probably borrowed from Gk. aūpa, a breeze; it is formed with the suffix -ra, from ✓AW, to blow. The ✓AW is allied to ✓WĒ, to blow; see Air.

SOB, to sigh convulsively, with tears. (E.) ME. sobben. 'Swowed and sobbed and syked' [sighed]; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 326. Related to AS. siofian, sēofian, to lament; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxvi. § 1, lib. iv. pr. 1; from **suð*, weak grade of **seuð*, variant of Teut. **seup*, to sup, suck in. The word represents the convulsive sucking in of air.

β. This is clearly shown by the allied G. seufzen, MHG. siuften, sūften, OHG. sūftōn, to sigh, formed from the OHG. sb. sūft, a sigh, sob; this sb. being again related to OHG. sūfan, to sup, sip, cognate with E. sup; see Sup. So also Icel. syftir (= syftir), a sobbing. Der. sob, sb.

SOBER, temperate, sedate, grave. (F.—L.) ME. sobre, Chaucer, C. T. 9407. —F. sobre, 'sober'; Cot. —L. sōbrius, acc. of ēbrius, sober. Compounded of sō-, prefix; and -brius, as in ē-brius, drunken; both possibly related to the rare L. bria, a wine-vessel. The prefix sō-, as in sō-cors, signifies apart from, or without; and sōbrius, not drunken, is thus opposed to ēbrius. Sō- is related to sē-, which before a vowel appears as sēd-, as in sēd-itiō, lit. 'a going apart.' See Se-, prefix, and Ebriety. Der. sober-ly, sober-ness; also sobrie-ty, from F. sobriété, 'sobriety,' Cot., from L. acc. sōbrietātem.

SOBRIGUET, a nickname, assumed name. (F.—L. and C.) Sometimes spelt soubriquet, but sobriquet is the mod. F. form. Modern, not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. sobriquet, 'a surname, nickname, a quip or cut given, a mock or flowt bestowed, a jeast broken on a man;' Cot. Another form is soibriquet, also in Cotgrave. β. Etym. disputed and uncertain. Cotgrave also spells the word soubriquet, and Littré and Scheler note the occurrence of soubzbriquet in a text of the 14th century with the sense of 'a chuck under the chin.' Here soubz (mod. F. sous) answers to L. subtus, below; and briquet is the Norm. dial. form of F. brechet, brisket; see Moisy. Hence sobriquet, properly a knock on the breast, hence a chuck under the chin, and then 'a quip or cut given, a mock or flout, a jeast broken on a man,' [finally] 'a nickname;' Cotgrave. 'Percussit super mentonem faciendo dictum le soubriquet;' Act A.D. 1355 in Archives du Nord de la France, iii. 35. 'Donna deux petits coups appellez soubzbriguez des dois de la main soubz le menton;' Act A.D. 1398, ibid. in Ducange, s.v. Barba. In the same way soubarbe, 'the part between the chin and the throat, also a cheek, twitch, jerk given to a horse with his bridle, endurer une soubarbe, to endure an affront;' Cot. If so, the sense is 'chuck under the chin,' hence, an affront, nickname. At the same time, Cotgrave's soibriquet must be due to some popular etymology (prob. from sot, foolish).

SOC, SOCAGE, law-terms. (E.) See Soke.

SOCIABLE, companionable. (F.—L.) In Shak. K. John, i. 188. —F. sociable, 'sociable;' Cot. —L. sociābilis, sociable; formed with suffix -bilis from sociā-re, to accompany. —L. socius, a companion, lit. 'a follower.' —L. base soc-, second grade of seq-, appearing in sequi, to follow; all from ✓SEQ, to follow; see Sequence. Der. sociabl-y, sociable-ness, sociability-ty. From L. socius is also formed the adj. sociālis, whence E. social, with the adv. social-ly, also social-i-ty, social-ise, social-ist, social-ism. Also socie-ty, L.L.L., iv. 2. 166, from MF. société, 'society,' Cot., which from L. acc. societātem. Also dis-sociate, as sociate.

SOCK, a sort of half stocking, buskin. (L.) ME. socke, Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. AS. socc; 'Soccus, socc;' Voc. 47. 22. —L. soccus, a light shoe, slipper, sock, worn by comic actors, and so taken as the symbol of comedy, as in Milton, L'Allegro, 132. Der. sock-et.

SOCKET, a hollow into which something is inserted. (F.—Du.) 'Soket of a candylstykke or other lyke;' Prompt. Parv. ME. soket, King Alisaunder, 4415. —OF. soket, given by Roquefort only as (1) a dimin. of F. soc, a ploughshare, and (2) a dimin. of F. souche, a stump or stock of a tree. β. [Of these, the F. soc is of Celtic origin; cf. W. swch, a (swine's) snout, a ploughshare (Thurneysen, p. 112), and with this word we have here nothing to do.] But souche appears in the Norman dial. as chouque (see Moisy), and is allied to the Ital. ciocco, a stump or stock of a tree; see Florio. Cf. Walloon sokett, a stump; F. dial. soquette, a stump of dead wood, patois de la Meuse (Labourasse); MF. chouquet, 'a block;' Cot.; OF. chocquet, a support (socket) for an arblast (Godefroy); F. dial. chouquet, a block on which one cuts wood, dimin. of chouque, a stump, patois du pays de Bray (Decorde); Picard choke, a block (Corblet); Walloon choque, stump of a tree (Sigart). Prob. of Teut. origin; perhaps from MDu. schocke, 'a shock, a cock, or a heape,' Hexham. See Shock (2). ¶ The Du. sch- may have caused difficulty; hence Ital. zocco = ciocco. Note 'une souche de fourment,' a shock of corn; Supp. to Godefroy.

SOD, turf, a surface of earth covered with growing grass. (E.) 'A sod, turfe, cespes;' Levins, ed. 1570. Perhaps so called because the turf was used as fuel for boiling (Weigand); or because sodden. Cf. AS. ge-sod, a cooking; sod-en, pp. of sēoðan, to seethe. That the connexion with the verb to seethe is real is apparent from the cognate terms. + Du. zode, sod, green turf; MDu. zode, 'seething or boiling,' also, 'a sodde or a turfe;' Hexham. Also contracted to zoo in both senses; 'zoo, a sod; het water is aan de zoo, the water begins to seeth;' Sewel. Note also MDu. sood, a well (Hexham); so named from the bubbling up of the water, and cognate with AS. sēað, a well, a pit, from the same verb (seethe). + EFries. sōd, a well; sode, a cut turf, also boiling, cooking; Dan. dial. sodd, saadd, a sod; OFries. sātha, sāda, sod, turf, allied to sāth, sād, a well; Low G. sode, sod, allied to sood, a well; G. sode, sod, turf, allied to G. sod, broth, also, a bubbling up as of boiling water. See Seethe, Suds.

SOD, SODDEN; see under Seethe.

SODA, oxide of sodium. (Ital.—L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. —Ital. soda, soda; MItal. soda, 'a kind of fearnie ashes wherof they make glasses;' Florio. Fem. of Ital. sodo, 'solide, tough, fast, hard, stiffe;' Florio. This is a contracted form of Ital. solido, solid; see Solid. So called, apparently, from the firmness or hardness of the products obtained from glass-wort; cf. OF. soulde, 'saltwort, glasswort,' from the L. solida (fem. of solidus), which Scheler supposes must have been the L. name of glass-wort. β. Note that the Span. name for soda is sosa, which also means glass-wort; but here the etymology is different, the name being given to the plant from its abounding in alkaline salt. Sosa is the fem. of Span. soso, insipid, orig. 'salt;' from L. salsus, salt; see Sauce. Der. sod-ium, a coined word.

SODER, the same as Solder, q. v.

SODOMY, an unnatural crime. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Cot. Cf. ME. sodomyte, Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 708; also sodomite, Cursor Mundi, l. 27950. —F. sodomie, 'sodomy;' Cot. So called because it was imputed to the inhabitants of Sodom; Gen. xix. 5. —F. Sodome, Sodom. —L. Sodoma. —Gk. Σόδομα. —Heb. Sedōm (with initial samech); explained to mean 'burning' in Stanley's Sinai and Palestine, cap. vii; but this is quite uncertain. Gesenius gives the sense 'enclosure.'

SOFA, a long seat with stuffed bottom, back, and arms. (Arab.) 'He leaped off from the sofa in which he sat;' Guardian, no. 167 [not 198], Sept. 22, 1713. The story here given is said to be translated from an Arabian MS.; this may be a pretence, but the word is Arabic. —Arab. suffa(t), suffah, 'a sofa, a couch, a place for reclining upon before the doors of Eastern houses, made of wood or stone;' Rich. Dict., p. 936. —Arab. root saffa, to draw up in line, put a seat to a saddle; ibid.

SOFFIT, the under side of an architrave or arch, also a ceiling. (F.—Ital.—L.) F. soffite (Hatzfeld). —Ital. soffitta, a garret, a ceiling (Barretti). Orig. fem. of the pp. soffitto, fixed beneath; from suf- (from L. sub, under), and fitto, pp. of figgere, to fix, from L. figere, to fix. Thus it is (practically) a doublet of suffix.

SOFT, easily yielding to pressure, gentle, easy, smooth. (E.) ME. softe, Wyclif, Matt. xi. 8; Chaucer, C. T. 12035 (C 101). AS. sōfte, gen. used as an adv., Grein, ii. 464. The adj. form is commonly sēfte (id. 423), where the ō is further modified to ē. + OSax. sāfto, softly, only in the compar. sāftur, Heliand, 3302; G. sanft, soft; OHG. samfto, adv., softly, lightly, gently; Du. zacht (for **zaft*), whence G. sacht. Teut. type **samftoz*; from **samjan-* (Goth. samjan), to please. Cf. OIrish sāim, mild, sām, rest; Gk. ἡμερος, tame, mild; Skt. sāman, mildness. Der. soft-ly, ME. softely (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 4209 (A 4211); soft-ness, Layamon, 25549. Also soft-en, in which the final -en is added by analogy with length-en, &c.; the ME. soften would only have given a later E. verb to soft; cf. sofēd in Ancrer Riwle, p. 244, l. 27. The right use of soften is intransitive, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 2. 40.

SOHO, a cry of sportsmen, to call attention to the hunted animal. (F.) 'Soho! soho!' Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 3. 189. ME. soho, King Alisaunder, 3712. A better form is sa ho, as in Middleton, Trick to Catch the Old One; A. iv. sc. 4. 'Sohow is [as] moche to say as sahow; for because that it is short [i. e. easier] to say, we say alwey sohow;' Venery de Twety, in Reliq. Antiq. i. 154; 'sa, sa, cy, adesto, sohow;' id. 152. —F. ça, 'hither, . . follow hoe, come after,' Cot.; and ho! interj. The F. ça is from the popular L. ecce hāc, behold! this way! See Hatzfeld.

SOIL (1), ground, mould, country. (F.—L.) ME. soile; spelt soyle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1039. —AF. soil, Year-books of Edw. I (1304-5), p. 53; (1305), p. 9; (allied to OF. soel, suel, MF. sneil, 'the threshold of a door;' Cot., from L. solium). —L. solea, 'a covering for the foot, a sole, sandal, sole of the foot, timber on which wattled walls are built. The Late L. solea also means 'soil, or ground,' by confusion with L. solum, ground, whence F. sol, 'the soil, ground;' Cot. β. We cannot derive E. soil from F. sol, on account of the diphthong; but it makes little difference, since L. solea, sole of the foot, and solum, ground, are closely connected words. γ. The root of L. sol-ea, sol-um is uncertain; they may be allied to Sill. Doublets, sole (1), sole (2).

SOIL (2), to defile, contaminate. (F.—L.) ME. soilen, Ancren Riwe, p. 84, l. 23; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 2. The sense is to cover with mire; to take soil, lit. to betake oneself to muddy water, was a term of the chase; see Halliwell. 'To go to soyle' was said of the hart; Book of St. Albans, fol. e 4, back.—AF. soyler, Walter de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Vocab. i. 171; OF. soillier (12th cent., Littré), F. soillier, 'to soil,' Cot.; whence 'se souillier (of a swine), to take soile, or wallow in the mire;' id.—OF. soil, souil; 'soil, or souil de sanglier, the soile of a wilde boare, the slough or mire wherein he hath wallowed;' Cot. Cf. Ital. sogliare, 'to sully, defile, or pollute,' Florio; also sogliardo (mod. Ital. sugliardo), 'slovenly, sluttish, or hoggish;' id. Diez also cites Prov. solh, mire, sulhar, to soil; and sulha, a sow, which last is (as he says) plainly derived from L. sucula, a young sow, dimin. of sus, a sow. See SOW. β. Similarly, he explains the F. souil from the L. adj. suillus, belonging to swine, derived from the same sb.—L. sūs, a sow; see SOW. Körting, § 9247. γ. It will be observed that the difference in sense between soil (1)=ground, and soil (2), sb.=mire, is so slight that the words have doubtless frequently been confused, though really from quite different sources. There is yet a third word with the same spelling; see Soil (3). Der. soil, sb., a spot, stain, a new coinage from the verb; the old sb. soil, a wallowing-place (really the original of the verb), is obsolete. ☞ The AS. sol, mire, is not the orig. of E. soil, but of prov. E. soal, sole, a dirty pool, Kent; E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3. See Sully.

SOIL (3), to feed cattle with green grass, to fatten with feeding. (F.—L.) See Halliwell; the expression 'soiled horse,' i. e. a horse high fed upon green food, is in King Lear, iv. 6, l. 124. [Quite distinct from the words above.] Also spelt soul; Halliwell gives 'soul, to satisfy with food.'—OF. soeler, saoler (Supp. to Godefroy, s. v. saouler); cf. AF. sauler, P. de Thaun, Bestiary, l. 527, later saouler, 'to glut, cloy, fill, satiate;' Cot. Mod. F. soûler.—AF. saul, satisfied, Vie de St. Auban; OF. saol, adj. (Burguy), later saoul, 'full, cloied, satiated,' Cot. Mod. F. soûl.—L. satullum, acc. of satullus, filled with food; a dimin. form from satur, full, satiated, akin to satis, enough. See Sate, Satiate, Satisfy.

SOIRÉE, an evening party. (F.—L.) Borrowed from French. 'A friendly swarry;' Pickwick Papers, c. 36; spelt soiree in the heading to the chapter.—F. soirée, 'the evening-tide,' Cot.; hence a party given in the evening. Cf. Ital. serata, evening-tide. Formed as a fem. pp. from a (supposed) Late L. verb **sērāre*, to become late; from L. sērus, late in the day, whence Ital. sera, F. soir, evening. Cf. OIrish sir, W. hir, long.

SOJOURN, to dwell, stay, reside. (F.—L.) ME. soiornen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 3, last line; soiournen, Chaucer, C. T. 4568 (B 148). (Here i=j).—AF. sojournier, Stat. Realm, i. 277 (1336); OF. sojorner, sojournier, to sojourn; also spelt sejorner, sejournier (Burguy). Mod. F. sejournier; cf. Ital. soggiornare. This verb answers to a Late L. type **subdiurnāre*, composed of L. sub, under, and diurnāre, to stay, last long, derived from the adj. diurnus, daily; see Sub- and Diurnal or Journal. Der. sojourn-er; sojourn, sb., K. Lear, i. 1. 48, ME. soiorne, soiorn, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 369, vii. 385. The AF. sb. appears both as sojourn and sojour.

SOKE, SOC, a franchise, land held by socage. (E.) 'Soc, signifies power, authority, or liberty to minister justice and execute laws; also the shire, circuit, or territory, wherein such power is exercised by him that is endued with such a privilege or liberty;' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. [Blount rightly notes the word as 'Saxon,' but under socage gives a wrong derivation from F. soc, a plough-share.] 'Sac and Sōc; sac was the power and privilege of hearing and determining causes and disputes, levying of forfeitures and fines, executing laws, and administering justice within a certain precinct; see Ellis, Introduction to Domesday Book, i. 273. Sōc or Sōen was strictly the right of investigating or seeking, or, as Spelman defines it, Cognitio quam dominus habet in curia sua, de causis litibusque inter vassallos suos exorientibus. It was also the territory or precinct in which the sacu and other privileges were exercised;' Gloss. to Thorpe's Diplomatarium, at p. 369 of which we find: 'ic ān heom þeofer saca and sōcna'=I grant them thereover the privileges of sacu and sōcna. See further in Schmidt, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, ed. 1858, p. 653. 'Sōka, sute of court; and therof cometh Sokene; but Sokene otherwhile is for to aske lawe in the gretter court;' Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 95. β. Etymologically, sac (AS. sacu) is the same word as E. sake; the orig. sense is 'contention,' hence a law-suit, from AS. sacan, to contend; see Sake. Soken (AS. sōcna, sōcna) is 'an enquiry;' closely connected with mod. E. seek, to investigate, and derived from AS. sōc, 2nd grade of sac-, as seen in sōc, pt. t. of the same verb sacan; see Seek. Cf. Goth. sōkns, enquiry; sōkjan, to seek; sakan, to contend. Hence Portsocken (ward) in London, which Stow explains by 'franchise at the gate.' Der. soc-

age, a barbarous law-term, made by adding the F. suffix -age (L. -aticum) to AS. sōc-. (The o is long.)

SOLACE, a comfort, relief. (F.—L.) ME. solas, King Ali-saunders, l. 15; Chaucer, C. T. 13712 (B 1972).—OF. solaz, solace; Burguy. (Here z=ts).—L. sōlācium, a comfort; as if from an adj. **sōlax*; allied to the verb sōlāri, to console, to comfort. Allied to L. sollus, Gk. ὅλος, whole (Bréal, Prellwitz); Skt. sarva(s), whole. Der. solace, verb, ME. solacen, P. Plowman, B. xix. 22, from OF. solacier, solacer, to solace (Burguy). And see con-sol-.

SOLAN-GOOSE, the name of a bird. (Scand. and E.) The E. goose is an addition; the Lowland-Scotch form is soland, which occurs in Holland's poem of the Houlate (Owlet), about A. D. 1450; l. 700. [Here the d is excrement, as is so common after n; cf. sound from F. son.]—Icel. sūla, also haf-sūla, a gannet, solan goose (see below); Norweg. sula, havsula, the same (Aasen). The Norweg. hav (Icel. haf) means 'sea.' β. As the Icel. sūla is feminine, the definite form is sūlan=the gannet; which accounts for the final n in the E. word. Similarly, Dan. sol=sun, but solen=the sun; whence the Shetland word sooleen, the sun (Edmonston).

SOLAR, belonging to the sun. (L.) 'The solar and lunar year;' Raleigh, Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 3 (R.).—L. sōlāris, solar.—L. sōl, the sun.—Icel. sól; Goth. saul; Lithuan. saulė; Russ. solntse; W. haul (for saul); Irish sūl; Gk. ἥλιος, Homeric ἥέλιος, Doric δέλιος, Cretan ἀβέλιος (with long a); cf. Skt. sūra(s). Brugmann, i. § 481. Der. sol-stice, q. v.

SOLDER, a cement made of fusible metal, used to unite two metallic substances. (F.—L.) Sometimes spelt soder, and usually pronounced sodder [sod'ur]. Rich. spells it soulder. 'To soder such gold, there is a proper glue and soder;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 5. 'I soulder a metall with soulder, Ie soulder;' Palsgrave. ME. sowdere; sb. 'Soldatura, sowdere;' Voc. 612. 33.—OF. soudure (14th cent., Littré), later also souldure, 'a souldering, and particularly the knot of soulder which fastens the led [lead] of a glasse window;' Cot. Mod. F. soudure, solder; Hamilton.—OF. souder, soulder (orig. solder), 'to soulder, consolidate, close or fasten together;' Cot. [Hence also ME. souden, sowden, to strengthen; 'anoon hise leggis and hise feet weren sowdid togidere;' Wyclif, Acts, iii. 7.].—L. solidūre, to make firm.—L. solidus, solid, firm; see Solid. And see Soldier. Der. solder, verb, formerly soder, as above. ☞ It is usual to derive, conversely, the sb. solder from the verb; this is futile, as it leaves the second syllable entirely unaccounted for. The OF. verb souder yielded the ME. verb souden, as shown above, which could only have produced a modern E. verb sod or sud. In no case can the E. suffix -er be due to the ending -er of the F. infinitive. The French for what we call solder (sb.) is soudure, and in this we find the obvious origin of the word. The pronunciation of final -ure as -er occurs in the common word figure, pronounced [fig'ər], which is likewise from the F. sb. figure, not from a verb.

SOLDIER, one who engages in military service for pay. (F.—L.) The common pronunciation of the word as sodger [sod'ər] is probably old, and may be defended, the l being frequently dropped in this word in old books. [Compare soder as the usual pronunciation of solder; see the word above.] ME. soudiour, Will. of Palerne, 3954; souder, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 109, l. 14; schavaldur, sodiour, souldier, Barbour's Bruce, v. 205, and various readings. So called from their receiving soulde (i. e. pay). 'He wolde paye them their souldye or wagis . . . [he] hadde gotten many a souldyours;' Reynard the Fox (Caxton's translation), ed. Arber, p. 39.—OF. soldier (Burguy), also soldoier, surdoier; Cot. has souldoyer, 'a souldier, one that fights or serves for pay.' Cf. OF. soulde, 'pay or lendings for souldiers;' id. Also F. soldat, a soldier. β. Of these words, OF. soldier answers to Late L. soldārius, a soldier; cf. 'Soldarius, a sowdeour;' Voc. 612. 32. The OF. soulde is from Late L. soldum, pay; and F. soldat=soldātus, pp. of Late L. soldāre, to pay. All from Late L. solidus, a piece of money, whence is derived (by loss of the latter part of the word) the OF. sol, 'the French shilling,' Cot., and the mod. F. sou. We still use L. s. d. to signify libra, solidi, and denarii, or pounds, shillings, and pence. The orig. sense was 'solid' money.—L. solidus, solid; see Solid. Der. soldier-like, soldier-ship, soldier-y.

SOLE (1), the under side of the foot, bottom of a boot or shoe. (L.) ME. sole. 'Sole of a foot, Planitia; Sole of a schoo, Solea;' Prompt. Parv. AS. sole, pl. solen (for solan). 'Solen, soleæ;' Voc. 125. 25.—L. solea, the sole of the foot or of a shoe.—L. solum, the ground. See Soil (1). Doublet, soil (1), which is the F. form. Der. sole, verb.

SOLE (2), a kind of flat fish. (F.—L.) ME. sole. 'Sole, fysche, Solia;' Prompt. Parv.; cf. AF. soel, Liber Albus, p. 244.—F. sole, 'the sole-fish;' Cot.—L. solea, the sole of the foot, the fish called the sole. The sole of the foot is taken as the type of flatness. See Sole (1).

SOLE (3), alone, only, solitary, single. (F.—L.) ME. sool, Lydgate, Troy-book, bk. i. ch. i. l. 29; AF. sole, f., Liber Albus, p. 219.—OF. sol, mod. F. seul, sole.—L. solum, acc. of solus, alone. Perhaps the same word as OL. sollus, entire, complete in itself (hence alone); Bréal. Or allied to L. sō- (in sō-brius) and sē-d- in sēd-itiō (Walde); see Sober. Der. sole-ly, sole-ness. From L. solus are also de-sol-ate, soliloquy, sol-it-ar-y, solitude, solō.

SOLECISM, impropriety in speaking or writing. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Minshew and Cotgrave.—MF. solecisme, 'a solecisme, or incongruity'; Cot.—L. solæcismus, acc. of solæcismus.—Gk. σολοικισμός, sb.—Gk. σολοικίζειν, to speak incorrectly.—Gk. adj. σόλοιος, speaking incorrectly, like an inhabitant of Σόλοι (Soloi) in Cilicia, a place colonised by Athenian emigrants, who soon corrupted the Attic dialect which they at first spoke correctly. Others say it was colonised by Argives and Lydians from Rhodes, who spoke a corrupt dialect of Greek. See Diogenes Laertius, i. 51; and Smith, Class. Dict. Der. solec-ist, solec-ist-ic-al.

SOLEMN, attended with religious ceremony, devout, devotional, serious. (F.—L.) ME. solempne. 'In the solempne dai of pask'; Wyclif, Luke, ii. 41. Hence solempnely, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 276 (A 274).—OF. solempne (Roquefort); the mod. F. has only the derivative solenne.—L. sōlemnem, acc. of sōlemnis, later forms sōlennis, sollennis, as if it meant occurring annually like a religious rite, religious, festive, solemn; from soll-us, entire, complete, and annus, a year, which becomes -ennus in composition, as in E. bi-ennial, tri-ennial. But the latter part was orig. -ennis, perhaps from amb-, around. β. The OL. sollus is cognate with W. holl, entire, Gk. ὅλος (Ion. ὅλος), whole; Skt. sarva(s), all, whole. Brugmann, i. § 417. Der. solemn-ly, solemn-ness; solemn-ise, spelt solempnyse in Palsgrave; solemn-is-er, solemn-is-at-ion; also solemn-i-ty, ME. solempnitee, Chaucer, C. T. 2704 (A 2702).

SOL-FA, to sing the notes of the gamut. (L.) ME. sofye, solfe; P. Plowman, B. v. 423; Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 292. 'They . . . solfa so alamyre' = they sol-fa so a-la-mi-re; Skelton, Colin Clout, 107. To sol-fa is to practise singing the scale of notes in the gamut, which contained the notes named ut, re, mi, sol, fa, la, si. These names are of Latin origin; see Gamut. Der. solfeggio, from Ital. solfeggio, sb., the singing of the sol-fa or gamut. Also sol-mi-s-at-ion, a word coined from the names of the notes sol and mi.

SOLICIT, to petition, seek to obtain. (F.—L.) ME. soliciten; spelt solycyte in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 70, l. 24.—MF. soliciter, 'to solicit'; Cot.—L. solicitare, to agitate, arouse, excite, incite, urge, solicit.—L. solicitus, lit. wholly agitated, aroused, anxious, solicitous.—L. soll-, for sollus, whole, entire; and citus, pp. of ciere, to shake, excite, cite; see Solemn and Cite. Der. solicit-at-ion, Oth. iv. 2. 202, from MF. solicitation, 'a solicitation'; Cot. Also solicit-or (solicitour in Minshew), substituted for MF. soliciteur, 'a solicitor, or follower of a cause for another'; Cot.; from L. acc. solicitatōrem. And see Solicitous. (Spelt soliciter in F.)

SOLICITOUS, very desirous, anxious, eager. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 428. Englished from L. sōlicitus, better spelt solicitus, by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, strenu-ous, &c. See Solicit. Der. solicitous-ly, solicit-ude, q.v.

SOLICITUDE, anxious care, trouble. (F.—L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1266 h.—MF. solicitude, 'solicitude, care'; Cot.—L. solicitudinem, acc. of sōlicitudo (better solicitudo) anxiety.—L. solicitus, solicitous; see Solicitous.

SOLID, firm, hard, compact, substantial, strong. (F.—L.) ME. solide, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 17, l. 15.—F. solide, 'solid'; Cot.—L. solidum, acc. of solidus, firm, solid. Allied to Gk. ὅλος, whole, entire, and Skt. sarva(s), all, whole; see Solemn. Der. solid-ly, solid-ness. Also solid-ar-i-ty, 'a word which we owe to the F. Communists, and which signifies a fellowship in gain and loss, in honour and dishonour, . . . a being, so to speak, all in the same bottom,' Trench, Eng. Past and Present; Cotgrave has the adj. solidaire, 'solid, whole, in for [or] liable to the whole.' Also solid-i-fy, from mod. F. solidifier, to render solid; solid-i-fic-at-ion. Also solid-i-ty, from F. solidité, which from L. acc. soliditatem. From L. solidus are also con-solid-ate, con-sols, sold-er (or sod-er), sold-ier, sol-i-ped. And cf. catholic (from Gk. ὅλος), holo-caust.

SOLILOQUY, a speaking to oneself. (L.) Spelt soliloquie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from L. soliloquium, a talking to oneself, a word formed by St. Augustine; see Aug. Soliloq. ii. 7, near the end.—L. sōli-, for sōlus, alone; and loqui, to speak; see Sole (3) and Loquacious. Der. soliloqu-ise, a coined word.

SOLIPED, an animal with an uncloven hoof. (F.—L.) 'Solipeds or firm-hoofed animals'; Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6. § 9. A contraction for solidiped, which would be a more correct form.—OF. solipède (Godefroy); F. solipède (Hatzfeld).—L. solidiped-, stem of solidipēs, solid-hoofed, whole-hoofed; Pliny, x. 65; x. 73.—L.

solidi-, for solidus, solid; and pēs, a foot, cognate with E. foot; see Solid and Foot.

SOLITARY, lonely, alone, single. (F.—L.) ME. solitarie, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 7.—AF. solitarie, Langtoft's Chron. i. 176; usually solitaire, as in mod. F.—L. sōlitarium, acc. of sōlītārius, solitary. β. Formed as if contracted from **sōlītātārius*, from sōlītāt-, stem of sōlītās, loneliness; a sb. formed with suffix -tāt- from sōli-, for sōlus, alone; see Sole (3). Cf. heredit-ary, milit-ary from the stems heredit-, milit-; also propriet-ary, similarly formed from the sb. proprietās. Der. solitari-ly, -ness. Also solitaire, from F. solitaire. And see solitude, sol-o.

SOLITUDE, loneliness. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. solitude, 'solitude'; Cot.—L. sōlītudo, loneliness.—L. sōli-, for sōlus, sole; with suffix -tudo. See Sole (3).

SOLO, a musical piece performed by one person. (Ital.—L.) 'Solos and sonatas'; Tatler, no. 222; Sept. 9, 1710.—Ital. solo, alone.—L. solum, acc. of solus, sole; see Sole (3).

SOLMISATION, a singing of sol-mi; see Sol-fa.

SOLSTICE, one of the two points in the ecliptic at which the sun is at his greatest distance from the equator; the time when the sun reaches that point. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. solstice, 'the solstice, sun-stead, or stay of the sun'; Cot.—L. sōlstitium, the solstice; lit. a point (in the ecliptic) at which the sun seems to stand still.—L. sōl, the sun; and **stīt-um*, for statum, supine of sistere, to make to stand still, a reduplicated form from stāre, to stand, cognate with E. stand; see Solar and Stand. Der. sōlstiti-al, adj., from MF. sōlstitial or sōlstitial (Cot.); F. sōlstitial.

SOLUBLE, capable of being dissolved. (F.—L.) Spelt soluble and solubil in Levins, ed. 1570.—F. soluble (13th cent., Littré).—L. solūbilem, acc. of solūbilis, dissolvable. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from solū-, found in solū-tus, pp. of soluere, to solve, dissolve; see Solve. Der. solubili-ty, a coined word.

SOLUTION, a dissolving, resolving, explanation, discharge. (F.—L.) ME. solucion, Gower, C. A. ii. 86; bk. iv. 2515; it was a common term in alchemy.—F. solution, 'a discharge, resolution, dissolution'; Cot.—L. solūtionem, acc. of solūtiō, lit. a loosing; cf. solūt-us, pp. of soluere, to loose, resolve, dissolve; see Solve.

SOLVE, to explain, resolve, remove. (L.) Not an early word. In Milton, P. L. viii. 55.—L. soluere, to loosen, relax, solve; pp. solūtus. A compound verb; compounded of so-, allied to sē-, apart; and luere, to loosen. For the prefix, see Sober. Luere is from lu-, weak grade of LEU, to set free, appearing also in Gk. λύ-ειν, to set free, release; see Lose. Brugmann, i. § 121. Der. solv-able, from F. solvable, orig. 'payable,' Cot. Also solv-ent, having power to dissolve or pay, from L. soluent-, stem of pres. part. of soluere; and hence solu-enc-y. Also solu-er; ab-solve, absolute, as-soil; dis-solve, dis-solute; re-solve, re-solute. And see soluble, solution.

SOMBRE, gloomy, dusky. (F.—L.) A late word; in Todd's Johnson.—F. sombre, 'close, dark, cloudy, muddy, shady, dusky, gloomy'; Cot. It answers to Span. adj. sombrio, adj., shady, gloomy, from the sb. sombra, shade, dark part of a picture, also a ghost. So also Port. sombrio, adj., from sombra, shade, protection, ghost. And cf. Span. a-sombrar, to frighten, terrify; mod. Prov. souloumbrous, dark. β. Diez refers these words to a L. form **sub-umbrāre*, to shadow or shade; a conjecture which is supported by the occurrence of Prov. soz-ombrar, to shade (Scheler). There is also an OF. essombre, a dark place (Burguy), which is probably due to a L. form **ex-umbrāre*, and this suggests the same form as the original of the present word, a solution which is adopted by Littré. We may conclude that sombre is founded upon the L. umbra, a shadow, with a prefix due either to L. ex or to L. sub. See Körtling, § 9211. See Umbrage. Der. sombre-ness.

SOMBRERO, a broad-brimmed hat. (Span.—L.) 'With a great Sombrero or shadow over their heads'; Hakluyt, Voy. ii. pt. i. p. 258.—Span. sombrero.—Span. sombra, shade (above).

SOME, a certain number or quantity, moderate in degree. (E.) ME. som, sum; pl. summe, somme, some. 'Summe seedis' = some seeds; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 4. 'Som in his bed, som in the depe see' = one man in his bed, another in the deep sea; Chaucer, C. T. 3033 (A 3031). AS. sum, some one, a certain one, one; pl. sume, some; Grein, ii. 493. + Icel. sumr; Dan. somme, pl.; Swed. somliga, pl. (=some-like); Goth. sums, some one; OHG. sum. β. All from a Teut. type **sumoz*, some one, a certain one; from **sum-*, weak grade of **sam-*, as in E. same; see Same. The like change from a to u (o) occurs in the suffix -some, which see. Der. some-body, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 121; some-how; some-thing = AS. sum ðing; some-time, ME. somtime, Chaucer, C. T. 1245 (A 1243); some-times, formed from sometime by the addition of the adverbial suffix -s, the sign of the gen. sing., not of the nom. pl. (cf. need-s, whil-s-t, tui-ce, &c.); some-what, ME. somhwat, Ancren Riwle, p. 44. l. 9 = AS. sum hwæt; some-where, ME. som-hwær, Ormulum, 6929; some-whither, Titus Andron. iv. i. 11.

-SOME, suffix. (E.) AS. -sum, as in wyn-sum (lit. love-some), E. win-some. A stronger grade of the same suffix appears in Icel. fríð-samr, peaceful, G. lang-sam, slow. See Some, above; and see Same.

SOMERSAULT, SOMERSET, a leap in which a man turns heels over head. (F.—Prov.—L.) Commonly pronounced summer-set, where -set is an unaccented form of -sault or -saut. Spelt summersault in Drayton's Polyolbion, song 6. l. 52; somersault in Palsgrave; somersaut in Harington's Ariosto, xxxv. 68 (Nares); see further in Rich. and Nares.—OF. sombresaut (in 1393, Supp. to Godefroy), MF. soubresault, 'a sobresault or summersault, an active trick in tumbling'; Cot.; F. soubresaut.—Prov. sobresaut (Hatzfeld); cf. Ital. soprasalto; where sopra = 'above, over, aloft, on high,' and salto = 'a leape, a skip, a jumpe, a bound, a sault'; Florio.—L. suprā, above; and saltum, acc. of saltus, a leap, bound, formed like saltus, pp. of salire, to leap. See Supra and Salient.

SOMNAMBULIST, one who walks in his sleep. (L.; with Gk. suffix.) A coined word; an early example is given in Todd's Johnson, from Bp. Porteus' Sermons, A.D. 1789. The suffix -ist = F. -iste, from L. -ista = Gk. -ιστης; as in baptist.—L. somnus, sleep; and ambul-āre, to walk. See Somniferous and Ambulation. Der. somnambul-ism.

SOMNIFEROUS, causing sleep. (L.) 'Somniferous potions'; Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, pt. i. sect. 2. memb. 1, subsect. 5. Coined by adding suffix -ous (properly = F. -eux, from L. -ōsus) to L. somnifer, sleep-bringing.—L. somni-, for somnus, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, to bring, cognate with E. Bear, verb. β. The L. somnus represents an older form **swepnos*, cognate with Skt. swapna-, sleep, and allied to sop-or, sleep; from √SWEP, to sleep; see further under Soporiferous. Brugmann, i. § 121.

SOMNOLENCE, sleepiness. (F.—L.) ME. somnolence, spelt sompnolence, Gower, C. A. ii. 92; bk. iv. 2703.—F. somnolence (Littre); OF. somnolence (Hatzfeld).—L. somnolentia, also somnulenta, sleepiness.—L. somnulēntus, sleepy; formed with suffix -lentus (as in tēnu-lentus, drunken) from somnu-s, sleep, allied to sopor, sleep; see Somniferous, Soporiferous. Der. somnolent, adj., from F. somnolent, L. somnulēntus.

SON, a male child or descendant. (E.) ME. sone (properly a dissyllable); Chaucer, C. T. 79; older form sune, Ancrén Riwle, p. 26, l. 1. AS. sunu, a son; Grein, ii. 496. + Du. zoon; Icel. sunr, sonr; Dan. søn; Swed. son; G. sohn; OHG. sunu; Goth. sunus. Teut. type **sunuz*. Cf. Lithuan. sūnus; Russ. suin; Gk. uíos (for **auíos*); Skt. sūnu-, a son, from Skt. sū, su, to beget, bear, bring forth; cf. OIrish suth, birth. Brugmann, i. §§ 104, 292. Thus son = one who is begotten, a child. Der. son-in-law; son-ship; a coined word.

SONATA, a kind of musical composition. (Ital.—L.) 'An Italian sonata'; Addison, Spectator, no. 179. 'Of a sonata, on his viol'; Prior, Alma, iii. 436.—Ital. sonata, 'a sounding, or fit of mirth'; Florio. Hence used in the technical sense.—L. sonāta, fem. of sonātus, pp. of sonāre, to sound; see Sound (3), and Sonnet.

SONG, that which is sung, a short poem or ballad. (E.) ME. song, Chaucer, C. T. 95. AS. sang; varied to song; Grein, ii. 390. Cf. AS. sang, 2nd grade of singan, to sing; see Sing. + Du. zang; Icel. söngr; Swed. sång; Dan. and G. sang; Goth. saggus (= sangus). Cf. Gk. ὀυδή, voice. Der. song-ster, used by Howell, L'Estrange, and Dryden (Todd, no references); from AS. sangystre (better sangestre), Voc. 308. 12, as a gloss to L. cantrix; formed with double suffix -es-tre from sang, a song; as to the force of the suffix, see Spinster. Hence songstr-ess, Thomson's Summer, 746; a coined word, made by needlessly affixing the F. suffix -esse (L. -issa, from Gk. -ισσα) to the E. songster, which was orig. used (as shown above) as a feminine sb. Also sing-song, Fuller's Worthies, Barkshire (R.); a reduplicated form.

SONNET, a rimed poem, of fourteen lines. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iii. 2. 69. See 'Songes and Sonettes' by the Earl of Surrey, in Tottell's Miscellany.—F. sonnet, 'a sonnet, or canzonet, a song (most commonly) of 14 verses'; Cot.—Ital. sonetto, 'a sonnet, canzonet'; Florio. Dimin. of sono, 'a sound, a tune'; Florio.—L. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound; see Sound (3). Der. sonnet-er, from Ital. sonettiere, 'a composer of sonnets'; Florio; the suffix -er (Ital. -iere) is due to L. suffix -ārius.

SONOROUS, loud-sounding. (L.) Properly sonórous; it will probab'y, sooner or later, become sonórous. 'Sonórous metal'; Milton, P. L. i. 540; and in Cotgrave. Doubtless taken directly from the L. sonórus, loud-sounding, by the change of -us to -ous, as in arducus, strenuous, and numerous other words. [The F. sonoreux, 'sonorous, loud,' is in Cotgrave; this would probably have produced an E. form sonorous, the length of the Latin penultimate being lost sight of.]—L. sonor (gen. sonóris), sound, noise; allied to sonus, sound; see Sound (3). Der. sonorous-ly, -ness. The ME. form sonoure occurs in the Book of St. Albans, fol. d 3.

SOON, immediately, quickly, readily. (E.) ME. sone (dissyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. 13442 (B 1702). AS. sōna, soon; Grein, ii. 465. + OSax. sāna, sāno; also OFries. sān, sōn; OSax. sān; OHG. sān. β. We find also Goth. suns, soon, at once, immediately, Matt. viii. 3.

SOOT, the black deposit due to smoke. (E.) ME. sōt (with long o); King Alisaunder, 6636. AS. sōt, soot; 'Fuligine, soote,' Voc. 404. 32; we also find ge-sōtig, adj. sooty (Toller). + Icel. sōt; Swed. sot; Dan. sod (for sot). + Lithuan. sōdis, soot; usually in the pl. form sōdzei; whence the adj. sodzotas, sooty, and the verb apsōdinti, to blacken with soot, besmut. β. The Lithuan. form is valuable as showing that the form soot is truly Teutonic; and suggests a derivation from Idg. sōd-, the ō-grade of √SED, to sit, rest upon. See Sit. (Noreen, § 146; Streitberg, § 95.) Der. soot-y, soot-i-ness.

SOOTH, adj., true; sb., truth. (E.) The adjectival sense is the older one. ME. soth (with long o), adj., true; Pricke of Conscience, 7687. Commoner as a sb., meaning 'the true thing,' hence 'the truth'; Chaucer, C. T. 847 (A 845). AS. sōð, adj., true (very common); Grein, ii. 460. Hence sōð, neuter sb., a true thing, truth; id. 462. The form sōð stands for **sanð*, the n being lost before the th, as in tōð, a tooth, which stands for **tanð*. + Icel. sannr (for **sanðr*); Swed. sann; Dan. sand. β. All from Teut. type **santhoz*, true; Fick, iii. 318; Idg. type **sontos*, short for **es-ont-*, orig. signifying 'being,' or 'that which is,' hence that which is real, truth; a present participial form from the √ES, to be. The same loss of initial e occurs in the L. -sens as found in præ-sens (stem præ-senti-), preserved in E. pre-sent; and again in the Skt. satya-, true (for **es-ant-ya*); so also we have G. sind = L. sunt = Skt. santi, they are, all answering to Idg. **ssanti*. The meaning 'true,' 'real,' appears already in the Skt. participle sat, a weaker form of sont = (e)sont. γ. Hence we conclude that the very interesting word sooth meant orig. no more than 'being,' and was at first the present participle of ES, to be. See Are, Essence, and Suttee. Der. for-sooth, = for a truth, AS. for sōð, as in 'wite þū for sōð' = know thou for a truth, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. ii. pr. 2, cap. vii. § 3. Also sooth-fast, true (obsolete), from AS. sōðfast, Grein, ii. 463, where the suffix is the same as in stead-fast and shame-fast (now corrupted to shame-faced). And see sooth-say, and soothe.

SOOTHE, to please with gentle words or flattery, to flatter, appease. (E.) The orig. sense is 'to assent to as being true,' hence to say yes to, to humour by assenting, and generally to humour. 'Sooth, to flatter immoderately, or hold vp one in his talke, and affirme it to be true, which he speaketh'; Baret (1580). 'Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?' Com. of Errors, iv. 4. 82. 'Soothing the humour of fantastic wits'; Venus and Adonis, 850. Cf. the expression 'words of sooth,' Rich. II, iii. 3. 136. 'I shall sooth it,' I must confirm it, Faïre Em, A. iii. sc. 11. ME. sōdien, to confirm, verify; whence isōðet, confirmed, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 261, l. 8. AS. ge-sōðian (where the prefix ge- makes no difference), to prove to be true, confirm; Dooms of Edward and Guthrum, sect. 6, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 170. Cf. AS. gesōð, a parasite, flatterer, in a gloss (Bosworth).—AS. sōð, true; see Sooth. Cognate verbs occur in the Icel. sanna, Dan. sande, to verify, confirm.

SOOTHSAY, to foretell, tell the truth beforehand. (E.) In Shak. Antony, i. 2. 52. Compounded of sooth and say; see Sooth and Say. We find the sb. soothsayer, spelt soþ-zigger (in the OKentish dialect) in the Avenbite of Inwytt, p. 256, l. 3 from bottom; spelt sothsaiar, Gower, C. A. iii. 164; bk. vii. 2348. We also find the AS. sb. sōðsagen, a true saying, in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 250, l. 11; and the adj. sōðsagol, truth-speaking, Voc. 316. 9. Der. sooth-say-er; sooth-say-ing, Acts, xvi. 16.

SOP, anything soaked or dipped in liquid to be eaten. (E.) ME. sop, soppe; 'a sop in wyn,' Chaucer, C. T. 336 (A 334); spelt soppe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 175. AS. **soppe*, not found; but we find the strong form sopp (Napier's Glosses, 56. 10); the derived verb soppi-gan, to sop, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 228, last line; and the compound sb. sop-cuppe (written sóp-cuppe), a sop-cup, in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 553, 554; so that the word is certainly English. From Teut. **sup-*, weak grade of sūpan-, to sup, as seen in AS. sūpan, to sup; see Sup. + Icel. soppa, f., a sop; soppa af vini = a sop in wine; cf. sopinn, pp. of sūpa, to sup; cf. also sopi, a sup, sip, mouthful. Cf. MDu. soppe, 'a sop'; Hexham. ¶ Soup is a F. form from the same root, and has been borrowed back again into some Teutonic tongues, as e.g. in the case of G. suppe, soup, broth. Der. sop, verb, spelt soppe in Levins, from AS. soppigan, to sop, mentioned above. Also sopp-y, soaking, wet; sops-in-wine (see Nares). Also milk-sop = one who sops milk; see Milksop. And see Soup.

SOPHIST, a captious reasoner. (F.—L.—Gk.) Bacon refers to the Sophists; Adv. of Learning, bk. ii. c. xiv. § 6. But the form most in use in old authors was not sophist, but sophister. Frith has sophisme, sophistry, and sophister all in one sentence; Works, p. 44, col. 2. Shak. has sophister, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 191; Palsgrave has sophyster. The final -er is needlessly added, just as in philosoph-er, and was due to an OF. form sophistre (sophistre in Godefroy, x. 689), substituted for the true form sophiste. — F. sophiste, 'a sophister'; Cot. — Late L. sophista. — Gk. σοφιστής, a cunning or skilful man; also, a Sophist, a teacher of arts and sciences for money; see Liddell and Scott. — Gk. σοφίζειν, to instruct, lit. to make wise. — Gk. σοφός, wise. Brugmann, i. § 339. Der. sophist-r-y, ME. sophistrie, Chaucer, Leg. of Good Women, 137, from F. sophisterie, 'sophistry'; Cot. Also sophist-ic, from L. sophisticus, which from Gk. σοφιστικός; sophist-ic-al, sophist-ic-al-ly; sophist-ic-ate, used in the pp. sophisticatid by Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 110, from Late L. sophisticatus, pp. of sophisticare, to corrupt, adulterate; cf. 'sophisticate and countrefeted'; Maundeville, Trav. ch. v. p. 52. Also sophism (used by Frith as above), from F. sophisme, 'a sophisme, fallacy, trick of philosophy'; Cot., which from L. sophisma = Gk. σόφισμα, a device, captious argument. Also philosophy, q. v.

SOPHY, a (former) title of the Shah of Persia. (Pers. — Arab.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 25; Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 197. — Pers. Safī, used as a title, A. D. 1505–1736; 'so named from Ismael Safī, the first monarch of this house . . . from a private ancestor of that prince, called Safiyū'd-dīn (the purity of religion), who was contemporary with Tamerlane'; Rich. Dict. p. 938. — Arab. safiy, pure. ¶ Not to be confused with Sufī, a Moslem mystic; from Arab. sūfiy, intelligent. See Devic; and Notes on E. Etym., p. 273. But see Yule, who says that Safī was also a Sufī (devotee).

SOPORIFEROUS, causing or inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporiferous medicines'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 975. Coined by adding the suffix -ous (properly = F. -eux, from L. -ōsus) to L. sopōrifer, sleep-inducing. — L. sopōri-, decl. stem of sopor, sleep; and -fer, bringing, from ferre, cognate with E. Bear, verb. β. L. sopor is from ✓SWEP, to sleep, appearing in Skt. svap, to sleep, Gk. ὑπνος, sleep, AS. swefen, a dream; see Brugmann, i. § 551. See soporific and somniferous.

SOPORIFIC, inducing sleep. (L.) 'Soporific or anodyne virtues'; Locke, Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 23 (R.). A coined word, as if from L. **sopōrificus*; from sopōri-, decl. stem of sopor, sleep; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make. See Soporiferous and Fact. And see Somniferous.

SOPRANO, the highest kind of female voice. (Ital. — L.) A musical term. — Ital. soprano, 'sovereign, supreme, also, the treble in musicke'; Florio. — Late L. superānus, sovereign; see Sovereign. Doublet, sovereign.

SORB, the fruit of the service-tree. (F. — L.) Palsgrave has: 'Sorbe, a kynde of frute, [F.] sorbe.' — L. sorbum, the fruit of the service-tree; cf. sorbus, the service-tree. See Service-tree.

SORCERY, casting of lots, divination by the assistance of evil spirits, magic. (F. — L.) ME. sorcerie, Chaucer, C. T. 5175 (B 755); King Alisaunder, 478. — OF. sorcerie, casting of lots, magic. — OF. sorcier, a sorcerer. — Late L. sortiārius, a teller of fortunes by the casting of lots, a sorcerer; Late L. sortiāre, to cast lots, used A. D. 1350 (Ducange); cf. L. sortiri, to obtain by lot. — L. sorti-, decl. stem of sors, a lot; see Sort. Der. sorcer-er, Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 49, where the final -er is needlessly repeated, just as in poulter-er, upholster-er; the form sorcer would have sufficed to represent the OF. sorcier mentioned above; cf. ME. sorser (for sorcer), a sorcerer; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1579. Also sorcer-ess, coined as a fem. form of sorcer-er by the addition of -ess (F. -esse, Lat. -issa, Gk. -ισσα) to the short form sorcer as appearing in sorcer-y; the ME. sorceresse occurs in Gower, C. A. iii. 49; bk. vi. 1434; from AF. sorceresse, French Chron. of London (Camden Soc.), p. 3.

SORDID, dirty, mean, vile. (F. — L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 5. 23. — F. sordide, 'sordid'; Cot. — L. sordidus, vile, mean, orig. dirty. — L. sordi-, from sordēs, dirt, smuttiness, orig. blackness; allied to Russ. sor, filth. See Brugmann, i. p. 1092. Der. sordid-ly, -ness.

SORE, wounded, tender or susceptible of pain, grieved, severe. (E.) ME. sor (with long o), grievous, Ancr. Riwele, p. 208, l. 2; commoner as sore (dissyllabic), adverb, Chaucer, C. T. 7961 (E 85). AS. sār, painful; Grein, ii. 391; the change from ā to long o being regular, as in stone, bone, from AS. stān, bān. + Du. zeer, sore; also as adv. sorely, very much; Icel. sārr, sore, aching; Swed. sār; OHG. sēr, wounded, painful; cf. OHG. sēro, mod. G. sehr, sorely, extremely, very; G. ver-sehren, to wound, lit. to make sore. β. All from Teut. type **sairoz*, sore; Fick, iii. 313. Cf. OIrish sáeth, sóeth, tribulation. Der. sore, adv., ME. sore, AS. sāre, Grein; sore-ly, sore-ness. Also sore, sb., orig. a neuter sb., and merely the neuter of the adjective, occurring in AS. sār (Grein), cognate with Du. zeer, Icel. sār, Swed. sār, Goth. sair, OHG. sēr, all used as sbs. Also sorr-y, q. v.

SORREL (1), a plant allied to the dock. (F. — MHG.) 'Sorell, an herbe'; Palsgrave. — OF. sorel, 'the herb sorrell or sour-dock'; Cot. Mod. F. surelle (Littre). So named from its sour taste; formed with the suffix -el (L. -ellus) from MHG. sūr (G. sauer), sour, cognate with E. Sour, q. v. Hence also we find AS. sūre, sorrel, Cockayne's Leechdoms, Gloss. to vol. ii; from AS. sūr, sour.

SORREL (2), of a reddish-brown colour. (F. — Teut.) 'Sorrell, colour of an horse, sorrel'; Palsgrave. He also gives: 'Sorell, a yonge bucke'; this is properly a buck of the third year, spelt sorel, L. L. iv. 2. 60, and doubtless named from its colour. ME. sourell, Book of St. Albans, fol. e 4. — OF. sorel, a sorrel horse; Chanson de Roland, 1379. A dimin. form from OF. sor, a sorrel horse, id. 1943; F. saur, adj. 'sorrell of colour, whence harenc saur, a red herring'; Cot. Hence saure, sb. m., 'a sorrell colour, also, a sorrell horse'; id. Cf. Ital. soro, a sorrel horse, also spelt sauro; see Diez. — Low G. soor, sear, dried, dried or withered up; Du. zoor, 'dry, withered, or seare', Hexham; cognate with E. Sear, adj., q. v. The reference is to the brown colour of withered leaves; cf. Shakespeare's 'the sear, the yellow leaf', Macb. v. 3. 23. The F. harenc saur, explained by Cotgrave as a red herring, meant originally a dried herring; indeed Cot. also gives F. sorer, 'to dry in the smoak,' formed from Low G. soor. See soures, sorrels; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 429.

SORROW, grief, affliction. (E.) ME. sorwe, Chaucer, C. T. 1221 (A 1219); also sorje, Will. of Shoreham, p. 32, l. 7. AS. sorg, sorh, sorrow, anxiety; gen. dat. and acc. sorge (whence ME. sorje, sorwe); Grein, ii. 465. + Du. zorg, care, anxiety; Icel. sorg, care; Dan. and Swed. sorg; G. sorge; Goth. saurga, sorrow, grief; whence saurgan, to grieve. β. All from Teut. type **sorgā*, f., care, solicitude; Fick, iii. 329. Related to Lithuan. sirgti (1 p. s. pr. sergu), to be ill, to suffer; whence sarginti, to take care of a sick person, like G. sorgen, to take care of. And cf. OIrish serg, sickness. γ. It is quite clear that sorrow is entirely unconnected with sore, of which the orig. Teut. type was **sairoz*, from a ✓SEI (probably 'to wound'); but the two words were so confused in English at an early period that the word sorry owes its present sense to that confusion; see Sorry. Der. sorrow-ful, answering to AS. sorgful, Grein, ii. 466; sorrow-ful-ly, sorrow-ful-ness.

SORRY, sore in mind, afflicted, grieved. (E.) Now regarded as closely connected with sorrow, with which it has no etymological connexion at all, though doubtless the confusion between the words is of old standing. The spelling sorry with two r's is etymologically wrong, and due to the shortening of the o; the o was orig. long; and the true form is sor-y, which is nothing but the sb. sore with the suffix -y (AS. -ig), formed exactly like ston-y from stone, bon-y from bone, and gor-y from gore (which has not yet been turned into gorry). We find the spelling soarye as late as in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 651, ed. Arber, p. 64, l. 18. The orig. sense was wounded, afflicted, and hence miserable, sad, pitiable, as in the expression 'in a sorry plight.' Cf. 'a salt and sorry [painful] rheum'; Oth. iii. 4. 51. ME. sory (with long o and one r), often with the mod. sense of sorrowful; 'Sori for her synnes', P. Plowman, B. x. 75. Also spelt sary, Pricke of Conscience, 3468. AS. sārig, sad; 'sārig for his synnum' = sorry for his sins, Grein, ii. 392; sār-nys, sorrow, lit. soreness, Ælfric's Saints' Lives, vi. 321. Cf. sār-līc, lit. sore-like, used with the same sense of 'sad'. Formed with suffix -ig (as in stān-ig = ston-y) from AS. sār, a sore, neut. sb., due to the adj. sār, sore. See Sore. Cognate words appear in Du. zeerig, full of sores, Swed. sārig, sore; words which preserve the orig. sense. Der. sorri-ly, sorri-ness.

SORT, a lot, class, kind, species, order, manner. (F. — L.) 'Sorte, a state, sorte'; Palsgrave. A fem. sb., corresponding to which is the masc. sb. sort, a lot, in Chaucer, C. T. 846 (A 844). — OF. sorte, sb. fem. 'sort, manner, form, fashion, kind, quality, calling'; Cot. Related to F. sort, sb. masc. 'a lot, fate, luck,' &c.; id. Cf. Ital. sorta, sort, kind, sorte, fate, destiny; Florio gives only sorte, 'chance, fate, fortune, also the state, quality, function, calling, kinde, vocation or condition of any man,' whence the notion of sort (=kind) easily follows. 'Sort was frequently used in the sense of a company's assemblage (as in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 9. 5), as lot is in vulgar usage'; Wedgwood. All the forms are ultimately due to L. sortis, acc. of sors, lot, destiny, chance, condition, state. Probably some; to serere, to connect, and to seriēs, order; see Series. Brugge, pl. i. § 516 (1). Der. sort, verb, L. L. L. i. 1. 261; as-sort, q. v. from sort, q. v. Also sort-er, sb.; sort-ance, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 1. 11; er-y, q. v.

SORTIE, a sally of troops. (F. — L.) A modern military term, and mere French. — F. sortie, 'an issue, going forth'; Cot. sortie, 'issued, gone forth,' id.; which is the pp. of sortir, 'to issue, to rise, rebound,' Minsheu, obsolete in this sense. Also Ital. sortita, sally; from sortire, to make a sally, go out. β. Accor. AS. sum

Diez and others, Ital. sortire, to sally, is quite a different word from sortire, to elect (the latter being plainly connected with L. sortiri, to obtain by lot); whereas Ital. sortire, to sally, MSpan. surtir, to rise, answer to a L. type **surrectire*, to rouse or rise up, formed from surrectum, supine of surgere, to rise; see Source. We may further note Ital. sorto, used as the pp. of sorgere, to rise; showing that the contraction of **surrectire* to sortire presents no difficulty; cf. Span. surto, pp. of surgir, to rise; and see Resort.

SOT, a stupid fellow, a drunkard. (E.) ME. sot, in early use; Layamon, 1442; Ancrén Riwe, p. 66, l. 1; in the sense of 'foolish.' We find sotscipe = sot-ship, i.e. folly, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1131; ed. Earle, p. 260, l. 8. Spelt sott, Ælfric, Saints' Lives, 13. 132. The entry 'Sottus, sot,' is in an A. S. Glossary of the 11th century; in Voc. 316. 7; also 'Stolidos, sot,' in Napier's Glosses, 56. 173. Prob. a true Teut. word, though first appearing in the Late L. sottus, ab. A. D. 800 (Ducange); whence also F. sot. β. We also find MDu. zot, 'a fool or a sot,' Hexham; and MHG. sote. γ. Franck connects it with Du. zwet-sen, to tattle, to brag, G. schwätzen, to tattle; from **sot-*, weak grade of **swet-*. It is known that Theodulf, bishop of Orleans, punned upon the words Scotus and sottus (Scot and sot), in a letter to Charles the Great; see Ducange, s. v. sottus. ¶ Distinct from Span. zote, a blockhead, Ital. zotico, for which see Körting, § 4700. Der. sott-ish, sott-ish-ly, sott-ish-ness.

SOU, a French copper coin, five centimes. (F.—L.) Merely borrowed from F. sou; Cotgrave uses sous as an E. word.—OF. sol, later sou, 'the sous, or French shilling, whereof ten make one of ours,' Cot. The value varied.—L. solidus, adj. solid; also, as sb., the name of a coin, still preserved in the familiar symbols l. s. d. (= libræ, solidi, denarii). See Solid and Soldier. Der. soldier, q. v.

SOUBRETTE, a maid-servant, in French comedy. (F.—Prov.—L.) F. soubrette (see Hatzfeld).—Prov. soubreto, fem. of soubret, affected; allied to soubra, vb., to pass over, leave on one side, also to exceed, surpass.—L. superāre, to surpass, surmount.—L. superus, upper; allied to super, above; see Super- (prefix). Cf. the E. phr. 'a superior person.'

SOUBRIQUET, a nickname; see Sobriquet.

SOUCHONG, a kind of tea. (Chinese.) Yule (p. 691) explains it from Cantonese siu-chung, for Chin. siao-chung, 'little sort.' Douglas (Dict. of Amoy vernacular) gives it as siò-chióng-tê, souchong tea; and explains chióng as meaning, literally, 'seed.'

SOUGH, a sighing sound, as of wind in trees. (Scand.) Stanyhurst has soughing, sb., tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 631, ed. Arber, p. 63. 'My heart, for fear, gae sough for sough;' Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 7. We also find ME. swough, Chaucer, C. T. 1981 (A 1979), 3619; better swogh, as in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 759, where it has the sense of 'swaying motion;' formed as a sb. from the AS. verb swōgan, to sound, resound, make a noise, as in swōgað windas = the winds whistle; Grein, ii. 516. [The AS. sb. is swēg, with mutation of ō to ē.] Cf. OSax. swōgan, to rustle (Heliand); Icel. -sügr, as in arn-sügr, the rustling sound of an eagle's wings. Probably (like sigh, sob) of imitative origin. See Surf.

SOUL, the seat of life and intellect in man. (E.) ME. soule, Chaucer, C. T. 9010 (E 1134); also saule, Layamon, 27634; gen. sing. soule, Gower, C. A. i. 39; prol. 1052; pl. soulen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 30, l. 16. AS. sāwel, sāwol, sāwul; also sāwl, sāwle; gen. sing. sāwle; Grein, ii. 392. +Du. ziel; Dan. sjæl; Swed. själ; G. seele; Goth. saiwala. β. All from Teut. type **saiwalōn-*, f. the soul. See Brugmann, i. § 200. Der. soul-ed, high-soul-ed, soul-less.

SOUND (1), adj., whole, perfect, healthy, strong. (E.) ME. sound, Chaucer, C. T. 5570 (B 1150). AS. sund, sound; Grein, ii. 494. +Du. gezond (with prefix ge-); Swed. and Dan. sund; G. gesund (with prefix ge-). By some connected with L. sānus, used with like meanings; see Sane. But it is rather for **swundōz*, from the weak grade swunp- of Teut. **swenp-*, whence Teut. **swenpōz*, Goth. swinths, AS. swiþ, strong. Der. sound-ly, sound-ness.

SOUND (2), a strait of the sea, narrow passage of water. (E.) 'E. sound, King Horn, 628, in Ritson's Met. Romances, ii. 117; of Sund, Cursor Mundi, 621. AS. sund, (1) a swimming, (2) a song, to swim, (3) a strait of the sea, so called because it could be sonnet across; Grein, ii. 494. Hence AS. sund-hengest, a 'sound-Florio, i.e. a ship. +Icel., Dan., Swed., and G. sund. β. From sonnet-it. type **swundōz*; formed, with suffix -dōz, from swun-, suffix-made of AS. swimman, to swim; see Swim. Fick, iii. 362.

SO, the swimming-bladder of a fish; spelt sounde, Prompt. probab. 466; this is merely another sense of the same word; Milton, sound; MDan. sund; cf. Icel. sund-magi, lit. sound-maw, from the swimming-bladder of a fish.

D (3), a noise. (F.—L.) The final d (after n) is ex-just as in the vulgar gownd for gown, in the nautical use of an E. fr. ME. boun (ready), and in the obsolete round, to whisper, for roun. ME. soun, Chaucer, C. T. 4983 (B 563); King Ali-saunders, 772; spelt son, Will. of Palerne, 39.—F. son, 'a sound,' Cot.—L. sonum, acc. of sonus, a sound. +Skt. svana-, sound; AS. ge-swin (<**swen-*), melody. From ✓SWEN, to sound, resound; cf. Skt. svan, to sound; Fick, i. 256. Brugmann, ii. § 519. Der. sound, verb, ME. sounen, Chaucer, C. T. 567 (A 565), from F. sonner, L. sonāre. Also see son-ata, sonn-et, son-or-ous, per-son, par-son, as-son-ant, con-son-ant, dis-son-ant, re-son-ant, re-sound, uni-son.

SOUND (4), to measure the depth of water with a plummet, to probe, test, try. (F.—Scand.) 'I sounde, as a schyppe-man soundeth in the see with his plommet to knowe the deppeeth of the see, ʒe pilote;' Palsgrave. ME. sounden, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 535.—F. sonder, 'to sound, prove, try, feel, search the depth of,' Cot., cf. sonde, 'a mariner's sounding-plummet,' id. β. Diez supposes that this answers to a L. form **subundare*, to submerge; a similar contraction possibly occurs in the instance of sombre as connected with sub umbrā. If so, the etymology is from L. sub, under; and unda, a wave; see Sub- and Undulate. γ. But the Span. sonda means, not only a sounding-line, but also a sound or channel; and it is far more likely that the F. sonder was from the sb. sonde, and that this was taken from the Scand. word sund, a narrow strait or channel of water; see Sound (2). This seems to be corroborated by the following entries in Ælfric's Glossary, pr. in Voc. 182. 34, 35: 'Bolidis, sundgyrd;' and 'Cataporates, sund-line.' So also: 'Bolidis, sundgyrd in scipe, ððe rāp, i. met-rāp' = a sounding-rod in a ship, or a rope, i.e. a measuring rope; id. 358. 17. Here bolidis represents Gk. βολίς (gen. βολίδος), a missile, a sounding-lead; and sund-gyrd = sound-yard, i.e. sounding-rod. Similarly sund-line must mean a sounding-line, let down over the prow (κατὰ πρῶπον). Moreover sund-gerd is a very old word, as it occurs in the Corpus Gloss. 319 (8th cent.). There is always a probability in favour of a nautical term being of Scand. or E. origin. But it is remarkable that there is no trace of the verb except in French, Span., and Portuguese; so that we may have taken the verb from French; while this again was borrowed from the Scand. sund = AS. sund, a sound. Der. sound-ing.

SOUNDER, a herd of wild swine. (E.) 'Sounder, a term used by hunters for a company of wild Bores,' Phillips (1658). [Not a single boar, as sometimes erroneously said.] ME. sounder, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1440. AS. sūnor; ONorthumb. sūnor, Luke, viii. 32; OMerc. sūner, Matt. viii. 32 (Rushworth MS.). +OHG. swaner, a sounder. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 274.

SOUP, the juice or liquid obtained from boiling bones, &c., seasoned. (F.—Teut.) In Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 162.—F. soupe, 'a sop, potage or broth, brewis,' Cot.—F. souper, 'to sup,' Cot.—Low G. supen, to sup; cf. Du. zuipen, AS. sūpan; see Sup.

SOUR, having an acid taste, bitter, acrid. (E.) 'Sour douz,' leaven; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 33. AS. sūr; 'sūr meolc' = sour milk, Voc. 129. i. +Du. zuur; Icel. sürr; Dan. suur; Swed. sur; OHG. sūr; G. sauer. β. All from Teut. type **sūroz*, sour; Fick, iii. 327. Further related to W. sur, sour; Russ. surovuii, raw, coarse, harsh, rough; Lithuan. surus, salt. Brugmann, i. § 114. Der. sour-ly, sour-ness; sour, verb, Cor. v. 4. 18; sour-ish. Also sorr-el (1).

SOURCE, rise, origin, spring. (F.—L.) ME. sours, Chaucer, C. T. 7925 (E 49); said of the 'rise' of a bird in flight, id. 7520 (D 1938).—OF. sorse, surse, sorce, surce, later source, 'a source,' Cot. Here sorse is the fem. of sors, the old pp. of sordre (mod. F. sourdre), to rise. The OF. sordre is contracted (with intercalated d) from L. surgere, to rise. See Surge. Der. re-source; and see sortie, re-surrection, souse (2).

SOUSE (1), pickle. (F.—L.) 'A soused [pickled] gurnet,' 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 13. ME. sowse, souse. 'Succidium, Anglice souse;' Voc. 614. 20. Hence also ME. sowser, another form of saucer; id. 661. 17. In fact, souse is a mere doublet of sauce.—OF. sause, later sauce, 'a sauce;' see Sauce. Der. souse, verb, to pickle, immerse in brine. 'I sowse fyshe, I laye it in souse to preserve it,' Palsgrave.

SOUSE (2), SOWSE, to swoop down upon. (F.—L.) 'Spread thy broad wing, and souse on all mankind,' Pope, Epil. to Satires, Dial. ii. 15. See Shak. K. John, v. 2. 150; Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 8. It was a term of falconry, and orig. applied, not to the downward, but the upward rapid flight of a bird of prey; see Chaucer, C. T. 7520 (D 1938); House of Fame, ii. 36; where it is spelt sours. But the r is lost in the Book of St. Albans, fol. d 1, back, where a hawk is said to take a bird 'at the mount or at the souce.' This ME. sours is the same word as the mod. E. source. See Source. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 275. ¶ Quite distinct from Swed. susa, to rustle, G. sausen, &c.

SOUTH, the point of the compass where we see the sun at mid-day. (E.) ME. south, Chaucer, C. T. 4913 (B 493). AS. sūð, Grein, ii. 492; also sūða, sb. masc., the south, southern region; sūðan, adv., from the south. +Du. zuid, south; zuiden, southern (as in Zuider Zee, southern sea); zuiden, the south; Icel. suðr, old form also sunnr, south; sunnan, adv., from the south; cf. suðrey, southern island, pl. Suðreyjar, Sodor, the Hebrides. +Dan. syd, south, sönden, southern; Swed. syd, south, söder, the south, sunnan, the south; OHG. sund, south, mod. G. süd; OHG. sundan, the south, also, from the south, G. süden. β. All from the Teut. base **sunth-*; perhaps allied to Sun, q. v. ¶ The loss of n before th is regular in AS.; so that sūð is for **sund*. Der. south-east, south-east-ern, south-east-er-ly; south-west, south-west-ern, south-west-er-ly; south-ward (see Toward). Also south-ern, ME. sothern, Chaucer, C. T. 17353 (I 42), AS. sūðerne (Grein); cognate with Icel. suðrænn and OHG. sundrōni; see Northern. Hence south-er-ly, for south-ern-ly. Also southernwood, a kind of wormwood, AS. sūðerne wudu, as coming from southern Europe.

SOUVENIR, a remembrancer, memorial. (F.—L.) Modern.—F. souvenir, sb., 'a remembrance'; Cot. It is merely the infin. mood souvenir, 'to remember,' used substantively; cf. Leisure, Pleasure. —L. subuenire, to come up to one's aid, to occur to one's mind. —L. sub, under, near; and uenire, cognate with E. come; see Sub- and Come.

SOVEREIGN, supreme, chief, principal. (F.—L.) The g is well known to be intrusive; as if from the notion that a sovereign must have to do with reigning. We find 'soueraigne power'; Hamlet, ii. 2. 27 (first folio); but the spelling with g does not seem to be much older than about A.D. 1570, when we find soveraygne in Levins. Palsgrave (A.D. 1530) has soverayne. ME. souerein (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 6630 (D 1048). —OF. soverain (Burguy); later souverein, 'sovereign, princely'; Cot. —Late L. acc. super-ānum, chief, principal; formed with suffix -ānus from L. super, above; see Super-. Der. sovereign, sb., a peculiar use of the adj.; sovereign-ty, ME. souverainete, Chaucer, C. T. 6620 (D 1038), from OF. soverainete, later souveraineté, 'soveraignty,' Cot. See Soprano.

SOW (1), to scatter seed, plant. (E.) ME. sowen, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 3; strong verb, pt. t. sew, id. xiii. 31; pp. sowen, sowun, id. xiii. 19. AS. sāwan, pt. t. sēow, pp. sāwen; Grein, ii. 392. The long ā becomes long o by rule; the pt. t. now in use is sowed, but the correct form is sew (in prov. E.); the like is true for the verb to mow (AS. māwan). +Du. zaaijen; Icel. sā; Dan. saa; Swed. så; OHG. sāwen, G. säen; Goth. saian. β. All from a Teut. root **sē-* = Idg. √SĒ, to sow. Further related to W. hau, to sow; Lithuan. sėti (pres. sing. sėju, I sow); Russ. sieiat(e), to sow; L. serere (pt. t. sē-uit, pp. sa-tum); Gk. ἵημι (for **σῑ-σῑ-μι*), I send, throw. The orig. sense of the root was prob. 'to cast.' Brugmann, i. §§ 132, 310. Der. see-d, q. v.; and, from the same root, se-min-al, dis-se-min-ate.

SOW (2), a female pig; an oblong piece of metal in a lump larger than a pig of metal. (E.) ME. sowe, Chaucer, C. T. 2021 (A 2019); spelt zoje (for soghe), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 61; suwe, Ancrén Riwle, p. 204. The w is substituted for an older g. AS. sugu, contracted form sū; Grein, ii. 492. +Du. zog; Icel. sýr; Dan. so; Swed. sugga, so; OHG. sū; G. sau. Also W. hwch; Irish suig; L. sūs; Gk. ūs or ōūs; Zend. hu, a boar (Fick, i. 801). All from the √SŪ, to produce; as in Skt. su, to generate, to produce, sūsh, to bring forth; from the prolific nature of the sow. 2. In the sense of 'a large mass of metal,' see explanation under Pig; we find 'sowe of leed' in Palsgrave. Der. sow-thistle, sowethystell (Palsgrave); AS. sugeþistel, Gloss. to vol. iii. of A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; also soil (2). And see swine.

SOWANS, SOWENS, flummery; made by steeping the husks of oatmeal in water. (C.) 'Sowens, with butter instead of milk to them, is always The Halloween Supper'; Burns, note to last st. of Halloween. Pronounced (suw'anz). —Gael. sùghan, 'the juice of sowens'; Macleod. —Gael. sùgh, juice; allied to sùgh, vb., to drain, to suck in. +L. sūgere, to suck; G. sūcan, to suck; cf. AS. socian, to soak. The sense is 'soakings.'

SOY, a kind of sauce. (Japanese.) 'Japan, from whence the true soy comes'; W. Dampier, A New Voyage, ed. 1699, ii. pt. 1, p. 28. And see tr. of Thunberg's Travels, vol. iv. p. 121, ed. 1795 (Todd). 'The Japanese . . . prepare with them [the seeds of the Dolichos soja, a kind of bean] the sauce termed sooja, which has been corrupted into soy;' English Cyclopædia. The Japanese word is properly shōyu, which is the name for the sauce made from a bean called daidzu. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 277; C. P. G. Scott, Malayan Words, p. 65.

SPA, a place where there is a spring of mineral water. (Belgium.) Called spaw in Johnson's Dict., and in Bailey, ed. 1735. The name, now generally used, is taken from that of Spa, in Belgium, S.W. of Liège, where there is a mineral spring, famous even in the 17th century. 'The spaw in Germany'; Fuller's Worthies, Kent. 'Spaw, Spa, a town in Liege, famous for medicinal waters'; Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. 'The Spawe'; Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 376 (1572).

SPACE, room, interval, distance. (F.—L.) ME. space (disyllabic), Assumption of Mary, ed. Lumby, 178; Chaucer, C. T. 35. —F. espace, 'space'; Cot. —L. spatium, a space; lit. 'that which is enlarged'; cf. Skt. sphāy, to swell, increase, sphāla, enlarged. See Speed. Der. space, verb; space-i-ous, from F. spacieux (for which Cot. has 'spatieux, spacious'), from L. spatiōsus, roomy; space-i-ous-ly, space-i-ous-ness. ¶ The prefixed e in F. espace is due to the difficulty of sounding words beginning with sp in French; in English, where there is no such difficulty, the e is dropped.

SPADE (1), an instrument to dig with. (E.) ME. spade (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 555 (A 553); Ancrén Riwle, p. 384, l. 16. AS. spædu; 'Vanga, vel fossorium, spædu'; Voc. 333. 39; later spade, id. 550. 26. Also spadu, id. 106. 19. +Du. spade; Icel. spaði; Dan. and Swed. spade; G. spate, spaten; Gk. σπάθη, a broad blade, of wood or metal, a spatula, blade of an oar, blade of a sword, spathe or sheath of a flower (whence L. spatha was borrowed, which further gave rise to F. épée, OF. espee, a sword). Der. spade (at cards); spaddle, the same word as paddle (2), q. v.; spat-u-la, q. v.; spad-ille, spelt spadillio in Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 49, the ace of spades at the game of quadrille, F. spadille, borrowed from Span. espadilla, a small sword, the ace of spades, dimin. of spada, a sword, from L. spatha < Gk. σπάθη. And see epaulet.

SPADE (2), a suit at cards. (Span.—L.—Gk.) The name spade is really a substitution for the Spanish name espada, meaning (1) a sword, (2) a spade at cards; compare the etymology of spadille, given under Spade (1). The Spanish cards have swords for spades; see Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, b. iv. c. 2, § 20; Archæologia, viii. 135. ¶ Spade (1) and spade (2) are cognate, though one is E., and the other Gk.

SPALPEEN, a mean fellow. (Irish.) 'The poor harvest-men who now pass in troops from Ireland to England are now called spalpeens, with a show of contempt or disrespect'; MS. ab. 1740, in N. and Q. 3 S. viii. 307. And see under Buckeen in Davies, Suppl. Glossary. Sometimes introduced into novels relating to Ireland. —Irish spailpín, a mean fellow, rascal, stroller; from spailp, a beau, also pride, self-conceit. +Gael. spailpean, a beau, fop, mean fellow; from spailp, pride, self-conceit; cf. spailp, verb, to strut, walk affectedly.

SPAN, to measure, extend over, grasp, embrace. (E.) ME. spannen, very rare. 'Thenne the kinge spanes his spere' = then the king grasps his spear; Avowyn of Arthur, st. xiii. l. 1. AS. spannan (pt. t. spēnn), to bind; gespannan, to bind, connect; Grein, ii. 467, i. 456. +OHG. spannan, to extend, connect, a strong verb, pt. t. spān; hence G. spannen, weak verb. Further related words appear in the Du. spannen, pt. t. spande (weak), but pp. gespannen (strong), to stretch, span, put horses to; Dan. spānde (for spānne), to stretch, strain, span, buckle; Swed. spänna, to stretch, strain, draw, extend; Icel. spenna (= spannja, a causal form), to span, clasp. β. All from the Teut. verb **spannan-*, to extend, orig. a reduplicating verb with pt. t. **spespann*; Fick, iii. 352. The base SPAN is extended from √SPA, to span, extend; cf. Gk. σπάειν, to draw, draw out; Brugmann, ii. § 661. Perhaps allied to Spin. Der. span, sb., a space of about 9 inches, the 'space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger when the fingers are most extended, also, the stretch of an arch or a space of time, from AS. span (better spānn); we find 'span, vel hand-bred' = span, or hand-breadth, in Voc. 158. 11; so also Du. span, Icel. spönn, Dan. spand (for spānn), Swed. spann, G. spanne. Hence span-long, Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 2, l. 23 from end; span-counter, a game, 2 Hen. VI. iv. 2. 166. ¶ For span-new, see that word, which is unconnected with the present one.

SPANCEL, a kind of fetter for a horse or cow. (E.) Ray has: 'Spancel, a rope to tie a cow's hinder legs'; as a N. Country Word. From ME. spann-en, to tie, fasten; and the equivalent of AS. sāl, ME. sol, prov. E. sole, a rope. The latter vowel is prob. due to AS. sāl-an, vb., to tie (for **sāl-ian*), or to Icel. seil, a rope; cf. prov. E. seal, to bind with a rope. +Du. spanseil, G. spanseil, a spancel. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 277.

SPANDREL, the triangular space included between the arch of a doorway, &c., and a part of a rectangle formed by the outer mouldings over and beside it. (F.—L.) History obscure; an architectural term. Older forms spaundre (Halliwell); splanndrel (Ogilvie's Dict.). Lit. 'level space.' From OF. esplan-er, to flatten, to level. —L. ex, out; and planāre, to make flat, from plānus, flat; see Plain and Esplanade. The F. sb. was prob. founded on Ital. spianatura, a levelling (Barretti).

SPANGLE, a small plate of shining metal. (E.) ME. spangel, of which the sense seems to have been a lozenge-shaped spangle used to ornament a bridle; see Prompt. Parv., p. 313, note 3, and p. 467, note 1. It is the dimin. of spang, a metal fastening; with suffix -el (which is commonly French, but occasionally English, as in kernel from corn). 'Our plumes, our spangs and al our queint aray;' Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 377; 'With glittering spangs that did like starres appeare,' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 45. AS. spange, a metal clasp or fastening, Grein, ii. 467; also gespong, id. i. 456. +MDu. spange; 'een spange van metael, a thinnie peece of mettle, or a spangle;' Hexham; 'een spange-maecker, a buckle-maker or a spangle-maker,' id.; Icel. spöng, explained by 'spangle,' though it seems rather to mean a clasp; G. spange, a brooch, clasp, buckle, ornament.  $\beta$ . Cf. Gk.  $\sigma\phi\eta\kappa\text{-}\sigma\upsilon\nu$ , to bind tight, pinch in;  $\sigma\phi\iota\gamma\gamma\epsilon\upsilon$ , to bind tight,  $\sigma\phi\iota\gamma\kappa\eta\rho$ , a lace, band.

SPANIEL, a Spanish dog. (F.—Span.—L.) ME. spaniel, Chaucer, C. T. 5849; spelt spaynel in five MSS., Group D, 267; spanejeole, Voc. 638. 10. Cf. ME. Spaynyell, a Spaniard, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iv. 419.—OF. espagneul, 'a spaniel;' Cot.—Span. español, Spanish.—Span. España, Spain.—L. Hispania, Spain. The origin of the name of the country is unknown.

SPANK, to beat or slap. (E.) 'Spank, a hard slap; to move energetically; Spanker, a man or animal very large, or excessively active; Spanking, large, lusty, active,' &c.; Halliwell. An E. word, though not found in old authors. +NFries. and Dan. spanke, to strut, to stalk; Low G. spakkern, spenkern, to run and spring about quickly.  $\beta$ . From a Teut. base SPAK, significant of quick motion or violent action; cf. EFries. spaken, to split, burst with heat. Der. spank-er, an after-sail in a barque.

SPAN-NEW, entirely new. (Scand.) ME. spannewe, Havelok, 968; Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1665; span-neowe, K. Alisaunder, 4055. (The term is prob. Scand., not E.; otherwise we should rather have expected a form spoon-new or spen-new, 'spoon-new,' which is the corresponding E. form, as will appear.)—Icel. spännyr, also spänyr, span-new; compounded of spänn, a chip, shaving, made by a plane, knife, or axe; and nýr, new, cognate with E. New, q. v. Another sense of Icel. spänn is a spoon; see Spoon. +MHG. spännüwe; from MHG. spän, G. span, a chip, splinter, and nüwe or neu, new.  $\beta$ . We also use the phrase spick and span new, which is also of Scand. origin; see the very numerous phrases of this character in Swed. dialects, as given by Rietz, who instances spik-spängande ny, completely new, answering to Swed. till splint och spän ny, with its varying forms spingspängande ny, sprittsprängande ny, splittspängande ny, and 18 more of the same character. So also Du. spikspeldernieuw, lit. spick-and-spill-new; since speld is a spill or splinter. So also Swed. spillerny, lit. spill-new. So also Dan. splinterny, lit. splinter-new. The Swed. and Du. spik are forms of Spike; hence spick and span new=spike and chip new. All the terms 'signify fresh from the hands of the workman, fresh cut from the block, chip and splinter new;' Wedgwood.

SPAR (1), a beam, bar, rafter; a general term for yards, gaffs, &c. (E.) ME. sparre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 992 (A 990). The AS. sb. is not found, but the word is doubtless E.; we find the derived verb sparrian, to fasten with a bar, to bolt, as in 'gesparrado dure'=the door being fastened, Matt. vi. 6 (Lindisfarne MS.). +Du. spar; Icel. sparri; Dan. and Swed. sparre; OHG. sparro; MHG. sparre; G. sparren. Cf. also Gael. and Irish spar, a spar, joist, beam, rafter (from E.).  $\beta$ . The orig. sense seems to have been stick or pole; perhaps related to Spear, q. v. Der. spar, verb, to fasten a door, bar it, P. Plowman, B. xix. 162 (footnote).

SPAR (2), a kind of mineral. (E.) An old prov. E. mining-term; spelt sparr in Manlove's Liberties and Customs of the Lead-mines, A. D. 1653, l. 265 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 8). AS. spar, found in the compound spar-stān (spar-stone); 'Creta argentea, spar-stān;' Voc. 146. 23; 'Gipsus, sparen,' id. 24. 20 (8th cent.). Cf. G. sparkalk, plaster.  $\beta$ . The true G. name is spat or spath; which is a different word. Der. sparr-y.

SPAR (3), to box with the hands, dispute, wrangle. (F.—Teut.) 'To sparre, as cocks do, confligere;' Levins (1570). It was thus a term in cock-fighting, and orig. used of striking with the spurs, as cocks do.—OF. esparer, 'to fling or yerk out with the heels, as a horse in high manage;' Cot. Mod. F. éparer, little used (Littré); which Littré connects with Ital. sparare, of which one sense is 'to kick;' but this must be a different word from Ital. sparare (=L. exparare), to unfurnish, to let off a gun.  $\beta$ . I suppose OF. esparer to be of Teut. origin; cf. Low G. sparre, sb., a struggling, striving, Bremen Wörterbuch, iv. 945. Cf. G. sich sperren, to struggle against, resist, oppose: Perhaps allied to Lithuan. spirti, to stamp, kick, strike out with the feet, resist. See Spur, Spurn. Der. sparr-er, sparr-ing.

SPARABLE, a kind of headless nail used for boots. (E.) A contraction of sparrow-bill; the old name. 'And sparrowbills to clout Pan's shoone;' (1629) T. Dekker, London's Tempe (The Song).

SPARE, frugal, scanty, lean. (E.) ME. spar (rare); 'vpon spar wyse'=in a sparing manner, temperately; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 901. AS. spar, spare, sparing, as a gloss to L. parcus, Liber Scintillarum, p. 52, l. 6; also found in the compounds spar-hynde, sparing, sper-lic, frugal, spærnis, frugality, all in various glosses (Leo); the derived verb sparian, to spare, is not uncommon; Grein, ii. 467. +Icel. sparr, sparing; Dan. spar- in sparsom, thrifty; Swed. spar- in sparsam; G. spär- in spürlich. Cf. L. parum, little, parcus, sparing, parcere, to spare; which seem to have lost initial s. Der. spar, verb, ME. sparen, Chaucer, C. T. 6919 (D 1337), from AS. sparian (Grein), as above; cognate with Du. and G. sparen, Icel. and Swed. spara, Dan. spar, and perhaps allied to L. parcere. Also spar-neiss, spar-rib; spar-ing, spar-ing-ly.

SPARK (1), a small particle of fire. (E.) ME. spärke, Havelok, 91. OMerc. sparca, Voc. 46. 8; AS. spearca, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iii. c. 12; cap. xxxv. § 5. +MDu. sparcke (Hexham); Low G. spärke; Brem. Wört.  $\beta$ . Perhaps so called from the crackling of a fire-brand, which throws out sparks; Icel. spraka, Dan. sprage, to crackle. Cf. Lithuan. spragėti, to crackle like burning fir-wood, Gk.  $\sigma\phi\alpha\rho\alpha\gamma\omicron\varsigma$ , a cracking, crackling. Brugmann, i. § 531. Der. spark-le, a little spark, with dimin. suffix -le for -el (cf. kern-el from corn), ME. sparkle, Chaucer, C. T. 13833 (B 2095); also spark-le, verb, ME. sparklen, C. T. 2166 (A 2164).

SPARK (2), a gay young fellow. (Scand.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 25. The same word as prov. E. sprack, lively. ME. sparklich, adv., also spelt sprackliche; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 10, and footnote.—Icel. sparkr, lively, sprightly; also sprækr. Hence Icel. sprækligr, whence ME. sprackliche, adj. +Swed. dial. språker, språk, språg, cheerful, talkative (Rietz); Norweg. språk, ardent, cheerful, lively (Aasen).  $\beta$ . Perhaps the orig. sense was 'talkative,' or 'noisy;' cf. Speak, and Spark (1). ¶ The prov. E. sprack is pronounced srag by Sir Hugh, Merry Wives, iv. 1. 84.

SPARROW, a small well-known bird. (E.) ME. sparwe, Chaucer, C. T. 628 (A 626); sparwe, Wyclif, Matt. x. 20. OMerc. *\*sparwa*; AS. spearwa, Matt. x. 29. +Icel. spörr (rare); Dan. spurv; Swed. sparf; OHG. sparo (gen. sparuen), also sparwe; MHG. spar; whence G. sper-ling, a sparrow, with double dimin. suffix -ling; Goth. sparwa.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type *\*sparwon-*, m., a sparrow; lit. 'a flutterer;' from  $\sqrt{\text{SPER}}$ , to quiver, hence, to flutter; see Spar (3). Cf. Lithuan. sparnas, a bird's wing, a fish's fin, the leaf of a folding door (from the movement to and fro). Der. sparrowhawk, ME. sperhauke, P. Plowman, B. vi. 199, AS. spearhafoc, Voc. 132. 26; cf. Icel. sparrhaukr (where sparr- is the stem of spörr); Swed. sparfhök (from sparf), Dan. spurvehøg (from spurv).

SPARVER, SPARVISE, the canopy or tester of a bed. (F.) In 1473: 'j sparvour with j pelew' [pillow]; York Wills, iii. 216. See Nares.—OF. espervier, esprevier, 'l'ensemble des pièces qui composent le coussin,' Godefroy; but it may mean 'canopy.' Apparently the same as OF. espervier, a sparrow-hawk, also 'a sweep-net' (Cot.); hence, a canopy. Cf. Ital. sparauiere, 'any kinde of hauke; also a sparvise of a bed;' Florio.

SPARSE, thinly scattered. (L.) Modern; yet the verb sparse, to scatter, occurs as early as 1536 (see Todd); and Spenser has 'spersed ayre,' F. Q. i. 1. 39.—L. sparsus (for *\*sparg-sus*); pp. of spargere, to scatter, sprinkle.— $\sqrt{\text{SPERG}}$ , to sprinkle; an extension of  $\sqrt{\text{SPER}}$ , to scatter (Gk.  $\sigma\pi\epsilon\rho\epsilon\omega$ , for  $\sigma\pi\epsilon\rho\text{-}\gamma\epsilon\omega$ ); see Sperm. Der. sparse-ly, -ness. Also a-sperse, di-sperse, inter-sperse.

SPASM, a convulsive movement. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Those who have their necks drawne backward . . . with the spasme;' Holland's Pliny, b. xx. c. 5; ed. 1634, ii. 41 d; ME. spasme, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 309, l. 19.—F. spasme, 'the cramp;' Cot.—L. spasmus, acc. of spasmus.—Gk.  $\sigma\pi\alpha\sigma\mu\omicron\varsigma$ , a spasm, convulsion.—Gk.  $\sigma\pi\acute{\alpha}\epsilon\upsilon$ , to draw, pluck.— $\sqrt{\text{SPA}}$ , to draw. Der. spasm-od-ic, formed with suffix -ic from Gk. adj.  $\sigma\pi\alpha\sigma\mu\omicron\delta\text{-}\eta\varsigma$ , convulsive; spasm-od-ic-al, spasm-od-ic-ly.

SPAT (1), a blow, a slap. (E.) In Cent. Dict. Of imitative origin; cf. slap, pat.

SPAT (2), the young of shell-fish. (E.) In Cent. Dict. Formed from spat-, to eject, the base of spatter; see Spatter. And compare Spot; also Du. spat, a spot, speck, splash.

SPATE, a river-flood. (F.—Teut.) 'While crashing ice, borne on the roaring spate;' Burns, Brigs of Ayr. And see Jamieson. Cf. Irish speid (borrowed from E. spate), a great river-flood. Also spelt speit. G. Douglas has spait, a torrent; cf. Verg. Æn. ii. 496.—AF. **espeit*=OF. espoit, a spouting out (Godefroy).—EFries. speiten, speuten, spoiten, WFlem. speeten, Du. spuiten, to spout; see Spout.

SPATS, gaiters. (E.) Shorter for spatterdashes, gaiters to keep off the spatterings of mud that are dashed against the wearer; cf. dash-board or splash-board of a carriage.

SPATTER, to besprinkle, spit or throw out upon. (E.) 1. 'Which th' offended taste With spattering noise rejected;' Milton, P. L. x.

567. Here Milton uses it for sputter, the frequentative of Spit (2), q. v. 2. The usual sense is to be-spot, and it is a frequentative form, with suffix -er, formed from a base spat-; cf. prov. E. spat, to spit; EFries. spatten, to burst, fly out, spirt. +Du. spatten, to throw, spatter, splash. Cf. Gk. σφενδόνη, a sling.

SPATULA, a broad-bladed knife for spreading plasters. (L.—Gk.) Spelt spatule in Holland's Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 7 [not 17], l. 24 from the end. This is F. spatule, as in Cot.—L. spatula, also spathula; dimin. of spatha, an instrument with a broad blade.—Gk. σπάθη, a broad blade, a spatula, a paddle; cognate with E. Spade (1), q. v.

SPAVIN, a swelling near the joints of horses, producing lameness. (F.—Teut.) In Shak. Hen. VIII, i. 3. 12. ME. spaveyne, 'horsys maledy'; Prompt. Parv.—OF. esparvin (13th cent., in Hatzfeld), MF. esparvain, 'a spavin in the leg of a horse,' Cot. Cf. MItal. spavano, 'a spavin,' Florio; Ital. spavenio; Span. esparavan (1) spavin, (2) a sparrow-hawk; Port. esparavão; mod. F. éparvin. β. A comparison of the forms (of which MItal. spavano is for sparvano) shows that they answer to a Late L. type **sparvānus*, parallel to Late L. sparvārius, a sparrow-hawk (F. éparvier). And just as sparvārius is formed with suffix -ārius from OHG. sparwe, a sparrow (or is Latinised from OHG. sparwāri, a sparrow-hawk, which comes to the same thing), so Late L. **sparvānus* is formed with suffix -ānus from the same base (sparwe). The lit. sense is, accordingly, 'sparrow-like,' from the hopping or bird-like motion of a horse afflicted with spavin. The OHG. sparwe is cognate with E. Sparrow, q. v. ¶ Ménage, who is followed by Diez and Littré, gives much the same explanation, but says that the disease is named from the sparrow-hawk (not the sparrow) because the horse lifts up his legs after the manner of sparrow-hawks. It is obvious that the sparrow is much more likely than the sparrow-hawk to have been the subject of a simile, and it is also clear that sparvānus may have been formed from sparwe directly. It makes better sense.

SPAW, the same as Spa, q. v.

SPAWL, spittle. (E.) 'In the spawl her middle finger dips,' Dryden, tr. of Persius, ii. 63. AS. spāld, Elene, 300 (sic in MS.); variant of OMerc. spāðl, Matt. xxvii. 30; AS. spāll, spittle, allied to spættian, to spit. See Spit (2).

SPAWN, the eggs of fish or frogs. (F.—L.) 'Your multiplying spawn;' Cor. ii. 2. 82. 'Spawne of a fysshe,' Palsgrave. The verb occurs in Prompt. Parv., p. 467: 'Spawyn, spanyn, as fyszys, Pisciculus.' Short for **spauden*, and certainly (as Wedgwood suggests), from OF. espaudre, 'to shed, spill, poure out, to spread, cast, or scatter abroad in great abundance,' Cot. (So also Ital. spandere, to spill, shed, scatter.) β. The etymology is proved by a gloss in Wright's Voc. i. 164; cf. N. and Q. 6 S. v. 465. The AF. phrase 'Soffret le peysoun en ewe espaundre,' i. e. let the fish spawn in the water, occurs there; and espaundre is glossed by scheden his roune, i. e. shed his roe, in the MS.; though misprinted scheden him frome. From L. ex-pandere; see Expand. Der. spawn-er.

SPAY, to render sterile. (F.—L.—Gk.) See Todd's Johnson.—OF. **espeer*, not found; [but of the same form as OF. espeer, to pierce with a sword (Godefroy), from OF. espee (= Ital. spada), a sword]. Hence the OF. **espeer* would represent the Late L. spadāre, for spadōnāre, to geld.—L. spad-o (gen. spadōnis), a eunuch.—Gk. σπάδων, a eunuch.—Gk. σπά-ειν, to draw, tear, rend.

SPEAK, to utter words, say, talk. (E.) This word has lost an r, and stands for speak. We can date the loss of the r as having taken place before A. D. 1100. The MSS. of the A. S. Gospels have sometimes sprecan and sometimes specan, so that the letter was frequently dropped as early as the 11th century, though it appears occasionally in the latest of them; the same is true for the sb. spræc or spæc, mod. E. speech (for spreech); see John, iv. 26, &c. ME. speken, pt. t. spak, pp. spoken, spoke; Chaucer, C. T. 792, 914 (A 790, 912). AS. sprecan (later specan), pt. t. spræc (later spæc), pp. sprecen; Grein, ii. 472. +Du. spreken; OHG. sprehhan; G. sprechen, pt. t. sprach. β. All from Teut. base SPREK, to speak, of which the orig. sense was merely to make a noise, crackle, cry out, as seen in Icel. spraka, Dan. sprage, to crackle, Dan. sprække, to crack, burst; see Spark (1). Cf. Gk. σπάραγος, a cracking, crackling. Cf. Lowland Sc. crack, a talk. Der. speak-er; speak-er-ship; speech, q. v.; spokes-man, q. v.

SPEAR, a long weapon, spiked pole, lance. (E.) ME. spere (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 2551 (A 2549). AS. spere, John, xix. 34. +Du. speer; Icel. spjör; Dan. spær; G. speer; OHG. sper. Cf. L. sparus, a small missile weapon, dart, hunting-spear. Perhaps related to spar, a beam (hence, a pole). See Spar (1). Der. spear-man, Acts, xxiii. 23; spear-grass, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 340; spear-mint; spear-wort, AS. sperewyrt, A. S. Leechdoms, Gloss. to vol. iii.

SPECIAL, particular, distinctive. (F.—L.) ME. special, speciale, Ancren Riwe, p. 56, l. 22. Short for especial; see Especial; and Species (below). Der. special-ly, special-i-ty, special-ty. Doublet, especial.

SPECIES, a group of individuals having common characteristics, subordinate to a genus, a kind. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; the ME. form was spice (see Spice).—L. speciēs, a look, appearance, kind, sort.—L. specere, to look, see.—OHG. spehōn (G. spähen), to spy. Cf. Skt. paç, spag, to spy.—✓SPEK, to see. Brugmann, i. § 551. See Spy. Der. speci-al, q. v. Also specie, money in gold or silver, a remarkable form, evolved as a sing. sb. from the old word species='money paid by tale,' as in Phillips, ed. 1706; probably by confusion with the L. ablative speciē, as if paid in speciē=paid in visible coin. Also speci-fy, q. v., speci-men, q. v., speci-ous, q. v. Also especi-al (doublet of special); fronti-spice, q. v. Doublet, spice.

SPECIFY, to particularise. (F.—L.) ME. specifiēn, Gower, C. A. i. 33; prol. 866.—OF. specifier, 'to specify, particularize,' Cot.—Late L. **specificāre*, to specify (Ducange); pp. specificātus.—L. adj. specificus, specific, particular.—L. speci-, for speciēs, a kind; and -ficus, i. e. making, from L. facere, to make; see Species and Fact. ¶ It thus appears that specific is a more orig. word, but specify is much the older word in English. Cf. specific, MF. specifique, 'special,' Cot., from L. specificus, special, as above; whence specific-al, specific-al-ly, specific-ate, specific-at-ion. And hence specify, verb (as above).

SPECIMEN, a pattern, model. (L.) 'Specimen, an example, proof, trial, or pattern;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. specimen, an example, something shown by way of sample.—L. speci-, for specere, to see; with suffix -men. See Species.

SPECIOUS, showy, plausible. (F.—L.) ME. specious, sightly, beautiful; see Trench, Select Glossary.—MF. specieux, 'specious, fair,' Cot.—L. speciōsus, fair to see.—L. speci-, for specere, to behold; with suffix -ōsus; see Species. Der. specious-ly, -ness.

SPECK, a small spot, blemish. (E.) Specke in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Speckid sheep,' i. e. spotted sheep; Wyclif, tr. of Gen. xxx. 32. 'Spekke, clowte, Pictacium,' i. e. a patch; Prompt. Parv. AS. specca, a spot, mark, pl. speccan; 'Notæ, speccan,' Voc. 34. 25. Cf. Low G. spaken, to be spotted with wet, spakig, spotted with wet; Brem. Wört. iv. 931; MDu. spickelen, 'to speckle, or to spott,' Hexham. β. The MDu. spickelen is obviously the frequentative of MDu. spicken, to spit, and Wedgwood's suggestion that 'the origin lies in the figure of spattering with wet' is prob. correct. Cf. Du. spikkel, a speckle, spot. Hardly allied to L. pingere, to paint (Franck). Der. speck, verb, Milton, P. L. ix. 429. Also speck-le, a little spot, dimin. form, Spenser, tr. of Virgil's Gnat, 250; cf. Du. spikkel, a speckle. Hence speckle, verb.

SPECTACLE, a sight, show. (F.—L.) ME. spectacle, Wyclif, 1 Cor. iv. 9.—F. spectacle, 'a spectacle,' Cot.—L. spectāculum, a show. Formed with suffixes -cu-lu- (<-cu-lo-) from L. spectā-re, to see.—L. spectum, supine of specere, to see; see Species. Der. spectacles, pl. glasses for assisting the sight, pl. of ME. spectacle, a glass through which to view objects, Chaucer, C. T. 6785 (D 1203); hence spectacl-ed, Cor. ii. 1. 222. And see spectator, spectre, speculate.

SPECTATOR, a beholder. (L.; or F.—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 46; spelt spectatour, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 27. [Perhaps from F. spectateur, 'a spectator,' Cot.]-L. spectātor, a beholder; formed with suffix -tor from spectā-re, to behold.—L. spectum, supine of specere, to see; see Spectacle, Spy.

SPECTRE, a ghost. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. R. iv. 430.—F. spectre, 'an image, figure, ghost,' Cot.—L. spectrum, a vision. Formed with suffix -trum from spec-ere, to see; see Spectacle, Spy. Der. spectr-al. Doublet, spectrum, a mod. scientific term, directly from L. spectrum.

SPECULAR, suitable for seeing, having a smooth reflecting surface. (L.) 'This specular mount,' Milton, P. R. iv. 236.—L. speculāris, belonging to a mirror.—L. speculum, a mirror.—L. spec-ere, to see; see Spy. ¶ Milton's use of the word is due to L. specula, fem. sb., a watch-tower, a closely allied word. Der. specul-ate, from L. speculātus, pp. of speculāri, to behold, from specula, a watch-tower; hence specul-at-ion, Minshew, ed. 1627, from F. speculation, 'speculation,' Cot., which from L. acc. speculātiōnem; specul-at-or=L. speculātor; specul-at-ive, Minshew, from L. speculātivus. We also use specul-um=L. speculum, a mirror.

SPEECH, talk, language. (E.) ME. speche (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 8729 (E 853). For spreche, by loss of r. AS. spæc, later form of spræc; Grein, ii. 471.—AS. spræc, 3rd grade of sprecan, to speak; see Speak. +Du. spraak, from spreken; G. sprache, from sprechen. Der. speech-less, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 164; speech-less-ly, -ness.

SPEED, success, velocity. (E.) The old sense is 'success' or 'help.' ME. sped (with long e); 'iuel sped'=evil speed, ill success, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 310. AS. spēd, haste, success; Grein, ii. 467. Here ē is due to ō, by the usual change (as in foot, AS. fōt, pl. feet, AS. fēt), and spēd is due to a Teut. type **spōdiz*. + OSax. spōd, success (Heliand); Du. spoed, speed; OHG. spuot, spōt, success. β. All from Teut. type **spōdiz*, speed, success (Fick, iii. 355). Here the -di- is a suffix, answering to Idg. -ti- (by Verner's law). Allied to Skt. spā-ti-, increase, growth; and spā-ta-s, pp. of spāy, to increase, enlarge; Benfey, p. 1087. γ. The AS. spēd is, accordingly, from the AS. strong verb spōwan, to succeed, Grein, ii. 471; and the OHG. spuot is allied to the verb spuon, to succeed, an impersonal weak verb. δ. Further allied to L. spatium, room, spēs, hope, prosper, prosperous, Lithuan. spētas, leisure, opportunity. Brugmann, i. §§ 156, 223 (3, note). Der. speed, verb, AS. spēdan, weak verb, pt. t. spēdde, Grein, ii. 468; speed-y, AS. spēdig, id.; speed-i-ly, speed-i-ness.

SPEIR, to ask. (E.) See Spur.

SPELICANS, a game played with thin slips of wood. (Du.) Imported from Holland; which is famous for toys. Englished from MDu. spelleken, a small pin (Hexham); formed with the MDu. dimin. suffix -ken (= G. -chen, E. -kin) from MDu. spelle, a pin, splinter of wood, allied to E. Spell (4), q. v.

SPELL (1), a form of magic words, incantation. (E.) ME. spel, dat. spelle, Chaucer, C. T. 13821 (B 2083). AS. spel, spell, a saying, story, narrative; Grein, ii. 469. + Icel. spjall, a saying; OHG. spel, a narrative; Goth. spill, a fable, tale, myth. Teut. type **spellom*, n. Der. spell (2), q. v.; go-spel, q. v.

SPELL (2), to tell the names of the letters of a word. (F.—Teut.) ME. spellen; 'Spellyn letters, Sillabico; Spellynge, Sillabacacio; Spellare [speller], Sillabicator; Prompt. Parv. 'Lere hem litlum and lytlum . . . Tyl bei couthe speke and spelle,' &c. = teach them by little and little till they could pronounce and spell; P. Plowman, B. xv. 599, 600. — OF. espeler, 'to spell, to speale, to join letters or syllables together; Cot. Of Teut. origin. From Du. spellen, to spell; the same as AS. spellian, to relate, declare, tell, speak; MHG. spellen, to relate, Goth. spillōn, to narrate. All these are denominative verbs; thus Du. spellen is from OSax. spel, a word (see Heliand, 572); AS. spellian is from AS. spell, a tale; and Goth. spillōn, from spill, a fable; see Spell (1). ¶ E. spell does not appear to be directly from AS. spellian, but seems rather to have been borrowed from French. Certainly the word was sooner or later confused with the old and prov. E. spell, in the sense of a splinter of wood, as though to spell were to point out letters with a splinter of wood. Thus Palsgrave has 'festue to spell with; where festue is F. festu, 'a straw, rush, little stalk or stick' (Cot.), from L. festuca; and Halliwell cites from a Dict. written about A.D. 1500 the entry 'To speldyr, Syllabicare,' agreeing with the form 'spelder of woode' in Palsgrave; indeed, speldren, to spell, occurs in the Ormulum, 16347, 16440. So even in Hexham's MDu. Dict. we have 'spelle, a pin,' with a striking resemblance to 'spellen, to spell letters or words.' See Spell (4). Der. spell-er, spell-ing, spell-ing-book.

SPELL (3), a turn of work. (E.) 'To Do a Spell, in sea-language, signifies to do any work by turns, for a short time, and then leave it. A fresh spell, is when fresh men come to work, esp. when the rowers are relieved with another gang; to give a spell, is to be ready to work in such a one's room; Phillips, ed. 1706. Not found in ME., but it is almost certainly due to AS. spellian, to supply another's room, to act or be proxy for (Bosworth). Whelock, in his edition of Ælfred's tr. of Bede, p. 151, quotes the following sentence from a homily: 'Se cyning is Cristes sylfes speligend' = the king supplies the place of Christ himself. So also the following: 'Næs ðeah Isaac ofslegen, ac se ramm hine spelode' = Isaac, however, was not slain himself, but the ram supplied his place, or took his spell; Ælfric's Hom. ed. Thorpe, ii. 62. Cf. AS. gespelia, a vicar, deputy (Toller). β. The AS. spellian is perhaps allied to spilian, to play, to sport; and the latter is cognate with Du. spelen, G. spielen, to play, act a part; these being denominative verbs, formed from the sb. which appears as Du. spel, G. spiel, OHG. spil, a game.

SPELL (4), SPILL, a thin slip of wood, splinter; a slip of paper for lighting candles. (E.) This word has been assimilated to the verb to spell, from the use of a slip of wood, in schools of the olden times, to point out letters in a book. See remarks on Spell (2). The true form is rather speld. ME. speld, a splinter; pl. speldes, splinters of a broken spear, Will. of Palerne, 3392; hence the dimin. spelder, a splinter (Palsgrave), spelt spildur, Avowynge of Arthur, xiii. 6. AS. speld, a torch, spill used as a torch (Bosworth). + Du. speld, a pin (cf. spil, the pin of a bobbin, spindle, axis); Icel. speld, speldi, a square tablet, orig. a thin slice of board; spilda, a flake, a slice; Goth. spilda, a writing-tablet; MHG. spelte, a splinter. β. All from the Teut. verb **spaldan* (G. spalten), to cleave; a reduplicating verb, like OHG. spaltan, to cleave, split. Cf. Shetland speld, to split (Edmondston); Skt. spat (for **spalt*), to burst open. See Spelicans, Spill (2). Thus the orig. sense is 'that which is split off,' a flake, slice, &c. Der. spelicans, q. v.

SPELT, a kind of corn. (L.) Called 'spelt corne' in Minshew, ed. 1627. Not found in ME. AS. spell. 'Faar [i.e. L. far], spelt;' Voc. 273. 20. Cf. Du. spelt; G. speltz, spelt. All from Late L. spelta, spelt (ab. A.D. 400); whence also Ital. spelta, spelda, F. épeautre, spelt.

SPELTER, pewter, zinc. (Low G.) 'Spelter, a kind of metall, not known to the antients, which the Germans call zinc;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. I cannot find an early example of the word, but it is prob. Teutonic, in any case, and occurs again in Low G. spialter, pewter, Bremen Wörterbuch; cf. Du. spiauter, MDu. speauter, from OF. espeautre (Godefroy); which suggests an older form **espeltre*. It is obviously allied to Ital. peliro, pewter, and to E. pewter. See (in Ducange) Late L. pestrum (error for peltrum?) and peutrum. Hexham has: 'Peauter, or Speauter, Pewter, or fine Tinne.' Godefroy has OF. pialtre (12th cent.), s.v. peauter; and note that the earlier forms are without the initial s- or es-. See Pewter; where correct the note that initial s has been lost.

SPENCER, a short over-jacket. (F.—L.) Much worn about A.D. 1815; see Notes and Queries, 4 S. x. 356. 'Two noble earls, whom, if I quote, Some folks might call me sinner, The one invented half a coat, The other half a dinner;' Epigram quoted in Taylor, Words and Places. The reference is to Earl Spencer and Earl Sandwich. It thus appears that the spencer was named after the celebrated Earl Spencer, viz. John Charles Spencer, third earl, born 1782, died 1845. See further under Spend.

SPEND, to lay out (money), consume, waste. (L.) ME. spenden, Chaucer, C. T. 302 (A 300). AS. spendan; occurring in the compounds ā-spendan and for-spendan; see examples in Sweet's A.S. Reader. Not an AS. word, but merely borrowed from Late L. dispendere, to spend, waste, consume. Cf. Late L. dispendium, dispensa, expense, of which the shorter forms spendium, spensa are also found. We also find Late L. spendibilis monēta, spending money, i.e. money for current expenses, occurring as early as A.D. 922 (Ducange). So also Ital. spendere, to spend, spendio, expense, where spendio = L. dispendium. Observe also OF. despendre, 'to dispend, spend, expend, disburse,' Cot.; despenser, 'to dispend, spend,' id.; despensier, 'a spender, also a cater [caterer], or clarke of a kitchin,' id. β. In exactly the same way, the OF. despensier became ME. spencere or spensere, explained by cellerarius in the Prompt. Parv., and now preserved in the proper name Spencer or Spenser, formerly Despenser. Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iv. 33, translates L. dispensator by spenser. Hence even the buttry or cellar was called a spence, as being under the control of this officer; 'Spence, botry, or celere,' Prompt. Parv. γ. The L. dispendere is compounded of dis-, apart, and pendere, to weigh; see Dis- and Pendant. ¶ The etymology sometimes given, from L. expendere, is less likely; the s here represents dis-, not ex-, precisely the same loss occurs in sport for disport. Der. spend-er; spend-thrift, i.e. one who spends what has been accumulated by thrift, Temp. ii. i. 24; spencer (above).

SPERM, animal seed, spawn, spermaceti. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. sperme, Chaucer, C. T. 14015 (B 3199). — F. sperme, 'sperm, seed;' Cot. — L. sperma. — Gk. σπέρμα, seed. — Gk. σπείρειν (= σπέρ-yeiv), to sow; orig. to scatter with a quick motion of the hand. (✓SPER.) And see Sparse. Der. spermat-ic, Gk. σπερματ-ικός, from σπέρματ-, stem of σπέρμα; spermat-ic-al. Also sperm-oil, sperm-whale; spermaceti, spelt parmaceti in 1 Hen. IV, i. 3. 58, from L. sperma cēti, sperm of the whale, where cēti is the gen. case of cētus = Gk. κῆτος, a large fish; see Cetaceous. And see spor-ad-ic, spore.

SPEW, SPUE, to vomit. (E.) ME. spewen, P. Plowman, B. x. 40. AS. speowan, spīwan, weak verbs; spīwan, strong verb, pt. t. spāw, pp. spīwen; Grein, ii. 470. Cf. MDu. spouwen (Hexham); Icel. spýja; Dan. spye; Swed. spy; OHG. spīwan; G. speien; Goth. speiwan. + L. spuere; Lithuan. spjauti; Gk. πρῦειν (for *σπῦειν). β. All from ✓SPIW, to spit forth. Expressive of the sound of spitting out; cf. puke (1), spit (2). Brugmann, i. § 567.

SPHERE, a globe, orb, circuit of motion, province or duty. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. spere, Chaucer, C. T. 11592 (F 1280). Later sphere, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 56. — OF. espere, a sphere (Littre); MF. sphere, 'a sphere;' Cot. — L. sphæra. — Gk. σφαῖρα, a ball, globe. β. Gk. σφαῖρα = *σφάρ-ya = *σπάρ-ya; perhaps 'that which is tossed about;' see Spar (3). Der. spher-ic, Gk. σφαῖρικός, like a sphere; spher-ic-al, spher-ic-al-ly, spher-ic-i-ty; spher-o-id, that which is like a sphere, from σφαῖρο-, for σφαῖρος, round, and εἶδος, form, shape, appearance (from ✓WEID, to see). Hence spheroid-al.

SPHINX, a monster with a woman's head and the body of a lioness, who destroyed travellers that could not solve her riddles. (L.—Gk.) 'Subtle as Sphinx;' L. L. L. iv. 3. 342. Spelt Spinx by Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. i. — L. sphinx (gen. sphinxis). — Gk. σφίγξ (gen. σφίγγος), lit. 'the strangler,' because she strangled the travellers who could not solve her riddles; from Gk. σφίγγειν, to throttle, strangle. ¶ But most likely, this is merely a popular etymology, and the word is foreign to Greek. In fact, the legend is Egyptian; Herodotus, ii. 175, iv. 79.

SPICE, an aromatic vegetable for seasoning food, a small quantity or sample. (F.—L.) A doublet of species. 'Spice, the earlier form in which we made the word our own, is now limited to certain aromatic drugs, which, as consisting of various kinds, have this name of spices. But spice was once employed as species is now;' Trench, Select Glossary, q. v. 'Species, used by the druggists of the Middle Ages for the four kinds of ingredients in which they traded—saffron, cloves, cinnamon, nutmegs;' Bréal, Semantics. ME. spice. 'Absteyne þou fro al yuel spice,' Wyclif, 1 Thess. v. 22; where the Vulgate has 'ab omni specie malā.' In early use. 'Hope is a swete spice;' Ancren Riwle, p. 78, last line. — OF. 'espice, spice;' Cot. — L. speciem, acc. of species, a kind, species; in Late Latin, a spice, drug; see SPECIES. Der. spice, verb; spice-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 528 (A 526); spice-er, an old word for spice-seller, answering to the mod. grocer, P. Plowman, B. ii. 225; spice-er-y, from OF. espicerie, 'a spicer, also spices,' Cot.; spice-y, spice-i-ly, spice-i-ness.

SPICK AND SPAN-NEW, quite new. (Scand.) In North's Plutarch, p. 213 (R.); Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 4, let. 2 (Jan. 20, 1624). Lit. 'spike and spoon new,' where spike means a point, and spoon a chip; new as a spike or nail just made and a chip just cut off. See further under Span-new. And see Spike and Spoon.

SPIDER, an insect that spins webs. (E.) ME. spither, spelt spibre, Avenbite of Inwyte, p. 164, l. 6 from bottom. Apparently this is the sense of AS. spider, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 42; with -der for -per; from **spin-per*; the loss of n before p being of regular occurrence in AS. As -per (Idg. -ter) is an agential suffix, the sense would be spinner, which is also a name for the spider; see E. D. D. From the verb to spin; see Spin. + Du. spin, a spider; Dan. spinder (for spinner), a spider, from spinde (for spinne), to spin; Swed. spinne, a spider, from spinna, to spin; G. spinne, a spider, spinner.

SPIGOT, a pointed piece of wood for stopping a small hole in a cask. (Prov.—L.) ME. spigot, Wyclif, Job, xxxii. 19. Spelt spygotte, Voc. 724. 10; spykot, id. 573. 30. A term due to the Bourdeaux wine-trade. Apparently from an OProv. **estigote*; Mistral gives the mod. Prov. espigoun, espigou, the step of a ladder, the bar of a chair, also a spigot. Evidently derived from OProv. espiga, mod. Prov. espigo, an ear of corn. All from L. spica, an ear of corn; see Spike. Cf. also OF. espigeot, a bad ear of corn (Godefroy); Walloon spigot, the peak of a shoe. Also Port. espicho, a spigot; from L. spiculum, a little spike, point, dart, dimin. of spica (above). Torriano gives Ital. spigo, spico, the herb spikenard, also a spigot. ¶ The Irish spiocaid, W. ysbigod, are from E.

SPIKE (1), a sharp point, large nail. (Scand.) 'Iron for spikes;' Bacon, Advice to Sir G. Villiers (R.). 'Spykyng, nayle;' Prompt. Parv. Somner gives an AS. spicing, a large nail; from A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 200. From Icel. spik, Swed. spik, a spike; cf. Low G. spike, a wooden peg (Schambach); Du. spijker, a nail. Thought to be distinct from Spike (2), and allied, by gradation, to Spoke, q. v. Der. spike, verb, spiked, spike-y.

SPIKE (2), an ear of corn. (L.) ME. spik, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 180. — L. spica, an ear of corn. Der. spike-nard, q. v.; spig-ot, q. v.

SPIKENARD, an aromatic oil or balsam. (Hybrid; F.—L. and F.—L.—Gk.—Pers.) 'Precious oynement spikenard;' Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 3; where the Vulgate has 'alabastrum unguenti nardi spicati pretiosi.' [Thus spike-nard should rather be spiked nard; it signifies nard furnished with spikes, in allusion to the mode of growth. 'The head of Nardus spreads into certain spikes or eares, whereby it hath a twofold vse, both of spike and also of leaf; in which regard it is so famous;' Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xii. c. 12 (in Holland's translation).] However, we borrowed it from OF. spique-nard (Godefroy). — L. spica, an ear of corn; and nardi, gen. of nardus, nard; see Nard. The L. spicatus, furnished with ears, is derived from spica, an ear of corn; see Spike (2).

SPILE, a peg for a vent-hole. (E.) Not in Todd's Johnson; but in many E. dialects; see E. D. D. Cognate with Du. spijl, a spile, bar; Low G. spile, a bar, also a skewer (Schambach); cf. G. speiler, a skewer. Teut. types **spi-lā*, **spi-lo* (Franck); allied to Spire (1).

SPILL (1), a splinter, thin slip of wood. (E.) **Spills*, thin slips of wood or paper, used for lighting candles; Halliwell. 'The spill of wood;' Holland's tr. of Pliny, bk. viii. c. 16; i. 203. ME. spille; Life of Beket, ed. W. H. Black, 1845, l. 850: 'hit nis noȝt worþ a spille' = it is not worth a splinter or chip. The same word as Spell (4), q. v.

SPILL (2), to destroy, mar, shed. (Scand.) Often explained by 'spoil,' with which it has no etymological connexion. It stands for spild, the ld having passed into ll by assimilation. ME. spillen, commonly in the sense to destroy or mar; also, intransitively, to perish; see Chaucer, C. T. 6480, 5235 (D 898, B 815); Hamlet, iv. 5. 20. In mod. E., only to shed, pour out, effuse. Cf. AS. spillan, to destroy; Grein, ii. 470; apparently borrowed from Icel. spilla, to destroy; Swed. spilla (Dan. spilde, for **spille*), to spill. These are assimilated forms, with ll for ld; as shown by the (native) AS. spildan, to destroy, OSax. spildian. Teut. type **spelth-jan*; allied to G. spalten, to split. Cf. Skt. sphaṭ, sphuṭ, to burst; Brugmann, i. § 530. See Spell (4). Der. spill-er; spil-th (= AS. spild), Timon, ii. 2. 169.

SPIN, to draw out into threads, cause to whirl rapidly. (E.) The second sense comes from the rapid motion of the spinning-wheel. The former sense is original. ME. spinnen, strong verb, pt. t. span, pp. sponnen; P. Plowman, B. v. 216. AS. spinnan, pt. t. spann, pp. spunnen; Matt. vi. 28. + Du. spinnen; Icel. and Swed. spinna; Dan. spinde (for spinne); G. spinnen; Goth. spinnan (pt. t. spann). β. All from Teut. base **spen*-, to draw out. Allied to Lith. pin-ti, to weave; Oslav. pěti, to stretch out (span); Miklosich, p. 237. See Span, a related word. Der. spinn-er; spinn-ing; spin-d-le, q. v.; spin-ster, q. v.; spi-der, q. v.

SPINACH, SPINAGE, an esculent vegetable. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.) 'Spinage is a "voiced" form of spinach, as it was formerly written. Spelt spinache in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Spynnage, an herbe, espinars;' Palsgrave. ME. speneche; MS. Harl. 2378, p. 247; in Henslow, p. 113. — OF. espinache, espinahe (also espinoche); Godefroy. [Cf. Ital. spinace, 'the hearbe spinage,' Florio; mod. F. épinard (with excrescent d), OF. espinars, espinar (Cotgrave).] — Span. espina. — Arab. aspanākh, isfanāy; of Pers. origin (Devic). β. But referred, by popular etymology, to L. spina, a thorn, a prickly; because 'the fruit is a small round nut, which is sometimes very prickly;' Eng. Cyclopædia. See Spine.

SPINDLE, the pin or stick from which a thread is spun. (E.) The d is excrescent, as is so common in English after n; cf. soun-d, thun-d-er; and spindle stands for spin-le. 'Spinnel, a spindle; North;' Halliwell. In Walter de Bibbesworth (in Wright's Vocab. i. 157, l. 6) we meet with ME. spinel, where another MS. has spindele. AS. spinl; 'Fusus, spinl,' Wright's Voc. i. 82, col. 1; 281, col. 2. Formed, with suffix -l, denoting the agent, from AS. spinnan, to spin; see Spin. + MDu. spille (Hexham); by assimilation for **spinle*; OHG. spinnila, MHG. spinnel; whence G. spindel (with inserted d), as well as G. spille (by assimilation). Der. spindle-shanks, with shanks as thin as a spindle. Spindle-tree (Euonymus), because used for spindles or thin rods, named in German spindelbaum for a like reason; from its use for making skewers it was formerly called prick-wood, i. e. skewer-wood, or prick-timber; see prickwood and spindle tree in Phillips. Also spindl-y, thin (like a spindle or skewer).

SPINDRIFT, spray blown from the tops of waves by a strong wind. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A variant of spoon-drift (Worcester); and spoon (as in Bailey) is for spoom, before d. Hence it is really spoom-drift, i. e. spume-drift, from L. spūma, foam. See Spoom.

SPINE, a prickly, the backbone of an animal. (F.—L.) 'Roses, their sharp spines being gone;' Two Noble Kinsmen, first line. — MF. espine, 'a thorn, prick, prickly;' Cot. — L. spina, a thorn, prickly; also, the spine, the backbone. Closely allied to L. spica, an ear of corn; see Spike (2). ¶ Observe that, in the sense of 'backbone,' the word is Latin, rather than French; from the use of Latin in medical treatises. Der. spin-al; spin-y, spin-i-ness; spin-ous; spin-ose; also spin-et, q. v.; spinn-ey, q. v.

SPINET, a kind of musical instrument, like a harpsichord. (F.—Ital.—L.) Obsolete. It was so called because struck with a spine or pointed quill. In Phillips, ed. 1706. — MF. espinette, 'a paire of virginals;' Cot. — Ital. spinetta, 'a paire of virginals; also, a little tap, spigot, or gimblet, a prick, a thorne;' Florio. Dimin. of Ital. spina, a thorn. — L. spina, a thorn; see Spine.

SPINK, a finch, small bird. (Scand.) Lowland Sc. and prov. E. spink, chiefly used of the goldfinch. ME. spink. 'Hic rostellus, Anglice, spynke;' Voc. 640. 38. — Swed. dial. spink, a field-fare, sparrow; gul-spink, a goldfinch (Rietz); Dan. dial. spinke, Norweg. spikke (by assimilation for spinke), a small bird, sparrow, finch. + Gk. σπινγος, a finch; cf. σπίλιν, to pipe, chirp as a small bird. Also σπίλα, a finch; σπιν-os, a small bird. Doublet, finch.

SPINNEY, a kind of thicket. (F.—L.) 'Or shelter'd in Yorkshire spinneys;' Hood, Miss Kilmansegg, Her Accident, st. 4. See Spinet in Nares. ME. spenné, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1709. — OF. espenei, espinoi, m., Godefroy; cf. MF. espinoye, 'a thicket, grove, or ground full of thorns, a thorny plot;' Cot. — L. spinētum, a thicket of thorns. — L. spina, a thorn; see Spine.

SPINSTER, a woman who spins, an unmarried female. (E.)

Formerly in the sense of a woman who spins. 'She spak to spynnesteres to spynnen it oute;' P. Plowman, B. v. 216. Formed from the verb to spin (AS. spinnan) by means of the suffix -estre (mod. E. -ster). ¶ This suffix (often imperfectly explained) presents no real difficulty; it is due to the conjunction of the Idg. suffixes -es- and -ter; cf. L. min-is-ter. β. This AS. suffix -es-ter was used to denote the agent, and was conventionally confined to the feminine gender only, a restriction which was gradually lost sight of, and remains only in the word spinster in mod. English. Traces of the restriction remain, however, in semp-ster-ess or sempstress, and song-ster-ess or songstress, where the F. fem. suffix -ess has been superadded to the E. fem. suffix -ster. The restriction was strictly observed in AS., and is retained in Dutch; cf. Du. spin-ster, a spinster, zangster, a female singer (fem. of zanger), bedriegster, a female impostor (fem. of bedrieger), inwoonster, a female inhabitant (fem. of inwoner); &c. γ. Examples in AS. are the following: 'Textrix, webbestre,' a webster, female weaver, fem. of 'Textor, webba,' answering to Chaucer's webbe (Prol. 364), and the name Webb. 'Citharista, heapestre,' a female harper, fem. of 'Citharedus, hearpere,' a harper; Voc. 190. 6. So also: 'Fidicen, fidelere; Fidicina, fihelestre; Saltator, hleapere; Saltatrix, hleapestre;' id. 311. 24, 32. A striking example is afforded by AS. wilegestre, a prophetess, Luke, ii. 36, the word being almost always used in the masc. form wilega, a prophet. See further under Spin.

SPIRACLE, a breathing-hole, minute passage for air. (F.—L.) ME. spyrakle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 408.—F. spiracle, 'a breathing-hole'; Cot.—L. spirāculum, an air-hole; formed with suffix -culum, from spirāre, to breathe; see Spirit.

SPIRE (1), a tapering body, sprout, point, steeple. (E.) ME. spire, used of a blade of grass or young shoot just springing out of the ground. 'Thilke spire that in-to a tree shulde wexe,' Test. of Love, bk. iii. ch. v. l. 9. 'Or as an ook comth of a litle spyr;' Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1335; spelt spir, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 180. AS. spīr (rare); 'hrēodes spīr,' a spike (or stalk) of a reed, A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 266, l. 10. + Icel. spīra, a spar, a stilt; Dan. spire, a germ, sprout; Swed. spira, a sceptre, a pistil; G. spiere, a spar; Westphal. spīr, a blade of grass. Distinct from Spire (2); but allied to Spike (1), Spile. Der. spire, verb, to germinate, spring up, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 52, spelt spyer in Palsgrave; spīr-y, spelt spirie in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 592.

SPIRE (2), a coil, wreath. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Amidst his circling spires;' Milton, P. L. ix. 502. [Perhaps directly from L. spīra.]—F. spire, 'a rundle, round, or circle, a turning or winding compass'; Cot.—L. spīra, a coil, twist, wreath.—Gk. σπείρα, a coil, wreath. For **σπέρ-ya*. From ✓SPER, to wind or twine round; whence also Gk. σπύρ-ís, a basket, σπάρ-rov, a rope. Der. spīr-al, from F. spiral, 'circling,' Cot., L. spīrālis; spīr-al-ly; spīr-y, Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georgic i. l. 334.

SPIRIT, breath; the soul, a ghost, enthusiasm, liveliness, a spirituous liquor. (F.—L.) The lit. sense is 'breath,' but the word is hardly to be found with this sense in English. ME. spirit, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 203; pl. spirites, Chaucer, C. T. 1371 (A 1369).—OF. esprit (Littre), later esprit, 'the spirit, soul,' Cot.—L. spīritum, acc. of spīritus, breath, spirit.—L. spīrāre; to breathe. Der. spirit-ed, Hen. V, iii. 5. 21; spirit-ed-ly, -ness; spirit-less, 2 Hen. IV, i. 1. 70; spirit-stirring, Oth. iii. 3. 352; spirit-u-al, from F. spirituel, 'spirituall,' Cot., from L. spīritu-ālis, formed with suffix -ālis from spīritu, decl. stem of spīritus; spīritu-al-ly; spīritu-al-i-ty, ME. spiritualte, P. Plowman, B. v. 148; spīritu-al-ise, spīritu-al-ism, spīritu-al-ist; spīritu-ous. Also (from L. spīrāre) a-spīre, con-spīre, ex-spīre (for ex-spīre), in-spīre, per-spīre, re-in-spīre, re-spīre, su-spīre, tran-spīre; also di-spīrit; and see spīr-a-cle, spright-ly. Doublet, sprite.

SPIRT, the same as Spurt, q. v.

SPIT (1), a pointed piece of wood, skewer, iron prong on which meat is roasted. (E.) ME. spite, spyte. 'And yspited him thorou-out mid an yrene spite;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 207; l. 4213. See also Octovian Imperator, l. 122, in Weber, Met. Romances, vol. iii.—AS. spitu, a spit; 'Veru, spitu;' Voc. 127. 11; later spite, id. 548. 25. + Du. spit; Dan. spid; Swed. spett; MHG. spiz, G. spieß, a spit. Teut. type **spituz*, m. Cf. G. spitze, a point, top. Der. spit, verb, ME. spiten, spytten, as in Rob. of Glouc., above. Also prov. E. spit, the depth a spade goes in digging, about a foot (Halliwell), with reference to the point, i. e. blade of the spade; cf. AS. spittan, to dig, spit-el, a kind of spade, Du. spitten, to dig (lit. to spit); quite distinct from spade.

SPIT (2), to throw out from the mouth. (E.) Spelt spēt in Baret (1580). ME. spitten, P. Plowman, B. x. 40; pt. t. spette, Wyclif, John, ix. 6. AS. spittan, Matt. xxvii. 30 (Rushworth MS.); akin to spātan, with the same sense, pt. t. spātte, Mark, xv. 19, John, ix. 6; as if from a Teut. root **spēit-*. Apparently allied to Icel. spýta;

Dan. spytte, to spit, to sputter; Swed. spotta; prov. G. spützen (with which cf. G. spucken in the same sense); though these are from a Teut. base **sput-*, allied to Spout. Perhaps both these Teut. bases are allied to an Idg. root **spyū*; whence E. spew. See Brugmann, §§ 279 (1), 299, 567. Der. spitt-le, spyttell in Palsgrave, formerly spettle (Baret), also spattle, spelt spatyll in Palsgrave, spotil in Wyclif, John, ix. 6; AS. spātll, John, ix. 6; spitt-oon, not in Todd's Johnson, an ill-coined word. ¶ Note that spat is not the orig. past tense of spit, but is due to AS. spātte above, used with the same sense as the true pt. t. spit (Meas. for Meas. ii. 1. 86).

SPITCH-COCK, orig. to split a fat eel, and broil it on a skewer. (G.) The pp. spitch-cock'd occurs in 1651, in T. Cartwright, The Ordinary; in Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, xii. 239. See exx. in Palmer, Folk-Etym., where it occurs also as spits-cocked. Here spits- is from MHG. spiz, a spit, as in MHG. spiz-braten, G. spieß-braten, meat roasted on a spit; and G. kochen, to cook. It merely means 'spit-cooked'; cf. Du. spit-aal, 'a spitch-eel'; Kalisch.

SPITE, vexation, grudge, ill-will. (F.—L.) ME. spyt; 'boute spyt more' = without further injury, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1444. It is merely a contraction of ME. despit, mod. E. despite. This is best shown by the phrase in spite of, formerly in despite of, as in Shak. Merry Wives, v. 5. 132, Much Ado, ii. 1. 398, iii. 2. 68, iii. 4. 89, &c. So also we have spoit for dispoit, spend for dispend, ME. spenser for dispenser. And observe ME. spitous, Rom. of the Rose, 979, as a form of despitous, Chaucer, C. T. 6343 (D 761). See further under Despise. Der. spite, verb, Much Ado, v. 2. 70; spite-ful, Mach. iii. 5. 12, short for despiteful, As You Like It, v. 2. 86; spite-ful-ly, -ness.

SPITTLE (1), saliva. (E.) See Spit (2).

SPITTLE (2), a hospital. (F.—L.) 'A spittle, hospitall, or lazarus-house;' Baret, 1580. ME. spitel. Spitel-vuel = hospital evil, i. e. leprosy; Ancr. Riwe, p. 148, l. 8.—OF. ospital (Burguy), the same as OF. hospital, a hospital; see Hospital. ¶ The loss of initial o must have been due to an E. accent on the i; cf. W. yspyty, a spittle (from E.); Icel. spital. Doublet, hospital.

SPLASH, to splash about water or mud, to bespatter. (Low G.) 'To plash, to dash any liquid upon; Splashy, wet, watry;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1731. Coined by prefixing s (OF. es = L. ex, used for emphasis, as in squench (Richardson) for quench), to plash, in the same sense. 'Plashy waies, wet under foot; to plash in the dirt; all plash'd, made wet and dirty; to plash a traveller, to dash or strike up the dirt upon him;' MS. Lansd. 1033, by Bp. White Kennett, died A. D. 1728. Stanyhurst (1582) has plash for 'a splashing noise;' tr. of Virgil (Æn. i. 115), ed. Arber, p. 21, l. 17. ME. plasche, a pool; Allit. Morte Arthure, 2798. Cf. Low G. plasken, to splash; short for **platsken*, as shown under Plash (1), q. v.; cf. MDu. plash, a pool. Der. plash, sb.; splash-y; splash-board, a board (in a vehicle) to keep off splashes.

SPLAY, to slope or slant (in architecture); to dislocate a shoulder-bone. (F.—L.) A contraction of display; cf. sport for disport, spite for despite, spend for dispend, &c. The sense 'to dislocate' is due to the fact that display formerly meant to carve or cut up a crane or other bird, by disjoining it and so displaying it upon the dish in several pieces. 'Dysplaye that crane;' 'splaye that breme;' The Boke of Keruyng, pr. in 1513, repr. in 1867; see The Babees Boke, ed. Furnivall, p. 265. In architecture, to display is to open out, hence to slope the side of a window, &c. 'And for to splaye out hir leues on brede;' Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 33. 'Here colere splayed,' her collar displayed; Cov. Myst. p. 242. See further under Display. Der. splay-foot-ed, in Minshew, and in Ford, The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. 1. l. 13, i. e. with the foot displayed or turned outward, as if dislocated at the knee-joint; shortened to splay-foot, as in 'splay-foot rhymes,' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 192; splay-mouth, a mouth opened wide in scorn, a grimace, Dryden, tr. of Persius, sat. 1, l. 116.

SPLEEN, a non-glandular, highly vascular organ situate in the abdomen, supposed by the ancients to be the seat of anger and ill-humoured melancholy. (L.—Gk.) ME. splen, Gower, C. A. iii. 99; bk. vii. 449.—L. splēn.—Gk. σπλήν, the spleen. + Skt. plihān, plihān-, the spleen (with loss of initial s). The true L. word is liēn (with loss of initial sp). Brugmann, i. § 549 (c). Der. splen-et-ic, from L. splēnēticus; splen-et-ic-al, splen-et-ic-al-ly; splen-ic, from L. splēnicus; splen-it-ive, Hamlet, v. 1. 285; splen-ful, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 128; spleen-y, Hen. VIII, iii. 2. 99.

SPLENDOR, SPLENDOR, magnificence, brilliance. (L.; or F.—L.) Spelt splendor in Minshew, ed. 1627. According to Richardson, it is spelt splendour in Ben Jonson, Elegy on Lady Jane Pawlet, in Underwoods, no. 100, l. 32.—F. splendeur, 'splendor, light;' Cot.—L. splendōrem, acc. of splendor, brightness. [Or directly from L. nom. splendor.]—L. splendēre, to shine. Root unknown. Der. splend-id, Milton, P. L. ii. 252, directly from L. splendidus, shining, bright; splend-id-ly. Also splend-ent, spelt splendant in Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. viii. st. 84, l. 3, but from L. splendent-, stem of pres. part. of splendēre. And see re-splendent.

SPLINT, the same as Splint, q. v.

SPLUCHAN, a tobacco-pouch. (Gael.) In Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook, st. 14.—Gael. spluchan, a tobacco-pouch; Irish spluchan, a bladder, pouch, purse.

SPLICE, to join two rope-ends by interweaving the strands. (Du.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Like many sea-terms, borrowed from Dutch.—MDu. splissen, 'to wreath or lace two ends together, as of a rope'; Hexham. So named from the splitting of the rope-ends into separate strands before the splicing is begun; from Du. splitsen, to splice (which is really the older form). Formed by the addition of s to split, weak grade of Du. splijten, to split, MDu. splijten (Hexham). See Split. Cf. Dan. splidse, splidse, to splice (voiced form of Du. splitsen); splitte, to split. Cf. Swed. splissa, to splice; G. splissen, to splice, spliss, a cleft, splissen, to split. Der. splice, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706.

SPLINT, SPLENT, a thin piece of split wood. (Scand.) Formerly usually splent. 'A little splent to staie a broken finger;' Baret (1580). 'Splent for an house, laite;' Palsgrave. It also meant a thin steel plate, for armour. 'Splent, harnesse for the arme, garde de bras;' Palsgrave. ME. splint, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 63; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2061; answering to OF. esplente, a thin steel plate (Godefroy).—Swed. splint, a kind of spike; esp. (in nautical language) a forelock, i. e. a flat piece of iron driven through the end of a bolt, to secure it. So also Dan. splint, a splinter; NFries. splint, splenn.+Low G. splinte, a forelock; G. splint, a thin piece of iron or steel, a forelock, perhaps borrowed. Cf. Swed. splinta, to splinter; ultimately allied to Dan. splitte, Swed. splitta, to split. See Split. Der. splint-er, Beaum. and Fletcher, Maid in the Mill, Act i. sc. 3 (Ismenia), to split into shivers, a frequentative form (with the usual frequentative suffix -er) from Swed. splinta, to split, shiver; we actually find the frequentative form in Dan. splintre, to splinter, Du. splinteren, to splinter. Also splint-er, sb., a shiver, small piece or chip, Cor. iv. 5. 115, with which cf. Du. and EFries. splinter, a splinter, splinterig, full of splinters; splint-er-y, adj. Also splint-armour, armour made with long and narrow overlapping plates.

SPLIT, to cleave lengthwise, to tear asunder, rend apart. (Du.) Spelt split in Minshew, ed. 1627; Shak. Winter's Tale, i. 2. 349. [Palsgrave has: 'I splette a fyshe a-sonder, Je ouers;' but this is rather ME. splatten, to lay open, lay flat, as in Palladius on Husbandry, b. ii. l. 123.]—MDu. splitten, to split; cf. Dan. splitte, to split; Swed. dial. splitta, to disentangle or separate yarn (Rietz). From the weak grade split- of the Teut. strong verb **spleitan-*, as seen in OFries. splita, Westphal. splitan, Du. splijten, to split; G. splissen. We also find Dan. split, Du. spleet, a slit, split, rent, Swed. split, discord (a sense not unknown to English), G. spleisse, a splinter, a shiver, MDu. splete, 'a split or a cleft' (Hexham). Compare also prov. E. sprit, to split, Swed. spricka, to split. Der. split, sb.; also splint, q. v., splice, q. v.

SPLUTTER, to speak hastily and confusedly. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson; and see Halliwell. A by-form of sputter, which is the frequentative, with the usual suffix -er, of spout, to talk fluently, orig. to squirt out; see Sputter and Spout. In the sense 'to talk,' the latter word occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act iv. sc. 4: 'Pray, spout some French, son.' To splutter is to talk so fast as to be unintelligible. The old Leicest. word spirtle, to sprinkle, used by Drayton (Evans) is similarly formed as the frequentative of Spurt. Cf. Low G. sprutten, to spout, spurt, sprinkle.

SPOIL, to plunder, pillage. (F.—L.) ME. spoilien, Wyclif, Mark, iii. 27. [The sb. spoile occurs even earlier, in King Alisaunder, 986.]—F. spolier, 'to spoile, despoile'; Cot.—L. spoliāre, to strip of spoil, despoil.—L. spolium, spoil, booty; the skin or hide of an animal stripped off, and hence the dress of a slain warrior stripped from him. Root uncertain. Some have connected it with Gk. σκόλον, spoil. ¶ It is probable that spoil has been to some extent confused with its compound de-spoil, q. v. Cf. 'Dyspoylyn or Spoylyn, Spolio;' Prompt. Parv. Der. spoil, sb., ME. spoile, as above; spoil-er; spoli-at-ion, from F. spoliation, 'a spoiling,' Cot., from L. acc. spoliātiōnem; spoli-ate (rare), from pp. spoliatus.

SPOKE, one of the bars of a wheel, from the nave to the rim. (E.) ME. spoke, Chaucer, C. T. 7839 (D 2257). AS. spāca, pl. spācan; 'Radii, spācan,' Voc. 106. 28. [The change from ā to long o is perfectly regular; cf. stān, a stone, bān, a bone.] +Du. speek, a spoke; G. speiche, OHG. speicha. Teut. types **spakon-*, **spaikōn-*; allied by gradation to spike; see Spike (1). Der. spoke-shave (Palsgrave).

SPOKESMAN, one who speaks in behalf of others. (E.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 1. 152; and in Exod. iv. 16 (A.V.). The form of the word is hardly explicable; we should rather have expected to meet with spoke-s-man, formed by analogy with hunt-s-man, or else with speech-man. As it is, the pp. spoke (for spoken) has been substituted for the infin. speak; see Speak and Man.

SPOLIATION. (F.—L.) See under Spoil.

SPONDEE, in classical poetry, a foot containing two long syllables. (L.—Gk.) Called spondeus in Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, ed. 1589, pt. ii. c. 3. Ben Jonson has: 'The steadie spondæes' to translate 'Spondæos stabiles' in his tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, l. 266. Englished from L. spondæus or spondēus.—Gk. σπονδαίος, in metre, a spondee, so called because slow solemn melodies, chiefly in this metre, were used at σπονδαί.—Gk. σπονδαί, a solemn treaty or truce; pl. of σπονδή, a drink-offering, libation to the gods (such as were made at a treaty).—Gk. σπονδή, 2nd grade of σπένδειν, to pour out, make a libation. Perhaps allied to Sponsor. Brugmann, i. § 143, ii. § 802. Der. spond-a-ic, L. spondāicus, Gk. σπονδαϊακός.

SPONGE, the porous framework of an animal, remarkable for sucking up water. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. sponge, Ancrer Riwle, p. 262, l. 2.—OF. esponge, 'a sponge,' Cot. Mod. F. éponge.—L. spongia.—Gk. σπογγία, a sponge; another form of σπόγγος (Attic σφόγγος), a sponge. +L. fungus, a fungus, from its spongy nature. ¶ Also AS. sponge, Matt. xxvii. 48, directly from Latin. Der. sponge, verb; spong-y, spong-i-ness; also sponge-cake; spunk, q. v. Allied to fungus.

SPONSOR, a surety, godfather or godmother. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. sponsor, a surety, one who promises for another; cf. spons-us, pp. of spondere, to promise. Probably allied to Gk. σπονδαί, a treaty, truce, and σπένδειν, to pour a libation, as when making a solemn treaty; see Spondee. Der. sponsor-i-al, sponsorship. And see spouse. Also (from L. spondere) de-spond, re-spond, cor-re-spond.

SPONTANEOUS, voluntary, acting on one's own impulse. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from L. spontāneus, willing; by change of -us into -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. Formed with suffix -āneus from spont-, appearing in the gen. spontis and abl. sponte of a lost sb. **spons*. Sponte is used to mean 'of one's own accord,' and spontis occurs in the phrase suae spontis esse, to be at one's own disposal, to be one's own master. Der. spontaneous-ly; spontane-i-ty, a coined word.

SPONTOON, a half-pike formerly used by officers of infantry. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'You have never a spontoon in the house?' Foote, Mayor of Garrat, i. 1.—F. sponton, espon-ton (Hatzfeld).—Ital. sponentone, 'a gleave, a iavelin, a partisan;' Florio. It was orig. a blunted weapon.—Ital. spontare, 'to abate the edge or point of anie weapon;' Florio.—Late L. **expunctare*, to blunt a point (Körting).—L. ex, off, away; and punctum, a point. See Ex- and Point.

SPOOL, a reel for winding yarn on. (MDu.) ME. spole, Prompt. Parv. p. 470; also in W. de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Voc. i. 157. Imported from the Netherlands, with the Flemish weavers.—MDu. spoel (Hexham); Du. spoel, a spool, quill; Low G. spole (Bremen Wörterbuch).+Swed. spole, a spool, spoke; Dan. spole; G. spule, a spool, bobbin, quill; OHG. spuolo, spuola. Perhaps allied to Icel. spölr (base spal-), a rail, a bar.

SPOOM, to run before the wind. (L.) An old sea-term; see examples in Nares. Lit. 'to throw up foam' by running through the water. As Nares remarks, it means to sail steadily rather than swiftly. From spume, foam (L. spūma); see Spume. Corruptly also spoon; 'spooning before the wind,' Capt. Smith, Works, p. 878. Hence spoon-drift > spindrift. See Spin-drift.

SPOON, an instrument for supping liquids. (E.) The orig. sense was simply 'a chip,' then a thin slice of wood, lastly a spoon (at first wooden). ME. spon (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 10916 (F 602). AS. spōn, a chip, a splinter of wood; see examples in Bosworth. In Voc. 149. 30, the L. fomes, a chip for firewood, is glossed by 'geswælud spoon, vel tynder,' i. e. a kindled chip, or tinder.+Du. spaan, a chip, splint; Icel. spänn, spönn, a chip, shaving, spoon; Dan. spaan, a chip; Swed. spån, a chip, splint; G. spahn, OHG. spān, a very thin board, chip, splint, shaving. β. The Teut. type is **spēnuz*, a chip. Cf. Gk. σφήν, a wedge. Der. spoon-bill, a bird; spoon-ful, spelt spoonefull in Minshew, ed. 1627, sponeful in Sir T. More, Works, p. 617 (R.). ME. sponful, in MS. Harl. 2378, p. 25 (see Henslow, Med. Wks., p. 78); the pl. is spoonfuls, see exx. in R.; spoon-meat, Com. of Errors, iv. 3. 61. Brugmann, i. § 552.

SPOOR, a trail. (Du.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Introduced from the Cape of Good Hope.—Du. spoor, a spur; also a trace, track, trail. Cf. Low G. spoor, a spoor (Danneil). Allied to Speir and Spur.

SPORADIC, scattered here and there. (Gk.) 'Sporadici Morbi, diseases that are rare in many places;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It thus arose as a medical term. The Late L. sporadicus is merely borrowed from Gk. σποραδικός, scattered.—Gk. σποραδ-, stem of σποράς, scattered.—Gk. σπορ-, 2nd grade of σπείρειν, to sow, to scatter abroad. See Sperm.

SPORE, a minute grain which serves as a seed in ferns, &c. (Gk.) Modern and botanical.—Gk. σπόρος, seed-time; also, a seed.—Gk. σπορ-, 2nd grade of σπείρειν, to sow. See above.

SPORRAN, a leathern pouch, worn with the kilt. (Gael.—L.—Gk.) In Scott's Rob Roy, c. xxxiv.—Gael. sporan, a purse, pouch worn with the kilt; Irish sparan, a purse, a pouch; Mírisish sboran; for *s-burr<*burs, from L. bursa, a purse, from Gk. βύρση, a hide; see Purse (Macbain).

SPORT, play, mirth, merriment, jest. (F.—L.) 'Sporte, myrthe;' Palsgrave. Merely a contracted form of disport, desport, by loss of di- or de-; just as we have splay for display, spend for dispend. Strattmann cites sport as occurring in the Coventry Plays, ed. Halliwell, p. 185. Disport is in Chaucer, C. T. 777 (A 775); see further under Disport. Der. sport, verb, spelt sporte (also disporte) in Palsgrave; sport-ing; sport-ful, Tw. Nt. v. 373; sport-ful-ly, sport-ful-ness; sport-ive, All's Well, iii. 2. 109, sport-ive-ly, -ness; sport-s-man (coined like hunt-s-man), sport-s-man-ship.

SPOT, a blot, mark made by wet, a discoloured place, small space, stain. (E.) ME. spot, Prompt. Parv.; pl. spottes, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 315. [I suspect that spat in Ancrén Riwe, p. 104, note e, is a misprint for swat.] Prob. a native word; cf. EFries. spot, a spot, MDu. spotten, to spot, stain. Also Norw. spott, a spot, also a small piece of land, Icel. spotti, spottir, a small piece, bit. Perhaps also allied to Swed. spott, spittle, spotta, to spit. (Distinct from G. spott, mockery, derision.) Apparently from Teut. **sput-*, weaker grade of **spūtan-*, to spout. See Spout. Der. spot, verb, chiefly in the pp. spott-ed, as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 26, Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35; spott-y, spott-i-ness; spot-less, Rich. II, i. 1. 178, spot-less-ly, spot-less-ness. And see spatt-er.

SPOUSE, a husband or wife. (F.—L.) One of the oldest words in the language of F. origin. ME. spuse, fem. sb., O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 13, l. 5; the comp. sb. spūshād, spousehood, also occurs in the 11th century, O. Eng. Hom. i. 143, l. 24, having already acquired an E. suffix. The form is rather fem. than masc.—OF. espous (Burguy), later espoux (époux), 'a spouse, bridegroom,' Cot.; fem. form espouse (épouse), 'a spouse, a wife;' id. The former answers to L. sponsus, acc. of sponsus, a betrothed, a bridegroom; the latter to sponsa, fem., a betrothed woman.—L. sponsus, promised, pp. of spondere, to promise; see Sponsor. Der. espouse, verb, q. v.; also spous-al, ME. spousaile, Gower, C. A. i. 181; bk. ii. 642; a doublet of espousal, ME. espousaile, Gower, C. A. ii. 322; bk. v. 5815; see under espouse.

SPOUT, to throw out a liquid violently, to rush out violently as a liquid from a pipe. (E.) ME. spouten, Chaucer, C. T. 4907 (B 487). Prob. from an AS. form **spūtan*, not found. But cf. Du. uit-spuiten, to spout out (with ui=AS. ū, by rule); also Swed. sputa, given by Widegren as equivalent to Swed. spruta, to squirt, spout, spurt; MDu. spuyten, 'to spout out water,' Hexham. Also Icel. spýta, to spit, sputter. The Teut. type is **spūtan-*, to spit out, with a weaker grade **sput-*; see Franck. ¶ It is probable that spout is a by-form of sprout; compare D. spuit, a spout, squirt, syringe, fire-engine, with Swed. spruta, a squirt, syringe, fire-engine. See Sprout. For loss of r after sp, cf. speak. Der. spout, sb., ME. spoute, spelt spowte in Prompt. Parv. And see sputter.

SPRACK, SPRAG, quick, lively. (Scand.) See Spark (2). SPRAIN, to overstrain the muscles of a joint. (F.—L.) A late word. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it as a sb. The older word with much the same sense is strain; and sprain is related to OF. espreindre just as strain is to OF. estreindre.—OF. espreign-, a stem of espreindre, 'to press, wring, strain, squeeze out, thrust together;' Cot. Mod. F. épreindre.—L. exprimere, to press out; whence espreindre is formed by analogy with F. forms from L. verbs in -ingere.—L. ex, out; and premere, to press; see Ex- and Press. And cf. Express. Der. sprain, sb.; cf. OF. espreinte, 'a pressing, straining,' Cot., from the pp. espreint.

SPRAT, a small sea-fish. (E.) ME. sprot or sprotte. 'Hec epimera, a sprott,' in a list of fishes; Voc. 704. 39; also 'Emiperus, sprot;' Voc. 580. 6. AS. sprott (Toller). Cf. AS. sprot, a sprout, twig. +Du. sprot, 'a sprat, a fish;' Hexham. He also gives 'sprot, a sprout, or a sprigg of a tree, or the young of every thing;' which is the same word. 'Sprat, a small fish, considered as the fry of the herring;' Wedgwood. Cf. prov. E. sprats, smallwood (Halliwell); lit. sprouts. All from Teut. **sprut-* (AS. sprot-), weak grade of **spūtan-*, to sprout; with the sense of 'fry,' or young one. See Sprout.

SPRAWL, to toss about the limbs, stretch the body carelessly when lying. (E.) ME. spraullen, Gower, C. A. ii. 5; bk. iv. 111 (footnote); Havelok, 475. AS. spreaulian; Toller cites 'Spreawlige, palpitet.' +Norw. sprala, Dan. sprælle, sprælde, Swed. dial. sprala, spralla, NFries. sprawle. Perhaps allied to Swed. sprattla, to sprawl; or to Icel. sprökla, spraakla, to kick with the feet, to sprawl. If so, a dental or guttural has been lost before l.

SPRAY (1), foam tossed with the wind. (Low G.) 'Commonly written spry. "Winds raise some of the salt with the spray;" Arbuthnot;' Johnson's Dict. But no example of the spelling spry is given, and it is not easy to find one. Bailey has spray (1735). From Low G. sprei, a slight drizzle (Schambach); in Coburg, spræ; cf. Bavar. spræen, to drizzle (Schmeller), Thüringen sprühen (Hertel), MHG. spræjen, spræwen; allied to G. sprühen, to drizzle, to form spray, Du. sproeien (see Franck).

SPRAY (2), a sprig or small shoot of a tree. (E.) ME. spray, Chaucer, C. T. 13700 (B 1960); Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 275; answering to AS. **spræg*, allied to spræc, a shoot, spray; cf. Dan. sprag, a sprig, spray (Molbech); Swed. dial. spragge, spragg, a spray (Rietz). β. Allied to Icel. sprek, a stick (whence smā-sprek, small sticks, twigs, sprays); AS. spræc, a shoot; 'Sarmentum, spræc;' Voc. 44. 29. Cf. Lithuan. sprogti, to crackle, split, sprout or bud as a tree; whence sproga, a rift, a sprig or spray of a tree, spurgas, a knot or eye in a tree. Also Gk. ἀσπάργος, asparagus, of which the orig. sense was perhaps merely 'sprout' or shoot. See Brugmann, i. 523, 531. Doublet, sprig (and perhaps asparagus).

SPREAD, to scatter abroad, stretch, extend, overlay, emit, diffuse. (E.) ME. sprede, pt. t. spradde, sprede, pp. sprad, sprede, P. Plowman, B. iii. 308; pt. t. spradde, Gower, C. A. i. 182; bk. ii. 684. AS. sprædan, to spread out, extend, a rare word. It occurs as gespread, imper. sing. = extend thou, stretch out, in the Northumb. version of Matt. xii. 13; and the comp. ofer-sprædan, to spread over, is in the Rule of St. Bennet, ed. Schröer, p. 109, l. 7. +Du. spreiden, to spread, scatter, strew; Low G. sprede, spreën, spreien; G. spreiten. Teut. type **spraidjan-*, a causal form, from the older base SPREID, to become extended, spread out. Der. spread, sb.; over-spread.

SPREE, a merry frolic. (Scand.?) Modern and colloquial. Sir W. Scott has spre, St. Ronan's Well, ch. xx. § 11; also spray, Intro. to Legend of Montrose. Cf. Irish spre, a spark, flash of fire, animation, spirit. Cf. Irish sprac; a spark, life, motion, spraic, strength, vigour, sprightliness, Gael. spraic, vigour, exertion, spracadh, sprightliness; not Celtic, but from Icel. sprækr, lively. See Spry. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 278.

SPRIG, a spray, twig, small shoot of a tree. (E.) ME. sprigge, a rod for beating children, stick; P. Plowman, C. vi. 139 (footnote). Allied to AS. spræc, a spray, twig; Voc. 44. 29. +Icel. sprek, a stick; Low G. sprikk, a sprig, twig, esp. a small dry twig or stick; EFries. sprikke, sprik, a stick, twig. Allied to Dan. sprag, a spray (Molbech); see further under Spray (2).

SPRIGHTLY, SPRITELY, lively. (F.—L.; with E. suffix.) The common spelling sprightly is wrong; gh is a purely E. combination, whereas the present word is French. The mistake was due to the very common false spelling spright, for sprite, a spirit; see Sprite. The suffix -ly is from AS. -lic, like; see Like. Der. spright-li-ness.

SPRING, to bound, leap, jump up, start up or forth, issue. (E.) ME. springen, strong verb, pt. t. sprang, pp. sprungen, sprongen; Chaucer, C. T. 13690 (B 1950). AS. springan, springan; pt. t. sprang, spranc, pp. sprungen. The spelling springan is the usual one, Matt. ix. 26. But we find sprincē=springs, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxv (lib. iii. met. 2). And in Matt. ix. 26, where the AS. version has 'þes hlisa sprang ofer eall þæt land'=this rumour spread abroad over all the land, the Northumbrian version has spranc. +Du. springen, pt. t. sprong, pp. gesprongen; Icel. springa, to burst, split; Swed. springa; Dan. springe; G. springen. β. All from the Teut. type **sprengan-*, pt. t. **sprang*, pp. **sprunganoz*. Allied to Gk. σπένχειν, to drive on; Brugmann, i. § 602. (✓SPERGH.) γ. We still say of a cricket-bat that is cracked or split, that it is sprung; and cf. Prov. E. (Eastern) sprinke, a crack or flaw (Halliwell), where we even find the original E. final k; also Essex sprunk, to crack, split, E. Anglian sprank, a crack; E. D. D. The sense 'to split, burst' is that of Icel. springa. Der. spring, sb., a leap, also the time when young shoots spring or rise out of the ground, also a source of water that wells up, a crack in a mast, &c.; spring-y; spring-bok, a kind of antelope, from Du. bok, a he-goat, a buck; spring-halt (in horses), Hen. VIII, i. 3. 13; spring-time, As You Like It, v. 3. 20; spring-flood, ME. spring-flod, Chaucer, C. T. 11382 (F 1070); spring-tide; day-spring, off-spring, well-spring. Also springe, a snare that is provided with a flexible rod, called a springe in ME., as in P. Plowman, B. v. 41. And see sprink-le. ¶ To spring a mine is to cause it to burst; cf. Swed. spränga, to cause to burst, causal of springa, to burst.

SPRINGAL, a youngster. (E.; with F. suffix.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 10. 6. Spelt springall in Minsheu; spring-ald in Levins (1570). From spring, i. e. to be alert; with suffix -ald, of F. origin, from OHG. -wald, as in her-ald, &c.

SPRINKLE, to scatter in small drops. (Du.?) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 13. A better form is sprengle, written sprengyll by Palsgrave, and sprenkelyn in the Prompt. Parv. Perhaps borrowed from Du. sprenkelen, to sprinkle. Cf. G. sprenkeln, to speckle, from MHG. sprengel, a spot, allied to Icel. sprekka, Swed. språkka, a little spot. See Kluge, s. v. sprengel (who denies a connexion with spring). It seems to be allied to Skt. prç-ni-, speckled; see Perch (2). Brugmann, i. 509 (1). ¶ Distinct from ME. sprengen, to scatter, cast abroad, sprinkle. 'Sprenged ou mid hali water' = sprinkle yourselves with holy water, Ancrén Riwle, p. 16, l. 9. From AS. sprengan, to sprinkle, scatter abroad, Matt. xxv. 24, Exod. xxiv. 8; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 264, l. 15. This sprengan is the causal of AS. springan, to spring, leap abroad, regularly formed by the change of a (in the pt. t. sprang) to e, as if for **sprangan*. See Spring. Der. sprinkle, sb., a holy-water sprinkler, see Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 13; sprinkl-er.

SPRINT, to run at full speed; see Spurt (2).

SPRIT, a spar set diagonally to extend a fore-and-aft sail. (E.) The older sense is merely a pole or long rod, and an older spelling is found in ME. spret. 'A spret or an ore' = a spit or an oar; Will. of Palerne, 2754; spelt spreot, King Alisaunder, 858. AS. sprēot, a pole. 'Contus, sprēot;' Voc. 139. 39; cf. 14. 22. 'Trudes, sprēotas,' in a list of things belonging to a ship; id. 166. 15. The orig. sense is 'a sprout,' or shoot, hence a branch, pole, &c. Allied to AS. sprūtan, to sprout, cognate with G. sprössen; see further under Sprout. + Du. spriet, a spit; MSwed. spröte; Dan. spryd, spröd. Der. sprit-sail, bow-sprit. Doublet, sprout.

SPRITE, SPRIGHT, a spirit. (F.—L.) The false spelling spright is common, and is still in use in the derived adj. sprightly. Spelt sprite in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 40, 43; but spright, id. i. 2. 2. 'Legions of sprights,' id. i. 1. 38. ME. sprit, sprite, spryte; 'the holy spryte,' Rich. Coer de Lion, 394. — F. esprit, 'the spirit,' Cot. — L. spiritum, acc. of spiritus. It is a doublet of Spirit, q. v. Der. spright-ly or sprite-ly; spright-ed, haunted, Cymb. ii. 3. 144; spright-ful or sprite-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 177; spright-ful-ly, Rich. II, i. 3. 3; spright-ing, Temp. i. 2. 298. Doublet, spirit.

SPROUT, to shoot out germs, burgeon, bud. (E.) Spelt sprut in Fitzherbert, Husbandry, § 13, l. 38 (E. D. S.). ME. spruten, Cursor Mundi, 11216; O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 217, l. 23. From AS. sprūtan, found in the pp. ā-sproten; OFris. sprūta, strong verb, pp. spruten, to sprout (Richtofen). + Low G. sprūten, to sprout; Du. spruiten; G. sprössen, to sprout, pt. t. spross, pp. gesprossen. The cognate Swed. spruta is only used in the sense to spout or squirt out water, and perhaps is the word whence E. spout is derived, by loss of r; see Spout, Spurt (1). β. All from a Teut. type **sprūtan-*, pt. t. **spraut*, pp. **sprutanoz*. We may also notice that E. spout as a sb. is related to Du. spruit, Icel. spröti, G. spross, a sprout; cf. also AS. sprot, sprotā, a sprout; and that E. sprit, q. v., is allied to the same words. Cf. Goth. sprautō, quickly. Der. sprout, sb. And see spout, sprit, sprat.

SPRUCE, fine, smart, gaily dressed. (F.—G.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 14; and in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'It was the custom of our ancestors, on special occasions, to dress after the manner of particular countries. The gentlemen who adopted that of Prussia or Spruce seem, from the description of it, to have been arrayed in a style, to which the epithet spruce, according to our modern usage, might have been applied with perfect propriety. Prussian leather (corium Prusianum) is called in Baret by the familiar name of spruce;' Richardson; see Baret, art. 781. Richardson then quotes from Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 1, § 25, as follows: 'And after them came syr Edward Haward, than Admirall, and wyth hym Syr Thomas Parre, in dobles of crimosin veluet, voyded lowe on the backe, and before to the cannell-bone, lased on the breastes with chaynes of siluer, and ouer that shorte clokes of crimosyn satyne, and on their heades hattes after dauncers fashion, with feasauntes fethers in them: They were appareyled after the fashion of Prusia or Spruce.' There may have been special reference to the leather worn; the name of spruce was certainly given to the leather because it came from Prussia. Levins has: 'Corium pumicatum, Spruce;' col. 182, l. 14. 'Spruce leather, corruptly so called for Prussia leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Spruce leather, graauw leer, Pruysch leer,' i. e. gray leather, or Prussian leather; Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict., 1749. [E. Müller objects that it is difficult to see why Prussia should always be called Spruce, not Pruce, in this particular instance; but the name, once associated with the leather, would easily remain the same, especially as the etymology may not have been very obvious to all. It is a greater difficulty to know why the s should ever have been prefixed, but it may be attributed to the English fondness for initial s; or it may have arisen from the G.

das Preussen.] It is sufficient to make sure that Spruce really did mean Prussia, and really was used instead of Pruce. Of this we have positive proof as early as the 14th century. 'And yf ich sente ouer see my seruauant to brugges, Oßer in-to prus my prentys' = and if I sent my servant over the sea to Bruges, or sent my apprentice to Prussia; P. Plowman, C. vii. 279; where two MSS. read spruce for prus, and one MS. has pruys-lond = Prussian land; the land of Prussia. In the corresponding passage of P. Plowman, B. xiii. 393, three MSS. have pruslonde, pruys londe, and pruce-lond respectively; but a fourth has spruce-land. Pruce is the form in Chaucer, C. T. 53 (a well-known passage). β. Further, we find Spruys-chyst (Spruce chest) in Paston Letters, iii. 407, but prouce-kyst in Records of Nottingham, ii. 86; spruce hutche in the Bury Wills (1493), p. 82, but pruce hutche (1448), p. 12. And Prussia is called Sprucia as late as 1614; see Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, iv. 329, 345. γ. We conclude that to dress sprucely was to dress after the Prussian manner; that Spruce was early used in place of Pruce, particularly with reference to Prussian leather; and consequently that spruce is due to OF. Pruce, mod. F. Prusse, Prussia. — G. Preussen, Prussia (or from an older form of the same). Der. spruce-ly, spruce-ness.

SPRUCE-BEER, a kind of beer. (G.; confused with F. and E.) 'Spruce-beer, a kind of physical drink, good for inward bruises;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Spruce-beer, and the beer of Hambur;' Colyn Blowbol's Testament, 332, in Hazlitt, E. Eng. Popular Poetry, i. 106. 'Essence of spruce is obtained from the young shoots of the black spruce fir. . . . Spruce beer is brewed from this essence. . . . The black beer of Dantzic is similarly made from the young shoots of another variety of fir;' Eng. Cycl., Supp. to Arts and Sciences. 'A decoction of the young shoots of spruce and silver fir was much in use on the shores of the Baltic as a remedy in scorbutic, gouty, and rheumatic complaints. The sprouts from which it was made were called sprossen in German and jopen in Dutch, and the decoction itself sprossen-bier [in German] or jopenbier [in Dutch]. From the first of these is spruce-beer. See Beke in N. and Q. Aug. 3, 1860. And doubtless the spruce-fir, G. sprossenfichte, takes its name as the fir of which the sprouts are chiefly used for the foregoing purpose, and not from being brought from Prussia, as commonly supposed;' Wedgwood. β. The above explanation may be admitted; but with the addition that the reason why the G. word sprossen-bier was turned into spruce-beer in English is precisely because it was commonly known that it came from Prussia; and since sprossen-bier had no sense in English and was not translated into sprouts-beer, it was natural to call it Spruce-beer, i. e. Prussian beer. The facts, that Spruce meant Prussia as early as the 14th century, and that spruce or spruce-leather was already in use to signify Prussian leather, have been proved in the article above; see Spruce. Thus spruce-beer for sprossen-bier was no mere corruption, but a deliberate substitution. Accordingly, we find in Evelyn's Sylva, ch. 22, the remark: 'For masts, &c., those [firs] of Prussia which we call Spruce.' γ. With this understanding, we may admit that spruce-beer is one of the very few words in English which are derived immediately from German. — G. sprossenbier, spruce-beer, lit. 'sprouts-beer;' G. sprossenfichte, spruce-fir; sprossennessenz, spruce-wine. — G. sprossen, pl. of sprosse, a sprout, cognate with E. sprout; and bier, cognate with E. beer; see Sprout and Beer. Note also Du. joopenbier, 'spruce-beer;' Sewel's Du. Dict. ed. 1754. The word spruce = Prussia, is French, from G. (das) Preussen, as shown above.

SPRY, active, nimble, lively. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Given by Halliwell as a Somersetsh. word, but general; see E. D. D. Perhaps E. Cf. Swed. dial. spryg, very lively, skittish (as a horse), Rietz; allied to Swed. dial. spräg, spräk, or spräker, spirited, mettlesome. Compare also prov. E. sprag (Halliwell); and sprack: active, a Wiltshire word. See Spre and Spark (2).

SPUD, an instrument for weeding. (Scand.) See E. D. D. It formerly also meant a knife or dagger; see Nares. ME. spudde, 'cutellus vilis;' Prompt. Parv. Prob. from Dan. spyd, MDan. spyd, spjud; cognate with Swed. spjut, Icel. spjöt, a spear, lance. + G. spiess, a lance. ¶ Distinct from Spit (1).

SPUE, the same as Spew, q. v.

SPUME, foam. (L.) Not common. ME. spume, Gower, C. A. ii. 265; bk. v. 4122. — L. spūma, foam. For **spōima*; Brugmann, i. § 791. Allied to Skt. phēna-, foam, Russ. pīna, foam, AS. fām; see Foam. Der. spoom, verb, q. v.; pum-ice, q. v.; pounce (2), q. v. Doublet, foam.

SPUNK, tinder; hence, a match, spark, spirit, mettle. (C.—L.—Gk.) Also spunk; see examples in Jamieson and Halliwell. 'In spunk or tinder;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virg. Æn. i. 175; ed. Arber, p. 23. The orig. sense is tinder or touchwood. — Irish sponc, Gael. spóng, sponge; tinder, touchwood; applied to touchwood from its spongy nature. — L. spōngia, a sponge; hence pumice-stone, or other porous material. — Gk. σπογγία, σπόγγος, a sponge; see Sponge.

SPUR, an instrument on a horseman's heels, for goading on a horse, a small goad. (E.) ME. spure, spore, Chaucer, C. T. 475 (A 473); P. Plowman, B. xviii. 12. AS. spura, spora. 'Calcar, spura;' Voc. 275. 33. Cf. hand-spura, a hand-spur, Beowulf, 986 (Grein). + Du. spoor, a spur; allied to spoor, a track; see Spoor; Icel. spori; Dan. spore; Swed. sporre; OHG. sporo; MHG. spor; G. sporn. β. All from **spor-*, weak grade of Teut. **spēr-an-*, to kick. Brugmann, i. § 793 (2). From ✓SPER, to quiver, to jerk, which appears in G. sich sperren, to struggle against; one sense of this root is to kick, jerk out the feet, as in Lithuan. spirti, to resist, to kick out as a horse; cf. Skt. spūr, spūr, to throb, to struggle. Hence the sense of spur is 'kicker'. γ. A closely allied word occurs in AS. spor, a foot-track, Du. spoor, Icel. spor, G. spur (see Spoor); whence was formed the verb appearing as AS. spyrjan, Icel. spyrja, G. spüren, to trace a foot-track, to investigate, enquire into, represented by Lowland Sc. speir, to enquire, ask, search out. Der. spur, verb, ME. spuriën, sporien, Layamon, 21354, Romance of Partenay, 4214. Also spur-wheel; and see spoor, speir, spurn.

SPURGE, a class of acrid plants. (F.—L.) 'Spurge, a plant, the juice of which is so hot and corroding that it is called Devil's Milk, which being dropped upon warts eats them away;' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. And hence the name. ME. sporge, Prompt. Parv.; spowrge, Voc. 645. 15.—AF. spurge, a form given in Voc. 557. 7; more commonly OF. espurge, 'garden spurge;' Cot.—OF. espurger, 'to purge, clear, cleanse, rid of; also, to prune, or pick off the noysome knobs or buds of trees;' Cot. Hence, to destroy warts.—L. expurgāre, to expurgate, purge thoroughly.—L. ex, out, thoroughly; and purgāre, to purge; see Ex- and Purge.

SPURIOUS, not genuine. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 391. Englished from L. spurius, false, spurious, by the common change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. The orig. sense is 'of illegitimate birth;' perhaps allied to Gk. σπορά, seed, offspring, σπείρειν, to sow (Corssen); see Sperm. Der. spurious-ly, -ness.

SPURN, to reject with disdain. (E.) Properly 'to kick against,' hence 'to kick away, reject disdainfully. ME. spurnen, to kick against, stumble over, Ancrén Riwe, p. 188, l. 2. 'Spornyng, or Spurnyng, Calcitratio;' Prompt. Parv. AS. spornan, spurnan, gespornan, to kick against; cf. also at-spornan, Matt. iv. 6, John, xi. 9. A strong verb; pt. t. spearn, pl. spurnon, pp. spornen. + Icel. spærna, pt. t. spærna, to spurn, kick with the feet; L. spurnere, to spurn, despise (a cognate form, not one from which the E. word is borrowed, for the E. verb is a strong one). β. All from the Idg. base **spēr-*, to kick against, an extension from ✓SPER, to quiver, jerk, also to kick against; see Spur and Spar (3). Der. spurn, sb., Timon, i. 2. 146; Chevy Chase (oldest version), near the end.

SPURRY, the name of a herb. (F.—G.—Late L.) In Cotgrave.—MF. spurrie, 'spurry or frank, a Dutch herb, and an excellent fodder for cattle;' Cot. By 'Dutch' he prob. means 'German;' we find Du. spurrie, 'the herb spurge,' in Hexham; but this can hardly be other than the F. word borrowed. The etymology of the F. word is doubtful, but it may be German, as Cotgrave seems to suggest. We find in German the forms spark, spärgel, spörgel, all meaning spurry.—Late L. spargula; A. D. 1482 (Weigand). It looks as if it might be connected with L. spargere, to scatter.

SPURT (1), SPIRT, to spout, jet out, as water. (E.) 'With toonge three-forked furth spirts fyre;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. ed. Arber, p. 59. The older meaning is to sprout or germinate, to grow fast; as in Hen. V, iii. 5. 8. We even find the sb. spirt, a sprout; 'These nuts . . . haue in their mids a little chit or spirt;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xv. c. 22. Cf. 'from Troy blud spirted;' Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. ed. Arber, p. 35. By the common metathesis of r (as ME. brid for bird) spurt stands for sprut; as in ME. sprutten; 'þe wið þet sprutted ut' = the willow that sprouts or shoots out; Ancrén Riwe, p. 86. AS. spryttan, spritten; 'spritte sēo eorðe grōwende gær's' = let the earth shoot out growing grass; Gen. i. 11. A causal verb, allied to the AS. strong verb sprūtan, to sprout; see Sprout. Cf. prov. E. sprit, to sprout; E. D. D.; and see Spout.

SPURT (2), a violent exertion. (Scand.) Used by Stanyhurst in the sense of 'space of time;' as, 'Heere for a spirt linger,' tr. of Virgil, Æn. iii. 453. Not the same word as the above, though perhaps confused with it.—Icel. sprettr, a spurt, spring, bound, run; from the strong verb spretta (pt. t. spratt), to start, to spring; also to spout out water; also to sprout. Cf. Swed. spritta, to start, startle; prov. E. sprit, to run quickly a short way (E. D. D.). The Teut. base is **sprent* (tt < nt); hence also E. sprint, to run a quick short race; which is the doublet of spurt, vb., to run fast. Cf. Swed. dial. sprinnta, to burst (as a bud); to run fast, to jump. The orig. n of the base SPRENT is also preserved in prov. E. sprunt, a convulsive struggle, Warwickshire (Halliwell).

SPUTTER, to keep spouting or jerking out liquid, to speak rapidly and indistinctly. (E.) 'And lick'd their hissing jaws, that sputter'd flame;' Dryden, tr. of Æneid, ii. 279 (ii. 211, Lat. text). The frequentative of Spout, q. v.; so that the sense is 'to keep on spouting.' From sput-, weaker grade of Teut. **spūtan-*, to spout. Cf. Du. dial. (Groningen) spōttern, to sputter; Low G. sputtern; Norw. sputra, to spout. ¶ Not to be confused with spatter, which is a different word, and allied to spot.

SPY, to see, discover. (F.—OHG.) Short for espy. ME. spien, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 40, l. 14. [The ME. spie, sb., a spy, occurs in Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 332.] The same word as ME. espian, Chaucer, C. T. 4744 (B 324); House of Fame, l. 706.—OF. espier, to espy.—OHG. spehōn, MHG. spehen (mod. G. spähen), to watch, observe closely. + L. specere, to look; Skt. paś, spag, to spy; used to form some tenses of dr̥ś, to see.—✓SPEK, to see; Brugmann, i. § 551. Der. spy, sb., as above; spy-glass; also (from espy) espi-on-age, espi-al. From L. specere we have spice, spec-ies, spec-i-al, espec-i-al, spec-i-men, spec-i-fy, spec-i-ous, spec-u-late; au-spice, con-spic-u-ous, de-spice-able, fronti-spice, per-spice-u-ous, su-spice-i-ous, tran-spice-u-ous; de-spise, de-spice; a-spect, circum-spect, ex-pect, in-spect, intro-spect-ion, per-spect-ive, pro-spect, re-spect, dis-re-spect, ir-re-spect-ive, retro-spect, su-spect, spect-a-cle, spect-a-tor, spect-re, spect-rum; also spite, respite.

SQUAB, 1. to fall plump; 2. a sofa; a young bird. (Scand.) 'Squab, an unfledged bird, the young of an animal before the hair appears (South); a long seat, a sofa; also, to squeeze, beat (Devon);' Halliwell. Halliwell also cites from Coles: 'A squob to sit on, pulvinus mollicellus;' this is not in the edition of 1684. Squab, a sofa, is in Pope, Imitation of Earl of Dorset, l. 10. Johnson also explains squab as 'unfeathered; fat, thick and stout;' and gives squab, adv., 'with a heavy, sudden fall, plump and flat,' with a quotation from Lestranger's Fables: 'The eagle took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock;' also squab, verb, to fall down plump or flat; cf. prov. E. squap, to strike. In all senses, the word is of Scand. origin. 1. The Swed. dial. sqvapp, a word imitative of a splash (Rietz), explains Lestranger's squab and the verb 'to fall plump,' hence to knock, beat; cf. G. schwapp, a slap, E. swap, to strike; see Swap and Squabble. 2. The senses 'fat,' 'unfledged,' and 'soft' (as a sofa) are best explained by Swed. dial. sqvabb, loose or fat flesh, sqvabba, a fat woman, sqvabbig, flabby; from the verb appearing in Norweg. sqvapa, to tremble, shake (hence, to be flabby). Cf. also Norweg. kveppa (pt. t. kvapp), to slip suddenly, shake, shudder, and the ME. quappen, to throb, mentioned under Quaver, q. v. And note Icel. kvap, jelly, jelly-like things. See, in Rietz, the Swed. dial. str. vb. skvimpa (pt. t. skvamp, pp. skvumpen), to shake, agitate; and cf. Swed. skvalpa, MDan. skvalpe, to shake.

SQUABBLE, to dispute noisily, wrangle. (Scand.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 281.—Swed. dial. skvabbel, a dispute, a squabble (corresponding to a verb **skvabbla*, not given); Rietz. Allied to Swed. dial. skvappa, to chide, scold slightly, lit. make a splashing; from the sb. skvapp, a splash, an imitative word from the sound of dabbling in water; Rietz. Cf. Icel. skvampa, to paddle in water. We may also further compare Norweg. svabba, to dabble in water (Aasen), prov. E. swap, a blow, the noise of a fall, to strike swiftly, swab, to splash over, swabble, to squabble, swobble, to swagger in a low manner (East). 'Swablynge, swabbyng, or swaggyng;' Prompt. Parv. Also G. schwabbeln, to shake fluids about. See Swap. ¶ The interchange of initial sku and sw is common; Levins writes sqwayne for swain. Der. squabble, sb., squabl-er.

SQUAD, a small troop. (F.—Ital.—L.) We speak of 'an awkward squad.'—MF. esquadre, escadre, 'a squadron of footmen;' Cot.—Ital. squadra, 'a squadron;' Florio. See Square. Der. squadron.

SQUADRON, a troop of soldiers, a body of cavalry, number of ships. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Oth. i. 1. 22; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 2.—MF. esquadron, 'a squadron, a troope of souldiers ranged into a square body or battalion,' Cot.—Ital. squadrona, 'a squadron, a troupe or band of men;' Florio. The augmentative form (with suffix -one < L. acc. -ōnem) of Ital. squadra, 'a squadron, also a square, squire, or carpenter's ruler, also a certain part of a company of souldiers of 20 or 25 [25 is a square number], whose chiefe is a corporal;' id. Doubtless so called, at first, from a formation into squares; see further under Square. And see squad.

SQUALID, filthy, dirty. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 13.—L. squalidus, stiff, rough, dirty, foul.—L. squalēre, to be stiff, rough, or parched, to be dirty. Bréal connects it with squā-ma, a shell; but cf. Russ. kal', ordure. Der. squalid-ly, -ness. Also squal-or (rare), from squāl-ēre.

SQUALL, to cry out violently. (Scand.) 'The raven croaks, the carrion-crow doth squall;' Drayton, Noah's Flood, l. 150 from end.—Icel. skvala, to squeal, bawl out; skval, a squalling; Swed.

squala, to stream, gush out violently; squal, an impetuous running of water; squal-regn, a violent shower of rain (whence E. squall, sb., a burst of rain); Dan. squaldre, to clamour, bluster; squaller, clamour, noisy talk. Cf. Swed. dial. skvåla, skvåla, to gush out with a violent noise, to prattle, chatter; Gael. sgal, a loud cry, sound of high wind, sgal, to howl; cf. W. chwalu, to babble. β. From a base **skwal*, expressive of the outburst of water; allied to Teut. base SKAL, to resound, as in G. schallen, Icel. skjalla (pt. t. skall). Der. squall, sb., as above; squall-y. And see squeal.

SQUANDER, to dissipate, waste. (Scand.) Now used only of profuse expenditure, but the orig. sense was to scatter or disperse simply, as still used in prov. E. 'His family are all grown up, and squandered [dispersed] about the country,' Warwicksh. (Halliwell). 'Squandered [scattered] abroad;' Merch. of Ven. i. 3. 22. 'Spaine . . . hath many colonies to supply, which lye squandered up and down;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. ix, ed. Arber, p. 45. 'All along the sea They drive and squander the huge Belgian fleet;' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 67. Mr. Wedgwood's solution of this curious word is probably the right one, viz. that it is a nasalised form (as if for **squant*) of Northumb. squatter, squather, to scatter, dissipate, or squander, to act with profusion (Jamieson). This is the same as prov. E. swatter, swather, to throw water about, as geese do in drinking, also, to squander, waste; also as prov. E. swattle, to drink as ducks do water, to waste; see E. D. D. These are frequentatives from Dan. squatte, to splash, spurt; figuratively, to dissipate, squander; cf. squat, sb., a splash. So also Swed. skvätta, to squander, lavish one's money (Widegren); frequentative of skvätta, to squirt (id.); Swed. dial. skvätta, a strong verb (pt. t. skvatt, supine skvuttid), to squirt. Note also Icel. skvetta, to squirt out water, properly of the sound of water thrown out of a jug, skvettr, a gush of water poured out. The d appears in MDu. swadderen, 'to dabble in the water as a goose or duck,' Hexham; and in Swed. dial. skvadra, verb, used of the noise of water gushing violently out of a hole (Rietz). The word is now used metaphorically, but the orig. sense was merely to splash water about somewhat noisily. The Icel. skvetta is for **skwenita* (Noreen); and may even be allied to Gk. σπένδειν, to pour out. A somewhat similar word is E. scatter. Der. squander-er.

SQUARE, having four equal sides and angles. (F.—L.) ME. square (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1078 (A 1076); Cursor Mundi, 19843.—OF. esquarré, 'square, or squared,' Cot.; esquarre, sb., a square, or squareness. The sb. is the same as Ital. squadra, 'a squadron, also a square, squire, or carpenter's ruler;' cf. Ital. squadrare, 'to square,' id. All formed from a Late L. verb **exquadrare*, not found, but a mere intensive of L. quadrare, to square, make four-cornered, by prefixing the prep. ex. The verb quadrare is from quadrus, four-cornered, related to quatuor, four, cognate with E. four. See Ex-, Quarry, Quadrant, and Four. Der. square, sb., square, verb, square-ly, -ness. Also squire (2), q. v., squad, squadron.

SQUASH, to crush, to squeeze flat. (F.—L.) α. No doubt commonly regarded as an intensive form of quash; the prefix s- answering to OF. es- = L. ex-. Cf. OF. esquasser, to break in pieces; from es- (L. ex), intensive prefix, and quasser, casser, to break; see Quash. β. But it commonly keeps the sense of ME. squachen, Barlaam and Josaphat, l. 663, pr. in Altenglische Legenden, ed. Horstmann, p. 224.—OF. esquacher, to crush (Roquefort, who gives a quotation); also spelt escacher, 'to squash, beat, batter, or crush flat;' Cot. Mod. F. écacher. This answers to Span. acachar, agachar, only used reflexively, in the sense to squat, to cower (Diez). The F. cacher answers to a Late L. type **co-act-icāre*, to press together (Körting, § 2272). The prefix es- = L. ex-, extremely; hence es-cacher is 'to press extremely,' crush flat, squash.—L. ex-; and coact-us, pp. of cōgere (= co-agere), lit. to drive together; see Ex-, Cogent; also Con- and Agent. And see Squat, a closely allied word. Der. squash, sb., a soft, unripe peascod, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 166.

SQUAT, to cower, sit down upon the hams. (F.—L.) 'To squatte as a hare doth;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Here squat is to lie flat, as if pressed tightly down; and the old sense of squat is, occasionally, to press down, crush, much like the sense of Squash, which is a closely related word. [This is well exemplified in Spanish; see below.] 'His grief deepe squatting,' where the L. text has premit; Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. 209. ME. squatten, to press or crush flat. 'The foundementis of hillis ben togidir smyten and squat' = the foundations of the hills are smitten together and crushed; Wyclif, 2 Kings, xxii. 8. 'Squat sal he hevedes' = he shall crush the heads (L. conquassabit capita), Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. cix. (or cx.) 6. This explains prov. E. squat, to make flat, and squat, adj., flat. It is important also to note that quat is used in the same sense as squat; indeed, in the Glossary to the Exmoor Scolding, the word squat is explained by 'to quat down;' which shows that the s- in squat is a prefix.—OF. esquattir, to flatten, crush (Roquefort).—OF. es-, from L. ex-, extremely; and quattir, to press down, hence, reflexively, to press oneself down, to squat, cower. 'Ele se quatist deles lun de pilers' = she squatted down beside one of the pillars; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 282, l. 16. The corresponding word is Span. acachar, agachar, whence acacharse, 'to crouch, lie squat' (Meadows), agacharse, 'to stoop, couch, squat, cower' (id.). Minshew's M. Span. Dict. has: 'agachar, to squat as a hare or conic.' Without the prefix, we find Span. cacho, gacho, bent, bent downward, lit. pressed down; Ital. quatto, 'squatte, husht, close, still, lurking' (Florio), quattare, 'to squat, to husht, to lye close' (id.). Diez shows that OF. quattir and Ital. quatto are due to L. coact-us, pressed close together (whence also F. se cacher, to squat, cacher, to hide). Thus the etymology of squat is from L. ex-, co- for cum, together, and act-us, pp. of agere, to drive. See Ex-, Con-, and Agent; and see Squash. Der. squatt-er. Any connexion of squat with Dan. squatte, to splash, is entirely out of the question; the E. word related to Dan. squatte is Squander, q. v.

SQUAW, a female, woman. (N. Amer. Indian.) It occurs in J. Mather, Remarkable Providences (1684); repr. by Offor, p. 33. 'Squaw, a female, woman, in the language of the Indian tribes of the Algonkin family.—Massachusetts squa, eshqua; Narragansett squāws; Cree iskwew; Delaware ochqueu and khqueu; used also in compound words (as the names of animals) in the sense of female;' Webster; and Cent. Dict.

SQUEAK, to utter a shrill sharp cry. (Scand.) In Hamlet, i. 1. 116. 'The squeaking, or screeking of a rat;' Baret (1580).—MSwed. sqwæka, to squeak (Ihre); Swed. sqvåka, to croak; cf. Norweg. skvaka, to cackle (Aasen); Icel. skvakka, to give a sound, as of water shaken in a bottle, skak, a noise. And cf. Swed. sqvåla, to squeal. Allied to Squeal, Quack, Cackle; expressive of the sound made. So also G. quaken, to quack; quäken, quieken, to squeak. Der. squeak, sb.

SQUEAL, to utter a shrill prolonged sound. (Scand.) In Jul. Cæs. ii. 2. 24. ME. squelen, Cursor Mundi, l. 1344.—MSwed. sqwæla, to squeal (Ihre); Swed. sqvåla, to squeal; Norweg. skvella, to squeal (Aasen). Used as a frequentative of squeak; the sense is 'to keep on squeaking;' see Squeak. ¶ Notwithstanding the close similarity, squall is not quite the same word, though the words are now confused. Both, however, are expressive of continuous sounds. See Squall. Der. squeal, sb.

SQUEAMISH, scrupulously fastidious, over-nice. (F.) 'To be squamish, or nice, Delicias facere;' Baret (1580). ME. skeymous, sweymous. 'Sweymous, or skeymouse, Abhominativus,' Prompt. Parv., p. 482; also written queymous, p. 419. Squaimous, in Chaucer, C. T., A 3337, means fastidious, sparing, infrequent, with occasional violent exceptions; see l. 3805 (A 3807). 'Squaymose, verecundus;' Catholicon Anglicum (1483); sqwaymus, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vii. 461; squeymous, Lay Le Freine, 62. In a version of the Te Deum from a 14th-century primer given by Maskell (Mon. Rit. ii. 12) we have 'Thou were not skoymus of the maidens wombe;' see Notes and Queries, 4 S. iii. 181.—AF. **eskeimous* (with AF. ei for F. oi), spelt escoymous in Bozon, Contes Moralises, p. 158, with the sense of 'sparing in eating, fastidious, nice as to food.' Of unknown origin. It might answer, as to form, to a Late L. type **schēmātōsus*, or **schēmōsus* (since L. ē gave AF. ei, F. oi; Schwan, §§ 39, 299); from Late L. schēma, fashion, manner; from Gk. σχῆμα, a scheme, figure, mien, air, fashion; the sense being 'full of airs or affectations.' See Scheme. Der. squeamish-ly, -ness.

SQUEEZE, to crush or press tightly, to crowd. (E.) 'To squise, or thrust together;' Baret (1580). The initial s is prefixed for emphasis, being due to the OF. es- < L. ex-, an intensive prefix; to squeeze = to queeze out. Late ME. queisen; 'queyse out the jus' = squeeze out the juice, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 302. It answers, in form, to OMerc. cwēsan, for AS. cwēsan, to squeeze, crush, generally written cwysan, and used in the compound tōcwysan, to crush to pieces, squeeze to death, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 60; ii. 26, 166, 294, 510. Also cwēsan; in Luke, xx. 18, where the earlier version has tōcwyst (for tō-cwysd), the latter has tōcwēst (for tōcwēsō). β. Cognate with Low G. quōsen (Brem. Wörterbuch). From a Teut. root **kweus*. Der. squeeze, sb.

SQUIB, (1) a paper tube, filled with combustibles, like a small rocket; also (2) a lampoon. (Scand.) 1. 'Can he tie squibs i' their tails, and fire the truth out?' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances, v. 2. 6. 'A squibbe, a ball or darte of fire;' Minshew, ed. 1627. Spenser has it in the curious sense of 'paltry fellow,' as a term of disdain; Mother Hubbard's Tale, 371. Squibs were sometimes fastened slightly to a rope, so as to run along it like a rocket; 'The squib's run to the end of the line, and now for the cracker' [explosion]; Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act v. sc. 1. 'Hung up by the heels like meteors, with squibs in their tails; Ben Jonson, News from the New World (2nd Herald). β. Squib is a voiced form of squip, and prov. E. squib, to squirt, answers to Norw. skvipa, to squirt (Ross). It seems to be allied to swip, a word significant of swift smooth motion. Cf. ME. squippen, swippen, to move swiftly, fly, sweep, dash; 'the squyppand water' = the dashing or sweeping water, Anturs of Arthur (in Three Met. Romances), st. v. 'When the saul fra the body swippes, i.e. flies; Prick of Conscience, l. 2196. 'Tharfor þai swippe [dart] þurgh purgatory, Als a foul [bird] that flyes smertly'; id. l. 3322. 'Isuip forð' = hurried away, snatched away, Ancren Riwe, p. 228, l. 4. Swip is from Icel. svipa, to flash, dart, of a sudden but noiseless motion; svipr, a swift movement, twinkling, glimpse; Norweg. svipa, to run swiftly (Aasen); cf. also Dan. svippe, to whisk, to run (Larsen). The Teut. base SWIP was also used to express the swift or sweeping motion of a whip; as in AS. swipe, a whip (John, ii. 15), Du. zweep, a whip, G. schwippe, a whip-lash. Note also Dan. svippe, to crack a whip, svip, an instant, i et svip, in a trice, Swed. dial. svipa, swepa, to sweep, swing, lash with a whip. γ. All from Teut. base SWEIP, to move with a turning motion, move swiftly, sweep along (Fick, iii. 365); see further under Swift. Cf. 'swyppyr, agilis' in Prompt. Parv. 2. A squib also means a political lampoon; but it was formerly applied, not to the lampoon itself, but to the writer of it. 'The squibs are those who, in the common phrase of the world, are call'd libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers; their fireworks are made up in paper;' Tatler, no. 88; Nov. 1, 1709. It has been noted above that Spenser uses squib as a term of derision. 3. The sense of child's squirt is directly from Norw. skvipa, to squirt (above).

SQUID, a kind of cuttlefish. (Scand.) So named from its squirting out sepia; cf. prov. E. squiddle, to squirt. A voiced form, with d for Scand. t; allied to Swed. dial. sqvitta, strong verb, to squirt; Icel. skvetta, to squirt out. (Teut. base **skwet*.)

SQUILL, a genus of bulbous plants allied to the onion. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. squille. 'Squille, herba, Cepa maris, bulbus;' Prompt. Parv.—MF. squille, 'the squill, sea-onion; also, a prawn, shrimp;' Cot.—L. squilla, also scilla, a sea-onion, sea-leek; a kind of prawn.—Gk. σκίλλα, a squill; cf. σχίρος, a squill.

SQUINANCY, the old spelling of Quinsey, q.v.

SQUINT, to look askew. (E.?) Palsgrave has 'a-squynte, en loignant;' p. 831. The earliest quotation is the following: 'Biholdeð o luft and asquint' = looks leftwards and askew; Ancren Riwe, p. 212, l. 4. Apparently due to asquint (above), with loss of a; see Asquint in N. E. D. It is improbable that it is a native word, but it is difficult to say how we came by it. It seems to be allied to askance; see Askance in N. E. D. β. Cf. Dan. paa sköns, aslant; Swed. dial. på sköns, aslant; Low G. schiens, schüns, obliquely; Du. schuin, oblique, wry, schuinen, to slope; schuinte, obliquity; in de schuinte, aslant; EFries. schün, oblique, schünte, obliquity.

SQUIRE (1), the same as Esquire, q.v. (F.—L.) It occurs, spelt squiere, as early as in King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 360. Doublet, esquire.

SQUIRE (2), a square, a carpenter's rule. (F.—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 2. 474. ME. squire, Floriz and Blanchefur, ed. Lumby, 325.—OF. esquiere, MF. esquiere, 'a rule, or square;' Cot. Mod. F. équierre. Merely another form of OF. esquarre, a square; see Square. Doublet, square, sb.

SQUIRREL, a nimble, reddish-brown, rodent animal. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. squirel (with one r), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 2777. Also scurel. 'Hic scurellus, a scurelle;' Voc. 759. 29.—OF. escurel, escuirel (Godefroy); spelt escurieu in Cotgrave. Mod. F. écureuil.—Late L. sciūrellus (as above), also sciuriolus (Ducange). For **sciūrellus*, **sciūriolus*, diminutives of sciūrus, a squirrel.—Gk. σκίουρος, a squirrel; lit. 'shadow-tail,' from his bushy tail.—Gk. σκία, for σκία, a shadow, and οὐρά, a tail. But this explanation of the Gk. word is prob. due to popular etymology. The AF. form was esquirel; Liber Albus, pp. 225, 231.

SQUIRT, to jet, throw or jerk out water. (E.) 'I squyrte with a squyrte, an instrument;' Palsgrave. The prov. E. swirt, to squirt, is the same word, with sw for squ; we even find bilagged wit swirting = dirtied with squirting, in Walter de Bibbesworth, Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 1. Cf. Low G. swirtjen, to squirt; orig. an extension of swiren, to whirl, turn about quickly, G. schwirren; see Swarm. So also EFries. kwirtjen, to squirt out, to dart about, from kwirt, turning quickly about; see Whir. Der. squirt, sb., in Palsgrave.

STAB, to pierce with a sharp instrument. (Scand.) 'I stabbe in with a dagger or any other sharpe wepyn;' Palsgrave. ME. stabbe, sb.; 'Stabbe, or wovnde of smytynge, Stigma;' Prompt. Parv. Apparently from Swed. dial. stabbe, a thick stick or stump; Icel. stabbi, a stub, stump, allied to stafr, a staff; Dan. dial. stabb, a short peg. Cf. Irish stobaim, I stab; Gael. stob, to thrust or fix a stake in the ground, to stab, thrust, from stob, a stake, a pointed iron or stick, a stub or stump. This Gael. stob is similarly borrowed from Icel. stobbi, a stub; see Staff, Stub. Der. stab, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 63.

STABLE (1), a stall or building for horses. (F.—L.) ME. stable, King Alisaunder, 778.—OF. estable, 'a stable;' Cot. Mod. F. étable.—L. stabulum, a standing-place, abode, stall, stable. Idg. type **stadh-lom*; cf. AS. stað-ol, a foundation, support, position. See Stall. Brugmann, §§ 483 (9), 573. Formed with suffix -b(u)lum (b < dh), from the weak grade of stāre, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q.v. Der. stable, verb, stabl-ing.

STABLE (2), firm, steady. (F.—L.) ME. stable, Rob. of Glouc., p. 54, l. 1245.—OF. estable, stable (Burguy).—L. stabilem, acc. of stabilis, stable, standing firmly; formed with suffix -bilis from the weak grade of stā-re, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q.v. Idg. type **stadh-lis*. Der. stabl-y; stable-ness, Macb. iv. 3. 92; stabilis, spelt stabilite, Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 38, coined from L. stabilitas, firmness. Also stablish, ME. stabilisen, Chaucer, C. T. 2997 (A 2995), the same word as establish, q.v.

STACK, a large pile of wood, hay, corn, &c. (Scand.) ME. stac, stak. 'Stacke or heep, Agger;' Prompt. Parv. Stac in Havelok, 814, is prob. merely our stack. [Stacke, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Luxuria (Tyrwhitt), is an error for stank; see Group I, 841.]—Icel. stakkr, a stack of hay; cf. Icel. stakka, a stump, as in our chimney-stack, and in stack, a columnar isolated rock; Swed. stack, a rick, heap, stack; Dan. stak. β. The Teut. type is **staknoz* (Noreen). The sense is 'a pile,' that which is set up; the allied E. word is Stake, q.v. Cf. Russ. stog, a heap, a hay-rick. Der. stack, verb, as in Swed. stacka, Dan. stakke, to stack; stack-yard, answering to Icel. stak-garðr, a stack-garth (garth being the Norse form of yard); also hay-stack, corn-stack.

STAFF, a long piece of wood, stick, prop, pole, cudgel. (E.) ME. staf, pl. staues (where u = v). 'Ylyk a staf;' Chaucer, C. T. 594 (A 592). 'Two staues;' P. Plowman, B. v. 28. AS. staf, pl. stafas, Exod. xxi. 19, John, vii. 15. The pl. stafas also meant letters of the alphabet; this meaning seems to have originated staues as a musical term.—Du. staf; Icel. stafr, a staff, also a written letter (see Icel. Dict.); Dan. stab, stav; Swed. staf; G. stab; Goth. stafs, a letter; hence, an element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. β. The word is allied to O. Church Slav. stoborŭ, a pillar, Lith. stobrys, a stump of a tree; from an Idg. root STEBH, whence Skt. stambh, to make firm, set fast. Cf. EFries. staf, unmoved. See Stab, Stab. Der. distaff (for dis-staff), q.v. Doublet, stave, sb., q.v.

STAG, a male deer. (Scand.) Late AS. stagga, from Norse; as in 'regalem feram, quam Angli staggon appellant;' Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 429. The word was also applied to the male of other animals. 'Stagge, ceruus;' Levins. 'Steggander [= steg-gander, male gander], anser;' id. Lowland Sc. stag, a young horse; prov. E. stag, a gander, a wren, a cock-turkey.—Icel. steggr, steggt, a he-bird, a drake, a tom-cat. Teut. type **stagoz*. Not allied to Icel. stiga. Der. stag-hound.

STAGE, a platform, theatre; place of rest on a journey, the distance between two such resting-places. (F.—L.) ME. stage, Floriz and Blanchefur, ed. Lumby, 255; King Alisaunder, 7684.—OF. estage, 'a story, stage, loft, or height of a house; also a lodging, dwelling-house;' Cot. Mod. F. étage; Ital. staggio, a prop; Prov. estatge, a dwelling-place (Bartsch). Formed as if from a L. type **staticum* (not found), a dwelling-place; allied to L. stat-um, supine of stāre, to stand, with suffix -icum. See Stable (1), Stand. Der. stage-coach, a coach that runs from stage to stage; stage-player; stag-ing, a scaffolding.

STAGGER, to reel from side to side, vacillate; also, to cause to reel, to cause to hesitate. (Scand.) 'I staggar, I stande not sted-fast;' Palsgrave. Stagger is a weakened form of staker (spelt stakker in Palsgrave), ME. stakeren. 'She rist her up, and stakereth heer and there;' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 2687.—Icel. stakra, to push, to stagger; frequentative of staka, to punt, to push, also, to stagger; cf. Norw. stakra, staka, to stagger; Swed. dial. stagra; Dan. dial. stagle, stagge. Perhaps staka, to push, is allied to Swed. stake, a stake; see Stake. Cf. Dan. stage, to punt with a pole, from stage, a pole, a stake. Thus the orig. sense was 'to keep pushing about,' to cause to vacillate or reel; the intransitive sense, to reel, is later.—MDu. staggeren, to stagger as a drunken man (Hexham); frequent. of staken, staecken, to stop or dam up (with stakes), to set stakes, also 'to leave or give over worke,' id. In this latter view, to stagger might mean 'to be always coming to a stop,' or 'often to stick fast.' Either way, the etymology is the same. Der. staggers, s. pl., vertigo, Cymb. v. 5. 234.

STAGNATE, to cease to flow. (L.) A late word; stagnate and stagnant are in Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. stagnātus, pp. of stagnāre, to be still, cease to flow, to form a still pool.—L. stagnum, a pool, a stank. See Stank. Der. stagnat-ion; also stagnant, from L. stagnant-, stem of pres. pt. of stagnāre. Also stanch, q.v.

STAID, steady, grave, sober. (F.—MDu.) It may be observed that the resemblance to steady is accidental, though both words are ultimately from the same root, and so have a similar sense. Staid stands for stay'd, pp. of stay, to make steady; and the actual spelling stay'd is by no means uncommon. 'The strongest man o' th' empire, Nay, the most stay'd . . . The most true;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 6. 11. 'The fruits of his stay'd faith;' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 24 (R.). Spenser even makes the word dissyllabic; 'Held on his course with stay'd stedfastnesse,' F. Q. ii. 12. 29. See Stay (1). Der. staid-ly, staid-ness.

STAIN, to tinge, dye, colour, sully. (F.—L.) An abbreviation of distain, like sport for disport, spend for dispend. ME. steinen, Gower, C. A. i. 225, bk. ii. 1963; short for distainen, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 255.—OF. destein-, a stem of desteindre, 'to distain, to dead or take away the colour of;' Cot. 'I stayne a thyng, Je destayns,' Palsgrave. Thus the orig. sense was 'to spoil the colour of,' or dim; as used by Chaucer.—L. dis-, away; and tingere, to dye. See Dis- and Tinge. Der. stain, sb.; stain-less, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 278.

STAIR, a step for ascending by. (E.) Usually in the plural. [The phrase 'a pair of stairs' = a set of stairs; the old sense of pair being a set of equal things; see Pair.] ME. steir, steire, steyer. 'Ne steyers to steye [mount] on;' Test. of Love, i. 1. 44. 'Heih is þe steire' = high is the stair; Ancren Riwle, p. 284, l. 8; the pl. steiren occurs in the line above. AS. stæger, a stair, step; 'Ascensorium, stæger,' Voc. 126. 9. [The g passes into y as usual, and just as AS. dæg became day, so AS. stæger became stayer, steyer, steir.] The lit. sense is 'a step to climb by,' 'a mounter;' formed (with mutation of ā to æ) from stāg, 2nd grade of stigan, to climb. +Du. steiger, a stair; allied to stegel, a stirrup, steg, a narrow bridge; all from stijgen, to mount. Cf. also Icel. stigi, stegi, a step, ladder (whence prov. E. stee, a ladder; stigr, a path, foot-way (orig. an uphill path), from stiga, to mount; Swed. steg, a round of a ladder, stege, a ladder, from stiga, to mount; Dan. stige, a ladder, sti, a path, from stige, to mount; G. steg, a path, from steigen, to mount. β. All from Teut. str. vb. **steigan-*, to climb, pt. t. **staig*, pp. **stiganoz*; from Idg. √STEIGH, to climb, ascend, whence also Skt. stigh, to ascend, Gk. στείχειν, to ascend, march, go, Goth. steigan, to ascend; also E. stille, q.v., stirrup, q.v. Der. stair-case; stair-work, Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 75.

STAITH, a landing-place. (E.) A provincial word; also spelt staith, stathe (Halliwell). AS. stæð, a bank, shore (Grein); also AS. stæð, Thorpe, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, p. 147, l. 5. Cf. Icel. stöð, a harbour, road-stead; MDu. stade, a haven. Allied to Stead, q.v.

STAKE, a post, strong stick, pale. (E.) ME. stake, Chaucer, C. T. 2620 (A 2618). AS. staca, a stake, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. cap. 5; also a sharply pointed pin, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 230, l. 14. The latter sense is important, as pointing to the etymology. From the Teut. base **stak*, 2nd grade of the strong verb **stekan-*, to pierce, stick into. See Stick (1). Thus, the orig. sense is 'a piercer,' the suffix -a marking the agent, as in AS. hunt-a, a hunter; hence a pin, a sharply pointed stick. +MDu. stake, staek, 'a stake or a pale, a pile driven into water, a stake for which one playeth;' Hexham (Du. staak). Cf. steken, to stab, put, stick, prick, sting; id. +Icel. stjaki, a stake, punt-pole; Dan. stage, a stake; Swed. stake, a stake, a candle-stick. And cf. G. stachel, a prick, sting, goad. B. The sense of a sum of money to be played for may be borrowed from Dutch, being found in MDutch, as above. It occurs in Wint. Tale, i. 2. 248; and the phr. at stake or at the stake occurs five times in Shak. (Schmidt). In this sense, a stake is that which is 'put' or pledged; cf. MDu. hemselves in schuldt steken, 'to runne himself into debt;' Hexham. ¶ A closely allied word is stack, a pile, a thing stuck up; see Stack.

STALACTITE, an inverted cone of carbonate of lime, hanging like an icicle in some caverns. (F.—Gk.) Modern. Byron (wrongly) has stylact-i-tes (4 syllables); The Island, iv. 7. 23.—F. stalactite (A.D. 1752). So called because formed by the dripping of water. Formed, with suffix -ite (Gk. -ιτης), from σταλακτ-ός, trickling; cf. σταλακτῖς (base σταλακτιδ-), that which drops.—Gk. σταλάζειν (= σταλάγ-ειν), to drop, drip; lengthened form of σταλάειν, to drip. See Stalagmite.

STALAGMITE, a cone of carbonate of lime on the floor of a cavern formed by dripping water. (F.—Gk.) Modern.—F. stalagmite. Formed with suffix -ite (Gk. -ιτης), from στάλαγμα, a drop; from σταλάζειν (= σταλάγ-ειν), to drip. See Stalactite.

STALE (1), too long kept, tainted, vapid, trite. (F.—Teut.) 1. Stale is also used as a sb., in the sense of urine. Palsgrave gives it in this sense; and see escloy in Cotgrave. Mares do not stop to stale; see Holland's Pliny, i. 222.—OF. estaler, to make water (in Godefroy, s. v. estaler (2), but wrongly explained). Of Teut. origin.

Cf. EFries. and Low G. stallen, Swed. stalla, to put into a stall, also to stale (as cattle and horses); Dan. stalde, to stale (as a horse), also to stall-feed. From Stall, sb. 2. Stale, adj., is in Chaucer, C. T. 13694 (B 1954), as applied to ale. We may explain stale, adj., as 'too long exposed for sale,' as in the case of provisions left unsold; cf. MF. estaler, 'to display, lay open wares on stalls' (Cot.), from estal, 'the stall of a shop, or booth, any place where wares are laid and shewed to be sold.' But since this F. estal is merely borrowed from the Teutonic word stall, it comes to much the same thing. Cf. MDu. stel, stale; stel-bier, stale beer; stel-pisse, urine (Hexham); Du. stel, a stall. See Körting, §§ 9014, 9015. ¶ Wedgwood, following Schmeller, explains stale, sb., from stopping the horse to let him stale; and cites Swed. ställa en hest, to stop a horse. But here again, the Swed. ställa is derived from Swed. stall, orig. a stopping-place; while 'to stale' is Swed. stalla. Der. stale, verb, Antony, ii. 2. 240; stale-ness, Per. v. 1. 58.

STALE (2), a decoy, snare. (E.) 'Still as he went, he crafty stales did lay;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 4. Note AF. estale, a decoy-bird (Bozon). Adapted from AS. stæl-, as in stæl-hræn, a decoy reindeer, allied to ME. stale, theft; hence stealth, deceit, slyness, or a trap; it occurs in Avenbite of Inwyrt, p. 9, l. 24. Compare the phrase cumen bi stale = to come by stealth, to surprise; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 249, l. 20. From AS. stalu, theft, Matt. xv. 19.—Teut. **stal*, 2nd grade of **stelan-*, as in AS. stelan, to steal; see Steal.

STALE (3), STEAL, a handle. (E.) Chiefly applied to the long handle of a rake, hoe, &c.; spelt Stale in Halliwell. Stale also means a round of a ladder, or a stalk (id.). ME. stale. 'A ladel . . . with a long stale' (2 MSS. have stale); P. Plowman, C. xxii. 279. From AS. stela, stæla, steola; the dat. pl. stelum (in another MS. stelum) occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 154, in the sense of 'stalks.' +Du. steel, a stalk, stem, handle. [G. stiel, MHG. stil, a handle, seem distinct.] Allied to still and stall; the stale being the handle whereby the tool is firmly held. Cf. further Gk. σταλῖς, a stake to which nets are fastened, σταλεόν, σταλειόν, a handle or helve of an ax. See Stalk. Der. stalk (1) and (2), q.v.

STALK (1), a stem. (E.) ME. stalke, of which one sense is the stem or side-piece of a ladder. 'To climben by the ronges [rungs] and the stalkes;' Chaucer, C. T. 3625. A dimin. form, with suffixed -ke, of ME. stale, stale, a handle, AS. stela, stela, a stalk; see Stale (3). [Icel. stílkur, a stalk, goes with G. stiel.] Cf. also Gk. στέλεχος, a trunk, stem (of a tree), allied to σταλεόν, a handle. Der. stalk (2), q.v.

STALK (2), to stride, walk with slow steps. (E.) ME. stalken, to walk cautiously. 'Stalkeden ful stilly;' Will. of Palerne, 2728. 'With dredful foot [timid step] then stalketh Palamoun;' Chaucer, C. T. 1481 (A 1479). AS. stealcen, to go warily; stealcung, a stalking. These forms are in Toller, with references for bestenlician and stealcung; Somner gives the forms stealcen and stealcung. +Dan. stalke, to stalk. Cf. AS. steale, lofty, high (Grein). The notion is that of walking with lifted feet, so as to go noiselessly; the word is prob. connected with Stilt, q.v., and with Stalk (1) above. Halliwell has Stalk, the leg of a bird; stalke, to go slowly with, a quotation from Gower, C. A. i. 187; also stilt, the handle of a plough, which (like stalk) is an extension of Stalk; see Stale (3). We may explain stalk, verb, as to walk on lengthened legs or stalks, to go on tiptoe or noiselessly. Der. stalk-er; stalk-ing-horse, a horse for stalking game, explained in Dictionarium Rusticum, 1726, quoted at length in Halliwell.

STALL, a standing-place for cattle, shed, division of a stable, a table on which things are exposed for sale, a seat in a choir or theatre. (E.) All the senses are from the notion of a fixed or settled place or station. Indeed, station is from the same root. ME. stal; dat. stalle, Chaucer, C. T. 8083 (E 207). AS. steal, steall, a place, station, stall; Grein, ii. 480; also stal, id. 477. +Du. stal; Icel. stallr, a stall, pedestal, shelf; cf. stalli, an altar; Dan. stald (for stall), a stable; Swed. stall; G. stall; OHG. stal. Teut. type **stalloz*, perhaps for **stad-loz*; cf. E. stead, Gk. σταθ-μός, a stall; L. stab-ulum (for **stadh-lom*). See Stead. Brugmann, i. § 593 (4). Der. stall-age, from MF. estallage, 'stallage,' Cot., where estal, a stall, is borrowed from Teutonic, and the suffix -age answers to L. -aticum. Also stall, verb, Rich. III, i. 3. 206; stall-ed, fattened in a stall, Prov. xv. 17, from Swed. stalla, Dan. stalle, to stall-feed, feed in a stall. Also stall-feed, verb; stall-fed, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. xiv. 161. Also stall-i-on, q.v. Doublet, stable.

STALLION, an entire horse. (F.—OHG.) Spelt stalland in Levins, with excrement d; stallant in Palsgrave, with excrement t. ME. stalon, Voc. 638. 3; Gower, C. A. iii. 280; bk. viii. 160.—OF. estalon, 'a stallion for mares;' Cot. Mod. F. étalon; cf. Ital. stallone, a stallion, also a stable-man, ostler. So called because kept in a stall and not made to work; Diez cites equus ad stallum from the Laws of the Visigoths.—OHG. stal, a stall, stable; cognate with E. Stall (above). β. The i may have been suggested by the Ital. stallione, given by Torriano as a variant of stallone, and explained by 'a horse long kept in the stable without being ridden or used; also, a stallion.'

STALWART, sturdy, stout, brave. (E.) A corruption of ME. stalworth, Will. of Palerne, 1950; Pricke of Conscience, 689; Havelok, 904. The intermediate form stalward occurs in Trevisa, tr. of Higden, iii. 439 (note). It is noticeable that e sometimes appears after the l; as in stelewurde, O. Eng. Hom. i. 25, l. 12; stealewurde, Juliana, p. 45, l. 11; stalewurde, St. Margaret, p. 15, l. 3 from bottom. AS. stalwyrðe (plural), A. S. Chron. an. 896. β. In the A. S. Chron. it is applied to ships, and means 'serviceable'; we are told that the men of London went to fetch the ships, and they broke up all they could not remove, whilst those that were serviceable (stalwyrðe) they brought to London. Sievers shows that the æ was long (A. S. Grammar, § 202); and stæl- is contracted from stapol-, just as ge-stælan is for ge-stapol-ian, and stælian for stapolian. The AS. stapol means 'foundation,' and stapolwyrðe means 'firm.' Cf. AS. staðol-fast, steadfast. For the latter part of the word, see Worth, Worthy.

STAMEN, one of the male organs of a flower. (L.) The lit. sense is 'thread.' A botanical term. [The pl. stamina, lit. threads, fibres, is used in E. (almost as a sing. sb.) to denote firm texture, and hence strength or robustness.]—L. stāmen (pl. stamina), the warp in an upright loom, a thread. Lit. 'that which stands up;' formed with suffix -men from stāre, to stand; see Stand. Cf. Gk. στῆμα, a stamen; also ιστός, a warp, from the same root. Der. stamin or tammy.

STAMIN, TAMINE, TAMINY, TAMIS, TAMMY, a kind of stuff. (F.—L.) The correct form is stamin or stamine; Palsgrave has tamyne; the other forms are corruptions, with loss of initial s, as in tank (for stank). ME. stamin, Ancren Riwle, p. 418, l. 20.—OF. estamine, 'the stuff tamine'; Cot.—L. stāmineus, consisting of threads.—L. stāmin-, decl. stem of stāmen, a thread, stamen; see Stamen.

STAMMER, to stutter, to falter in speech. (E.) ME. stameren, in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 65; Arthur and Merlin, 2864 (Stratmann). AS. stomrian (for stamrian), to stammer, The Shrine, p. 42. Formed as a verb from AS. stamer or stamur, adj., stammering. 'Balbus, stamer,' Voc. 161. 37; 'Balbus, stamur,' id. 314. 38; stamor, id. 275. 20. The suffix -er, -ur, or -or is adjectival, expressive of 'fitness or disposition for the act or state denoted by the theme;' cf. bit-or, bitter, from bitan, to bite; March, A. S. Grammar, § 242. Thus stamer signifies 'disposed to come to a stand-still,' such being the sense of the base stam-, which is an extension of the √STĀ, to stand; cf. prov. E. stam, to amaze, confound, related by gradation to G. stumm, dumb.—Du. stameren, stamelen, to stammer; Icel. stamr, stammering; stamma, stama, to stammer; Dan. stamme, to stammer; Swed. stamma (the same); G. stammern, stammeln (the same), from OHG. stam, adj., stammering; Goth. stamms, adj. stammering, Mark, vii. 32. Der. stammer-er.

STAMP, to strike the foot firmly down, tread heavily and violently, to pound, impress, coin. (E.) ME. stampen, Chaucer, C. T. 12472 (C 538). 'And stamped heom in a mortar;' King Ali-saunders, 332. AS. stempen, for **stampian*; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 378, l. 18.—Du. stampen; Icel. stappa (for **stampa*, by assimilation); Swed. stampa; Dan. stampe; G. stampfen (whence OF. estamper, F. étamper); cf. G. stampfe, OHG. stampf, a pestle for pounding.—Gk. στῆμναι, to stamp. Der. stamp, sb., Cor. ii. 2. 111; stamp-er; also stamp-e, q.v.

STAMPEDE, a panic, sudden flight. (Span.—Teut.) 'Stampede, a sudden fright seizing upon large bodies of cattle or horses, ... leading them to run for many miles; hence, any sudden flight in consequence of a panic;' Webster. The e represents the sound of Span. z.—Span. (and Port.) estampido, 'a crash, the sound of anything bursting or falling;' Neuman. Formed as if from a verb **estampir*, akin to estampar, to stamp. The reference appears to be to the sound caused by the blows of a pestle upon a mortar. The Span. estampar is of Teut. origin; see Stamp.

STANCE, a station, site; see Stanza.

STANCH, STAUNCH, to stop the flowing of blood. (F.—L.) ME. staunchen, to satisfy (hunger), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 3; b. iii. met. 3; to quench (flame), Gower, C. A. i. 15; prol. 345.—OF. estancher, 'to stanch, stop an issue of blood, to slake or quench hunger, thirst, &c.;' Cot. Cf. Walloon stanchi (Remacle), Span. estancar, to stop, check.—Late L. stancāre, to stop the flow of blood. The Late L. stancāre is a variant of a Late L. type **stagnicāre*, from L. stagnāre, also used in the same sense of 'to stop the flow of blood' (Ducange). See Stagnate. Körtling (§ 9009), suggests that the sense may have been influenced by G. stange, a bar. Der. stanch or staunch, adj., firm, sound, spelt stanche in Palsgrave (p. 325); Phillips (ed. 1706) gives stanch, 'substantial, solid, good, sound;' this is derived from the verb, which Baret (1580) explains by 'to staie, or stanch blood, ... also to staie, to confirme, to make more strong;' it was suggested by the F. pp. estanché, 'stanché, stopped, stayed' (Cot.), or (as a nautical term) by OF. estanche, water-tight (Supp. to Godefroy), mod. F. étanche; cf. Span. stanco, water-tight, not leaky, said of a ship. Hence stanch-ly or staunch-ly; stanch-ness or staunch-ness. Also stanch-less, Macb. iv. 3. 78.

STANCHION, a support, an upright beam used as a support, a bar. (F.—L.) 'Stanchions (in a ship), certain pieces of timber which, being like pillars, support and strengthen those call'd waste-trees;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt stanchon, staunchon in Palsgrave.—ONorth F. estanchon, Norm. dial. étanchon; MF. estançon, estanson, 'a prop, stay;' Cot. MF. estançon (mod. F. étançon) is not derived from OF. estancher, to stanch, also used (by confusion) in the sense 'to prop;' but is a dimin. of OF. estance, a situation, condition (Burguy), also used, according to Godefroy, in the sense of stanchion.—Late L. stantia, a house, chamber (Ducange); lit. 'that which stands firm.'—L. stant-, stem of pres. part. of stāre, to stand, cognate with E. Stand. See Stanza.

STAND, to be stationary or still, to rest, endure, remain, be firm, &c. (E.) ME. standen, pt. t. stood, stod, pp. stonden, standen. The pp. stonden is in Chaucer, C. T. 9368 (E 1494); and in the Earl of Tolouse, l. 322, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii. AS. standan, stondan, pt. t. stōd, pl. stōdon, pp. stenden; Grein, i. 475.—Icel. standa; Goth. standan, pt. t. stōth. Cf. Du. staan, pt. t. stond; G. stehen, pt. t. stand; Swed. stå, pt. t. stod. Teut. type **standan-*, pt. t. **stōth*; base **stadh*, **stad*, the n being orig. characteristic of the present tense. Allied to L. stāre; Gk. ἵστην (I stood); Russ. stoiat(e), to stand; Skt. sthā, to stand. All from Idg. √STĀ, to stand; one of the most prolific roots. See State. Der. stand, sb., Merch. Ven. v. 77; stand-er, Troil. iii. 3. 84; stand-er-by (the same as by-stand-er), Troil. iv. 5. 190; stand-ing, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 431; stand-ing-bed, Merry Wives, iv. 5. 7; standish (for stand-dish), a standing dish for pen and ink, Pope, On receiving from Lady Shirley a Standish and two Pens; spelt standyshe in Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, ed. Ellis, p. 92. Also under-stand, with-stand. Also (from L. stāre) sta-ble (1), sta-ble (2), sta-bl-ish, e-sta-bl-ish, stage, staid, sta-men, con-sta-ble, stay (1); ar-re-st, contra-st, ob-sta-cle, ob-ste-tric, re-st (2); (from supine stat-um) state, stat-us, stat-ion, stat-ist, stat-ue, stat-ute, estate, armi-stice, con-stit-ute, de-stit-ute, in-stit-ute, inter-stice, pro-stit-ute, re-in-state, re-stit-ut-ion, sol-stice, sub-stit-ute, super-stit-ion; (from pres. part., base stant-) circum-stance, con-stant, di-stant, ex-tant (for ex-stant), in-stant, in-stant-an-e-ous, in-stant-er, stanz-a, sub-stance, sub-stant-ive. Also (from L. sistere, causal of stāre) as-sist, con-sist, de-sist, ex-ist (for ex-sist), in-sist, per-sist, re-sist, sub-sist. Words of Gk. origin are sta-t-ics, apo-sta-sy, ec-sta-sy, meta-sta-sis, sy-st-em.

STANDARD, an ensign, flag, model, rule, standing tree. (F.—L.) ME. standard, in early use; it occurs in the A. S. Chronicle, an. 1138, with reference to the battle of the Standard.—OF. estandard, 'a standard, a kind of ensigne for horsemen used in old time; also the measure ... which we call the Standard;' Cot. But also spelt estendart, Supp. to Godefroy, in the sense of 'flag, ensign.' The two forms represent two different ideas; but they were early confused; see Standardum in Ducange. 1. The former refers rather to the pole on which the flag was borne; and was formed with suffix -art (=G. -hart, suffix, the same word as hart, adj., cognate with E. hard, Brachet, Introd. § 196) from OHG. stand-an, to stand, now only used in the contracted form stehen. This OHG. standan is cognate with E. Stand, q.v. 2. The OF. estendard (also in Cotgrave) is from OF. estendre < L. extendere, to extend; see Extend. This is supported by the Ital. form stendardo and the Prov. estendart-z (Bartsch). On the other hand, we have E. standard, Span. estandarte; and the E. standard of value and standard-tree certainly owe their senses to the verb to stand. So also MDu. standaert, 'a standard, or a great ensigne, a pillar or a column, a mill-post;' Hexham.

STANG, a pole, stake. (Scand.) Spelt stangue in Levins (with added -ue, as in tongue). ME. stange, Gawain and Green Knight, 1614. [Rather from Scand. than from AS. steng (Grein).]—Icel. stōng (gen. stangar), a pole, stake; Dan. stang; Swed. stång.—Du. stang; G. stange. From the 2nd grade of the verb sting; see Sting. Cf. Icel. stanga, to goad.

STANK, a pool, a tank. (F.—L.) A doublet of tank, of which it is a fuller form. Once a common word; see Halliwell. ME. stank; spelt stanc, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1018; see Spec. of English, pt. ii. p. 162, l. 1018.—OF. estanc (Sup. to Godefroy), also estang, 'a great pond, pool, or standing water;' Cot. Cf.

Walloon stank, Prov. estanc, Span. estanque, Port. tanque. Indirectly from L. stagnum, a pool of stagnant or standing water; affected by the vb. **stagnicare*, to render stagnant, for which see Stanch. See Stagnate, Stanch, Tank. Der. stagnate, stanch, stanch-ion. Doublet, tank.

STANNARY, relating to tin-mines. (L.) 'The Stannary courts in Devonshire and Cornwall'; Blackstone, Comment. b. iii. c. 6 (R.). 'Stannaries in Cornwall'; Minsheu, ed. 1627. — Late L. stannaria, a tin-mine (Ducange). — L. stannum, tin; also, an alloy of silver and lead; which seems to be the older sense, Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 16. β. Also spelt stagnum, whence stagneus, adj.; and it is thought to be another sense of L. stagnum, a pool, applied perhaps to a mass of fused metal. Cf. Ital. stagno, tin, also, a pool. See Stank. Cf. Corn. stean, W. ystaen, Bret. stean, Irish stán, Gael. staoín, Manx stainney; all from L. stannum, tin. And see Tin.

STANZA, a division of a poem. (Ital.—L.) Used by Drayton in his Pref. to the Barons' Wars. We find stanzo (mod. edit. stanza) and stanze (now stanza) in Shak. As You Like It, ii. 5. 18, L. L. L. iv. 2. 107; Minsheu has stanze, ed. 1627. 'Staffe in our vulgare poesie . . . the Italian called it stanza, as if we should say a resting-place'; Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, ed. 1589, b. ii. c. 2. — Ital. stanza, Mital. stantia, 'a lodging, chamber, dwelling, also a stance or staffe of verses or songs'; Florio. So named from the stop or halt at the end of it. — Late L. stantia, an abode. — L. stant-, stem of pres. part. of stāre, to stand, cognate with E. Stand, q.v. And see Stanchion. Doublet, stance, a station, site; OF. estance < L. stantia.

STAPLE (1), a loop of iron for holding a pin or bolt. (E.) ME. stapel, stapil; spelt stapylle in the Prompt. Parv.; stapil, stapul in Cursor Mundi, 8288; stapel, a prop or support for a bed, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 201. AS. stapul. 'Patronus, stapul;' Voc. 126. 8. (Here patronus = a defence; the gloss occurs amongst others having reference to parts of a house.) The orig. sense is a prop, support, something that furnishes a firm hold, and it is derived from the base **stap-* of the AS. strong verb stæppan, to step, to tread firmly. Cf. E. stamp; and see Step. And see Staple (2). +Du. stapel, a staple, stocks, a pile, allied to stappen, to step; MDu. stapel, 'the foot or trevet whereupon anything rests'; Hexham; Dan. stabel, a hinge, a pile; Swed. stapel, a pile, heap, stocks, staple or emporium; cf. stappla, to stumble (frequentative form); G. staffel, a step of a ladder, a step; provincially, a staple or emporium; stapel, a pile, heap, staple or emporium, stocks, a stake; cf. stapfen, stappen, to step, to strut.

STAPLE (2), a chief commodity, principal production of a country. (F.—Low G.) 'A curious change has come over this word; we should now say, Cotton is the great staple, i.e. the established merchandise, of Manchester; our ancestors would have reversed this and said, Manchester is the great staple, or established mart, of cotton;' Trench, Select Glossary. 'Staple signifieth this or that towne, or citie, whether [whither] the Merchants of England by common order or commandement did carrie their woollens, wool-fels, cloathes, leade, and tinne, and such like commodities of our land, for the vtterance of them by the great' [wholesale]; Minsheu, ed. 1627. ME. staple, a market; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, viii. 488, 571. — OF. and MF. estaple, later estape, 'a staple, a mart or generall market, a publique store-house,' &c.; Cot. Mod. F. étape. — Low G. stapel, a heap, esp. one arranged in order, a store-house of certain wares in a town, where they are laid in order; whence such wares were called stapel-waaren; Brem. Wörterbuch, q.v. This is the same word as Staple (1), the meanings of which are very various; it has the sense of 'heap' in Du., Dan., Swed., and G., though not in English; showing that this particular use of the word was derived through the French. Prob. the word came into use, in the special sense, in the Netherlands, where were the great commercial cities. ¶ It is clear that the F. word was of Low G., not High G., origin. The word stapel, in mod. G., is clearly borrowed from Low G., the true G. form being staffel. As E. Müller well remarks, the successive senses were prop, foundation or support, stand for laying things on, heap, heaped wares, store-house. The one sense of 'firmness' or 'fixedness' runs through all these.

STAR, a heavenly body, not including the sun and moon. (E.) ME. sterre, Chaucer, C. T. 2063 (A 2061). AS. steorra; Grein, ii. 482. +Du. ster (in composition, sterre); OHG. sterro. (There are also forms with final -n- (-na), viz. Icel. stjarna, Swed. stjerna, Dan. stjerne, Goth. stairno, G. stern.) +L. stella (for **ster-la*, a dimin. form; the L. astrum is borrowed from Gk.); Gk. ἀστὴρ, gen. ἀστέρ-ος, with prosthetic a; Corn. and Bret. steren; W. seren (for **steren*); Skt. tārā (for **stārā*). Original sense uncertain; though some connect it with Skt. stṛ, to spread, hence, to sprinkle (light); Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. ii. 237 (8th ed.). Cf. Brugmann, i. § 473 (2). Der. star, verb; star-fish, star-gaz-er, star-light; starr-ed; starr-y; day-star, lode-star. And see aster, stellar.

STARBOARD, the right side of a ship, looking forward. (E.) Spelt starboord in Minsheu, ed. 1627. ME. sterebourde, Morte Arthur, 745; stereburde, id. 3665. AS. stēorbord, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1, where it is opposed to bæcbord, i.e. larboard; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. There is no doubt that stēorbord = steerboard, and that the steersman stood on the right side of the vessel to steer; in the first instance, he used a paddle, not a helm. The Icel. stjörn means steerage, and the phr. ā stjörn, lit. at the helm (or steering-paddle), means on the right or starboard side. Thus the derivation is from AS. stēor, a rudder (whence also stēor-mann, a steersman) and bord, a board, also the side of a ship; see Steer and Board. +Du. stuurboord, from stuur, helm, and boord, board, also border, edge; Icel. stjörnborði, starboard, from stjörn, steerage, and borð, a board, side of a ship; cf. borði, a border; Dan. styrbord, from styr, steerage, and bord; Swed. styrbord (the same).

STARCH, a gummy substance for stiffening cloth. (E.) 'Starche for kyrcheys,' i.e. starch for kerchiefs; Prompt. Parv. So named because starch or stiff; starch being properly an adjective, representing ME. sterch, strong, O. E. Misc., ed. Morris, p. 156, l. 11. AS. **sterce*, adj., from stercan, to strengthen, stiffen; which appears in sterced-ferhð, strengthened in mind (Grein, ii. 480). The vb. stercan (for **starc-ian*) is regularly formed from O Merc. **starc*, AS. stearc, rigid; see Stark. Cf. G. stärke, (1) strength, (2) starch; from stark, strong. Der. starch, adj., in the sense of 'formal,' due rather to starch, sb., than to ME. sterch; rare; see an example in Todd's Johnson; hence starch-ly, formally, and starch-ness; also starch-y. Also starch, verb, to stiffen with starch, as in 'starched beard,' Ben Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, A. iv. sc. 4 (Carlo).

STARE (1), to gaze fixedly. (E.) ME. staren, Chaucer, C. T. 13627 (B 1887). AS. starian, to stare; Grein, ii. 477. A weak verb, from a Teut. type **staroz*, adj., fixed; appearing in AS. stær-blind, quite blind; cf. G. starr (for **star-roz*), stiff, inflexible, fixed, staring; cf. Icel. stara, to stare; Low G. and Du. staren, OHG. starēn, to stare. Prob. allied to Gk. στερεός, στερρός, firm. ¶ Hence to stare is also 'to be stiff,' as in 'makest . . . my hair to stare,' Jul. Cæsar, iv. 3. 280. Der. stare, sb., Temp. iii. 3. 95. And see sterile, stereoscope.

STARE (2), to shine, glitter. (E.) ME. staren. 'Staryn, or schynyn, and glyderyn, Niteo, rutilo;' Prompt. Parv. 'Starynge, or schynnyge, as gaye thyngys, Rutilans, rutilus;' id. We still speak of staring, i.e. very bright, colours. The same word as Stare (1). The Prompt. Parv. also has: 'Staryn withe brode eyne, Patentibus oculis respicere.' From the notion of staring with fixed eyes we pass to that of the effect of the stare on the beholder, the sensation of the staring look. See Stare (1). ¶ No original connexion with star, of which the ME. form was sterre.

STARE (3), a starling; see Starling.

STARK, rigid, stiff; gross, absolute, entire. (E.) 'Stiff and stark;' Romeo, iv. 1. 103. ME. stark, stiff, strong, Chaucer, C. T. 9332 (E 1458). AS. stearc (for **starc*), strong, stiff; Grein, ii. 481. +Du. sterk; Icel. sterkr; Dan. stærk; Swed. and G. stark. β. In most of these languages, the usual sense is 'strong;' but the orig. sense may very well have been rigid or stiff, as in English; cf. Goth. gastaurknith, lit. becomes dried up, used to translate Gk. ἐξηπαύρωται in Mark, ix. 18; and Lithuan. strēgti, to stiffen, to freeze, become rigid; also Russ. strogi, severe, Pers. sulurg, big, strong. The Idg. form of the root is STRĒG, extended from **STER*, to be fixed; cf. Gk. στερεός, firm, MDu. sterren, 'to be stiffe or stubborne,' Hexham. See Stare (1). Der. stark-ly, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 70; stark-ness. Also stark, adv., wholly, as in stark mad. Also starch, q.v. ¶ But not stark-naked, q.v.

STARK-NAKED, quite naked. (E.) In Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 274; spelt starke-naked, Palsgrave, p. 842. This phrase is doubtless now used as if compounded of stark, wholly, and naked, just as in the case of stark mad, Com. of Err. ii. 1. 59, v. 281; but it is remarkable that the history of the expression proves that it had a very different origin, as regards the former part of the word. It is an ingenious substitution for start-naked, lit. tail-naked, i.e. with the hinder parts exposed. Startnaked occurs in The Castell of Love, ed. Weymouth, l. 431; also in the Ancien Riwele, pp. 148, 260, where the editor prints sterc-naked, steorc-naked, though the MS. must have stert-naked, steort-naked, since stark is never spelt steorc. The same remark applies to steorc-naket in St. Marharete, p. 5, l. 19, where the editor tells us (at p. 109) that the MS. may be read either way. In St. Juliana, pp. 16, 17, we have steort-naket in both MSS. β. The former element is, in fact, the ME. stert, a tail, Havelok, 2823, from AS. steort, a tail, Exod. iv. 4. It is still preserved in E. redstart, i.e. red tail, as the name of a bird. +Du. stert, a tail; Icel. stertr; Dan. stjert; Swed. stjärt; G. sterz. Cf. Gk. σπόρη, a spike. ¶ The phrase was early misunderstood; see Trevisa, iii. 97, where we have streijt blynde = wholly blind, with the various readings start blynde and stark blynde; here start-blynde is really nonsense. There is also stareblind, Owl and Nightingale, l. 241, AS. stærblind, Voc. 45. 22; but this answers to Dan. stærblind, from stær, a cataract in the eye. We may also note prov. G. sterzvoll (lit. tail-full), wholly drunk, cited by Schmeller, Bavar. Dict. col. 785, l. 48.

STARLING, the name of a bird. (E.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, i. 3. 224. ME. sterlyng, Voc. 640. 7; formed (with double dimin. suffix -ling) from ME. stare, a starling, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 348. AS. stær, a starling. 'Turdus, stær;' Voc. 132. 8; 'Sturnus, stær;' id. 48. 16. It also means a sparrow, Matt. x. 29 (Lind. MS.). We also find the forms stearn, stearn, meaning 'a tern.' 'Beatica, stearn;' Voc. 8. 36; 'Strónus [stornus?], stearn;' id. 132. 7. +Icel. starri, stari; Dan. stær; Swed. stare; G. staar. Cf. L. sturnus, a starling. See Tern.

START, to move suddenly, to wince, to rouse suddenly. (E.) ME. sterten, Chaucer, C. T. 1046 (A 1044). We also find stert, sb., a start, quick movement, Chaucer, C. T., A. 1705; Havelok, 1873. The verb does not appear in AS., but we find the pt. t. stirte, Havelok, 873; spelt sturte, storte in Layamon, 23951. We may call it an E. word; the AS. form may have been **styrktan* (for **sturt-jan*); from a Teut. base **stert*. Stratmann cites an OIcel. sterta, but I cannot find it; there are traces of it in Icel. stertimaðr, a man who walks proudly and stiffly, and Icel. uppstertr, an upstart, both given in Egilsson. β. Allied words are Du. storten, to precipitate, plunge, spill, fall, rush; Dan. styrte, to fall, precipitate, hurl; Swed. störta, to cast down, ruin, fall dead; G. stürzen, to hurl, precipitate, ruin, overturn. Note also Swed. dial. stjärta, to run wildly about (Rietz); Low G. steerten, to flee; MDu. steerten, to flee, to run away. The G. stürzen is derived from the sb. sturz, a sudden fall, tumble, precipice, waterfall, from a Teut. base **stert*; cf. Norw. sterten, adj., striving against. But the further history is obscure. Der. start, sb., ME. stert, as above; start-er; start-up, an upstart, Much Ado, i. 3. 69; up-start, q. v. Also start-le, the frequentative form, ME. sterilen, to stumble along, Debate of Body and Soul, l. 120, pr. in Alteng. Sprachproben, ed. Mätzner, i. 94, and in Mapes' Poems, ed. Wright, p. 335; from AS. steartlian, to stumble.

STARVE, to die of hunger or cold, to kill with hunger or cold. (E.) Orig. intransitive, and used in the general sense of 'to die,' without reference to the means. ME. steruen (with u=v), strong verb; pt. t. starf, Chaucer, C. T. 935 (A 933), pp. storuen, or i-storuen, id. 2016 (A 2014). AS. steorfan, to die, pt. t. stearf, pp. storfen; 'starf of hunger,' died of hunger, A. S. Chron. an. 1124. Hence was formed the AS. weak verb sterfan, to kill, weak vb., appearing in the pp. astærfed, Matt. xv. 13 (Rushworth gloss.). The mod. E. has confused the two forms, making them both weak. +Du. sterven, pt. t. stierf, storf; G. sterben, pt. t. starb. Teut. type **sterban-*, pt. t. **starbō*. Der. starve-ling, with double dimin. suffix, expressive of contempt, i Hen. IV, ii. 1. 76. Also staru-ation, a hybrid form, but now common, used by Mr. Dundas, the first Viscount Melville, in an American debate in 1775. 'That it then jarred strangely on English ears is evident from the nickname Starvation Dundas, which in consequence he obtained. See Letters of H. Walpole and Mann, vol. ii. p. 396, quoted in N. and Q. no. 225;' Trench, Eng. Past and Present.

STATE, a standing, position, condition, an estate, province, rank, dignity, pomp. (F.—L.) See Trench, Sel. Glossary. ME. stat, Ancrén Riwe, p. 204.—OF. estat, 'estate, case, nature,' Cot.—L. statum, acc. of status, condition.—L. statum, supine of stāre, to stand; cognate with E. stand; see Stand. From **STĀ*, to stand. Der. state, verb (late); stat-ed, stat-ed-ly, state-ment (a coined word); state-paper, state-room, &c.; state-s-man, coined like hunt-s-man, sport-s-man; states-man-like, states-man-ship. Also state-ly, ME. estat-lich, C. T. 140, a hybrid compound; state-li-ness. And see stat-ion, stat-ist, stat-ue, stat-ure, stat-ute. Doublets, estate, stat-us.

STATICS, the science that treats of the properties of bodies at rest. (Gk.) Spelt statics in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed as a pl. from the adj. statick. 'The statick aphorisms of Sanetorius;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. iv. c. 7. § 2.—Gk. στατικός, at a standstill; ἡ στατική (sc. ἐπιστήμη), statics.—Gk. στατός, placed, standing, verbal adj. from στα-, weak grade of the root of ίστημι, I stand.—**STĀ*, to stand; see Stand. Der. hydro-statics.

STATION, a standing, post, assigned place, situation, rank. (F.—L.) ME. station, Gower, C. A. iii. 91; bk. vii. 204.—F. station, 'a station;' Cot.—L. stationem, acc. of statio, a standing still.—L. statum, supine of stāre, to stand; see State. Der. station-ary, from MF. stationnaire (Cot.), L. adj. stationarius. Also station-er, a bookseller, Minsheu (1627), spelt stacyoner in Palsgrave, but orig. merely one who had a station or stand in a market-place for the sale of books; see Trench, Select Glossary; hence stationer-y.

STATIST, a statesman, politician. (F.—L.; with Gk. suffix.) So in Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 33. A hybrid word, coined from the sb. state by adding -ist (F. -iste < L. -ista < Gk. -ιστης). See State. Der. stat-ist-ic, i. e. relating to the condition of a state or people; whence statistic-s (like static-s from static).

STATUE, an upright image. (F.—L.) Sometimes statuē (trissyllabic), in which case it is generally printed statua in mod. edd. of Shakespeare, as if from L. statua directly. But Cotgrave writes statuē for the MF. form. However, statua occurs in Bacon, Essays 27, 37, 45. ME. statue, Chaucer, C. T. 14165 (B 3349).—OF. statuē, a statue; Cot.—L. statua, a standing image.—L. statu-, decl. stem of status, a standing, position; see State. Der. statu-ar-y, from MF. statuaire, 'a statuarius, stone-cutter,' Cot., from L. statuarius, a maker of statues (Pliny); statu-ette, from Ital. statuetta, dimin. of statua; statu-esque, formed with the F. suffix -esque = Ital. -esco < L. -iscus.

STATURE, height. (F.—L.) Used with special reference to the upright posture of a human being. ME. stature, Chaucer, C. T. 8133 (E 257).—F. stature, 'stature,' Cot.—L. statūra, an upright posture, height, growth.—L. stat-um, supine of stāre, to stand; see State.

STATUS, condition, rank. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson.—L. status, condition; see State. Doublets, state, estate.

STATUTE, an ordinance. (F.—L.) ME. statute, Gower, C. A. i. 217; bk. ii. 1741.—F. statut; Cot.—L. statūtum, a statute; neuter of statūtus, pp. of statuere, to set, establish.—L. statu-, decl. stem of status, state; see State. Der. statut-able, a coined word; statut-abl-y; statut-ory, a coined word. Here belong also con-stitute, de-stitute, in-stitute, pro-stitute, sub-stitute; re-stitute-ion.

STAUNCH, adj. and verb; see Stanch.

STAVE, one of the pieces of a cask, a part of a piece of music, a stanza. (E.) 1. Merely another form of staff, due to the dat. sing. stave (= stave), Owl and Night., 1165, and the pl. staves (= staves), Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 48. Perhaps the special sense is rather Scand. than E. Cf. Icel. stafr, a staff, also a stave; Dan. stav, a staff, stave, a stave. 2. A stanza was formerly called a staff, as forming a part of a poem; prob. suggested by the older use of AS. stæf, Icel. stafr, G. buchstab, in the sense of a letter or written character. Cf. Icel. stef, a stave in a song; Goth. stafs, a letter, element, rudiment, Gal. iv. 3. 'Staffe in our vulgare poesie I know not why it should be so called, vnless it be for that we vnderstand it for a bearer or supporter of a song or ballad;' Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poesie, b. ii. c. 2. See Staff. Der. stave, verb; usually to stave in, to break into a cask, or to stave off, to ward off as with a staff; the verb readily puts v for f, as in strive from strife, live from life. Doublet, staff.

STAVESACRE, a species of larkspur; Delphinium staphisagria. (F.—L.—Gk.) Marlowe has stavesaker; Dr. Faustus, i. 4; see Nares. Englished from MF. staphisaigre, 'stavesaker, lice-bane,' Cot.—L. staphisagria.—Gk. σταφίς ἄγρια; where ἄγρια is the fem. of ἄγριος, wild, from ἀγρός, a field (E. acre); and σταφίς is for ἀσταφίς, raisins.

STAY (1), to remain, abide, wait, prop, delay. (F.—MDu.) 'Steyn [= steyn], stoppyn, styntyn, or cesyn of gate, Restito, obsto;' Prompt. Parv. The pt. t. stayd occurs in London Lickpenny, st. 2.—OF. estayer, 'to prop, shore, stay, underset;' Cot. Mod. F. étayer.—OF. estaye, sb. fem., 'a prop, stay, supporter, shore, buttesse.' This is mod. F. étai, a prop; used as a masc. sb., by confusion with the nautical term étai; see Stay (2). Thus the orig. use was to support, whence the senses to hold, retain, delay, abide, were easily deduced. β. The OF. estaye is from MDu. stade, or staeye, 'a prop or a stave;' Hexham. He also gives staey, 'stay, or leisure;' geen staey hebben, 'to have noe time or leisure.' So also mod. Du. stade, in the phr. te stade komen, to come in due time (lit. 'to the right place'). +OHG. stata, a fit place or time, opportunity. These words are closely allied to Du. stad, a town; Dan. stad, a town; Swed. stad, a town; G. stadt, a town, stätt, a place, stead; Goth. staths, a place, stead. Also to E. staihe and stead; see Stead. γ. The loss of medial d is common in Dutch, and occurs in many words; e.g. broër for broeder, a brother (Sewel), teer for teder or teeder, tender (id.). Der. stay, sb., spelt staye in Wyatt, tr. of Ps. 130 (R.), from OF. estaye, as above; this is really a more orig. word in F., though perhaps later introduced into English. Also staid, q. v.; for stay'd = stayed, pp. Also stay-s, pl., lit. supports; it is remarkable that bodice is also, properly, a plural form.

STAY (2), as a nautical term, a large rope supporting a mast. (E.) Rare in old books. Cotgrave uses it to translate MF. estay, which is the same word, the F. word being of Teut. origin. ME. stey; 'one foresteye, one couple of baksteye;' Riley, Memorials of London, p. 370 (1373). AS. stag, a stay; in a list of the parts of a ship in Voc. 288. 26. The change from AS. stæg to E. stay is just the same as that from AS. dæg to E. day. +Du. stag; Icel., Dan., and Swed. stag; G. stag. Perhaps from Teut. **stah* = Idg. **stak*-, to resist; see Steel. ¶ It is difficult to say whether this E. stay is a survival of AS. stæg, or is from OF. estaye, a prop; see Stay (1). Der. stay-sail.

STEAD, a place, position, place which another person had or might have. (E.) ME. stede, in the general sense of place. 'In twenti stedes' = in twenty places; Havelok, 1846. AS. stede, a place; Grein, ii. 478. Closely allied to AS. stæð, stēð, a bank, shore; see Staithe. +Du. stede, stee, a place; MDu. stede, a farm. Closely allied to Du. stad, a town; Icel. staðr, a stead, place, staða, a place; Dan. and Swed. stad, a town; Dan. sted, a place; G. stadt, statt, a town, place; OHG. stat; Goth. staths, a stead, place. Cf. L. statio, a station; Gk. στάσις; Skt. sthiti-, a standing, residence, abode, state. All allied to Stand, q. v. Der. stead fast, q. v., stead-y, q. v., home-stead, q. v.; bed-stead. And see stay (1), staithe, station.

STEADFAST, STEDFAST, firm in its place, firm, constant, resolute. (E.) ME. stedfast, appearing as a trisyllable in Gower, C. A. iii. 115; bk. vii. 906; and in the Ormulum, l. 1597. AS. stedefast, firm in one's place, steadfast; Battle of Maldon, 127, 249; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. — AS. stede, a place; and fast, fast. See Stead and Fast. +MDu. stedevast, 'steadfast', Hexham; from MDu. stede, a farm (orig. a place), and vast, fast; Icel. staðfastr, from staðr, a stead, and fastr, fast; Dan. stadfast.

STEADY, firm, fixed, stable. (E.) Spelt stedye in Palsgrave. A new formation from ME. sted-e, a stead; with suffix -y (AS. -ig); suggested by stead-fast. The AS. word is stæðdig, steady, appearing in unstæðdig, unsteady, giddy, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 480, last line. Cf. MDu. stedigh, 'continuall, firme', Hexham; from stede, a stead. Also Icel. stöðugr, steady, stable, from staðr, a place; Dan. stadig, steady, from stade, a stall, stad, a town, orig. a place; Swed. stadig, from stad, a place; G. stätig, continual, from statt, a place. Der. steadily, -ness. Also steady, verb.

STEAK, a slice of meat, esp. beef, ready for cooking. (Scand.) ME. steike; spelt steyke in Prompt. Parv. — Icel. steik, a steak; so called from its being roasted, which was formerly done by placing it upon a wooden peg before the fire; cf. Icel. steikja, to roast, esp. on a spit or peg; cf. stikna, to be roasted or scorched. In the words steikja, stikna, the 'ei' and 'i' indicate a lost strong verb. The weak grade of this lost strong verb appears in the AS. stic-ian, to stick; see Stick (1). And cf. Icel. stika, a stick, stika, to drive piles. A steak is a piece of meat, stuck on a stick to be roasted. +Swed. stek, roast meat; steka, to roast; cf. stick, a stab, prick, sticka, to stick, stab; Dan. steg (for **stek*), a roast; ad vende steg, to turn the spit; stege, to roast; cf. stik, a stab, stikke, to pierce; stikke a stick. Der. beef-steak; whence F. bifteck.

STEAL, to take away by theft, to thief. (E.) ME. stelen, Chaucer, C. T. 564 (A 562); pt. t. stal, id. 3993 (A 3995); pp. stolen. AS. stelan, pt. t. stal, pl. stælon, pp. stolen; John, x. 10. +Du. stelen; Icel. stela; Dan. stjæle; Swed. stjåla; G. stehlen; OHG. stelan; Goth. stilan. Teut. type **stelan*-, pt. t. **stal*, pp. **stulanoz*. β. Connexion with Gk. στέρομαι, I am deprived of, στερέω, I deprive, is doubtful, but is accepted by some. Der. steal-th, ME. stalþe, Rob. of Glouc. p. 197, l. 4057; cf. Icel. stuldr, Swed. stöld, theft. Hence stealth-y, stealth-i-ly, -ness. Also stale (2).

STEAM, vapour. (E.) ME. steem, which also meant a flame or blaze. 'Steem, or lowe of fyre, Flamma; Steem, of hotte lycure, Vapor;' Prompt. Parv. [In Havelok, 591, stem is a ray of light, described as resembling a sun-beam. 'Two stemynge eyes' = two flaming eyes; Sir T. Wiat, Sat. i. 53.] AS. stēam, a vapour, smell, smoke; Grein, ii. 480. +Du. stoom, steam. Teut. type **staumoz*, m.; as if from a base **steu*-. Root unknown. Can it be allied to Stove? Der. steam, verb, ME. stemen, Chaucer, C. T. 202, AS. stēman, as in be-stēman, Grein, i. 94; steam-boat, -engine; steam-er, steam-y.

STEARINE, STEARIN, one of the ingredients of animal fats. (F.—Gk.) Modern; F. stéarine; formed, with suffix -ine, from Gk. στέαρ, tallow, hardened fat. Allied to Gk. στέη-ναι, to stand, be firm. Brugmann, ii. § 82. See Statics.

STEATITE, soap-stone, a variety of talc. (F.—Gk.) Modern; F. stéatite; formed with suffix -ite (Gk. -ίτης) from Gk. στέαρ-, as in στέαρ-ος, gen. of στέαρ, fat (above).

STEED, a horse, esp. a spirited horse. (E.) ME. stede, Chaucer, C. T. 13831 (B 2093); Havelok, 1675. AS. stēda, masc., a stud-horse, stallion, war-horse; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 210, l. 14; also gestēd-hors, used as convertible with stēda in Ælfred's tr. of Bede, b. ii. c. 13, where it is also opposed to myre, a mare, as being of a different gender. Cf. AS. stōðmyre, a stud-mare, Laws of Ælfred (political), § 16, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 71. β. By the usual vowel change from ō to ē (as in fōt, a foot, pl. fēt, feet, and in a great number of instances), stēda (for **stōd-jon*-) is derived from stōd, a stud; with the addition of the masc. nom. suffix -a (from -jon). Thus stēd-a = 'studder', i. e. stud-horse or stallion, for breeding foals. See Stud (1). Allied to G. stute, a mare, Icel. stēdda, a mare, stōðhestr, a stallion, stōðmerr, a stud-mare or brood-mare.

STEEL, iron combined with carbon, for tools, swords, &c. (E.) ME. steel, Chaucer, C. T. 10300 (E 2426). Also spelt stiel, Gower, C. A. vi. 1814; style, Sir Ferumbas, 4433. OMer. stēli; Epinal Gloss. 49; AS. stýle, Grein, ii. 490; and in the compounds stýl-ecg, steel-edged, and stýlen, made of steel; Grein, ii. 490. The OMer. stēli is for **stehli*, from **stahli*-, see below. +Du. staal; Icel. stāl; Dan. staal; Swed. stål; G. stahl, contracted from OHG. stahal. β. The OHG. form furnishes the clue to the etymology; all the forms are due to Teut. types **stahlo*-, **stahli*-, formed from the Teut. base STAH, answering to an Idg. base STAK, to be firm or still, appearing in Skt. stak, to resist, Zend stax-ra-, strong (Horn, § 714), and esp. in OPruss. panu-stakla, steel for kindling fire. Thus the long vowel in steel is due to loss of h before l. Der. steel, verb, from AS. stýlan, to steel; cf. Icel. stæla, to steel (derived from stāl by the usual vowel-change), G. stählen (from stahl).

STEELYARD (1), a meeting-place, in London, for German merchants from the Hanse towns. (E.) 'Next to this lane [Cosin Lane], on the east, is the Steelyard, as they term it, a place for merchants of Almayne [Germany], that use to bring hither . . . steel, and other profitable merchandises;' Stow's Chronicle, ed. Thoms, p. 67; see the whole passage. The Steelyard was a factory for the Hanse Merchants, and was in Dowgate ward. That the English really called this place the steel-yard appears from a document dated 1394, in which it is Latinised as Curia Calibis (= Chalybis); see N. and Q. 10 S. vi. 413. In 1475 it is 'called the Stilehofe, otherwise called the Stileyerd.' Here stile is a ME. variant of steel; see above. 'The marchantes of the styliarde' are mentioned in Fabyan's Chron., an. 1527-8. And see Stilyard in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. β. But it is explained, in the Bremen Wörterbuch, that the Low G. name was Staal-hof, for which 'steel-yard' was a mistaken substitution; hof being correctly translated by 'yard.' The mistake obviously arose from the fact that both Low G. staal and MDu. staal had a double meaning, viz. (1) steel, and (2), sample, pattern; and the latter was really meant. Both Low G. staal, a sample, and MDu. staal, a sample, are from OF. estaler, to display wares on a stall (OF. estal). — Du. stal, G. stall, a stall; see Stall. γ. Cf. Du. staal-hof, 'pattern-office, where the samples of cloth were stamped;' Calisch.

STEELYARD (2), a kind of balance, with unequal arms. (E.) The form is due to a popular etymology from steel and yard, as if 'a bar of steel.' But, as a fact, it was merely shortened from stilyard-beme, meaning the 'beam' or balance used in the Steelyard (as explained above). Hence the word yard, oddly enough, does not refer to the shape of the balance, but to the place wherein it was used; so that it is derived from yard (1), not from yard (2). 'The beam of le Hanzes Hangis, called the Stilliard Beme;' Letters and Papers Foreign and Domestic, Henry VIII, vol. v. p. 104, col. 2; see N. and Q. 10 S. vi. 331. Later shortened to stilliard; Cotgrave, s. v. Crochet, calls it 'a Roman beame or stelleere;' Phillips (1706) has stelleer; and Torriano, s. v. stadera, has 'a pair of stilliards.' Hence prov. E. stillur, stuliard.

STEENBOK, a S. African antelope. (Du.) Du. steenbok, lit. 'rock-goat.' — Du. steen, stone, rock; and bok, he-goat. See Stone and Buck (1).

STEEP (1), precipitous. (E.) ME. step, steep. 'Theo path . . . was narwe and stepe;' King Alisaunder, 7041. AS. stēap, steep, high, lofty; Grein, ii. 481. Cf. Icel. steypðr, steep, rising high. Both AS. stēap and Icel. steypðr are from a common Teut. base **staup*. β. The Icel. steypðr is allied to steypa, to overthrow, cast down, lit. to make to stoop, causal of the rare verb stūpa, to stoop, which is the same word as Swed. stupa, (1) to fall, (2) to tilt. Cf. Swed. stupande, sloping, stupning, a leaning forward; whence it appears that steep is allied to stoop, and meant, originally, tilted forward, sloping down. So also Norweg. stupa, to fall, tumble headlong, stup, a steep cliff. See Stoop (1), and Stoup. Der. steeply, -ness; steep-le, q. v.; steep-y, Timon, i. i. 74; steep (2).

STEEP (2), to dip or soak in a liquid. (Scand.) ME. stepen. 'Stepyn yn water or other licure, Infundo, illiqueo;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt stepe, Palladius, b. ii. l. 281. — Icel. steypa, to make to stoop, overturn, to pour out liquids, to cast metals; causal of stūpa, to stoop; see Stoop, and see Steep (1). So also Swed. stōpa, to cast (metals), to steep, to sink; stōpa korn, 'to steep barley in water' (Widgren); Dan. stōbe, to cast, mould (metals), to steep (corn), stōb, the steeping of grain, steeped corn. The succession of senses is: to make to stoop or overturn, to pour out or cast metals, to pour water over grain.

STEEPLE, a pointed tower of a church or building. (E.) ME. stepel, Rob. of Gloucester, p. 528, l. 10860. AS. stȳpel, a lofty tower, Luke, xiii. 4; the Hatton MS. has stēpel. So called from its 'steepness,' i.e. loftiness or height; from AS. stēap, lofty, high, mod. E. steep. The vowel-change from ēa to Merc. ē, Wessex ie, later y, is regular; see Steep (1). Also spelt stēapol; OE. Texts, p. 616. Der. steeple-chase, modern, not in Todd's Johnson.

STEER (1), a young ox. (E.) ME. steer, Chaucer, C. T. 2151 (A 2149). AS. stēor; 'Juvencus, vel vitula, steor;' Voc. 120. 28. + Du. and G. stier, a bull; Icel. stjör; Goth. stiur. Teut. type **steuroz*, m. Another Teut. type is **theuroz*, from Idg. **teuros*; as in Icel. þjör, Swed. tjur, Dan. tyr, a steer; allied (by gradation) to L. taurus, Gk. ταῦρος, from Idg. **tauros*. β. The orig. sense is 'full-grown' or 'large,' as in Skt. sthūla- (for sthūra-), great, large, powerful, sthūra, a man, sthūri, a pack-horse; cf. Zend staora-, Pers. sutūr, a beast of burden. Brugmann, i. §§ 196, 230; Horn, § 720. γ. We even find the allied adj. in Teutonic, viz. AS. stōr, large, Icel. stōrr, Dan. and Swed. stor; Idg. type **sthār-os*, large. Thus a steer is a firm, full-grown animal, esp. a young bull. See also Steer (2). Der. stir-k, a young bullock or heifer (Jamieson), AS. stȳric, Luke, xv. 23, formed with dimin. suffix -ic, and consequent vowel-change from ēo to y.

STEER (2), to direct, guide, govern. (E.) ME. steren, P. Plowman, B. viii. 47. AS. stēoran, stȳran, to direct, steer, Grein, ii. 481, 491. + Du. sturen; Icel. stýra; Dan. styre; Swed. styra; G. steuern, OHG. stiurjan, stiuran; Goth. stiurjan, to establish, confirm. β. All from the Teut. weak verb **stur-*jan-, to steer (orig. to strengthen, confirm, hence, hold fast, direct). This is a denominative verb, from the sb. of which the base is **stur-*, a rudder (lit. that which holds fast). This sb. is now obsolete in E., but appears in Chaucer as stere, C. T. 4868 (B 448); AS. stēor, Du. stuur, a rudder, Icel. styri, a rudder, Dan. styr, steerage, G. steuer, a rudder, OHG. stiura, a prop, a staff, a paddle or rudder. It is still retained in E. in the comp. star-board, i.e. steer-board, AS. stēor-bord (rudder-side of a ship). γ. Closely allied to this sb. is Icel. staurr, a post, stake, Gk. σταυρός, an upright pole or stake. Noreen, § 143; Brugmann, i. § 108. The Teut. sb. meant, accordingly, a pole to punt with or a paddle to keep the ship's course right, then a rudder; whence the verb to steer, to use a stake or paddle, to use a helm. Der. steerage, Romeo, i. 4. 112, with F. suffix; steer-s-man, Milton, P. L. ix. 513, formed like hunt-s-man, sport-s-man; also star-board, q.v., stern, q.v. And see Store.

STELLAR, belonging to the stars. (L.) 'Stellar virtue,' Milton, P. L. iv. 671. — L. stellāris, starry. — L. stella, a star; short for **ster-la*, a contracted dimin. from the same source as E. star; see Star. Der. (from stella) stell-ate, stell-at-ed; stell-ul-ar, from the dimin. stellula, a little star. Also stell-i-fy, obsolete; see Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, ii. 78.

STEM (1), the trunk or stalk of a tree or herb, a little branch. (E.) ME. stem, a trunk of a tree, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 296, l. 8. AS. stæfn, stefn, stemn, (1) a stem of a tree, (2) the stem or prow of a vessel, (3) a stem or race of people, Grein, ii. 479. [The change from fn to mn is regular; so also AS. hlāfmæsse is now Lammas.] We also find a weak form stefna, stæfna, a stem or prow of a ship (Grein). Both these forms are apparently allied to AS. stæf, a staff; a stem of a tree is the staff or stock, or support of it; the stem of a vessel is the upright post in front of it. See further under Staff. + Du. stam, a trunk, stem, stock; steven, prow; Icel. stafn, later stamn, the stem of a vessel (from stafr, a staff), also written stefni, stemni, also stofn, stomn, the stem of a tree; Dan. stamme, the trunk of a tree; stævn, the prow of a vessel; Swed. stam, trunk; stäf, prow; framslam, fore-stem, prow, bakstam, back-stem, stern; G. stamm, a trunk; steven or vorder steven, the stem, prow-post; cf. hinter steven, stern-post.

STEM (2), the prow of a vessel. (E.) Spelt stam in Morte Arthure, l. 3664; but this is rather the Scand. form; the pl. stemmes is in Baret (1580). It is precisely the same word as when we speak of the stem of a tree; see further under Stem (1). ¶ As the orig. signification was merely 'post,' there was no particular reason (beyond usage) why it should have been used more of the prow-post than of the stern-post; accordingly, the Icel. stafn sometimes means 'prow,' and sometimes 'stern'; and in G. the distinction is made by saying vorder steven (fore-stem) for stem or prow-post, and hinter steven (hind-stem) for stern or stern-post.

STEM (3), to check, stop, resist. (E.) 'Stem, verb, to oppose (a current), to press forward through; to stem the waves, 3 Hen. VI. ii. 6. 36; stemming it, J. Cæsar, i. 2. 109;' Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Cf. Icel. stemma, to dam up; Dan. stemme, to stem; G. stemmen, to dam up water. Teut. type **stemjan-*; a verb derived (by vowel-change of a to e) from a base **stam-*, with the idea of 'obstruction;' see Stammer.

STENCH, a bad smell. (E.) ME. stench, Rob. of Glouc. p. 405, l. 8354. AS. stenc, dat. stence, a strong smell, common in the sense of sweet smell or fragrance; Grein, ii. 479. — AS. stanc, 2nd grade of stincan, to smell, to stink; see Stink. [Stench from stink, like drench from drink.] + G. ge-stank, a stench (from stinken).

STENCIL, to paint or colour in figures by means of a stencilling-plate. (F.—L.) In Webster; he defines a stencil (as a stencilling-plate is sometimes called) as 'a thin plate of metal, leather or other material, used in painting or marking; the pattern is cut out of the plate, which is then laid flat on the surface to be marked, and the colour brushed over it.' Various guesses have been made at the etymology of this word, all worthless. I think it probable that to stencil is from OF. estenceler, to sparkle, also to cover with stars, to adorn with bright colours (Godefroy), MF. estinceller, 'to sparkle, . . . to powder, or set thick with sparkles;' Cot. It was an old term in heraldry. Littré gives a quotation of the 15th century; 'L'aurmoire estoit tute par dedans de fin or estincelee' = the box (?) was all (covered) within with fine gold scattered in stars. This peculiar kind of ornamentation (star-work) is precisely what stencilling must first have been used for, and it is used for it still. Since the pattern is cut quite through the plate, it must all be in separate pieces, so that no better device can be used than that which, to quote Cotgrave, is set thick with sparkles. Cf. 'With his sterns [stars] of gold, stanseld on-stray,' i.e. stencilled at random; Auntes of Arthure, st. 31. — OF. estencele, a spark; in Walter de Bibbesworth, in Wright's Vocab. i. 171. — L. type **stincilla*, mistaken form of L. scintilla, a spark. See Scintillation; also Tinsel. ¶ The note to Auntes of Arthur, st. 31, quotes from the Wardrobe accounts of Edw. III: 'harnesium de bokeram albo, extencellato cum argento,' i.e. starred with silver.

STENOGRAPHY, short-hand writing. (Gk.) Not a very new word; spelt stenographie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Coined from Gk. στενο-, for στενός, narrow, close; and -γραφία, writing (as occurring in ὀρθογραφία, orthography), from γράφειν, to write. Der. stenograph-er, stenograph-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

STENTORIAN, extremely loud. (Gk.) See Ben Jonson, Staple of News, very near the end; and Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he rightly explains it with reference to the voice of Stentor. — Gk. Στέντωρ, Stentor, a Greek at Troy, famous for his loud voice, Homer, Iliad, v. 785. — Gk. στέν-ειν, to groan, make a noise; with suffix -ωπ of the agent, as in L. ama-tor, a lover. — ✓ STEN, to make a noise; cf. Skt. stan, to sound, to thunder. Cf. E. stum. Stentor = stunner.

STEP, a pace, degree, round of a ladder, foot-print. (E.) ME. steppe, in the sense of foot-step, Ywayne and Gawin, 2889, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. i; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81. O Merc. stepe (Sweet); AS. stæpe, a pace, Jos. x. 12. — AS. steppan, to go, advance, a strong verb with a weak infinitive, pt. t. stōp, pp. stapen. The pt. t. stōp occurs frequently; see Grein, ii. 476. β. The orig. sense is 'to set the foot down firmly;' from a Teut. base STAP; see further under Stamp, which is merely the nasalised form. Allied to Du. stap, G. stapfe, a footprint, footstep. Der. foot-step; door-step; stepp-ing-stone, in Wright's Voc. i. 159, where it is miswritten seping-stone, by an obvious error.

STEPCHILD, one who stands in the relation of child through the marriage of a parent. (E.) The pl. step-childre occurs in Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. xciii. 6. Stepmoder is in Gower, C. A. i. 104; bk. i. 1844. AS. stēopcild, Exod. xxii. 22; John, x.v. 18, q.v. For cild, see Child. β. The prefix stēop- occurs also in stēopbearn, a stepbairn, stepchild, stēopfader, stepfather, stēopmōder, stepmother, stēopsunu, stepson, and stēopdohtor, stepdaughter; see Voc. 9. 10; 34. 27; 22. 23; 88. 20. γ. The sense of stēop is 'orphaned,' or 'deprived of its parent;' so that it was first used in the compounds stepchild, stepbairn, stepson, stepdaughter, and afterwards extended, naturally enough, so as to form the compounds stepfather, stepmother, to denote the father or mother of the child who had lost one of its first parents. Thus the Lat. 'fiant filii ejus orfani' is translated in the Vespasian Psalter by 'sien bearn his astēapte;' Ps. cviii. 9, ed. Sweet. 'Astēpnes, orbatio,' occurs in a gloss (Bosworth). δ. The Teut. type is **steupoz*, adj., with the sense of 'orphaned' or 'deprived;' the root is unknown; Fick, iii. 347. We only know that it is wholly unconnected with step above; it may, however, be related to Stoop (1), q.v. + Du. stiefkind; so also stiefzoon, stiefdochter, stiefvader, stiefmoeder; Icel. stjúp barn, a step-bairn; so also stjúpson, -dóttir, -fadir, -móðir; Dan. stedbarn, a corrupt form; Swed. stjuf barn; G. stiefkind; so also stiefsohn, -tochter, -vater, -mutter; cf. OHG. stiuf > G. stief, and OHG. stiufan, to deprive of parents, also to deprive of children. See also Steep (1).

STEPPE, a large plain. (Russ.) In Webster. Perhaps in Mids. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 69, such being the reading of the first quarto; most edd. have steep. — Russ. stepe (with final e mute), a waste, heath, steppe.

STEREOSCOPE, an optical instrument for giving an appearance of solidity. (Gk.) Modern. First constructed in 1838. Coined from Gk. στερεός, for στερεός, stiff, hard, firm, solid; and σκοπεῖν, to behold. β. Gk. στερεός is cognate with G. starr, stiff, and perhaps with Skt. sthira-s, firm; and σκοπεῖν is allied to σκέπτομαι, I look round; see Stare (1) and Scope or Sceptic. Der. stereoscop-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly.

STEREOTYPE, a solid plate for printing. (Gk.) ‘Stereotype was invented (not the thing, but the word) by Didot not very long since;’ Trench, Eng. Past and Present, 4th ed. 1859. — Gk. στερεός, for στερεός, hard, stiff; and type. See Stereoscope and Type. Der. stereotype, verb.

STERILE, unfruitful, barren. (F.—L.) Spelt steril in Levins. — MF. sterile, ‘sterile;’ Cot. — L. sterilem, acc. of sterilis, barren. From the base STER appearing in Gk. στερεός, στερρός, hard, stiff, firm, sterile; cf. G. starr, rigid; for which see Stare (1). Cf. also Gk. στειρά (for **στέρ-ya*), a barren cow; Goth. stairō, a barren woman. Brugmann, i. § 838. A sterile soil is a hard, stony, unproductive one. Der. steril-ity, from F. sterilité, ‘sterility;’ Cot., from L. acc. sterilitatem.

STERLING, genuine, applied to money. (E.) ME. starling, sterling, Chaucer, C. T. 12841 (C 907); P. Plowman, B. xv. 342; Rob. of Glouc. p. 294, l. 5949. In all these passages it is a sb., meaning ‘a sterling coin,’ a coin of true weight. Thus Rob. of Glouc. speaks of ‘Four pousend pound of sterlynges.’ Of E. origin; the MHG. sterlinc, cited by Stratmann, is borrowed from it. First applied to the E. penny, then to standard current coin in general. Wedgwood cites from Ducange a statute of Edw. I, in which we meet with ‘Denarius Angliæ, qui vocatur Sterlingus;’ also a Charter of Hen. III, where we have ‘In centum marcis bonorum nouorum et legalium sterlingorum, tredecim solid. et 4 sterling. pro qualibet marca computatis.’ That is, a mark is 13s. and 4d., a sterling being here a penny.

β. Wedgwood adds: ‘The hypothesis most generally approved is that the coin is named from the Easterlings or North Germans, who were the first moneyers in England. Walter de Pinchbeck, a monk of Bury in the time of Edw. I, says: “sed moneta Angliæ fertur dicta fuisse a nominibus opificum, ut Floreni a nominibus Florentiorum, ita Sterlingi a nominibus Esterlingorum nomina sua contraxerunt, qui hujusmodi monetam in Anglia primitus componebant.”’ This notable passage proves only that the name Esterlingi, as applied to a people, goes back to the 14th century; and it is difficult to prove that it is much older. γ. But Ducange quotes from a document dated 1184, which has: ‘in Anglia unus sterlingus persolvetur.’ Indeed, the E. sterling is even older than this, as Wace (d. ab. 1180) has: ‘por ses estérilins recevoir;’ Roman de Rou, 6873. δ. The word appears to be native English; there are two theories as to its origin. (1) From AS. **steorling*, ‘little star,’ with reference to a very small star on some early coins, as, e. g. on some of Will. II; or (2) from AS. starling, a starling (Clarke Hall), ME. sterling (Voc. 640. 7, 761. 28; Cursor Mundi, 1789), dimin. of AS. star, ME. ster (Voc. 542. 45), a starling; see Starling. Ducange quotes from Lyndwode to the effect that the reference may be to the four birds conspicuous on most coins of Edward the Confessor.

STERN (1), severe, harsh, austere. (E.) ME. sterne, Wyclif, Luke, xix. 21, 22; also sturne, Rob. of Glouc. p. 27, l. 628. AS. styrne, stern, Grein, ii. 492; where we also find styrn-mōd, of stern mood, stern-minded, styrnan, to be severe. [The AS. y often becomes ME. u, as in AS. wyrm, ME. wurm, a worm; AS. *fyr*s, ME. furs or firs, furze. Certainly stern should rather be spelt sturn; it has been assimilated to the word below. Still we find the AS. y becoming mod. E. e in kernel < AS. cyrnel.] Teut. type **sturnjoz*. Perhaps allied to OHG. stornēn, to be astonished, sturni, stupor. β. The suffix -n- is adjectival (Idg. -no-), as in L. Africā-nus; the base stur- seems to be the weak grade of the base STER, as seen in Gk. στερεός, solid, stiff. Cf. Goth. and-staurran, to murmur against, G. störig, morose, stubborn, starr, stiff, rigid; Du. stuursch, stern; Icel. stúra, to mope. See Stare (1). The idea of sternness is closely allied to those of stiffness and austerity of manner. Der. stern-ly, -ness.

STERN (2), the hinder part of a vessel. (Scand.) ME. sterne, P. Plowman, B. viii. 35, footnote; other MSS. have stere, steere, stiere, meaning a rudder. Spelt steorne, a rudder, id. A. ix. 30. — Icel. stjörn, a steering, steerage; hence the phr. sitja við stjörn, to sit at the helm; whence stern became recognised as a name for the hinder part of the vessel. Extended from stjör- (occurring in stjóri, a steerer, ruler), which answers to ME. stere, a rudder. See Steer (2). Compare Icel. stjörnbordi with E. starboard (= steer-board). Thus stern is allied to steer, in the obsolete sense of ‘rudder.’ Der. stern-

most; stern-sheets, where sheet had once (I suppose) the nautical sense of ‘rope.’

STERNUTATION, sneezing. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9, l. 1. — L. sternutātiōnem, acc. of sternutatio, a sneezing. — L. sternūtāre, to sneeze, frequent. of sternuere, to sneeze. Allied to Gk. πράννυθαι, to sneeze. β. The bases ster-, πρσ-, seem to be from an imitative base **pster-*, expressive of sneezing. Der. sternutat-or-y.

STERTOROUS, snoring. (L.) Modern. Coined (as if from L. **stertorōsus*) from stertere, to snore. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Sternutation. Der. stertorous-ly.

STETHOSCOPE, the tube used in auscultation, as applied to the chest. (Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Modern; lit. ‘chest-examiner.’ Coined from Gk. στήθος, for στήθος, the chest; and σκοπεῖν, to consider, examine. β. The Gk. στήθος is allied to Skt. stana-s, the female breast, a nipple. Cf. Gk. στηνίον = στήθος (Hesychius). For -scope, see Scope or Sceptic. Der. stethoscop-ic.

STEVEDORE, one whose occupation it is to load and unload vessels in port. (Span.—L.) Webster has stevedore, which is a well-known word in the mercantile world, and steve, verb, to stow, as cotton or wool in a vessel’s hold. The word is Spanish, Spain being a wool-producing country and once largely engaged in sea-traffic. — Span. estivador, ‘a packer of wool at shearing;’ Neuman. It may also mean a stower of cargo, as will be seen. Formed with suffix -dor (< L. acc. -tōrem) from estiva-r, to stow, to lay up cargo in the hold, to compress wool. — L. stipāre, to crowd together, press together; allied to Stiff. The verb appears also in Ital. stivare, to press close, Port. estivar, to trim a ship. There is also a verbal sb., viz. Ital. stiva, ballast of a ship, Span. estiva, the stowage of goods in a ship’s hold, MF. estive, ‘the loading or lading of a ship;’ Cot. From the same root are stip-end, stip-ul-at-ion, con-stip-ate, co-stive.

STEW (1), to boil slowly with little moisture. (F.—Teut.) ME. stuwēn. ‘Stuwyn, or stuyne mete, Stupho; Stuwyn or bathyn, or stuyne in a stw, Balneo;’ Prompt. Parv. The older sense was to bathe; and the verb was formed from the old sb. stew in the sense of bath or hot-house (as it was called), which was chiefly used in the pl. stews, with the low sense of brothel-house. See Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 277 (242 in the translation). The old spelling of the pl. sb. was stues, stuwes, stewes, stives, stuyves, stuywes, P. Plowman, B. vi. 72, A. vii. 65, all variously Anglicised forms of OF. estuve, of which Cotgrave explains the pl. estuves by ‘stews, also stoves or hot-houses.’ [Cf. Ital. stufa, Port. and Span. estufa, a stove, a hot-house; mod. F. étuve.] β. Of Teut. origin. The OHG. form is stupa, a hot room for a bath; the mod. G. stube merely means a room in general. The corresponding E. word is Stove, q. v. We may particularly note MDu. stove, ‘a stewe, a hot-house, or a baine’ [bath], een stove om te baden, ‘a stewe to bathe in;’ Hexham. The stews in Southwark were chiefly filled with Flemish women. Der. stew, sb., in the sense of stewed meat; this is merely a derivative from the verb. The pl. sb. stews is treated of above; cf. ‘The bathes and the stewes bothe,’ Gower, C. A. iii. 291; bk. viii. 484.

STEW (2), a fish-pond. (Du.) ME. stewe, Chaucer, C. T., A 350. — MDu. stouwen, to drive forward; Du. stouwen, stuwen, to stow; cf. Low G. stau, a dam, stauen, to keep water back. Allied to Stow.

STEWARD, one who superintends another’s estate or farm. (E.) ME. stiward, Havelok, 666; Ancrén Riwe, p. 386, l. 5 from bottom. AS. stigweard, in a will (Toller); also stiweard, Voc. 223. 7; spelt stiward, A. S. Chron. an. 1093, and an. 1120. ‘Economus, stiward,’ Voc. 129. 13; also in Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 570, l. 12. The full form of the word was stigweard, lit. a sty-ward; from AS. stig-o, a sty, and weard, a guardian, warden, keeper. The orig-sense was one who looked after the domestic animals, and gave them their food; hence, one who provides for his master’s table, and generally, one who superintends household affairs for another. See Sty and Ward. β. For the change of sound, cf. the name Seward, formerly Siward, Macb. iii. 6. 31. The Icel. stívarðr, gen. assigned as the origin of E. steward, occurs but rarely; the Icel. Dict. gives but one reference, and adds the remark that it is ‘from the English.’ γ. Grein (ii. 484) draws especial attention to the parallel form stigwita, also stiwita, in the same sense of steward, the suffix being the AS. wita, a wise man, one who is skilled. Der. steward-ship, Luke, xvi. 2; steward-ess, with F. suffix.

STICK (1), to stab, pierce, thrust in, to fasten by piercing; to adhere. (E.) The orig. sense is to stab or pierce (cf. sting), hence to fasten into a thing by thrusting it in; hence, the intransitive use, to be thrust into a thing and there remain, to cling or adhere, to be set fast, stop, hesitate, &c. Two verbs are confused in mod. E., viz. (1) stick, to pierce, and (2) stick, to be fixed in. 1. STRONG FORM. ME. steken, strong verb, to pierce, fix, pt. t. stak, Rom. of the Rose, 458; pp. steken, stiken, stoken (see Stratmann), also stoke, Gower, C. A. i. 60, bk. i. 538; which = mod. E. stick. This answers to AS. **stecan*, not found; pt. t. **stac*, pp. **stecen*; a strong verb, which does not appear in AS., though found both in OFries. steka, and in OSaxon, where we find the pt. t. stak, Heliland, 5707. And compare Sting. Cognate words are Low G. steken, to pierce, stick, pt. t. stak, pp. steken; and G. stechen, to sting, pierce, stick, stab, pt. t. stach, pp. gestochen. Teut. type **stekan-*, pt. t. **stak*, pp. **stakanoz*; transferred to the e-series from the older type **steikan-*, pt. t. **staik*, pp. **stikanoz*. Cf. Goth. staks, a mark, stigma; stiks, a point, a moment of time. β. The latter strong verb is from the Idg. ✓STEIGw, to pierce (Brugmann, i. § 633); whence Gk. στίχειν (= stíy-yew), to prick, L. instigare, to instigate, Skt. tigma-, sharp, tij, to be sharp, tejava, to sharpen; see Stigma, Instigate, Sting. 2. WEAK FORM. ME. stikien, to be infixed, to stick into, cling to, adhere; a weak verb; also used in a trans. sense. 'And anoon he stykede faste' = he stuck fast, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1246; pp. ystiked, Chaucer, C. T. 1565. AS. stician, pt. t. sticode, both trans. and intrans., Grein, ii. 482. Cognate words are Icel. stika, to drive piles, Dan. stikke, to stab, Swed. sticka, to stab, sting, stitch, prick, G. stecken, to stick, set, plant, fix, also, to stick fast, remain. Thus the sense of 'stick fast' appears in G. as well as in E., but G. restricts the strong form stechen to the orig. sense, whilst stecken has both senses. Der. stick (2), q.v.; stick-y, spelt stickie in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 583, stick-i-ness; stick-le-back, q.v.; stitch, q.v.; and see sting, stang, stack, stake, steak. From the same root are di-sting-uish, di-stinct, exting-uish, ex-tinct, in-stinct, pre-stige, in-stig-ate, sti-mu-late, style (1), stig-ma.

STICK (2), a staff, small branch of a tree. (E.) ME. stikke, Chaucer, C. T. 16733 (G 1265). AS. sticca, a stick, also a peg or nail, Judges, iv. 21, 22. So called from its piercing or sticking into anything; the orig. sense was 'peg', then any small bit of a branch of a tree. 'Se teldsticca sticode þurh his heafod' = the tent-peg stuck through his head, Judges, iv. 22. + Icel. stika, a stick; EFries. stikke, stik; allied to Du. stek, G. stecken, a stick. See Stick (1), Steak, and Stake. Der. stick-le-back. And see stitch. Also single-stick; see under quarterstaff.

STICKLEBACK, a small fish. (E.) So called from the stickles or prickles on its back; cf. thornback. ME. stykylbak, Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 85. Corruptly sticklebag, Walton's Angler, p. i. c. 5 (R.); and still more corruptly tittlebat (Halliwell). In the Prompt. Parv., and in Voc. 610. 30, there is mention of a fish called a stikling or stykylng. The sb. stikel or stickle is from AS. sticel, a prickle, sting, used of the sting of a gnat in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 6, cap. xvi. § 2. — AS. stician, to stick; just as prickle is from prician, to prick. See Stick (1) and Stitch. The suffix -el denotes the instrument; it is not (in this case) a diminutive, as is often imagined; see March, A. S. Grammar, § 228. For back, see Back. Cf. Du. stekelvisch, a stickleback; MDu. stickel, 'a prick or a sting'; Hexham; also EFries. stikel, a thorn.

STICKLER, (formerly) one who parts combatants or settles disputes between two men fighting. (E.) Nearly obsolete; once common; see Halliwell, Nares, and Trench, Select Glossary. 'Like sticklers of the war,' Dryden, Oliver Cromwell, 41. Now only used in the sense of a man who insists on etiquette or persists in an opinion. See Troil. v. 8. 18. The verb to stickle meant to part combatants, act as umpire. 'I stykyl betwene wrastellers, or any folkes that prove mastries [try conclusions] to se that none do other wronge, or I parte folkes that be redy to fyght,' Palsgrave. It is common to explain this word (with profound disregard for the l in it) by saying that the umpire must have parted combatants by means of sticks, or else that the umpire arbitrated between men who fought with single-sticks. Both assertions are mere inventions; and a stickle is not a stick at all, but a prickle. If this were the etymology, the word would mean 'one who uses prickles.' β. It is probable that stickle represents the once common ME. stighlen or stightilen, to dispose, order, arrange, govern, subdue, &c. It was commonly used of a steward, who disposed of and arranged everything, and acted as a master of the ceremonies; see Will. of Palerne, 1199, 2899, 3281, 3841, 5379; Destruction of Troy, 117, 1997, 2193, 13282; Gawayn and Grene Knight, 2137; &c. 'When þay com to þe courte, keppte wern þay fayre, Stygtled with þe steward, stad in þe halle,' Allit. Poems, B. 90. 'To stygtle the peple' = to keep order among the people; P. Plowm. Crede, 315; and cf. P. Plowman, C. xvi. 40. We also find stighill (without t), York Myst. (glossary); and the sb. is stiteler in the Cov. Myst. p. 23. γ. This ME. stizlen is the frequentative of AS. stihtan, stihtian. 'Willelm weolde and stihite Engleland' = William ruled and governed England, A. S. Chron. an. 1086 (Thorpe renders it by 'held despotic sway'). + MDu. stichten, 'to build, edefie, bound, breed or make (a contention), impose or make (a lawe),' Hexham; mod. Du. stichten, to found, institute, establish, excite, edify. Further allied to Dan. stifte, to found, institute, establish; stifte forlig = to reconcile, stifte fred = to make peace (just exactly to stickle); Swed. stifta, also stikta, similarly used; G. stiften, to found, institute, cause, excite; Freundschaft stiften = to make friendship. Cf. also Icel. stétt (from **stihiti-*), a foundation, base. Kluge derives stih-, stif-, from a Teut. base **stihw* (= Idg. **stig*), to build, found; cf. OSax. stihtan, to build.

STIFF, rigid, obstinate, formal. (E.) The vowel was once long; and remains so in North E. stive, muscular, and in the derivative stifle. ME. stif, Chaucer, C. T. 7849 (D 2267); the superl. is spelt styuest, steuest, steeffest, stiffest, P. Plowman, C. vii. 43. AS. stif, stiff (Toller); this form is verified by the derivatives stifian and ästifian. 'Heora hand ästifedon' = their hands became stiff; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 598, l. 11. 'Obrigesco, ic stifie,' Voc. 118. 20. + Du. stijf, stiff, hard, rigid, firm; Dan. stiv; Swed. styf; Low G. stif (Danneil); Westphal. stif. [The G. steif is supposed to be borrowed from Low G.] β. Allied to Lithuan. stiprus, strong, stipti, to be stiff, L. stipes, a stem, trunk of a tree, stipäre, to pack tight; stipulus, firm. See Stipulation. Der. stiff-ly, -ness, stiff-en (Swed. stifna, Dan. stivne), Hen. V, iii. 1. 7, stiff-neck-ed, Acts, vii. 51; stif-le.

STIFLE, to suffocate. (Scand.) 'Stifil, Stifle, suffocare,' Levins. 'Smored [smothered] and stified,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 68 f. — Icel. stifla, to dam up, prop. used of water; hence, to block up, choke; Norweg. stivla, to stop, hem in, check, lit. 'to stiffen'; cf. stivra, to stiffen; both are frequent. forms of stiva (Dan. stive), to stiffen. [Cf. also ME. stiuven, to stiffen, Will. of Palerne, 3033; Swed. styfva, Du. stijven; G. steifen, to stiffen.] All these words are derived from the adj. appearing as AS. stif, stiff; the vowel of which was once long, and is still so in prov. E. Halliwell gives 'Stive, strong, muscular, North;' which is nothing but ME. stive, an occasional spelling of stiff; see Stiff. The loss of the adj. 'stiff' in Icel. is remarkable, as it is preserved in Swed., Dan., and Norwegian; the Oicel. form was stif, cited by E. Müller. ¶ We cannot derive stifle from the verb stive, to pack close, the change from v to f being contrary to rule; but it is very probable that stifle has been frequently confused with stive, which, though it properly means to pack close, came to have much the same sense, as in prov. E. stivy, close, stifling (Worcestershire). Stive is a F. word, from OF. estiver < L. stipäre, to compress, pack tight, as explained under Stevedore. Note that E. stiff and L. stipäre are closely related words, from the same root.

STIGMATISE, to brand with infamy, defame publicly. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) 'Stigmatised with a hot iron;' Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, p. 470 (R.). [Shak. has stigmatic, naturally deformed, 2 Hen. VI, v. 1. 215; stigmatical, Com. Errors, iv. 2. 22.] — F. stigmatiser, in Cotgrave stigmatizer, 'to brand, burn, or mark with a red hot iron, to defame publicly.' — Late L. stigmatizāre, to mark; see Higden, ii. 146. — Gk. στυγματίζειν, to mark or brand. — Gk. στυγματ-, base of στίγμα, a prick, mark, brand. From the base στυγ-, as in στίχειν (= stíy-yew), to prick. From Idg. ✓STEIGw, to prick; whence also E. stick; see Stick (1). Der. (from Gk. στυγματ-) stigmat-ic, stigmat-ic-al. We also use now stigma, sb., from Gk. στίγμα.

STILE (1), a step or set of steps for climbing over a fence or hedge. (E.) ME. stile, style, Chaucer, C. T. 10420 (F 106). AS. stigel, a stile; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 146, l. 6. Formed with suffix -el, denoting the means or instrument, from stig-, weak grade of AS. stigan, to climb, mount. See Sty (1). The AS. stigel first became stizel, and then stile; so also AS. tigul became mod. E. tile. + OHG. stigila, a stile (obsolete), from OHG. stigan, to climb; MDu. stichel (Hexham). And cf. Shetland stiggy, a stile (Edmonstone); from the same root.

STILE (2), the correct spelling of Style, q.v.

STILETTO, a small dagger. (Ital. — L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; Heywood, Eng. Traveller, A. i. sc. 2. — Ital. stiletto, 'a little poyniard;' Florio. Dimin. of stilo, MItal. stillo, now a gnomon, formerly a dagger (Florio). — L. stilum, acc. of stilus, a style; see Style (1).

STILL (1), motionless, calm, silent. (E.) ME. stille, Chaucer, C. T. 11782 (F 1472). AS. stille, still, Grein, ii. 484. Allied to AS. stillan, verb, to rest, be still, id.; lit. 'to remain in a stall or place;' a sense well shown by the adv. still = continually. Teut. type **steljoz*; allied to AS. stellan, to place. From Teut. base **stal-*, as in AS. steal, stal, a place, station, stall; see Stall. + Du. stil, still, stillen, to be still; stellen, to place, from stal, a stall; Dan. stille, still, hushed, stille, to still, also, to set, post, station, put in place, allied to stald (formerly stall), a stall; Swed. stilla, still, stilla, to quiet, allied to stall; G. still, still, stillen, to still; stellen, to place, from stall. The sense of still is 'brought to a stall or resting-place.' Der. still, adv., ME. stille, silently, Havelok, 2997, from AS. stille (Grein); this adverb has preserved the sense of 'continually' or 'abidingly,' and has come to mean always, ever, as in the strange compound still-vexed=always vexed, Temp. i. 2. 229. Also still, verb, AS. stillan; stil-ly, adj., ME. stillich (=still-like), Layamon, 2374; stil-ly, adv.; still-ness; still-born, 2 Hen. IV, i. 3. 64; still-stand, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 64; stand-still.

STILL (2), to distil, to trickle down. (L.; or F.—L.) In some cases, still represents L. stillāre, to fall in drops; as, e.g., in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 7. 35. Cf. 'stille hem in a stillatory;' Medical Works of the 14th Century, ed. Henslow, p. 117. But it is more often a mere contraction for distil, just as sport is for disport, spend for dispend, and spite for despite. Thus Tusser writes: 'The knowledge of stiling is one pretie feat;' May's Husbandry, st. 33; where stiling plainly stands for distilling. See Distil. Der. still, sb., an apparatus for distilling, equivalent to ME. stillatorie, in the same sense, Chaucer, C. T. 16048 (G 580), answering to a Late L. **stillatōrium*, from stillāre. And see di-stil, in-stil.

STILT, a support of wood with a foot-rest, for lengthening the stride in walking. (Scand.) ME. stille. 'Stylte, calepodium, lignipodium;' Prompt. Parv.—Swed. stylta, Dan. stytte; cf. Norweg. styltra, a stilt, Dan. stytte, to walk on stilts, also to stalk, walk slowly. We also find Swed. dial. stylt, a prop (Rietz).+Du. stelt, a stilt; Westphal. stelze; G. stelze; OHG. stelza, a prop, a crutch. β. We may particularly note Lowl. Sc. stult, a crutch; this, like Swed. stylta, is from the Scand. base stult-, as in Swed. dial. stullta, to stagger about, S. Swed. stulta, the same (Möller). γ. I suppose this form to have arisen from the addition of -t- to the base stull-, as seen in Swed. dial. stull-a, stul-a, to stagger about. Cf. OHG. stullan (pt. t. stulta), to come to a halt, to stop, allied to OHG. stulla, a moment (whence Ital. tra-stullo, 'a pastime, quietness,' Florio). From the weak grade **stull* of a lost Teut. strong verb **stullan*, pt. t. **stall*, pp. **stallanoz*; Grimm, Gram. ii. 57. Prob. the AS. stylltan, to be amazed, hesitate (come to a stand), is closely allied. δ. We can then explain Du. stelt, G. stelze, as allied to G. gestalt, shape, form, allied to OHG. stellan, to place, fix, cause to halt (pp. gestalt). Der. stilt-ed.

STIMULATE, to instigate. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sb. stimulation is in Minshew, ed. 1627].—L. stimulātus, pp. of stimulāre, to prick forward.—L. stimulus, a goad; perhaps for **stimmulus*, for **stig-mulus*; and formed with suffixes -mu-lo-, from **stig-*, weak grade of **STEIGw*, to stick, to prick; see Stick (1). Der. stimulat-ion, from F. stimulation, 'a pricking forward,' Cot.; stimulat-ive; stimulant, from L. stimulant-, base of pres. part. of stimulāre. We also now use L. stimulus as an E. word.

STING, to prick severely, pain acutely. (E.) ME. stingen, strong verb; pt. t. stang, stong; pp. stungen, stongen, Chaucer, C. T. 1081 (A 1079). AS. stingan, pt. t. stang, pp. stungen; Grein, ii. 484.+Dan. stinge; Swed. stinga; Icel. stinga, pt. t. stakk (for **stang*), pp. stunginn. Cf. Goth. us-stiggan (for us-stingan), to push out, put out, Matt. v. 29. Teut. type **stengan-*, pt. t. **stang*, pp. **stunganoz*. Perhaps allied, ultimately, to Stick (1); cf. prov. E. stang, a pole, with E. stake. See Stang, Stake. Der. sting, sb., AS., Dan., and Swed. sting. Also sting-y, q.v.

STINGY, mean, avaricious. (E.) Pronounced (stinji). 'Stingy, niggardly;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A stingy, narrow-hearted fellow;' L'Estrange (Todd). It is the same word as prov. E. stingy [pronounced stinji], common in Norfolk in the sense of 'nipping, unkindly,' and esp. used of a cold East wind. Forby defines it: (1) cross, ill-humoured, (2) churlish, biting, as applied to the state of the air. See Stingy in Ray's Glossary (E. D. S. B. 16), and my notes upon it, esp. at p. xix; see also E. D. D. It is merely the adj. formed from sting, sb., by the addition of -y, and means (1) stinging, keen, (2) churlish; by an easy transition of sense, which is exactly paralleled by the Swed. sticken, pettish, waspish, fretful, from sticka, to sting. Cf. MDan. stinge, adj., contrary to. β. The sounding of g as j causes no difficulty, as it is still common in Wiltshire, where a bee's sting is called a stinge [stinj]; cf. also Shropsh. stinge, a grudge; as 'I ow'd him a stinge.' See Sting. Der. stingi-ly, -ness.

STINK, to smell strongly. (E.) ME. stinken, strong verb; pt. t. stank, stonk, Chaucer, C. T. 14535 (B 3807); pp. stonken, AS. stincan, pt. t. stanc, stonc, pp. stuncen, Grein, ii. 484. This verb not only means to stink, or to be fragrant, but has the singular sense of to rise as dust or vapour. 'Dūst stonc tō heofonum'=dust rose up to heaven.+Du. stinken; Icel. stökkva, pt. t. stökk (for **stönk*), pp. stökkinn (for **stönkinn*), to spring up, take to flight; the pp. stökkinn means bedabbled, sprinkled; Dan. stinke; Swed. stinka; G. stinken. Cf. Goth. stiggkuan (= **stingkuan*), to strike, smite, thrust; whence bistugkw, a cause of offence, 2 Cor. vi. 3. The form of the Teut. base is **stengy*. Possibly allied to L. -stinguere, as in ex(s)tinguere, to thrust out; and if so, allied further to **STEIGw*, to pierce, as in L. in-stig-are, to instigate. ¶ There are difficulties as to the sense; and it is not certain that the Icel. and Goth. forms belong here. If not, then the connexion with L. -stinguere fails. As to the possible connexion with Gk. ταγγός, rancid, see Prellwitz. Der. stink, sb., stink-pot; also stench, q.v.

STINT, to limit, restrain. (E.) Properly 'to shorten,' or 'curtail.' ME. stinten, stynten, gen. in the sense to stop, cause to cease, P. Plowman, B. i. 120; also, intransitively, to pause, id. v. 585. Allied to ME. stenten, to cease, Chaucer, C. T. 905 (A 903). AS. styntan, to make dull, Voc. 25. 28; for styntan (= L. contundere), in a gloss (Bosworth). [Also gestentan, to warn, perhaps to restrain, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 6, l. 24.] The proper sense is rather 'to make dull,' as it is a causal verb, formed (by vowel-change from u to y) from the adj. stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, Matt. v. 22; cf. stuntsceipe, folly, Mark, vii. 22.+Icel. styttá (by assimilation for **stynta*), to shorten, from the adj. stuttr (for **stuntr*), short, stunted; Swed. dial. stynta, to shorten, from stunt, small, short (Rietz); Norweg. styttá, stutta, to shorten, tuck up the clothes, from stutt, small, short (Aasen); cf. Dan. dial. stynte, to crop. β. The E. word comes nearer to the sense of the Icel. word; the AS. stunt is used metaphorically, in the sense of 'short of wit.' However, to stint is certainly formed from Stunt by vowel-change; see further under Stunted.

STIPEND, a salary, settled pay. (L.) 'Yearly stipendes;' Ascham, Toxophilus, b. ii. ed. Arber, p. 130.—L. stipendium, a tax, impost, tribute, stipend. For **stip-pendium* or **stipi-pendium*, a payment of money; from stip- or stipi-, base of stips, small coin or a contribution in small coin, and -pendium, a payment, from pendere, to weigh out, to pay. For pendere, see Pendant. Der. stipendi-ar-y, from L. stipendiarius, receiving pay.

STIPPLE, to engrave by means of dots. (Du.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he calls it a modern term in art.—Du. stippelen, to speckle, cover with dots.—Du. stippel, a speckle, dimin. of stip, a point. Hexham gives stip, stup, or stippelken, 'a point, or a small point;' also stippen, 'to point, or to fix;' stippen or sticken met de naelde, 'to stitch with the needle,' stip-naelde, 'a stitching-needle.' Allied to Low G. stippelen, to drip as raindrops (Danneil); stippen, to speckle; G. stuppen, to stitch, G. stift, a peg, pin.

STIPULATION, a contract, agreement. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The verb to stipulate is prob. later, but is used by Cotgrave to translate F. stipuler.]—F. stipulation, 'a stipulation, a covenant;' Cot.—L. stipulatiōnem, acc. of stipulatio, a covenant, bargain.—L. stipulāri, to settle an agreement, bargain; lit. to make fast.—OL. stipulus, fast, firm; 'stipulum apud ueteres firimum appellabatur,' Justiniani Institutiones, iii. 15 (Lewis). Allied to stipes, a post; and to E. Stiff. Der. (from L. stipulātus, pp. of stipulāri) stipulate, verb. ¶ The story about stipula, a straw, noticed in Trench, Study of Words, is needless; stipulate simply keeps the sense of the root. It may be noted that L. stipula=E. stubble.

STIR, to rouse, instigate, move about. (E.) ME. stiren, sturen (and even steren, but properly always with one r), Chaucer, C. T. 12280, 16746 (C 346, G 1278). AS. styrian, to move, to stir, Gen. vii. 21, ix. 3; Grein, ii. 491. [Various forms are given in Ettmüller, which seem to have been altered and accented in order to bring the word into connexion with steer; but its true connexion is rather with storm. Grein keeps styrian, to stir, and siýran, stieran, to steer, quite distinct.] Allied to Icel. styr, a stir, disturbance, Du. storen, to disturb, interrupt, vex, Swed. störa, G. stören, to disturb, OHG. stæren, stören, to scatter, destroy, disturb. Teut. types **sturjan-*, **slaurjan-* (Franck). See Storm. Der. stur-geon; and see stor-m.

STIRK, dimin. of Steer (1), q.v.

STIRRUP, a ring or hoop suspended from a saddle. (E.) For sty-rope, i.e. a rope to climb by; the orig. stirrup was a looped rope for mounting into the saddle. Spelt styrop in Palsgrave. ME. stirop, Chaucer, C. T. 7247 (D 1665). AS. stirāp. 'Scansile, stirāp;' Voc. 120. 2; fuller form stigrāp, id. 332. 11.—AS. stig-, weak grade of stigan, to climb, mount; and rāp, a rope. See Stile (1) or Sty (1), and Rope.+MDu. stegel-reep, or steegh-reep, 'a stir-rope-leather,' Hexham. [This is another use of the word; that which we now call stirrup is called in Du. stijbeugel, i.e. 'the little bow or loop whereby to mount.'] Similarly formed from Du. stijgen, to mount, and reep, a rope. Also Icel. stig-reip, from stiga and reip; G. stegreif, a stirrup, from steigen and reif; cf. steigbügel, a stirrup.

STITCH, a pain in the side, a passing through stuff of a needle and thread. (E.) The sense of 'pain in the side,' lit. 'pricking sensation,' is old. ME. stiche. 'Styche, peyne on þe syde;' Prompt. Parv. AS. stice, a pricking sensation; A. S. Leechdoms, i. 370. § 10.—AS. stician, to prick, pierce; see Stick (1). So also G. stich, a prick, stitch, from stechen, to prick; also sticken, to stitch, from the same. Der. stitch, verb; also stich-wort, a herb good for the stitch, spelt stichworte in Palsgrave; stitch-er, stitch-er-y, Cor. i. 3. 75.

STITH, an anvil. (Scand.) 'Vulcan's stith;' Hamlet, iii. 2. 89;

some edd. have stithy. ME. stith, Chaucer, C. T. 2028 (A 2026); Havelok, 1877. — Icel. stedi, an anvil. Allied to staðr, a place, i.e. fixed stead; and so named from its firmness. + Swed. stād, an anvil; MDu. stiet. From the same root as Stead, q.v. Der. stith-y, also used with the sense of anvil, like ME. stethi, Cursor Mundi, 23237.

STIVER, a Dutch penny. (Du.) In Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 2, 1641. Also in Arber's Eng. Garner, iii. 404 (ab. 1594). — Du. stuiver, formerly stuyver, 'a stiver, a Low-Country peecce of coine, of the value of an English penny'; Hexham. β. Hence G. stüber, a stiver. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'bit' or small piece. Franck connects it with Low G. stunf, stumpy; Icel. stúfr, a stump, stýfa, to cut off.

STOAT, an animal of the weasel kind. (E.) 'Stoat, a stallion-horse, also, a kind of rat,' Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. Spelt stote, Phillips, 1706; Levins, 1570. Cf. prov. E. stoot (Suffolk); stot (Hants.), a weasel (E. D. D.); also stot, stote, a young bull, a young horse (E. D. D.). ME. stot; in the Coventry Mysteries, ed. Halliwell, p. 218, l. 14, a scribe says to the woman taken in adultery: 'Therefore come forthe, thou stynkyng stott;' and in l. 19: 'To save suche stottys, it xal [shall] not be.' Here the sense is probably stoat. The ME. stot means (1) a stoat, (2) a horse or stallion, (3) a bullock; see Chaucer, C. T. 617 (A 615); and my note to P. Plowman, C. xxii. 267. The reason is that the word is a general name for a male animal, and not confined to any one kind; the word stag is in the same case, meaning a hart, a gander, and a drake; see Stag. The pl. stottes, stallions, occurs in the Owl and Nightingale, 495; AS. stottas, 'equi uiles' (Napier). Allied to Icel. stútr, a bull; Swed. stut, a bull, also a hard blow with a rod; Dan. stut, a bullock; Swed. dial. stut, (1) a young ox, (2) a young man; Norweg. stut, (1) a bullock, (2) an ox-horn. From **stut-*, weak grade allied to Teut. **stautan-*, to push, strike. Cf. Du. stooten, to push, thrust, whence Du. stooter, sb., a thruster, also a stallion, stootig, adj., butting, goring; Swed. stöta, to push, Dan. støde, G. stossen (strong verb), Goth. stautan, to strike. See Stutter.

STOCCADO, STOCCATA, a thrust in fencing. (Ital. — Teut.) Stoccado, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 234. Stoccata, Romeo, iii. 1. 77. Stoccado is an accommodated form, prob. from MF. estoccade, with the same sense, with a final o to imitate Spanish; cf. Shakespeare's barricado with E. barricade. [The true Span. form was estocada, 'a stocada or thrust with a weapon'; Minsheu.] Stoccata is the better form. — Ital. stoccata, 'a foyné, a thrust, a stoccado given in fence'; Florio. Formed as if from a fem. pp. of a verb **stoccare*, which is made from the sb. stocco, 'a truncheon, a tuck, a short sword, an arming sword'; Florio. — G. stock, a stick, staff, trunk, stump; cognate with E. Stock, q.v. And see Stoke. Cf. MDu. stock, 'a stock-rapier'; Hexham.

STOCK, a post, stump, stem, &c. (E.) In all its senses, it is the same word. The sense is 'a stump'; hence a post, trunk, stem (metaphorically a race or family), a fixed store or fund, capital, cattle, trunk or butt-end of a gun; the pl. stocks signify a place where a criminal is set fast, or a frame for holding ships fast, or public capital. See Trench, Study of Words, which partly follows Horne Tooke's Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 4. ME. stok, trunk of a tree, Pricke of Conscience, 676; pl. stokkes, the stocks, P. Plowman, B. iv. 108. AS. stocc, a post, trunk; Deut. xxviii. 36, 64. + Du. stok, stick, handle, stocks; MDu. stock; whence MDu. stockduyue, a stock-dove, stockvisch, stock-fish; stockroose, 'a rose so called beyond the sea,' i.e. stocks; Hexham; Icel. stokkr, trunk, log, stocks, stocks for ships; Dan. stok, a stick; Swed. stock, a beam, log; G. stock; OHG. stockh. Teut. type **stukkoz*, m. The orig. sense may have been 'stump of a cut tree'; cf. AS. stycce, G. stück, a bit, fragment; also Low G. stuke, a stump, Norw. stauka, to strike, hack. Some connect it with Skt. tuj, to strike; just as Icel. stauta, to push, is allied to Skt. tud, to strike. Der. stock, verb, ME. stokken, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iii. l. 380; stock-broker; stock-dove, Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 429; stock-exchange, stock-holder, stock-jobbing; stock-fish (prob. from Du. stockvisch), Prompt. Parv., and Temp. iii. 2. 79; stock-ish, i.e. log-like, Merch. Ven. v. 81; stock-still, i.e. still as a post (cf. MDu. stock-stille, 'stone-still, or immovable,' Hexham); stock, a flower, called stocke-gyllofer (stock-gilliflower) in Palsgrave; stock-ing, q.v., stoke, q.v. Also stocc-ado, stocc-ata.

STOCKADE, a breast-work formed of stakes stuck in the ground. (Span. — Teut.) A modern word; it occurs in Mason's Eng. Garden, b. ii. l. 293, spelt stoccade (A.D. 1777). The pl. stockadoes occurs ab. 1602; see Arber, Eng. Garner, vii. 175. A mistaken form, due to association with stock. — Span. estacada, 'a place palisadoed, or hemm'd in with stakes'; see Don Quixote, pt. ii. c. 66 (Pineda). — Span. estaca, a stake. — MDu. stake, a stake; see Stake. See Notes on E. Etym. p. 283.

STOCKING, a close covering for the foot and leg. (E.) 'A stocking, or paire of stockings,' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Formerly called stocks; 'Our knit silke stockes, and Spanish lether shoes,' Gascoigne, Stele Glas, l. 375. 'He rose to draw on his strait stockings, and, as the deuill would, he hit vpon the letter, bare it away in the heele of his stocke,' &c.; Holinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1532 (R.). 'Un bas de chausses, a stocking, or nether-stock;' Cot. He also has: 'Un bas de manches, a half-sleeve;' which we may compare with 'Manche Lombarde, a stock-sleeve, or fashion of halfe sleeve;' id. β. 'The clothing of the legs and lower part of the body formerly consisted of a single garment, called hose, in F. chausses. It was afterwards cut in two at the knees, leaving two pieces of dress, viz. knee-breeches, or, as they were then called, upper-stocks, or in F. haut de chausses, and the netherstocks or stockings, in F. bas de chausses, and then simply bas. In these terms, the element stock is to be understood in the sense of stump or trunk, the part of a body left when the limbs are cut off. In the same way G. strumpf, a stocking, properly signifies a stump; Wedgwood. Similarly, a stock-sleeve is a truncated sleeve, a half-sleeve. γ. To this I may add that stock-ing is a dimin. form; the nether-stock being the smaller portion of the cut hose; it was sometimes called stock simply, but also nether-stock or stock-ing (= little stock); and the last name has alone survived. See Stock.

STOIC, a disciple of Zeno. (L. — Gk.) Spelt Stoick, Milton, P. R. iv. 280; cf. Stoa, id. 253. From L. Stoicus. — Gk. Στωϊκός, a Stoic; lit. belonging to a colonnade, because Zeno taught under a colonnade at Athens, named the Pœciliē (ποικίλη). — Gk. στοιά (Ionic στοιά, Attic στωά), a colonnade, place enclosed by pillars. The Ionic στοιά is for *στοφ-γά; allied to στυ-λος, a pillar. See Style (2). Der. stoic-al, stoic-al-ly, stoic-ism.

STOKER, one who tends a fire. (Du.) We have now coined the verb to stoke, but only the sb. appears in Phillips, Bailey, &c. 'Stoaker, one that looks after a fire and some other concerns in a brew-house;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The word is Dutch, and came in as a term in brewing. — Du. stoker, 'a kindler, or a setter on fire'; Hexham. — Du. stoken, 'to make or kindle a fire, to instigate, or to stirre up'; id. [This is the same word as OF. estiquer, ME. stoken, to stab; see Chaucer, C. T., Group A, 2546 (Six-text), altered in Tyrwhitt to stike, l. 2548.] Allied to MDu. stock, a stick, stock, also a stock-rapier (stabbing rapier); no doubt from the use by the stoker of a stock (thick stick) to stir the fire with and arrange the logs. The MDu. stock (Du. stok) is cognate with E. Stock, q.v. Der. stoke, in the mod. sense (as distinct from ME. stoken, to stab, which is from OF. estiquer).

STOLE, a long robe, a long scarf for a priest. (L. — Gk.) In very early use. AS. stole; 'Stola, stole,' Voc. 327. 23. — L. stola. — Gk. στολή, equipment, a robe, a stole. — Gk. στολ-, 2nd grade of στέλλειν, to equip, lit. to set in order.

STOLID, dull, heavy, stupid. (L.) A late word. 'Stolid, foolish;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. — L. stolidus, firm, stock-like; hence, dull, stupid. Prob. allied to L. stultus, foolish; see Stultify. And see Stout. Der. stolid-i-ty, coined from L. stoliditās.

STOMACH, a more or less sac-like portion of the body, wherein food is digested. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. stomak, Prompt. Parv. [Now accommodated to the Gk. spelling.] — F. estomac, spelt estomach in Cotgrave. — L. stomachum, acc. of stomachus. — Gk. στόμαχος, a mouth, opening, the gullet, the stomach; dimin. of στόμα, the mouth. Brugmann, i. § 421 (5). Der. stomach, verb, to resent, Antony, iii. 4. 12, from the use of stomach in the sense of anger, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 141; stomach-er, an ornament for the breast, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 226; Paston Letters, iii. 325; stomach-ic.

STONE, a hard mass of mineral matter, piece of rock, a gem. (E.) ME. ston, stoon, Chaucer, C. T. 7997 (E 121). AS. stān (common); the change from ā to long o is usual, as in bān, a bone, bār, a boar. + Du. steen; Icel. steinn; Dan. and Swed. sten; G. stein; Goth. stains. β. All from Teut. type **stainoz*, m. Cf. Russ. stiena, a wall; Gk. στία, a stone, pebble. Curtius, i. 264. Der. stone, verb; stone-blind, as blind as a stone; stone-bow, used for shooting stones, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 51; stone-chat, a chattering bird; stone-crop, Baret (1580), ME. ston-croppe, Voc. 712. 35; stone-cutter, K. Lear, ii. 2. 63; stone-fruit; stone-still, K. John, iv. 1. 77; stone-ware; stone's cast or stone's throw, the distance to which a stone can be cast or thrown; ston-y, AS. stānig; ston-y-heart-ed, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 2. 28. Also stan-iel, q.v.

STOOK, a number of corn-sheaves; usually twelve. (Scand.) Also stouk, in Prov. E.; see E. D. D. Spelt stowke in Cathol. Anglicum (1483); q.v. — Swed. dial. stuke, a shock of sheaves; Dan. dial. stake (Kok). + Low G. stuke, a heap, a shock. Allied to E. Stake, Stoke, q.v. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 284.

STOOL, a seat without a back. (E.) ME. stool, Prompt. Parv.;

dat. stole, P. Plowman, B. v. 394. AS. stōl, a seat, a throne; Grein, ii. 485. +Du. stoel, a chair, seat, stool; Icel. stōll; Dan. and Swed. stol, a chair; Goth. stōls, a seat; G. stuhl, OHG. stuol, stual. Teut. type **stōloz*, m. Teut. ō=Idg. ā. From √STĀ, to stand, stand firm. Brugmann, i. § 191; Streitberg, § 153 (5). Cf. Stow, Stand. Der. stool-ball, a game played with a ball and one or two stools, Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2; see stool-ball in Halliwell.

STOOP (1), to bend the body, lean forward, condescend. (E.) ME. stoupen, Wyclif, John, xx. 5. AS. stūpian, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. vi. c. 24. § 1. +MDu. stuypen, 'to bowe'; Hexham; Icel. stūpa (obsolete); Swed. stupa, to fall, to tilt; cf. stupande, sloping, stupning, a leaning forward. β. From a Teut. base **stūp*, apparently meaning to lean forward; see steep (1) and steep (2), the latter of which is the causal of stoop. And perhaps the step- in step-child is from the same root. Der. steep (1); steep (2).

STOOP (2), a beaker; see Stoup.

STOP, to obstruct, hinder, restrain, intercept, to cease. (L.) ME. stoppen, Ancren Riwe, p. 72, l. 19. AS. stoppian, in the comp. for-stoppian, to stop up; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 42. So also Du. stoppen, to fill, stuff, stop; Swed. stoppa, to fill, stuff, cram, stop up; Dan. stoppe, to fill, stuff, cram, &c.; G. stopfen; OSax. stuppōn, Ps. 57. 5. Not a Teut. word, but the same as Ital. stoppare, to stop up with tow, Late L. stuppāre, to stop up with tow, also used in the general sense of cram, stop. β. All from L. stūpa, stūppa, the coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow; cognate with Gk. στύπη, στύππη, with the same sense. Hence also E. Stuff. Der. stop, sb., K. John, iv. 2. 239; stop-cock; stopp-age (with F. suffix), stopp-er; also stopp-le, ME. stoppel, Prompt. Parv. (with E. suffix, signifying the instrument). Doublets, estop, to impede, bar, a law term, borrowed from AF. estoper (mod. F. étouper), from Late L. stuppāre, as above; also stuff, verb.

STORAX, a resinous gum. (L.—Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 25, heading. —L. storax, styrax. —Gk. στύραξ, a sweet-smelling gum produced by the tree called στύραξ; Herodotus, iii. 107.

STORE, provision, abundance, stock. (F.—L.) ME. stor, stoor, Chaucer, C. T. 600 (A 598); Rob. of Glouc. p. 395, l. 8138; the derived verb storen occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 13412, later text. 'Stoor, or purvyance, Staurum;' Prompt. Parv. —OF. estor, store, provisions (Godefroy). —Late L. staurum, the same as instaurum, store. —L. instaurāre, to construct, build, restore, renew; Late L. instaurāre, to provide necessities. Cf. OF. estorer, 'to build, make, edifie; also to store'; Cot. —L. in, prep. as prefix; and **staurāre*, to set up, place, found also in the comp. restaurāre, to restore. β. This form **staurāre*, orig. 'to erect,' is due to a lost adj. **staurus*, allied to Skt. sthāvara-s, fixed, stable, and Gk. σταυρός, an upright pole or stake, orig. 'upright.' See Steer (2). Brugmann, i. § 198. Der. store, verb, ME. storen, OF. estorer, as above; stor-age, with F. suffix -age<L. -aticum; store-house; also re-store, q. v.; stor-y (2), q. v.

STORK, a wading bird. (E.) ME. stork, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 361. AS. storc, Voc. 13. 7. +Du. stork; Icel. storkr; Dan. and Swed. stork; G. storch, OHG. stōrah, stork. β. Root uncertain; but almost certainly the same word as Gk. τόρυς, a large bird (vulture, swan); Fick, iii. 346; which Fick considers as allied to E. stark, as if the orig. sense were 'the strong one.' Cf. Pers. suturg, large. See Stark. Der. stork's-bill, a kind of geranium, from the shape of the fruit.

STORM, a violent commotion, tempest. (E.) ME. storm, Chaucer, C. T. 1982 (A 1980). AS. storm, Grein, ii. 485. +Icel. stormr; Du., Swed., Dan., storm; G. sturm. Teut. type **stur-moz*, m. Allied to Stir, q. v. We also find Gael. and Irish stoirm, Bret. stourm, a storm (borrowed forms). Der. storm, verb, AS. styrman, with vowel-change; storm-y, storm-i-ness.

STORY (1), a history, narrative. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. storie, Chaucer, C. T. 1203, 15503 (A 1201, G 35); Havelok, 1641; Ancren Riwe, p. 154, l. 24. —AF. storie (Bartsch); OF. estoire, a history, a tale; F. histoire, history. —L. historia. —Gk. ιστορία, history; see History. Der. stori-ed, i. e. painted with stories, representing tales, Milton, II Pens. 159; cf. MF. historié, 'beautified with story-work,' Cot. Doublet, history.

STORY (2), the height of one floor in a building, a set of rooms at one level. (F.—L.) Bacon, in his Essay 45 (On Building), speaks of 'the first story,' 'the under story,' 'the second story,' &c. 'A floure [floor] or storie;' R. Eden, First Three Books on America (1526); ed. Arber, p. 257. In Rob. of Gloucester, p. 181, l. 3756 (footnote), the word stories seems to mean 'buildings;' but other MSS. have a verb here. Orig. 'a thing built;' it represents OF. estorée, a thing built. 'Estorée, built, made, erected, edified; also furnished, stored;' Cot. This is the pp. of estorer, to build, to store; see Store. ¶ Wedgwood adds: 'I cannot find that estorée was ever used in the sense of E. story.' This is prob. right; the sense in E. seems to have been at first simply a thing built, a building; the restriction of the word to one floor only is peculiar to English. Just in the same way, a floor is properly only a boarded (or other) covering of the ground, but was used, by an easy extension of meaning, as synonymous with story. Cf. Picard chambre étorée, a furnished room (Corblet). There can be little doubt as to the derivation. Der. clear-story or clere-story, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 479, a story lighted with windows, as distinct from the blind-story, as the triforium was sometimes called (Lee, Gloss. of Liturgical Terms (Oxford), Glossary, p. 57).

STOT, (1) a stallion; (2) a bullock. (E.) See Stoat.

STOUP, STOOP, a vessel or flagon. (Scand.) In Hamlet, v. 1. 68. ME. stope. 'Hec cupa, a stope;' Voc. 728. 28. Lowl. Sc. stowp, Dunbar, ed. Small, p. 161. —Icel. staup, a knobby lump, also a stoup, beaker, cup. +Du. stoop; Low G. stoop; AS. stēap, a beaker, cup; MHG. stouf, G. stauf, a cup. [Or else, from the MDu. stoop.] The Teut. base is **staup-*; cf. Icel. steypa, to cast metals, pour out, &c. See Steep (1) and Stoop. ¶ The Latinised form stopa occurs in 1390, in the Earl of Derby's Accounts (Camden Soc.), p. 9, l. 23. This looks more like the Du. form. For the form stoup, cf. E. loose<Icel. laus.

STOUT, bold, strong, robust. (F.—OLow G.) ME. stout, Chaucer, C. T. 547 (A 545). —OF. estout, stout, furious, also rash, stupid (Burguy). —MDu. stolt, stout, 'stout, bolde, rash;' Hexham. Low G. stolt, the same; cognate with G. stolz, proud. β. Perhaps a Teut. word; or else early borrowed from L. stultus, foolish. It answers better, in sense, to L. stolidus, firm. Der. stout, sb., a strong kind of beer; stout-ly, -ness.

STOVE, a hot-house, an apparatus for warming a room. (E.) 'This word has much narrowed its meaning; [a] bath, hot-house . . was a stove once;' Trench, Select Glossary. 'A stoue, or hot-house;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. AS. stofa; 'Balneum, stofa;' Voc. 8. 33. +MDu. stove, 'a stewe, a hot-house, or a baine;' Hexham; Low G. stove, stave, the same; Icel. stofa, stufa, a bathing-room with a stove, a room; G. stube, a room; OHG. stupa, a heated room. β. Root unknown; supposed to be a Teut. word, but even this is doubtful. Cf. Ital. stufa, Span. estufa, F. étuve. See Stew. ¶ Perhaps lost in ME., and re-introduced from Dutch.

STOVER, fodder for cattle. (F.—L.?) In Shak. Temp. iv. 63. ME. stouer (with v=u), Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2606. —OF. estover, estovoir, necessities, provisions; orig. the infin. mood of a verb which was used impersonally with the sense 'it is necessary;' Burguy, Diez. On the difficult etymology see Diez, who refers it to L. studere, to study, endeavour, desire; see Student. Or perhaps from L. est opus, there is need (Tobler).

STOW, to arrange, pack away. (E.) ME. stowen, Allit. Poems, B 113. Lit. 'to put in a place;' cf. ME. stowe, a place, Layamon, 1174. AS. stōwigan, Voc. 43. 12. From AS. stōw, a place, Mark, i. 45; OFries. sto, a place. We also find Icel. stō, in the comp. eldstō, a fire-place, hearth. Cognate with Lithuan. stowa, the place in which one stands; from stōti, to stand. β. All from the √STĀ, to stand; see Stand. Der. stow-age, with F. suffix, Cymb. i. 6. 192; whence Low L. stowagium, Earl of Derby's Accounts (1394); Camden Soc. p. 155, l. 32. Also be-stow, q. v.

STRADDLE, to stand or walk with the legs wide apart. (E.) In Baret, ed. 1580. Spelt striddil and stridle in Levins, ed. 1570. The frequentative of stride, used in place of striddle. See Stride. Cf. prov. E. striddle, to straddle; Halliwell.

STRAGGLE, to stray, ramble away. (Scand.) Formerly stragle, with one g, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. x. l. 158; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Baret (1580). Palsgrave has stragler, sb. Cf. Norw. stragla, to walk unsteadily and with difficulty; frequent. of MDan. strage, to rove, wander. Allied to strackle; cf. prov. E. strackling, a loose wild fellow (North); strackle-brained, dissolute, thoughtless; Halliwell. Apparently the frequentative of ME. straken, to go, proceed, roam; 'Pey ouer lond strakeþ' = they roam over the land; P. Plowman's Creed, l. 82; and cf. Cursor Mundi, l. 1845, Trin. MS. 'To strake about, circuire;' MS. Devonsh. Gloss., cited in Halliwell. Cf. also prov. E. strag, a vagabond; Icel. sträkr, a vagabond. ¶ Not allied to stray. Der. straggl-er.

STRAIGHT, direct, upright. (E.) Spelt strayght in Palsgrave. It is identical with ME. streijt, the pp. of strecchen, to stretch. 'Sithe thi flesche, lord, was furst perceuyed And, for oure sake, laide streijt in stalle;' Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 252, l. 46. AS. streht, pp. of streccan, to stretch; see Stretch. 2. The adverbial use is early; 'William streijt went hem to;' Will. of Palerne, l. 3328; spelt straght, Gower, C. A. iii. 36; bk. vi. 1030. Der. straight-ly, straight-ness; straight-forward, -ly; straight-way = in a straight way, directly, spelt straightway, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 63; straight-en, verb, a late coinage. ¶ Distinct from strait.

STRAIN (1), to stretch tight, draw with force, overtask, constrain, filter. (F.—L.) ME. streinen, Chaucer, C. T. 9627 (E 1753).—OF. estraign-, estraign-, a stem of estraindre, estreindre, MF. estraindre, 'to straine, wring hard;' Cot.—L. stringere, to draw tight; pt. t. strinxi, pp. strictus. See Stringent. Der. strain, sb., strain-er; con-strain, di-strain, re-strain; and see strait, stringent, strict.

STRAIN (2), a race, stock, breed. (E.) 'The noblest of thy strain;' Shak. J. Cæsar, v. 1. 59. ME. streen; Chaucer, C. T., E 157. AS. strēon, gain, product, whence, in ME., lineage, progeny, as in Layamon, 2737; whence strienan, strynan, to beget. Cf. OHG. striunan, to acquire.

STRAIT, strict, narrow, rigid. (F.—L.) ME. streit, Chaucer, C. T. 174; Layamon, 22270.—AF. estreit, Bozon, p. 124; OF. estroit, 'strait, narrow, close, strict;' Cot. Mod. F. étroit.—L. strictum, acc. of strictus, strict, strait. See Strict. Der. strait, sb., used to translate MF. estroit, sb., in Cotgrave; strait-ly, -ness; strait-laced; strait-en, a coined word, Luke, xii. 50. Doublet, strict.

STRAND (1), the beach of the sea or of a lake. (E.) ME. strand, often strond, Chaucer, C. T. 5245 (B 825). AS. strand, Matt. xiii. 48. +Du. strand; Icel. strönd (gen. strandar), margin, edge; Dan., Swed., and G. strand. Root unknown. Der. strand, verb; cf. Du. stranden, 'to arrive on the sea-shore,' Hexham.

STRAND (2), one of the smaller strings that compose a rope. (F.—OHG.) 'Strand, in sea-language, the twist of a rope;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The d is excrement, as commonly in E. after n final. Spelt strain, Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 108.—ONorman F. estran, a strand; Wace, Rom. de Brut, 11486; see Moisy.—OHG. streno (G. strähne), a cord. Cf. MDu. strene, a string (Kilian); Du. streen, 'a skain,' Sewel. Parallel to Du. striem, OHG. strimo, a stripe.

STRANGE, foreign, odd. (F.—L.) ME. strange, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 379; Chaucer, C. T. l. 13.—OF. estrange, 'strange;' Cot. [Mod. F. étrange; Span. extraño, Ital. estranio, estraneo.]—L. extrāneum, acc. of extrāneus, foreign; lit. 'that which is without.'—L. extrā, without, outside; see Extra. Der. strange-ly, -ness; strang-er, from OF. estrangier, 'a stranger,' Cot. Also estrange, q.v. Doublet, extraneous.

STRANGLE, to choke. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. stranglen, Have-lok, 640.—OF. estrangler, 'to strangle, choake;' Cot.—L. strangulāre, to throttle, choke.—Gk. σπαραγγάζειν, to strangle; also σπαραγγάζειν—Gk. σπαραγγάλειν, a halter.—Gk. σπαραγγός, twisted. Allied to Strict; and see below. Der. strangl-er; strangulat-ion, from F. strangulation, 'a strangling,' Cot., from L. acc. strangulātiōnem.

STRANGURY, extreme difficulty in discharging urine. (L.—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, The Fox, A. ii. sc. 1.—L. strangūria.—Gk. σπαραγουρία, retention of the urine, when it falls by drops.—Gk. σπαραγγ-, base of σπαραγγ-, that which oozes out, a drop; and οὐρ-ov, urine. The Gk. σπαραγγ- is allied to σπαραγγός, twisted, compressed. See Strangle and Urine.

STRAP, a narrow strip of leather. (L.) Frequently called a strop in prov. E., and this is the better form. ME. strobe, a noose, loop; 'a rydyng-knotte or a strobe,' Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 33. 'A thonge, . . . a strobe, or a loupe,' Elyot, 1559; cited in Halliwell. AS. stropp. 'Strūppus, strop, vel ārwīðe;' Voc. 181. 42.—L. strūppus, a strap, thong, fillet. From the same L. word are borrowed Du. strop, a halter, F. étrope, &c. Doublet, strop.

STRAPPADO, a species of torture. (Ital.—Teut.) In 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 262. The word has been turned into a Spanish-looking form, but it is rather Italian. In exactly the same way, the Ital. stoccata also appears as stoccado; see Stoccado.—Ital. strappata, a pulling, wringing; the strappado.—Ital. strappare, to pull, wring.—High-German (Swiss) straffen, to pull tight, allied to G. straff, tight (Diez). From Low G. or Du.; cf. Du. straffen, to punish, from straf, severe. Cf. EFries. strabben, to be stiff; strabbig, strappig, severe.

STRATAGEM, an artifice, esp. in war. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt stratageme, Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetry, ed. Arber, p. 37.—MF. stratageme, 'a stratagem;' Cot.—L. stratēgēma.—Gk. στρατήγημα, the device or act of a general.—Gk. στρατηγός, a general, leader of an army.—Gk. στρατ-ός, an army; and ἀγ-ειν, to lead. β. The Gk. στρατός means properly an encamped army, from its being spread out over ground, and is allied to Gk. στόρνυμι, I spread out, and L. sternere; see Stratum. The Gk. ἀγειν is cognate with L. agere; see Agent. Der. strateg-y, from Gk. στρατηγία, generalship, from στρατηγ-ός, a general; strateg-ic, Gk. στρατηγικός; strateg-ic-al, -ly; strateg-ist.

STRATH, a flat valley. (C.) In Leslie, Hist. Scotland (1595); p. 12. Common in Scot. place-names, as Strath-spey, valley of the Spey.—Gael. srath, a flat valley, low-lying country beside a river; Irish srath, sratha, fields beside a river, bottom of a valley; W. ystrad. Allied to Stratum.

STRATUM, a layer, esp. of earth or rock. (L.) In Thomson, Autumn, 745.—L. strātum, that which is laid flat or spread out, neut. of strātus, pp. of sternere. Allied to Gk. στόρνυμι, I spread out; Skt. stṛ, to spread.—✓STER, to scatter, spread out. Der. strati-fic-at-ion, strat-i-fy, coined words. And see street, con-ster-nation, pro-strate, strat-agem; also strew, straw.

STRAW, a stalk of corn when thrashed. (E.) ME. straw, Chaucer, C. T. 11007 (F 695); also stre, stree, id. 2920 (A 2918). AS. streaw, streow; see Toller; it also occurs in streawberige, a strawberry, Voc. 298. 11, and in the derivative streaw-ian, streow-ian, to strew, as below. +Du. stroo; Icel. strā; Dan. straa; Swed. strā; G. stroh, OHG. strou, strau. Allied to Goth. straujan, to strew. From Teut. base **strāu-* (cf. Lat. pt. t. strāui), extended from ✓STER, to spread out, scatter. Der. straw-y; strew, verb, q.v.; straw-berrie, AS. streawberige, as above, from its propagation (or strewing) by runners. See Stratum.

STRAY, to wander, rove, err. (F.—L.) ME. straien: the derivative a-straided, pp., is in Gower, C. A. ii. 132; bk. v. 145; and see the Prompt. Parv.—OF. estraier, to stray. See Diez, who compares Prov. estradiere, one who roves about the streets or ways, one who strays, from Prov. estrada, a street; also OF. estree, a street. This is confirmed by Mital. stradiotto, 'a wanderer, gadder, trauller, earth-planet, a highwaile-keeper,' Florio; from Ital. strada, a street. β. Thus the lit. sense is 'to rove the streets.' All from L. strāta, a street; see Street. Cf. mod. F. batteur d'estrade, a loiterer (Hamilton). Der. stray, sb., oddly spelt streyue, strayue, in P. Plowm. B. prol. 94, C. i. 92, old form also estray (Blount, Nomenclon), AF. estray (Britton), from OF. estraier, to stray, as above.

STREAK, a line or long mark on a differently coloured ground. (Scand.) ME. streke, Prompt. Parv.; prob. of Scand. or Low G. origin.—Swed. streck, MSwed. strek, a stroke, streak, line; Norw. strek, streek (cf. EFries. streke, Du. streek); Dan. streg. From Teut. **striek*, weak grade of **streikan-*, to strike; see Strike. β. We also find the (native) ME. strike, a stroke, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 7; AS. strica (cognate with G. strich, Goth. striks, a stroke with the pen); from **striek-*, weak grade of Teut. **streikan-*; see Strike. Further allied to L. striga, a line, furrow, and to L. stringere; see Stringent. ¶ It may be noted that ME. striken sometimes means to go or come forward, to proceed, advance; see Gloss. to Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, and P. Plowman, B. prol. 183. A streak is properly a stroke made by sweeping anything along. Der. streak, verb, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 257; streak-y.

STREAM, a current or flow. (E.) ME. streem, Chaucer, C. T. 466, 3893 (A 464, 3895). AS. strēam, Grein, ii. 488. +Du. stroom; Icel. straumr; Swed. and Dan. ström; G. strom; OHG. strauum, stroum. β. All from the Teut. type **strau-moz*, m. The word means 'that which flows,' from the Teut. base STREU, to flow. The Idg. root is ✓SREU, to flow; cf. Skt. sru, to flow, Gk. πέειν (for σπέειν), to flow, Irish sruaim, a stream. The t seems to have been inserted, for greater ease of pronunciation, not only in Teutonic, but in Slavonic; cf. Russ. struia, a stream. See Rheum. Brugmann, i. §§ 462, 816. From the same root we have rheum, rhythm, ruminate, catarrh. Der. stream, verb, ME. stremen, streamen, Ancren Riwele, p. 188, note e; stream-er, Hen. V, iii. chor. 6; stream-l-et, a double diminutive; stream-y.

STREET, a paved way, a road in a town. (L.) ME. strete, Wyclif, Matt. xii. 19. AS. stræt, Grein, ii. 487.—L. strāta, for strāta uia, a paved way; strāta is fem. of strātus, pp. of sternere, to strew, scatter, pave.—✓STER, to spread out; see Stratum. ¶ The G. strass is likewise borrowed from Latin; so also Ital. strada, &c. Der. stray, q.v.

STRENGTH, might. (E.) ME. strengthe, Chaucer, C. T. 84. AS. strengðu, Grein, ii. 487; for **strang-i-ðu*.—AS. strang, strong; see Strong. Der. strength-en.

STRENUOUS, vigorous, active, zealous. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Englished from L. strenuus, vigorous, active. Allied to Gk. στηνής, strong, στηρίζειν, to make firm, στερεός, firm; see Stereoscope. Der. strenuous-ly, -ness.

STRESS, strain, force, pressure. (F.—L.) 1. Used in the sense of distress, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 321, last line. 'Stresse, or wed take [pledge taken] by strengthe and vyolence, Vadimonium;' Prompt. Parv. Here stresse is obviously short for ME. destresse, in the sense 'distress for rent;' and stress may sometimes be taken as a short form of distress; see Distress. 2. 'Stresse, or streytynge, Constrictio;' Prompt. Parv. 'I stresse, I strayght one of his liberty or thrust his body to-guyther, Je estroyssse;' Palsgrave. This is from OF. estrecier (later estrecir, estroussir), 'to straiten, pinch, contract, bring into a narrow compass,' Cot. This answers to a Folk-L. type **strictiāre*, not found, a derivative of strictus, drawn together; see Strict. We may regard stress as due, in general, to this verb, or else to **di-strictiure*; it comes to much the same thing. ¶ The loss of the initial di- occurs also in sport, splay, spend, &c.; and is therefore merely what we should expect.

STRETCH, to draw out, extend. (E.) ME. strecchen, Chaucer, C. T. 15937 (G 469); pt. t. straughte, id. 2918 (A 2916); pp. straught or streight, whence mod. E. straight. AS. streccan, John, xxi. 18; pt. t. strehte, Matt. xxi. 8; pp. streht. Formed as a causal verb from AS. strac, strec, strong, violent, of which the pl. strece occurs in Matt. xi. 12, and the form stræc, severe, in Gregory's Past. Care, c. xvii (heading), ed. Sweet, p. 107. The sense of stretch is, accordingly, to make stiff or hard, as in tightening a cord. +Du. strekken; Dan. strække, to stretch; stræk, a stretch; Swed. sträcka; G. strecken, from strack, adj., tight, straight; cf. stracks, straightway, immediately. Cf. also L. stringere, to draw tight, which is related; Gk. σπαγγός, twisted tight. Other nearly related words are string and strong; also strain, strait, stringent, strangle, strict. Der. stretch, sb., stretch-er, straight.

STREW, STRAW, to spread, scatter loosely. (E.) Spelt straw, Matt. xxi. 8. ME. strawen, strewen, Chaucer, C. T. 10927 (F 613). AS. streawian, streowan, Matt. xxi. 8; Mark, xi. 8; streaw, straw; see Straw. +Du. strooien, to scatter; allied to stroo, straw. Cf. Icel. strā, Swed. strö, Dan. strøe, G. streuen, to strew; also Goth. straujan, to strew (pt. t. strawida). The last of these is from a Teut. base **strāu*, extended from ✓STER, to strew, spread; as in L. ster-nere (pt. t. strāui); Gk. σρόπ-ν-νμ, I spread; Skt. str, to spread. See Stratum. Brugmann, i. § 570. Der. be-strew.

STRIATED, streaked, marked with streaks. (L.) Scientific and modern. — L. striātus, pp. of striāre, to furrow or channel. — L. stria, a furrow, channel, groove. +G. strieme, a stripe.

STRICKEN, advanced (in years); see Strike.

STRICT, strait, exact, severe, accurate. (L.) In Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 19. — L. strictus, pp. of stringere, to tighten, draw together; see Stringent. Der. strict-ly, -ness; strict-ure, from L. strictūra, verbal sb. allied to strict-us, pp. of stringere. Der. stress. Doublet, strait, adj.

STRIDE, to walk with long steps. (E.) ME. striden, Cursor Mundi, 10235; Layamon, 17982; pt. t. strade, Ywaine and Gawin, 3193, in Ritson's Met. Rom. vol. i; cf. bestrode, bestrood, in Chaucer, C. T. 13831 (B 2093). AS. stridan, to stride; rare, but in Epinal Glos. 1086; the pt. t. be-strād is in Ælfric's Hom. ii. 136. Pt. t. strād, pp. striden, as shown by mod. E. strode, and the derivative striddle, cited under Straddle. β. That the word should have meant both to stride and to stride is curious; but is certified by the cognate Low G. striden (pt. t. streed, pp. streden), meaning (1) to strive, (2) to stride; with the still more remarkable derivative be-striden, also meaning (1) to combat, (2) to bestride, as in dat Peerd bestriden, to bestride the horse; Bremen Wörterbuch, pp. 1063, 1064. [Precisely the same double meaning reappears in Low G. streuen, (1) to strive, (2) to stride, and the sb. streue, (1) a striving, (2) a stride. Hexham notes MDu. streuen, 'to force or to strive, to walke together,' which points to the meaning of stride as originating from the contention of two men who, in walking side by side, strive to outpace one another, and so take long steps.] γ. Other cognate words are Du. strijden (pt. t. streed, pp. gestreden), G. streiten (pt. t. striit, pp. gestritten), Dan. stride (pt. t. stred), only in the sense to strive, to contend; cf. also the weak verbs, Icel. striða, Swed. strida, to strive. Teut. type **streidan-*, pt. t. **straid*, pp. **stridanoz*. Cf. Skt. sridh, to assail. Der. stradd-le, q. v.; stride, sb.; a-stride, adv., King Alisaunder, 4445; be-stride.

STRIDENT, grating, harsh. (L.) Dryden has: 'And stridor of her wings;' tr. of Virgil, xii. 1258. Chapman has: 'grasshoppers are stridulous;' tr. of Homer's Iliad, iii. commentary, note 2. Strident seems to be modern. — L. strident-, stem of pres. pt. of stridere, also stridere, to creak, rattle, grate; of imitative origin. Cf. Gk. τρίσειν, to creak. Der. stridor, sb., from L. stridor, a creaking; strid-ulous, adj., from L. strid-ulus, creaking, harsh.

STRIFE, contention, dispute, contest. (F.—Scand.) In early use; Layamon, 24966, later text; Ancrén Riwe, p. 200, last line but one. — OF. estrif, 'strife, debate;' Cot. — Icel. strið, strife, contention; by the change of th to f, as in Shakespeare's fill-horse for thill-horse; striða, to strive; weak verb allied to Du. strijden, to strive, AS. stridan, to stride; see Stride (above). +OSax. and OFries. strid, strife; Du. strijd; Dan. and Swed. strid; G. streit; OHG. strit. Der. strive, q. v.

STRIGIL, a flesh-scraper. (L.) L. strigilis; allied to stringere, to graze; see Strike.

STRIKE, to hit, dash, stamp, coin, give a blow to. (E.) ME. striken, orig. to proceed, advance, esp. with a smooth motion, to flow; hence used of smooth swift motion, to strike with a rod or sword. 'Ase strem þat strikeþ stille' = like a stream that flows gently; Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 48, l. 21. 'Strek into a studie' = fell into a study; Will. of Palerne, 4038. 'A mous . . . Stroke forth sternly' = a mouse advanced boldly; P. Plowman, prol. 183. Strong verb, pt. t. strak, strek, strok, mod. E. struck; pp. striken, later stricken, mod. E. struck. The phr. 'stricken in years' = advanced in years; Luke, i. 7. AS. strican, to go, proceed, advance, pt. t. strac, pp. stricen. 'Rodor striced ymbutan' = the firmament goes round, i. e. revolves; Grein, ii. 489. +Du. strijken, to smooth, rub, stroke, spread, strike; G. streichen, pt. t. strich, pp. gestrichen, to stroke, rub, smooth, spread, strike. β. Teut. type **streikan-*, pt. t. **straik*, pp. **strikanoz*. Cf. Goth. striks, a stroke, dash with a pen, cognate with L. striga, a row, a furrow. [We also find Icel. strjúka, pt. t. strauk, pp. strokinn, to stroke, rub, wipe, to strike, flog; Swed. stryka, to stroke, wipe, strike, rove; Dan. stryge, the same; from a related type **streukan-* (with a different gradation).] γ. The Idg. root is STREIG, related to L. stringere, which is equivalent to AS. strican, when used in the sense to graze, or touch slightly with a swift motion. But L. stringere, to draw tight, seems to be a different word; see Stringent. Der. striker, striking; also stroke, q. v.; streak, q. v. Also strike, sb., the name of a measure, orig. an instrument with a straight edge for levelling (striking off) a measure of grain; ME. strik, Liber Albus, p. 243.

STRING, thin cord. (E.) ME. string, streng, Chaucer, C. T. 7649 (D 2067). AS. streng, John, ii. 15. From its being strongly or tightly twisted; allied to AS. strang, strong, violent. +Du. streng; cf. streng, adj., severe, rigid; Icel. strengur, string; strangur, strong; Dan. stræng, Swed. sträng, G. strang, string. Cf. Gk. σπαγγάλη, a halter; from σπαγγός, hard twisted. See Strong. Der. string, verb, properly a weak verb, being formed from the sb., but the pp. strung also occurs, L. L. iv. 3. 343, formed by analogy with flung from fling, and sung from sing. And Dryden has the pt. t. strung, Epist. to J. Dryden, l. 89. Also string-ed; string-y; bow-string; heart-string.

STRINGENT, urgent, strict. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. — L. stringent-, stem of pres. part. of stringere, to draw tight, compress, urge, &c.; pp. strictus. From the Idg. root STREIG, to draw or twist tight. See Strong. Der. stringent-ly, stringenc-y; and see strict, strait, a-stringent, a-striction, strain, con-strain, di-strain, re-strain, stress, di-stress.

STRIP, to tear off, skin, render bare, deprive, plunder. (E.) ME. stripen, strepēn, Chaucer, C. T. 1008, 8739 (A 1006, E 863); pt. t. strepte, spelt strupte, Juliana, p. 63, l. 16; pp. strept, spelt i-struped, Ancrén Riwe, p. 148, note g. AS. striēpan, strīpan, in comp. bestripan, to plunder, A. S. Chron. an. 1065. +Du. stroopen, to plunder, strip; EFries. stropen; MDu. stroopen, 'to flea [flay], to skin, or to pill,' Hexham; OHG. stroufen. Teut. type **straupjan-*; from **straup*, 2nd grade of the strong verb **streupan-*; for which cf. Norw. strūpa, to grip, to throttle (pt. t. straup). Der. The sb. strip, a piece, is often understood as being 'a piece stripped off;' but it seems to belong rather to stripe (below).

STRIPE, a streak, a blow with a whip. (Du.) Not a very old word, and apparently borrowed from Dutch; prob. because connected with the trade of weaving. ME. stripe, Prompt. Parv. — MDu. strijpe, as in strijp-kleedt, 'a parti-coloured sute,' Hexham; cf. Du. streep, a stripe, streak. +Norw. stripa, Dan. stribe, a stripe, streak; Low G. stripe, a stripe, strip; stripen, to stripe; striped Tüg, striped cloth; G. streifen, MHG. streif, a stripe, streak, strip. Cf. also OIrish sriab, a stripe. ¶ Similarly E. streak is connected with E. strike; from the mark of a blow. Der. stripe, verb. Also strip, which is rather a variant of stripe than allied to strip, vb. Cf. Low G. stripe, (1) a stripe, (2) a strip of cloth; Prov. E. stripe, a strip; stripe, a stream; of which strippet (noted under Stripling) is a diminutive.

STRIPLING, a youth, lad. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 144. 'He is but an yongling, A stalworthy strypling;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 345. Also ME. striplynge, Mandeville, Trav. ch. 27, p. 278. A double dimin. from stripe; the sense is 'one as thin as a stripe,' a growing lad not yet filled out. Cf. 'you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case;' 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 273. Similarly a strippet is a very narrow stream; 'a little brooke or strippet;' Holinshed's Descr. of Scotland, c. 10. § 2. See Stripe.

STRIVE, to struggle, contend. (F.—Scand.) ME. striuen, a weak verb, pt. t. striued, Will. of Palerne, 4099. Made into a strong verb, with pt. t. strof, Chaucer, C. T. 1040 (A 1038); mod. E. strove, pp. striven; by analogy with drive (drove, driven). — OF. estriver, 'to strive,' Cot. — OF. estrif, strife. See Strife.

STROKE (1), a blow. (E.) ME. strok, strook, Chaucer, C. T. 1709. From AS. strac, 2nd grade of strican, to strike; with the usual change of a to long o. See Strike. So also G. streich, a stroke, from G. streichen, to stroke, to whip.

STROKE (2), to rub gently. (E.) ME. stroken, Chaucer, C. T. 10479 (F 165). AS. strācian, to stroke; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10. A causal verb; from strāc, 2nd grade of AS. strican, to go, pass swiftly over, mod. E. strike. See Strike. So also G. streichen, to stroke, from streichen, to rub, strike.

STROLL, to rove, wander. (F.—Teut.) A late word. 'When stroulers durst presume to pick your purse;' Dryden, 5th prol. to Univ. of Oxford, l. 33. 'Knowing that rest, quiet, and sleep, with lesser meat, will sooner feed any creature than your meat with liberty to run and stroyle about;' Blith's Husbandry, 1652; cited by Wedgwood. Formed by prefixing s- (for OF. es-, L. ex) to troll, in the sense to range, rove. Cotgrave has MF. troller (F. trôler), 'to trowle, raunge, or hunt out of order,' of hounds; cf. Norm. dial. treuler, to wander; dial. of Verdun trôler, trauler, to rove; Guernsey étréulaï (= estrelé), adj., idle, vagabond (Métivier); Picard troleuse, a wandering woman (Corblet); see Troll. Schmeller gives the forms strālen, strolen, to stroll, as Bavarian; and Wedgwood quotes Swiss strielen, strolen, strolchen, to rove about. Ross has Norw. strolla, to go about wilfully and idly. Der. stroll, sb.; stroll-er.

STRONG, forcible, vigorous, energetic. (E.) ME. strong, Chaucer, C. T. 2137 (A 2135), &c. 'Strong and stark;' Havelok, 608. AS. strang, strong; Grein, ii. 485. + Du. streng; Icel. strangr; Dan. streng; Swed. strång; OHG. strang, strangi, G. streng, strict. β. All from Teut. types **strangoz*, **strangjoz*, adj., strong. Cf. Gk. σπαγγός, tightly twisted, whence σπαγγάλη, a halter (E. string), and L. stringere, in the sense 'to draw tight;' hence the identity in meaning between L. strictus and G. streng. Der. strong-ly, strong-hold; string, q.v.; streng-th, q.v.; strength-en. Related words are stringent, strain, strict, strait, stretch, straight, strangle, &c.

STROP, a piece of leather, &c. for sharpening razors. (L.) Merely the old form of strap; from L. strappus; see Strap.

STROPHE, part of a song, poem, or dance. (Gk.) Formerly used also as a rhetorical term; 'Strophes, wilely deceits, subtilties in arguing, conversions, or turnings;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Gk. στροφή, a turning, twist, trick; esp. the turning of the chorus, dancing to one side of the orchestra; hence, the strain sung during this evolution; the strophé, to which the antistrophe answers.—Gk. στροφ-, 2nd grade of στρέφειν, to turn. Der. anti-strophe, apo-strophe, cata-strophe, epi-strophe.

STROW, the same as Strew, vb., q.v.

STRUCTURE, a building, construction, arrangement. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. structure, 'a structure;' Cot.—L. structūra, a building; allied to structus, pp. of struere, to build, orig. to heap together, arrange. From the base STREU, allied to Goth. straujan, G. streuen, to strew, lay; allied to ✓STER, to spread out. Der. (from struere) con-strue, con-struct, de-stroy, de-struction, in-struct, in-stru-ment, mis-con-strue, ob-struct, super-structure.

STRUGGLE, to make great bodily efforts. (Scand.) ME. strogelen, Chaucer, C. T. 10248 (E 2374). Palsgrave not only gives: 'I strogell with my bodye,' but also: 'I strogell, I murmur with wordes secretly, je grommelle.' The latter, however, is merely a metaphorical sense, i.e. to oppose with words instead of deeds. ME. strogelen is a frequentative verb formed from the Scand. base strug-, appearing in Swed. dial. strug, contention, strife, dispute; Rietz notes that draga i strug, to draw with difficulty, is used of horses. Related words are Swed. dial. struug, revengeful, Norw. stru, refractory, Dan. dial. struende, reluctantly. β. The Idg. form of the root is STREUGH; or with loss of s, TREUGH; the latter appears in Icel. þruga, Swed. truga, to force, compel, AS. þryccan, to force, G. drucken, to print; and in EFries. trüggeln, to struggle against, as a restive horse; cf. MDu. truggelen, Du. troggelen, to beg persistently. Der. struggle, sb.

STRUM, to thrum on a piano. (Scand.) 'The strum-strum [a musical instrument] is made like a cittern;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1684; see A New Voyage (1699), i. 127. The word is imitative, and made by prefixing s- (F. es-, from L. ex), intensive prefix, to the imitative word trum, variant of thrum, as in Low G. trummen, Du. trommen, to drum. Cf. Norw. strumla, to rumble, rattle. See Thrum and Drum. So also s-plash for plash.

STRUMPET, a prostitute. (F.—L.; or F.—Teut.) ME. stromptet, P. Plowman, C. xv. 42; also spelt strumpet, Polit. Songs, p. 153 (temp. Edw. II). 1. If the m in this word be an E. addition, it is a strengthened form of **strup-et*, in which the -et is a F. dimin. suffix; and the derivation is from OF. strupe, noted by Roquefort as a variant of OF. stupre, concubinage.—L. stuprum, dishonour, violation. β. The curious position of the r causes no difficulty, as there must have been a Late L. form **strupäre*, used convertibly with L. stupräre. This is clear from Ital. strupare, variant of stuprare, Span. estrupear, variant of estuprar, to ravish, and from the OF. strupe quoted above. Perhaps the E. word was formed directly from an OF. **strupée*, from Late L. **strupāta* = stuprāta, fem. of the pp. of stupräre. The verb stupräre is from the sb. stuprum. γ. We find also Irish and Gael. striopach, a strumpet; this is to be referred to the same Late L. **strupäre*. The history is unknown. 2. The form of the word answers better to MDu. strompe, Low G. strump, a stocking (but there is no connexion); or to Norw. strumpen, adj., stumbling (Ross), Low G. strumpen, strumpeln, to stumble; strumpelig, staggering, tottery in gait; MDu. strompelen, 'to stagger, to trip, or to reele,' Hexham. We might perhaps then explain strumpet as 'one who trips,' or makes a false step. The above words are allied to G. strampeln, to kick. It is remarkable that the prov. E. (Hants.) strumpet means a fat, hearty child, esp. a baby; where the sense 'little kicker' is appropriate. A Germanic origin seems probable.

STRUT (1), to walk about pompously. (Scand.) ME. strouten, to spread out, swell out. 'His here [hair] strouted as a fanne large and brode;' Chaucer, C. T. 3315. 'Strowtyn, or bocyn owt [to boss out, swell out], Turgere;' Prompt. Parv. In Havelok, 1779, to stroute is to make a disturbance or to brag.—Dan. strutte, strude, to strut, Swed. dial. strutta, to walk with a jolting step (Rietz). The Norweg. strut means a spout that sticks out, a nozzle; the Icel. strútr is a sort of hood sticking out like a horn; the Swed. strut is a cone-shaped piece of paper, such as grocers put sugar in. The orig. notion of strut seems to be 'to stick out stiffly;' cf. prov. E. strut, rigid. Note further Low G. strutt, rigid, stiff, G. strauss, a tuft, bunch, strotzen, to be puffed up, to strut. The prov. E. strunt, to strut (Halliwell), is a nasalised form of strut. Der. strut, sb.

STRUT (2), a support for a rafter, &c. (Scand.) 'Strut, with carpenters, the brace which is framed into the ring-piece and principal rafters;' Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. The orig. sense is a stiff piece of wood; cf. Low G. strutt, rigid; prov. E. strut, rigid. It is, accordingly, closely allied to Strut (1).

STRYCHNINE, a violent poison. (Gk.) Modern. Formed with suffix -ine (F. -ine, L. -ina, -inus) from Gk. σπύχνος, nightshade, poison.

STUB, the stump of a tree left after it is cut down. (E.) 'Old stockes and stubs of trees;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 34. ME. stubbe, Chaucer, C. T. 1980 (A 1978). AS. stybb, stubb (Toller); spelt stub in Birch, Cart. Saxon. i. 316, iii. 353; EFries. stubbe. From a base **stuf-*. + Du. stobbe; Icel. stubbi, stubbr; Dan. stub; Swed. stubbe. β. Allied to Icel. stúfr, a stump; and Gk. στυμός, a stub, stump; Skt. stupa-s, m., a heap. Allied to Stump. Der. stub, verb, to root out stubs; stubb-y, stubb-ed, stubb-ed-ness; and see stubb-orn, stump.

STUBBLE, the stalks of cut corn. (F.—L.) ME. stobil, Wyclif, Job, xiii. 25; Chaucer has stubbil-goos, C. T. 4351.—OF. estouble, 'stubble,' Cot.; also estuble (Littré, s. v. éteule).—Late L. stupula, stupa, stubble, a variant of L. stipula, stubble, due to the influence of Low G. stoppel, stubble (Lübben); Du. and EFries. stoppel, cognate with MHG. stüpfel, OHG. stüpfila, stubble.

STUBBORN, obstinate, persistent. (E.) ME. stoburn, also stiborn. 'Styburne, or stoburne, Austerus, ferox,' Prompt. Parv. stiborn, Chaucer, C. T. 6038 (D 456). Cf. styburnesse, sb., Prompt. Parv. As the AS. y is represented in later English both by i and u (as in AS. cyssan = E. kiss, AS. fyrz = E. furze), we at once refer stibborn or stubborn to AS. stybb, a stub, with the sense of stub-like, hence immovable, stiff, steady, &c. β. The suffix -orn is to be regarded as adjectival, and stands for -or, the -n being merely added afterwards, by taking stubb-or-ness as stubborn-ness; -or being the same adj. suffix as in AS. bit-or, E. bitt-er. We should thus have, from AS. styb, an adj. **stybor* = stub-like, stubborn, and the sb. **stybornes*. γ. This is verified by the forms in Palsgrave; he gives the adj. as stoburne, but the sb. as stubbennesse and stubblesse, the latter of which could have arisen from an AS. form **stybol*, with suffix -ol as in wac-ol, vigilant. ¶ The suffix -ern in north-ern admits of a different explanation. Der. stubborn-ly, -ness.

STUCCO, a kind of plaster. (Ital.—OHG.) In Pope, Imit. of Horace, ii. 192.—Ital. stucco, 'glutted, gorged, . . . dride, stiffe, or hardened; also, a kind of stuffe or matter to build statue or image-work with, made of paper, sand, and lyme, with other mixtures; the imagerie-work at Nonesuch in England in the inner court is built of such;' Florio.—OHG. stucchi, a crust; Graff, vi. 631 (Diez), the same as G. stück, AS. stycce, a piece (hence, a patch). Allied to Stock.

STUD (1), a collection of breeding-horses and mares. (E.) ME. stod, Gower, C. A. iii. 204; bk. vii. 3345; cf. stod-mere, a stud-mare, Ancrén Riwe, p. 316, l. 15. AS. stōd, a stud; spelt stood, Voc. 119. 39; stōd, Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 574, l. 20. + Icel. stōð; Dan. stod; G. gestüt; MHG. stuot. Cf. Russ. stado, a herd or drove; Lith. stodas, a drove of horses. β. All from Teut. base **stō-d-*; the orig. sense is 'an establishment,' as we should call it; from √STĀ, to stand. Der. stud-horse; also steed, q. v.

STUD (2), a nail with a large head, large rivet, double-headed button. (E.) A stud is also a stout post; 'the upright in a lath and plaster wall,' Halliwell. Also, a stiff projection, a boss, &c. ME. stode; L. bullā is glossed 'a stode,' also 'nodus in cingulo,' Voc. 623. 3; 'stode, or stake, Palus;' Voc. 600. 4. AS. studu, a post, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, l. iii. c. 10; written stufu in one MS. + Dan. stød, in the sense of stub, stump; Swed. stöd, a prop, post; Icel. stöð, a post; whence stöða, stýðja, to prop; G. stütze, a prop. β. The Teut. base is **stu-*, weak grade of **steu-*, Idg. √STEU; cf. Gk. στῦλος, a pillar, σταυρός, a stake, Skt. sthūnā, a post; Gk. στύειν, to erect. Der. stud, verb; studd-ed, Shak. Venus, 37.

STUDENT, a scholar, learner. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1. 38. — L. student-, stem of pres. part. of studere, to be eager about, to study. β. Some have thought that studere is allied to Gk. σπεύδειν, to hasten, to be eager about; but this is very doubtful, though the senses of L. studium and Gk. σπουδή are curiously similar; see Curtius, ii. 360. See Study.

STUDY, application to a subject, careful attention, with the wish to learn. (F.—L.) ME. studie, Will. of Palerne, 2981, 4038, 4056. — AF. estudie; OF. estudie, later estude, mod. F. étude, study (Littré). — L. studium, eagerness, zeal, application, study. Der. study, verb, ME. studien, Chaucer, C. T. 184; studi-ed; studi-ous, from F. studieux, 'studious,' from L. studiōsus; studi-ous-ly, -ness. Also studio, Ital. studio, study, also a school, from L. studium.

STUFF, materials, household furniture. (F.—L.) 1. See Luke, xvii. 31 (A. V.). 'The sayd treasure and stuffe;' Fabyan's Chron. c. 123, § 2. ME. stuf; 'Stuf, for a chapman;' Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 166. — OF. estoffe, 'stuffe, matter;' Cot. [Mod. F. étouffe; Ital. stoffa; Span. estofa, quilted stuff; Walloon stoff (Rémacle).] Derived from L. stūpa, stūppa, the coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow (used as material for stuffing things or for stopping them up); but, instead of being derived directly, the pronunciation of the L. word was Germanised before it passed into French. See Diez. Hence also G. stoff, stuf; but English retains the L. p in the verb to stop; see Stop. 2. The sense of the L. word is better shown by the verb to stuff, i. e. to cram. Skelton has the pp. stuffed, Bowge of Court, 180; pres. t. stuffeth, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vii. 401. — OF. estoffer, 'to stuffe, to make with stuffe, to furnish or store with all necessities;' Cot. This answers to G. stopfen, to fill, to stuff, to quilt (note the Span. estofa, quilted stuff, above), which is a Germanised pronunciation of Late L. stūpare, stūppāre, to stop up with tow, to cram, to stop; see Stop. 3. We also use E. stuff-y in the sense of 'close, stifling;' this sense is due to OF. estouffer, 'to stifle, smother, choake, stop the breath;' Cot. Mod. F. étouffer. The etymology of this last word is disputed; Diez derives it from OF. es- (< L. ex-) prefix, and Gk. τῦφος, smoke, mist, cloud, which certainly appears in Span. tufo, warm vapour from the earth. Scheler disputes this view, and supposes OF. estouffer to be all one with OF. estoffer; which seems reasonable. In E., we talk of 'stopping the breath' with the notion of suffocating. Littré says that the spelling étouffer is in Diez's favour, because the F. word for stop is étouper, with p, not f; but this is invalidated by his own derivation of F. étouffe from L. stūpa. In E., we seem to regard all the senses of stuff as belonging to but one word; 'I stuffe one up, I stoppe his breathe;' Palsgrave. See Körting, §§ 3538, 9136.

STULTIFY, to cause to seem foolish. (L.) A mod. word; coined (as if with F. suffix -fy, F. -fier) from a L. form **stultificāre*, to make foolish. — L. stulti-, for stultus, foolish; and -ficāre, for facere, to make. β. The L. stultus is closely allied to stolidus, with the like sense of fixed, immovable; hence, stupid, dull, foolish. See Stolid. Der. stultific-at-ion, also a coined word.

STUMBLE, to strike the feet against obstacles, to trip in walking. (Scand.) ME. stumblen, Wright's Voc. i. 143, l. 20; stomblen, Chaucer, C. T. 2615 (A 2613). The b is excrescent, as usual after m, and the better form is stomelen, or stumlen. In the Prompt. Parv. pp. 476, 481, we have stomelyn, stummelyn, with the sbs. stomelare or stumlere, and stomelynge or stumlynge. The form stomeren also occurs, in the same sense, in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 211 (Stratmann). β. The forms stomelen, stomeren (stumlen, stumren), are frequentatives from a base stum-, which is a weak grade allied to the base stam-, as seen in Goth. stamms, stammering, and E. stammer. The word seems to be of Scand. origin. — Dan. dial. stumle, Icel. stumra, to stumble; Norweg. stumra, the same (Aasen); cf. Swed. dial. stambla, stammla, stomla, stammra, to stumble, to falter, go with uncertain steps (Rietz). γ. Thus the word is related to stammer, with reference to hesitation of the step instead of the speech; cf. E. falter, which expresses both. Cf. OSax., Mid. Dan., OHG. stum, mute. See Stammer. ¶ The G. stümmeln, to mutilate, is not the same thing, though it is an allied word; it means to reduce to a stump, from G. stummel, a stump, dimin. of a word not now found in G., but represented by Norweg. stumme, a stump, allied to G. stamm, a stock, trunk; we are thus led back to the base of stem (1). Der. stumble, sb., stumbler, stumbl-ing-block, 1 Cor. i. 23.

STUMP, the stock of a tree, after it is cut down, a stub. (Scand.) ME. stumpe, Prompt. Parv.; stompe, Joseph of Arimathea, 681. Not found in AS. — Icel. stump, Swed. and Dan. stump, a stump, end, bit. + EFries. stump; MDu. stompe, Du. stomp; G. stumpf, a stump, trunk, stem. Allied to G. stumpf, blunt, stumpy; Du. stomp, blunt, dull; Skt. stambha-s, m., a post. Allied to Stamp and Staple and Stub. Der. stump, verb, to put down one's stumps, in cricket.

STUN, to make a loud din, to amaze with a blow. (E.) ME. stonien, Romance of Partenay, 2940; stounien, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 301. AS. stunian, to make a din, resound, Grein, ii. 490. Cf. AS. gestun (the prefix ge- making no difference), a din, Grein, i. 459. Cf. pt. t. ā-sten (rugiebam) in the Bliccling Glosses. + Icel. stynja, to groan; stynr, a groan; G. stöhnen, to groan. From Teut. **stun-*, weak grade of Idg. √STEN, as in Lithuan. stenėti, Russ. stenat(e), Gk. στένειν, to groan, Skt. stan, to sound, to thunder. Brugmann, i. § 818 (2). See Stentorian.

STUNTED, hindered in growth. (Scand.) 'Like stunted hide-bound trees;' Pope, Misc. Poems, Macer, l. 11. Allied to the AS. adj. stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, hence, metaphorically, short of wit; also, not well grown; but this sense seems to be Scandinavian. The proper form of the verb is stint, made from stunt by vowel-change; see Stint. Cf. Icel. stuttr (for **stuntr* by assimilation), short, stunted; MSwed. stunt, cut short (Ihre); showing that the peculiar sense is rather Scand. than E. See E. D. D.

STUPEFY, to deaden the perception, deprive of sensibility. (F.—L.) Less correctly stupify. Spenser has stupefide, F. Q. v. 3. 17. — F. stupéfier, to stupefy, found in the 16th cent., but omitted by Cotgrave (Littré). This verb is due to the F. pp. stupéfait, formed from L. stupefactus, stupefied; there being no such L. word as stupeficāre, but only stupefacere, and even the latter is rarely found except in the pp. and in the pass. form. — L. stupe-, allied to stupēre, to be amazed; and facere (pp. factus), to make. See Stupendous and Fact. Der. stupefact-ion, from F. stupéfaction, from L. acc. stupefactionem; also stupefact-ive.

STUPENDOUS, amazing. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 351. Englished from L. stupendus, amazing, to be wondered at, fut. pass. part. of stupēre, to be amazed, to be struck still with amazement. Note Skt. stubbh, stumbh, to stupefy (Benfey). Der. stupendous-ly, -ness; also stup-or, sb., Phillips, ed. 1706, from L. stupor, sb., amazement; and see stup-id, stupe-fact-ion.

STUPID, insensible, senseless, dull. (F.—L.) In Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 409. — F. stupide, 'stupid;' Cot. — L. stupidus, senseless. — L. stupēre, to be amazed; see Stupendous. Der. stupid-ly, stupid-ness; also stupid-i-ty, from F. stupidité, 'stupidity,' Cot., from L. acc. stupiditatem.

STURDY, resolute, stout, firm. (F.—Teut. ?) The sense of the word has suffered considerable change; it seems to have been influenced by some notion of relationship with stout, with which it is not connected. The true sense is rash or reckless. ME. sturdy, inconsiderate, Chaucer, C. T. 8574 (E 698); sturdy, stourdi, Rob. of Glouc. p. 157, l. 3287; stourdy, p. 186, l. 3842. — OF. estourdi, 'dulled, amazed, astonished . . . heedless, inconsiderate, unadvised, . . . rash, retchless, or careless;' Cot. Pp. of estourdir, 'to astonish, amaze;' id. Mod. F. étourdir; Span. aturdir, Ital. stordire, to stun; amaze, surprise. β. Of unknown origin; Körting mentions the suggestion of a derivation from OHG. sturzan (for **sturtjan*), to overthrow, a verb allied to OHG. stur, a fall; Du. storten, to spill, shed, hurl down, ruin. This is allied to E. start-le, to astonish. See Start. Cf. ME. sturt, impetuosity. Der. sturdy-ly, -ness.

STURGEON, a large fish. (F.—OHG.) ME. sturgium, Have-lok, 753. — OF. esturgeon, estourgeon, 'a sturgeon;' Cot.; Low L. sturiōnem, acc. of sturio, a sturgeon. β. Of Teut. origin; the lit. sense is 'stirrer,' from its habits. 'From the quality of floundering at the bottom it has received its name; which comes from the G. verb stören, signifying to wallow in the mud;' E. tr. of Buffon, pub. at London, 1792. — OHG. sturo, sturjo, MHG. stür, G. stör, a sturgeon; cf. OHG. stören, to spread, stir, G. stören, to trouble, disturb, rake, rummage, poke about. So also Swed. and Dan. stör, a sturgeon; Swed. störa, to stir. This etymology is favoured by the AS. form of the word, viz. styria, a sturgeon, also spelt styryga, Voc. 16. 13; 261. 31. This word seems to mean 'stirrer,' from AS. styrian, to stir, agitate; see Stir. The AS. styria is the oldest known name of the fish; it occurs in the Epinal Glos., no. 809.

STUTTER, to stammer. (E.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. It is the frequentative of stut, which was once commonly used in the same sense. 'Her felow did stammer and stut;' Elynour Rummyng, l. 339. 'I stutte, I can nat speake my wordes redyly;' Palsgrave. ME. stoten; the F. s'yl ne bue is glossed 'bote he stote'=unless he stutter; Wright's Voc. i. 173, l. 6. Cf. EFries. stuttern, to stutter; Du. stotteren. From Teut. **stut-*, weak grade of Teut. root **steut-*; cf. Du. stuiten, to stop. The second grade stant- occurs in Icel. stauta, to beat, strike, also, to read stutteringly; Swed. stöta, to strike, push, hit against; Dan. støde, to push, jolt, jog, trip against, stumble on; G. stossen, to strike; Goth. stantan, to strike.

β. Thus the orig. sense of stut is to strike, strike against, trip; and stutter=to keep on tripping up. From ✓STEUD, to strike; whence also L. tundere, to beat (pt. t. tu-tud-i), Skt. tud, to strike, the initial s being lost in Skt. and L. See Brugmann, i. § 818 (2). Der. stutter-er, stutter-ing. From the same root are con-tuse, ob-tuse; also stoat, q. v., stot.

STY (1), an enclosure for swine. (E.) ME. stie, stye, Chaucer, C. T. 7411 (D 1829). Sti, Ancren Riwle, p. 128, l. 1. AS. stigo, a sty. In a glossary printed in Voc. 271, we find: 'Incipit de suibus,' followed by: 'Vistrina, stigo;' where a sty is doubtless meant. Older form stiga, a pen for cattle; Voc. 7. 35. +Icel. stia, sti, a sty, a kennel; svinsti, a swine-sty; stia, to pen; Dan. sti, a path, also, a sty, pen; Swed. stia, 'a sty, cabin to keep hogs or geese in; whence gdsstia (a goose-pen), svinstia (a swine-sty),' Widegren; MSwed. stia, stiga (Ihre); Swed. dial. sti, steg, a pen for swine, goats, or sheep (Rietz). Rietz also cites Du. swijn-stijge. +G. steige, a stair, steps, stile, stair-case; also a hen-roost, chicken-coop; OHG. stiga, a pen for small cattle.

β. Teut. types **stigā*, stigā, a pen for cattle; Fick, i. 348. Ihre notes that the word was used to mean a pen for any kind of domestic animal; and its application to pigs is prob. later than its other uses. The reason for the name is not clear, though it may have been from the ladder-like arrangement of the laths of a hen-coop, or the use of laths or sticks placed in rows; cf. Gk. στοῖχος below. Just as Ettmüller derives AS. stigo from stigan, to climb, so Rietz derives Swed. stia from stiga, to climb, and Fick (iii. 348) derives G. steige from G. steigen, to climb. γ. The verb to sty, ME. stizen, to climb, was once common in E., but is now obsolete; the forms of it are AS. stigan, Du. stijen, Icel. stiga, Swed. stiga, Dan. stige, G. steigen, Goth. steigan, and it is a strong verb. Further cognate with Gk. στρίχειν, to climb, to go; from the second grade is the sb. στοῖχος, a row, a file of soldiers, also (in Xenophon) a row of poles with hunting-nets into which the game was driven (i. e. a pen or sty).—✓STEIGWH, to climb; Fick, i. 826; Brugmann, i. § 632. Der. (from same root) sty (2), stile (1), stirrup, stair, acro-stic, di-stich, ve-stige.

STY (2), a small inflamed tumour on the edge of the eye-lid. (E.) The AS. name was stigend. This is shown by the entry 'Ordeolus, stigend' in Voc. 114. 10; where ordeolus=L. hordeolus, a sty in the eye. This stigend was orig. the pres. part. of stigan, to climb, rise, and signifies 'rising,' i. e. swelling up. For the verb stigan, see Sty (1).

β. We also meet with 'styanye, or a perle in the eye,' Prompt. Parv.; 'the styonye, sycosis,' Levins, ed. 1570 (which is a very late example); also 'Styony, disease growyng within the eyeliddes, sycosis,' Huloet (cited in Wheatley's ed. of Levins). Cf. prov. E. stine, styon, a sty; also stiony, which seems to have been resolved into sty-on-eye in some dialects; see E. D. D. γ. Cognate words are Low G. stieg, stige, a sty in the eye, from stigen, to rise; EFries. stiger; Norweg. stig, stige, sty, also called stiköyna (where köyna=a pustule), from the verb stiga, to rise.

STYLE (1), a pointed tool for engraving or writing, mode of writing, manner of expression, way, mode. (F.—L.) ME. stile, Chaucer, C. T. 10419 (F 105), where it rhymes with stille in the sense of way over a hedge.—MF. stile, style, 'a stile, form or manner of indicting, the pin of a pair of writing tables;' Cot.—L. stilus, an iron-pointed peg used for writing on wax tablets; also, a manner of writing. Perhaps allied to L. sti-mulus.

¶ The spelling style is false; it ought to be stile. The mistake is due to the common error of writing the L. word as stylus. This error was due to some late writers who imagined that the Gk. σῦλος, a pillar, must be the original of L. stilus. β. But note, that when the E. style is used, as it sometimes is, in botany or dialling, it then represents the Gk. σῦλος; see Style (2). Der. style, verb, styl-ish, -ly, -ness.

STYLE (2), in botany, the middle part of a pistil of a flower. (Gk.) 1. 'Style, or stylus, among herbalists, that middle bunching out part of the flower of a plant, which sticks to the fruit or seed;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—Gk. σῦλος, a pillar, a long upright body like a pillar; cf. Skt. sthūpā, a pillar, post; from ✓STEÜ, to erect; cf. Gk. σῦειν, to erect. Not connected with L. stilus, as is often imagined. 2. Another sense may be noted; 'in dialling, style is a line whose shadow on the plane of the dial shows the true hour-line, and it is the upper edge of the gnomon, cock, or needle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Here style orig. meant the gnomon itself, and answers rather to Gk. σῦλος than to L. stilus. Some difficulty has resulted from the needless confusion of these two unrelated words. Der. styl-ar, pertaining to the pin of a dial.

STYPTIC, astringent, that stops bleeding. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt styptick in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 13, and in Cotgrave. ME. stiptik, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 98, l. 16.—F. styptique, 'styptick,' Cot.—L. stypticus.—Gk. στυπτικός, astringent.—Gk. στυφειν, to contract, draw together, also, to be astringent; allied to σῦψις, contraction; and prob. to E. Stop.

SUASION, advice. (F.—L.) In Sir T. More's Works, p. 157 a, l. 5.—F. suasion, 'persuasion,' Cot.—L. suāsiōnem, acc. of suāsio, persuasion; allied to L. suāsus, pp. of suādere, to persuade; allied to L. suāvis (for **suad-vis*), sweet. See Suave. Der. suas-ive, a coined word; suas-ive-ly, suav-ish-ness; see also dis-suade, per-suade.

SUAVE, pleasant, agreeable. (F.—L.) Not common; the derived word suavity is in earlier use, in Cotgrave.—F. suave, 'sweet, pleasant,' Cot.—L. suāvis, sweet; for **suad-vis*, and allied to E. Sweet, q. v. Brugmann, i. § 187. Der. suav-ity, from F. suavité, 'suavity,' Cot., from L. acc. suāuitātem.

SUB-, a common prefix. (L.; or F.—L.) L. sub-, prefix (whence F. sub-); L. sub, prep., under. The L. super, above, is certainly a comparative form from sub (orig. **sup*), and corresponds, in some measure, to Skt. upari, above. As to the connexion of super with upari there can be no doubt, but the prefixed s in L. super is difficult; perhaps it resulted from a prefixed ex, prep.; cf. Gk. ἐξ-ὑπερθε; Brugmann, i. § 761. Certainly L. super is allied to E. over. See further under Over.

β. 'Sub, it is true, means generally below, under; but, like the Gk. ὑπό (hypo), it is used in the sense of 'from below,' and thus may seem to have two meanings diametrically opposed to each other, below and upward. Submittere means to place below, to lay down, to submit; subleuare, to lift from below, to raise up. Summus, a superl. of sub, hýpatos (ὑπατος), a superl. of hýpó (ὑπό), do not mean the lowest, but the highest;' Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 310, ed. 1875. And see Hypo-, Hyper-. γ. Sub-, prefix, becomes suc- before c following, suf- before f, sug- before g, sum- before m, sup- before p (though sup is rather the orig. form), sur- before r. And see Sus-. Der. sub-ter, prefix; sup-er, prefix; sup-ra, prefix; sur-, prefix (French); and see sum, supreme, soprano, sovereign, sup-ine. Doublet, hypo-, prefix.

SUBACID, somewhat acid. (L.) Richardson gives an example from Arbuthnot, Of Aliments, c. 3.—L. subacidus, somewhat acid, lit. 'under acid.' See Sub- and Acid.

SUBALTERN, subordinate, inferior to another. (F.—L.) 'Subalterni magistrates and officers of the crown;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. iii. (R.). 'Subalterne, vnder another;' Minsheu, ed. 1627.—F. subalterne, adj., 'subalterne, secondary;' Cot.—L. subalternus, subordinate.—L. sub, under, and alter, another; with adj. suffix -nus (Idg. -no-). See Sub- and Alter. Der. subaltern, sb., a subordinate; for subaltern officer.

SUBAQUEOUS, under water. (L.) In Pennant's Brit. Zoology, on swallows (R.). A coined word; from L. sub, under, and aqua, water; see Sub- and Aquatic. The true L. word is subaquæus.

SUBDIVIDE, to divide again into smaller parts. (L.) 'Subdivided into verses;' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (R.).—L. subdividere, lit. to divide under. See Sub- and Divide. Der. subdivis-ion.

SUBDUE, to reduce, conquer, tame, soften. (F.—L.) In Palsgrave; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 962 a, l. 4. The ME. form was soduene, and this was afterwards altered to subduen for the greater clearness, by analogy with the numerous words beginning with sub-. We find 'schal be sodued' in Trevisa, iii. 123, l. 7, where two other MSS. have sodunved, sudewide, but Caxton's (later) edition has subdued. See also the same, ii. 153, 407; iii. 19; &c. The pt. t. sodu-ed was adapted from AF. **subdūt*, occurring in the pl. subdūz (= subduts), 'subdued;' Stat. Realm, i. 339 (A. D. 1353).—Late L. **subdutus*, for L. subditus, subdued, pp. of subdere, to subdue, subjugate.—L. sub, under; -dere, to put, from the weak grade of ✓DHĒ, to put. ¶ For the form **subdutus*, cf. Late L. **perdutus* (Ital. perduto, F. perdu), and such Ital. past participles as cad-uto (from cad-ere), ved-uto (from ved-ere), ten-uto, sap-uto, bev-uto, &c. ¶ It is impossible to derive subdue from L. subducere, with an alien sense. Der. subdu-er, subdu-al, subdu-able.

SUB-EDITOR; from Sub- and Editor.

SUBJACENT, lying beneath. (L.) In Boyle's Works, vol. i. p. 177 (R.).—L. subiacent-, stem of pres. part. of subiacere, to lie under.—L. sub, under; and iacere, to lie. Iacere is allied to iacere, to cast, throw. See Sub- and Jet (1); and see Subject.

SUBJECT, laid or situate under, under the power of another, liable, disposed, subservient. (F.—L.) The spelling has been brought nearer to Latin, but the word was taken from French. The OF. word was also, at one time, re-spelt, to bring it nearer to Latin. ME. suget, adj., Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 1; sugget, subget, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 8358 (E 482).—OF. suget (Hatzfeld), later subiect, 'a subject,' vassall; Cot. Mod. F. sujet. — L. subiectus, subject; pp. of subicere, to place under, put under, subject. — L. sub, under; and iacere, to cast, throw, put. See Sub- and Jet (1). Der. subject, sb., ME. subget, as above; subject, verb, spelt subiecte in Palsgrave; subject-ion, ME. subiectioun, Chaucer, C. T. 14384 (B 3656), from OF. subiection, 'subjection', Cot., from L. acc. subiectionem; subject-ive, from L. subiectivus; subject-ive-ly, subject-ive-ness; subject-iv-i-ty, a late coinage.

SUBJOIN, to join on at the end, annex, affix. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — MF. subioign- (subjoign-), a stem of MF. subioindre, 'to subjoin'; Cot. — L. subiungere, to subjoin. See Sub- and Join. And see subunct-ive.

SUBJUGATE, to bring under the yoke. (L.) In Palsgrave. — L. subiugātus, pp. of subiugāre, to bring under the yoke. — L. sub, under; and iugum, a yoke, cognate with E. yoke, and allied to iungere, to join (above); see Sub- and Yoke. Der. subjugat-or, from L. subiugātor; subjugat-ion, from F. subjugation, 'a subduing,' Cot., from L. acc. **subiugātiōnem*, not used.

SUBJUNCTIVE, denoting that mood of a verb which expresses contingency. (L.) Spelt subiunctive, Minshew, ed. 1627; Palsgrave, p. 380. — L. subiunctivus, subjunctive, lit. joining on at the end, from its use in dependent clauses. — L. subiunct-us, pp. of subiungere, to subjoin; see Subjoin.

SUBLEASE, an under-lease. (F.—L.; with L. prefix.) From Sub- and Lease.

SUBLET, to let, as a tenant, to another. (Hybrid; L. and E.) From Sub- and Let (1).

SUBLIME, lofty, majestic. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. v. 8. 30. [As a term of alchemy, the verb to sublime is much older; Chaucer has subliming, C. T. 16238 (G 770); also sublimatorie, id. 16261 (G 793); these are rather taken directly from L. sublimāre and sublimātorium than through the F., as it was usual to write on alchemy in Latin.] — F. sublime, 'sublime,' Cot. — L. sublimis, lofty, raised on high. β. A difficult word; prob. it means passing under the lintel or cross-piece of a door, hence reaching up to the lintel, tall, high; if so, the part -limis is connected with līmen, a lintel, or a threshold. See Brugmann, ii. § 12 (stems in -n-). See Sub- and Limit. Der. sublime-ly; sublim-i-ty, from F. sublimité, 'sublimity,' Cot., from L. acc. sublimitātem. Also sublime, verb, in alchemy = L. sublimāre, lit. to elevate; sublim-ate, verb and sb., sublim-at-ion, sublim-at-or-y.

SUBLUNAR, under the moon, earthly. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 777. Coined from Sub- and Lunar. Der. sublunar-y, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. parag. 7.

SUBMARINE, under or in the sea. (Hybrid; L. and F.—L.) Rich. gives a quotation from Boyle's Works, vol. iii. p. 342. It occurs in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is said to have been used by Bacon. Coined from Sub- and Marine.

SUBMERGE, to plunge under water, overflow with water. (F.—L.) In Shak. Antony, ii. 5. 94. — F. submerger, 'to submerge;' Cot. — L. submergere (pp. submersus); see Sub- and Merge. Der. submerg-ence; submers-ion, from F. submersion, 'a submersion,' Cot., from L. acc. submersiōnem; also submerse, from the pp. submersus; submers-ed.

SUBMIT, to refer to the judgment of another, yield, surrender. (L.) 'I submyt myselfe, Ie me submets;' Palsgrave. 'Ye been submitted;' Chaucer, C. T. 4455 (B 35). It may have been taken from F. in the first instance, but, if so, was early conformed to the L. spelling. — L. submittere, to let down, submit, bow to. — L. sub, under, down; and mittere, to send (pp. missus); see Sub- and Missile. Der. submission, AF. submission, MF. soumission, 'submission,' Cot., from L. acc. submissiōnem; submiss-ive-ly, -ness; submiss, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 51, from L. pp. submissus.

SUBORDINATE, lower in order or rank. (L.) 'Inferior and subordinate sorts;' Cowley, Essay 6, Of Greatness (R.). 'His next subordinate;' Milton, P. L. v. 671. Coined from Late L. subordinātus, pp. of subordināre, coined from sub ordinem, under the order or rank. Ordinem is the acc. of ordo, order, rank. See Sub- and Order. Der. subordinate, as sb., subordinate-ly; subordinat-ion, Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel (1642), sect. vi. parag. 8; whence in-subordinat-ion.

SUBORN, to procure privately, instigate secretly, to cause to commit perjury. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 34. Sir T. More has subornacion, Works, p. 211 h. — F. suborner, 'to suborn,' Cot. — L. subornāre, to furnish or supply in an underhand way or secretly. — L. sub, under, secretly; and ornāre, to furnish, adorn. See Sub- and Ornament. Der. suborn-er; subornat-ion, from F. subornation, 'a subornation,' Cot.

SUBPOENA, a writ commanding a person to attend in court under a penalty. (L.) Explained in Minshew, ed. 1627; and much older. — L. sub pœnā, under a penalty. — L. sub, under; and pœnā, abl. of pœna, a pain or penalty. See Sub- and Pain. Der. sub-pœna, verb., to serve a subpoena.

SUBSCRIBE, to write underneath, to sign one's name to. (L.) 'And subscribed their names vndre them;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 3 h. 'My lettre subscribed;' Will of Hen. V; Royal Wills, p. 238. — L. scribere, to write under, sign one's name to. — L. sub, under; and scribere, to write. See Sub- and Scribe. Der. sub-scrib-er; subscript, from the pp. scriptus; subscript-ion, from MF. souscription, 'a subscription or subscribing,' Cot., from L. acc. subscriptiōnem. SECTION, an under-section, subdivision of a subject. (Hybrid; L. and F.—L.) From Sub- and Section.

SUBSEQUENT, following after. (L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 334 and Milton, Samson, 325. — L. subsequent-, stem of pres. part. of sequi, to follow close after. — L. sub, under, close after; and sequi, to follow. See Sub- and Sequel. Der. subsequent-ly.

SUBSERVE, to serve subordately. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 57. Englished from L. subseruire, to serve under a person. — L. sub, under; and seruire, to serve; see Sub- and Serve. Der. subservi-ent, from L. subservient-, stem of pres. part. of subseruire; subservient-ly, subservience.

SUBSIDE, to settle down. (L.) Dryden has subsides, tr. of Virgil, Æn. i. 212; Phillips, ed. 1706, has subside, subsidence. — L. subsistere, to settle down. — L. sub, under; and sistere, to settle, allied to sedere, to sit, which latter is cognate with E. sit. For **si-zd-ere*, where zd- is the weak grade of the root SED, to sit. See Sub- and Sit. Der. subsidi-ence, from L. subsidentia, a settling down. And see subsidiy.

SUBSIDY, assistance, aid in money. (F.—L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 25; 3 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 45. ME. subsidiē, The Crowned King, l. 36, in App. to P. Plowman, C-text, p. 525; the date of the poem is ab. A.D. 1415. — AF. subsidiē (in Godefroy); though the usual F. form is subsidiē, as in Cotgrave and Palsgrave. — L. subsidium, a body of troops in reserve, aid, assistance. The lit. sense is 'that which sits [remains] behind or in reserve;' from L. sub, under, behind, and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit; see Sub- and Sit; and see Subside. Cf. L. præ-sidium, ob-sidium, from the same verb. Der. subsidi-ary, from L. subsidiarius, belonging to a reserve; subsidi-ise, a coined verb.

SUBSIST, to live, continue. (F.—L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 6. 73. — F. subsister, 'to subsist, abide;' Cot. — L. subsistere, to stand still, stay, abide. — L. sub, under, but here used with very slight force; and sistere, orig. to set, make to stand, but also used in the sense to stand. Sistere is the causal of stāre, to stand (cf. Gk. ἵστημι, for **ἵσθημι*); and stāre is from **STĀ*, to stand; see Sub- and Stand. Der. subsist-ence, from F. subsistence, 'subsistence, continuance,' Cot., from L. subsistentia; subsist-ent, from the stem of the pres. part. of subsistere.

SUBSOIL, the under-soil. (Hybrid; L. and F.—L.) From Sub- and Soil.

SUBSTANCE, essential part, matter, body. (F.—L.) ME. substance, substaunce, Chaucer, C. T. 14809 (B 3993). — F. substance, 'substance;' Cot. — L. substantia, essence, material, substance. — L. substant-, stem of pres. part. of substāre, to be present, exist, lit. to stand beneath. — L. sub, beneath; and stāre, to stand, from **STĀ*, to stand. See Sub- and Stand. Der. substanti-al, ME. substancial, Gower, C. A. iii. 92; bk. vii. 226; from F. substantiel, from L. adj. substantiālis; substanti-al-ly; substanti-ate, a coined word. Also substant-ive, ME. substantif, P. Plowman, C. iv. 345, from F. substantif (Littre), from L. substantivus, self-existent, that which denotes existence, used of the 'substantive' verb esse, and afterwards extended, as a grammatical term, to nouns substantive as distinct from nouns adjective.

SUBSTITUTE, one person put in place of another. (F.—L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'This pope may be deposed, and another substitute in his rōme;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1427 f. Hence used as a verb. 'They dyd also substytute other;' id. p. 821 d. — F. substitut, 'a substitute;' Cot. — L. substitutus, one substituted; pp. of substituere, to lay under, put in stead of. — L. sub, under, in place of; and statuere, to place, pp. statutus; see Sub- and Statute. Der. substitute, verb, as above; substitut-ion, Gower, C. A. iii. 178, bk. vii. 2769, F. substitution (Cot.), from L. acc. substitutiōnem.

SUBSTRATUM, an under stratum. (L.) L. substrātum, neut. of substrātus, pp. of substernere, to spread under. See Sub- and Stratum.

SUBTEND, to extend under or be opposite to. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives subtended and subtense as mathematical terms; subtense is in Blount, ed. 1674. — L. subtendere (pp. subtensus), to stretch beneath. — L. sub, under; and tendere, to stretch; see Sub- and Tend. Der. subtense, from pp. subtensus. And see hypotenuse.

SUTTER, under, secretly. (L.) Formed from L. sub, under, by help of the suffix -ter, which is properly a comparative suffix, as in in-ter; see Inter-, Other.

SUBTERFUGE, an evasion, artifice to escape censure. (F.—L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 182, l. 18.—F. subterfuge, 'a subterfuge, a shift'; Cot.—Late L. subterfugium, a subterfuge (Ducange).—L. subterfugere, to escape secretly.—L. subter, secretly; and fugere, to flee; see Subter- and Fugitive.

SUBTERRANEAN, SUBTERRANEOUS, underground. (L.) Both forms are in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount, ed. 1674, has subterrany and subterraneous. Bacon has subterrany, Nat. Hist. § 603. Both are formed from L. subterrāneus, underground; the former by adding -an (= L. -ānus) after -e, the latter by changing -us to -ous.—L. sub, under; and terr-a, the earth; with suffix -ān-eus. See Sub- and Terrace.

SUBTLE, fine, rare, insinuating, sly, artful. (F.—L.) Pronounced [sət'l]. The word was formerly spelt without b, but this was sometimes inserted to bring it nearer to the L. form. We also meet with the spellings subtil, subtile. ME. sotil, sofel, Chaucer, C. T. 1056, 2051; the Six-text edition has the spellings sotil, sotyl, subtil, subtile, sotel, soutil, Group A, 1054, 2049.—OF. sutil, soutil (Burguy), later subtil, 'subtill', Cot.—L. subtile, acc. of subtilis, fine, thin, slender, precise, accurate, subtle. β. It is gen. thought that the orig. sense of subtilis was 'finely woven'; cf. sub, beneath (= closely?), and tela, a web. See Sub- and Toil (2). Der. subtil-y (sometimes subtile-ly), subtile-ness (sometimes subtile-ness); also subtle-ty or subtil-ty, ME. soteltee, sotelte, P. Plowman, C. xv. 76, from OF. sotilleté (Littre), also subtilité, from L. acc. subtilitatem. ¶ Note that the pronunciation without b agrees with the orig. ME. form.

SUBTRACT, to take away a part from the whole. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—L. subtract-us, pp. of subtrahere, to draw away underneath, to subtract.—L. sub, under; and trahere (pp. tractus), to draw. See Sub- and Trace. Der. subtract-ion (as if from F. **subtraction*, not used), from L. acc. subtractionem; subtract-ive; also subtrahend, in Minshew, a number to be subtracted, from L. subtrahendus, fut. pass. part. of subtrahere.

SUBURB, SUBURBS, the confines of a city. (F.—L.) Commonly used in the pl. form. 'The suburbes of the towne'; Fabyan's Chron. c. 219; Chaucer, C. T., G 657.—AF. suburbe, Stat. Realm, i. 97 (1285).—L. suburbium, the suburb of a town.—L. sub, under (here, near); and urbi, decl. stem of urbis, a town, city; see Sub- and Urban. Der. suburb-an, from L. suburbānus.

SUBVENTION, a subsidy, a pecuniary grant in aid. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. subvention, 'subvention, help, aid; also, a subsidy'; Cot.—L. subuentiōnem, acc. of subuentio, assistance; cf. subuentus, pp. of subuenire, to come to one's aid, assist, relieve, succour.—L. sub, under (by way of help); uenire, to come. See Sub- and Venture. Der. We also find subuēne, vb., from subuenire; and the adj. subuent-itiōus.

SUBVERT, to overthrow, ruin, corrupt. (F.—L.; or L.) ME. subuerten, Wyclif, Titus, iii. 11.—F. subvertir, 'to subvert'; Cot.—L. subuertere (pp. subuersus), to turn upside down, overthrow, lit. to turn from beneath.—L. sub, from under; and uertere, to turn. See Sub- and Verse. Der. subvers-ion, AF. subversion, Stat. Realm, i. 300, F. subversion, 'a subversion', Cot., from L. acc. subuersiōnem; subvers-ive.

SUCCEED, to follow next in order, take the place of, to prosper. (F.—L.) Better spelt succede. ME. succeden, Chaucer, C. T. 8508 (E 632).—F. succeder, 'to succeed'; Cot.—L. succedere (pp. successus), to go beneath or under, follow after.—L. suc- (for sub before c), under; and cedere, to go; see Sub- and Cede. Der. success, an issue or result, whether good or bad (now chiefly only of a good result), as in 'good or ill success', Ascham, Schoolmaster, pt. i, ed. Arber, p. 35, from MF. succes, 'success', Cot., from L. successum, acc. of successus, result, event; success-ful, success-ful-ly. Also success-or, ME. successour, Rob. of Glouc. p. 507, l. 10440, F. successeur, from L. acc. successōrem, one who succeeds; success-ion, F. succession, 'succession', Cot., from L. acc. successiōnem; success-ion-al; success-ive, F. successif, 'successive', from L. successivus; success-ive-ly. Also succed-an-e-ous, explained by Phillips, ed. 1706, as 'succeeding, or coming in the room of another,' from L. succedāneus, that which supplies the place of another; succed-an-e-um, sb., neut. of succedāneus.

SUCCINCT, concise. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—L. succinctus, prepared, short, small, contracted; pp. of succingere, to gird below, tuck up, gird up, furnish.—L. suc- (for sub before c), under, below; and cingere, to gird; see Sub- and Cincture. Der. succinct-ly, succinct-ness.

SUCCORY, chicory. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Of cykorie or suckorie,' Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 8. Minshew gives succory, cichory, and chicory. Succory is a corruption of cichory, now usually called chicory; see Chicory.

SUCCOUR, to assist, relieve. (F.—L.) ME. socouren, Will. of Palerne, 1186.—OF. sucurre, soscorre (Burguy), MF. secourir, as in Cotgrave; this change to e is no improvement.—L. subcurrere, succurrere, to run under, run up to, run to the aid of, aid, succour.—L. sub, under, up to; and currere, to run; see Sub- and Current. Der. succour-er. Also succour, sb., ME. sucurs, Ancrén Riwe, p. 244, l. 9, from OF. socors, later secours, as in Cotgrave, from L. subcursus, succursus, pp. of succurrere. ¶ The spelling is prob. due to that of the AF. succour, sb., in Langtoft's Chron. i. 302, also spelt soccours, i. 16; and not from AF. sucure, vb., as used in the Vie de St. Auban.

SUCCUBA, a wanton female demon. (L.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, v. 2 (Norandine).—L. succuba.—L. succubāre, to lie under.—L. suc- (for sub), under; cubāre, to lie down. See Sub- and Covey. Der. succubus, a masc. form; Webster, Westward Ho, iv. 2.

SUCCULENT, juicy. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. succulent, 'succulent'; Cot.—L. succulentus, suculentus, full of juice; formed with suffix -lentus from succu-s, sūcu-s, juice (the gen. is succi, but there is a collateral form with u-stem, found in the gen. pl. succum). Allied to E. Suck.

SUCCUMB, to yield. (L.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 459.—L. succumbere, to lie or fall under, yield.—L. suc- (for sub before c), under; and **cumbere*, to lie, a nasalised form allied to cubāre, to lie. See Sub- and Incubus, Incumbent, Covey.

SUCH, of a like kind. (E.) ME. swile, swile, swilch, swich, such (with numerous other forms, for which see Stratmann). We find swile, swile in Layamon, 31585, 1375; swilch, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 131; swich, such, Chaucer, C. T. 3 (see Six-text). It will thus be seen that the orig. l was lost, and the final c palatalised to ch. The forms swile, swile are from AS. swyle, swile, swelc, swelc, such, Grein, ii. 513. + OSax. sulik; OFries. selic, selk, sullik, sulch, suk; Du. zulk; Icel. slikr; Dan. slig; Swed. slik; MSwed. salik (Ihre); G. solch; OHG. solich; Goth. swaleiks. β. The Goth. swaleiks is simply compounded of swa, so, and leiks, like; and all the Teut. forms admit of a similar explanation. Thus such is for so-like, of which it is a corruption. See So and Like; and cf. Which.

SUCK, to draw in with the mouth, imbibe, esp. milk. (E.) ME. souken, Chaucer, C. T. 8326 (E 450); once a strong verb, with pt. t. sək or sec, Ancrén Riwe, p. 330, l. 6, pp. i-sōke (for i-sōken), Trevisa, iii. 267, l. 12. AS. sūcan, strong verb, pt. t. sēac, pp. socen; Grein, ii. 492; Deut. xxxii. 13; Luke, xi. 27. [There is also a form sūgan, and there is a double form of the Teut. base, viz. SEUK and SEUG. Of the former, we find examples in AS. sūcan, E. suck, cognate with L. sūgere. Of the latter, we have examples in AS. sūgan, Icel. sjūga, sūga (pt. t. saug, pp. soginn), Dan. suge, Swed. suga, G. saugen, OHG. sūgan; which is the prevailing type in Teutonic.] We find also W. sugno, to suck, sug, juice; Irish sughaim, I suck in, sugh, juice; Gael. sug, to suck, sugh, juice; cf. L. sūcus, succus, juice. β. The Idg. root of E. suck is SEUG. See Brugmann, i. § 112. The word succulent is related. Der. suck, verb, suck-er, sb.; suck-le, Cor. i. 3. 44, a frequentative form, with the usual suffix -le; suck-l-ing, ME. sokling or sokeling; spelt sokelynge in Prompt. Parv., formed with dimin. suffix -ing from the form sokel=one who sucks, where the -el is the suffix of the agent (so that it is hardly a parallel form to duck-l-ing, which is merely a double dimin. from duck). Also honey-suckle, q.v.; suc-t-ion, q.v.; soak, q.v.

SUCTION, the act or power of sucking. (F.—L.) In Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 191.—F. suction, 'a sucking'; Cot. Formed, as if from L. **suctio*; cf. suctus, pp. of sūgere, to suck; see Suck.

SUDATORY, a sweating bath. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Rare. Rich. gives an example from Holyday, Juvenal, p. 224.—L. sūdātōrium, a sweating-bath; neut. of sūdātōrius, serving for sweating.—L. sūdātōri, decl. stem of sūdātor, a sweater.—L. sūdāre, to sweat, allied to E. Sweat, q.v.; with suffix -tor of the agent. See sudorific.

SUDDEN, unexpected, abrupt, hasty. (F.—L.) ME. sodain, sodein, soden, Chaucer, C. T. 4841 (B 421); sodeynliche, suddenly, King Alisaunder, 3568.—OF. sodain, sudain, mod. F. soudain, sudden. Cf. Prov. sotament, suddenly (Bartsch); Ital. subitano (also subitaneo).—Late L. **subitānus*, for L. subitāneus, sudden; extended from subitus, sudden, lit. 'that which has come stealthily,' orig. pp. of subire, to go or come stealthily.—L. sub, under, stealthily; and ire, to go, from √EI, to go. See Sub- and Itinerant. Der. sudden-ly, -ness.

SUDORIFIC, causing sweat. (F.—L.) 'Sudorifick herbs,' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 706.—F. sudorifique, causing sweat, Cot.—L. sūdōrificus, the same.—L. sūdōri, decl. stem of sūdor, sweat; and -ficus, making, from facere, to make. See Sweat and Fact. Der. sudorific, sb.; and see sudatory.

SUDS, boiling water mixed with soap. (E.) 'Sprinkled With suds and dish-water,' Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit without Money,

A. iii. sc. i. Suds means 'things sodden;' and is formed as a pl. from sud, derived from Teut. **sud-*, the weak grade of Teut. **seuthan-*, to seethe; see Seethe. Hence Gascoigne uses suddes metaphorically, in the sense of 'worthless things;' see Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, ii. 310, l. 9. In the suds=in the middle of a wash, is a proverbial expression for being in a sulky temper; cf. prov. E. sudded, flooded. Cf. MDu. zode, a seething, boiling, Hexham; Icel. soð, water in which meat has been sodden; and see Sod.

SUE, to prosecute at law. (F.—L.) The orig. sense is merely to follow; it was technically used as a law-term. Spelt sewe in Palsgrave. ME. suen, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19, 22; also sewen, suwen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 21; suwen, Ancrén Riwele, p. 208, l. 5.—OF. su- (as in pr. pl. su-ent, pres. pt. su-ant), a stem of OF. suir, suivir, suivre (Godefroy, with several other forms); mod. F. suivre, to follow. Cf. Prov. segre, seguir (Bartsch), Ital. seguire, to follow.—Late L. sequere, to follow, substituted for L. sequi, to follow; see the changes traced in Brachet. See Sequence. Der. en-sue, q.v., pur-sue; suit, suite, q.v.

SUET, the fat of an animal about the kidneys. (F.—L.) ME. suet, 'Swēte [where w=uu], suēt (due syllable), of flesche or fysche or oper lyke, Liquamen, sumen;' Prompt. Parv. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from OF. seu, Norman sieu, Walloon sew (Littré), mod. F. suif, suet, fat. Cf. Span. sebo; Ital. sevo, 'tallow, fat, sewet,' Florio.—L. sēbum, also sēuum, tallow, suet, grease. Prob. allied to L. sāpo, soap; see Soap.

SUFFER, to undergo, endure, permit. (F.—L.) ME. soffren, suffren, in early use; Chaucer, C. T. 11089 (F 777); Layamon, 24854 (later text).—OF. soffrir, suffrir, mod. F. souffrir.—Folk-L. **sufferire*, for L. sufferre, to undergo, endure.—L. suf- (for sub before f), under; and ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. See Sub- and Bear (1). Der. suffer-er, suffer-ing; suffer-able; also suffer-ance or suff-rance, ME. suffrance, Chaucer, C. T. 11100 (F 788), OF. souffrance, later souffrance, 'sufferance,' Cot., from Late L. sufferentia (Ducange).

SUFFICE, to be enough. (F.—L.) ME. suffisen, Chaucer, C. T. 9908 (E 2034).—F. suffis-, occurring in suffis-ant, stem of pres. part. of suffire, to suffice; cf. ME. suffisance, sufficiency, Chaucer, C. T. 492 (A 490), from F. suffisance, sufficiency.—L. sufficere, lit. to make or put under, hence to substitute, provide, supply, suffice.—L. suf- (for sub before f), and facere, to make; see Sub- and Fact. Der. suffici-ent, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 17, from L. sufficient-, stem of pres. part. of sufficere; suffici-ent-ly; sufficienc-y, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 8.

SUFFIX, a letter or syllable added to a word. (L.) Modern; used in philology.—L. suffixus, pp. of suffigere, to fasten on beneath.—L. suf- (for sub before f), and figere, to fix; see Sub- and Fix. Der. suffix, verb.

SUFFOCATE, to smother. (L.) Orig. used as a pp. 'May he be suffocate,' 2 Hen. VI, i. 1. 124.—L. suffocātus, pp. of suffocāre, to choke. Lit. 'to put something under the gullet, to throttle.'—L. suf- (for sub before p), and fauc-, stem of faucēs, s. pl., the gullet, throat. [The same change from au to ō occurs in fōcale, a neck-cloth.] Perhaps allied to Skt. bhūkā, a hole, the head of a fountain. Der. suffocat-ion, from F. suffocation, 'suffocation,' Cot., from L. acc. suffocātionem.

SUFFRAGE, a vote, united prayer. (F.—L.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 2. 142; Caxton, Siege of Troy, fol. 51b, l. 10; sofragys, pl., Monk of Evesham (ab. 1482), c. 44, ed. Arber, p. 92.—F. suffrage, 'a suffrage, voice,' Cot.—L. suffrāgium, a vote, voice, suffrage. Suffrāgium has been ingeniously explained as 'a broken piece' such as a pot-shoulder, &c., whereby the ancients recorded their votes (Vaniček, Bréal). If this be right, suf- is the usual prefix (= sub), and -frāgium is connected with frangere, to break, cognate with E. Break. Cf. L. nau-frāgium, a ship-wreck. β. But Walde connects it with L. frag-or, noise, din, i. e. outcry; and further, with AS. spræc, E. speech; see Speech. Der. suffrag-an, ME. suffragan, Trevisa, ii. 115, l. 9, from F. suffragant, 'a suffragan, or suffragan, a bishop's deputy,' Cot., from L. suffrāgant, stem of pres. part. of suffrāgari, to vote for, support, assist; but suffragan may also represent the Late L. suffrāgāneus, a suffragan bishop.

SUFFUSE, to overspread or cover, as with a fluid. (L.) 'Her suffused eyes,' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 10.—L. suffusus, pp. of suffundere, to pour beneath, diffuse beneath or upon.—L. suf- (for sub before f), and fundere, to pour; see Sub- and Fuse. Der. suffusion, from F. suffusion, 'a suffusion, or pouring upon,' Cot., from L. acc. suffusiōnem.

SUFI, a Moslem mystic; see under Sophy.

SUGAR, a sweet substance, esp. that obtained from a kind of cane. (F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.—Skt.) ME. sugre, Chaucer, C. T.

10928 (F 614); in P. Plowman, B. v. 122, two MSS. read sucre, of which sugre is a 'voiced' form.—F. sucre, 'sugar,' Cot.—Span. azucar, sugar.—Arab. sakkar, sokkar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 357, Freytag's Arab. Dict. ii. 334 a; whence, by prefixing the article al, the form assokkar, accounting for the prefixed a in the Span. form.—Pers. shakar, sugar; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 385.—Skt. ṣarkarā, gravel, a soil abounding in stony fragments, clayed or candied sugar; Benfey, p. 936. Prob. allied to Gk. κροκάλη, a pebble on the sea-shore.

β. From the Pāli form sakkharā are derived Gk. σάκχαρ, σάκχαρον, and L. saccharum. It is a mistake to derive F. sucre (as Brachet does) from L. saccharum directly. See Saccharine. Der. sugar, verb, Palsgrave; sugar-y, sugar-cane, sugar-candy (see candy); sugar-loaf, Paston Letters, iii. 37.

SUGGEST, to introduce indirectly, hint. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 1. 101, iii. 4. 75.—L. suggestus, pp. of suggerere, to carry or lay under, furnish, supply, suggest.—L. sug- (for sub before g); and gerere, to carry; see Sub- and Jest. Der. suggest-ion, Chaucer, C. T. 14727 (B 3607), from F. suggestion, 'a suggestion,' from L. acc. suggestiōnem; suggest-ive, a coined word; suggest-ive-ly.

SUICIDE, self-murder; one who dies by his own hand. (F.—L.) The word was really coined in England, but on a F. model. See note at the end of the article. In Blackstone's Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14 (R.); in the latter sense. Rich. gives a quotation for it, in the former sense, from a tr. of Montesquieu, The Spirit of Laws, b. xiv. c. 13; the first E. translation appeared in 1749, immediately after its appearance in France. Littré says that suicide is in Richelet's Dict. in 1759, and is said to have been first used in French by Desfontaines not much earlier (1738). As remarked under Homicide, the same form has two senses, and two sources. 1. F. suicide, a coined word, from L. suī, of oneself, gen. case of sē, self; and -cidium, a slaying (as in homi-cidium), from cādere, to slay. 2. F. suicide, coined from L. suī, of oneself, and -cida, a slayer (as in homi-cida), from cādere, to slay. Der. suicid-al, -ly. ¶ Trench, in his English Past and Present, observes that Phillips notices the word, as a monstrous formation, in 1671, long before its appearance in French; and it is given by Blount, ed. 1674. It seems to have been suggested by the queer words suist, a selfish man, and suicism, selfishness, which had been coined at an earlier date, and were used by Whitlock in an essay entitled The Grand Schismatic, or Suist Anatomised; cf. his Zootomia, 1654. The word is clumsy enough, but we may rightly claim it. Littré's objection, that the form of the word is plainly French, is of no force. We had the words homicide, patri-cide, matri-cide, fratri-cide, already in use; and sui-cide was coined by analogy with these, which accounts for the whole matter simply enough. It may be added that, though the translator of Montesquieu uses the word, the original has only l'homicide de soi-même.

SUIT, an action at law, a petition, a set, as of clothes. (F.—L.) ME. suite, Chaucer, C. T. 2875 (A 2873).—F. suite (also suite in Cotgrave), 'a chase, pursuit, suit against, also the train, attendants, or followers of a great person,' Cot.—Late L. type **sequita*, variant of secta (L. secūta), a following, a sect (whence the sense of suite or train); in Late L. extended to mean a suit at law, a series, order, set, a suit of clothes, &c.; see Ducange. From the base of sequ-i, to follow, as noted under Sect, q.v. Cf. 'secta vestium,' a suit of clothes; Liber Albus, p. 29. 'Sex cochliaria eiusdem sectæ,' six spoons of the same set; York Wills, iii. 3 (1395). Der. suit, verb, to clothe, As You Like It, i. 3. 118, also to fit, adapt, agree, accord, id. ii. 7. 81, Macb. ii. 1. 60; 'to suit is to agree together, as things made on a common plan,' Wedgwood. Also suit-or, L. L. L. ii. 34; suit-able, Timon, iii. 6. 92, suit-able-y, suit-able-ness. Doublets, suite, q.v., sect, sept, set (2).

SUITE, a train of followers. (F.—L.) 'With fifty in their suite to his defence;' Sidney (in Todd's Johnson; no reference).—F. suite; see further under Suit, of which suite is a doublet.

SULCATED, furrowed, grooved. (L.) 'Sulcate, to cast up in furrows, to till;' Blount, ed. 1674. Chiefly scientific.—L. sulcātus, pp. of sulcāre, to furrow.—L. sulcus, a furrow. + Gk. ὄλκός, a furrow, from ἐλκεν, to draw along; cf. AS. sulh, a plough.

SULKY, obstinate, silently sullen. (E.) The word is rare in old books, and the Dictionaries omit it, till we come to Todd's Johnson, where 'the sulkiness of my disposition' is quoted from a Letter of Gray to Dr. Clarke, A. D. 1760. It is an incorrect form, and should rather be sulken; it arose from misdividing the sb. sulken-ness as sulke-ness, by analogy with happi-ness from happy, &c. The sb. appears as a-swolkenesse, i. e. sloth, O. Eng. Hom. i. 83, l. 25; and is not uncommon in AS., which also has the true old form of the adj.—AS. solcen, orig. slothful, remiss; in the comp. āsolcen, slothful, remiss, lazy, Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 306, l. 11, p. 340, last line; also ii. 220, l. 23, where it means 'disgusted.' The sb. āsolcen-nes is quite a common word; see Ælf. Hom. i. 602, l. 8, ii. 46, l. 11, ii. 218, l. 22, ii. 220, l. 21; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 240, l. 12; the sense comes very near to that of mod. E. sulkiness. 'Accidiosus, vel tediousus, āsolcen;' Voc. 190. 14. Another trace of AS. solcen occurs in the comp. besolcen, used as a pp., with the sense of 'stupefied'; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 35, ed. Sweet, p. 238, l. 3. β. We further know that solcen was the pp. of a strong verb seolcan (pt. t. sealc, pp. solcen), appearing in the comp. āseolcan (pt. t. āsealc, pp. āsolcen), for which Leo refers to Ælf. Hom. ii. 592, the reference, unluckily, being wrong. We find the verb again, spelt āsealcan, in Cædmon, ed. Grein, 2167; see Grein, i. 41. γ. There is even a cognate OHG. word, viz. the verb arselhan, Graff, vi. 216, where the prefix ar-=AS. á-. Thus the Teut. type is **selkan-*, from a base **selk-*, answering to an Idg. base SELG. δ. It is remarkable that the Skt. syj means 'to let loose, abandon,' and the pp. syshṭa is 'abandoned,' which comes very near the sense of AS. solcen. Der. sulki-ness, really for sulken-ness, as explained above.

Ettmüller, p. 753, gives a form āswolcen, but the MS. has āsolcen, Liber Scint. § 16, p. 79, l. 5; also āsolcenyse, id. § 24, p. 98, l. 1. SULLEN, gloomily angry, morose. (F.—L.) ME. solein, solain, orig. merely 'solitary,' then 'hating company,' or morose, as explained in the Prompt. Parv. 'Soleyn of maners, or he that lovythe no company, Solitarus;' Pr. Parv. A mess of meat for one person was also called soleyn, as explained on the same page. 'By hymself as a soleyn,' i. e. a lonely person; P. Plowman, B. xii. 205. In the Rom. of the Rose, 3896, solein means 'sullen,' but in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 982, and Parl. of Foules, 607, it means 'solitary' or 'lonely.'—OF. solain, lonely, solitary, of which the only trace I find is in Roquefort, where solain is explained as 'a portion served out to a religious person,' a pittance, doubtless a portion for one; so also in Ducange, s. v. solatium (5). E. Müller and Mahn cite Prov. solan, solitary. These Romance forms presuppose a Late L. **sōlānus*, solitary, but it does not occur; however, it is a mere extension from L. sōlus, sole, alone; see SOLE. Cf. OF. soltain, solitary (Burguy), which answers, similarly, to a Late L. **solitānus*. Der. sullen-ly, -ness.

SULLY, to tarnish, spot, make dirty. (F.—L.) Shak. has sullied, Sonnet 15; also the infinitive form sully; Merry Wives, ii. 1. 102. [We also find the ME. solwed, soiled, Cursor Mundi, l. 22491, spelt sullowed in 1608 (Nares). From ME. solwen, spelt solwyn, solowyn in Prompt. Parv., to soil, bemire; from AS. solw-e, g. d., and acc. of solu, f. mire, by-form of AS. sol, mire (below). And also ME. sulien; whence sulieþ=sullieth, Owl and Nightingale, 1238; pp. ysuled=sullied, P. Plowman's Creed, 752, Ancren Riwe, p. 396, l. 1. AS. sylian, to sully, defile with dirt or mud. 'Sio sugu hi wile sylian on hire sole æfter ðæm ðe hio āðwægen bið'=the sow will wallow [lit. sully herself] in her mire after she is washed; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, c. liv. p. 419, l. 27. This form is from AS. sol, mire, mud, for which see the quotation above. +Swed. sōla, to bemire; Dan. sōle, to bemire, sōle, söl, mire; Goth. bisauljan, to sully, render impure; G. sühlen, to sully, sich herum sühlen, to wallow, from suhle, slough, mire, MHG. sol, mire. Cf. Norw. saula, mire.] β. Nevertheless, the modern verb to sully is a doublet of the earlier verb to soil.—MF. souiller, 'to soil, slurry, dirty, smutch; se souiller, (of a swine) to wallow in the mire;' Cot.—OF. souil, for which see SOIL (2). Doublet, soil (2).

SULPHUR, brimstone. (L.) [ME. soulfre (an OF. form, cf. F. soufre); Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 418.] In Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 31. A term in alchemy, from L. sulphur, also spelt sulfur. Der. sulphureous, from L. sulphureus or sulfureus, adj.; sulphur-ous, from F. sulphureux, 'sulphurous,' Cot., from L. adj. sulphureus or sulfureus; also the coined words sulphur-ic, sulphur-et, sulphur-ett-ed, and sulphate (used for **sulphur-ate*).

SULTAN, an Eastern ruler, head of the Ottoman empire. (F.—Arab.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 26.—F. sultan, 'a sultan or souldan,' Cot.—Arab. sultān, victorious, also a ruler, prince; cf. sultat, dominion; Rich. Dict. pp. 843, 844. β. The word occurs early, in the ME. form soudan, Chaucer, C. T. 4597 (B 177); this is from OF. soudan, souldan, both in Cotgrave, which are derived from the same Arab. word. Der. sultan-ess, with F. suffix; sultan-a, Dryden, Kind Keeper, i. 1, from Ital. sultana, fem. of sultano, a sultan, from Arab. sultān.

SULTRY, SWELTRY, very hot and oppressive. (E.) Sultry and sweltry, both in Phillips, ed. 1706, are the same word; the latter being the fuller and older form. Shak. has sultry, Hamlet, v. 2. 101; also swelter'd=caused to exude by heat, Macb. iv. 1. 8. The w has passed into u; cf. so from AS. swā, and mod. E. sword, where the w is entirely lost. The -y (=AS. -ig) is an adjectival suffix, and sweltry-y is short for sweltry-y, formed from the verb to swelter. 'Sweltrynge or swalteryng, or swonyng, Sincopa,' Prompt. Parv.; where the sense is 'a swooning with heat.' 'Swalteryng for hete, or febylnesse, or other cawsys, or swownyn, Exalo, sincopizo,' id. p. 481. β. Again, swelter is a frequent. form (with the usual suffix -er) from ME. swelten, to die, also to swoon away or faint. 'Swowe or swelte'=swoon or faint, P. Plowman, B. v. 154. From AS. sweltan, to die, Grein, ii. 505. +Icel. swelta, to die, starve (pt. t. swalt, pl. sultu, pp. soltinn; Dan. sulte; Swed. swälta; Goth. swiltan, to die. Cf. Icel. sultr, Dan. sult, hunger, famine; from the weak grade **swulti*>**sult*. Also OHG. schwelzan, to burn, to be consumed by fire or love. γ. All from Teut. base **swelt-*, to die; prob. an extension of the base **swel-*, to burn, glow, be hot, from which the E. word has undoubtedly received its present sense; this appears in AS. swelan, to burn, ME. swelen, swalen, prov. E. sweal, to waste away under the action of fire, allied to G. schwelzen, to burn slowly, schwül, sultry, with the extended forms OHG. swilizo, heat, swilzōn, to burn slowly; Lith. swil-ti, to shine, burn. Der. sultri-ness.

SUM, the amount, whole of a thing, substance, total, summary, fulness. (F.—L.) ME. somme, Chaucer, C. T. 11537 (F 1225).—AF. summe, a sum, Vie de St. Auban, ed. Atkinson; F. somme, 'a summe of money,' Cot.—L. summa, sum, chief part, amount; orig. fem. of summus, highest, chief, principal. Summus stands for **supmus*, uppermost, superl. form from **sup*, old form of sub (cf. sup-er); the sense of 'under' and 'over' are curiously mixed; see SUB. Allied to Gk. ὑπα-ros, highest, with a different suffix. Brugmann, i. § 762. Der. sum, verb, ME. sommen, Trevisa, iii. 261, l. 15, F. sommer, from L. summāre; summ-at-ion, from F. sommat-ion, 'the summing of money,' Cot., due to L. summāre; summ-ar-y, sb., answering to F. sommaire, 'a summary,' Cot., from L. summārium, a summary, epitome, which presupposes an adj. **summārius*, summary, adj., answering to F. sommaire, adj., 'summary,' Cot.; summ-ar-i-ly, summ-ar-i-ness; summ-ar-ise, a coined word. Also summ-it, q. v. And see supreme, sovereign, soprano.

SUMACH, a tree. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Sumach or Sumack, a kind of rank-smelling shrub that bears a black berry made use of by curriers to dress their leather;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt sumack, sumake, sumaque in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a similar definition. ME. sumac, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 218, l. 19.—F. sumac, formerly spelt sumach; Littré.—Span. sumaque.—Arab. sumāq, a species of shrub; Rich. Dict. p. 847. Another Arab. name is samāqil (id.); this will account for another F. form sommail, noticed by Littré.

SUMMER (1), the warmest season of the year. (E.) ME. somer, sumer (with one m), Chaucer, C. T. 396 (A 394). AS. sumor, sumer, Matt. xxiv. 32. +Du. zomer; Icel. sumar; Dan. summer; Swed. sommar; G. sommer; OHG. sumar. β. From a Teut. type **sum-rus*, m. (Franck); connected with Irish and OWelsh ham, W. haf, summer (the initial h standing, as usual, for s), Skt. samā, a year, Zend hama, summer. Brugmann, i. § 436. Der. summer, verb, to pass the summer, Isaiah, xviii. 6; summer-house, Amos, iii. 15.

SUMMER (2), a beam. (F.—Low L.—Gk.) See SUMPTER.

SUMMERSET, the same as Somersault, q. v.

SUMMIT, highest point, top. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 4. 70, iii. 3. 18; K. Lear, iv. 6. 57. Caxton has sommete, Godfrey of Bolyne, p. 251, l. 21.—F. sommet, 'the top,' Cot. Dimin., with suffix -et, of OF. som, the top, esp. of a hill; see Burguy, Littré.—L. summum, highest point, neut. of summus, highest; see SUM.

SUMMON, to cite to appear, call with authority. (F.—L.) The examples in the Glossary to Layamon, s. v. somniæn, show that two distinct words were early confused, viz. AS. samniæn, somniæn, to collect together (a derivative verb from saman, together, from sam, together) and OF. somoner, semoner, mod. F. semondre. But since summons, sb., and summoner are both F. words, and the word to summon properly belongs to the law-courts, we need only here consider the F. form. We find let somony=caused to attend, in Rob. of Glouc. p. 377, l. 7739; and the word somne in Chaucer, C. T. 6943 (D 1361), clearly refers to the mod. E. sense of summon, though its form would suit the AS. somniæn equally well.—OF. somoner (Roquefort), in which form it is rare, having been early corrupted to semoner or semondre. Cotgrave gives F. semondre, 'to bid, invite, summon, warn, cite.' Littré gives an 11th-cent. example of the form sumoner; and Roquefort gives an excellent example in which the OF. somoner is used with the orig. sense of 'to admonish,' the word somonoit being used to translate L. admonēret; Dial. de Saint Grégoire, liv. 2. chap. 5. Cf. Prov. somondre, to summon, a common word (Bartsch).—L. summonēre, to remind privily.—L. sum- (for sub before m); and monēre, to advise; see SUB- and MONITION. Der. summon-er, ME. sompnour, Chaucer, C. T. 625 (represented by mod. E. Sumner as a proper name), also somonour, P. Plowman, B. iii. 133 (footnote), from the AF. sumenour, Laws of Will. I. § 47, MF. semonneur, 'a summoner, citer, apparitor,' Cot. Also summon-s, ME. somouns, Allit. Morte Arthure, 91, from the AF. somonse, f. Stat. Realm, i. 29 (1295), MF. semonce, 'a warning, citation, summons,' Cot.; Littré explains that the F. semonce, formerly semonse (somonse), is the fem. of semons (somons), the pp. of semondre (so*monde*), to summon. Cf. Prov. somonsa, a summons, cited by Littré; we also find Prov. somos, somosta, semosta used in the same sense. Thus the s at the end of summons is not due to the L. sum-moneās, as some have supposed.

SUMPITAN, a blow-pipe. (Malay.) Malay sumpit. — Malay sumpit (also menyumpit), to blow; with suffix -an.

SUMPTER, a horse for carrying burdens, a pack-horse. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) Two forms of the word were once in use, viz. ME. somer, King Alisaunder, 850, and sumpter, id. 6023. The former, once the commoner form, is now lost; but it is necessary to explain it first. 1. From OF. somier, sommier (Burguy), a pack-horse; formed, with suffix -ier of the agent, from OF. somme, some, saume, sume, a pack, burden. [Cotgrave gives OF. sommier, 'a sumpter-horse, also the piece of timber called a summer.'] — Late L. salma, corrupt form of sagma, a pack, burden; whence sagmārius, salmārius, a pack-horse (>F. sommier). — Gk. σάγμα, a pack-saddle. — Gk. σάττειν (= **σάκ-yeiv*, fut. σάξω), to pack, put a burden on a horse, fasten on a load, orig. to fasten. Allied to Gk. σάχη, housings, σάχος, a soldier's cloak. 2. The etymology of sumpter is similar; it orig. meant, not the horse, but the horse's driver; and such is the sense in King Alisaunder, 6023, where the sumpters are reckoned among the squires and guides belonging to an army. Hence, also, the mod. E. sumpter-horse, i. e. a baggage-carrier's horse, the addition of horse being necessary to the sense, whereas the ME. somer was used alone, in the same sense. Sumpter is, accordingly, from OF. sommetier, a packhorse-driver (Roquefort). This answers to a Low L. **sagmārius*, not found, but formed from the Gk. σαγμαρ-, the true stem of σάγμα, just as sagmārius is formed from σάγμα. 3. The E. word summer, noticed by Cotgrave (above) as meaning 'a beam,' is worth notice. It occurs in Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 696, and is given in Halliwell; being so called from its bearing a great burden or weight; cf. Norman dial. sommier, a summer (Duméril). Hence also the E. breast-summer (gen. pronounced bressomer), defined in Webster as 'a summer or beam placed breast-wise to support a superincumbent wall.' Note that sumpter in K. Lear, ii. 4. 219, does not mean 'a packhorse,' but a packhorse-driver.

SUMPTUARY, relating to expenses. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate E. somptuaire. It is rather Englished from L. sumptuarius, belonging to expenses, than borrowed from French. Formed, with suffix -arius, from sumptus, decl. stem of sumptus, expense, cost; see Sumptuous.

SUMPTUOUS, expensive, costly. (F. — L.) 'Sumptuous expenses of the meane people;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 28. — F. somptueux, 'sumptuous,' Cot. — L. sumptuosus, costly. — L. sumptu-, decl. stem of sumptus, expense, cost. — L. sumptus, pp. of sūmere, to take, spend, consume. β. Sūmere (**sups-emere*) is a derivative of emere, to buy, orig. to take. Brugmann, i. § 240. See Sus- and Example. Der. sumptuously, -ness.

SUN, the celestial body which is the source of light and heat. (E.) ME. sonne, two syllables, Chaucer, C. T. 7. AS. sunne, a fem. sb., Exod. xvi. 21, xvii. 12 (common). + Du. zon, fem. sb.; Icel. sunna, fem., only in poetry, the common word being sól; G. sonne, fem.; OHG. sunna; Goth. sunna, masc., sunnō, fem. β. The Teut. type is **sunnōn-*, fem. Here -nōn is a suffix (as in Teut. **ster-nōn-*, a star); and the base **sun-* is the weak grade of a root **swen*, which is prob. allied to the root **sāu*, **sū*, 'to shine,' whence Goth. sau-il, L. sō-l, the sun, Icel. sól-l, the sun. See Solar. Der. sun, verb; sun-beam, AS. sunnebeām; sun-burnt; sun-rise, spelt sonne ryse in Palsgrave; sun-set, spelt sonne sette in Palsgrave, ONorthumb. sun-set, Matt. xxiv. 27 (Lindisfarne MS.). Also Sun-day, AS. sunnan dæg, lit. 'day of the sun,' where sunnan is the gen. case. Other compounds are sun-fish, -flower, -shine, -stroke, sunn-y, sun-less, sun-ward; and see south.

SUNDER, to part, divide. (E.) ME. sundren, Ancren Riwe, p. 270, last line. AS. sundrian, gesundrian, Grein, i. 459; also syndrian, in comp. āsundrian, Matt. x. 35; lit. 'to put asunder.' — AS. sundor, adv., asunder, Grein, ii. 495. + Icel. sundra, to sunder, from sundr, adv., asunder; Dan. søndre, to sunder, from sønder, adv.; Swed. söndra, from sönder, adv.; G. sondern, from sonder, adj., separate. And cf. Goth. sundrō, adv., separately; Du. zonder, conj., but. β. All allied to Gk. ᾀ-rep (for **sānter*), without, Skt. san-utar, aside, far from (Macdonell); so that -der in sun-der, adv., is a suffix. Further allied to OIrish sain, separate, L. sin-e, without. Brugmann, i. § 500. Der. a-sunder, q. v.; sundr-y, adj., separate, hence several, divers, ME. sundry, sondry, Chaucer, C. T. 4601 (B 181), from AS. syndrig, Luke, iv. 40, for **sunderig*, and formed with suffix -ig (mod. E. -y) from sundor, adv., as above.

SUP, to imbibe, as a liquid, gradually; also, to eat a supper. (E.) Once a strong verb; the short u is prob. due to association with supper, q. v. ME. soupen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 96, vi. 220. AS. sūpan (strong verb, pt. t. sēap, pl. sūpon, pp. sopen), Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 58, ed. Sweet, p. 447, l. 1. + Du. zuipen; Low G. supen; Icel. sūpa (pt. t. saup, pp. sopin); Swed. supa; OHG. sūfan. β. All from Teut. type **sūpan-* (pt. t. saup, pp. supanoz), to drink in, sup up. ¶ Partly from OF. souper, to sup; it makes but slight difference. Der. sup, sb., sop, sip; also soup, q. v., supp-er, q. v.

SUPER-, prefix, above. (L.) L. super, above, prep.; orig. a comparative form of **sup*, orig. form of sub; see Sub-. Orig. a locative case of superus, adj., upper (for s-uperus, where s- is a weak form of ex); whence Superior. + Gk. ὑπέρ, above; orig. a locative case of ὑπερος, upper, comparative from ὑπό (E. hypo-); see Hyper-, Hypo-; allied to Skt. upari, above, locative of Vedic upara, compar. of upa, near, close to, under. See Over. Der. super-ior, supreme, in-super-able; super-b, super-n-al. Doublet, hyper-, prefix. And see supra-, prefix.

SUPERABOUND, to be more than enough. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave; and Howell, Famil. Letters, b. iv. let. 39, § 3. — F. super-abonder, 'to superabound,' Cot. — L. superabundāre, to be very abundant. — L. super and abundāre; see Super- and Abound. Der. superabundance, from F. superabondance, 'superabundance,' Cot., L. superabundantia; also superabundant, adj., from the stem of the L. pres. part.; superabundant-ly.

SUPERADD, to add over and above. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and earlier, see Richardson. — L. superaddere; see Super- and Add. Der. superaddit-ion (not in Cotgrave).

SUPERANNUATE, to disqualify by length of years. (L.) Bacon has superannate = to live beyond the year, used of annual plants; Nat. Hist. § 448. This is cited by Richardson, who misspells it. Howell has 'superannuated virgin;' Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 12; A. D. 1619. Blount, ed. 1674, has both superannate and superannuate. An ill-coined word, prob. suggested by annu-al, annuity; Bacon's superannate is countenanced by Late L. superannātus, that has lived beyond a year; hence F. suranner, 'to passe or exceed the compass of a year; also, to wax very old;' Cot. Thus superannate is for superannate; coined from super, above, and annus, a year. See Super- and Annual. Der. superannuat-ion.

SUPERB, proud, magnificent. (F. — L.) Quite a late word; in Prior, Alma, c. i. l. 383. — F. superbe, 'proud;' Cot. — L. superbum, acc. of superbus, proud. β. Lit. 'one who thinks himself (or is) above others;' for **super-fu-os*, 'being above,' from super, above, and fu-, as in L. fu-i, I was. Brugmann, ii. § 4. See Super-, Der. superb-ly.

SUPERCARGO, an officer in a merchant-ship. (L.; and Span. — C.) 'Supercargo, a person employed by the owners of a ship to go a voyage, to oversee the cargo, &c. ; Phillips, ed. 1706. Partially translated from Span. sobrecargo, a supercargo, by substituting L. super for Span. sobre, which is the Span. form of the same word. See Super- and Cargo.

SUPEREROGATION, doing more than duty requires. (L.) 'Works of supererogation;' Articles of Religion, Art. 14 (1562). From Late L. supererogātio, that which is done beyond what is due. — L. supererogāre, to pay out beyond what is expected. — L. super, above, beyond; ē, out; and rogāre, to ask. The L. erogāre = to lay out, expend money (lit. to ask out, require). See Super-, E-, and Rogation.

SUPEREXCELLENT, very excellent. (L.; and F. — L.) Used by Spenser in a postscript to a letter to G. Harvey (R.). — L. super, above; and MF. excellēt; see Super- and Excellent.

SUPERFICIES, the surface of a thing. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cotgrave, to translate F. superficie and surface. — L. superficiēs, upper face, surface. — L. super-, above; and faciēs, a face; see Super- and Face. Der. superfici-al, in Lydgate, Assembly of the Gods, l. 538, from F. superficiel, 'superficial,' Cot., from L. superficiālis; superfici-al-ly, -ness; also superfici-al-i-ty, spelt superficialite in Palsgrave, from MF. superficialité, recorded by Palsgrave. Doublet, surface.

SUPERFINE, extremely fine. (L.; and F. — L.) 'Many inventions are so superfine;' Gascoigne, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 500; also in Steel Glas, &c., ed. Arber, p. 31. Coined from super and fine; see Super- and Fine (1).

SUPERFLUOUS, excessive. (L.) 'A superfluous abundaunce;' Sir T. Elyot, Castell of Helth, b. iii. c. 1. [Palsgrave gives superflue as an E. word, from F. superflu, superfluous.] Englished from L. superfluus, overflowing. — L. super, over; and fluere, to flow; see Super- and Fluent. Der. superfluous-ly; superflu-i-ty, ME. superfluite, Gower, C. A. ii. 201, bk. v. 2217, from F. superfluité, 'superfluity,' Cot., from L. acc. superfluitatem.

SUPERHUMAN, more than human. (L.; and F.—L.) Spelt superhumane in Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Super- and Human.

SUPERIMPOSE, SUPERINCUMBENT, SUPERINDUCE; see Super- and Impose, Incumbent, Induce.

SUPERINTENDENT, an overseer. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — MF. superintendant, 'a superintendent,' Cot. — L. superintendens, stem of pres. part. of superintendere, to superintend. — L. super, over, above; and intendere, to attend to, apply the mind. See Super- and Intend. [The verb superintend is directly from the Latin.] Der. superintendence, from MF. superintendence, 'a superintendency,' Cot.

SUPERIOR, higher in rank, &c. (F.—L.) Now spelt so as to resemble Latin; spelt superyour in Palsgrave; superior in Caxton, Golden Legend, Adam, § 6. — MF. superieur, 'superiour,' Cot. — L. superiorem, acc. of superior, higher, comp. of superus, high, which is itself an old comp. form from sub (orig. **sup*). Hence sup-er-ior is a double comparative; see Super- and Sub-. Der. superior-i-ty, from MF. superiorité, 'superiority,' Cot., from Late L. acc. superiōritatem.

SUPERLATIVE, superior, extreme, supreme. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Palsgrave, p. xxviii. — F. superlatif, 'superlative,' Cot. — L. superlātius, superlative, as a gram. term. — L. superlāt-us, excessive; with suffix -ius, lit. 'carried beyond,' exaggerated. — L. super, beyond; and lātus, carried, or borne. Lātus < **lātus*; see Super- and Tolerate. Der. superlative-ly.

SUPERNATURAL, miraculous. (F.—L.) In Macb. i. 3. 130; and in Palsgrave. — MF. supernaturel, 'supernaturall;' Cot. See Super- and Natural. Der. supernatural-ly.

SUPERScription, something written above or without. (F.—L.) ME. superscriptioun, Henrysoun, Test. of Cresseide, l. 604. — MF. superscription, 'a superscription;' Cot. — Late L. superscriptiōnem, acc. of superscriptio, a writing above, Luke, xxiii. 38 (Vulg.); cf. superscriptus, pp. of superscribere, to write above. — L. super, above; and scribere, to write; see Super- and Scribe. ¶ The verb superscribe is coined directly from L. superscribere.

SUPERSEDE, to displace by something else, to come in place of something else. (F.—L.) The word has much changed its meaning, both in L. and E. Supersede in old authors means to desist, forbear, stay proceedings, &c. Thus Rich. quotes from the State Trials, 19 Hen. VIII, an. 1528: 'He [Hen. VIII] desired the bishop of Paris to certify Francis, that if the Pope would supersede from executing his sentence, until he had indifferent [impartial] judges sent who might hear the business, he would also supersede from the execution of what he was deliberated to do in withdrawing his obedience from the Roman see.' 'Supersede, to suspend, demurr, put off or stop an affair or proceeding, to countermand;' Phillips. Thus, the sense was to stay a proceeding, whence, by an easy transition, to substitute some other proceeding for it. A writ of supersedeas is, in some cases, a writ to stay proceedings, and is mentioned in P. Plowman, C. iii. 187, on which see my note. — OF. superseder, superceder (mod. F. superséder), 'to surcease, leave off, give over;' Cot. — L. supersedere, pp. supersessus, lit. to sit upon, also to preside over, to forbear, refrain, desist from. — L. super, above; and sedere, cognate with E. sit. See Super- and Sit. Der. supersession, from MF. supersession, 'a surceasing, giving over, the suspension of an accompt upon the accomptant's humble suit;' Cot. — L. **supersessiōnem*, acc. of **supersessio*, not used, but regularly formed like supersessus, pp. of supersedere. Doublet, surcease, q. v.

SUPERSTITIOUS, excessiveness in religious worship or belief. (F.—L.) Skelton has supersticyons, s. pl., Philip Sparowe, l. 1350; the adj. superstitious occurs in Acts, xvii. 22, in the Bible of 1551 and in the A. V.; also, spelt supersticious, in Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. How the bishop Amphiorax, &c. — F. superstition, 'superstition;' Cot. — L. superstitionem, acc. of superstitio, a standing still over or near a thing, amazement, wonder, dread, religious scruple. —

L. superstit-, stem of superstes, one who stands near, a witness. — L. super, near, above; and statum, supine of stāre, to stand, which is cognate with E. stand. See Super- and Stand. Der. superstitious, as above, from F. superstitieux, 'superstitious,' Cot.; from L. adj. superstitiosus; superstiti-ous-ly.

SUPERSTRUCTURE, the upper part of a building. (L.) 'In som places, as in Amsterdam, the foundation costs more than the superstructure;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. sect. 2. let. 15; May 1, 1622. From Super- and Structure.

SUPERVENE, to occur or happen in consequence of, to occur, happen. (L.) 'Supervening follies;' Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 12 (R.). — L. superuenire, to come upon or over, to come upon, to follow; pp. superuentus. — L. super, over, upon, near; and uenire, to come, cognate with E. come. See Super- and Venture or Come. Der. supervent-ion, regularly formed like the pp. superuentus.

SUPERVISE, to inspect, oversee. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 135. — L. super, above; and uisere, to survey, formed from uis-um, supine of uidere, to see. See Super- and Visit or Vision. Der. supervise, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 23; supervis-or, Oth. iii. 3. 395 (First Quarto); supervis-ion, ibid. (Folio editions); supervis-al.

SUPINE, lying on one's back, lazy. (L.) Sir T. Browne has supinity, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 5, § 3. 'Supine felicity;' Dryden, Astræa, 107. As a term in grammar; Palsgrave, p. xxxvii. — L. supinus, backward, lying on one's back; extended, with suffix -inus, from **sup*, orig. form of sub, under, below; hence, downward. Cf. sup-er, from the same source. So also Gk. ὑπίος, bent backwards, backward, lying on one's back, from ὑπό, under. See Sub-. Der. supine, sb., as a grammatical term, L. supinum, of which the applied sense is not very obvious (perhaps positive, absolute, like Gk. θετικόν, absolute, as applied to verbal forms); supine-ly, supine-ness; also supin-i-ty, as above, prob. obsolete.

SUPPER, a meal at the close of a day. (F.—Tent.) ME. soper, super; spelt super, Havelok, 1762. — OF. soper, super, later souper, 'a supper;' Cot. It is the infin. mood used as a substantive, exactly as in the case of dinner. — OF. soper, super, later souper, to sup, to eat a meal of bread sopped in gravy, &c. [Cf. OF. sop, soupe, later soupe, 'a sop, a piece of bread in broth, also pottage or broth, wherein there is store of sops or sippets,' Cot.] — Low G. supen, to sup or sip up; Icel. sūpa, Swed. supa, to sup; cognate with E. Sup, q. v.

SUPLANT, to take the place of, displace, undermine. (F.—L.) ME. supplanten, Gower, C. A. i. 239, bk. ii. 2369. — F. supplanter, 'to supplant, root or trip up;' Cot. — L. supplantāre, to put something under the sole of the foot, to trip up the heels, overthrow. — L. sup- (sub); and planta, the sole of the foot, also a plant. See Sub- and Plant. Der. supplant-er, spelt supplantour, in Gower, C. A. i. 261, bk. ii. 3024.

SUPPLE, pliant, lithē, fawning. (F.—L.) ME. souple, Chaucer, C. T. 203; Rob. of Glouc. p. 223, l. 4577. — F. souple, spelt soupple in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'supple, limber, tender, pliant.' — L. supplicem, acc. of supplex, in the old orig. sense of 'bending under,' hence submissive, which is the usual sense in Latin. The OF. soplier, vb., also kept the orig. sense, though the classical L. supplicāre only means to beseech; hence Cotgrave has 'souplesié, bent or bowed underneath, subject unto.' β. The formation of souple from supplicem is precisely like that of E. double from dupplicem, treble from triplicem, simple from simplicem. γ. The L. supplex is from sup- (sub) and the base plī-, as seen in plī-āre, to fold. See Sub- and Ply; also Supplicate. Der. supple-ness.

SUPPLEMENT, that which supplies, an addition. (F.—L.) In Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, 415. — F. supplément, 'a supplement;' Cot. — L. supplémentum, a supplement, filling up. — L. supplē-re, to fill up; with suffix -men-tum. — L. sup- (sub), up; and plē-re, to fill; see Supply. Der. supplement-al, supplement-ar-y.

SUPLIANT, entreating earnestly. (F.—L.) In Rich. II, v. 3. 75. — F. suppliant, 'suppliant;' Cot.; pres. pt. of supplier, 'humbly to pray,' id. — L. supplicāre, to supplicate; see Supplicate. Doublet, suppliant.

SUPPLICATE, to entreat. (L.) In Blount, ed. 1674; it seems to be quite a late word, though supplication, spelt supplicacion, is in Gower, C. A. iii. 348, bk. viii. 2184, and suppliant in Shak. Complaint, 276. — L. supplicāt-us, pp. of supplicāre, to supplicate. — L. supplic-, stem of supplex, bending under or down, hence beseeching, suppliant; see Supple. Der. supplic-ant, from the stem of the pres. pt. of supplicāre; supplicat-or-y; supplicat-ion (as above), from F. supplication, 'a supplication,' Cot., from L. acc. supplicatiōnem. Also suppliant, q. v.

SUPPLY, to fill up a deficiency. (F.—L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 1. 38. Levins (1570) spells it supploy, and Huloet has suppoye; Palsgrave has suppoye. — OF. supploier; F. suppléer, 'to supply;'

Cot.—L. supplere, to fill up.—L. sup- (sub), up; and plere, to fill; see Sub- and Plenary. Der. supply, sb., Hamlet, ii. 2. 24; and see supple-ment.

SUPPORT, to endure, sustain. (F.—L.) ME. supporten, Wyclif, 2 Cor. xi. 1.—F. supporter, 'to support'; Cot.—L. supportare, to carry, bring, or convey to a place; in Late L. to endure, sustain.—L. sup- (sub), near; and portare, to carry; see Sub- and Port (1). Der. support, sb., ME. support, Gower, C. A. iii. 193, bk. vii. 3207, from F. support, 'a support,' Cot.; support-er, support-able, support-abl-y.

SUPPOSE, to assume as true, imagine. (F.—L. and Gk.) ME. supposen, Chaucer, C. T. 6368 (D 786).—F. supposer, 'to suppose, to put, lay, or set under, to suborn, forge; also to suppose, imagine'; Cot.—F. sup-, prefix < L. sup- (sub), prefix, under; and F. poser, to place, put. Thus the orig. sense is 'to lay under, put under,' hence to substitute, forge, counterfeit; all of which are senses of L. supponere. β. The F. poser is not from L. ponere, but from Gk., though it (with all its compounds) took up the senses of L. ponere. See further under POSE; and note Cotgrave's use of the verb to suppone, now obsolete. Der. suppos-er, suppos-able; but not supposition, q.v.

SUPPOSITION, an assumption, thing supposed. (F.—L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 18.—F. supposition, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th cent. (Littre).—L. suppositionem, acc. of suppositio, properly 'a substitution,' but extended in meaning according to the extension of meaning of the verb supponere (pp. suppositus) from which it is derived.—L. sup- (sub), under, near; and ponere, to place; see Sub- and Position. Der. supposit-ic-i-ous, spurious, substituted, from L. suppositicius, formed with suffix -ic-i-us from supposit-, stem of pp. of supponere, of which one sense was 'to substitute.' Also supposit-or-y, as in 'suppositories are used where the patient is weak,' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5, from L. suppositorius, that which is placed underneath. (See note on Suppose.)

SUPPRESS, to crush, keep in, retain, conceal. (L.) The instance of suppressed, cited by Rich. from Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii, The Answer of Ethiocles, is not to the point; it is clearly an error for surprised. For the verb suppress, see Palsgrave.—L. suppressus, pp. of supprimere, to press under, suppress.—L. sup- (sub), under; and primere, to press; see Sub- and Press. Der. suppress-or, L. suppressor; suppress-ion, printed suppression in Sir T. More, p. 250 f, from F. suppression, 'suppression,' Cot., from L. acc. suppressionem. Also suppress-ive, a coined word.

SUPRA-, prefix, above. (L.) L. suprā-, prefix; from suprā, adv. and prep., short for superā, the orig. form, Lucretius, iv. 674; orig. abl. fem. of superus, adj., above.—L. super, above; see Super-, Sub-.

SUPRAMUNDANE, situate above the world. (L.) 'Supramundane deities,' Waterland, Works, i. 86 (R.); and in Blount, ed. 1674. A coined word; from Supra- and Mundane. ¶ Similarly formed is supralapsarian, antecedent to the fall, from suprā, above, and laps-um, acc. of laps-us, a fall; with suffix -arian; see Lapse.

SUPREME, greatest, most excellent. (F.—L.) Accented supreme, Cor. iii. 1. 110; usually suprême, K. John, iii. 1. 155.—F. supreme, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre); now written suprême.—L. supremus, supreme, highest. Formed with superl. suffix -mus from **suprē-*, an adverb allied to L. super, above. Brugmann, ii. § 75. See Super-. Der. supreme-ly; also suprem-a-cy, K. John, iii. 1. 156 (cf. F. suprémie, Littre, not in Cotgrave), a word arbitrarily formed on the model of primacy (OF. primacie, Late L. primatia) from primate.

SUR- (1), prefix. (L.) For sub- before r following; see Sub-. Only in sur-reptitious and sur-rogate.

SUR- (2), prefix. (F.—L.) F. sur, prep., contr. from L. super, upon, above. Exx. sur-crease, sur-charge, sur-face, &c.

SURCEASE, to cease, to cause to cease. (F.—L.) It is obvious, from the usual spelling, that this word is popularly supposed to be allied to cease, with which it has no etymological connexion. It is a corruption of sursis or sursise, and is etymologically allied to supersede. It was very likely misunderstood from the first, yet Fabian spells the word with s for c, correctly. 'By whiche reason the kyngdome of Mercia surceased, that had contynued from their firste kyng'; Fabian, Chron. c. 171, § 5. 'To surseise and leve off' [leave off]; Paston Letters, i. 390. β. But the verb is really due to the sb. surcease, a delay, cessation, which was in use as a law-term, and prob. of some antiquity in this use, though I do not know where to find an early E. example. It occurs in Shak. Macb. i. 7. 4, and (according to Richardson) in Bacon, Of Church Controversies; Nares cites an example from Danett's tr. of Comines (published in 1596 and 1600).—AF. sursise, a surcease, 'Ki le cri orat e sursera, la sursise enuers li rei amend'; in Latin, 'qui, clamore audito, insequi supersederit, de sursisa erga regem emendat'; Laws of Will. I, § 50; F. sursis, masc., sursise, fem., 'surceased, intermitted'; Cot. Littre quotes 'pendant ce sursis' = during this delay, from Ségur, Hist. de Nap. x. 2. Sursis is the pp. of AF. surseer (pr. pl. subj. surseis-ent), Stat. Realm, i. 49, 300; MF. surseoir, 'to surcease, pause, intermit, leave off, give over, delay or stay for a time,' Cot.—L. supersedere, to preside over, also to forbear, refrain, desist from, omit; see Supersede. The word also appears in F. as superséder, spelt also superceder in Cotgrave, and explained by 'to surcease, leave off, give over.' This shows that not only was surcease wrongly connected in the popular mind with cease, but that, even in F., superséder was similarly connected with L. cedere, from which cease is derived. Der. surcease, sb., really the older word, as shown above.

SURCHARGE, an over-load. (F.—L.) 'A surcharge, or greater charge,' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 228.—AF. surcharge, Year-books of Edw. I. 1304-5, p. 45; F. surcharge, 'a surcharge, or a new charge,' Cot.—F. sur, from L. super, over; and charge, a load; see Sur- (2) and Charge. Der. surcharge, vb., from F. surcharger, 'to surcharge,' Cot.

SURCINGLE, a girth for a horse, a girdle. (F.—L.) 'Sur-senglys and crowpers' [cruppers]; Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. vii. ch. 16; leaf 119, back.—OF. sourcengle, surcengle (Godefroy), MF. sursangle, 'a sursengle, or long girth,' Cot.—F. sur-, above; and OF. cengle, 'a girth,' Cot.—L. super, above; and cingula, a belt. See Sur- and Shingles.

SURCOAT, an outer garment. (F.—L. and G.) ME. surcote, Chaucer, C. T. A 617.—AF. surcote, Liber Custumarum, p. 226. See Sur- (2) and Coat.

SURD, inexpressible by a rational number or having no rational root. (L.) Cotgrave translates nombre sourd by 'a surd number.' A term in mathematics, equivalent to irrational, in the math. sense.—L. surdus, deaf; hence, deaf to reason, irrational. The word is frequently applied to colours, when it means dim, indistinct, dull; thus surdus color = a dim colour, Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xxxvii. c. 5. So likewise L. sordere = to be dirty. See Sordid. Brugmann, i. § 362. Der. surd, adj., irrational; absurd, q.v.

SURE, certain, secure. (F.—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. ME. sur, Will. of Palerne, 973; seur, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, 2033.—OF. sur, seür, oldest form segur (Burgny); mod. F. sûr.—L. sēcūrus, secure, sure; see Secure. Der. sure, adv., sure-ly, sure-ty, ME. seurte, Will. of Palerne, 1463, also seurtee, Chaucer, C. T. 4663 (B 243), from OF. seürte, segurtet, from L. acc. sēcūritātem. Hence sure-ty-ship, Prov. xi. 15. Doublets, secure, sicker.

SURF, the foam made by the rush of waves on the shore. (E.) This is a difficult word, being disguised by a false spelling; the r is unoriginal, just as in the word hoarse, which is similarly disguised. The spelling surf is in Defoe, Robinson Crusoe, ed. 1719, pt. i, in the description of the making of the raft. 'My Raft was now strong enough . . . my next care was . . . how to preserve what I laid upon it from the Surf of the Sea.' But the earlier spelling is suffe, with the sense of 'rush,' in a remarkable passage in Hakluyt's Voyages, ed. 1598, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 227, where we are told that certain small rafts are carried to the shore by the force of the in-rushing wave; 'the Suffe of the Sea setteth her [the raft's] lading dry on land.' So also: 'so neere the shore, that the counter-suffe of the sea would rebound against the shippes side'; id. iii. 848. β. This suffe is, I believe, a phonetic spelling of the word usually spelt sough, i.e. 'rush' or 'rushing noise'; see sough o' the sea in Jamieson, who also spells it souf and souch. And see sough, souff, suff, in E. D. D. The word sough has lost a w after the s; the Middle-English spelling is swough or swow, in the sense of 'rush,' or 'rushing sound.' 'For swoughe of his dynttez' = for the rushing sound of his blows; Morte Arthure, 1127. But it was particularly used of the swaying or rushing of the sea; 'with the swoghe of the see' = with the swaying motion [surf] of the sea; id. 759. Halliwell notes prov. E. swowe, 'to make a noise, as water does in rushing down a precipice; also, to foam or boil up,' &c. Cf. 'swowynge of watyre,' rushing of water, accompanied by noise; Morte Arthure, 931. γ. The ME. verb swowen or swogen answers to AS. swōgan, to make a rushing noise, &c., treated of under Swoon, q.v. The derived sb. in AS. took the form swæg (with vowel-change from ō to ē), and this word answers in force, though not in form, to E. sough. Hence a secondary form swēgan, with much the same sense as the primary verb swēgan. In Luke, xxi. 25, we might almost translate swēg by surf; 'for gedrēfednesse sēs swēges and ȝba'=for confusion of the sound [surf] of the sea and waves; L. præ confusione sonitus maris. In Ælfric's Hom. i. 566, l. 7, we have: 'com sēo sē færlīce swēgende,' which Thorpe translates by 'the sea came suddenly sounding;' but it rather means rushing in, as appears by the context. In Ælfric's Hom. i. 562, l. 14, we read that a spring or well of water 'swēgde út,' i.e. rushed out, or gushed forth, rather than 'sounded out,' as Thorpe translates it. δ. There is thus plenty of authority for the use of ME. sough with the sense of 'rush' or 'noisy gush,' which will well explain both Hakluyt's suffe and mod. E. surf. I believe this will be found to be the right explanation. ε. We may connect surf with Norweg. sog in some of its senses, viz. (1) a noise, tumult, rushing sound; and (2) a current in a river, the inclination of a river-bed, where the stream is swift, i.e. a rapid. [This is distinct from Norweg. sog in the sense of 'sucking.'] ¶ The usual explanation of surf from F. surflot [L. super-fluctus], 'the rising of billow upon billow, or the interchanged swelling of severall waves,' as in Cotgrave, is unlikely; for (1) it interprets f as equivalent to a whole word, viz. F. flot, and (2) it is contradicted by the form suffe, which involves no r at all.

SURFACE, the upper face of anything. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. surface, 'the surface, the superficies;' Cot. Not directly derived from L. superficies, but compounded of F. sur (from L. super, above), and face (from L. faciem, acc. of faciēs, the face); see Sur- (2) and Face. However, it exactly corresponds to L. superficiēs, which is compounded in like manner of super and faciēs. Hence the words are doublets. Doublet, superficiēs.

SURFEIT, excess in eating and drinking. (F.—L.) ME. surfet, P. Plowman, A. vii. 252; surfait, id. B. vi. 267.—AF. surfet, a surfeit, A Nominale, ed. Skeat, l. 343; OF. sorfait, excess (Burguy); orig. pp. of sorfaire, later surfaire, 'to overprise, to hold at an overdear rate;' Cot.—OF. sor, F. sur, from L. super, above; and F. fait (pp. of faire), from L. factus (pp. of facere), to make, hence, to hold, deem. See Sur- (2) and Fact. Der. surfeit, verb, spelt surfet in Palsgrave; surfeit-ing, sb.

SURGE, the swell of waves, a billow. (F.—L.) The orig. sense was 'a rising' or rise, or source. 'All great ryuers are gurged and assemblede of diuers surges and springes of water;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 1 (R.). 'Wyndes and sourges;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, bk. ii. c. 14. 'Thus with a surge of teares bedeweide;' Turberville, The Louer to his carefull Bed. 'Surge of the see, uague;' Palsgrave. Coined from OF. stem sourge-, as in sourgeant, pres. pt. of sourdre, to rise.—L. surgere, to rise. Cf. MF. sourgeon, 'the spring of a fountain, or the rising, boyling, or sprouting out of water in a spring,' Cot., which is likewise derived from the same L. verb. The proper F. sb. is source, E. source; see Source. β. The L. surgere makes pt. t. surrexi, showing that it is contracted from surrigere; from L. sur- (for sub before r), and regere, to rule, direct; thus the orig. sense was 'to direct or take one's way from under,' hence to rise up. See Sub- and Regent. Der. surge, verb, surge-y. Also (from surgere) in-surgent, re-surrect-ion, source, re-source, sortie.

SURGEON, a chirurgion, one who cures diseases by operating upon the patient. (F.—L.—Gk.) A very early contraction of chirurgion. ME. surgien, P. Plowman, B. xx. 308; surgeyn, surgen, id. C. xxiii. 310, 313; spelt cirurgian, Rob. of Glouc. p. 566, l. 11925.—OF. surgien (Godefroy); variant of cirurgien, serurgien, a surgeon; see Littré, s.v. chirurgien; the AF. forms surigien, surrigien, sirogen, cyrogen, all occur in Langtoft, Chron. ii. 104, 158; and surgion is in Britton, i. 34.—OF. cirurgie, later chirurgie, surgery; with suffix -en < L. -ānus. See further under Surgery.

SURGERY, the art practised by a surgeon, operation on a patient. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. surgerie, Chaucer, C. T. 415 (A 413). A variation of OF. cirurgie, sirurgie, later form chirurgie, surgery. We have, in fact, turned cirurgy or sirurgy into surgery; perhaps through a form surgeon-ry; for the spelling surgenry occurs as a reading in P. Plowman, B. xvi. 106.—Late L. chirurgia.—Gk. χειρουργία, a working with the hands, handicraft, skill with the hands.—Gk. χείρ, from χείρ, the hand; and ἐργεῖν, to work, allied to E. work; see Chirurgion and Work. Der. surgeon, short for cirurgien, old form of chirurgion. Der. surgi-c-al, short for chirurgical, formed with suffix -al (F. -el, L. -ālis) from Late L. chirurgic-us, an extended form of chirurgus=Gk. χειρουργός, working with the hand, skilful; hence surgi-c-al-ly.

SURLOIN, the upper part of a loin of beef. (F.—L.) Frequently spelt sirloin, owing to a fable that the loin of beef was knighted 'by one of our kings in a fit of good humour,' see Johnson. The 'king' was naturally imagined to be the merry monarch Charles II, though Richardson says (on no authority) that it was 'so entitled by King James the First.' Both stories are discredited by the use of the orig. F. word surlonge in the fourteenth century; see Littré. Indeed, Wedgwood cites 'A surloyn beef,' vii. d. from an account of expenses of the Ironmongers' Company, temp. Henry VI; with a reference to the Athenæum, Dec. 28, 1867 (p. 902). Cotgrave explains MF. haut coste by 'a surloine.'—F. surlonge, 'a sirloin,' Hamilton; see Littré for its use in the 14th cent.—F. sur, from L. super, above, upon; and longe, a loin; see Super- and Loin.

SURLY, morose, uncivil. (E.) In Shak. K. John, iii. 3. 42; &c. 'The orig. meaning [or rather, the meaning due to popular etymology] seems to have been sir-like, magisterial, arrogant. "For shepherds, said he, there doen leade As Lordes done other-where . . . Sike syrlye shepheards han we none;" Spenser, Sheph. Kal. July, 185–203. Ital. signoreggiare, to have the mastery, to domineer; signoregevole, magisterial, haughty, stately, surlly; Altieri. Faire du grobis, to be proud or surly, to take much state upon him; Cotgrave:—Wedgwood. I give the quotation from Cotgrave slightly altered to the form in which it stands in ed. 1660. As to the spelling, it is remarkable that while Spenser has syrlye, the Glosse to the Sheph. Kal. by E. K. has 'surlly, stately and prowde.' Drant (1566) has 'His surlly corps in rytche array;' tr. of Horace, Sat. 3. Minshew has surlie. Cotgrave has: 'Sourcilleux, . . . surlly, or proud of countenance.' It answers to prov. E. soorlike, ill-tempered, cross, surlly, lit. 'sour-like' (E. D. D.); and the u has been shortened before rl, as in burly from an AS. form **būr-līc*; see Burly. Cf. prov. E. sour, ill-tempered, surlly, cross (E. D. D.); and Baret has 'sowre, morose.' See Sour. Cf. G. sauer, sour, surlly; MSwed. sur (the same); Swed., Dan. syrilig, sourish. And note ME. surdagh, sour dough; Voc. 663. 22. Der. surlly-ly, surlly-ness.

SURMISE, an imagination, suspicion, guess. (F.—L.) Levins has surmise both as sb. and vb.; so has Baret (1580). Caxton has: 'xxxm li. that he had surmysed on hym to haue stolen;' Golden Legend, Th. Becket, § 4. Halliwell gives the obs. verb surmit, with an example.—OF. surmise, an accusation, charge (Roquefort); properly fem. of surmis, pp. of surmettre, to charge, accuse, lit. 'to put upon,' hence to lay to one's charge, make one to be suspected of.—F. sur, from L. super, upon, above; and F. mettre, to put, from L. mittere, to send; see Super- and Mission. Der. surmise, verb; surmis-al, Milton, Church Government, ii., Int.

SURMOUNT, to surpass. (F.—L.) ME. surmounten, spelt sormounten, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 8, l. 19.—F. surmonter, 'to surmount;' Cot. From Sur- (2) and Mount (2). Der. surmount-able, in-surmount-able.

SURNAME, a name added to the Christian name. (Hybrid; F.—L.; and E.) In Trevisa, iii. 265, l. 10. See Trench, Study of Words. A partial translation of ME. surnom, spelt sournoun in Chron. of Eng. 982 (in Ritson, Met. Romances, ii. p. 311), from F. surnom, 'a surname;' Cot.—F. sur, from L. super, over, above; and E. name. See Super- and Name; and see Noun. So also Span. sobrenombre, Ital. soprannome. Der. surname, verb.

SURPASS, to go beyond, excel. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 58.—F. surpasser, 'to surpass,' Cot. From Sur- (2) and Pass. Der. surpass-ing, surpass-able, un-surpass-able.

SURPLICE, a white garment worn by the clergy. (F.—L.) Spelt surplise, surplys, in Chaucer, C. T., A 323.—F. surplis, 'a surplis;' Cot.—Late L. superpelliceum, a surplice.—L. super, above; and pelliceum, neut. of pelliceus, pellicius, made of skins; see Super- and Pelisse. Cf. 'surplyce, superpellicium;' Prompt. Parv. So also Span. sobrepelliz.

SURPLUS, overplus, excess of what is required. (F.—L.) ME. surplus, Gower, C. A. iii. 24; bk. vi. 682.—F. surplus, 'a surplusage, overplus;' Cot.—L. super, above; and plus, more; see Super- and Plural. Der. surplus-age, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 18; Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. Of a tame tiger, &c.; see Richardson.

SURPRISE, a taking unawares. (F.—L.) In Shak. Mer. Wives, v. 5. 131. The verb (though from the F. sb.) occurs earlier, Rom. of the Rose, 3235.—OF. sorprise, surprise (Burguy), MF. surprinse, 'a surprisall, or sudden taking;' Cot. Properly fem. of sorpris, surpris (surprins in Cot.), pp. of sorprendre, surprendre, 'to surprise, to take napping;' Cot.—F. sur, from L. super, above, upon; and prendre, from L. prehendere, to take; see Super- and Prehensile. Cf. Ital. sorprendere, to surprise. Der. surprise, verb, surpris-al (in Cotgrave, as above), surpris-ing, -ing-ly.

SURREBUTTER; see Surrejoinder.

SURREJOINDER, a rejoinder upon, or in answer to, a rejoinder. (F.—L.) 'The plaintiff may answer the rejoinder by a surrejoinder; upon which the defendant may rebut; and the plaintiff answer him by a surrebutter;' Blackstone, Comment., b. iii. c. 20 (R.). And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The prefix is F. sur, upon, hence, in answer to; see Sur- (2) and Rejoin. And see Rebut.

SURRENDER, to render up, resign, yield. (F.—L.) 'I surrender ie surrends.' Palsgrave.—OF. surrendre, to deliver up into the hands of justice, Roquefort, Palsgrave; not in Cotgrave. — F. sur, upon, up; and rendre, to render; see Sur- (2) and Render. Der. surrender, sb., Hamlet, i. 2. 23.

SURREPTITIOUS, done by stealth or fraud. (L.) 'A soden surreptitious delyte;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1278 (miscalled 1276) g. — L. surreptitius, better surrepticius, stolen, done stealthily. — L. surreptum, supine of surripere, to pilfer, purloin. — L. sur- (for sub before r), under, secretly; and rapere, to seize. See Sur- (1) and Rapid. Der. surreptitiously.

SURROGATE, a substitute, deputy of an ecclesiastical judge. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. surrogatus, pp. of surrogare, to substitute, elect in place of another. — L. sur- (for sub before r), under, in place of; and rogare, to ask, elect. See Sur- (1) and Rogation.

SURROUND, to encompass. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. Altered in sense by association with round; but the orig. sense was 'to overflow.' 'The waters more abounded, And . . . all abroad surrounded;' Marlowe, tr. of Ovid, bk. iii. Elegy 6. 'Oultrecouler, to surround or overflow;' Cot. Orig. surround (with one r): 'by thencrease of waters dyuers londes and tenementes in grete quantite ben surrounded and destroyed;' Stat. of Hen. VII (1489); pr. by Caxton, fol. c 7. — OF. souronder, soronder, surunder, to overflow (Godefroy). — L. super, over; and undare, to flow, from unda, a wave. So also red-ound, ab-ound, from OF. red-onder, ab-onder. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 286.

SURTOUT, an overcoat, close frock-coat. (F.—L.) In Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 250. 'Surtout, Surtout, a great upper coat;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Worn over all. — F. sur tout, over all. — L. super totum, over the whole; see Super- and Total.

SURVEILLANCE, inspection. (F.—L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. surveillance, superintendence; Hamilton. — F. surveillant, pres. part. of surveiller, to superintend. — F. sur, from L. super, over; and veiller, from L. uigilare, to watch; see Sur- (2) and Vigil. F. veillance < L. uigilantia.

SURVEY, to look over, inspect. (F.—L.) 'To suruey, or ouersee;' Minshew, ed. 1627. The obs. sb. surueance, surueyaunce, is in Chaucer, C. T. 12029 (C 95). — AF. surveier, Liber Albus, 512. — F. sur, over; and OF. veoir, veër, later veoir, 'to see,' Cot. — L. super, over; and uidere, to see; see Super- and Vision. And see Supervise. Der. survey, sb., All's Well, v. 3. 16; survey-or (suruyoure in Prompt. Parv.), AF. surueour, Stat. Realm, i. 289 (1340), survey-or-ship.

SURVIVE, to overlive, outlive. (F.—L.) Spelt survyue in Palsgrave. — F. survivre, 'to survive;' Cot. — L. superuiuere, to outlive. — L. super, above; and uiuere, to live; see Super- and Victual. Der. surviv-al, a coined word, Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. i. 638; surviv-or, Hamlet, i. 2. 90; surviv-or-ship.

SUS-, prefix. (L.) L. sus-, prefix; for **sups*, an extended form of **sup*, old form of sub, under; so also Gk. ὑψ-, aloft, ὑψ-os, height, from ὑπ-ό; see Sub-. Der. sus-ceptible, sus-pend, sus-pect, sus-tain.

SUSCEPTIBLE, readily receiving anything, impressible. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — F. susceptible, 'susceptible, capable;' Cot. — L. **susceptibilis*, ready to undertake. — L. suscepti-, for susceptus, pp. of suscipere, to undertake; with suffix -bilis. — L. sus-, for **sups*, extension of **sup*, orig. form of sub, under; and capere, to take; see Sus- and Captive. Der. susceptibili-ty, a coined word; susceptive, from L. **susceptivus*, capable of receiving or admitting.

SUSPECT, to mistrust, conjecture. (F.—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. The word was orig. a pp., as in Chaucer, where it is used adjectivally, with the sense of 'suspicious,' C. T. 8417 (E 541). — F. suspect, 'suspected, mistrusted;' Cot. — L. suspectus, pp. of suspiciere, to look under, look up to, admire, also to mistrust. — L. su-, for sus-, **sups*, extension of **sup*, orig. form of sub, under; and specere, to look; see Sub- and Spy. Der. suspic-i-on, ME. suspecion, K. Alisaunder, 453, OF. suspezion (Burguy), later souspeçon, 'suspicion,' Cot. (mod. F. souppon), from L. suspicionem, acc. of suspicio, suspicion; hence suspic-i-ous, ME. suspicious, Chaucer, C. T. 8416 (E 540); suspic-i-ous-ly, -ness. Observe that the old spellings suspeccion, suspicious, have been modified so as to accord more closely with the L. originals.

SUSPEND, to hang beneath or from, to make to depend on, delay. (F.—L.) ME. suspenden, Rob. of Glouc., p. 563, l. 11818. — F. suspendre, 'to suspend;' Cot. — L. suspendere (pp. suspensus), to hang up, suspend. — L. sus-, for **sups*, extension of **sup*, orig. form of sub, under; and pendere, to hang; see Sus- and Pendant. Der. suspend-er. Also suspense, properly an adj. or pp., as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 6. 34, from F. suspens, 'doubtful, uncertain,' Cot., from L. pp. suspensus, suspended, wavering, hesitating; suspens-ion, from F. suspension, 'a suspension or suspending,' Cot., from L. acc. suspensionem; suspens-or-y, from MF. suspensoire, 'hanging, suspensory, in suspense,' Cot.; suspens-or-y, sb., a hanging bandage, &c.

SUSPICION; see under Suspect.

SUSTAIN, to hold up, bear, support. (F.—L.) ME. susteynen, susteynen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 111, l. 2412. — AF. sustein-, a stem of OF. sustenir, sostenir, spelt soutenir in Cot.; mod. F. soutenir. — L. sustinere, to uphold. — L. sus-, for **sups*, extension of **sup*, orig. form of sub, up; and tenere, to hold; see Sus- and Tenable. Der. sustain-er, sustain-able; also sustenance, ME. sustenaunce, Rob. of Glouc., p. 41, l. 975, from OF. sustenance, spelt soustenance in Cotgrave, from L. sustinentia; also sustent-at-ion, Bacon, Essay 58, from L. acc. sustentationem, maintenance, from sustentare, frequent. form of sustinere (pp. sustentus).

SUTLER, one who sells provisions in a camp. (Du.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 1. 116. — Du. soetelaar (Sewel), usually zoetelaar; in Hexham zoetelaar, 'a scullion, or he that doth the druggerie in a house, a sutler, or a victualler.' Formed with suffix -aar of the agent (cf. L. -arius) from zoetelen, 'to sully, to suttie, or to victual;' Hexham. β. This frequent. verb is cognate with Low G. suddeln, to sully, whence suddeler, a dirty fellow, scullion, and sometimes a sutler (Brem. Wört.); Dan. sudle, besudle, to sully, G. sudeln, to sully, daub. All these are frequent. forms, with the usual frequent. suffix -el-; the simple form appears in Swed. sudda, to daub, stain, soil; whence Swed. dial. sudda, sb., a dirty woman (Rietz). These are obviously connected with Icel. suddi, steam from cooking, drizzling rain, suddaligr, wet and dank; all from Teut. **sud-*, weak grade of Teut. verb **seuthan-*, to seethe (Icel. sjóða). Further allied to E. suds, a derivative of seethe; with which cf. G. sud, a seething, brewing, sudel, a puddle, sudeln, to daub, dabble, sully, sudelkoch, a sluttish cook; all from the same weak grade. The t (for d) is abnormal, and due to High G. influence. Cf. Bavarian suttern, soetern, to boil over, MHG. sut, boiling liquid.

SUTTEE, a widow who immolates herself on the funeral pile of her husband; also the sacrifice of burning a widow. (Skt.) The E. u represents Skt. short a, which is pronounced like u in mud. The word is properly an epithet of the widow herself, who is reckoned as 'true' or 'virtuous' if she thus immolates herself. — Skt. satī, a virtuous wife (Benfey, p. 63, col. 2); fem. of sant-, being, existing, true, right, virtuous. Sant- is short for **as-ant-*, pres. part. of as, to be. — √ES, to be; see Sooth and Is.

SUTURE, a seam. (F.—L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. — F. suture, 'a suture or seam;' Cot. — L. sūtūra, a suture; cf. sūtus, pp. of suere, to sow; cognate with E. Sew.

SUZERAIN, a feudal lord. (F.—L.) Not in Johnson; used by Scott, Quentin Durward, ch. 35. — F. suzerain, 'sovereign, yet subaltern, superior, but not supreme;' Cot. A coined word; made from F. sus (L. sūsum or sursum, above), in the same way as sovereign is made from L. super; it corresponds to a Late L. type **sūserānus*, for **surserānus*. β. The L. sursum is contracted from **su-uorsum*, where su- is for sub, up, and uorsum (E. -ward) means 'turned,' from L. uertere, to turn; see Sub- and -Ward, suffix. Der. suzerain-ty, from F. suzeraineté, 'sovereignty, but subaltern, jurisdiction,' Cot.

SWAB, to clean the deck of a vessel. (Du.) Shak. has swabber, Temp. ii. 2. 48; whence the verb to swab has been evolved. The sb. is borrowed directly from Du. zwabber, 'a swabber, the drudge of a ship;' Sewel. Cf. Du. zwabberen, to swab, do dirty work. + Swed. svabb, a fire-brush, svabla, to swab; Dan. svabre, to swab; G. schwabber, a swabber, schwabber-stock, a mop-stick; schwabbern, to swab. Cf. also Norw. svabba, to splash about, Pomeran. swabbeln, to splash about; Low G. swappen, to shake about (said of liquids; Danneil); G. schwabbeln, to shake to and fro. Allied to Lith. sūp-ti, to rock; Slovenian svep-ati, to totter (Miklosich, p. 330). Of imitative origin. Cf. ME. quappen, to palpitate; E. swap, swash. Der. swabb-er.

SWADDLE, to swathe an infant. (E.) 'I swadell a chylde;' Palsgrave. Also spelt swadil, swadle in Levins. Swadel stands for swathel, and means to wrap in a swathel or swaddling-band. ME. swepelband, a swaddling-band; spelt suepelband, suadiling-band, swapeling-bonde in Cursor Mundi, 1343; whence the pp. swedeld, swetheled = swaddled, id. 11236. — AS. swedel, a swaddling-band; spelt swaedi in the Corpus Gloss., 833. The sense is 'that which swathes;' formed with suffix -el, -il (Idg. -lo-), representing the agent, from the verb to swathe; see Swathe. Der. swaddl-ing-band; swaddl-ing-clothes, Luke, ii. 7.

SWAGGER, to hector, to be boisterous. (Scand.) In Shaks. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 79. 'To swagger in gait is to walk in an affected manner, swaying from one side to the other;' Wedgwood. It is the frequentative of swag, now almost disused. 'I swagge, as a fatte persons belly swaggeth as he goth;' Palsgrave. 'Swag, to hang loose and heavy, to sag, to swing about;' Halliwell. — Norweg. svagga (Ross), allied to svaga, to sway; Aasen. Cf. Icel. svaggja, to cause to sway; Norw. svagg (Ross), Dan. sugg, a big, thumping fellow (Larsen). Allied to Sway. Der. swagger-er.

SWAIN, a young man, peasant. (Scand.) ME. swain, Chaucer, C. T. 4025 (A 4027); swein, Havelok, 273. [The form is Scand., not E.; the AS. form was swān, Grein, ii. 500, which would have given a mod. E. swone, like stone from stān. We do, indeed, find swein in the A. S. Chron. an. 1128, but this is borrowed from Scand.] — Icel. sveinn, a boy, lad, servant; Dan. svend, a swain, journeyman, servant; Swed. sven, a young man, a page. + Low G. sween, a swine-herd, Hannover (Brem. Wört.); OHG. swein, a servant. β. The Teut. type is **swainoz*; which may (formally) be allied by gradation to AS. swēn, a swine, with the sense of 'swine-herd;' as in Low G. sween. But if it be allied to Lith. swaine, a sister-in-law, it is from another source. Der. boat-swain, cox-swain.

SWALLOW (1), a migratory bird. (E.) ME. swallowe, Prompt. Parv.; Chaucer, C. T. 3258. AS. swalewe, a swallow; Voc. 132. 28. + Du. zwaluw; Icel. svala, for **svalva*, gen. svölu; Dan. svale; Swed. svala; G. schwalbe; OHG. swalawd. β. The Teut. type is **swalwōn*, f. Cf. EFries. swälke, Low G. swaalke, a swallow. The prob. sense is 'toss about,' or 'mover to and fro;' allied to Gk. σαλεύειν, to shake, to move to and fro, to toss like a ship at sea; σάλος, the tossing rolling swell of the sea. See Swell. Fick, i. 842. Cf. MDu. swalpen, 'to flote, to tosse, beate against with waves,' swalpe, a tossing, swalcke, a swallow; Hexham.

SWALLOW (2), to absorb, ingulf, receive into the stomach. (E.) ME. swolowen, swolwen, Chaucer, C. T. 16985 (H 36); also swolhen, Juliana, p. 74, l. 4; swoljhen, Ormulum, 10224 (written swolljhen in the MS.). Thus the final w stands for an older guttural. It is a secondary form, modified from the AS. strong verb swelgan, to swallow, pt. t. swealg, pp. swolgen; Grein, ii. 503. + Du. zweigen; Icel. svelgja, pt. t. svalg, pp. solginn; also as a weak verb; Dan. svelge; Swed. svälja; G. schwelgen, to eat or drink immoderately. The strong and weak forms are confused. The strong verb is of the Teut. type **swelgan*; pt. t. **swalg*, pp. **swulganoz*. Der. ground-sel, q. v.

SWAMP, wet spongy land, boggy ground. (E.) Not found in old books. 'Swamp, Swomp, a bog or marshy place, in Virginia or New England;' Phillips, ed. 1706. This points to its being a prov. E. word. According to Rich., it occurs in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685. Prob. a native word. + Du. zwamp, a swamp (Calisch). With a change to a weak grade, we have prov. E. sump (for **swump*), a puddle, G. sumpf, a swamp (whence Du. somp). We also find prov. E. swank, swang, a swamp; Norw. and Swed. dial. swank. Connexion with Dan. and Swed. svamp, a sponge, fungus, AS. swamm, G. schwamm, Goth. swamms, sponge, is not clear. Cf. Gk. σπομφός, spongy. Der. swamp, vb., swamp-y, swamp-i-ness.

SWAN, a large bird. (E.) ME. swan, Chaucer, C. T. 206. AS. swan, Grein, ii. 500. + Du. zwaan; Icel. svanr; Dan. svane; Swed. svan; G. schwan. The Teut. types are **swanoz*, **swanon-*. The form suggests connexion with Skt. swan, to resound, sound, sing; cf. L. sonāre, to sound. 'Argutos . . olores;' Vergil, Ecl. ix. 36.

SWAN-HOPPING, taking up swans to mark them. (E.) A mistaken form of swan-upping (Halliwell). Swans, esp. on the Thames, are annually taken up for the purpose of marking them by certain nicks made upon their bills. That the old word was really upping is shown by a tract dated 1570, printed in Hone's Every-day Book, vol. ii. col. 958-962. In sect. 8 there is mention of 'the upping-daies.' In sect. 15—'the swan-herdes . . shall up no swannes,' &c. In sect. 14—'that no person take up any cignet unmarked;' and in sect. 28—'the maister of the swannes is to have for every white swanne and gray upping, a penny.'

SWAP, to strike. (E.) ME. swappen; 'Swap of his heed' = strike off his head; Chaucer, C. T. 15834 (G 366). 'Beofs to him swapte' = Beofs went swiftly to him; Layamon, 26775 (later text). An E. word. + EFries. swappen, to strike noisily, from swap, the sound of a blow; prov. G. (dial. of Thüringen, by L. Hertel) schwappen, to make swinging movements, to cut; G. schwapp, schwapps, Low G. swaps, interj. slap, smack! crack! said of a blow. Imitative; cf. E. slap, whap, prov. E. swack, a blow. Cf. Swoop.

SWARD, green turf, grassy surface of land. (E.) It formerly meant also skin or covering; the green-sward is the turfy surface of the land; the prov. E. sward-pork is bacon cured in large fitches or flakes (Halliwell, Forby). 'Sward, or sworde of flesh, Coriana; Sward of þe erpe, turfeflag, or sward of erth, Cespes;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 482, 506. AS. sweard, skin; Voc. 265. 9. + Du. zwaard, skin of bacon; Icel. svörðr, skin, hide of the walrus, sward or surface of the earth; jarðar-svörðr, earth-sward, grassvörðr, grass-sward; Dan. flesksvæ, flesh-sward, skin of bacon; grönsvæ, green-sward; G. schwarte, rind, bark, skin, outside-plank. β. The Teut. type perhaps is **swarduz*, with the sense of 'rind.' Root unknown. Der. sward-ed, green-sward.

SWARM, a cluster of bees or insects. (E.) ME. swarm, Chaucer, C. T. 15398 (B 4582); AS. swearm (Bosworth). + Du. zwer; Icel.

svarmr; Dan. sværm; Swed. svärm; G. schwarm; MHG. swarm. β. Teut. type **swarmoz*, where -moz is a noun-suffix, as in bloo-m, doo-m. The sense is 'that which hums,' from the buzzing made by a swarm of bees. Cf. Lithuan. surma, a pipe or fife, from the sound it makes; Russ. sviriele, a pipe, G. schwirren, to buzz, whiz, surren, to hum, buzz. — ✓SWER, to hum, buzz; whence Skt. svr, to sound, svara-, a sound, voice; L. susurrus, a hum, whisper. Brugmann, i. § 375 (8). Der. swarm, verb, AS. swierman, swyrmān, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 384, l. 21. And see swear.

SWART, SWARTHY, black, tawny. (E.) The proper form is swart; thence a less correct form swarth was made, occurring in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odys. b. xix. l. 343; and hence swarth-y (= swart-y) by the help of suffix -y (AS. -ig) occasionally added to adjectives (as in murk-y). Shak. has swarth, Titus, ii. 3. 72; swarthy, Two Gent. ii. 6. 26; swarty, Titus, ii. 3. 72, in the quarto editions. ME. swart, spelt suart in Rob. of Glouc., p. 490, l. 10049. AS. swært, black; Grein, ii. 507. + Du. zwart; Icel. svartr; Dan. sort; Swed. svart; G. schwarz; OHG. swarz, suarz; Goth. swarts. β. The Teut. type is **swartoz*; allied to L. sordes, dirt, sordidus, dirty, and prob. to L. surdus, dim-coloured. The Norse god Surtr, i. e. Swart, is the god of fire; this suggests a connexion with Skt. svar, the sun. Perhaps swart meant 'blackened by fire.' Der. swarth-y or swart-y, as above; swarth-i-ly, swarth-i-ness. And see serene, solar.

SWASH, to strike with force. (E.) 'Thy swashing blow,' Romeo, i. 1. 70. Swashing is also swaggering, and a swasher is a swaggerer, a bully; As You Like It, i. 3. 122, Hen. V, iii. 2. 30. Of imitative origin; cf. Swed. dial. svasska, to make a 'squashing' or 'swashing' noise, as when one walks with water in the shoes (Rietz). β. By the interchange of ks and sk (as in prov. E. axe = to ask), svasska stands for **svak-sa*, an extension from a base SWAK. Norweg. svakka, to make a noise like water under the feet; Aasen. Cf. prov. E. swack, a blow or fall, swacking, crushing, huge; swag, the noise of a heavy fall (Halliwell). Der. swash-buckler, in Fuller, Worthies of England, iii. 347 (Cent. Dict.); one who strikes his buckler with a swashing blow, hence, a noisy ruffian.

SWATH, a row of mown grass. (E.) ME. swathe. 'A mede . . . In swathes sweppen down' = a meadow, mown (lit. swept) down in swaths; Allit. Morte Arthure, 2508. 'Cam him no fieres swaðe ner' = no track (or trace) of fire came near him; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 3786. AS. swað, swaðu, a track, trace, Grein, ii. 500, 501. EFries. swad. + Du. zwaad, a swathe; also zwad, zwade, 'a swath, a row of grass mowed down,' Sewel; G. schwad, a row of mown grass. β. The sense 'row of mown grass' is the orig. one, whence that of track or foot-track easily follows. This appears by comparing Low G. swad, a swath, with swade, a scythe; see Brem. Wörterbuch, pt. iv. 1107, where the EFriesic swade, swae, swah, a scythe, is also cited. γ. The earliest meaning may have been a 'shred' or 'slice;' cf. Norw. swada, vb. act. and neut., to shred or slice off, to flake off. See Du. zwad in Franck.

SWATHE, to bind in swaddling-cloths, to bandage. (E.) Shak. has swath, (1) that which the mower cuts down with one sweep of the scythe, Troil. v. 5. 25; (2) a swaddling-cloth, Timon, iv. 3. 252; also swathing-clothes, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 112; swathing-clouts, Hamlet, ii. 2. 401; enswathed, Complaint, 49. ME. swathen, pt. t. swathed, Cursor Mundi, 11236. From a base swað-; whence also AS. swæðian, in comp. beswæðian, to enwrap, John, xix. 40 (Lindisfarne MS.); A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 18, l. 8; and AS. swæð-el, swæð-il, a swaddling band; see Swaddle. ¶ Perhaps (see Swath) the AS. swað-u meant orig. a shred; hence (1) as much grass as is mown at once, (2) a shred of cloth used as a bandage. Der. swadd-le (for swath-le).

SWAY, to swing, incline to one side, influence, rule over. (E.) ME. sweyen, Gawain and Green Knight, 1429; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 151. It also means to go, walk, come, Allit. Poems, B. 788, C. 429; spelt sweje, id. C. 72, 236. Cf. Swed. svaja, to jerk; Dan. svaie, to swing to and fro, to sway; Du. zwaaijen, to sway, swing; EFries. swäien, Low G. swajen. β. All from the Teut. base SWAG, to sway, swing, well preserved in Norweg. svaga, to sway, swing, reel, stagger (Aasen). Allied to Swagger; and perhaps even to Swing. Der. sway, sb., Jul. Caesar, i. 3. 3, ME. sweigh, Chaucer, C. T. 4716 (B 296).

SWEAL, to singe, scorch slightly. (E.) See under Sultry. SWEAR, to affirm to be true, to affirm with an oath, to use oaths freely. (E.) ME. sweren, strong verb, pt. t. swor, swoor, Rob. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 776; pp. sworen, sworn, Havelok, 439. AS. swerian, pt. t. swör, pp. sworen, to swear, Grein, ii. 506. We also find AS. swerian, with the simple sense of speak or declare, conjugated as a weak verb, particularly in the comp. andswerian, to declare in return, to answer. The orig. sense was simply to speak aloud, declare. + Du. zweren, pt. t. zwoor, pp. gezworen; Icel. swerja, pt. t. sör, pp.

svärinn; Dan. sværge; Swed. svärja; G. schwören. And cf. Goth. swaran, Icel. svara, Dan. svare, Swed. svara, to answer, reply. β. All from ✓SWER, to hum, buzz, make a sound; whence also Skt. sur, to sound, to praise, svara-, sound, a voice, tone, accent, L. susurrus, a humming, and E. swarm; see Swarm. Brugmann, i. § 121. Der. swear-ing, for-sworn; an-swer.

SWEAT, moisture from the skin. (E.) ME. swoot (Tyrwhitt prints swete), Chaucer, C. T. 16046 (G 578); whence the verb sweten, id. 16047 (G 579). AS. swāt, Grein, ii. 501. (By the usual change from ā to long o, AS. swāt became ME. swoot, and should have been swote in mod. E.; but the word has been altered in order to make the sb. accord with the derived verb, viz. AS. swātan, ME. swēten, mod. E. sweat, with the ea shortened to the sound of e in let (ME. lēten < AS. lātan). The spelling swet would, consequently, be better than sweat, and would also be phonetic.) + Du. zweet; Icel. sveiti; Dan. svet; Swed. svett; G. schweiss; OHG. sweiz. β. The Teut. stem is **swaitō-*, sweat, cognate with Skt. svēda-, sweat; from Teut. base SWEIT, to sweat, of which we find (weak-grade) traces in Icel. sviti, sweat, G. schwitzen. This answers to Idg. ✓SWEID, to sweat, whence Skt. svīd, to sweat, L. sūdor (for **svoidor*), sweat, Gk. id-pōs, sweat, W. chwys, sweat. Brugmann, i. § 331 c. Der. sweat, verb, AS. swātan, as above; sweat-y, sweat-i-ness; and see sud-at-or-y, sud-or-i-fi-c.

SWEEP, to brush, strike with a long stroke, pass rapidly over. (E.) ME. swepen, Chaucer, C. T. 16404 (G 936); pp. sweped, Pricke of Conscience, 4947. A weak secondary verb from the base swēp-, as in swēpō, 3rd p. s. pres. t. of AS. swāpan, to sweep, a strong verb with pt. t. swēop, Grein, ii. 500. Cf. ge-swēpa, pl. sweepings, Voc. 464. 20. [This AS. swāpan is represented in mod. E. by the verb to Swoop, q.v.] Cf. also OFries. swēpa, to sweep; EFries. swēpen (pt. t. swēp-de), to swing, sway, vibrate. Also MSwed. swēpa, Swed. sopa, Icel. sōpa. From Teut. base **swaiþ*, 2nd grade of Teut. root **sweip*. See Swipe. Cf. Icel. sveipa, to sweep along, a wk. vb., from an old verb svipa (pt. t. sveip); also OHG. swēifan (pt. t. swief), whence G. schweifen, to rove, stray, sweep along. Brugmann, i. § 701. Der. sweep, sb., Timon, i. 2. 137; sweep-er, chimney-sweep-er (often used in the forms sweep, chimney-sweep, cf. AS. hunta, ME. hunte, a hunter); sweep-ings; sweep-stake, the same as swoop-stake, sweeping off all the stakes at once, Hamlet, iv. 5. 142, whence sweep-stakes, sb., the whole money staked at a horse-race that can be won or swept up at once.

SWEET, pleasing to the senses, esp. to the taste. (E.) ME. swete, Chaucer, C. T. 3206; with the by-forms swote, sote, id. 3205. AS. swēte, Grein, ii. 506. + OSax. swōti; Du. zoet; Icel. sætr, sætr; Dan. sød; Swed. söt; G. süsz; OHG. suozi; Goth. sūts. β. The AS. ē is a modified ō; cf. the ō in Dan. sød, Swed. söt. The AS. swēte is for **swōtjōz*, adj.; where **swōt-* is the 2nd grade of **swat*, answering to Idg. ✓SWAD, to please, to taste nice, whence also Skt. svad, svād, to taste, to eat, to please, svādu-, sweet, Gk. hōdūs, sweet, L. suāvis (for **suaduis*), pleasant, suādere, to persuade. Der. sweet-ly, sweet-ness; sweet-bread, the pancreas of an animal, so called because sweet and resembling bread; sweet-briar, Milton, L'Allegro, 47; sweets, pl. sb., Cor. iii. 1. 157; sweet-ish, sweet-ish-ness; sweet-en, to make sweet, Rich. II, ii. 3. 13; sweet-en-er, sweet-en-ing; sweet-ing, formed with a dimin. suffix -ing, a term of endearment, Oth. ii. 3. 252, also a kind of sweet apple, Romeo, ii. 4. 83; sweet-pea, sweet-potato; sweet-william, Bacon, Essay 46, § 6 (from the name William). Also sweet-meat, lit. sweet food, chiefly in the pl., ME. swete metes, Henrysoun, Test. of Creseide, l. 420; see Meat. And see sweet-heart, below.

SWEETHEART, a lover or mistress. (E.) Used as a term of endearment. The derivation is simply from sweet and heart; it is not an absurd hybrid word with the F. suffix -ard (= OHG. -hart), as has been supposed. Creseide calls Troilus her 'dere herte' and her 'swete herte' both; Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1181-1183. Again, he calls her my swetē hertē derē, id. iii. 1210; and in the last line of bk. iii we read: 'Is with Creseide his owēn hertē swetē.' Further examples are needless, but may easily be found in the same poem and elsewhere.

SWELL, to grow larger, expand, rise into waves, heave, bulge out. (E.) ME. swellen, strong verb, pt. t. swal, Chaucer, C. T. 6549 (D 967), pp. swollen, id. 8826 (E 950). AS. swellan, pt. t. swēall, pp. swollen, Exod. ix. 10; Grein, ii. 505. + Du. zwellen, pt. t. zwooll, pp. gezwoollen; Icel. svella, pt. t. svaļ, pp. sollinn; Swed. svälla; G. schwellen. β. All from Teut. type **swellan-*, pt. t. swall, pp. **swullanōz*. Cf. Goth. uf-swalleins, a swelling up. Brugmann, i. § 903. Perhaps allied to Gk. σαλεύειν, to toss, wave. Der. swell, sb., Antony, iii. 2. 49; swell-ing. Also sill, q.v., ground-sill.

SWELTER, to be faint with heat, also, to cause to exude by excess of heat. (E.) See further under Sultry.

SWERVE, to depart from a right line, turn aside. (E.) Palsgrave has swarve. ME. sweruen (swerven), Gower, C. A. iii. 7, 92; bk. vi. 168, bk. vii. 232. Once a strong verb, with pt. t. swarf, swerf (Stratmann). AS. sweorfan, to rub, to file, to polish, pt. t. swearf, pp. sworfen, Grein, ii. 509; whence the sb. geswearf, geswyrf, filings, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 336, note 15. + Du. zwerwen, to swerve, wander, rove, riot, revel; OSax. swerban, pt. t. swarf, to wipe; OFries. swerwa, to rove; Icel. swerfa, to file; pt. t. swarf, pp. sorfinn; Goth. bi-swaiban, to wipe, af-swaiban, to wipe off. β. Teut. type **swerban-*, to wipe, pt. t. **swarþ*, pp. **swurþanōz*. Cf. EFries. swarven, to wander, Swed. svarfva, to turn; also prov. E. swarve in the sense of 'to climb a tree devoid of side-boughs,' by swarming up it.

SWIFT, extremely rapid. (E.) ME. swift, Chaucer, C. T. 190. AS. swift, Grein, ii. 513. From swif-, weak grade of AS. swifan, to move quickly, with suffixed -i (Idg. -tos, participial). Cf. Icel. svifa, to rove, turn, sweep; OHG. sweibōn, to move or turn quickly. Teut. base **sweid*. Cf. Teut. base **sweip*; see Sweep. Der. swift, sb., swift-ly, -ness. And see swivel.

SWILL, to wash dishes; to drink greedily. (E.) The proper sense is to wash dishes. ME. swilien, swilen; 'dishes swilen' = wash dishes, Havelok, 919. AS. swilian, to wash, in the Lambeth Psalter, Ps. vi. 6 (Bosworth). Der. swill, hog's-wash, whence swilling-tub, Skelton, Elinor Rummyng, 173. Hence the verb to swill, to drink like a pig, as in 'the boar that . . . swills your warm blood like wash,' Rich. III, v. 2. 9; there is no reason for connecting swill with swallow, as is sometimes done. Hence swill-er.

SWIM (1), to move to and fro on or in water, to float. (E.) ME. swimmen, Chaucer, C. T. 3575. AS. swimman, pt. t. swamm, swomm, Grein, ii. 515. + Du. zwellmen; Icel. svimma, pt. t. svamm, pp. summit; Dan. svømme; Swed. simma; G. schwimmen, pt. t. schwamm. β. All from Teut. type **swemman-*, pt. t. **swamm*, pp. **swummanōz*. Der. swim, sb., swimm-er, swimm-ing, swimm-ing-ly.

SWIM (2), to be dizzy. (E.) 'My head swims' = my head is dizzy. The verb is from the ME. swime, sb., dizziness, vertigo, a swoon; spelt swyme, suime, Cursor Mundi, 14201; swym, Allit. Morte Arthure, 4246. AS. swīma, a swoon, swimming in the head, Grein, ii. 515; whence āswāman, verb, to fail, be quenched, and āswāman, verb, to wander, id. i. 43, 44. + Du. zwijm, EFries. swim, a swoon; cf. Icel. svimi, a swimming in the head; whence sveima, verb, to wander about; Dan. svimle, to be giddy, svimmel, giddiness, besvime, to swoon; Swed. svimma, to be dizzy. β. The AS. swīma probably stands for swī-ma; the base is swi- (Teut. **swei-*); whence also OHG. swinan, to decrease, disappear, to which are allied Swed. svindel, dizziness, G. schwindel, dizziness, schwinden, to disappear, dwindle, decay, fail, schwindsucht, consumption; Swed. försvinna, to disappear, Icel. svina, to subside (said of a swelling). The primary sense is that of failing, giving way. Der. swin-dler, q.v.

SWINDLER, a cheat. (G.) 'The dignity of the British merchant is sunk in the scandalous appellation of a swindler;' V. Knox, Essay 8 (first appeared in 1778); cited in R. One of our few loan-words from High-German. - G. schwindler, an extravagant projector, a swindler. - G. schwindeln, to be dizzy, to act thoughtlessly, to cheat. - G. schwindel, dizziness. - G. schwinden, to decay, sink, vanish, fail; cognate with AS. swindan (pt. t. swand), to languish. See Swim (2). Der. swindle, verb and sb., evolved from the sb. swindler rather than borrowed from G.

SWINE, a sow, pig; pigs. (E.) ME. swin, with long i, pl. swin (unchanged). 'He sleep as a swyn' (riming with wyn, wine); Chaucer, C. T. 5165 (B 745). 'A flocke of many swyne;' Wyclif, Matt. viii. 30. AS. swin, pl. swin, Grein, ii. 515. The AS. swin is a neuter sb. with a long stem, and therefore unchanged in the plural, by rule. + Du. zwijn, a swine, hog; Icel. svin, pl. svin, neuter sb.; Dan. svin, neut., pl. sviin; Swed. svin, neut.; G. schwein, OHG. swin; Goth. swein, neut. Teut. type **swinom*, neut. Cf. Russ. svin(e)ya, a swine, dimin. svinka, a pig, svinoi, adj., belonging to swine, svinina, pork. β. Fick conjectures that the form was orig. adjectival, like that of L. suāvis, belonging to swine, an adj. noted by Varro (Vaniček, p. 1048); this adj. is regularly formed from sus, a sow. See Sow (2). Brugmann, i. § 95. Der. swin-ish, -ly, -ness; swine-herd, ME. swyynne-herd, Prompt. Parv.; swine-cote, ME. swyynne-kote, id.; swine-sty, ME. swynesty, id., spelt swynsty, Pricke of Conscience, 9002.

SWING, to sway or move to and fro. (E.) ME. swingen, strong verb, pt. t. swang, swong, pp. swungen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1058 (or 1059), Havelok, 226. AS. swingan, pt. t. swang, pp. swungen, to scourge, also, to fly, flutter, flap with the wings; Grein, ii. 515. + Swed. svinga, to swing, to whirl; Dan. svinge, to swing, whirl; G. schwingen, to swing, soar, brandish; also, to swingle or beat flax; pt. t. schwang. Cf. also Goth. afswaggujan, to cause to doubt or despair. β. All from Teut. base **swengw-*, Idg. **sweng*. Der. swing, sb.; swinge, q.v.; swingle, q.v.

SWINGE, to beat, whip. (E.) In Shak. Two Gent. ii. i. 88, &c. ME. swengen, to beat; see Prompt. Parv. AS. swengan, to shake, toss; cf. sweng, a stroke, blow; see Bosworth. AS. swengan is the causal form of swingan, to swing, to flourish a whip, to beat. See Swing.

SWINGLE, a staff for beating flax. (MDu.) 'To swingle, to beat, a term among flax-dressers;' Phillips. The verb is ME. swinglen, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, ii. 197; formed from the sb. swingle. In Wright's Voc. i. 156, near the bottom, we find swingle, sb., swinglestok, sb., and the phrase 'to swingle thi flax.' From MDu. swingelen, or swingen, 'to beate flax;' Hexham. Cf. Du. zingel, a swingle for flax, a flail; zingelen, to swingle; also AS. swingele, a scourging; Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 132; from AS. swing-an, to beat, to swing. A swingle is 'a swinger, a beater; and swingle, verb, is 'to use a swingle.' See Swing. Der. swingle, verb. Also swingle-tree, q.v.

SWINGLETREE, the bar that swings at the heels of the horses when drawing a harrow, &c. (E.) See Halliwell. Also applied to the swinging bar to which traces are fastened when a horse draws a coach. [Corruptly called single-tree, whence the term double-tree has arisen, to keep it company. 'A single-tree is fixed upon each end of another cross-piece called the double-tree, when 2 horses draw abreast,' Haldeman (in Webster).] ME. swingle-tre, spelt swyngletre in Fitzherbert, On Husbandry, § 15 (E.D.S.). The word tree here means a piece of timber, as in axle-tree. The word swingle means 'a swing-er,' a thing that swings; so named from the swinging motion, which all must have observed who have sat behind horses drawing a coach. See Swingle, Swing.

SWINK, to toil; obsolescent. (E.) Once an extremely common word; Milton has 'swink'd hedger'=hedger overcome with toil, Comus, 293. ME. swinken, pt. t. swank, Havelok, 788; pp. swunken, Ormulum, 6103. AS. swincan, pt. t. swanc, pp. swuncen, to toil, labour, work hard. This form, so curiously like AS. swingan, pt. t. swang, pp. swungen, is perhaps a parallel form to it. Cf. Du. zwenk, a swing, a turn; G. schwanken, to totter, stagger, falter.

SWIPE, to strike with a sweeping stroke. (E.) Cf. prov. E. swipple, the striking part of a flail. The i has prob. been lengthened; cf. ME. swipe, swip, a stroke, Layamon, 7648; swippen, vb., to swipe, strike, Layamon, 878. AS. swipian, swippan, to beat (Grein); swipe, a whip. From **swip-*, weak grade of Teut. **sweipan-*; see Sweep. Cf. Icel. svipa, to whip; svipa, a whip.

SWIRL, to whirl in an eddy. (Scand.) 'Swirl, a whirling wavy motion, East;' Halliwell. A prov. E. word, now used by good writers, as C. Kingsley, E. B. Browning, &c.; see Webster and Worcester. —Norweg. svirla, to wave round, swing, whirl (Aasen), frequent. of sverra (Dan. svirre), to whirl, turn round, orig. to make a humming noise. Cf. Swed. svirra, to murmur; G. schwirren, to whirl; Skt. svr, to sound. Formed from the Idg. root SWER, to hum, just as whirl is from whir; see further under Swarm.

SWITCH, a small flexible twig. (Du.—G.) In Romeo, ii. 4. 73; Dr. Schmidt notes that old editions have swits for the pl. switches. Not found in ME., and perhaps borrowed from Du. in the 16th cent. Switch or swick is a palatalised form of swick. —MDu. swick, 'a scourge, a swich, or a whip;' Hexham. It also means a wooden vent-peg (Hexham); Low G. swikk, zwikk, a twig, a vent-peg. Not a Low G. word, but borrowed from High G. —Bavarian zwick, the lash of a whip, or a stroke with the same; variant of G. zwecke, a tack, a small wooden peg; Bavar. zweck, a splinter, a tapering piece of wood. From MHG. zwec, a nail, bolt, peg, esp. a peg in the centre of a target, called in E. the prick or the pin, which explains why G. zweck means 'an aim.' Further allied to G. zwicken, to pinch, to tweak; which is allied to E. twick; see Kluge. The fact that the MDu. s in this word answers to High G. z=Low G. t, is pointed out by Franck. No other E. word has initial s from t. ¶ Icel. svigi, a switch, seems to be unrelated. Der. switch, verb.

SWIVEL, a ring or link that turns round on a pin or neck. (E.) Spelt swiuell in Minshew, ed. 1627. Not found in ME.; it corresponds to an AS. form **swifel*, not found, but regularly formed, with the suffix -el of the agent, from the weak grade (swif-) of AS. swifan, to move quickly, revolve; for which see Swift. Related words are Icel. svelfa, to swing or spin in a circle, like a top, svif, a swinging round, from svifa, to ramble, to turn. The sense is 'that which readily revolves.' Cf. Brugmann, i. § 818 (2).

SWOON, to faint. (E.) ME. swownen, Chaucer, C. T. 5478 (B 1058); also swoghenen, King Alisaunder, 5857; also swowenen (Stratmann). A comparison of the forms shows, as Stratmann points out, that the standard ME. form is **swojnen*, the j being represented either by gh, w, or u; and this is a mere extension of a form **swojen*, with the same sense. The n is the same formative element as is seen in Goth. verbs ending in -nan; cf. E. awaken from awake, &c.

β. The form **swojen* appears, slightly altered, as swowen (with w for j), to swoon, P. Plowman, B. v. 154, xiv. 326; also as sowghen, soghen, to sigh deeply, Romans of Partenay, 1944, 2890. This is a weak verb, closely allied to the ME. strong verb swojen, to make a loud or deep sound, to sigh deeply, droop, swoon, pt. t. sweȝ, pp. iswoȝen or iswowen. 'Sykande ho sweȝe doun'=sighing, she drooped down; Gawain and Green Knight, 1796. 'Adun he feol iswoȝe'=down she fell in a swoon, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 428. From AS. swōgan, to move or sweep along noisily, to sough, to sigh, orig. used esp. of the wind. 'Swōgað windas'=the winds sough, Grein, ii. 516; cf. āswōgen, pp. choked, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, § 52, ed. Sweet, p. 411, l. 17. Mr. Cockayne points out that the form geswowing, a swooning, occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 176, l. 13; and that in Ælfric's Hom. ii. 356, we find: 'Se læg . . . geswōgen betwux ðām ofslegenum'=he lay in a swoon amongst the slain. Here AS. geswōgen>ME. iswojen, as cited above. This AS. swōgan is represented by mod. E. Sough, q.v. It will thus be seen that the final n is a mere formative element, and unoriginal. Cf. Low G. swōgen, to sigh, swugten, to sigh, also to swoon; Brem. Wört. Der. swoon, sb. Also swoun-d, with excrescent d, and soun-d, with loss of w. Palsgrave has 'I swounde,' i.e. I swoon.

SWOOP, to sweep along, to descend with a swift motion, like a bird of prey. (E.) Shak. has swoop, sb., Macb. iv. 3. 219. ME. swopen, usually in the sense to sweep. In Chaucer, C. T. 16404, where Tyrwhitt prints swepe, the Corpus MS. has swope (Group G, l. 936); two lines lower, in place of ysweped, the Lichfield MS. has yswopen. The ME. swopen was orig. a strong verb, with pt. t. sweep, and pp. yswopen (as above). AS. swāpan, to sweep along, rush; also, to sweep; a strong verb, pt. t. swōp, pp. swāpen; Grein, ii. 500. 'Swāpendum windum'=with swooping (rushing) winds; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, iii. 16, ed. Smith, p. 542, l. 37. 'Swift wind swāpeð'=a swift wind swoops; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, met. vii (b. ii. met. 4). (The AS. ā became ME. open ō, but this became close o under the influence of the w.) +Icel. sveipa, to sweep, swoop; cf. sveip, pt. t. of an obsolete strong verb svipa; sveipinn, pp. of the same. Also Icel. sōpa, weak verb, to sweep. And cf. G. schweifen, to rove, ramble; Goth. sweipans, in the comp. midja-sweipans, a deluge, Luke, xvii. 27. β. The AS. swāpan answers to a Teut. **swaipan-*, from the Teut. root **sweip*, for which see Swipe. Der. swoop, sb.; also sweep, q.v.; and see swift, swiv-el.

SWORD, an offensive weapon with a long blade. (E.) ME. sward, Chaucer, C. T., A 1700. AS. sweord, Matt. xxvi. 47. +Du. zwaard; Icel. sverð; Dan. sværd; Swed. svärd; G. schwert. The Teut. type is **swerdom*, neut. Of unknown origin. Der. sword-cane, -fish, -stick; sword-s-man, formed like hunt-s-man, sport-s-man; sword-s-man-ship.

SYBARITE, an effeminate person. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he also has the adj. Sybaritical, dainty, effeminate. —L. Sybarita. —Gk. Συβαρίτης, a Sybarite, an inhabitant of Sybaris, a luxurious liver, voluptuary; because the inhabitants of this town were noted for voluptuousness. The town was named from the river Sybaris (Gk. Σύβαρις), on which it was situated. This river flows through the district of Lower Italy formerly called Lucania. Der. Sybaritic, Sybaritic-al.

SYCAMINE, the name of a tree. (L.—Gk.—Heb.?) In Luke, xvii. 6 (A.V.). —L. sycaminus. —Gk. συκάμινος; Luke, xvii. 6. It is gen. believed to be the mulberry-tree, and distinct from the sycamore; Thomson, in The Land and the Book, pt. i. c. 1, thinks the trees were one and the same. β. That the word has been confused with sycamore is obvious, but the suffix -ine (-ivos) is difficult to explain. Thomson's explanation is worth notice; he supposes it to be nothing more than a Gk. adaptation of the Heb. plural. The Heb. name for the sycamore is shiqmāh, with the plural forms shiqmōth and shiqmim; from the latter of these the Gk. συκάμινος may easily have been formed, by partial confusion with Gk. συκόμπος, a sycamore; see Sycamore.

SYCAMORE, the name of a tree. (L.—Gk.—Heb.?) The trees so called in Europe and America are different from the Oriental sycamore (Ficus sycomorus). The spelling should rather be sycamore; Cotgrave gives sycamore both as an E. and a F. spelling. Spelt sicomoure in Wyclif, Luke, xix. 4. —L. sycamoros. —Gk. συκόμπος, as if it meant 'fig-mulberry' tree. As if from Gk. συκο-, decl. stem of σῦκον, a fig; and μόρον, a mulberry, blackberry; but it seems to have been a popular adaptation of Heb. shiqmāh, sycamore. See Sycamore.

SYCOPHANT, a servile flatterer. (L.—Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary; he shows that it was formerly also used to mean 'an informer.' 'That sicophants are counted iolly guests;' Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 207. Cotgrave gives the F. form as sycophantia. —L. sycophanta, an informer, tale-bearer, flatterer, sycophant. —Gk.

συκοφάντης, lit. 'a fig-shower,' said to mean one who informs against persons exporting figs from Attica, or plundering sacred fig-trees; hence, a common informer, slanderer, also, a false adviser. 'The lit. signification is not found in any ancient writer, and is perhaps altogether an invention;' Liddell and Scott. That is, the early history of the word is lost, but this does not affect its obvious [perhaps only a popular] etymology.—Gk. σῦκο, decl. stem of σῦκον, a fig; and -φάντης, lit. a shower (appearing also in τεροφάντης, one who shows or teaches religious rites), from φαίνειν, to show. See Sycamore and Phantom. Der. sycophant-ic, -ic-al, -ism; sycophanc-y.

SYLLABLE, part of a word, uttered by a single effort of voice. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. syllable, Chaucer, C. T. 10415 (F 101).—OF. syllabe (Littre), later syllabe and syllable, with an inserted unoriginal l.—L. syllaba.—Gk. συλλαβή, lit. 'that which holds together,' hence a syllable, so much of a word as forms a single sound.—Gk. σὺλ- (for σύν before following λ), together; and λαβ-, base of λαμβάνειν, to take, seize (aorist infin. λαβεῖν). See Syn- and Cataleptic. Der. syllab-ic, from Gk. συλλαβικός, adj.; syllab-ic-al, syllab-if-y. Also syllabus, a compendium, from Late L. syllabus, a list, syllabus (White), from Late Gk. σύλλαβος, allied to συλλαβή.

SYLLOGISM, a reasoning from premises, a process in formal logic. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. silogime, Gower, C. A. iii. 366; bk. viii. 2708.—OF. silogime (Littre), later sillogisme, spelt sylogisme in Cotgrave.—L. sylogismum, acc. of sylogismus.—Gk. συλλογισμός, a reckoning all together, reckoning up, reasoning, syllogism.—Gk. συλλογίζομαι, I reckon together, sum up, reason.—Gk. σὺλ- (for σύν before λ following), together; and λογίζομαι, I reckon, from λόγ-ος, a word, reason, reasoning. See Syn- and Logic. Der. syllogise, spelt sylogyse in Lydgate, Assembly of the Gods, 19. From συλλογίζομαι; syllogis-t-ic, from L. sylogisticus < Gk. συλλογιστικός; syllogis-t-ic-al, -ly.

SYLPH, an imaginary being inhabiting the air. (F.—Gk.) 'Ye sylphs and sylphids;' Pope, Rape of the Lock, ii. 73; and see Pope's Introduction to that poem (A.D. 1712). Pope tells us that he took the account of the Rosicrucian philosophy and theory of spirits from a French book called Le Comte de Gabalis.—F. sylphe, the name given to one of the pretended genii of the air; Hatzfeld quotes les sylfes from a work of the 16th or 17th century.—Gk. σίλφη, used by Aristotle, Hist. Anim. 8. 17. 8, to signify a kind of beetle or grub. β. It is usually supposed that this word suggested the name sylph, which is used by Paracelsus. The other names of genii are gnomes, salamanders, and nymphs, dwelling in the earth, fire, and water respectively; and, as all these names are Greek, it is likely that sylph was meant to be Greek also. The spelling with y causes no difficulty, and is, indeed, an additional sign that the word is meant to be Greek. It is not uncommon to find y (called in F. y Grec) used in words derived from Gk., not only where it represents Gk. υ, but even (mistakenly) where it represents Gk. ι; thus syphoni occurs instead of siphoni both in F. and E. γ. Littre (followed by Hatzfeld) accounts for the word quite differently. He says that F. sylphe is a Gaulish (Celtic) word signifying genius, and that it is found in various inscriptions as sulfi, sylfi, sylphi, or, in the feminine, as sulevia (which are, of course, Latinised and plural forms); he cites 'Sulfi suis qui nostram curam agunt,' Orel. Helvet. 117. And he supposes that Paracelsus revived these names. Scheler, on the contrary, has no doubt that the word is Greek. Der. sylph-id, from F. sylphide, a false form, but only explicable on the supposition that the word sylph was thought to be Gk., and declined as if the nom. was σίλφης (stem σίλφιδ-).

SYLVAN, a common mis-spelling of Silvan, q. v.

SYMBOL, a sign, emblem, figurative representation. (F.—L.—Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary. In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 350.—F. symbole, 'a token,' &c.; Cot.—L. symbolum.—Gk. σύμβολον, a token, pledge, a sign by which one infers a thing.—Gk. συμβάλλειν (aor. infin. συμβάλεῖν), to throw together, bring together, compare, infer.—Gk. σὺμ- (for σύν before β), together; and βάλλειν, to throw. See Syn-. Der. symbol-ic, from Gk. συμβολικός, adj.; symbol-ic-al, -ly; symbol-ise, from F. symboliser, spelt symbolizer in Cot., and explained by 'to symbolize'; symbol-is-er; symbol-ism, symbol-ist.

SYMMETRY, due proportion, harmony. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt simmetrie in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. symmetrie, 'simmetry,' Cot.—L. symmetria.—Gk. συμμετρία, due proportion.—Gk. σύμμετρος, adj., measured with, of like measure with.—Gk. σὺμ- (for σύν before μ), together; and μέτρον, a measure. See Syn- and Metre. Der. symmetr-ic-al, a coined word; symmetr-ic-al-ly; symmetr-ise, a coined word.

SYMPATHY, a feeling with another, like feeling. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spenser has sympathie and sympathize, Hymn in Honour of Beattie, ll. 199 and 192.—F. sympathie, 'sympathy'; Cot.—L. sympathia.—Gk. συνπάθεια, like feeling, fellow-feeling.—Gk. συνπαθής, adj., of like feelings.—Gk. σὺμ- (for σύν before π), together; and παθ-, base of παθ-εῖν, aor. infin. of πάσχειν, to suffer, experience, feel. See Syn- and Pathos. Der. sympath-et-ic, a coined word, suggested by pathetic; sympath-et-ic-al, -ly; sympath-ise, from F. sympathiser, 'to sympathize,' Cot.; sympath-is-er.

SYMPHONY, concert, unison, harmony of sound. (F.—L.—Gk.) There was a musical instrument called a symphony, ME. simphonie or symphonie; see my note to Chaucer, C. T. Group B, l. 2005. And see Wyclif, Luke, xv. 25.—F. symphonie, 'harmony'; Cot.—L. symphōnia, Luke, xv. 25 (Vulgate).—Gk. συμφωνία, music, Luke, xv. 25.—Gk. σύμφωνος, agreeing in sound, harmonious.—Gk. σὺμ- (for σύν before φ), together; and φωνεῖν, to sound, φωνή, sound. See Syn- and Phonetic. Der. symphoni-ous; symphon-ist, a chorister, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

SYMPOSIUM, a merry feast. (L.—Gk.) Blount, Gloss., ed. 1674, has symposiast, 'a feast-master,' and symposiaques, 'books treating of feasts.' Symposium is in Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie, p. 57.—L. symposium.—Gk. συνπόσιον, a drinking-party, banquet.—Gk. σὺμ- (for σύν before π), together; and the base πο-, to drink, appearing in pt. t. πέ-πω-κα, I drank, aor. έ-πό-θην, I drank, and in the sb. πό-σις, drink. See Syn- and Potable.

SYMPTOM, an indication of disease, an indication. (F.—L.—Gk.) Properly a medical term. In Cotgrave, to translate MF. symptome.—L. symptōma.—Gk. σύμπτωμα, anything that has befallen one, a casualty, usu. in a bad sense.—Gk. συμπίπτειν, pt. t. σὺμ-πέ-πτω-κα, to fall together, to fall in with, meet with.—Gk. σὺμ- (for σύν before π), together, with; and πίπτειν (πί-πτ-ειν) to fall, from √PET, to fall. See Syn- and Asymptote. Der. symptomat-ic, Gk. συμπτωματικός, adj., from συμπτωματ-, stem of σύμπτω-μα; symptomat-i-cal, -ly.

SYN-, prefix, together. (L.—Gk.; or F.—L.—Gk.) A Latinised spelling of Gk. σύν, together. Cf. Gk. ξύν, together; a form not clearly explained. β. The prefix σύν becomes σὺλ- (syl-) before l, σὺμ- (sym-) before b, m, p, and ph, and σὺ- (sy-) before s or z; as in syllogism, symbol, symmetry, sympathy, symphony, system, syzygy.

SYNÆRESIS, the taking of two vowels together, whereby they coalesce into a diphthong. (L.—Gk.) A grammatical term. Spelt sineresis in Minshew.—L. synæresis.—Gk. συναίρεσις, lit. a taking together.—Gk. σύν, together; and αἶρεσις, a taking, from αἶρεῖν, to take. See Syn- and Heresy. Cf. Diæresis.

SYNAGOGUE, a congregation of Jews. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. synagoge, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 23.—F. synagogue, 'a synagogue'; Cot.—L. synagōga.—Gk. συναγωγή, a bringing together, assembly, congregation.—Gk. σύν, together; and ἀγωγή (= ἀγ-ωγ-ή), a bringing, from άγειν, to bring, drive; a reduplicated form, from √AG, to drive.

SYNALCEPHA, a coalescence of two syllables into one. (L.—Gk.) A grammatical term; in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. synalæpha.—Gk. συναλοιφή, lit. a melting together.—Gk. σύν, together; and ἀλείφειν, to anoint with oil, to daub, blot out, efface, whence ἀλοιφή, fat. The Gk. ἀλείφειν is allied to λίπ-ος, fat; cf. Skt. lip, to besmear, anoint.

SYNCHRONISM, concurrence in time. (Gk.) Blount, ed. 1674, says the word is used by Sir W. Raleigh.—Gk. συνγχρονισμός, agreement of time.—Gk. σύνγχρον-ος, contemporaneous; with suffix -ισμος, from -ίζειν.—Gk. σύνγ- (written for σύν before χ), together; and χρόνος, time. See Syn- and Chronicle. Der. synchronous, adapted from Gk. σύνγχρονος, adj.

SYNCOPE, to contract a word. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. syncope, pp. of syncope, of which the usual sense is 'to swoon.'—L. syncope, syncope, a swooning; also syncope, as a gram. term.—Gk. συνκοπή, a cutting short, syncope in grammar, a loss of strength, a swoon.—Gk. σύν- (written for σύν before κ), together; and κοπ-, base of κόπτειν, to cut. See Syn- and Apocope. Der. syncopeat-ion, a musical term, which Blount says is in Playford's Introd. to Music, p. 28. Also syncope, as a grammat. term, also a swoon, spelt sincopein (acc.), Lanfrank, p. 205, from L. syncope < Gk. συνκοπή, as above.

SYNDIC, a government official, one who assists in the transaction of business. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt sindick in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. syndic, 'a syndick, censor, controller of manners'; Cot.—L. syndicus.—Gk. σύνδικος, adj., helping in a court of justice; as sb., a syndic.—Gk. σύν, with; and δικη, justice. The orig. sense of δικη is a showing, hence a course, custom, use, justice; from δικ-, weak grade of √DEIK, to show. See Syn- and Diction. Der. syndic-ate, a coined word.

SYNECDOCHE, a figure of speech whereby a part is put for the whole. (L.—Gk.) Spelt sinecdoche in Minshew, ed. 1627; but synecdoche, Caxton, Golden Legend, The Resurrection, § 1.—L. synecdoche.—Gk. συνεκδοχή, lit. a receiving together.—Gk. συνεκδέχομαι, I join in receiving.—Gk. σύν, together; and ἐκδέχομαι, I receive, compounded of ἐκ, out, and δέχομαι (Ionic δέκομαι), I receive, from √DEK, to take. See Syn-, Ex-.

SYNOD, a meeting, ecclesiastical council. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Synodes and counsails'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 406 h. — F. synode, 'a synod'; Cot. — L. synodum, acc. of synodus. — Gk. σύνδοδος, a meeting, lit. a coming together. — Gk. σύν, together; and δός, a way, here, a coming, from √SED, to go. See Method. Der. synod-ic, from Gk. συνωδικός, adj.; synod-ic-al, synod-ic-al-ly.

SYNONYM, a word having the same sense with another. (F.—L.—Gk.) The form is French; in old books it was usual to write synonima, which, by a curious blunder, was taken to be a fem. sing. instead of a neut. pl., doubtless because the L. synonyma was only used in the plural; and, indeed, the sing. is seldom required, since we can only speak of synonyms when we are considering more words than one. Synonima is used as a sing. by Cotgrave and Blount. — F. synonime, 'a synonyma, a word having the same signification which another hath'; Cot. — L. synōnyma, neut. pl., synonyms; from the adj. synōnymus, synonymous. — Gk. συνώνυμος, of like meaning or like name. — Gk. σύν, with; and ὄνομα, a name, cognate with E. name; see Syn- and Name. Der. synonymous, Englished from L. adj. synōnymus, as above; synonymous-ly; synonym-y, L. synōnymia, from Gk. συνωνυμία, likeness of name.

SYNOPSIS, a general view of a subject. (L.—Gk.) Spelt sinopsis in Minshew, ed. 1627. — L. synopsis. — Gk. σύνopsis, a seeing all together. — Gk. σύν, together; and ὄψις, a seeing, sight; cf. ὄψομαι, fut. from base ὀπ-, to see. See Syn- and Optics. Der. synopt-ic, from Gk. adj. συνοπτικός, seeing all together; synopt-ic-al, -ly.

SYNTAX, the arrangement of words in sentences. (L.—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, b. ii. c. 1; spelt sintaxis in Minshew, ed. 1627. — L. syntaxis. — Gk. σύνταξις, an arrangement, arranging. — Gk. σύν, together; and τάξις, order, from τάσσειν (for **τάκ-ειν*), to arrange. See Syn- and Tactics. Der. syntact-ic-al, due to Gk. συντακτός, adj., put in order; syntact-ic-al-ly.

SYNTHESIS, composition, combination. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, s.v. Synthetical. — L. synthesis. — Gk. σύνθεσις, a putting together. — Gk. σύν, together; and θέσις, a putting; see Syn- and Thesis. Der. synthet-ic-al, due to Gk. adj. συνθετικός, skilled in putting together, from συνθέτης, a putter together, where θε- is the weak grade of θη-, to put, and -της is the suffix denoting the agent (Idg. -tā-); synthet-ic-al-ly.

SYPHON, SYREN, inferior spellings of Siphon, Siren, q.v. Cot. has the F. spelling syphon; also siphon.

SYRINGE, a tube with a piston, for ejecting fluids. (F.—L.—Gk.) The g was prob. once hard, not as j. Cot., however, already has siringe. — MF. syringue, 'a siringe, a squirt'; Cot. — L. syringem, acc. of syrinx, a reed, pipe, tube. — Gk. σύνριγξ, a reed, pipe, tube, shepherd's pipe, whistle. From the Gk. base σyrp-, to perforate; with suffix -ιγξ as in φόρμ-ιγξ, πλάστ-ιγξ. Brugmann, i. § 230. Der. syring-a, a flowering shrub so named because the stems were used for the manufacture of Turkish pipes; see Eng. Cycl., s.v. Syringa.

SYRUP, SIRUP, a kind of sweetened drink. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Spicery, sawces, and siropes'; Fryth's Works, p. 99, col. 1. — MF. syrop, 'sirrop'; Cot. Mod. F. siróp; OF. ysseróp (Littré). — MSpan. xarope, a medicinal drink (Span. jarope); the OF. ysseróp is due to a Span. form axarope, where a represents al, the Arab. article. — Arab. sharāb, shurāb, wine or any beverage, syrup; lit. a beverage; Rich. Dict. p. 886. — Arab. root shariba, he drank; id. p. 887. See Sherbet.

SYSTEM, method. (L.—Gk.) It is not an old word in F., and seems to have been borrowed from Latin directly. Spelt systeme in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. systema. — Gk. σύστημα (stem συστηματ-), a complex whole, put together; a system. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and the base στη-, to stand; with suffix -ματ- (Idg. -mant-). The base στη- occurs in σῆναι, to stand; from √STĀ, to stand; see Stand. Der. system-at-ic, from Gk. adj. συστηματικός, adj., formed from συστηματ-, stem of σύστημα; system-at-ic-al, -ly; system-at-ise, a coined word; system-at-is-er.

SYSTOLE, contraction of the heart, shortening of a syllable. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished (with y for υ) from Gk. συστολή, a contracting, drawing together. — Gk. συστολ-, 2nd grade of συστέλλειν, to draw together, contract. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before σ), together; and στέλλειν, to equip, set in order. See Syn- and Stole.

SYZYGY, conjunction. (Gk.) A modern term in astronomy. — Gk. συσυγία, union, conjunction. — Gk. σύνζυγος, conjoined. — Gk. σύν (for σύν before ζ), together; and ζυγ-, weak grade of ζεύγνυμι, I join (cf. ζύγον, a yoke), from the √YEUG, to join. See Syn- and Yoke; and compare Conjunction.

TA-TE

TAB, a small flap or strip, usually attached at one end. (E.) Prob. allied to tape; cf. AS. tæppe, a tape, fillet. See Tape.

TABARD, a sleeveless coat, formerly worn by ploughmen, noblemen, and heralds, now by heralds only. (F.—L.?) ME. tabard, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 280, l. 2; Chaucer, C. T. 543 (A 541). — OF. tabart, tabard; see a quotation in Roquefort with the spelling tabart; mod. F. tabard (Hamilton, omitted in Littré). Ducange gives an OF. form tribart. Cf. Span. and Port. tabardo; Ital. tabarro. The last form (like MF. tabarre in Cotgrave) has lost a final d or t. [The W. tabar is borrowed from English.] We also find a MHG. taffart, taphart; and even a mod. Gk. ταμπάριον. β. Etym. unknown; Diez suggests L. tapēt-, stem of tapēte, hangings, painted cloths; but this is unlikely. Cf. MItal. and L. trabea, a robe of state.

TABBY, a kind of waved silk. (F.—Span.—Arab.) Chiefly retained in the expression 'a tabby cat,' i. e. a cat brindled or diversified in colour, like the markings on tabby. 'Tabby, a kind of waved silk'; Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. tabis, in use in the 15th century (Littré); also OF. atabis, Godefroy. — Span. tabi, a silken stuff; Low L. (or rather OSpan.) attabi, where at was supposed (but wrongly) to represent the Arab. article al, and so came to be dropped. Cf. 'j panno Attaby' (mispr. Accaby); Earl of Derby's Expeditions, Camden Soc., p. 283, l. 24. — Arab. utābī, a kind of rich undulated silk; Rich. Dict. p. 992. See Devic, who calls it an Arab. word (Rich. marks it Pers.). He adds that it was the name of a quarter of Bagdad where this silk was made (Defrémery, Journal Asiatique, Jan. 1862, p. 94); and that this quarter took its name from prince Attab, great-grandson of Omeyya (Dozy, Gloss. p. 343). ¶ Hence perhaps tabin-et, spelt tabbinet in Webster, and explained, as 'a more delicate kind of tabby'; from Ital. tabin-o, tabine, tabby (Torriano). But Trench, Eng. Past and Present, tells us that it was named from M. Tabinet, a French Protestant refugee, who introduced the making of tabinet in Dublin; for which statement he adduces no reference or authority. Cf. tabine, in 'Cloth of tissue or tabine,' Middleton, Anything for a Quiet Life, ii. 2 (C. D.).

TABERNACLE, a tent used as a temple, a tent. (F.—L.) ME. tabernacle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 20, l. 466. — F. tabernacle, 'a tabernacle,' Cot. — L. tabernāculum, double dimin. of taberna, a hut, shed; see Tavern.

TABID, wasted by disease. (F.—L.) Rare; in Phillips, ed. 1706. — F. tabide, consuming, wasting; Cot. — L. tābidus, wasting away, decaying, languishing. — L. tābēs, a wasting away; tābere, to waste away, languish. Allied to Gk. τήκειν, in the same sense; and to E. thaw. See Thaw. Der. tabe-fy, to cause to melt, Blount's Gloss.; from MF. tabifier, to waste (Cot.), due to L. tābefacere, to cause to melt.

TABLE, a smooth board, usually supported on legs. (F.—L.) ME. table, Chaucer, C. T. 355 (A 353). — F. table. — L. tabula, a plank, flat board, table. Der. table-s, pl. sb., a kind of game like backgammon, played on flat boards, Rob. of Glouc. p. 192, l. 3965; table, verb, Cymb. i. 4. 6; table-book, Hamlet, ii. 2. 136; table-talk, Merch. Ven. iii. 5. 93; table-land, land flat like a table; tabl-et, Cymb. v. 4. 109, from F. tablette, 'a little table,' Cot., dimin. of F. table. Also tabul-ar, tabul-ate, from L. tabula. Also tabl-eau, borrowed from F. tableau, dimin. of table. Also taffer-el, q.v.; entabla-ture.

TABOO, TABU, to forbid approach to, forbid the use of. (Polynesian.) 'Taboo, a political prohibition and religious consecration interdict, formerly of great force among the inhabitants of the islands of the Pacific; hence, a total prohibition of intercourse with, or approach to anything'; Webster. 'South-Sea-Isle taboo'; Tennyson, Princess, iii. 261. Kotzebue mentions the 'Tabu, or interdict'; New Voyage round the World, 1830, ii. 178. The E. pron. of New Zealand (Maori) tapu, consecrated or forbidden; pron. tambu in the Solomon Isles. See E. E. Morris, Austral. Dict.

TABOUR, TABOR, a small drum. (F.—Span.—Arab.) ME. tabour, Havelok, 2329. — OF. and MF. tabour, 'a drum, a tabor'; Cot. Mod. F. tambour; Littré gives the spellings tabur, 11th cent.; tabour, 13th to 16th century. Cf. Prov. tabor, tanbor (cited by Littré); Span. tambor, MSpan. atambor (Minshew); Ital. tamburo. The F. word was most likely borrowed from Span. tambor, also called atambor, where the prefix a- stands for the Arab. def. art. al, showing that the word was borrowed from the Moors. — Arab. tambūr, 'a kind of lute or guitar with a long neck, and six brass strings; also, a drum'; Rich. Dict., p. 976. He gives it also as a Pers. word, and Devic seems to think that the word was borrowed from Persian. The initial letter is the 19th of the Pers. alphabet, sometimes written th, not the ordinary t. On the same page of Rich. Dict. we also find Pers. tumbuk, a trumpet, clarion, bagpipe, tambal, a small drum; also Arab. ṭabl, a drum, a tambourin, Pers. ṭablak, a small drum, p. 964. Also Pers. tabir (with the ordinary t), a drum, kettle-drum, a large pipe, flute, or hautboy, p. 365; tabūrāk, a drum, tabour, tambourin, a drum beaten to scare away birds, p. 364. See the account in Devic, who considers the form ṭambūr as derived from Pers. tabir; and the form tabūrāk to be dimin. of Pers. **tabūr*, a form not found. β. It will be observed that the sense comprises various instruments that make a din, and we may note Port. atabale, a kettle-drum, from a for al, the Arab. article, and Pers. tambal, a drum. All the above words contain a base tab, which we may regard, with Mr. Wedgwood, as being of imitative origin, like the English dub-a-dub and tap. This is rendered likely by the occurrence of Arab. ṭabṭabat, the sound made by the dashing of waterfalls; Rich. Dict. 963; cf. Arab. ṭabbāl, a drummer, ibid. Der. tabor-er, Temp. iii. 2. 160; tabour-ine, Antony, iv. 8. 37, from F. taborin, 'a little drum,' Cot.; tabour-et, Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 1. 78, a dimin. form; shortened to tabret, Gen. xxxi. 27. And see tambourine.

TABULAR, TABULATE; see Table.

TACHE (1), a fastening. (F.—Teut.) In Exod. xxvi. 6. 'A tache, a buckle, a claspe, a bracelet, Spinter;' Baret, s. v. Claspe. A palatalised form of tack; cf. besech for beseek, church for kirk, &c.; esp. the derived words att-ach, de-tach. Minshew, ed. 1627, gives: 'To tache, or tacke.' ME. tache, Voc. 564. 2. We find AF. taches, pl., pegs, Year-books of Edw. I., 1304-5, p. 53.—OF. tache, a nail, fastening (Godefroy).—EFries. (Low G.) take, a point, prick, thorn, allied to tak, takke, a pointed thing, a twig; Low G. takk, a pointed thing. See Tack.

TACHE (2), a blot, blemish; see Tetchy.

TACIT, silent. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 430. No doubt directly from L., though Cot. gives F. tacite, 'silent.'—L. tacitus, silent.—L. tacēre, to be silent. Cognate with Goth. thahan, to be silent, Icel. þegja, Swed. tiga, to be silent. Der. tacit-urn, from F. taciturne, 'silent,' Cot.; tacit-urn-i-ty, Troilus, iv. 2. 75, from F. taciturnité, 'taciturnity,' Cot.; from L. acc. taciturnitatem. Also re-ticent.

TACK, a small nail, a fastening; to fasten. (F.—Teut.) ME. takke. 'Takke, or botun, Fibula,' Prompt. Parv.; where we also find: 'Taklyn, or festyn to-gedur, or some-what sowyn to-gedur.' The sb. is spelt tak, Legends of Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 145, l. 419. [The Irish taca, a peg, pin, nail, fastening; Gael. tacaid, a tack, peg, stab; Breton tach, a nail, tacha, to fasten with a nail, are borrowed words.] —O. North F. taque (OF. tache), a fastening, nail (Godefroy); a peg, clothes-peg (Moisy, s. v. taque).—EFries. and Dan. takke, Low G. takk, a tine, a pointed thing; Westphal. tacke, a tack; G. zacke, a tooth, tine, prong, twig. Allied to EFries. tak, a twig, a bough, Du. tak, a twig. 2. The nautical use of tack is from the same source. 'In nautical language a tack is the rope which draws forward the lower corner of a square sail, and fastens it to the windward side of the ship in sailing transversely to the wind, the ship being on the starboard or larboard tack according as it presents its right or left side to the wind; the ship is said to tack when it turns towards the wind, and changes the tack on which it is sailing;' Wedgwood. See Tache (1) and Zigzag. Cf. to tack, to sew slightly, fasten slightly. Der. tache, q. v.; and see tack-le. Also tack-et, a small nail (Levins).

TACKLE, equipment, implements, gear, tools. (Low G.) ME. takel, Chaucer, C. T. 106; Gen. and Exodus, ed. Morris, 883; takil, the tackle of a ship, Gower, C. A. iii., bk. viii. 470.—Low G. takel, tackle; takeln, to equip; MDu. tackelen, the tackling of ships, tackel, 'munition, riggings,' Hexham; Du. takel, tackle, takelen, to rig; whence Swed. and MSwed. tackel, tackle of a ship (Ihre), tackla, to rig; Dan. takkel, tackle, takle, to rig. β. The suffix -el is used to form substantives from verbs, as in E. sett-le, sb., a thing to sit on, from sit, stopp-le from stop, shov-el from shove, shutt-le from shoot, gird-le from gird, and denotes the implement. Tack-le is that which takes or grasps, holding the masts, &c. firmly in their places; from Icel. taka, MSwed. taka (mod. Swed. taga), to take, seize, grasp, hold, which had a much stronger sense than the mod. E. take; cf. Icel. tak, a grasp in wrestling, taka, a seizing, capture; and observe the wide application of tackle in the sense of implements or gear. Cf. MDu. tackel, 'a rope to draw a boate;' Hexham. γ. Often derived from W. tacl, an instrument, tool, tackle; but the W. word was borrowed from E. Der. tackling, Rich. III., iv. 4. 233.

TACT, peculiar skill, delicate handling. (L.) Modern; Webster gives examples from Macaulay. Todd says: 'Tact, touch, an old word, long disused, but of late revived in the secondary senses of touch, as a masterly or eminent effort, and the power of exciting the affections.' He then cites a passage containing 'sense of tact,

i. e. touch, from Ross, Arcana Microcosmi (1652), p. 66.—L. tactus, touch.—L. tactus, pp. of tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tact-able, that may be touched, Massinger, Parl. of Love, ii. 1. 8, a coined word, made to rhyme with tractable; tact-ile, from L. tactilis, tangible; tact-ion, a touching, Blount.

TACTICS, the art of arranging or manœuvring forces. (Gk.) 'And teaches all the tactics;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1 (Lickfinger).—Gk. τακτικά, sb. pl., military tactics.—Gk. τακτικός, adj., fit for arranging, belonging to tactics.—Gk. τακτός, ordered, arranged; verbal adj. from τάσσειν (< τάκ-yein), to arrange, order. Of uncertain origin; Curtius, ii. 328. The base is either TAK, Fick, i. 588; or TAG (Prellwitz). Der. tactic, adj., from Gk. τακτικός; tactic-i-an, a coined word.

TADPOLE, a young frog in its first stage, having a tail. (E.) 'Young frogs, . . . whiles they be tadpoles and have little wriggling tailles;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 10. ME. tadpolle, Voc. 766. 20; taddepol, 569. 7. Called bull-head in Cotgrave; he has: 'Chabot, the little fish called a gull, bull-head, or miller's thumb; also the little water-vermine called a bull-head.' Also: 'Testard, the pollard, or chevin fish, also the little black water-vermine called a bull-head.' Observe that F. chabot is from L. caput, a head (cf. L. capito, a fish with a large head); that testard is from OF. teste, a head; that chevin is from F. chef, a head; and that bull-head contains the E. head; the striking feature about the tadpole is that it appears nearly all head, with a little tail attached which is afterwards dropped. See Wedgwood, who adduces also E. dial. poll-head, Lowl. Sc. pow-head, a tadpole (which merely repeat the notion of head), E. dial. polwiggie, pollywig, a tadpole, with which we may compare wiggie or waggle, to wag the tail. β. Hence tad-pole=toad-poll, the toad that seems all poll; see Toad and Poll. The former part is from AS. tād-ige, a toad, with loss of suffix, and shortening of ā before dh.

TAEL, a Chinese weight, about 1½ oz.; the chief Chinese money of account. (Malay.) Called liang in Chinese; see Yule. A Malay word.—Malay tahil, a certain weight.

TÆNIA, a fillet, a tape-worm. (L.—Gk.) L. taenia.—Gk. ταῖνια, a band, fillet, strip.—Gk. τείνειν, to stretch. Allied to Thin.

TAFFEREL, TAFFRAIL, the upper part of the stern of a ship. (Du.—L.) 'Tafferel, the uppermost part, frame, or rail of a ship behind, over the poop;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—Du. tafereel, a pannel, a picture; Hexham explains it by 'a painter's table or board,' and adds the dimin. tafereelken, 'a tablet, or a small board.' The taffrail is so called because it is flat like a table on the top, and sometimes ornamented with carved work; cf. G. täfelei, boarded work, flooring, wainscoting. β. The Du. tafer-eel stands for **tafel-eel*, a dimin. from Du. tafel, a table; just as G. täfelei is from G. tafel, a table. The Du. and G. tafel are not to be considered as Teut. words; the MHG. form is tavele, OHG. tavela, borrowed from L. tabula, a table. See Table. ¶ The spelling taffrail is prob. due to confusion with E. rail.

TAFFETA, TAFFETY, a thin glossy silk stuff, with a wavy lustre. (F.—Ital.—Pers.) 'Tafata, a maner of sylke, taffetas;' Palsgrave. ME. taffata, Chaucer, C. T. 442 (A 440). Taffata occurs in 1324; Wardrobe Acct. 18 Edw. II. 24. 17, Q. R.; see N. and Q. 8 S. i. 129.—F. taffetas, 'tafiata,' Cot.—Ital. taffetà, 'taffeta,' Florio.—Pers. tāstah, 'twisted, woven, a kind of silken cloth, taffeta,' Rich. Dict. p. 356.—Pers. tāstān, to twist, to spin, curl, &c.; see Horn, § 372. See Tapestry.

TAG, a point of metal at the end of a lace, anything tacked on at the end of a thing. (Scand.) 'An aglet or tag of a poynt;' Baret, ed. 1580. 'Are all thy points so void of Reasons taggs?' Gascoigne, Fruites of War, st. 61. A 'point' was a tagged lace; cf. 'Tag of a poynt, Ferretum;' Levins.—Swed. tagg, a prickle, point, tooth; Norw. tagge, a tooth, cog.—Pomeran. tagg, a point, tack; Low G. takk, a point, tooth. β. The Low G. takk is the same word as E. tack, a small nail, and G. zacke, a tooth, tine, prong. See Tack, Tache. Der. tag, verb; tag-rag, used by Stanyhurst (tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, p. 21) to mean 'to small pieces,' but usual in the sense of 'every appendage and shred,' a shortened form of tag and rag, as in 'they all came in, both tagge and ragge,' Spenser, State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 662, col. 2. So also tag and rag, Whitgift's Works, i. 315 (Parker Soc.). So also tag-rag-and-bobtail, where bobtail=short or bunchy tail, from bob, a bunch; see Bob.

TAIL (1), the end of the back-bone of an animal, a hairy appendage, appendage. (E.) ME. tail, tayl, Chaucer, C. T. 3876 (A 3878). AS. taegl, taga, a tail, Grein, ii. 523.—Icel. tagl, Swed. tagel, hair of the tail or mane; Goth. tagl, hair, Mark, i. 6; G. zägel, a tail. β. Rog. uncertain; it has been compared with Skt. daṇḍā, the fringe of a garment. Der. tail-piece, a piece or small drawing at the tail or end of a chapter or book. Also tail-ed, Rich. Coer de Lion, l. 1868.

TAIL (2), the term applied to an estate which is limited to certain heirs. (F.—L.) Better spelt taille. 'This limitation, or taille, is either general or special;' Cowel, in Todd's Johnson; see the whole article.—F. taille, 'a cutting,' &c.; Cot.; see Tally.

TAILOR, one who cuts out and makes cloth garments. (F.—L.) Properly 'a cutter.' ME. tailor, taylor, Rob. of Glouc. p. 313, l. 6394.—OF. tailleur, later tailleur, 'a cutter;' Cot.—F. tailleur, to cut; cf. F. taille, an incision, a slitting.—Late L. tāleāre, to cut; cf. tālea, a thin rod, stick, also a cutting, slip, layer (an agricultural word). See Diez, who cites from Nonius, 4. 473; 'taleas scissiones lignorum vel præsegmina Varro dicit de re rust. lib. I.; nam etiam nunc rustica voce intertaleare dicitur dividere vel excindere ramum.' This verb intertaleare is preserved in the Span. entretallar, to slash. Der. tailor-ing. And see tally, de-tail, en-tail, re-tail.

TAINT, a tinge, dye, stain, blemish. (F.—L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 3. 124. Cf. ME. taint, taynt, a disease in hawks; Book of St. Albans, fol. b 2, back.—F. teint; MF. teinct, 'a tincture, die, stain;' Cot.—F. teint, pp. of teindre, 'to stain,' id.—L. tingere; see Tinge. Der. taint, vb., Romeo, i. 4. 76. ¶ Perhaps confused with attaint, from tangere.

TAKE, to lay hold of, seize, grasp, get. (Scand.) ME. taken, pt. t. tok, pp. taken, Chaucer, C. T. 572 (A 570); pp. takē, id. 2649 (A 2647). Late AS. taken, A. S. Chron. an. 1127. Not a true AS. word, but borrowed from Norse.—Icel. taka, pt. t. tōk, pp. tekinn, to lay hold of, seize, grasp (a very common word); Swed. taga, MSwed. taka; Dan. tage.+Goth. tēkan, pt. t. taitōk, pp. tēkans, to touch. Der. tak-ing, tak-ing-ly. Allied words are tack, tache, tag; tack-le, attach, at-tack, de-tach.

TALC, a mineral occurring in thin flakes. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Oil of talc;' Ben Jonson, Epigram to the Small-pox; Underwoods, ii. 11. And see Nares.—F. talc (Cot.).—Span. talco.—Arab. ṭalq, 'talc, mica;' Rich. Dict. p. 974.

TALE, a number, reckoning, narrative. (E.) ME. tale; see Chaucer, Cant. Tales. AS. tal, a number, talū, a narrative; Grein, ii. 521.+Du. taal, language, tongue, speech; Icel. tal, talk, a tale; tala, a number, a speech; Dan. tale, speech; Swed. tal, speech, number; G. zahl, number; OHG. zala. It is probable that Goth. untals, uninstructed, talzjan, to instruct, are related words. Der. tale-bear-ing, tale-bear-er, tell-tale (Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave has 'a tale-bearer or tell-tale'); tale-tell-er, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. Also tell, q.v., talk, q.v.

TALENT, a weight or sum of money, natural gift or ability, inclination. (F.—L.—Gk.) See Trench, Study of Words, and Select Glossary. We derive the sense of ability from the parable in Matt. xxv, our talents being gifts of God. The ME. talent occurs in the sense of will or inclination, from the figure of the inclination or tilting of a balance. ME. talent; whence mal-talent, ill-will, Rom. of the Rose, 273, 330; and see Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 15; King Alisaunder, 1280.—F. talent, 'a talent in money; also will, desire, an earnest humour unto;' Cot.—L. talentum.—Gk. τάλαντον, a balance; a weight, weight or sum of money, talent. Named from the notion of lifting and weighing; allied to τάλας (stem talav-), bearing, enduring, L. toll-ere, to lift, sustain, Skt. tuḥ, to lift, weigh, tuḥana, lifting, tuḥā, a balance, weight. All from ✓TEL, to lift. See Tolerate. Der. talent-ed, endowed with talent, added by Todd to Johnson, with the remark that the word is old; he gives a quotation from Archbp. Abbot, in Rushworth's Collections, p. 449; which book first appeared between 1659 and 1701, and treats of matters from 1618–1648; see an excellent note on talented in Modern English, by F. Hall, p. 70. Brugmann, i. § 580.

TALISMAN, a spell. (Span.—Arab.—Gk.) 'In magic, talisman, and cabal;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 530. The F. is also talisman, but is a late word; both F. and E. words were prob. taken directly from Spanish.—Span. talisman, a magical character; also a doctor of the Mohammedan law, in which sense Littré notes its use in French also.—Arab. ṭilsamān, properly the pl. of ṭilsam, or ṭilism, 'a talisman or magical image, upon which, under a certain horoscope, are engraved mystical characters, as charms against enchantment;' Rich. Dict. p. 974.—Gk. τέλεσμα, a payment; used in Late Gk. to mean initiation or mystery (Devic); cf. τέλεσμός, an accomplishment or completion.—Gk. τελέειν, to accomplish, fulfil, complete, end; also, to pay.—Gk. τέλος, end, completion; also, initiation into a mystery; whence the sense of the derived sb. τέλεσμα. Der. talisman-ic.

TALK, to discourse. (E.) ME. talken, Wyclif, Luke, xxiv. 15; and much earlier, in St. Marharete, p. 13, Ancren Riwe, p. 422. Cf. EFries. talken, to talk; talke, a short tale. We may note that the Harl. MS. actually has talken in Chaucer, C. T., where the Six-text (A 772) has talen in all the MSS. And we may compare the Low G. taalke, (1) a jackdaw, (2) a talkative woman. β. Apparently extended (like wal-k, q.v.) from AS. tal-, as in tal-u, a tale, tal-ian, to account, with suffix -k, which seems to give a frequentative force. Cf. Icel. tal-a, Swed. tal-a, Dan. tal-e, to talk. See Tale. So also AS. tam-c-ian, to tame (Napier); from tam, tame. Der. talk-er; talk-at-ive, a strangely coined word, spelt talcatife in The Craft of Lovers, st. 4, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 341. Hence talk-at-ive-ly, -ness.

TALL, high in stature, lofty. (E. or C.) Two distinct words appear with this spelling: (1) tall, in the sense of 'serviceable,' or 'valiant,' which is obsolescent; and (2) tall, in the sense of 'high in stature.' 1. The former is English; see Trench, Select Glossary. ME. tal. 'Tal, or semely, Decens, elegans;' Prompt. Parv. 'So humble and talle;' Chaucer, Compl. of Mars, l. 38, where the sense appears to be 'obedient or docile, or obsequious.' In old plays it means 'valiant, fine, bold, great;' Halliwell. In the Plowman's Tale, st. 3, untall seems to mean 'poorly clad.' Allied to AS. ge-tal, quick, prompt; AS. -tal, as in lēof-tal, friendly. Also to OHG. gi-zal, quick; and further, to Goth. tals, only used in the comp. un-tals, indocile, uninstructed. Note also the forms un-tala, un-tale, bad, used to gloss mali in the Northumb. Gospels, Matt. xxvii. 23. 2. Perhaps, in the sense of 'lofty,' the word may be Celtic. We find tal, tall, high, both in W. and Cornish; Williams instances tal carn, the high rock, in St. Allen. It is remarkable that the Irish talla means 'meet, fit, proper, just.' Further light is desired as to this difficult word. Der. tall-ness.

TALLAGE, a tribute; see Tally.

TALLOW, fat of animals melted. (E.) ME. talgh, Reliquiæ Antiq. i. 53; talwz, Eng. Gilds, p. 359, l. 11; talugh, Rich. Coer de Lion, 1552. Cf. EFries. talg, tallig, tallow.+MDu. talgh, talch, tallow, Hexham; mod. Du. talk, Low G. talg; Dan. and Swed. talg; Icel. tölgr, also tölg, tölk. The G. talg is borrowed from Low G. β. There is an AS. telg, taig, a stain, dye, but its connexion with tallow is very doubtful. If tallow meant 'hardened' fat, cf. Goth. tulgus, steadfast, firm. See Stearine.

TALLY, a stick cut or notched so as to match another stick, used for keeping accounts; an exact match. (F.—L.) ME. taille, Chaucer, C. T. 572 (A 570); whence tailien, verb, to score on a tally, P. Plowman, B. v. 429.—F. taille, 'a notch, nick, incision, notching, nicking; . . . also, a tally, or score kept on a piece of wood;' Cot.—F. tailleur, to cut.—Late L. tāleāre, to cut; cf. L. tālea, a slip of wood; see Tailor. It is probable that the final -y in tall-y is due to the frequent use of the F. pp. taille, 'cut, nicked, notched,' as applied to the piece of wood scored, in place of the sb. taille. The final -y in lev-y, jur-y, pun-y is likewise due to the F. pp. suffix. Der. tally, verb; tally-shop. Also tallage, a tribute; ME. tailage, Chaucer, The Former Age, 54; OF. tailage (Godefroy); from F. tailleur, to cut, 'also, to levy tributes on,' Cot. And see en-tail, de-tail, tail-or.

TALMUD, the body of Hebrew laws, with comments. (Chaldee.) See Talmud in Index to Parker Society. Spelt talmud, thalmud in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; talmud in Minsheu, ed. 1627; thalmud in Cotgrave.—Chaldee talmūd, instruction, doctrine; cf. Heb. talmīd, a disciple, scholar, from lāmad, to learn, limmad, to teach.

TALON, the claw of a bird of prey. (F.—L.) Spelt talant in Palsgrave (with excrement t after n). He gives: 'Talant of a byrde, the hynder clawe, talon.' Thus the talon was particularly used of the bird's hind claw. ME. talon, Allit. Romance of Alexander, 5454; taloun, Mandeville's Travels, in Spec. of Early English, part II., p. 174, l. 130.—F. talon, 'a heel;' Cot.—Late L. tālōnem, acc. of tālo, a heel.—L. tālus, heel.

TAMANDUA, an ant-eater. (Brazil.) From Guarani tamān-dūá (where ā is nasal); see Granada, Vocabulario Rioplatense.

TAMARIND, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (F.—Span.—Arab. and Pers.) Spelt tamarinde in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 6.—MF. tamarind, 'a small, soft, and dark-red Indian date;' Cot. Also tamarinde, 'the Indian date-tree;' id.—Span. tamarindo. (Cf. Ital. tamarindo; Florio gives the Ital. pl. tamarindi, and Minsheu the Span. pl. tamarindos, without mention of the sing. form.)—Arab. tamr, a ripe date, a dry or preserved date; and Hind, India; whence tamr'ul Hind, a tamarind, lit. date of India; Rich. Dict. pp. 446, 1691. The Arab. tamr is allied to Heb. tāmār, a palm-tree, occurring in the Bible as Tamar, a proper name. The word Hind is borrowed from Persian (which turns initial s into h), and is derived from Skt. sindhū-, the river Indus; see Indigo.

TAMARISK, the name of a tree. (L.) Spelt tamariske in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Cf. MF. tamaris, 'tamarisk,' in Cot.; but the E. word keeps the k.—L. tamariscus, also tamarix, tamaricē, a tamarisk. (The Gk. name is μυρίκη.) Hardly a L. word; perhaps due to, or connected with Skt. tamālaka-s, tamāla-s, a tree with a dark bark; allied to tamas, darkness; Fick, i. 593. See Dim.

TAMBOUR, a small drum-like circular frame, for embroidering.

(F.—Span.—Arab.—Pers.?) In Todd's Johnson.—F. tambour, a drum, a tambour; broder au tambour, to do tambour-work; Hamilton. See further under Tabour. Der. tambour-ine, spelt tamburin in Spenser, Shep. Kalendar, June, l. 59, from F. tambourin, a tabor (Hamilton), dimin. of F. tambour.

TAME, subdued, made gentle, domesticated. (E.) ME. tame, Wyclif, Mark, v. 4. AS. tam, Matt. xxi. 5; whence temian, vb., to tame, in Ælfric's Colloquy (section on the Fowler), in Voc. p. 95. +Du. tam; Icel. tamr; Swed. and Dan. tam; G. zähm. Cf. Goth. gatanjan, to tame; a causal verb. β. All from Teut. type **tamoz*, tame. Allied to Skt. dam, to be tame, also to tame, Gk. δαμάειν, L. domāre, to tame. Der. tame, vb.; tame-ly, -ness; tam-er, tam-able; also (from same root) daunt, q.v., in-dom-it-able.

TAMMY, the same as Stamin, q.v. See Tamine in Nares.

TAMPER, to meddle, practise upon, play with. (F.—L.) 'You have been tampering, any time these three days Thus to disgrace me,' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Captain, iv. 2 (Jacomo). The same word as temper, but used in a bad sense; to temper is to moderate, allay by influence, but is here made to mean to interfere with, to influence in a bad way. Prob. Southern F. Mistral gives tempera as the Limousin form of mod. Prov. tempera, vb., to temper. Godefroy has tamprure as a variant of OF. tempreure, moderation. See Temper. Doublet, temper.

TAMPION, a kind of plug. (F.—Teut.) 'Tampyon for a gon [gun], tampon;' Palsgrave.—F. tampon, 'a bung or stopple;' Cot. A nasalised form of ta-pon, 'a bung or stopple;' id. Formed with suffix -on (L. -ōnem) from OF. tampe, tape, a bung. Cotgr. gives the Picard vb. taper (or tapper), 'to bung, or stop with a bung.'—Du. tap, 'a bunge or a stopple,' Hexham; Low G. tappe, a tap, bung. See Tap (2).

TAN, oak-bark or other bark used for converting hides into leather. (F.—G.) The sb. is, etymologically, the orig. word, but is rarely seen in books; Levins has only tan as a verb. Rich. quotes 'skinner in tan-tubs' from Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 104. The ME. tannen, verb, to tan, occurs in Eng. Gilds, p. 358, l. 16, and the sb. tanner is common, as in P. Plowman, C. i. 223, &c.—F. tan, 'the bark of a young oak, wherewith leather is tanned;' Cot. Cf. Bret. tann, an oak, occasionally used (but rarely) with the sense of tan; Legonidec.—G. tanne, a fir-tree; the names of oak and fir seem to have been confused; the OHG. ianna meant both 'fir' and 'oak' (Kluge). A High G. form; cf. Du. den, a fir-tree, MDu. dan, 'abies,' in Mone, Quellen, p. 302; Low G. danne, a fir-tree (Lübben). Cf. Skt. dhanva, a bow. Der. tan, verb, as above; tann-er; tann-er-y, from F. tannerie, 'tanning, also a tan-house,' Cot. Also tann-ic, a coined word; tann-in, F. tanin (Hamilton), a coined word; tan-ling, one scorched by the sun, Cymb. iv. 4. 29. Also tawn-y, q.v. Also tan, to beat; Norm. dial. tanner la peau, to tan one's skin; Dubois.

TANDEM, applied to two horses harnessed one before the other instead of side by side. (L.) So called because harnessed at length, by a pun upon the word in university slang Latin.—L. tandem, at length.—L. tam, so, so far; and suffix -dem, allied to -dam in qui-dam.

TANG (1), a strong or offensive taste, esp. of something extraneous. (Scand.) 'It is said of the best oyl that it hath no tast, that is, no tang, but the natural gust of oyl therein;' Fuller, Worthies, England (R.). ME. tang, a sting; Cath. Angl. (1483). See Tang (2). So also ME. tongge, 'sharpness of lycure in tastynge;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. MDu. tanger, 'sharpe, or tart upon the tongue; tangere kaese, tart or byting cheese;' Hexham. The lit. sense of tanger is 'pinching;' from Du. tang, a pair of tongs, pincers, nippers; cognate with E. tongs. See E. D. D. Cf. MHG. zanger, sharp, sharp-tasted; AS. ge-tingan, to press hard upon (pt. t. ge-tang).

TANG (2), the part of a knife which goes into the haft, the tongue of a buckle, the prong of a fork. (Scand.) See Halliwell; who cites: 'A tange of a knyfe, piramus;' see Cath. Angl. (1483). It also means a bee's sting. 'Pugio, a tange;' Voc. 703. 27. 'Tongge of a bee, Aculeus; Tongge of a knyfe, Pirasmus;' Prompt. Parv.—Icel. tangi, a spit or projection of land; the pointed end by which the blade of a knife is driven into the handle, allied to töng (gen. tangar), a smith's tongs; tengja, to fasten. So called because it is the part nipped and held fast by the handle; so the tongue of a buckle (corrupted from tang of a buckle) nips and holds fast the strap; the bee's sting nips or stings. The form tong in the Prompt. Parv. answers to the sing. of E. tongs. See Tongs.

TANG (3), to make a shrill sound. (E.) Shak. has it both as sb. and verb. 'A tongue with a tang,' i.e. with a shrill sound, Temp. ii. 2. 52. 'Let thy tongue tang,' i.e. ring out; Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 163, iii. 4. 78. An imitative word, allied to ting, whence the frequentative tingle; also to tink, whence the frequent. tinkle. Cf. Prov. E. ting-tang, the saints-bell; tingle-tangle, a small bell, which occurs in Randolph's Amintas (1640); Halliwell. So also MDu. tinge-tangen, to tinkle; Hexham. Cf. MF. tantan (= tang-tang), 'the bell that hangs about the neck of a cow;' Cot. See Tingle, Tinker, Twang.

TANG (4), sea-weed; see Tangle.

TANGENT, a line which meets a circle, and, being produced, does not cut it. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. tangent, touching, stem of pres. part. of tangere (base tag-), to touch; pp. tactus. +Gk. base τᾶν, to touch, seen in τῆταν, taking. Der. tangent-i-al, in the direction of the tangent, Tatler, no. 43; tangenc-y; also (from pp. tactus) tact. And see tang-ible, task, taste, tax. Also attain, attainder, attaint, con-tact, con-tagion, con-taminate, con-tiguous, con-tingent, entire, in-teger, redintegration.

TANGIBLE, perceptible by the touch, that can be realised. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. tangible, 'tangible;' Cot.—L. tangibilis, touchable; formed with suffix -ibilis from tangere, to touch; see Tangent. Der. tangibl-y, tangibili-ty.

TANGLE, to interweave, knot together confusedly, ensnare. (Scand.) 'I tangell thynges so together that they can nat well be parted asonder, Jembrouille;' Palsgrave. Levins has the comp. entangle. To tangle is 'to keep twisting together like sea-weed;' a frequentative verb from tang, sb. (also tangle, sb.), sea-weed, a Northern word. Cf. tangle, a stalk of sea-weed; in Leslie's Hist. of Scotland, i. 62 (1596; S. T. S.).—Dan. tang, Swed. tång, Icel. þang, kelp or bladder-wrack, a kind of sea-weed; whence the idea of confused heap. We also find the dimin. Icel. þöngull, sea-weed; Norw. tongul, a tangle-stalk. Cf. Norman dialect tangon (a Norse word), explained by Métivier as Fucus flagelliformis. (The G. tang, sea-weed, was borrowed from Scand.; for it begins with t, not d.) All from Teut. base **thang-*; see Tight. β. We also find tangle in the sense of sea-weed (Halliwell); and the verb to tangle may have been made directly from it. It makes no great difference; cf. Icel. þöngull, as above; Norw. tengel, a stalk of sea-weed. Der. tangle, sb., which seems to be a later word than the verb, Milton, P. L. ix. 632; en-tangle, q.v.

TANIST, a presumptive heir to a prince. (Irish.) Spelt tanistih in Spenser, View of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611.—Irish tanaiste, the presumptive or apparent heir to a prince.—Old Irish tanaise, second in rank. See Macbain. Der. tanist-ry, a coined word, to signify the custom of electing a tanist; also in Spenser, as above.

TANK, a large cistern. (Port.—L.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 66; and at p. 43 in another edition (Todd). Also in Dryden, Don Sebastian, ii. 2. The same word as Stank, q.v. The form tank is Portuguese, which is the only Romance language that drops the initial s.—Port. tanque, a tank, pond; the same word as Span. estanque, OF. estanc, Prov. estanc, stanc, a pond, dam of water; from Port. and Span. estancar, to stanch, stop.—Late L. stancāre, to stanch. Ultimately from L. stagnum, a pool; see Stank, Stanch, Stagnant. ¶ See Tank in Yule.

TANKARD, a large vessel for holding drink. (F.—Teut.) ME. tankard, used to translate L. amphora, Voc. 563. 28; also in Lydgate, Ballad of Jack Hare, st. 2; and in Prompt. Parv.—MF. tanguard, 'a tankard, in Rabelais;' Cot. Cf. MDu. tanckaert, 'a wooden [wooden] tankard,' Hexham; a word borrowed from F. β. The suffix -ard is common in OF., showing that the word was really, at some time, French. [Irish tancard must have been borrowed from E.] Prob. from Swed. stänka, 'a large wooden can' (Widegren), 'a tankard' (Öman); with F. suffix -ard. The Swed. stänka is a dimin. of stänna, stända, a vat (Rietz); note the aa in Norw. taankar (also tankar), an oil-can. Cf. also Westphal. stande, stanne, a vessel broader at the bottom (Woeste); Low G. stande (corruptly, stanne), the same; whence E. standard, a tankard, a standing bowl. 'Frolic, my lords, and let the standards walk;' Greene, A Looking-glass, ed. Dyce, p. 141. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 290. All from the vb. to stand.

TANSY, a tall plant, with small yellow flowers. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) ME. tansaye, a tansy-bed; 'Hoc tansetum, tansaye,' Voc. 712. 33. 'Tansey, an herbe, tanasia;' Palsgrave.—OF. tanasia, as in Palsgrave, later tanaisie, 'the herb tansie;' Cot. Other forms are OF. athanasie, Cot.; MItal. atanasia, 'the herb tansie,' Florio; Port. atanasia, athanasia. [Late L. tanacētum (spelt tansētum above) means properly 'a bed of tansy;' as remarked in Prior, Popular Names of British Plants.] The OF. athanasie, MItal. atanasia, and Port. atanasia, athanasia, answer to a L. form athanasia, which is only the Gk. ἀθανασία, immortality, in Latin spelling. β. Prior says that athanasia was 'the name under which it was sold in the shops in Lyte's time.' The plant is bitter and aromatic, and was (and is) used in medicine, whence, probably, the name. Prior thinks there is a reference to 'Lucian's Dialogues of the Gods, no. iv, where Jupiter, speaking of Ganymede, says to Mercury, ἀπαγε αὐτὸν, ὦ Ἑρμῆ, καὶ πύοντα τῆς ἀθανασίας ἀγε οἰνοχοῖσόντα ἡμῖν, take him away, and when he has drunk of immortality, bring him back as cupbearer to us: the ἀθανασία here has been misunderstood, like ἀμβροσία in other passages, for some special plant.' Cf. Mital. atanato, 'the rose campion,' Florio; lit. 'the immortal.' γ. The Gk. ἀθανασία is allied to ἀθάνατος, immortal; from ἀ, negative prefix, and θανείν, 2 aor. of θνήσκειν, to die. See Lyte's Dodoens, bk. i. c. 10.

TANTALISE, to tease or torment, by offering something that is just out of reach and is kept so. (Gk.) 'What greater plague can hell itself devise, Than to be willing thus to tantalize?' Answer to Ben Jonson's Ode (Come leave the loathed Stage), by T. Randolph, st. 2; printed in Jonson's Works, after the play of The New Inn. Formed with the suffix -ise (F. -iser, L. -izāre, Gk. -ίζειν) from the proper name Tantal-us, Gk. Τάνταλος, in allusion to his story. The fable was that he was placed up to his chin in water, which fled from his lips whenever he desired to drink. This myth perhaps relates to the sun, which evaporates water, but remains, as it were, unsated. Allied to ταυταλεύειν, to sway to and fro, and to τάλ-αντον, a balance; see Talent. Der. tantal-ism (with F. suffix -isme < L. -isma < Gk. -ισμα), Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, act ii. sc. 2, l. 10 from end.

TANTAMOUNT, amounting to as much, equal. (F.—L.) Rich. points out, by 2 quotations from Bp. Taylor, Episcopacy Asserted, §§ 9 and 31, that it was first used as a verb; which agrees with the fact that amount was properly at first a verb. It meant 'to amount to as much.'—AF: tant amunter, to amount to as much, Yearbooks of Edw. I., 1292–3, p. 31; cf. F. tant, so much, as much; and E. Amount, q. v. β. The F. tant is from L. tantum, neut. of tantus, so great; formed from pronominal base to-, he, the, so as to answer to quantus, from the base quo-, who. See The.

TAP (1), to strike or knock gently. (F.—Teut.) ME. tappen, to tap; the imperative appears as tep (for tap), Ancren Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; cf. tappe, sb., a tap, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2357.—F. taper, tapper, 'to tap, strike, hit, bob, clap;' Cot. Of Teut. origin; Low G. (and G.) tappen, to grope, to fumble, EFries. tappen, to tap, tap, a light blow. So also Icel. tapša, to tap. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. Russ. topate, to stamp with the foot; Malay tabah, to beat out corn, tapuk, to slap, pat, dab (Marsden's Dict. pp. 69, 77); Arab. ṭabl, a drum; E. dub-a-dub, noise of a drum, E. dab, a pat. Der. tap, sb. And see tip (2).

TAP (2), a short pipe through which liquor is drawn from a cask, a plug to stop a hole in a cask. (E.) ME. tappe, Chaucer, C. T. 3890. AS. tæppa, a tap (Toller); whence tæppere, one who taps casks; 'Caupo, tabernarius, tæppere,' Voc. 129. 9.—Du. tap, sb., whence tappen, verb; Icel. tappi, sb., tappa, vb.; Dan. tap, sb., tappe, vb.; Swed. tapp, a tap, handful, wisp, whence tappa, vb.; G. zapfen, sb. and vb.; OHG. zapho, sb. β. Teut. type **tappōn*-. The Swed. tapp means a wisp, handful, and G. zapfen is bung, stopple. Prob. the orig. idea (as Wedgwood suggests) was a bunch of some material to stop a hole with, a tuft of something. We may connect it, as Fick does, with E. top, G. zopf; the G. zopf means a top of a tree, a weft or tuft of hair, a 'pig-tail;' and the Icel. toppr means, first of all, a tuft or lock of hair. Der. tap, vb., Merry Wives, i. 3. 11; tap-room; tap-root, a root like a tap, i. e. conical, cf. G. zapfen, a tap, cone of a fir, zapfenwurzel, a tap-root. Also tapster, ME. tapstere, Chaucer, C. T. 241, AS. tæppestre, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 36, l. 13, a fem. form of AS. tæppere, a tapper, as above; for the suffix -ster, see Spinster. Also tampion, q. v. And see Tip (1).

TAPE, a narrow band or fillet of woven work, used for strings, &c. (L.—Gk.) ME. tape, Chaucer, C. T. 3241; also tappe. 'Hec tenea, tappe;' in a list of ornaments, Voc. 655. 15. AS. tæppe, a tape, fillet. 'Tenia, tæppan vel dol-smeltas,' where tæppan is a pl. form; Voc. 107. 33. The orig. sense may have been 'a strip of stuff;' it is closely allied to AS. tæppet, a tippet, ME. tapet, a piece of tapestry; and the use of the pl. tæppan is suggestive of strips of stuff or cloth. Not an E. word, but borrowed from L. tapēte, cloth, hangings, tapestry, a word borrowed from Greek. See Tapestry, Tippet. In like manner we find OHG. tepih, teppi (mod. G. teppich) tapestry, with the same sense as OHG. tepid, from the same L. word. Der. tape-worm.

TAPER (1), a small wax-candle. (E.) ME. taper, Rob. of Glouc., p. 456, l. 9350. AS. tapor, taper, a taper; Voc. 267. 12; 202. 35. Cf. Irish tapar, a taper; W. tampr, a taper, torch.

TAPER (2), long and slender. (E.) 'Her taper fingers;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. bk. i. l. 676. Here the fingers are likened to tapers or small wax-candles; and the word is nothing but a substitution for taper-like. This appears more clearly from the use of taper-wise, i. e. in the form of a taper, in Holland's tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16: 'the French box [box-tree] . . . groweth taper-wise, sharp pointed in the top, and runneth vp to more than ordinarie height.' As wax tapers were sometimes made smaller towards the top, the word taper meant growing smaller towards the top, not truly cylindrical; whence the adj. tapering with the sense of taper-like, and finally the verb to taper. Note also 'tapering top' in Pitt, tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. v. l. 489 of L. text. Der. taper-ing, taper, vb.

TAPESTRY, a kind of carpet-work, with wrought figures, esp. used for decorating walls. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'A faire and pleasaunt lodginge, hanged with riche Aresse or tapestry;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 2. § 3. Lydgate has tapcery; Minor Poems, p. 6. Tapestrye is a contraction of tapisserye; Palsgrave gives: 'Tappysserye worke, tapisserie.'—F. tapisserie, 'tapistry;' Cot.—F. tapisser, 'to furnish with tapistry;' id.—F. tapis, 'tapistry hangings;' id. (Cf. Span. tapiz, tapestry, tapete, small floor-carpet; Ital. tappeto, a carpet; tappezzare, to hang with tapestry; tappezzeria, tapestry.)—Late L. tapērium, tapestry (Körting); cf. tapēte, cloth, hangings.—Gk. ταπήτιον, dimin. of τάπηξ, a carpet, woollen rug. Cf. Pers. tabastah, a fringed carpet or cushion, Rich. Dict., p. 362; tābidan, to spin; tāstah, taffeta; see Taffeta. Horn, § 372. Thus the Gk. word is prob. of Pers. origin. See also Tape, Tippet. Der. We say 'on the tapis;' from F. tapis, carpet.

TAPIOCA, the glutinous and granular substance obtained from the roots of the Cassava plant of Brazil. (Port.—Brazilian.) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'The fecula or flour [of the cassava] . . . is termed mouchaco in Brazil. . . . When it is prepared by drying on hot plates, it becomes granular, and is called tapioca;' Eng. Cyclopædia, art. Tapioca.—Port. tapioca.—Brazilian tipioka, 'the Tupi-Guarani [Brazilian] name of the poisonous juice which issues from the root of the manioc [cassava] when pressed;' Littré. [He refers to Burton, ii. 39, who follows The Voyage to Brazil of the Prince de Wied-Neuwied, i. 116.] β. The Tupi (native Brazilian) tipi-ōka means 'dregs squeezed out;' from tipi, 'residue, dregs,' and the verbal root og, ōk, to take by force, pluck, pull, hence also, to squeeze (Cavalcanti). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 340.

TAPIR, an animal with a short proboscis, found in S. America. (Brazilian.) Called the tapir or anta in a tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, i. 250; where the animal is said to be a native of Brazil, Paraguay, and Guiana.—Brazilian tapira, tapyra, a tapir. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 340.

TAR, a resinous substance of a dark colour, obtained from pine-trees. (E.) ME. terre, Prompt. Parv.; spelt tarre, P. Plowman, C. x. 262. AS. teoru, tar; the dat. teoruē occurs in A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 132, l. 5; also spelt teru in a gloss (Bosworth); also tyrwa, Gen. vi. 14; Exod. ii. 3. We also find the comp. scip-teora, -teara, -tara, -tera, ship-tar (Toller).—Du. teer; Icel. tjara; Dan. tjære; Swed. tjära. And cf. G. theer, prob. borrowed from Low G. tür or Du. teer. [We find also Irish tearr, borrowed from E.; as the word is certainly Teutonic.] β. We also find Icel. tyri, tyrfi, a resinous fir-tree; whence tyrviðr, tyrvitrē, with the sense of 'tar-wood.' Allied to Lithuan. darwa, derwa, resinous wood, particularly the resinous parts of the fir-tree that easily burn (Nesselmann); and this is allied to Russ. drevo, a tree, derevo, a tree, wood, timber, W. derw, an oak-tree, and E. Tree, q. v. γ. Thus the orig. sense was simply 'tree' or 'wood,' esp. resinous wood, as most in request for firing; hence the resin or tar itself. Der. tarr-y; also tar-pauling, q. v.

TAR (2), a sailor; in Swift's Poems, To the Earl of Peterborough, st. 11. It is simply short for Tarpauling, q. v.

TARANTELLA, the name of a dance. (Ital.) Both Ital. tarantella, the dance, and Ital. tarantola, a tarantula or large spider, derive their names from Taranto, a town in S. Italy (L. Tarentum).

TARAXACUM, the dandelion. (Arab.) 'Taraxacum or Taraxacon, the herb dandelion or sow-thistle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The common dandelion is Leontodon taraxacum. The etymology of this strange word is given by Devic, Supp. to Littré. He shows that it is not Greek, but Arabic or Persian. We find Pers. ṭarkhashqūn, wild endive; Rich. Dict. p. 967; but Devic says he can only find, in Razi, the statement that 'the ṭarashaqūq is like succory, but more efficacious,' where he thinks we evidently ought to read ṭarashaqūn, and to explain it by dandelion or wild succory. In Gerard of Cremona he finds Arab. ṭarasacon, explained as a kind of succory; and a chapter on taraxacon in a Latin edition of Avicenna, Basle, 1563, p. 312.

TARBOOSH, a round cap much worn by Arabs and Turks. (Arab.—Pers.) Arab. ṭarbūsh, a kind of red cap (Devic). Devic takes it to be of Pers. origin.—Pers. sar-pōsh, a head-dress; properly, for women.—Pers. sar, head; pōsh, a cover; see Rich. Dict., pp. 340, 818, 822.

TARDY, slow, sluggish, late. (F.—L.) In Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 51.—F. tardif, 'tardy,' Cot. Cf. Ital. tardivo, tardy. These forms correspond to Late L. **tardius*, formed with suffix -ius from L. tard-us, slow. Der. tardi-ly, -ness; (from L. tardus) re-tard.

TARE (1), a plant like the vetch. (E.) ME. tare, Chaucer, C. T.

3998 (A 4000); pl. taris, i.e. darnel, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 25. Palsgrave has: 'taare, a corne lyke a pease, lupins;' also: 'tarefytyche [=tare-vetch], a corne, lupyn.' The mod. E. tare is, in fact, short for tare-veich, lit. 'wheat-vetch,' or 'darnel-vetch.' +MDu. terwe, Du. tarwe, Low G. tarve, wheat. Cf. Lithuan. dirwa, a corn-field, Skt. dūrva, a kind of grass. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 291.

TARE (2), an allowance made for the weight of the package in which goods are contained, or for other detriment. (F.—Span.—Arab.) A mercantile term; explained in Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tare, 'losse, diminution, . . . waste in merchandise by the exchange or use thereof;' Cot.—Span. tara, tare, allowance in weight. (Cf. Ital. and Port. tara, the same.)—Arab. tarha (given by Devic); from tarh, throwing, casting, flinging. Richardson, Pers. Dict. p. 967, gives Arab. ṭirh, ṭurrah, thrown away, from tarh. The orig. sense is 'that which is thrown away,' hence loss, detriment. From the Arab. root taraha, he threw prostrate, threw down; Rich., as above.

TARGET, a small shield, buckler, a mark to fire at. (F.—Scand.) The mark to fire at is named from its resemblance to a round shield. It is remarkable that the g is hard; indeed, the pl. is spelt targattes in Ascham, Toxophilus, bk. i. ed. Arber, p. 69, l. 28; and we find tergate in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, bk. i. c. 18, § 2. This may be accounted for by derivation from OF. targuete, a small shield (Godefroy); dimin. of OF. targue, as in Cot. [The mod. F. targe is from OF. targe (with g = E. j); but cf. mod. Prov. targueto, dimin. of targo, OProv. targa.] We also had targe as a F. word, Rob. of Glouc., p. 361, l. 7462; and see Chaucer, C. T. 473 (A 471). The dimin. suffix -et is the usual F. dimin. so common in E.—Icel. targa, a target, small round shield; OHG. zarga, a frame, side of a vessel, wall; G. zarge, a frame, case, side, border. Cf. also AS. targe, a round shield, pl. targan, A.D. 970; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 516. [We find also F. targe, 'a kind of target or shield,' Cot.; Port. tarja, an escutcheon on a target, a border; Span. tarja, a shield; Ital. targa, a buckler; words which Diez explains to be of Teut. origin.] The Irish and Gael. targaid, a target, shield, must have been taken from ME. targat; cf. Rhys, Lect. ii. ¶ Among the words of Teut. origin Diez includes the Port. and Span. adarga; the Port. adarga is a short square target, and the Span. adarga is explained by Minshew to be 'a short and light target or buckler, which the Africans and Spaniards doe vse.' But this word is plainly Moorish, the a being for al, the Arab. article, and the etymology is from Arab. darqa(t), daraga(t), 'a shield or buckler of solid leather;' Rich. Dict., p. 664. Note the Late L. adarca, a shield (1099) in Ducange; and the Late L. tarcheta, a target (1443). It is remarkable that Cotgrave explains F. targe as 'a kind of target or shield, almost square, and much in use along the Spanish coast, lying over against Africk, from whence it seems the fashion of it came.' He seems to be thinking only of the Moorish square shield; but the OF. targe is as old as the 11th cent., and the AS. targe as old as the 10th; so that the Teut. and Moorish words would seem to be distinct. But if the AS. targe can be of Moorish origin, the G. zarge is prob. unrelated.

TARGUM, a Chaldee paraphrase of the Old Testament. (Chaldee.) See Targums in Index to Parker Society. In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The Targum or paraphrase of Jonathan;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 1. § 4.—Chaldee targūm, an interpretation; from targēm, to interpret (Webster). Cf. Arab. tarjūmān, an interpreter; for which see Dragoman.

TARIFFE, a list or table of duties upon merchandise. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Tariff, a table made to show . . . any multiple or product . . . a proportional table . . . a book of rates agreed upon for duties,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706.—MF. tariffe, 'arithmetick, or the casting of accompts;' Cot.—Span. tarifa, a list of prices, book of rates.—Arab. tarīf, giving information, notification (because a tariff does this); Rich. Dict. p. 416.—Arab. irf, knowing, knowledge; from Arab. root arafa, he knew; Rich. Dict. p. 1003. See further in Devic, Supp. to Littré.

TARLATAN, a kind of thin muslin. (F.) F. tarlatane, formerly spelt tarnatane, in 1723 (Hatzfeld). Of unknown origin.

TARN, a small lake, a pool. (Scand.) In Levins. ME. terne, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1041.—Icel. tjörn (gen. tjarnar), a tarn, pool; Swed. dial. tjörn, tärn, a tarn, pool without inlet or outlet (Rietz); Norweg. tjörn, tjörn, kjörn, tjöd, kjöd, a tarn (Aasen). Cf. Skt. dara-, a cavity.

TARNISH, to soil, diminish the lustre of, to dim. (F.—OHG.) Also to grow dim, as in Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 249; this appears to be the orig. sense in E.—F. terniss-, stem of pres. part. of se ternir, 'to wax pale, wan, discoloured, to lose its former luster;' Cot. Cf. terni, pp. 'wan, discoloured, whose luster is lost;' id.—MHG. ternen, OHG. tarnan, to obscure, darken; cf. tarnhut, tarnkappe, a hat or cap which rendered the wearer invisible. From OHG. tarni, secret (whence F. terne, dim). +AS. dernan, dyrnan, to hide, Gen. xlv. 1; causal verb from derne, dyrne, hidden, secret, Grein, i. 214; and this adj. is cognate with OSax. derni, OFries. dern, hidden, secret. See Darn.

TARPAULING, TARPAULIN, a cover of coarse canvas, tarred to keep out wet. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Tarpawling is in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. It was once oddly used to denote also a sailor, whence our modern tar, in the same sense, rather than from an extension of tar to mean a man daubed with tar; though it makes little ultimate difference. 'Tarpawling, or Tarpaulin, a piece of convass tar'd all over, to lay upon the deck of a ship, to keep the rain from soaking through; also a general name for a common seaman, because usually clothed in such canvass;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; Phillips, ed. 1706. And see Trench, Select Gloss., who gives two quotations for tarpaulin = sailor, viz. from Smollett, Rod. Random, vol. i. c. 3, and Turkish Spy, letter 2. The pl. tarpaulins occurs in Lady Alimony, Act iii. sc. 1; in Hazlitt's Old Plays, xiv. 325 (1659). Compounded of tar and palling. β. A palling is a covering, from pall, verb, to cover, which from pall, sb., L. palla; see Pall. 'Come, thick night, And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell;' Mach. i. 5. 52. 'Pauling, a covering for a cart or waggon, Lincolnshire;' Halliwell.

TARRAGON, the name of a plant. (Span.—Arab.—Gk.) 'Tarragon, a certaine hearbe, good to be eaten in sallads with lettuce;' Baret (1580); Taragon in Levins.—Span. taragona (Diez); usually taragontia; Minshew also gives the form taragoncia, which he explains by 'an herbe called dragons.' [Hence also F. targon, 'the herb tarragon;' Cot.]—Arab. tarkhūn, 'dragon-wort;' Rich. Dict. p. 389.—Gk. δρακών, a dragon; see Dragon. See Devic, s.v. estragon. Thus the strange form tarragon is nothing but dragon in a form changed by passing through an Oriental language, and decked in Spanish with a Latin suffix (viz. -tia). The botanical name is Artemisia dracunculus, where dracunculus is a double dimin. from L. acc. draconem.

TARRE, to incite, set on. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 2. 37. ME. tarien, terien, to provoke; see Tarry (below).

TARRY, to linger, loiter, delay. (E.) The present form is due to ME. tarien, to irritate, provoke, worry, vex; later, to hinder, delay; affected by ME. targen, to delay. The mod. sense goes with the latter form. 1. ME. tarien, terien, to irritate, vex, provoke. 'I wol nat tarien you, for it is pryme;' Chaucer, C. T. 10387 (F 73), where it may fairly be explained by 'delay.' In the Prompt. Parv. we have: 'teryyn, or longe abydyn, Moror, pigritor;' but also 'teryyn, orertyn, Irrito.' AS. tergan, to vex; a rare word. Trevisa has tarry, to provoke, annoy; tr. of Higden, v. 355. 'Tredað þec and tergað and heora torn wrecað' = they will tread on thee and vex thee and wreak their anger; Gúthlac, l. 259. Usually tirgan. +MDu. tergen, 'to vex' (Hexham); Low G. targen, tarren, to provoke. So also prov. G. zergen, Dan. targe, to irritate; answering to a Teut. type **targjan-*; to which Russ. dergat(e), to pluck, pull, draw, may be related. 2. ME. targen, to delay, tarry. 'That time thought the king to targe no lenger;' Alexander, fragment A, l. 211, pr. with Will. of Palerne.—OF. targer, to tarry, delay; allied to tarder, with the same sense; Cot.—Late L. tardicare, an extension of L. tardare (= F. tarder), to delay.—L. tardus, slow; see Tardy.

TART (1), acrid, sour, sharp, severe. (E.) 'Very tarte vinegar;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 22. § 11. Spelt tarte also in Palsgrave. 'Poudre-marchant tart' = a sharp (tart) kind of flavouring powder; Chaucer, C. T. 381 (A 383). AS. teart, tart, sharp, severe; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 344, l. 4 from bottom; ii. 590, l. 4 from bottom. Perhaps lit. 'tearing,' just as bitter is from the notion of biting.—AS. **tar* (tær), pt. t. of teran, to tear; see Tear (1). Der. tart-ly, -ness.

TART (2), a small pie. (F.—L.) ME. tarte; pl. tartes, Rom. of Rose, 7041.—OF. tarie, 'a tart;' Cot. Perhaps so called from the paste being twisted together; it seems to be the same word as F. tourte, a tart, OF. torte, a kind of bread; whence the dimin. forms tortel, a cake (Roquefort), torteau, a pancake (Cotgrave). Godefroy gives also OF. tartean, a little tart, with the same sense as torteau. [So also Ital. tariera, 'a tarte,' Florio, torta, a pie, tart, Span. torta, a round cake; Du. taart, Dan. tarte, G. torte, not Teutonic words.]—L. torta, fem. of tortus, twisted, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. Der. tart-let, from F. tartelette, 'a little tart;' Cot.

TARTAN, a woollen stuff, chequered, much worn in the Highlands of Scotland. (F.—L.—Tatar.) In Jamieson; spelt tartane in 1474; also blew tartane; at first all of one colour; the chequered patterns are comparatively modern. Spelt tartar in 1488. Borrowed from French. At first applied to various cloths from the East, and also to fine silk; see my note to Piers Plowman, C. xvii. 299.—AF. tartayn; as in 'un vestiment de blank tartayn;' Will of Lady Clare (1355), in Royal Wills, p. 31.—Late L. **Tartānus*, by-form of Tartēnus; as in 'de pannis Tartenis,' Liber Custumarum, p. 209. β. More commonly Tartarinus (OF. Tartarin), Tatar [Tartar] cloth; a general term for various Eastern cloths, including such as came through Tartary from China; see Marco Polo, ed. Yule. Cf. 'the third [standard] was of yelow tarterne;' Hall's Chron., Hen. VII, an. 1. § 3. 'Corteyns of grene tartren,' in 1453; Cambridge Antiq. Soc., vol. iv. p. 357; 'aulter clothes of grene tartren;' ibid. 'Blue tartourne;' Cambridge Churchwardens' Accounts, ed. J. E. Foster, p. 7 (1504). 'Hec linostema, tarteryne;' Voc. 655. 6. γ. The form tartar is from OF. Tartaire, Late L. Tartara; with the same meaning. All from the name of the country; see Tartar (2).

TARTAR (1), an acid salt which forms on the sides of casks containing wine; a concretion which forms on the teeth. (F.—Low L.—Arab.) This is one of the terms due to the alchemists. Called sal tartre in Chaucer, C. T. 16278 (G 810); and simply tartre, id. 16281 (G 813). —F. tartre, 'tartar, or argall, the lees or dregs that stick to the sides of wine-vessels, hard and dry like a crust;' Cot. —Low L. tartarum (perhaps confused with Tartarus, whence the mod. E. spelling tartar). —Arab. durd, 'dregs, sediment, the tartar of wine, the mother of oil;' Rich. Dict. p. 662; where it is marked as a Pers. word, though, according to Devic, of Arab. origin. Rich. also gives Pers. durdi, Arab. durdīy, 'sediment, dregs;' p. 663. Note also Arab. darad, a shedding of the teeth, dardā, a toothless woman; which Devic explains with reference to the tartar on teeth. Der. tartar-ic, tartar-ous.

TARTAR (2), a native of Tartary. (Tatar.) Chiefly used in the phr. 'to catch a Tartar,' to be caught in one's own trap. 'The phrase is prob. owing to some particular story;' Todd's Johnson, with the following quotation. 'In this defeat they lost about 5000 men, besides those that were taken prisoners:—so that, instead of catching the Tartar, they were caught themselves;' Life of the Duke of Tyrconnel, 1689. 'Tartar, a native of Tartary, . . . the people of which are of a savage disposition: whence the proverbial expression to catch a Tartar, i.e. to meet with one's match, to be disappointed, balked, or cowed;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Shak. has 'the Tartar's bow,' Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 101. Sir J. Mandeville professed to have travelled in Tartarye; see prol. to his Travels. See Trench, Eng. Past and Present, where he explains that the true spelling is Tatar, but the spelling Tartar was adopted from a false etymology, because their multitudes were supposed to have proceeded out of Tartarus or hell. —Pers. Tātār, 'a Tartar, or Scythian,' Rich. Dict. p. 351; a word of Tatar origin.

TARTAR (3), Tartarus, hell. (L.—Gk.) 'To the gates of Tartar;' Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 225. —L. Tartarus. —Gk. Tátrapos, Tartarus, the infernal regions; apparently conceived to be a place of extreme cold. Cf. Gk. raprapíseiv, to shiver with cold. Der. tartar-e-ous, 'the black tartareous cold;' Milton, P.L. vii. 238; tartar-e-an, id. ii. 69.

TASK, a set amount of work imposed upon any one, work. (F.—L.) Lit. a tax. ME. task, taske, Cursor Mundi, 5872. —ONorth F. tasque, Norm. dial. tasque, OF. tasche, 'a task;' Cot. Mod. F. tâche. —Late L. tasca, a tax; the same word as taxa, a tax. (For a similar metathesis cf. E. ask with prov. E. ax.) —L. taxāre, to rate, value; see Tax. Der. task, vb., task-er, sb.; 'to task the tasker;' L. L. L. ii. 20; task-master, Milton, Sonnet i. 14. Doublet, tax.

TASSEL (1), a hanging ornament consisting of a bunch of silk or other material. (F.—L.) ME. tassel, a fastening of a mantle, consisting of a cord ending in a tassel, Cursor Mundi, 4389. Cf. 'a Mantle of Estate, . . . with strings dependant, and tasselled;' Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 271; a wood-cut on p. 272 shows the tassel, ornamented with strings and dots, that divide it into squares like the ace on a die. —OF. tassel, a fastening, clasp; mod. F. tasseau, only in the sense of bracket. We also find Late L. tassellus, used in the Prompt. Parv. as equivalent to E. tassel. The OF. tassel also meant a piece of square stuff, used by ladies as an ornament; see Godefroy. Cf. Ital. tassello, a collar of a cloak, a square. —L. taxillum, acc. of taxillus, a small die; dimin. of tālus, a knuckle-bone, also a die orig. made of the knuckle-bone of an animal. We may conclude that the tassel was a sort of button made of a piece of squared bone, and afterwards of other materials. β. The curious form taxillus shows that tālus is a contraction for **taxlus*; origin unknown. Taxillus may have been confused with L. tessella, dimin. of tessera, a die; cf. the entry: 'Tessera, tasol,' Epinal Gloss. 998. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 292. Der. tassell-ed, ME. tasseled, Chaucer, C. T. 3251.

TASSEL (2), the male of the goshawk. In Shak. Romeo, ii. 2. 160. The same as Tercel, q.v.

TASTE, to handle, to try, to try or perceive by the touch of the tongue or palate, to eat a little of, to experience. (F.—L.) The sense of feel or handle is obsolete, but the ME. tasten meant both to feel and to taste. 'I rede thee lat thyn hand upon it falle, And taste it wel, and ston thou shalt it finde;' Chaucer, C. T. 15970 (G 502). 'Every thyng Himself schewith in tastyng;' King Alisaunder, 4042. —OF. taster, 'to taste or take an assay of; also, to handle, feele, touch;' Cot. Mod. F. tâter; Ital. tastare, 'to taste, to assaie, to feele, to grope, to trye, to proove, to touch;' Florio. We find also Late L. taxta, a tent or probe for wounds; whence Ital. tasta, 'a tent that is put into a sore or wound, also a taste, a proove, a tryall, a feeling, a touch;' Florio. β. The Late L. taxta is short for **taxita*, and prob. points, as Diez says, to a Late L. verb **taxitäre*, not found, but a mere iterative of L. taxäre, to feel, to handle (Gellius). This taxäre (<**tagsäre*) is an intensive form of tangere (pp. tactus), to touch; see Tax, Tangent. Hence the orig. sense of taste was to keep on touching, to feel carefully. Der. taste, sb., ME. taste, Gower, C. A. iii. 32; bk. vi. 925; tast-er, tast-able, taste-ful, taste-ful-ly; taste-ful-ness, taste-less, -less-ly, -less-ness; tast-y, tast-i-ly.

TAT, to make trimming. (Scand.) North E. tat, to entangle. Cf. MSwed. tätte, Dan. dial. tat; Norw. taatt, a thread, a strand of a rope, whence Norw. tætta, to interweave. Also Icel. þättr, Swed. tåt, Dan. tot, a filament; G. docht, a wick.

TATTER, a shred, loose hanging rag. (Scand.) 'Tear a passion to tatters;' Hamlet, iii. 2. 11; spelt totters in quarto edd. So also totters in Ford, Sun's Darling, i. 1, 2nd Song; and see tottered in Nares. It is remarkable that the derived word tattered occurs earlier, spelt tatered, P. Plowman's Crede, 753, where it means 'jagged'; tatird, ragged, Pricke of Conscience, 1537. —Icel. tötturr, pl. tötrar, better spelt tötturr, pl. töttrar; the pl. signifies tatters, rags; Norweg. totra, pl. totror, tottrur, also taltra, tultre, pl. taltrar, tultir, tatters, rags. + Low G. taltern, tatters, rags; to taltern riten, to tear to tatters; taltrig, tattered; EFries. talte, a rag. β. It will be seen that an l has been lost; and this is why the Icel. word should be spelt with double t, for tötturr = **tölturr*, by assimilation. Hence tatter stands for **talter*; the assimilation of lt to tt being due to Scand. influence. I suppose tatter to be closely allied to totter = to wag, vacillate, shake about; and that tatter meant orig. a shaking rag, a fluttering strip. At any rate, totter is in the like case as regards letter-change, since it stands for tolter. See Totter.

¶ We find also AS. tættec, tættic, a rag; the relationship of which is not clear. Der. tatter-ed, as above; tatter-demallion, Massinger, Virgin Martyr, iii. 3 (Hircius); see my Notes on E. Etym., p. 292.

TATTLE, to talk idly, prattle. (E.) In Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 11. 'Every tattling fable;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 724. ME. totelen, variant of tateren, to tattle, Prompt. Parv.; pp. 498, 487. We may consider it E.; it is closely allied to tittle, to tell tales, talk idly, which is equivalent to ME. titeren, whence titerere (also titelere), a tatter, teller of tales, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. The verbs tatt-le, titt-le, and ME. tat-eren, tit-eren, are all frequentatives, from a base TAT, expressive of the sound of talking or repeating the syllables ta ta ta (Wedgwood). Allied words are Du. tateren, to stammer, MDu. tateren, 'to speake with a shrill noise, or to sound taratantara with a trumpet,' Hexham; Low G. tateln, to gabble as a goose, to tattle; tittelateln, to tittle-tattle, täteler, a tattler; taati-goos, a gabbling goose, chatterer; täterletüt, an interjection, the noise of a child's trumpet; and even Ital. tattamella, chat, prattle, tattamelare, to prattle, which clearly show the imitative origin of the word. Allied to Titter, q.v. Der. tattle, sb.; tittle-tattle, sb. and vb., see Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248; tiddle-tiddle (Fluellen's pronunciation), Hen. V, iv. 1. 71. And see twadd-le (formerly twattle).

TATTOO (1), the beat of drum recalling soldiers to their quarters. (Du.) 'If they hear but the tattoo;' Prior, Alma, c. i. 454. 'Tattoo, Taptow (also Taptow), the beat of drum at night for all soldiers to repair to their tents in a field, or to their quarters; also called The Retreat;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To beat the taptow, de Aftogt slaan;' Sewel, Eng.-Du. Dict., 1754. A later edition (in 1766) has: de taptoe slaan, 'to beat the tap-tow.' 'The taptow is used in garrisons and quarters by the beat of the drum;' Silas Taylor, On Gavelkind, ed. 1663, p. 74. —Du. taptoe, tattoo (Calisch); whence de taptoe slaan, to beat the tattoo. —Du. tap, a tap; and toe, put to, shut, closed. The sense is 'the tap is closed;' cf. Du. Is de deur toe = is the door closed? doe het boek toe = shut the book; haal't venster toe = shut the window (Sewel). Hexham has toe slaen, to shut, conclude. The tattoo was thus the signal for closing the taps of the public-houses. β. So also G. zapfenstreich, the tattoo (lit. tap-stroke), where zapfen is a tap of a cask; and Low G. tappenslag, the tattoo (lit. a tap-shutting). Cf. Low G. tappen to slaan = to close a tap, an expression used proverbially in the phrase Wi wilt den Tappen to slaan = we will shut the tap, put the tap to, i.e. we will talk no more of this matter. This last expression clearly shows that 'a tap-to' was a conclusion, a time for shutting-up. ¶ I do not think that Span. tapatan, the sound of a drum, has anything to do with the present matter.

TATTOO (2), to mark the skin with figures, by pricking in colouring matter. (Tahitian.) 'They have a custom . . . which they call tattooing.' They prick the skin so as just not to fetch blood,' &c.; Cook, First Voyage, b. i. c. 17; id. ib. b. iii. c. 9 (R.). Cook is speaking of the inhabitants of Tahiti. — Tahitian tatau, signifying tattoo-marks on the human skin; derived from ta, a mark, design; see Littré, who refers us to Berchon, Recherches sur le Tatouage. See E. E. Morris, Australasian Dict.; Notes on E. Etym., p. 293.

TAUNT, to scoff, mock, tease. (F.—L.) 'I taunte one, I check hym, je farde,' Palsgrave. 'Smacco, . . . a check or tant in a word or deede,' Florio. The old sense had less of mockery in it, and sometimes meant merely to tease. 'For a proper wit had she, . . . sometime taunting without displeasure and not without disport,' Sir T. More, Works, p. 57 b. Perhaps the vb. is due to the sb. 'Which liberal taunte that most gentill emperour toke in so good part,' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 5, § 17. 'Gave me a taunte, and sayde I was to blame,' Skelton, Bowge of Courte, 70. a. The verb answers in form, but hardly in sense, to OF. tanter (Burguy), occasional form of tenter, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay, attempt; also to suggest, provoke, or move unto evil'; Cot. From L. tentare, to try, prove, test, attack, assail, agitate, disquiet, &c. See TEMPT. β. We may rather, perhaps, look upon the sb. as the original; it may have arisen from the phrase taunt pour taunt, i. e. tit for tat. This occurs in: 'Geuyng vnto the same taunt pour taunte, or one for another,' Udall, tr. of Erasmus' Apophthegmes, Diogenes, § 68. Cf. also: 'Mery conceived and full of pretie tauntes,' id., Philippus, § 29. If this is right, taunt arose from F. tant, so much. — L. tantum, neut. of tantus, so much. Cf. ME. ataunt, as much as (F. autant); N. E. D. Godefroy has OF. tant donner, to give such great blows. Der. taunt-er, taunt-ing-ly.

TAURUS, the bull; the 2nd zodiacal sign. (L.) In Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 8, l. 2. — L. taurus, a bull. + Gk. ταῦρος, a bull. + AS. stēor, a young ox, a steer; see STEER (1). Der. taur-ine, from L. taurinus, adj., belonging to bulls.

TAUT, tight, firm. (E.) ME. togt, toght. 'Made it toght,' i. e. made it sure; Allit. Poems, A. 522. 'With bely stif and toght As any tabour,' Chaucer, C. T., D 2267. It seems to be the weak pp. of ME. tojen, to pull, tow, tug; so that the orig. sense was 'pulled tight.' See TOW (1). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 294.

TAUTOLOGY, needless repetition, in the same words. (L.—Gk.) 'With ungratefull tautologies,' Fuller's Worthies, Kent (R.). — L. tautologia (White). — Gk. ταυτολογία, a saying over again of the same thing. — Gk. ταυτολόγος, repeating what has been said. — Gk. ταυτό, contracted from τὸ αὐτό, or τὸ αὐτόν, the same; and -λογία, speaking, allied to λέγειν, to speak, for which see LEGEND. Der. tautolog-ic, tautolog-ic-al, -ly; tautolog-ise.

TAVERN, an inn, house for accommodating travellers and selling liquors. (F.—L.) ME. tauerne (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 195, l. 4024. — F. taverne, 'a tavern,' Cot. — L. taberna, a hut, orig. a hut made of boards, a shed, booth, tavern. Usually said to be allied to L. tab-ula, a plank, board; see TABLE. But Walde takes it to stand for **traberna*; from trabs, a beam; see TRAVE.

TAW (1), TEW, to prepare skins, so as to dress them into leather, to curry, to toil. (E.) Spelt tawe and tewe; Levins. Palsgrave has both 'I tawe leather' and 'I tewe leather.' ME. tewen, to prepare leather, Prompt. Parv.; tawen, Ormulum, 15908. AS. tawian, to prepare, dress, get ready, also, to maltreat. 'Sēo deoful ēow tawode,' = the devil maltreated you; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 486, l. 4 from bottom. 'Tō yrmðe getawode' = reduced to poverty; S. Veronica, p. 34, l. 18. Cf. getawe, implements, Grein, i. 462. + Du. touwen, to curry leather; OHG. zouwan, to make, prepare; Goth. ga-tēujan, to appoint, taujan, to do, cause. See TOOL. Der. taw-er, ME. tawier, tawer, Wyclif, Deeds, ix. 43, early version, where the later version has currier, i. e. currier; cf. bow-yeer, law-yeer.

TAW (2), a game at marbles. (Gk.) 'A game of marbles not unlike our modern taw,' The Tatler, no. 112, Dec. 27, 1709. In the United States, taw means 'a line or mark from which the players begin a game of marbles,' Webster. A similar mark is also called a tee. The easiest way of marking an exact spot on the ground is to draw the letter T, which defines the point where a stroke meets a cross-stroke. The T is named tee in English, and tau in Greek. Hence 'tau and chuck-farthing' in Additions to Nares. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 294.

TAWDRY, showy, but without taste, gaudy. (E.) 'A tawdrie lace,' Spenser, Shep. Kal., April, 135; 'a tawdry lace,' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 253; 'tawdry-lace,' Beaumont and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv. sc. 1 (Amarillis). 'Seynt Audries lace, cordon,' Palsgrave. Thus it was first used in the phr. tawdry lace = a rustic necklace; explained in Skinner (following Dr. Hickes) as being a necklace bought at St. Awdry's fair, held in the Isle of Ely (and elsewhere) on St. Awdry's day, Oct. 17. (See Palsgrave, as above.)

Wedgwood doubts the ancient celebrity of this fair (which I do not), and accepts in preference the alternative account in Nares, that St. Audry 'died of a swelling in the throat, which she considered as a particular judgment, for having been in her youth much addicted to wearing fine necklaces,' see Nich. Harpsfield, Hist. Eccl. Anglicana, Sæc. Sept. p. 86; Brady, Clavis Calendaria, Oct. 17. β. In any case, Tawdry is a contraction from St. Audry; and Audry is a corruption of Etheldrida, the famous saint who founded Ely Cathedral. γ. Again, Etheldrida is the Latinised form of the AS. name Æþel-þrȳð; see Sweet, O. E. Texts, p. 638. From AS. æþel, noble; and þrȳð or þrȳþ, strength. The latter element is allied to the OHG. word which appears in the name Ger-trude. See Thrūdhr in Schade. In the Latin text of Bede, Hist. Eccl. iv. 3, it is spelt Aedilthryd. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 295.

TAWNY, a yellowish brown. (F.—Teut.) Merely another spelling of tanny, i. e. resembling that which is tanned by the sun, sun-burnt. By heraldic writers it is spelt tenny or tenné. 'Tawny . . in blazon, is known by the name of tenné,' Guillim, Display of Heraldry, sect. i. cap. 3. ME. tanny. 'Tanny colowre, or tawny,' Prompt. Parv. 'Unum goun de tawné,' Excerpta Historica, p. 24 (1375). — F. tanné, 'tawny,' Cot. It is the pp. of F. tanner, taner, to tan. — F. tan, tan; see TAN. Der. tawni-ness. Doublet, tenné or tenny.

TAX, a rate imposed on property, anything imposed, a task. (F.—L.) ME. tax, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 151, l. 4 (temp. Edw. II). — F. taxe, 'a taxation,' Cot. — F. taxer, 'to tax, rate, assess,' Cot. — L. taxare, to handle; also to rate, value, appraise; whence Late L. taxa, a rating, a taxation. For **tagsäre*; from tag-, the base of tangere, to touch; see TANGENT, TACT. Der. tax, verb, F. taxer; tax-able, tax-abl-y; tax-at-ion, from F. taxation, 'a taxation,' from L. acc. taxātiōnem. Doublet, task.

TAXIDERMY, the art of preparing and stuffing the skins of animals. (Gk.) Modern; coined from Gk. τάξις, decl. stem of τάξις, order, arrangement; and δέρμα, a skin. β. Táxis (<*τάκ-γιν) is from τάσσειν (<*τάκ-γιν), to arrange; see TACTICS. Gk. δέρμα, a skin, is that which is torn or flayed off; formed with suffix -μα from δέρ-ειν, to flay, cognate with E. tear; see TEAR (1). Der. taxiderm-ist.

TAZZA, a cup, bowl. (Ital.—Arab.—Pers.) Ital. tazza, a cup, bowl (F. tasse). — Arab. ṭass, ṭassa(t), a cup, bason; Rich. Dict., p. 970. Derived by Devic from Pers. tast, a cup; Rich. gives Pers. tashī, a bason; p. 403. So Horn, § 389. Cf. also Pers. tās, a cup; p. 355.

TEA, an infusion made from the dried leaves of the tea-tree, a shrub found in China and Japan. (Chinese.) Formerly pronounced tay [tei], just as sea was called say; it rimed with obey, Pope, Rape of the Lock, iii. 8, and with away, id. i. 62. 'I did send for a cup of tee (a China drink) of which I never had drank before,' Pepys, Diary, Sept. 28, 1660. Also spelt cha in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, with a reference to Hist. of China, fol. 19; also chau, Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687 (R.). 'That excellent . . . China drink called by the Chineseans tcha, by other nations Tay, alias tee,' The Gazette, Sept. 9, 1658; qu. in N. and Q. 8 S. vi. 266. Prof. Douglas writes: 'The E. word tea is derived from the Amoy pronunciation of the name of the plant, which is té. In the other parts of the empire it is called ch'a, ts'a, &c.; see Williams, Chinese Dict., p. 5.' Cf. té, tea; Chinese Dict. of the Amoy Vernacular, by Rev. C. Douglas, 1873, p. 481. This accounts for the old spelling cha, and for the Ital. cia, tea. Cf. F. thé, G. thee, pronounced as tea was in Pope's time. So also Malay téh, tea; Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 97. Der. tea-caddy; see CADDY.

TEACH, to impart knowledge, show how to do. (E.) ME. techen, weak verb, pt. t. taughte (properly dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 499 (A 497); pp. taught. AS. tēcan, tēcean, to show, teach, pt. t. tēhte, pp. tēht, getēht; Grein, ii. 522. Formed (with change of ā to ē before j, as in Teut. **taikjan-*) from tāc- (Teut. **taik-*) base of AS. tācen, a token. From ✓DEIK, to show; cf. G. zeigen, to show; see further under TOKEN. Der. teach-able, teach-able-ness, teach-er.

TEAK, an E. Indian and African tree, with very hard wood. (Malayālam.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — Malayālam tēkka, the teak tree; Tamil tēkku; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 516. The best teak is from the mountains of the Malabar Ghauts; also found on the Coromandel coast; Eng. Cycl.

TEAL, a web-footed water-fowl. (E.) Teale; Levins. ME. tele, Prompt. Parv.; Squire of Low Degree, l. 320; in Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. iii. p. 158; used to translate OF. cercele in Walter de Bibbesworth, pr. in Wright's Voc. i. 151, l. 12; i. 165, l. 15. This takes us back to the close of the 13th cent., and the word is prob. E.; certainly Low German, in any case. + Du. taling, teling, a generation, production, also, teal; derived from telen, to breed, produce; i. e. if teling is the same word in both senses. MDu. teelingh, a teal (Kilian). Cf. MDu. teelen, to propagate, to till; Low G. teling, a progeny, telen, to breed. The AS. base would be **tæl-*; see Du. taling in Franck. Perhaps connected with the verb to till; see Till (1). Der. atteal, a kind of teal, N. E. D.; Prof. Newton, Dict. of Birds, cites a 'Scandinavian' form atteling-and; s. v. Teal.

TEAM, a family; a set; a number of animals harnessed in a row. (E.) ME. tem, teem, team; 'a teme [of] foure gret oxen,' P. Plowman, B. xix. 257; tem=a family, Rob. of Glouc. p. 261, l. 5241. AS. tēam, a family, offspring, Genesis, 1613; Grein, ii. 526. + Du. toom, the rein of a bridle; the same word, from the notion of guiding; Icel. taumr, a rein; Low G. toom, a progeny, team, also, a rein; Dan. tømme, Swed. töm, a rein; G. zaum, a bridle, MHG. zoum. Teut. type **tau-moz*, for **taug-moz* (Noreen); from **tauh*, 2nd grade of **teuh-an-*, to draw, lead. See Tow (1). From Idg. ✓DEUK. But see Brugmann, i. § 630. In the sense of 'team of horses,' the AS. form is ge-tyme; Luke, xiv. 19. Der. teem, verb, q. v. Also team-ster (Webster, not in Johnson), with suffix -ster; for which see Spinster.

TEAPOY, a small tripod table. (Hybrid; Hind. and Pers.) Also tepay, tinpay (1844); see Yule.—Hind. tin, three (Forbes); and Pers. pāi, foot (Palmer).

TEAR (1), to rend, lacerate. (E.) ME. teren, strong verb, pt. t. tar, Seven Sages, ed. Weber, l. 472, pp. toren, id. 782. AS. teran, pt. t. tar, pp. toren, Grein, ii. 525. + Goth. ga-tairan, to break, destroy, pt. t. ga-tar; Lithuan. dirti, to flay; Gk. dépeiv, to flay; Russ. drai(e), to tear; cf. dīra, a rent, a hole; Zend dar, to cut; Pers. dari-dan, to tear; Skt. dārāya, to tear; cf. W. dar-n, a fragment. Teut. type **teran-*, pt. t. **tar*, pp. **teranoz*. Idg. ✓DER, to burst, tear open. The G. zehren, Low G. teren, Icel. tæra, to consume, are weak verbs, from the same root. Brugmann, i. § 594. Der. tear, sb. (Goth. gataura), Chevy Chase, l. 134, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 75. Also tar-t (1); and (from same root) epi-der-mis, taxi-der-my.

TEAR (2), a drop of the fluid from the eyes. (E.) ME. tere, Chaucer, C. T. 8960 (E 1084). AS. tēar, tēr, Grein, ii. 526; also teagor; ONorthumb. tæher. + Icel. tār; Dan. taar, taare; Swed. tår; Goth. tagr; OHG. zahar, pl. zaheri, whence G. zähre. β. All from a Teut. base **tah-r-*, Idg. **dak-r-*. Further allied to OL. dacrima, usually lacrīma, lacruma (whence F. larme), a tear; Gk. dákrv, dákrvov, dákrvma, a tear; W. dagr, a tear; OIrish dér. Brugmann, i. § 178. Der. tear-ful, 3 Hen. VI, v. 4. 8; tear-ful-ly, tear-ful-ness; tear-less. And see train-oil.

TEASE, to comb or card wool, scratch or raise the nap of cloth; to vex, plague. (E.) ME. tesen, Cathol. Anglicum; also taisen, of which the pp. taysed is in Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1169. But the more common form is tosen or toosen. 'They toose and pulle'; Gower, C. A. i. 17; Prol. 400. 'Tosyn, or tose wul' [tease wool]; Prompt. Parv. We also find to-tosen, to tease or pull to pieces, Owl and Nightingale, l. 70. AS. tēsan, to pluck, pull, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 170, l. 13. The ME. tosen would answer to a by-form **tāsan*, not recorded. + MDu. teesen, to pluck; wolle teesen, 'to pluck wooll,' Hexham; Dan. tase, tasse, to tease wool; Bavarian zaisen, to tease wool, Schmeller; he also cites MHG. zeisen, to tease, a strong verb, with pt. t. zies, pp. gezeisen. β. The form of the base is Teut. **teis*. Der. teas-el, q. v.

TEASEL, a plant with large heads covered with crooked awns which are used for teasing cloth. (E.) ME. tesel, Voc. 559. 7; also tasel, P. Plowman, B. xv. 446. AS. tēsl, tāsel, a teasel, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 282, note 26. Formed with suffix -l (-il-) from tēs-an, to tease; the sense is 'an instrument to tease with.' See Tease.

TEAT, the nipple of the female breast. (F.—Low G.) [Also called tit, which is the native word.] ME. tete, Chaucer, C. T. 3704; also tette, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2621.—OF. tete, teat; F. tette, teat.—Low G. titte, MDu. tittle, a teat; Hexham. + G. zitze. [Cf. also Span. teta, Ital. tetta, words of Teut. origin.] Also W. did, didi, a teat. These words have much the appearance of being reduplicated from a base TI (Idg. DI). β. Besides these, there is a second form represented by Gk. τίθη, τιθός; of these the Gk. τίθη, τιθός, have been explained from ✓DHĒI, to suck; cf. Skt. dhē, to suck, Goth. daddjan, to suckle. See Tit (2).

TEAZLE, the same as Teasel, q. v.

TECHNICAL, artificial, pertaining to the arts. (Gk.; with L. suffix.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with suffix -al (< L. -ālis), from Gk. τεχνικ-ός, belonging to the arts.—Gk. τέχνη, art; allied to τέκτων, a carpenter.—✓TEK, to prepare, get ready; cf. Skt. taksh, to prepare, form, cut wood, takshan-, a carpenter; see Text. Der. technical-ly, technical-i-ty; techno-logy, with suffix = Gk. -λογία, from λέγειν, to speak. Also (from the same source) archi-lect, pyro-technic; and see text, text-ure.

TECHY, the same as Tetchy, q. v.

TED, to spread new-mown grass. (Scand.) 'I teede hey, I tourne it afore it is made in cockes,' Palsgrave. 'To tedde and make hay;'

Fitzherbert, Book of Husbandry, § 25. 'Gras . . . uniteddid,' Wyclif's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 301.—Icel. teðja (pp. taddr), to spread manure; from tað, manure. Cf. Icel. taða, hay grown in a well-manured field, a home-field; töðu-verk, making hay in the in-field. Also Norw. teðja, to spread manure; from tad, manure; Aasen. So also Swed. dial. täda, vb., from tad. + Bavarian zetten, to strew, to let fall in a scattered way, Schmeller, p. 1159; cf. G. verzetteln, to scatter, spill, disperse. Cf. also MHG. zetten, to scatter, derived from OHG. zata, allied to zota (mod. G. zotte, a rag); see Schade. β. All these words can be derived from a sb. of which the Teut. base is **tad-*. Cf. Gk. δάρ-εομαι, I distribute. Cf. Tod.

TEDIOUS, tiresome, from length or slowness, irksome. (L.) Spelt tedyouse in Palsgrave. Coined immediately from L. tædiōsus, irksome.—L. tædium, irksomeness.—L. tædet, it irks one. Der. tedious-ly, -ness. We also use tedium, the sb.

TEE, a mark, a starting-point. (E.) From the use of a T to mark an exact spot. Cf. tee-totum; and see Taw (2).

TEEM (1), to bring forth, bear, or be fruitful; be pregnant, full, or prolific. (E.) 'Hyndre [her] of teming;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 644 g. ME. temen, to produce, Ancren Riwle, p. 220, l. 15. Obviously from ME. teme, a team, a progeny; see Team. The AS. verb is tieman, týman, to teem, Gen. xxx. 9; formed (with the usual vowel-change from ēa to īe, later ý) from AS. tēam, a team, a progeny. Teut. type **taumjan-*, vb., from **taumoz*, sb.

TEEM (2), to think fit. (OLOw G.) Rare, and obsolete; but Shak. has the comp. beteem, to be explained presently. 'I coulde teeme it [think fit] to rend thee in pieces;' Gifford's Dialogue on Witches, A.D. 1603. 'Alas, man, I coulde teeme it to go;' id. See both quotations in full, in Halliwell, s. v. Teem.—Low G. tāmen, temen, to fit; also, to allow; as, 'He tāmet sik een good Glas Wien, he allows himself a good glass of wine;' allied to betamen, to be fit, and to tāmen, to tame; EFries. temen, to find fitting, to allow oneself. β. Related words are easily found, viz. in Goth. gatemiba, fitly, from the strong verb gatiman (pt. t. gatam), to suit, agree with; Luke, v. 36; Du. tamen, 'to be comely, convenient, or seemely,' Hexham; tamelick, or tamigh, 'comely, convenient,' id.; whence het betaemt, 'it is convenient, requisite, meete, or fitting,' id.; mod. Du. betamen, to beseech; G. ziemen, to be fit; ziemlich, passable, lit. suitable; OHG. zeman, to fit, closely related to zeman, zamjam, to tame. Allied to Tame, q. v. 2. We can now explain beteem in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 131; Hamlet, i. 2. 141. It means to make or consider as fitting, hence to permit, allow; a slightly forced use of the word. In Golding's translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses, A.D. 1587, we have 'could he not beteeme'=he did not think fit, would not deign; the L. text has dignatur, Metam. x. 158. Spenser uses it still more loosely: 'So woulde I . . . Beteeme to you this sword'=permit, grant, allow you the use of this sword; F. Q. ii. 8. 19.

TEEM (3), to empty, pour out. (Scand.) See Halliwell.—Icel. tæma, to empty, from tōmr, empty; Dan. tømme, to empty, from tom, empty; Swed. tömma, from tom; see Toom.

TEEN, vexation, grief. (E.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 64; &c. ME. tene, Chaucer, C. T. 3108 (A 3106). AS. tēona, accusation, injury, vexation, Grein, ii. 528.—AS. tēon, contracted from tīhan, to accuse; see Grein, ii. 532, s. v. tīhan. [To be distinguished from tēon (= tēohan), to draw.] + Goth. gateihan, to tell, announce, make known to, point out (as distinct from gatiuhan, to lead); G. zeihen, to accuse (as distinct from ziehen, to draw). + L. dicāre, to make known.—✓DEIK, to show. See Token. ¶ The successive senses of teen are making known, public accusation, reproach, injury, vexation. We have indication and inditement from the same root. The word teen also occurs as Old Saxon tiono, injury; Icel. tjōn, loss.

TEETOTALLER, a total abstainer. (F.—L.; with E. prefix and suffix.) A teetotaller is one who professes total abstinence from all spirituous liquors; the orig. name was total abstainer. The adj. tee-total is an emphasized form of total, made on the principle of reduplication, just as we have L. te-tigi as the perfect of tangere. The word 'originated with Richard Turner, an artisan of Preston, who, contending for the principle at a temperance meeting about 1833, asserted that "nothing but te-te-total will do." The word was immediately adopted. He died 27 Oct., 1846. These facts are taken from the Staunch Teetotaller, edited by Joseph Livesey, of Preston (an originator of the movement in August, 1832), Jan. 1867; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Teetotum. ¶ Teetotal may have been suggested by teetotum. In N. and Q. 5 S. v. 18, it is asserted that tee-total was in use, as an intensive of total, before 1832.

TEETOTUM, TOTUM, a spinning toy. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. I had a teetotum (about A.D. 1840) with four sides only, marked P (Put down), N (Nothing), H (Half), T (Take all). These were very common, and the letters decided whether one was to put into the pool or to take the stakes. (Strutt gives the same account, in his Sports and Pastimes, bk. iv. c. 4. § 6.) I suppose that these letters took the place of others with Latin explanations, such as P (Pone), N (Nil), D (Dimidium), T (Totum). The toy was named, accordingly, from the most interesting mark upon it; and was called either a totum or a T-totum. Ash's Dict., ed. 1775, has: 'Totum, from the Latin, a kind of die that turns round, so called because the appearance of one lucky side [that marked T] entitles the player that turned it to the whole stake.' 'Totum, a whirl-bone, a kind of die that is turned about;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Dunbar alludes to this game: 'He playis with totum, and I with nichil;' Works, ed. Small, p. 106, l. 74. Teetotums are now made with the thickest part polygonal, not square, which entirely destroys the original notion of them; and they are marked with numbers instead of letters. — L. tōtum, the whole (stake); neut. of tōtus; see Total.

TEG, a young sheep of the first year, a ewe. (Scand.) Pl. teggys; Skelton, Against Garnesche, 31. Cf. Swed. tacka, a ewe (Widgren, Ihre).

TEGUMENT, a covering. (L.) Rare; commoner in deriv. integument. In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 5. — L. tegumentum (also tegmentum, tegmentum), a covering. — L. tegere (for **stegere*), to cover. + Gk. στέγειν, to cover. — STEG, to cover; whence also Skt. sthaḡ, to cover, Lithuan. stęgti, to thatch; OIrish tech, W. tŷ, a house. Brugmann, i. § 632. And see Thatch. Der. in-tegument; also (from tectus, pp. of tegere), de-tect, pro-TECT; and see tile, toga, thatch, deck.

TEIL-TREE, a linden tree. (F.—L.; and E.) 'A teil-tree;' Isaiah, vi. 13 (A.V.). — OF. teil, the bark of a lime-tree (Roquefort); cf. mod. F. tille, bast. [The added word tree is E.] — L. tilia, a lime-tree; also, the inner bark of a lime-tree. + Irish teile.

TEIND, a tithe. (Scand.) A Lowl. Sc. form. 'Bot tak his teind;' Sir D. Lyndesay, The Monarchie, bk. iii. 4690. — Icel. tiund, a tenth, tithe. — Icel. tiu, ten; see Ten.

TELEGRAPH, an apparatus for giving signals at a distance, or conveying information rapidly. (Gk.) Modern; in Richardson's Dict. M. Chappe's telegraph was first used in France in 1793; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Coined from Gk. τῆλε, afar off; and γράφειν, to write. The Gk. τῆλε, τῆλου, afar, are from an adj. form **τῆ-λος*, not in use. Gk. γράφειν is cognate with Carve. Der. telegraph-ic, telegraph-y, telegraph-ist. Also tele-gram, a short coined expression for 'telegraphic message,' from γράμμα, a letter of the alphabet, a written character. So also tele-phone; from Gk. φωνή, voice, sound.

TELESCOPE, an optical instrument for viewing objects at a distance. (Gk.) Galileo's telescopes were first made in 1609. Milton alludes to the telescope, P. R. iv. 42. Coined from Gk. τῆλε, afar; and σκοπεῖν, to behold; see Telegraph and Scope. Der. tele-scop-ic. So also tele-pathy, sympathy at a distance; from Gk. -πάθεια, from πάθος, suffering, feeling.

TELL, to count, narrate, discern, inform. (E.) ME. tellen, pt. t. tolde, pp. told; often in the sense 'to count,' as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 92. 'Shal telle tales tweye;' Chaucer, C. T. 794 (A 792). AS. tellan, to count; narrate; pt. t. tealde, pp. teald; Grein, ii. 524. A weak verb, formed from the sb. tal, a tale, number; so that tellan is for **taljan*, with mutation of a to e. See Tale. + Du. tellen, from tal, sb.; Icel. telja, from tala, sb.; Dan. tælle, from tal; Swed. tälja, from tal; G. zählen, from zahl. Der. tell-er; tell-tale, Merch. Ven. v. 123.

TELLURIC, belonging to the earth. (L.) Rare, and scientific. Coined with suffix -c (L. -cus), from L. tellūri-, decl. stem of tellus, earth. Allied to Irish talamh, OIrish talam, earth, Skt. tala-m, surface. Der. telluri-um, a rare metal, discovered in 1782 (Haydn).

TEMERITY, rashness. (F.—L.) Spelt temeritie in Minshew, ed. 1623. — MF. temerité, 'temerity,' Cot. — L. temeritatem, acc. of temeritās, rashness. — L. temeri- for **temerus*, rash, only used in the adv. temere, rashly. The orig. sense of temere is 'in the dark,' hence blindly, rashly; cf. Skt. tamas, dimness, darkness, gloom.

TEMPER, to moderate, modify, control, qualify, bring to a proper degree of hardness. (L.) ME. temprien, tempren, Rob. of Glouc., p. 72, l. 1684; Gower, C. A. i. 266; bk. ii. 3178. AS. temprian, for which see Toller. — L. temperare, to apportion, moderate, regulate, qualify; allied to temperi or tempori, adv., seasonably, and to tempus, fit season, time. See Temporal. (Perhaps modified by MF. temperer, to temper; also from L. temperare). Brugmann, ii. § 132. Der. temper, sb., Oth. v. 2. 253, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 20 (see Trench, Study of Words, and cf. L. temperiēs, a tempering, right admixture); temper-ance, ME. temperauce, Wyclif, Col. iii. 12, from F. temperance < L. temperantia; temper-ate, Wyclif, 1 Tim. iii. 3, from L. temperātus, pp. of temperāre; temper-ate-ly, temper-ate-ness; temper-at-ure, from F. temperature, 'a temper, temperature,' Cot., from L. temperātūra, due to temperāre; temper-a-ment, in Trench, Select Glossary, from L. temperamentum. Also dis-temper, q. v., at-temper. Doublet, tamper.

TEMPEST, bad weather, violent storm, great commotion. (F.—L.) ME. tempest, Rob. of Glouc. p. 50, l. 1151. — OF. tempeste, 'a tempest, storm, bluster,' Cot. Mod. F. tempête. — Late L. **tempesta*, not found (though tempestus, adj., and tempestare, verb, both appear); for L. tempestās, season, fit time, weather, good weather; also bad weather, storm; allied to tempus, season, time; see Temporal. Brugmann, ii. §§ 102, 132. Der. tempest, verb, Milton, P. L. vii. 412, from MF. tempester, 'to storm,' Cot. Also tempest-u-ous, 1 Hen. VI, v. 5. 5, from MF. tempestuēux, 'tempestuous,' Cot., from L. tempestuosus; tempestuous-ly, -ness.

TEMPLE (1), a fane, edifice in honour of a deity or for religious worship. (L.) ME. temple, Chaucer, C. T. 10167, 10169 (E 2293, 2295). AS. templ, templ (common), John, ii. 20. — L. templum, a temple. Formed (with excrescent p after m) from an older form **tem-lum* (Walde). + Gk. τέμενος, a sacred enclosure, piece of ground cut off and set apart for religious purposes; allied to Gk. τέμ-ν-ειν (fut. τεμῶ), to cut. Der. templ-ar, one of a religious order for the protection of the temple and Holy Sepulchre, founded in 1118, suppressed in 1312 (Haydn), ME. templere, P. Plowman, B. xv. 509, from Late L. templārius (Ducange). Also templet, a pattern or model indicating the outline of a baluster, &c., from F. templet, the same (Littré), dimin. of F. temple, in the same sense, from L. templum, a small timber, the same word as templum, a temple. Also con-templ-ate, q. v.

TEMPLE (2), the flat portion of either side of the head above the cheek-bone. (F.—L.) Gen. used in the plural. ME. templys, pl., Voc. 626. 16. Gower has temples, C. A. iii. 370; bk. viii. l. 2819. — OF. temples, 'the temples,' Cot.; Norm. dial. temples; Mod. F. tempe, sing. Formed, with the common change from r to l, from L. tempora, pl., the temples. Der. tempor-al, adj., from F. temporal, 'of or in the temples,' Cot., from L. temporalis, (1) temporal, (2) belonging to the temples.

TEMPORAL (1), pertaining to this world only, worldly, secular. (F.—L.) ME. temporal, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21. — OF. temporal, usually temporel, 'temporall,' Cot. — L. temporalis, temporal. — L. tempor-, for tempus, season, time, opportunity. Der. temporal-ly; temporal-i-ty, spelt temporalitie, Sir T. More, Works, p. 232 e, from Late L. temporalitās, revenues of the church (Ducange). Also tempor-ar-y, Meas. for Meas. v. 145 (where it seems to mean respecting things not spiritual), from L. temporārius, lasting for a time; tempor-ar-i-ly, tempor-ar-i-ness. Also tempor-ise, Much Ado, i. 1. 276, from F. temporiser, 'to temporise it, to observe the time,' Cot.; tempor-is-er, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 302. Also con-tempor-an-e-ous, con-tempor-ar-y, ex-tempore. And see temper, tempest, tense (1).

TEMPORAL (2); for which see Temple (2).

TEMPT, to put to trial, test, entice to evil. (F.—L.) ME. temptien, Ancren Riwe, p. 178. — OF. tempter, later tenter, 'to tempt, prove, try, sound, provoke unto evil,' Cot. — L. temptare, occasional spelling of tentare, to handle, touch, feel, try the strength of, assail, tempt. Frequentative of tendere, to stretch (pp. tentus); Bréal. [But temptare may have been written as tentare by error; if so, the words are unconnected.] Der. tempt-er, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3; tempt-r-ess, Ford, The Broken Heart, v. 1, from MF. tenteresse, 'a tempteresse, a woman that tempts,' Cot.; tempt-ing, tempt-ing-ly; tempt-at-ion, ME. temptacioun, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 41, from OF. temptation, usually tentation, 'a temptation,' Cot., from L. acc. tentationem. Also at-tempt. Doublet, tent (2), vb.

TEMULENT, drunken. (L.) Rare. — L. temulentus, drunken. Allied to tēmētum, intoxicating drink. See Abstemious. Cf. Skt. tāmya, to be exhausted.

TEN, twice five. (E.) ME. ten, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 1. O Merc. tēn; AS. tien, tȳn. Usually tȳn, Matt. xxv. 1. + Du. tien; Icel. tíu, ten, tigr, a decade; Dan. ti; Swed. tio; Goth. taihun; G. zehn, OHG. zehan. + L. decem (whence F. dix, Ital. dieci, Span. diez); Gk. δέκα; Lithuan. dėszimtis; Russ. desiat(e); W. deg; Irish and Gael. deich; Pers. dah (Palmer's Dict. col. 278); Skt. daśa. β. All from Teut. type **tehən*; Idg. type **dekam*. Brugmann, ii. § 174. Origin unknown. Der. ten-fold, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 135, l. 19 (see Fold); ten-th, ME. tenþe, Will. of Palerne, 4715, also teonþe, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 219, l. 17; also tende, Ormulum, 2715, due to a confusion of AS. teoða, tenth, with Icel. tiundi, tenth; the true E. word is tithe, q. v. Hence tenth-ly. From the same base we have decim-al, decim-ate, duo-decim-al, deca-de, deca-gon, deca-hedron, deca-logue, deca-syllabic, decem-vir, dec-ennial, do-deca-gon, do-deca-hedron, dime. ¶ The suffix -teen, ME. -tenē (dissyllabic), answers to O Merc. -tēne, AS. -tiēne, -tȳne, as in eahta-tȳne, eighteen, Judg. iii. 14; formed by adding the pl. suffix -e to tēn or tȳn, ten. Hence thir-teen (AS. þrēotȳne); four-teen (AS. fēower-tȳne); fif-teen (AS. fif-tȳne); six-teen (AS. six-tȳne); seven-teen (AS. seofon-tȳne); eigh-teen, miswritten for eight-teen (AS. eahta-tȳne); nine-teen (AS. nigon-tȳne). ¶ The suffix -ty, ME. -ty =

AS. -tig, as in twen-ty (AS. tuēn-tig), &c. This suffix appears also in Icel. sex-tigr, sex-tugr, sex-tögr, sixty, and in Goth. saihtigjus, G. séch-zig, sixty, &c.; all from a Teut. base **tegu-*, allied to Ten.

TENABLE, that can be held, kept, or defended. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 248.—F. tenable, 'holdable'; Cot. Coined from F. tenir, to hold.—L. tenēre, to hold, keep, retain, reach, orig. to stretch or extend, a sense retained in per-tinēre, to extend through to.—✓TEN, to stretch, extend; see Thin. Cf. Gk. τείνω (for **tév-yew*), to stretch, Skt. tan, to stretch. Der. (from L. tenēre) abs-tain, abs-tin-ence, ap-per-tain, ap-pur-ten-ance, attempt, con-tain, con-tent, con-tin-ent, con-tin-ue, coun-ten-ance, de-tain, de-tent-ion, dis-con-tin-ue, dis-con-tent, dis-coun-ten-ance, enter-tain, im-per-tin-ent, in-con-tin-ent, lieu-ten-ant, main-tain, main-ten-ance, mal-con-tent, ob-tain, per-tain, per-tin-ac-i-ous, per-tin-ent, pur-ten-ance, rein, re-tain, re-tent-ion, re-tin-ue, sus-tain, sus-tēn-ance, sus-tent-at-ion; and see ten-ac-i-ous, ten-ac-i-ty, ten-ant, tend (with its derivatives), tend-er, tend-on, ten-dril, ten-e-ment, ten-et, ten-on, ten-or, tent (2), ten-u-ity, ex-ten-u-ate, ten-ure, tempt, tent-acle, tent-at-ive. And see tone.

TENACIOUS, holding fast, stubborn. (L.) 'So tenacious of his bite;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. ii. let. 2, July 3, 1635. Coined as if from L. **tenaciōsus*, from tenāci-, decl. stem of tenax, holding fast.—L. tenēre, to hold. See Tenable. Der. tenacious-ly, -ness.

TENACITY, the quality of sticking fast to. (F.—L.) Spelt tenacitie in Minshew, ed. 1627.—MF. tenacité, 'tenacity'; Cot.—L. tenāciūtem, acc. of tenāciūs.—L. tenāci-, decl. stem of tenax; see Tenacious.

TENANT, one who holds land under another. (F.—L.) ME. tenant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 19, l. 10.—F. tenant, holding; pres. part. of tenir, to hold; see Tenable. Der. tenanc-y, Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iv. sat. 2, l. 25 from end; tenant-able, tenant-less, tenant-ry (a coined word). Also lieu-tenant, q. v. And see tenement.

TENCH, a fish of the carp kind. (F.—L.) ME. tenche, Prompt. Parv.—OF. tenche, 'a tench'; Cot. Mod. F. tanche.—L. tinca, a tench. Cf. Gascon tenco, a tench.

TEND (1), to aim at, or move towards, to incline, bend, to contribute to a purpose. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 170.—F. tendre, 'to tend, bend'; Cot.—L. tendere, to stretch, extend, direct, tender. Allied to tenēre, to hold; see Tenable. From ✓TEN, to stretch; see Thin. Brugmann, ii. § 696 (3). Der. tend-enc-y, formed by adding -y to the obsolete sb. tendence, signifying 'inclination,' for which see Richardson; and the sb. tendence was coined from L. tendent-, stem of the pres. part. of tendere. Also tense (2); tend-er (2). Also (from L. tendere, pp. tensus and tentus), at-tend, tend (2), at-tent-ion, co-ex-tend, con-tend, dis-tend, ex-tend, ex-tens-ion, ex-tent, in-tend, in-tense, in-tent, ob-tend, os-tens-ible, os-tent-at-ion, por-tend, pre-tend, pro-tend, sub-tend, super-in-tend; and see tense (2), tens-ile, tender (3), tend-on, tent (1), tent-er, toise. Doublet, tender (2).

TEND (2), to attend, take care of. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 83, Much Ado, i. 3. 17. Coined by dropping the initial a of OF. attendre, to wait, attend. It is, in fact, short for Attend, q. v. Der. tend-ing, sb. (for attending), Macb. i. 5. 36; tend-ance (for attendance), Timon, i. 1. 57. And see tender (3).

TENDER (1), soft, delicate, fragile, weak, feeble, compassionate. (F.—L.) ME. tendre, Ancren Riwle, p. 112, l. 11.—F. tendre, 'tender'; Cot. Formed (with excrescent d after n) from L. tenerum, acc. of tener, tender; orig. thin, fine, allied to tenuis, thin.—✓TEN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. tender-ly, -ness; tender-heart-ed, Rich. II, iii. 3. 169; tender-heft-ed, K. Lear, ii. 4. 176 (Folio edd.), where heft=haft, a handle; so that tender-hefted=tender-handled, tender-hilted, gentle to the touch, impressible; see Haft. Also tender, vb., to regard fondly, cherish, Rich. II, i. 1. 32, and in Palsgrave; a word which seems to be more or less confused with tender (2), q. v. Hence tender, sb., regard, care, K. Lear, i. 4. 230. And see tendr-il.

TENDER (2), to offer, proffer for acceptance, show. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 5.—F. tendre, 'to tend, bend, . . . spread, or display . . . also, to tender or offer unto'; Cot.—L. tendere, to stretch, &c. See Tend (1), of which tender is a later form, retaining the r of the F. infinitive; cf. attainder=F. attaindre. Der. tender, sb., an offer, proposal. Doublet, tend (1).

TENDER (3), a small vessel that attends a larger one with stores; a carriage carrying coals, attached to a locomotive engine. (F.—L.) 'A fireship and three tenders;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685 (R.). Merely short for attender=attendant or subsidiary vessel; see Tend (2).

TENDON, a hard strong cord by which a muscle is attached to a bone. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. tendon, 'a tendon, or taile of a muscle'; Cot. Cf. Span. tendon, Port. tendão, Ital. tendine, a tendon.

From a Late L. type **tendo*, with gen. case both tendōnis and tendinis; formed from L. tendere, to stretch, from its contractile force. See Tend (1). Der. tendin-ous (R.), from F. tendineux, 'of a tendon'; Cot.

TENDRIL, the slender clasper of a plant, whereby it clings to a support. (F.—L.) Spelt tendrell in Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Drant, tr. of Horace, Bk. ii. Sat. 4, fol. G 8, back (1566). In Milton, P. L. iv. 307. Shortened from MF. tendrillons, s. pl. 'tendrills, little gristles'; Cot. Or from an OF. **tendrille* or **tendrelle*, not recorded. Cot. also gives F. tendron, 'a tender fellow, a cartilage, or gristle; also a tendrell, or the tender branch or sprig of a plant.' All these forms are from F. tendre, tender; see Tender (1). So also Ital. tenerume, a tendril, from tenero, tender. ¶ Not from tenēre, to hold, nor from tendere, to stretch.

TENEBOUS, TENEBRIOUS, gloomy, dark. (F.—L.) Tenebrous is in Cotgrave, and in Hawes, History of Grand Amour (1555), ch. 3 (Todd). 'Tenebrious light' is in Young, Night Thoughts, Night 9, l. 966. The latter is a false form.—F. tenebreux, 'tenebrous'; Cot.—L. tenebrōsus, gloomy.—L. tenebræ, s. pl., darkness. Allied to Skt. tamisra-, darkness, tamas, gloom. ✓TEM, to choke. Brugmann, i. §§ 413, 590.

TENEMENT, a holding, a dwelling inhabited by a tenant. (F.—L.) ME. tenement, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 34, last line.—F. tenement, 'a tenement, inheritance,' &c.; Cot.—Late L. tenementum, a holding, fief; Ducange.—L. tenēre, to hold; see Tenable and Tenant. Der. tenement-al, adj.

TENET, a principle which a person holds or maintains. (L.) 'The tenet must be this'; Hooker, Eccl. Polity, b. viii. (R.).—L. tenet, he holds; 3 p. s. pres. tense of tenēre, to hold; see Tenable. Cf. gudit, habitat, exit, and other similar formations.

TENNIS, a game in which a ball is driven against a wall (or over a cord) by rackets, and kept continually in motion. (F.—L.) First mentioned in Gower's Balade to King Henry IV, st. 43, l. 295; printed in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1532, fol. 377, col. 2; ed. 1561, fol. 332, col. 1, where it is spelt tennes; but the Trentham MS. has tenētz. Other spellings are tenēis, tenyse. 'Teneys, pley, Teniludus, manupilatus, tenisia. Teneys-pleyer, Teniludius'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt tenyse, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 27, § 7. 'Tenyseball, pelote: Tennyss-play, jeu de la paulme'; Palsgrave. Turberville has a poem 'to his friend P., Of Courting, Trauailing, and Tenys.' It is spelt tenes in 1494; Excerpta Historica, p. 98. β. The AF. tenetiz, F. tenez (<L. tenētis, 2 p. pl. indic. of tenēre, to hold) was also used for L. tenēte, 2 p. pl. imperative; with the sense 'take this'; and we may conjecture that it was used by the player who served, like our 'play!'. ¶ This seems the only possible explanation of the form tenētiz, which was accented on the 2nd syllable, as the rhythm shows:—'Of the tenētiz to winne or lese a chace.' The word (as a sb.) is AF., not OF. In N. and Q. 9 S. ix. 27, is the following note. 'M. Jusserand quotes from Lusus Puerilis, Paris, 1555, and deduces that the exceipe of Cordier and the accipe of Erasmus were the Latin version[s] of the French tenez, an exclamation used in commencing play.' The AF. tenez, 'take or receive this,' is addressed to one person only in the Chanson de Roland, 387.

TENNY, the colour of orange, in heraldry. (F.—G.) Also spelt tenney, tawney; see Boutell's Heraldry.—OF. tenné, variant of tané, tanné, tawny, tan-coloured (Godefroy). The same word as Tawny, q. v.

TENON, the end of a piece of wood inserted into the socket or mortice of another, to hold the two together. (F.—L.) In Levins. ME. tenoun, tenon; Prompt. Parv.—F. tenon, 'a tenon; the end of a rafter put into a mortise; tenons, pl. the vice-nails wherewith the barrel of a piece is fastened unto the stock; also the (leathern) handles of a target'; Cot. All these senses involve the notion of holding fast. Formed, with suffix -on (L. acc. -ōnem), from ten-ir, to hold.—L. tenēre; see Tenable.

TENOR, the general course of a thought or saying, purport; the highest kind of adult male voice. (F.—L.) ME. tenour. 'Tenour, Tenor'; Prompt. Parv. 'Anothir lettre . . . of a more bitter tenour;' King Alisaunder, 2977. 'Many . . . ordenauncis were made, wherof the tenoure is sette out in the ende of this boke'; Fabyan's Chron. an. 1257, ed. Ellis, p. 343. 'Tenour, a parte in pricke-songe, teneur;' Palsgrave.—F. teneur, 'the tenor part in musick; the tenor, content, stuffe, or substance of a matter'; Cot.—L. tenōrem, acc. of tenor, a holding on, uninterrupted course, tenor, sense or tenor of a law, tone, accent.—L. tenēre, to hold; see Tenable. ¶ The old (and proper etymological) spelling is tenour, like honour, colour, &c. The tenor in music (Ital. tenore) is due to the notion of holding or continuing the dominant note (Scheler).

TENSE (1), the form of a verb used to indicate the time and state of the action. (F.—L.) In Levins. Spelt tence and tense by Palsgrave, On the Verb. Shoreham has tense, in the sense of 'time'; p. 39. In Chaucer, C. T. 16343 (G 875), the expression 'that futur temps' ought to be explained rather as 'that future tense' than 'that future time'; see my note on the line. — F. temps, time, season; OF. tens (Burguy). — L. tempus, time; also a tense of a verb; see Temporal.

TENSE (2), tightly strained, rigid. (L.) 'Her forehead was tense'; Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. 28, § 1. — L. tensus, stretched, pp. of tendere; see Tend (1). Der. tense-ly, -ness; tension, in Phillips, ed. 1706, from L. tensionem, acc. of tensio, a stretching; tensor, in Phillips, used as a variant of extensor; tens-ile, in Blount, ed. 1674, a coined word; tens-i-ty, a coined word. Also in-tense, toise.

TENT (1), a pavilion, a portable shelter of canvas stretched out with ropes. (F.—L.) ME. tente, Rob. of Glouc., p. 203, l. 4156. — F. tente, 'a tent or pavillion'; Cot. — Late L. tenta, a tent; Ducange. Properly fem. of tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Obviously suggested by L. tentorium, a tent, a derivative from the same verb. Der. tent-ed, Oth. i. 3. 85.

TENT (2), a roll of lint used to dilate a wound. (F.—L.) See Nares. Properly a probe; the verb to tent is used for to probe, Hamlet, ii. 2. 626. ME. tente. 'Tente of a wounde or a soore, Tenta'; Prompt. Parv. — F. tente, 'a tent for a wound'; Cot. Due to the L. verb tentare, to handle, touch, feel, test; cf. F. tenter, 'to tempt, to prove, try, sound, essay'; Cot. See Tempt. Cf. Span. tienta, a probe, tiento, a touch. Der. tent, verb, as above.

TENT (3), a kind of wine. (Span.—L.) 'Tent or Tent-wine, is a kind of Alicant, . . . and is a general name for all wines in Spain except white; from the Span. vino tinto, i.e. a deep red wine'; Blount, ed. 1674. — Span. vino tinto, red wine; tinto, deep-coloured, said of wine. — L. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to dye; see Tinge.

TENT (4), care, heed. (F.—L.) 'Took tent'; Burns, Death and Doctor Hornbook, st. 3. Short for attent or attention; see Attend. Der. tent, verb.

TENTACLE, a feeler of an insect. (L.) Modern. Englished from Late L. **tentaculum*, which is also a coined word, formed from tentare, to feel; see Tempt. Cf. L. spiraculum, from spirare. Der. tentacul-ar.

TENTATIVE, experimental. (L.) 'Falsehood, though it be but tentative'; Bp. Hall, Contemplations, b. xx. cont. 3. § 21. — L. tentativus, trying, tentative. — L. tentatus, pp. of tentare, to try; see Tempt.

TENTER, a frame for stretching cloth by means of hooks. (F.—L.) Properly tenture; but a verb tent was coined, and from it a sb. tenter, which took the place of tenture. The verb occurs in P. Plowman, B. xv. 447; or rather the pp. ynted, suggested by L. tentus. ME. tenture. 'Tenture, Tentowre, for clothe, Tensorium, extensorium, tentura'; Prompt. Parv. 'Tentar for clothe, tend, tende; Tenterhoke, houet'; Palsgrave. — F. tenture, 'a stretching, spreading, extending'; Cot. — L. tentura, a stretching; cf. tentus, pp. of tendere, to stretch; see Tend (1). Der. tenter-hook, spelt tenterhoke in Palsgrave, a hook orig. used for stretching cloth.

TENUITY, slenderness, thinness, rarity. (F.—L.) Spelt tenuite in Minshew, ed. 1627. — MF. tenuité, 'tenuity, thinness'; Cot. — L. tenuitatem, acc. of. tenuitas, thinness. — L. tenuis, thin. — ✓TEN, to stretch; see Thin. Der. (from L. tenuis) ex-tenu-ate.

TENURE, a holding of a tenement. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, v. i. 108. — F. tenure, 'a tenure, a hold or estate in land'; Cot. — Late L. tenūra (in common use); Ducange. — L. tenere, to hold; see Tenable.

TEOCALLI, a Mexican temple. (Mexican.) Mex. teocalli. — Mex. teotl, a god (which loses tl in composition); and calli, a house.

TEPID, moderately warm. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 417. — L. tepidus, warm. — L. tepere, to be warm. — ✓TEP, to be warm, to glow; whence Skt. tap, to be warm, to warm, to shine, tapas, fire; Russ. topit(e), to heat; Irish tē, hot. Der. tepid-i-ty, from MF. tepidité, 'luke-warmnesse', Cot., as if from L. acc. **tepiditatem*; tepid-ness.

TERAPHIM, idols, images, or household gods, consulted as oracles. (Heb.) See Judges, xvii. 5, xviii. 14; Hosea, iii. 4 (A.V.). — Heb. terāphim, s. pl., images connected with magical rites.

TERCE, the same as Tierce, q. v.

TERCEL, the male of any kind of hawk. (F.—L.) Corruptly spelt tassel, Romeo, ii. 2. 160; rightly tercel, Troilus, iii. 2. 56. See Tassel in Nares. ME. tercel; 'the tercel egle', Chaucer, Assembly of Fowls, 393. Also tercelet, a dimin. form; Chaucer, C. T. 10818 (F 504). — OF. tercel, tiercel (Godefroy), whence MF. dimin. tiercelet, 'the tassell, or male of any kind of hawk, so teamed because he is, commonly, a third part lesse then the female'; Cot. Cf. Ital. terzolo (now spelt terzuolo), 'a tassell-gentle of a hawke'; Florio. Derived (with dimin. suffix -el) from OF. tiers, terce, third; just as Ital. terzolo is from Ital. terzo, third. — L. tertius, third; see Tierce and Three. ¶ Burguy gives a different reason, viz. that, in popular opinion, every third bird hatched was a male; he refers to Raynouard's Provençal Dict., v. 412. Either way, the etymology is the same.

TEREBINTH, the turpentine-tree. (L.—Gk.) Teribinth; in Spenser, Shep. Kal., July, 86. — L. terebinthus. — Gk. τερέβινθος, the turpentine-tree. Der. turpent-inē.

TEREDO, a wood-worm. (L.—Gk.) L. terēdo. — Gk. τερηδών, a wood-worm; so named from boring into wood. — Gk. τερ-, base of τελεiv (for **τέρ-yeiv*), to bore. See Trite, Termite.

TERGIVERSATION, a subterfuge, fickleness of conduct. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — F. tergiversation, 'tergiversation, a flinching, withdrawing'; Cot. Lit. a turning of one's back. — L. tergiuersatiōnem, acc. of tergiuersatio, a subterfuge. — L. tergiuersari, to turn one's back, decline, refuse, shuffle, shift. — L. tergi-, for tergum, the back; and uersari, to turn oneself about, pass. of uersare, to turn about, frequentative of uertere (pp. uersus), to turn; see Verse.

TERM, a limited period, a word or expression. (F.—L.) ME. terme, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 316, l. 21. — F. terme, 'a term, time, or day; also, a term, word, speech'; Cot. — L. terminum, acc. of terminus, a boundary-line, bound, limit (whence also Ital. terminare, termino, Span. termino). Cf. OL. termen, with the same sense; Gk. τέρμα, a limit. — ✓TER, to pass over, cross, fulfil; cf. Skt. tāraya, to cause to pass over. Der. term, vb., Temp. v. 15; and see termination. Also (from L. terminus) termin-al, adj., from L. terminālis; con-termin-ous, de-terminare, ex-termin-ate, pre-de-terminare. And (from the same root) en-ter; thrum (1).

TERMAGANT, a boisterous, noisy woman. (F.—Ital.—L.) ME. Termagant, Termagaunt, Chaucer, C. T. 13739 (B 2000). Termagant was one of the idols whom (in the mediæval romances) the Saracens are supposed to worship; see King of Tars, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, ii. 174–182; Lybeaus Disconus, in the same, ii. 55. See Nares, who explains that the personage of Termagant was introduced into the old moralities, and represented as of a violent character. In Ram Alley, we have the expression: 'that swears, God bless us, Like a very termagant'; Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, x. 322; and see Hamlet, iii. 2. 15. So also: 'this hot termagant Scot'; 1 Hen. IV., v. 4. 114. It has now subsided into the signification of a scolding woman. 'So must all our tavern termagons be used, or they'll trepan you'; Lady Alimony, Act i. sc. 4 (1659). The name is a corruption of OF. Tervagant, Tervagan, or Tarvagan; spelt Teruagant in Layamon's Brut, l. 5353, where he is a Roman (I) god; and Tervagan in the Chanson de Roland, l. 611, where it signifies a Saracen idol. — Ital. Trivigante, the same, Ariosto, xii. 59 (see Nares, s. v. Trivigant); more correctly, Trivigante. It has been suggested that Trivigante or Tervagante is the moon, wandering under the three names of Selene (or Luna) in heaven, Artemis (or Diana) in earth, and Persephone (Proserpine) in the lower world. Cf. dea trivía as an epithet of Diana. — L. ter, thrice, or tri-, thrice; and uagant-, stem of pres. part. of uagari, to wander. See Ternary and Triform, and Vagabond. ¶ See also my note to the line in Chaucer and Tyrwhitt's note; Ritson, Met. Rom. iii. 260; Quarterly Review, xxi. 515; Wheeler, Noted Names of Fiction; Trench, Select Glossary; &c. Perhaps Ital. Trivigante is of Eastern origin.

TERMINATION, end, limit, result. (F.—L.) In Much Ado, ii. 1. 256, where it is used with the sense of term, i. e. word or expression. — F. termination, 'a determining, limiting'; Cot. — L. terminatiōnem, acc. of terminatio, a bounding, fixing, determining. — L. terminare, to limit. — L. terminus, a bound, limit; see Term. Der. termination-al. Also (from L. terminare) termin-ate, termin-able, termin-at-ive, terminat-ive-ly. We also use L. terminus, sb., as an E. word; Marlowe, Dr. Faustus, A. ii. sc. 2.

TERMITE, a white ant. (F.—L.) F. termite, used in 1812 (Hatzfeld). — L. termitem, acc. of termes, more commonly tarmes, a wood-worm. Allied to terēdo, a wood-worm; from the same root. See Teredo.

TERN, an aquatic fowl. (Scand.) Not in the old dictionaries. I find it in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792; and it was, doubtless, in much earlier use. — Dan. terne, tærne, a tern; Swed. tärna; Icel. þerna, a tern, occurring in the local name þerney (tern-island), near Reykjavik in Iceland. Widegren's Swed. Dict. (ed. 1788) has tärna, 'tern.' B. It is remarkable that Dan. terne, Swed. tärna, Icel. þerna, also mean a hand-maid, maid-servant; cf. G. dirne; but the words are unrelated (see dirne in Kluge). ¶ The scientific L. name Sterna was taken from E. stern, a name for the black tern used by Turner (1544). 'The field is Azure, a Cheuron betweene three Sternes', the said birds being figured in the accompanying wood-cut; Guillim, Display of Heraldry, ed. 1664, p. 216. Evidently from AS. stearn; 'Beacita, vel sturnus, stearn', in a list of birds, Voc. 131, 11; 'Beacita, stearn'; Corpus Gloss., 284. The forms stern, stare (for starling), and L. sturnus, are related; and so also (with loss of initial s) Icel. þerna, Dan. terne, Swed. tärna. The form tern is Scand., because the cognate E. form would be **thern* or stern. Cf. Norfolk starn, a tern; E. D. D.

TERNARY, proceeding by, or consisting of threes. (L.) 'A senary, and a ternary;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 652 (R.).—L. ternārius, consisting of threes.—L. terni, pl., by threes. Allied to ter, thrice, and to trēs, three; the latter being cognate with E. three. See Three. Der. (from L. terni), tern-ate, arranged in threes, a coined word.

TERRA-COTTA, a kind of hard pottery. (Ital.—L.) From Ital. terra cotta, baked (lit. cooked) earth.—L. terra, earth (see Terrace); cotta, fem. of coccus, cooked, pp. of coquere, to cook; see Cook.

TERRACE, a raised level bank of earth, elevated flat space. (F.—Ital.—L.) Frequently spelt tarras, as in Spenser, F. Q. v. 9. 21; here ar is put for er, as in parson for person, Clark for clerk; &c.—MF. terrace, F. terrasse, 'a plat, platform, hillock of earth, a terrace, or high and open gallery;' Cot.—Ital. terracia, terrazza, 'a terrace;' Florio. Formed with suffix -accia, usually with an augmentative force, from Ital. terr-a, earth.—L. terra, earth. β. L. terra stands for an older form **tersa*, and signifies dry ground or land, as opposed to sea. Allied to Gk. ρῆσος (Attic ρῆσος), a stand or frame for drying things upon, any broad flat surface; τέρεσθαι, to become dry, dry up. Also to Irish tir, land, tirmen, main land, tirim, dry; W. tir, land; Gael. tir, land (whence ceann-tìre, headland, land's end, Cantire). Cf. also L. torrere, to parch.—✓TERS, to be dry; whence Skt. trsh, to thirst, Goth. thaurusus, dry, G. dürr, dry. See Thirst and Torrid. Brugmann, i. § 881. Der. terra-cotta, q. v. Also terr-aqueous, consisting of land and water; see Aqueous. And see terr-een, terr-ene, terr-estri-al, terr-i-er, terr-it-or-y. Also fumi-tory, in-ter, medi-terr-an-e-an, tur-meric.

TERREEN, TUREEN, a large dish or vessel, esp. for soup. (F.—L.) Both spellings are poor; it should rather be terrine; tureen is the commoner, and the worse, spelling. So called because orig. made of earthenware. Spelt tureen, Goldsmith, The Haunch of Venison; terrine in Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. terrine, 'an earthen pan;' Cot. Formed, as if from a L. adj. **terrinius*, earthen, from terra, earth; see Terrace.

TERRENE, earthly. (L.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 13. 153.—L. terrēnus, earthly.—L. terra, earth; see Terrace.

TERRIBLE, awful, dreadful. (F.—L.) Spelt terryble in Palsgrave.—F. terrible, 'terrible;' Cot.—L. terribilis, causing terror.—L. terrēre, to terrify; with suffix -bilis. Allied to L. terror, terror; see Terror. Der. terribl-y, terrible-ness.

TERRIER, a kind of dog; also a register of landed property. (F.—L.) In both senses, the word has the same etymology. 1. ME. terrere, terryare, hownde, Terrarius; Prompt. Parv. The dog was so called because it pursues rabbits, &c., into their burrows. Terrier is short for terrier-dog, i. e. burrow-dog.—F. terrier, as in chien terrier, 'a terrier;' Cot.—Late L. terrārius, belonging to earth.—L. terra, earth. Cf. MF. terrier, 'the hole, berry, or earth of a conny or fox, also, a little hillock;' Cot.—Late L. terrārium, a little hillock; hence, a mound thrown up in making a burrow, a burrow. 2. A legal term; spelt terrar in Blount's Nomolexicon; terrere, Bury Wills, p. 78 (1478).—F. papier terrier, 'the court-roll or catalogue of all the names of a lord's tenants,' &c.; Cot.—Late L. terrārius, as in terrārius liber, a book in which landed property is described. Formed with suffix -ārius from L. terr-a, as above. See Terrace.

TERRIFIC, terrible, inspiring dread. (L.) Spelt terrifick, Milton, P. L. vii. 497.—L. terrificus, causing terror.—L. terri-, appearing in terri-tus, pp. of terrēre, to frighten; and -ficus, causing, from facere, to make; see Terror and Fact. Der. terrific-ly. Also terrify, formed as if from a F. **terrifier* (given in Littre as a new coinage), from L. terrificāre, to terrify.

TERRINE, the same as Terreen, q. v.

TERRITORY, domain, extent of land round a city. (F.—L.) In As You Like It, iii. 1. 8; terrytorie in Caxton, Siege of Troy, lf. 68, back. Adapted from F. territoire, 'a territory;' Cot.—L. territōrium, a domain, the land round a town. Formed from L. terra, land; as if from a sb. with decl. stem territōri-, which may be explained as possessor of land. See Terrace. Der. territori-al, adj.

TERROR, dread, great fear. (F.—L.) Formerly written terroure, All's Well, ii. 3. 4 (first folio); but also terror, Meas. for Meas. i. 1. 10; ii. 1. 4 (id.). ME. terroure, Libell of E. Policy, l. 935.—F. terreur, 'terror;' Cot.—L. terrōrem, acc. of terror, dread. Allied to terrēre, to frighten, to scare; orig. to tremble. β. Terrēre stands for **tersere* (like terra for **tersa*); cognate with Skt. tras, to tremble, be afraid, whence trāsa-, terror; Gk. τρέειν (for **τρέσ-ειν*), to tremble; Lithuan. triszėti, to tremble, Russ. trist(e), to shake, shiver. Allied to Tremble. Brugmann, ii. § 657. Der. terror-ism. And (from same root) terri-ble, terri-fic, de-ter.

TERSE, concise, compact, neat. (L.) 'So terse and elegant were his concepts and expressions;' Fuller, Worthies, Devonshire (R.). Used also in the sense of smooth: 'many stones also, . . . although terse and smooth;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 4. § 3.—L. tersus, wiped off, clean, neat, pure, nice, terse. Tersus is pp. of tergere, also tergere, to wipe, rub off, wipe dry, polish a stone (whence Sir T. Browne's use of terse). Der. terse-ly, -ness.

TERTIAN, occurring every third day. (F.—L.) Chiefly in the phr. tertian fever or tertian ague. 'A fever terciane;' Chaucer, C. T. 14965 (B 4149).—F. tertiane, 'a tertian ague;' Cot.—L. tertiana, a tertian fever; fem. of tertianus, tertian, belonging to the third.—L. tertius, third.—L. ter, thrice; trēs, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. And see Tierce.

TERTIARY, of the third formation. (L.) Modern.—L. tertiarius, properly containing a third part; but accepted to mean belonging to the third.—L. terti-us, third; with suffix -ārius; see Tertian.

TESSELATE, to form into squares or lay with checker-work. (L.) Chiefly used in the pp. tesselated, which is given in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. 'Tesseled worke;' Knolles, Hist. of the Turks, 1603 (Nares).—L. tessellātus, furnished with small square stones, checkered.—L. tessella, a small squared piece of stone, a little cube, dimin. of tessera, a squared piece, squared block, most commonly in the sense of a die for playing with. β. Root uncertain; sometimes referred to Gk. τέσσαρες, four, from its square shape; but such a borrowing is very unlikely, and a tessera was cubical, having six sides.

TEST, a pot in which metals are tried, a critical examination, trial, proof. (F.—L.) The test was a vessel used in alchemy, and also in testing gold. 'Test, is a broad instrument made of maribone ashes, hooped about with iron, on which refiners do fine, refine, and part silver and gold from other metals, or as we use to say, put them to the test or trial;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. ME. test, Chaucer, C. T. 16286 (G 818).—OF. test, mod. F. têt, a test, in chemistry and metallurgy (Hamilton). Cf. OF. teste, sometimes used in the sense of skull, from its likeness to a potsherd; mod. F. tête. It is probable that OF. test and teste were sometimes confused; they merely differ in gender; otherwise, they are the same word. Test answers to a L. testū, testum, an earthen pot (Lewis); whilst teste answers to Late L. testa, used to denote a certain vessel in treatises on alchemy; a vessel called a testa is figured in Theatrum Chemicum, iii. 326. In Italian we find the same words, viz. testo, 'the test of silver or gold, a kind of melting-pot that goldsmiths use,' Florio; also testa, 'a head, pate, . . . a test, an earthen pot or galle-cup, burnt tile or brick, a piece of a broken bone, a shard of a pot or tile.' β. All allied to L. testa, a brick, a piece of baked earthenware, pitcher, also a potsherd, piece of bone, shell of a fish, skull. Some make it an abbreviation of **tersta*, i. e. dried or baked, with reference to clay or earthenware; allied to terra (< **tersa*), dry ground.—✓TERS, to be dry; see Terrace. Or perhaps cognate with Pers. tasht, a bason; see Tazza. Der. test, verb; cf. 'tested gold,' Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 149. Also test-ac-e-ous, test-er, test-y, q. v.

TESTACEOUS, having a hard shell. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished from L. testāceus, consisting of tiles, having a shell, testaceous.—L. testa, a piece of dried clay, tile, brick. See Test.

TESTAMENT, a solemn declaration in writing, a will, part of the bible. (F.—L.) ME. testament, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 20, l. 9; Ancrén Riwle, p. 388.—F. testament, 'a testament or will;' Cot.—L. testāmentum, a thing declared, last will.—L. testā-rī, to be a witness, depose to, testify; with suffix -mentum.—L. testis, a witness. Root uncertain. Der. testament-ar-y; in-test-ate, q. v.; test-at-or, Heb. ix. 16, from L. testātor, one who makes a will; testat-rix, L. testātrix, fem. form of testātor. And see testify, testimony. (From L. testis) at-test, con-test, de-test, pro-test.

TESTER, a sixpence; a flat canopy over a bed or pulpit. (F.—L.) 1. The sense 'sixpence' is obsolete, except as corrupted to tizzy; see Shak. 2 Henry IV, iii. 2. 296. The tester was so called from the head upon it; it is a short form of testerne, as in Latimer's Sermons, 1584, fol. 94 (Todd). Again, testern is, apparently, a corruption of teston (sometimes testoon), which was 'a brass coin covered with silver, first struck in the reign of Hen. VIII. The name was given to shillings and sixpences, and Latimer got into trouble by referring to the newly coined shilling or teston; see Latimer, Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 85, where it is spelt testyon. In 1560 the teston of 6d. was reduced to 4½d. The name teston was given to the new coins of Louis XII. of France because they bore the head of that prince; but Ruding observes that the name must have been applied to the E. coin by mere caprice, as all money of this country bore the head of the sovereign; H. B. Wheatley, note to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 2. 104, where teston occurs. — F. teston, 'a testoon, a piece of silver coin worth xviii<sup>d</sup>. sterling; Cot. — OF. teste, a head; mod. F. tête. — L. testa, of which one sense was 'skull; see further under Test. 2. 'Testar for a bedde; Palsgrave. [Allied to ME. tester, a head-piece, helmet, Chaucer, C. T. 2501 (A 2499).] Cf. 'Teester of a bed; Prompt. Parv. — OF. testre, tester of a bed (Godefroy); cf. MF. testiere, 'any kind of head-piece; Cot. — OF. teste, a head; as above.

TESTICLE, a gland in males, secreting seminal fluid. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave. — F. testicule, 'a testicle; Cot. — L. testiculum, acc. of testiculus, dimin. of testis, a testicle.

TESTIFY, to bear witness, protest or declare. (F. — L.) ME. testifien, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 172. — F. testifier, 'to testify; Cot. — L. testificari, to bear witness. — L. testi-, decl. stem of testis, a witness; and -fic-, for facere, to make; see Testament and Fact. Der. testifi-er.

TESTIMONY, evidence, witness. (L.) In K. Lear, i. 2. 88. Englished from L. testimonium, evidence. — L. testi-, decl. stem of testis, a witness; see Testament. The suffix -monium = Idg. -mon-yo-. ¶ The F. word is témoin, OF. tesmoing. Der. testimoni-al, in Minshew, from F. testimonial, 'a testimonial; Cot.; from L. testimoniālis, adj.

TESTY, heady, fretful. (F. — L.) In Palsgrave; and in Jul. Cæs. iv. 3. 46. ME. testif, Chaucer, C. T., A 4004. — OF. **testif* (not found); allied to MF. testu, 'testy, heady, headstrong; Cot. — OF. teste, the head; mod. F. tête. See Test. Der. testi-ly; testi-ness, Cymb. iv. 1. 23.

TETANUS, a disease characterised by rigid spasms. (L. — Gk.) Late L. tetanus. — Gk. τέτανος, a strain, convulsive spasm; allied to τετανός, adj., stretched. Reduplicated forms (with prefix τε-) allied to τείνειν (for **τέν-yeiv*), to stretch. — ✓ TEN, to stretch. See Thin.

TETCHY, TECHY, touchy, fretful, peevish. (F. — Low G.) In Rich. III, iv. 4. 168; Troil. i. 1. 99; Rom. i. 3. 32. The sense of tetchy (better techy) is full of tetches or teches, i.e. bad habits, freaks, whims, vices. The adj. is formed from ME. tecche or tache, a habit, esp. a bad habit, vice, freak, caprice, behaviour. 'Tetche, tecche, teche, or maner of condycyone, Mos, condicio; Prompt. Parv. 'A chylidis tatches in playe, mores pueri inter ludendum; Horman, Vulgaria; cited by Way. 'Offritia, crafty and deceytfull tatches; Elyot's Dict. 'Of the maners, tacches, and condycions of boundes; MS. Sloane 3501, c. xi; cited by Way. 'Pe sires tacches = the father's habits; P. Plowman, B. ix. 146. Techches, vices; Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 32, l. 15. — OF. tache, 'a spot, staine, blemish; also, a reproach, disgrace, blot unto a man's good name; Cot. Also spelt taiche, teche, teque, tek, a natural quality, disposition, esp. a bad disposition, vice, ill habit, defect, stain (Burguy). Mod. F. tache, only in the sense of stain, mark. [Cf. Ital. tacca, a notch, cut, defect, stain, Port. and Span. tacha, a defect, flaw, crack, small nail or tack.] Of Low G. origin. See Tache (2) and Tack. Cf. at-tach and de-tach, from the same source. We even find the E. form tack, a spot, stain; Whitgift's Works, ii. 84 (Parker Soc.). ¶ Now corrupted to touch-y, from the notion of being sensitive to the touch. This is a mere adaptation, not an original expression; see Touchy. (The double form in OF., viz. tache, teche, causes difficulty and doubt; two or more sources may have been confused together. See Körting, §§ 9331, 9346, 9420.)

TETHER, a rope or chain for tying up a beast. (E.) Formerly written tedder. 'Live within thy tedder, i.e. within your income's bounds; Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 10, st. 9 (sidenote). 'Tederred cattle, id. sect. 16, st. 33 (E. D. S. p. 42). ME. tedir; 'Hoc ligatorium, a tedyre; Wright's Voc. i. 234, col. 2. Not found earlier than the 15th century. The corresponding AS. form would be **tēoder*, as shown by OFries. tiader, tieder, NFries. tjōdder, tjūdder, EFries. tūdder; cf. also Mid. Du. tuyet, 'a line, a shackle, or rope to tie beasts in a pasture; Hexham. β. We might explain the AS. **tēoder* as standing for **tēoh-der*; from the base tēoh = G. zieh-, to draw; cf. Goth. tiuhan, to pull, cognate with L. dūc-ere. If this be right, the original sense was 'puller; from its restraint. Cf. OHG. zeotar, MHG. zieter, a thill, shaft (of a cart). γ. We also find Icel. tjōdr, a tether, Low G. tider, tier, a tether, Norw. tjoder (Aasen), Swed. tjuder, Dan. töir; all similarly formed. See Tie. The suffix -der answers to Gk. -τρον, L. -trum, and denotes the agent. Cf. Bahder, p. 147; Brugmann, ii. § 62. Der. tether, verb.

TETRAGON, a figure with four angles. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'Tetragonal, that is, four-square, as a tetragon or quadrangle; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — MF. tetragone, adj., 'of four corners; Cot. — L. tetragōnus. — Gk. τετράγωνος, four-angled, rectangular, square. — Gk.

τέτρα-, for τετρα-, prefix allied to τέτταρες, Attic form of τέσσαρες, four, which is cognate with E. Four, q. v.; and γωνία, an angle, corner, allied to Gk. γωνν, a knee, cognate with E. Knee. Cf. L. prefix quadri-, similarly related to quatuor, four. Der. tetragonal, adj., as above.

TETRAHEDRON, a pyramid, a solid figure contained by four equilateral triangles. (Gk.) Spelt tetraedron and tetrahedron in Phillips, ed. 1706. — Gk. τέτρα-, prefix allied to τέσσαρες, four; and -εδρον, from ἔδρα, a base, which from ἔδ-, cognate with E. sit. See Tetragon; and see Four and Sit. Der. tetrahedr-al, adj.

TETRARCH, a governor of a fourth part of a province. (L. — Gk.) ME. tetrark (ill spelt tetrak), Wyclif, Luke, ix. 7. — L. tetrarcha, Luke, ix. 7. — Gk. τετράρχης, a tetrarch. — Gk. τετρ-, prefix allied to τέσσαρες, four; and ἀρχ-ειν, to be first. Cf. Skt. arh, to be worthy. See Tetragon; also Four and Arch-. Der. tetrarch-ate; tetrarch-y, Gk. τετραρχία.

TETRASYLLABLE, a word of four syllables. (F. — L. — Gk.) A coined word; from MF. tetrasyllabe, 'of four syllables; Cot. — Late L. tetrasyllabus (not in Ducange). — Gk. τετρασύλλαβος, of four syllables. — Gk. τέτρα-, prefix allied to τέσσαρες, four; and συλλαβή, a syllable. See Tetragon; also Four and Syllable. Der. tetrasyllab-ic.

TETTER, a cutaneous disease. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 71; and in Baret (1580). ME. teter, Trevisa, ii. 61. 'Hec serpedo, a tetere; Voc. 791. 14. AS. teter. 'Impetigo, teter; Voc. 26. 12. Cf. G. zittermal, a tetter, ring-worm, serpigo; OHG. zitaroch (Bavar. zitteroch). Allied to L. derbiōsus, scabby; Skt. dadru-, a tetter.

TEUTONIC, pertaining to the Teutons or ancient Germans. (L. — Teut.) Spelt Teutonick in Blount, ed. 1674. — L. Teutonicus, adj., formed from Teutones, the Teutons, a people of Germany. The word Teutones means no more than 'men of the nation; or 'the people,' being formed with L. suffix -ones (pl.) from **teutā*, pre-Teutonic form of Goth. thiuda, a people, nation; cf. Irish tuath, a people. See further under Dutch. Brugmann, i. § 218.

TĒW, to law, to scourge. (E.) A variant of Taw, q. v.

TEXT, the original words of an author; a passage of scripture. (F. — L.) ME. texte, Chaucer, C. T. 17185 (H 236). — F. texte, 'a text, the original words or subject of a book; Cot. — L. textum, that which is woven, a fabric, also the style of an author; hence, a text. Orig. neut. of textus, pp. of texere, to weave. + Skt. taksh, to cut wood, prepare, form. Further allied to Technical, q. v. Der. text-book; text-hand, a large hand in writing, suitable for the text of a book as distinct from the notes; text-u-al, ME. textuel, Chaucer, C. T. 17184 (H 235), from F. textuel, 'of, or in, a text; Cot., coined as if from a Late L. **textuālis*, adj.; textu-al-ly, textu-al-ist. And see text-ile, text-ure below. From the same root are techn-ic-al, q. v.; con-text, pre-text. Also sub-tle, toil (2), tissue; and cf. toxicology.

TEXTILE, woven, that can be woven. (L.) 'The warp and the woof of textiles; Bacon, Nat. Historie, § 846. — L. textilis, woven, textile. — L. textus, woven, pp. of texere; see Text. See also texture, tissue.

TH

TH. This is a distinct letter from t, and ought to have a distinct symbol. Formerly, we find AS. þ and ð used (indiscriminately) to denote both the sounds now represented by th; in Middle-English, ð soon went out of use (it occurs in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris), whilst þ and th were both used by the scribes. The letter þ was assimilated in shape to y, till at last both were written alike; hence y<sup>e</sup>, y<sup>t</sup> (really the, that) are not unfrequently pronounced by modern Englishmen like ye and ya; it is needless to remark that y<sup>e</sup> man was never pronounced as ye man in the middle ages.

For greater distinctness, the symbol ð will be used for AS. words (and th for ME. words) corresponding to mod. E. words with the 'voiced' th, as in thou; and the symbol þ for AS. and ME. words corresponding to mod. E. words with the 'voiceless' th, as in thin. It is useful to note these three facts following. 1. When th is initial, it is always voiceless, except in two sets of words, (a) words etymologically connected with that; and (b) words etymologically connected with thou. 2. When th is in the middle of a word or is final, it is almost always 'voiced' when the letter e follows, and not otherwise; cf. breathe, with breath. A remarkable exception occurs in smooth. 3. No word beginning with th (except thurable, the base of which is Greek) is of Latin origin; most of them are E., but some (easily known) are Greek; thummim is Hebrew. In the G. thaler (below), the th is sounded as t.

THALER, a dollar. (G.) G. thaler, a dollar; see Dollar.

THAN, a conjunction placed, after the comparative of an adjective or adverb, between things compared. (E.) Frequently written then in old books; extremely common in Shakespeare (1st folio). ME. thanne, thonne, thenne; also than, thon, then. AS. ðonne, than; 'betera ðonne ðæt reāf' = better than the garment; Matt. vi. 25. Closely allied to the demonstr. pronoun; see That. See March, A. S. Grammar, § 252. + Du. dan, than, then; Goth. than, then, when, allied to the demonstr. pron. with neut. thata; G. dann, then, denn, for, then, than, allied to der. Cf. L. tum, then; -tud in L. is-tud. ¶ The same word as then; but differentiated by usage.

THANE, a dignitary among the English. (E.) In Macb. i. 2. 45. ME. þein, Havelok, 2466. AS. þegen, þegn, often þēn (by contraction), athane; Grein, ii. 578. + Icel. þegn; G. degen, a warrior. Teut. type **thegnōz*, m. Allied to Gk. τέκνον, a child, which is from τεκ-, as in τεκ-εῖν, 2nd aorist infin. of τίκτειν, to beget. (✓TEK.) Brugmann, ii. § 66.

THANK, an expression of good will; commonly used in the pl. thanks. (E.) Chaucer uses it in the sing. number. 'And haue a þank'; C. T. 614 (A 612). So also Gower: 'Although I may no þank deserve'; C. A. i. 66; bk. i. 738. AS. þanc, often also þonc, thought, grace or favour, content, thanks. The primary sense of 'thought' shows that it is closely allied to Think, q.v. The verb þancian, to thank (Mark, viii. 6), is a derivative from the sb. + Du. dank, sb., whence danken, vb.; Icel. þökk (<þönk), gen. þakkar, whence þakka, vb.; Dan. tak, sb., whence takke, vb.; cf. tanke, a thought; idea; Swed. tack, sb., whence tacka, vb.; Goth. thagks (for **thanks*), thank, Luke, xvii. 9, where the s is the usual suffix of the nom. sing.; cf. thagkjan, to think; G. dank, sb., whence danken, verb. Teut. type **thankoz*, m.; from **thank*, 2nd grade of **thenkan-*, to think; see Think. Der. thank, verb, as above; thank-ful, AS. þancful, spelt ðoncful and glossed 'gratiosus', Voc. 191. 15; thank-ful-ly, thank-ful-ness; thank-less, Cor. iv. 5. 76, thank-less-ly, thank-less-ness, thank-offer-ing, thank-worthy, 1 Pet. ii. 19. Also thanks-giving, i.e. a giving of thanks, L. L. L. ii. 193; thanks-giver.

THAT, demonstr. and rel. pronoun and conjunction. (E.) ME. that. AS. ðæt, orig. neut. of demonstrative pronoun, frequently used as neut. of the def. article, which is merely a peculiar use of the demonstr. pronoun. [The masc. sē, and fem. sēo, are from a different base; see She.] In late MSS., we meet with a corresponding masc. form ðe, as in 'ðe hearpere' = the harper, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 6, lib. iii. met. 12, where the Cotton MS. has 'se hearpere.' Also with a corresponding late fem. form ðeo, as in 'ðā ðeo sāwul hæbban sceal' = which the soul is to have; Adrianus and Ritheus, in Ettmüller's A. S. Selections, p. 40, l. 43. The neut. ðæt is from the Teut. pronominal base THA = Idg. TO, meaning 'he' or 'that.' The suffix -t in tha-t is merely the mark of the neut. gender, as in wha-t from who, i-t (formerly hi-t) from he; it answers to L. -d as seen in is-tū-d, qui-d, i-d, illu-d. β. From Idg. TO are Skt. tat, it, that, and numerous cases, such as tam, him (acc. masc.), tām, her (acc. fem.), tē, they, &c. Also Gk. τό, neut. of def. art., and the gen. τοῦ, τῆς, dat. τῷ, τῇ, acc. τόν, τήν, τό, &c. Also the latter part of L. is-te, is-ta, is-tud. So also Lithuan. tas, m., ta, f., tai, n., that; Russ. то́, masc., та́, fem., то́, neut., that; Du. de, masc. and fem., the; dat, conj., that; Icel. þat, neut., the; Dan. den, masc. and fem., det, neut., the; Swed. den, masc. and fem., det, neut., this; G. der, masc., die, fem., das, neut., the; dass, conj., that; Goth. thata, neut. of def. article.

For the purposes of E. etymology it is necessary to give the AS. def. art. in full. It is as follows, if we put sē and sēo (the usual forms) in place of ðe, ðeo. SING. NOM. sē, sēo, ðæt; GEN. ðas, ðære, ðæs; DAT. ðam, ðære, ðām; ACC. ðone, ðā, ðæt; INSTRUMENTAL, ðy (for all genders). PLUR. NOM. AND ACC. ðā; GEN. ðāra; DAT. ðām. ¶ Allied words all begin with 'voiced' th; as there, than, then, the (1), the (2), they, their, them; thence, thither; these, those, thus.

THATCH, a covering for a roof. (E.) A palatalised form of thak. Cf. prov. E. thack, a thatch, thacker, a thatcher; ME. þak, Prompt. Parv. AS. þac (dat. þæce), thatch, Grein, ii. 564; whence þeccan (for **þac-ian*), to thatch, cover, Grein, ii. 577. + Du. dak, sb., whence dekken, verb (whence E. deck is borrowed); Icel. þak, sb., þekja, v.; Dan. tag, sb., tække, v.; Swed. tak, sb., tække, v.; G. dach, s., decken, v. β. Teut. type **þak-om*, neut. From **þak*, 2nd grade of Teut. root **thek*, to cover = Idg. ✓TEGW, STEGW; cf. Gk. τέγος, variant of στέγος, a roof. From the same root we have Skt. sthag, to cover, Gk. στέγειν, to cover, L. tegere, to cover, Lithuan. stègti, to cover, OIrish tech, Irish teagh, a house, Gael. teach, tigh, a house, Gael. a stigh, within (i.e. under cover), W. tŷ, a house. Der. thatch, vb., as above; thatch-er, spelt thacker, Pilkington's Works, p. 381 (Parker Soc.). Also (from L. tegere) teg-u-ment, tile. Also (from Du. decken) deck. Brugmann, i. § 632.

THAUMATURGY, magic. (Gk.) Cf. F. thaumaturgie (1878); Hatzfeld. = Gk. θαυματουργία, a working of wonders. = Gk. θαυμα-, stem of θαῦμα, a wonder, marvel; and εργον, a work, cognate with E. Work, q.v.

THAW, to melt, as ice, to grow warm after frost. (E.) Prov. E. thow, rhyming with snow. ME. þowen, in comp. of-þowed, pp. thawed away, Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 53. Spelt þowyn, Prompt. Parv. AS. þāwian; 'se wind tō-wyrpð and þāwað' = the [south] wind disperses and thaws; Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 17, last line. A weak verb. + Du. dooijen, to thaw; cf. dooi, thaw; Icel. þeyja, to thaw; þā, a thaw, thawed ground; cf. þeyr, a thaw; Dan. tøe, to thaw; tø, a thaw; Swed. töa, to thaw; tö, a thaw. Cf. MHG. douwen, G. verdauen, to concoct, digest. β. Prob. allied to L. tābēs, a melting, tābescere, to dissolve, Gk. τήκειν, to melt; Skt. tōya-, water; W. tawdd, melted, toddi, to melt. ¶ In no way connected with dew.

THE (1), def. article. (E.) ME. the. AS. ðe, substituted in Late AS. for sē, the nom. masc. of the def. article; the m. sē, f. sēo, being replaced by m. ðe, f. ðeo, by the influence of neut. ðæt, and the forms of the oblique cases. Thus we find ðe hearpere = the harper; see quotation under That. The real use of AS. ðe was as an indeclinable relative pronoun, in extremely common use for all genders and cases; see several hundred examples in Grein, ii. 573-577. See further under That.

THE (2), in what degree, in that degree. (E.) When we say 'the more, the merrier' we mean 'in what degree they are more numerous, in that degree are they merrier.' This is not the usual def. article, but the instrumental case of it. ME. the; as in 'neuer the bet' = none the better, Chaucer, C. T. 7533 (D 1951). AS. ðy, ði, as in ðy bet = the better; see numerous examples in Grein, ii. 568. This is the instrumental case of the def. article, and means 'on that account' or 'on what account,' or 'in that degree' or 'in what degree.' Common in the phrase for ðy, on that account; cf. for hwȳ, on what account. See That; and see Why. + Goth. thē, instrumental case of def. article; Icel. því, þí, dat. (or inst.) case of þat. Cf. Skt. tēna, instr. case of tad, sometimes used with the sense of 'therefore'; Benfey, p. 349, s.v. tad, sect. iv.

THEATRE, a place for dramatic representations. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. theatre, Chaucer, C. T. 1887 (A 1885); spelt teatre, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xix. 31. — MF. theatre, 'a theatre'; Cot. — L. theātrum. — Gk. θεάτρον, a place for seeing shows, &c.; formed with suffix -τρον (agential) from θεά-ομαι, I see. Cf. θέα, a view, sight, spectacle; see Prellwitz. Der. theatr-ic-al, adj., theatr-ic-al-ly; theatr-ic-al-s, s. pl.; amphi-theatre. And see theorem, theo-ry.

THEE (1), acc. of Thou, pers. pron., which see.

THEE (2), to prosper, flourish, thrive. (E.) Obsolete; ME. þeon, usually þe or þee, Chaucer, C. T. 7789 (D 2207). 'Theen, or thryvyn, Vigeo'; Prompt. Parv. AS. þeon, þion (for **þihan*), pt. t. þāh, þeah, pp. þigen, þogen, also ge-þungen, to thrive. + Goth. theihan, to thrive, increase, advance; Du. gedijen, to thrive, prosper, succeed; G. gedeihen, OHG. dīhan, to increase, thrive. Another allied form is OSax. ge-þengian, to fulfil. The old AS. pp. geþungen shows that the AS. **þihan* resulted from an earlier form **þinhan*; from the Teut. root **þinχ*, **þenχ*, answering to Idg. ✓TENK; which appears in Lith. tenka, it suffices; whence also OIrish tocad, prosperity, W. tynged, luck; cf. Lith. tekti, to suffice (pres. t. tenkü, I have enough). Brugmann, i. § 421 (3). See Tight.

THEFT, the act of thieving, stealing. (E.) ME. þefte, Chaucer, C. T. 4393 (A 4395). Theft is for thefih, as being easier to pronounce. AS. þiefðe, þeofðe, þyfdē (with f sounded as v, and ð voiced), theft; Laws of Ine, §§ 7 and 46; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 106, 130. Formed with suffix -(i)ðe (Idg. -itā) from AS. þeof, þiof, or þēf, a thief, or from þeofian, to steal; see Thief. + OFries. thiufiſe, theft; cf. thiaf, a thief; Icel. þýfd, sometimes þýft; cf. þjófr, a thief.

THEIR, belonging to them. (Scand.) The word their belongs to the Northern dialect rather than the Southern, and is rather a Scand. than an AS. form. Chaucer uses hire or here in this sense (<AS. hira, of them); C. T. 32. ME. thair, Pricke of Conscience, 52, 1862, &c.; thar, Barbour, Bruce, i. 22, 23; þeyre, Ormulum, 127. The word was orig. not a possess. pron., but a gen. plural; moreover, it was not orig. the gen. pl. of he (he), but of the def. article. — Icel. þeirra, OIcel. þeira, of them; used as gen. pl. of hann, hon, þat (he, she, it), by confusion; it was really the gen. pl. of the def. article, as shown by the AS. forms. (The use of that for it is a Scand. peculiarity, very common in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambs.) + AS. ðēra, also ðāra, gen. pl. of def. art.; see Grein, ii. 565; G. der, gen.

pl. of def. art.; Goth. thizō, fem. thizō, gen. pl. of sa, so, thata. See further under They and That. Der. their-s, Temp. i. 1. 58; spelt þeȝress, Ormulum, 2506; cf. Dan. deres, Swed. deras, theirs; formed by analogy with our-s, your-s.

THEISM, belief in the existence of a God. (Gk.) 'All religion and theism;' Pref. to Cudworth, Intellectual System (R.). Coined, with suffix -ism (Gk. -ισμος), from Gk. θεός, a god. Prob. for **θεο-ός*; cf. OIrish dess, God (Stokes-Fick, p. 151); also Gk. θεο-φάρος, spoken by a god. See Prellwitz. ¶ Not related to L. deus. Der. the-ist (from Gk. θεός); the-ist-ic, the-ist-ic-al; a-the-ist, q.v.; apo-the-os-is, q.v. And see theo-cracy, theo-gony, theo-log-y, the-urg-y.

THEM, objective case of They, q.v. Der. them-selves.

THEME, a subject for discussion. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. teme, P. Plowman, B. iii. 95, v. 61, vi. 23. At a later period spelt theme, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 434.—OF. teme, MF. theme, 'a theam,' Cot.—L. thema.—Gk. θέμα, that which is laid down, the subject of an argument.—Gk. base θε-, to place, weak grade of θη-, as in τίθημι, I place.—√DHE, to place, put; whence Skt. dhā, to put; &c. See Thesis.

THEN, at that time, afterward, therefore. (E.) Frequently spelt than in old books, as in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 200 (First folio); it rimes with began, Lucrece, 1440. Orig. the same word as than, but afterwards differentiated. ME. thenne, P. Plowman, A. i. 56; thanne, B. i. 58. AS. ðanne; also ðanne, ðonne, then, than; Grein, ii. 562, 563. See Than.

THENCE, from that place or time. (E.) ME. thennēs (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4930 (B 510); whence (by contraction) thens, written thence in order to represent that the final s was voiceless, and not sounded as z. Older forms thonne, thenne, thanne, Owl and Nightingale, 132, 508, 1724; also thanene, Rob. of Glouc., p. 377, l. 7743. Here thanne is a shorter form of thanene (or thanen) by the loss of n. AS. ðanan, ðanon, thence; also ðananne, ðanonne, thence, Grein, ii. 560, 561. It thus appears that the fullest form was ðananne, which became successively thanene, thanne, thenne, and (by addition of s) thennes, thens, thence. S was added because -es was a favourite ME. adverbial suffix, orig. due to the genitive suffix of sbs. Again, ða-nan, ða-nan-ne, is from the Teut. base THA=Idg. TO, he, that; see That. March (A. S. Grammar, § 252) explains -nan, -nanne, as an oblique case of the (repeated) adj. suffix -na, with the orig. sense of 'belonging to;' cf. L. super-no-, belonging (super) above, whence the ablative adverb super-ne, from above. He remarks that belonging to and coming from are near akin, but the lost case-ending inclines the sense to from. 'The Goth. in-nana, within, ut-ana, without, hind-ana, behind, do not have the plain sense from. Pott suggests comparison with a preposition (Lettish no, from). Here belong east-an, from the east; aft-an, aft; feorr-an, from far; &c.' Compare also Hence, Whence.+G. dannen, OHG. dannana, thence; from G. base da-. Der. thence-forth, thence-forward, not in early use.

THEOCRACY, the government of a state immediately by God; the state so governed. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—Gk. θεοκρατία, the rule of God; Josephus, Against Apion, ii. 16 (Trench, Study of Words). Formed (by analogy with demo-cracy, aristocracy, &c.), from Gk. θεο-, for θεός, a god; and -κρατία, -κρατεία (as in δημο-κρατία, δημο-κρατεία), i. e. government, power, from κρατός, strong, allied to E. hard. See Theism and Hard; and see Democracy. Der. theocrat-ic, theocrat-ic-al.

THEODOLITE, an instrument used in surveying for observing angles and distances. (Gk.) In Blount, ed. 1674. Certainly of Gk. origin. The original theodolite was not quite like the present one. Hopton, in his Topographical Glasse (1611) defines it as 'an instrument consisting of a planisphere and an alhidada,' i. e. a revolving rule with sights, and spells it Theodelitus; N. and Q. 3 S. iv. 51. In Pantometria, by T. Digges, 1571, ch. 27 of book i is headed 'The composition of the instrument called Theodelitus,' and begins: 'It is but a circle divided into 360 grades or degrees,' &c. Prof. Adams informs me that the method of subdividing the degrees of the circle was known to the Greeks, and is well explained in Rathbone's Surveying, ed. 1616. Also spelt theodolet, theodelet, theodolit; the last occurs in 1784; N. and Q. 9 S. vii. 412. It seems to be taken (we know not why) from the OF. Theodolet, Theodelet, the name of a treatise, lit. 'a work by Theodulus.' Godefroy quotes 'Cathonnet, Theodelet, bien gloses,' i. e. a work by Cato, a work by Theodulus, well glossed (1408). It was usual to add -et in this manner; thus Esop-et meant a work by Æsop, viz. his 'Fables.' One Theodolet, viz. the Ecloga Theoduli, is mentioned by Rabelais (I. xiv); when Gargantua was instructed in Latin literature, he read 'Donat, le Facet, Theodolet,' &c. This Ecloga Theoduli was a poem in Latin hexameters, containing a dispute between Truth and Falsehood. But it is more likely that the reference in this instance is to a mathematician named Theodulus; see N. and Q. 3 S. vii. 337, 428, &c. The name Theodulus meant 'servant of God;' from θεο-, for θεός, God; and δούλος, a servant. For the suffix -et, cf. Pamphlet.

THEOGONY, the part of mythology which taught of the origin of the gods. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'The theogony in Hesiod;' Selden, Illustrations to Drayton's Polyolbion, song II (R.). Englished from L. theogonia.—Gk. θεογονία, the origin of the gods; the title of a poem by Hesiod.—Gk. θεο-, for θεός, a god; and -γονία, origin, from γον-, 2nd grade of the Gk. base γεν-, to beget, from √GEN, to beget. Cf. Gk. γένος, race, ἐγενόμην, I became. See Theism and Genus. Der. theogon-ist, a writer on theogony.

THEOLOGY, the science which treats of the relations between God and man. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. theologie, Chaucer, Persones Tale, 3rd pt. of Penitence (Group I, 1043).—MF. theologie, 'theology;' Cot.—L. theologia.—Gk. θεολογία, a speaking about God.—Gk. θεολόγος, adj., speaking about God.—Gk. θεο-, for θεός, a god; and λογ-, 2nd grade of λέγειν, to speak. See Theism and Logic. Der. theologi-c, theologi-c-al, theologi-c-al-ly; theolog-ise, ist; theologi-an.

THEORBO, a kind of lute. (Ital.) Formerly also theorba; theorbo in Drayton, Polyolbion, song iv. 363.—Ital. tiórba; the th being due to the occasional F. spelling théorbe, for tiórbe. Named after its inventor (Zambaldi).

THEOREM, a proposition to be proved. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'More theoremes;' Marston, What You Will, A. iv. sc. 1.—L. theōrēma.—Gk. θεώρημα, a spectacle; hence, a subject for contemplation, principle, theorem. Formed with suffix -μα (-ματ-) from θεωρεῖν, to look at, behold, view.—Gk. θεωρός, a spectator.—Gk. θεῶ-μαι, θεόο-μαι, I see; with suffix -πος (Idg. -ro-). See Theatre. And see Theory.

THEORY, an exposition, speculation. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt theorie in Minsheu. [The ME. word was theorike, as in Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 59; Gower, C. A. iii. 86; bk. vii. 61. This is F. theorique, sb. fem.=L. theōrica, adj. fem., the sb. ars, art, being understood. See Nares.]—MF. theorie, 'theory;' Cot.—L. theōria.—Gk. θεωρία, a beholding, contemplation, speculation.—Gk. θεωρός, a spectator; see Theorem. Der. theor-ise, theor-ist; also theor-et-ic, Gk. θεωρητικός, adj.; theor-et-ic-al, -ly.

THERAPEUTIC, pertaining to the healing art. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt therapeutick, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and see Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13. § 26.—MF. therapeutique, 'curing, healing;' Cot.—L. therapeutica, fem. sing. of adj. therapeuticus, healing; the sb. ars, art, being understood.—Gk. θεραπευτικός, inclined to take care of, tending.—Gk. θεραπευτής, one who waits on a great man, one who attends to anything.—Gk. θεραπεύειν, to wait on, attend, serve.—Gk. θεραπ-, stem of θέραψ, a rare sb., for which the more usual form θεράπων, a servant, is used. The stem θερ-αν- means, literally, one who supports or assists; from base θερ-=Idg. DER, to support; cf. Skt. dhṛ, to bear, maintain, support, dhāritṛ, a supporter. Der. therapeutic-s, s. pl.

THERE (1), in that place. (E.) ME. ther, Chaucer, C. T. 43; written thar in Barbour's Bruce. AS. ðær, ðer, Grein, ii. 564; better written ðær, ðēr, with long vowel. The base is Teut. THA=Idg. TO, he, that; see That. March, A. S. Gram. § 252, explains the suffix -r as the locative case of the comparative suffix -ro-; cf. Skt. upa-ri, Gk. ὑπερ-, L. super, Goth. ufa-r, AS. ofe-r, E. ove-r.+Du. daar.+Icel. þar; Dan. and Swed. der; Goth. thar; G. da, OHG. dār. Cf. Here and Where.

THERE (2), as a prefix. (E.) In there-fore, there-by, &c. It will suffice to explain there-fore. This is ME. therforē, with final -e, as in Ormulum, 2431, where we find: 'tharforē se33dē 3ho piss word.' For AS. ðær, see above. For the prep. fore (allied to for), see Grein, ii. 320. It thus appears that the final e in therefore is not wrong, but therefore and therefor are equivalent. β. Similar compounds are there-about or (with added adverbial suffix -s) there-about-s, there-after, there-at, there-by, there-from, there-in, there-of, there-on, there-through, there-to, there-unto, there-upon, there-with. The construction with ðær before a preposition occurs even in AS. 'When a thing is referred to, ðær is generally substituted for hit with a prep., the prep. being joined on to the ðær; e. g. on hit becomes ðæron; Curfon hie ðæt of beorhtum stāne, gesetton hie ðæron sigora Wealdend=they cut it [the tomb] out of the bright rock, they placed in it the Lord of victories; Sweet, A. S. Grammar, 2nd ed. p. xci.

THERMOMETER, an instrument for measuring the variations of temperature. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Evelyn's Diary, July 13, 1654. First invented about 1597 (Haydn). Coined from Gk. θερμ-, for θερμός, hot, warm; and μέτρον, a measure, a measurer, for which see Metre. β. The Gk. θερμός is allied to L. formus, warm, and to Skt. gharma-, heat. Der. thermometr-ic, -ic-al, -ic-al-ly; and see iso-therm-al.

THESAURUS, a treasury of knowledge, esp. a dictionary. (L.—Gk.) A doublet of Treasure, q. v.

THESE, pl. of This, q. v. ME. thise, these, a new pl. of this. The old pl. (AS. þās) has become the mod. E. those. See Those.

THESIS, a statement laid down to be argued about, an essay on a theme. (L.—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627.—L. thesis.—Gk. θέσις, a proposition, statement, thing laid down. For **θε-τις*, allied to θε-τός, placed, verbal adj. from the base θε-, weaker form of θη-, as in τί-θη-μι, I put, place. See Theme. Der. anti-thesis, apo-thesis, epen-thesis, hypo-thesis, meta-thesis, para-thesis, paren-thesis, pros-thesis, pro-thesis, syn-thesis. From the same root are apo-the-c-ar-y, ana-the-ma, epi-the-t, the-me, the-s-au-rus, treasure.

THEURGY, supernatural agency. (L.—Gk.) Rare. A name applied to a kind of magic said to be performed by the operation of gods and demons. Rich. gives an example from Hallywell's Melampromvea (1682), p. 51. Englished from L. theurgia, Latinised form of Gk. θεουργία, divine work, magic.—Gk. θεο-, for θεός, a god; and εργ-ov, work, cognate with E. work. See Theism and Work. Der. theurgi-c, theurgi-cal.

THEWS, pl. sb., sinews, strength, habits, manners. (E.) 'Thews and limbs;' Jul. Cæs. i. 3. 81; cf. Haml. i. 3. 12. ME. þewes, i. e. habits, manners, Chaucer, C. T. 9416 (E 1542). 'Alle gode þeawes,' all good virtues; Ancræn Riwele, p. 240, l. 16. The sing. þeawe (dat. case) occurs in Layamon, l. 6361, with the sense of sinew or strength; on which Sir F. Madden remarks: 'This is the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities. Cf. Scotch thowles, feeble.' In other passages it occurs in the pl. þeawes, þewes, ll. 2147, 6899, 7161, with the usual sense of mental qualities. Of course, as in all metaphorical expressions, the sense of 'bodily strength' is the orig. one, and that of 'mental excellence' is secondary. AS. þeaw, habit, custom, behaviour; the pl. þeawas signifies manners; Grein, ii. 584.—OSax. thau, custom, habit.—OHG. dau, discipline. β. The Teut. base is thau-, allied to Skt. tavas, strong; tu, to be strong. The sense of bulk, strength, survives in Scotch thowless, thewless, thieveless, for which Jamieson gives a wrong etymology (from AS. þeow, a servant). The remarks in Trench, Select Glossary, are due to a misapprehension of the facts. From the Idg. √TEU, to be strong; see Thigh, Tumid.

THEY, used as pl. of he, she, it. (Scand.) The word they (in ME.) is chiefly found in the Northern dialect; Barbour uses nom. thai, gen. thair, dat. and acc. thaim or tham, where Chaucer uses nom. they, C. T. 18, gen. here, hire, hir, id. 588 (A 586), dat. and acc. hem, id. 18. The Ormulum has þeȝȝ, they, þeȝȝre, their, of them, þeȝȝm, dat. and acc., them. Of these forms, hem survives only in the mod. prov. E. 'em, as in 'I saw 'em go;' whilst the gen. here is lost. Again, here and hem (AS. hira or heora, heom or him) are the true forms, properly used as the pl. of he, from the same base; whilst they, their, them are really cases of the pl. of the def. article. β. The use is Scand., not E.; the AS. usage confines these forms to the def. article, but Icelandic usage allows them to be used for the personal pronoun.—Icel. þeir, nom.; þeirra, gen.; þeim, dat.; used to mean they, their, them, as the pl. of hann, hon, he, she. The extension of the use of dat. them to its use as an accusative is precisely parallel to that of him, properly a dat. form only. The Icel. acc. is þá, but Danish and Swedish confuse dat. and acc. together. Cf. Dan. and Swed. de, they; dem (dat. and acc.), them. Also Dan. deres, their, theirs; Swed. deras, their, theirs.—AS. þā, nom.; þāra, þēra, gen.; þām, þēam, dat.; Grein, ii. 568. [The AS. acc. was þā, like the nom.; cf. prov. E. 'I saw they horses,' i. e. those horses.] These forms þā, þāra, þām, are cases of the plural of the def. art.; from Teut. THA = Idg. TO, pronom. base of the 3rd person. See That. ¶ This explains they, their, them; their was orig. only the gen. pl., just like our, your. Their-s occurs as þeȝȝress, in the Ormulum, 2506, and may be compared with Dan. deres, Swed. deras, theirs.

THICK, dense, compact, closely set. (E.) ME. þikke, Chaucer, C. T. 1058 (A 1056). AS. þicce, thick, Grein, ii. 590.—OSax. thikki; Du. dik; Icel. þykkir; Dan. tyk; Swed. tjok, tjock; G. dick, OHG. dicchi. β. The Teut. type is **thikwuz* (Kluge). Further allied to Gael. and Irish tiugh, thick, fat, dense, W. tew, thick, plump; from Celtic type **tegus*. Further connexions doubtful. Der. thick-ly, thick-ness, AS. þicnes, Mark, iv. 5; thick-ish, thick-en, Macb. iii. 2. 50, properly intransitive, like Goth. verbs in -nan, formed by analogy with other verbs in -en, or borrowed from Icel. þykkna, to become thick (cf. AS. þiccian, to make thick, Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 220); thick-et, L. L. L. iv. 2. 60, AS. þiccet, of which the pl. þiccetū occurs in Ps. xxviii. (xxix.) 8 to translate L. condensa; thick-head-ed; thick-skin, sb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 13.

THIEF, one who steals. (E.) Pl. thieves. ME. þeef, Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 55; pl. þeues, id. Mark, xv. 27. AS. þeof, pl. þeofas, Grein, ii. 588.—Du. dief; Icel. þjōfr; Dan. tyv; Swed. tjuf; G. dieb, OHG. diub; Goth. thiubs. β. All from Teut. type **theufoz*; perhaps related to Lithuan. tupėti, to squat or crouch down (i. e. to hide oneself); see Kluge. Der. theft, q. v.; thieve, AS. ge-þeofian, Laws of Ine, § 48, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 133; thiev-ish, Romeo, iv. 1. 79; thiev-er-y, Timon, iv. 3. 438, a coined word (with F. suffix -erie).

THIGH, the thick upper part of the leg. (E.) ME. þih, Layamon, 26071; þeiȝ, Trevisa, iv. 185; but the guttural is often dropped, and a common form is þi or þy, Prompt. Parv., or þe, Havelok, 1950. AS. þēoh, or þēo, Grein, ii. 588.—Du. dij; Icel. þjō, thigh, rump; OHG. deoh, dioh. β. The Teut. type is **theuhom*, n. The orig. sense is 'the fat, thick, plump part'; cf. Icel. þjō, the rump. Closely allied to Lithuan. taukas, fat of animals, tūkti, to become fat, tūkinti, to fatten; Russ. tuk', fat of animals, tuchnit'(e), to fatten. From an Idg. base TEUK, extension of √TEU, to increase, be strong, swell; see Thews, Thumb, Tumid.

THILL, the shaft of a cart. (E.) 'Thill, the beam or draught-tree of a cart or waggon, upon which the yoke hangs; Thiller or Thill-horse, the horse that is put under the thill;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Hence fill-horse, for thill-horse, Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 100; fill for thill, Troil. iii. 2. 48. ME. þille. 'Thylle, of a carte, Temo; Thylle-horse, Veredus;' Prompt. Parv. AS. þille, glossed by tabulamen, Voc. 282. 2, where the sense seems to be 'board' or 'trencher'; þille meant a thin slip of wood, whether used for a thill or for a wooden platter. We also find: 'Tabulatorium, wāh-þyling,' id. 147. 31; also: 'Area, bredda þiling, vel flōr on tō þerscenne,' i. e. a thilling of boards, or floor to thrash on, id. 14.—Icel. þilja, a plank, planking, esp. in a ship, a bench for rowers, deck; Swed. tilja, a plank, floor; MHG. dille, OHG. dilla, thili, G. diele, a board, plank; Du. deel, a plank. Teut. types **theljon-*, f., **thelom*, n. Allied to OIrish talam, earth, L. tellus, earth, Lith. tille, a little plank in the bottom of a boat, Skt. tala-m, bottom, floor, surface. See Deal (2). Der. thill-horse, as above.

THIMBLE, a metal cover for the finger, used in sewing. (E.) Though now worn on the finger, similar protections were once worn on the thumb, and the name was given accordingly. ME. þimbil. 'Thymbyl, Theca;' Prompt. Parv. Formed (with excrement b, as in thumb itself) from AS. þymel, a thumb-stall; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 150, l. 6. Teut. type **thūmilo-*. Formed with suffix -(i)lo-, indicative of the agent, or in this case of the protector, from AS. þūma, a thumb; see Thumb. Thimble=thumb-er; formed by vowel-change.

THIN, extended, slender, lean, fine. (E.) ME. þinne, Chaucer, C. T. 9556 (E 1682); þunne, Ancræn Riwele, p. 144, l. 13. AS. þynne, Grein, ii. 613.—Du. dun; Icel. þunnr; Dan. tynd (for **tynn*); Swed. tunn; G. dünn; OHG. dunni.—W. teneu; Gael. and Irish tana; Russ. tonkii; L. tenuis; Gk. ravaós, slim; Skt. tanu, thin; Pers. tanak, slender (Horn, § 397). β. All from the sense 'outstretched,' as in Gk. ravaós. From √TEN, to stretch; cf. Skt. tan, to stretch, Goth. uf-thanjan, AS. āþenian, to stretch out, L. tend-ere. Der. thin-ly, thin-ness; thinn-ish; thin, verb. From same root are ten-uity, at-ten-uate, ex-ten-uate; tena-ble, q. v.; tend (1), q. v.

THINE, THY, poss. pron. belonging to 'thee.' (E.) ME. thin, with long i, and without final e; gen. thines, dat. thine, nom. and acc. pl. thine; by loss of n, we also have ME. thi=mod. E. thy. The n was commonly retained before a vowel; 'This was thin ooth, and min also certeyn;' Chaucer, C. T. 1141 (A 1139). 'To me, that am thy cosin and thy brother,' id. 1133 (A 1131). AS. ðin, poss. pron., declined like an adjective; derived from ðin, gen. case of ðū, thou; see Thou.—Icel. þinn, þin, þitt, poss. pron.; from þin, gen. of þū; Dan. and Swed. din, poss. pron.; G. dein, from deiner, gen. of du; Goth. theins, from theina, gen. of thu. Der. thy-self (= thine self), lit. 'self of thee.'

THING, an inanimate object. (E.) ME. þing, Chaucer, C. T. 13865 (B 2127). AS. þing, a thing; also, a cause, sake, office, reason, council; also written þincg, þinc, Grein, ii. 592.—Du. ding; Icel. þing, a thing; also, an assembly, meeting, council; Dan. and Swed. ting, a thing; also, an assize; G. ding, OHG. dinc. Teut. type **thingom*, n. Prob. allied to Goth. theihs, season, time (hence, time for meeting). And further, to AS. þeon, pt. t. þāh, to prosper, succeed, thrive. See Thee (2). Der. any-thing, ME. any þing; no-thing, ME. no thing; also hus-tings, q. v.

THINK, to exercise the mind, judge, consider, suppose, purpose, opine. (E.) ME. þenken, to think, suppose, also þenchen, as in Chaucer, C. T. 3253. Orig. distinct from the impers. verb. þinken, explained under Methinks; but confusion between the two was easy and common. Thus, in P. Plowman, A. vi. 90, we have I þenke, written I þinke in the parallel passage, B. v. 609. [The pt. t. of both verbs often appears as boughte, pp. bought. Strictly, the pt. t. of think should have become thought, and of me-thinks should have become me-thught, but the spellings ogh and ugh are confused in modern E. under the form ough.] AS. þencan, þencean, to think, pt. t. þōhte; Grein, ii. 579. A weak verb, allied to þanc, sb., (1) a thought, (2) a thank; see Thank. +Icel. þekkja, old pt. t. þátti, to perceive, know; Dan. tænke; Swed. tänka; G. denken, pt. t. dachte. +Goth. þagkjan (=thankjan), pt. t. þāhta. Teut. type **thankjan*; from **thank*, 2nd grade of the root **thenk*, Idg. **teng*; whence also OL. tongere, to think (from the 2nd grade **tong*). See Thank. Der. thought, sb., q. v. Also be-think, vb. Allied to thank.

THIRD, the ordinal of the number three. (E.) For thrid. ME. þridde, Chaucer, C. T. 12770 (C 836); spelt þirde, Seven Sages, ed. Wright, l. 49. AS. þridda, third; Grein, ii. 499. — AS. þrēo, þrī, three; see Three. +Du. derde; Icel. þrīði; Dan. trede; Swed. trede; G. dritte; Goth. thridja. +W. tryde, trydydd; Gael. and Irish treas; Russ. tretii; Lithuan. trėczias; L. tertius; Gk. τρίτος; Skt. trītiya. Der. third-ly; and see riding.

THIRL, to pierce. (E.) See Thrill.

THIRST, dryness, eager desire for drink, eager desire. (E.) ME. þurst, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 366; various readings þruste, þrist, þrest. AS. þurst, Grein, ii. 611; also þyrst, þirst, id. 613; whence þyrstan, verb, id. 614. +Du. dorst, whence dorsten, verb; Icel. þorsti, whence þyrsta, vb.; Dan. tørst, whence dørste, vb.; Swed. törst, whence törsta, vb.; G. durst, whence dürsten; Goth. þaurstei, sb. β. The Goth. thaurstei (=thorstei) is from the Goth. weak stem thaur-, as seen in *-thaur-*ans, pp. of (ga)thairsan (pt. t. thars), to be dry (with Goth. ai for Teut. e); the suffix -tei = -ti. The Teut. **thers-an-*, vb., is cognate with Gk. τέρε-εσθαι, to become dry, τερε-αίειν, to dry up, wipe up, L. torrere (for **torsere*), to parch, terra (for **tersa*), dry ground; cf. Skt. tyśh, to thirst; tarsha-, thirst. (✓TERS). Allied to Terrace and Torrid. Der. thirst, vb., as above; thirst-y, AS. þurstig, Grein, ii. 611; thirst-i-ly, thirst-i-ness. And (from the same root) terr-ace, torr-id, test, toast, tur-een.

THIRTEEN, three and ten. (E.) ME. þrettene, P. Plowman, B. v. 214. AS. þrēotēne, þrēotýne, Grein, ii. 599. — AS. þrēo, three; and tēn, týn, ten; with pl. suffix -e. See Three and Ten. +Du. dertien; Icel. þrettän; Dan. tretten; Swed. tretton; G. dreizehn. All similar compounds. Der. thirteen-th, AS. þrēotēoða (Grein), Icel. þrettändi; but the n, dropped in AS., has been restored.

THIRTY, three times ten. (E.) ME. þritti, Wyclif, Luke, iii. 23; þretty, þirty, Prompt. Parv., p. 492. AS. þritig, þrittig, Grein, ii. 601; the change of long i to short i caused the doubling of the t. — AS. þrī, variant of þrēo, three; and -tig, suffix denoting 'ten'; see further under Three and Ten. +Du. dertig; Icel. þrjátíu; Dan. trediv; Swed. trettio; G. dreiszig. All similar compounds. Der. thirti-eth, AS. þritigoða.

THIS, demonstr. pron. denoting a thing near at hand. (E.) 1. SINGULAR FORM. ME. this, Chaucer, C. T. 1576 (A 1574); older form thes, Ancrén Riwle, p. 170, l. 12. AS. ðes, masc.; ðeos, fem.; ðis, neuter; see Grein, ii. 581. +Du. deze; Icel. þessi, masc. and fem.; þetta, neuter; G. dieser; MHG. diser; OHG. deser. β. This is most likely an emphatic form, due to suffixing an emphatic particle to the pronominal base THA. 2. PLURAL FORMS. The mod. E. pl. form is these; those being only used as the plural of that. This distinction is unoriginal; both these and those are varying forms of the plural of this, as will at once appear by observing the numerous examples supplied by Stratmann. β. The ME. word for 'those' was tho or thoo, due to AS. ðā, nom. pl. of the def. article; in accordance with this idiom, we still have the common prov. E. 'they horses' = those horses; it will be easily seen that the restriction of the form those (with o) to its modern use was due to the influence of this older word tho. For examples of tho = those, see Wyclif, Matt. iii. 1, xiii. 17. γ. It remains to give examples of the ME. pl. forms of this. Layamon has þas, þæs, þes, þeos, þus, ll. 476, 1038, 2219, 3816; alle þos = all these, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 10, l. 17; þos word = these words, Owl and Nightingale, 139; þese wordes = these words, P. Plowman, B. prol. 184; þuse wordes = these words, id. C. i. 198. Cf. AS. ðās, ðēs, these, pl. of ðes, this, Grein, ii. 581. Of these forms, ðās became those, while ðēs assisted in forming these; we also find ME. this-e, i. e. this, with the pl. suffix -e.

THISTLE, a prickly plant. (E.) ME. þistil, spelt thystille in Prompt. Parv.; where we also find sowthystille = sow-thistle. AS. þistel; 'Cardu[u]s, þistel', Voc. II. 13. +Du. distel; Icel. þistill; Dan. tidsl; Swed. tistel; G. distel; OHG. distil, distula. β. The i was once long, as in some E. and G. dialects; cf. Somerset. daash-l, a thistle, EFries. dissel. Teut. types **þistilo-*, m.; **þistilā*, f. Perhaps allied to Goth. at-thinsan, to pull towards one; from its catching the clothes of the passer-by. Cf. Tonsil. Der. thistl-y.

THITHER, to that place. (E.) ME. thider (cf. ME. fader, moder for mod. E. father, mother); Chaucer, C. T. 1265 (A 1263). AS. ðider, ðyder, thither; Grein, ii. 590. Cf. Icel. þaðra, there; Goth. thathrō, thence. Skt. tatra, there, thither. Formed from Teut. THA = Idg. TO, demonstr. pronom. base, for which see That;

with a suffix like L. -tro in ul-tro. Compare Hither and Whither. Der. thither-ward, AS. þiderweard, Grein, ii. 591.

THOLE (1), THOWL, a pin or peg in the side of a boat to keep the oars in place. (E.) Commonly called a thole-pin, though the addition of pin is needless. ME. thol, tol. 'Tholle, carte-pynne, or tol-pyn, Cavilla'; Prompt. Parv. 'Tholle, a cartpynne'; Palsgrave. AS. þol; 'Scalmus, thol', Corpus gloss., 1820 (8th cent.) + Du. dol, 'a thowl'; Sewel; Icel. þollr, a fir-tree, a young fir, also a tree in general, as ask-þollr, ash-tree, alm-þollr, elm-tree; also a wooden peg, the thole of a row-boat. Cf. Icel. þöll (gen. þallar), a young fir-tree; Dan. tol, a stopple, stopper, thole, pin; Swed. tall, a pine-tree; Swed. dial. idll, the same (Rietz); Swed. tull, a thole. And cf. Norweg. tall, toll, a fir-tree, esp. a young fir-tree; toll, a thole (Aasen). β. Teut. base **thul-*, weak grade allied to **þal-*, as in þal-lar, gen. of Icel. þöll (above); and perhaps to **thel-*; see Thill. Der. thole-pin.

THOLE (2), to endure, suffer. (E.) In Levins. Obsolete in books, but a good word; it still occurs in prov. E. 'He that has a good crop may thole some thistles'; North-Country Proverb, in Brockett. ME. þolien, þolen, Chaucer, C. T. 7128 (D 1546). AS. þolian, to suffer, endure, tolerate; Grein, ii. 594. +Icel. þola, the same; Dan. taale; Swed. tåla; MHG. dolen, doln; OHG. dolēn, whence MHG. duld, G. geduld, patience; Goth. thulan. β. All from a Teut. base **þul-*, weak grade of Idg. ✓TEL, to bear; allied to Skt. tul, to lift, Gk. τλῆναι, to suffer; L. tollere, tolerare; see further under Tolerate.

THONG, a strip or strap of leather. (E.) Spelt thwangu in Levins. For thwong; the w is now lost. ME. þwong, Wyclif, John, i. 27; we also find þuong, þong, Rob. of Glouc. p. 116, l. 2497. AS. þwang, in sceð-þwang = shoe-thong, John, i. 27. The change from a to o before n is common, as song < AS. sang; strong < AS. strang. +Icel. þvengr, a thong, latchet; esp. of a shoe. From **thwang*, 2nd grade of Teut. **thwengan-*, to constrain. The verb from which it is derived will be found under Twinge, q. v.

THORAX, the chest of the body. (L. — Gk.) A medical term. In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount gives the adj. thorachique. — L. thōrax (gen. thōrācis), the breast, chest, a breast-plate. — Gk. θώραξ (gen. θώρακος), a breast-plate; also, the part of the body covered by the breast-plate. β. The orig. sense is 'protector' or 'defender'; the Gk. θωρακ- answers to Skt. dhāraka-, a trunk or box for keeping clothes, lit. a protector or preserver; ✓DHER, to bear, hold; see Firm. Der. thoraci-c, from the decl. stem thōrāci-.

THORN, a spine, sharp woody spine on the stem of a plant; a spiny plant. (E.) ME. þorn, Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 29. AS. þorn, Matt. xxvii. 29. +Du. doorn; Icel. þorn; Dan. tjørn; Swed. törne; G. dorn; Goth. thaurnus. And cf. Russ. těrn', the black-thorn, těrnje, thorns; Polish tarn, a thorn. Also Skt. tyrna-, a grass-blade. Teut. type **thurnuz*, m.; from the base THER = Idg. ✓TER, to bore, pierce, so that the sense is 'piercer'. See further under Trite. Der. thorn-y, cf. AS. þorniht, thorny, Voc. 139. 18; thorn-less. Also thorn-back, the name of a fish which has spines on its back, ME. þornebake, Havelok, 759.

THOROUGH, going through and through, complete, entire. (E.) It is merely a later form of the prep. through, which was spelt þoru as early as in Havelok, 631, and þuruh in the Ancrén Riwle, p. 92, l. 17. Shak. has thorough as a prep., Merry Wives, iv. 5. 32, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 3 (where the folios and 2nd quarto have through); also as an adv., 'it pierced me thorough', Pericles, iv. 3. 35; and even as an adj., L. L. L. ii. 235. The use of it as an adj. probably arose from the use of thoroughly or thoroughly as an adv. in place of the adverbial use of through or thorough. Cf. 'the feast was thoroughly ended'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 18. We find thorough as a sb., in the sense of 'passage', J. Bradford's Works, i. 303 (Parker Society). The old sense of through is still preserved in thorough-fare, i. e. through fare. See Through. Der. thorough-ly, thorough-ness; thorough-bred, thorough-going, thorough-paced. Also thorough-bass, which prob. means through-bass, the bass being marked throughout by figures placed below the notes; and thorough-fare, i. e. through-fare, Cymb. i. 2. 11, Milton, P. L. x. 393.

THORP, THORPE, a village. (E.) Best spelt thorp. In Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xii. st. 32. ME. þorp, Chaucer, C. T. 8075 (E 199). AS. þorp, as a place-name, A. S. Chron. an. 963. It means a village. +Du. dorp, a village; Icel. þorp; Dan. torp, a hamlet; Swed. torp, a little farm, cottage; G. dorf; Goth. þaurp, a field, Nehem. v. 16. β. The Teut. type is **thurpo-*. Allied to Lithuan. troba, a building, house. Also to Irish treabh, 'a farmed village [meaning, I suppose, a village round a farm], a tribe, family, clan'; Gael. treabhair, s. pl. (used collectively), houses; W. tref, a home-stead, hamlet, town; Idg. type **trebo-*. Brugmann, i. § 553.

THOSE, now used as the pl. of that, but etymologically one of the forms of the pl. of this. (E.) See This.

THOU, the second pers. pronoun. (E.) ME. thou. AS. þū. Icel. þú; Goth. þu; Dan., Swed., and G. du; (lost in Dutch); Irish and Gael. tu; W. ti; Russ. tui; L. tu; Gk. σύ, σύ; Pers. tū; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 152; Skt. tvam (nom. case). Brugmann, ii. § 440. Der. thine, q. v., often shortened to thy.

THOUGH, on that condition, even if, notwithstanding. (Scand.) It would be better to spell it thogh, in closer accordance with the pronunciation; but it seems to have become a fashion in E. always to write ough for ogh, and not to suffer ogh to appear. ME. thogh, Chaucer, C. T. 727 (A 729); the Ellesmere MS. has thogh, the Camb. MS. has thow, and the Petworth MS. has þoo; the rest, though, thoughe. [Older spellings, given by Stratmann, are þah, þaih, þeah, þæh, þez, þaz, þauh, þau, þei, þeiz, þeizh, where some of the forms, as þæh, þez, þei, þeizh are from AS. ðeah, ðēh, Grein, ii. 582.] The later ME. thogh answers to Icel. þō. +Du. doch, yet, but; Dan. dog; Swed. dock; G. doch, OHG. doh; Goth. thauh. β. All from the Teut. type **thau-h*, in which -h is an enclitic, answering to L. -que, Idg. **que*. **Thau-* is probably related to the Skt. tu, 'but.' In the D. and G. dock, the short o is due to loss of emphasis. Der. al-though, q. v.

THOUGHT, the act or result of thinking, an idea, opinion, notion. (E.) Better spelt thoght; the introduction of u is due to the prevalence of forms with ough. ME. þoght, þouȝt; the pl. þouȝtis is in Wyclif, 1 Cor. iii. 20. AS. þōht, also geþōht, as in Luke, ii. 35. Lit. 'a thing thought of, or thought upon'; cf. AS. geþōht or þōht, pp. of þencan, to think; Grein, ii. 579. See Think. +Icel. þōtti, þōttr, thought; allied to þekkja, to know, pt. t. þátti, the pp. not being used; G. ge-dacht, cf. gedacht, pp. of denken, to think; Goth. thūhtus, thought, allied to thugkjan, to seem, and thagkjan, to think; where thugk- (= thunk-) is the weak grade of thagk- (= thank-). Der. thought-ful, ME. þohtful, Ormulum, 3423; thought-ful-ly, thought-ful-ness; thought-less, -less-ly, -less-ness.

THOUSAND, ten hundred. (E.) ME. þousand, Chaucer, C. T. 1956 (A 1954). AS. þūsend, Grein, ii. 611. +Du. duizend; Icel. þúsund; also þúshund, þúshundrað; Dan. tusind; Swed. tusen (for tusend); G. tausend; Goth. thūsundi. We also find Lithuan. tūkstantis, a thousand; Russ. tuisiacha, a thousand. β. The word is not yet explained; in Icel. þús-hund, the syllable hund = AS. hund, a hundred, and is due to popular etymology; which may, however, prove to be correct. See the long discussion of Goth. thūsundi in Schade, OHG. Dictionary. It is suggested that the sense was 'great hundred'; the prefix þūs- being allied to Skt. tavas, strong; Streitberg, § 129 (5). Cf. also OPruss. tūsimtons, a thousand. Der. thousand-th, a late word, formed by analogy with four-th, &c.; thousand-fold, ME. þusendfald, St. Katherine, 2323.

THOWL, the same as Thole (1), q. v.

THRALL, a slave. (Scand.) ME. þral, Chaucer, C. T. 12123 (C 189). ONorthumb. ðræl, Mark, x. 44; not an AS. word, but borrowed from Norse. — Icel. þrall, a thrall, serf, slave; Dan. tral; Swed. träl. Teut. type **thrāhilo-*, m. (base **thrāh-*); and allied to OHG. drigil, drēgil, a slave, a thrall; lit. 'a runner,' i.e. one who runs on messages. Formed from the Teut. base THREG, to run, whence also Goth. thragjan, AS. þrægan, to run. Cf. AS. þrag, þrah, a running, course. Further connexions uncertain; perhaps allied to L. trahere, to draw, or to Celto-L. vertraga, a greyhound; see Feuterer. The Gk. τρέχ-ειν, to run, is of uncertain origin. Der. thral-dom, ME. þraldom, Layamon, 29156; from Icel. þrældömr, thraldom; the Icel. suffix -dömr being the same as the AS. suffix -dōm.

THRASH, THRESH, to beat out grain from the straw. (E.) The spelling with e is the older. ME. þreschen, þreschen, Chaucer, C. T. 538 (A 536). For þerschen, by metathesis of r. AS. þerscan, þirscan, Grein, ii. 581. A strong verb, pt. t. þærse, pp. þorscen. The ME. pp. þroschen occurs in the Ormulum, l. 1530; and idrosschen in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 186, l. 18. +MDu. derschen (Hexham); Du. dorschen; Icel. þreskja; Dan. tærse; Swed. tröska; G. dreschen; Goth. thriskan, pt. t. thrask, pp. thruskans. β. All from Teut. type **threskan-*, pt. t. **thrask*, pp. **thruskanoz*; to beat noisily. Allied to Lithuan. tarszkėti, to rattle, clap; traszkėti, to rattle, make a cracking noise; Russ. treskat(e), to burst, crack, crackle, tresk', a crash. From an Idg. base **tresk-*, to crack, burst, crackle; then to strike, thrash. Fick cites OSlavonic troska, Lat. 'fulmen,' which suggests the rattling of thunder; whence, perhaps, the noise of the flail. Der. thrash-er or thresh-er, ME. þreschare, Prompt. Parv.; thrash-ing or thresh-ing; thrashing-floor or thresh-ing-floor, Ruth, iii. 2. Also thresh-old, q. v.

THRASONICAL, vain-glorious. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. v. 1. 14; As You Like It, v. 2. 34. A coined word, as if with suffix -al (L. -ālis) from a L. adj. **Thrasōnicus*; but the adj. really in use was Thrasōniānus, whence MF. Thrasōnien, 'boasting, Thraso-like'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -cus (or -ānus), from Thrasōni-, decl. stem of Thraso, the name of a bragging soldier in Terence's Eunuclus. Evidently coined from Gk. θρασ-ός, bold, spirited. — ✓DHERS, to be bold; cf. Skt. dhārsha-, arrogance, dhṛsh, to be bold; see Dare (1).

THRAVE, a number of sheaves of wheat. (Scand.) See Nares. Generally 12 or 24 sheaves. The pl. threaves = clusters or handfuls of rushes, is in Chapman, Gent. Usher, ii. 1 (Bassiolio). ME. þraue, þreue, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 55. The late AS. pl. þreues occurs in Birch, Cart. Saxon. iii. 367. — Icel. þrefi, a thrave, number of sheaves; Dan. trave, a score of sheaves; Swed. trafve, a pile of wood. Cf. Swed. dial. trave, a thrave; trafve, 24 or 30 sheaves in a shock (F. Möller); NFries. trav.

THREAD, a thin twisted line or cord, filament. (E.) ME. þreed, þred, Chaucer, C. T. 14393 (B 3665). The e was once long; the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. have the spelling threed. AS. þræd, a thread; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxix. § 1 (b. iii. pr. 5). Lit. 'that which is twisted.' — AS. þrāwan, to twist, also to throw; see Throw. +Du. draad, thread; cf. draaijen, to twist, turn; Icel. þræðr; Dan. traad; Swed. tråd; G. draht, drath, wire, thread; OHG. drāt, wire. Teut. type **þrā-duz*; cf. Gk. τρή-σις, a boring through, a hole. Der. thread, verb, Rich. II, v. 5. 17; thread-y, i.e. thread-like. Also thread-bare, so bare that the component threads of the garment can be traced, ME. þredbar (þreedbare in the Hengwrt MS.), Chaucer, C. T. 262 (A 260). Doublet, thrid.

THREAT, a menace. (E.) ME. þret; the dat. þrete occurs in The Owl and Nightingale, l. 58; hence the verb þreten, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 754; also the verb þretenen, Wyclif, Mark, i. 25. [The latter is mod. E. threaten.] AS. þrēat, (1) a crowd, crush, or throng of people, which is the usual meaning, Grein, ii. 598; also (2) a great pressure, calamity, trouble, and hence, a threat, rebuke, Grein, ii. 598, l. 1. The orig. sense was a push as of a crowd, hence pressure put upon any one. Cf. AS. þrēat, pt. t. of the strong verb þrēotan, appearing only in the impersonal comp. āþrēotan, to afflict, vex, lit. to press extremely, urge. +Icel. þrjōta, pt. t. þraut, pp. þrotinn, to fail, lack, come short; used impersonally. (The orig. sense was perhaps to urge, trouble, whence the sb. þraut, a hard task, struggle); Goth. thriutan, only in the comp. usthriutan, to use despitely, trouble, vex greatly; OHG. driozan, in the comp. ardriozan, MHG. erdriezen, impers. verb, to tire, vex; also appearing in G. verdriessen (pt. t. verdross), to vex, trouble. β. Hence AS. þrēat, a crush, Teut. type **thrautoz*, m., is from Teut. **thraut*, 2nd grade of **threutan*, to crowd. Allied to L. trudere, to push, shove, crowd, urge, press upon (cf. trudis, a pole to push with); also to Russ. trudit(e), to make a man work, to trouble, disturb, vex. (✓TREUD, to push, urge.) Der. threat, verb, K. John, iii. 1. 347, ME. þreten (as above), AS. þrēatian (weak verb), Grein, ii. 598; also threat-en, ME. þretenen (as above), AS. þrēatnian; threat-en-ing, threat-en-ing-ly. From the same base, abs-truse, de-trude, ex-trude, in-trude, ob-trude, pro-trude. Cf. thrust.

THREE, two and one. (E.) ME. þre, Wyclif, Matt. xviii. 20. AS. þrēo, Matt. xviii. 20; other forms þrio, þri, þrȳ, Grein, ii. 599. +Du. drie; Icel. þrír (fem. þrjar, neut. þriu); Dan. tre; Swed. tre; Goth. threis; G. drei. +Irish, Gael., and W. tri; Russ. tri; L. trēs, neut. tria; Gk. τρεῖς, neut. τρία; Lithuan. trys (stem tri-); Skt. masc. nom. pl. trayas. Idg. masc. nom. pl. **treyes*. Brugmann, ii. § 167. Der. three-fold, AS. þrīfeald, þrīfeald, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiii. § 4 (b. iii. met. 9); three-score, Much Ado, i. 1. 201; also thri-ce, q. v.; and see thir-d, thir-teen, thir-ty. From the same source are tri-ad, tri-angle, tri-nity, tri-pos, &c. See Tri-. Also terce, terc-el, ter-t-ian, ter-t-i-ar-y.

THRENODY, a lament, song of lamentation. (Gk.) Shak. even ventures upon threne, Phoenix, l. 49. Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has both threne and threnody. Englished from Gk. θρηνῳδία, a lamenting. — Gk. θρῆν-ος, a wailing, lamenting, sound of wailing, funeral dirge (cf. θρή-ομαι, I cry aloud); and θῆν, an ode, from ἀείδειν, to sing. See Drone (1) and Ode.

THRESH, the same as Thrash, q. v.

THRESHOLD, a piece of wood or stone under the door or at the entrance of a house. (E.) The word is to be divided thresh-old, where -old was (by popular etymology) supposed to stand for wold (wood). (Shak. has old = wold, K. Lear, iii. 4. 125.) ME. þreshwold, þreswold, Chaucer, C. T. 3482; þresshewold, P. Plowman, B. v. 357; þriswold, Voc. 667. 14. AS. þerscōld, Deut. vi. 9 (where the w does not appear; later form þerscwald, as in 'Limen, þerscwald'; Voc. 280. 15. Supposed to mean 'the piece of wood which is beaten' by the feet of those who enter the house, the thrash-wood. — AS. þersc-an, to thresh, thrash; and wald, weald, a wood, hence a piece of wood. β. But this was a popular etymology; King Alfred has þerscōld simply; tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 77, l. 22. This form represents Teut. **þresko-ðlo-* (Sievers); cf. OHG. drisc-ū-flī, a threshold. Here **þresko-* is from Teut. **þreskan-*, to thrash; but -ðlo- represents the Idg. suffix -tro-. See my Principles of Eng. Etymology, i. § 228 (h). The Icel. þreskjöldr, a threshold, is spelt in various ways; cf. Swed. tröskel.

THRICE, three times. (E.) The final -ce is for s; it is a mere device for showing that the final sound is voiceless, i. e. sounded as s and not as z. So also the pl. of mous(e) is written mice; &c. Thrice stands for thris, contracted form of ME. þries or þryēs, a word which was formerly dissyllabic: 'And þryēs with hir sperēs clateringe,' Chaucer, C. T. 2956 (A 2954). β. Again, þrie-s was formed (with adverbial suffix -s, orig. the suffix of the gen. case) from an older form þriē, also dissyllabic; the words on-ce, twi-ce originating in a similar manner. The form þrie is in Layamon, 17432, earlier text; and þries in the same, 26066, later text. = AS. þriwa, thrice, Exod. xxiii. 14; Grein, ii. 601. = AS. þri, three. See THREE.

THRID, a thread. (E.) In Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 278. The same as Thread, q. v. Der. thrid, verb, Dryden, Palamon and Arcite, l. 495.

THRIFT, frugality. (Scand.) ME. þrift, Chaucer, C. T. 16893. = Icel. þrift, thrift, where the t is added to the stem; we also find þrif, thriving condition, prosperity. = Icel. þrif-, weak grade, as seen in þrif-inn, pp. of þrifa, only used in the reflex. þrifask, to thrive; see THRIVE. Cf. Dan. triv-else, prosperity, with a different suffix. The suffix -t is from the Idg. suffix -to-. Cf. thrift.

THRILL, THIRL, to pierce. (E.) Spenser uses thrill in the unmetaphorical sense, to pierce with an arrow; F. Q. iii. 5. 20, iv. 7. 31; hence the metaphorical use, as in F. Q. iv. i. 49. Thirl is an older spelling of the same word. 'Thyrlin, thryllin, or peercyn, Penetro, terebro, perforo,' Prompt. Parv. ME. þirlen, Chaucer, C. T. 2712 (A 2710); þrullen, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 339; þurlen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 392, l. 24. AS. þyrlan, to pierce through, spelt þirlan, Exod. xxi. 6, Levit. xxv. 10. Again, þyrlan is a shorter form for þyrelan; we find the sb. þyrel-ung, a piercing, in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xxi, ed. Sweet, p. 153, last line, and the verb durh-þyrelan, to pierce through (through-thirl), two lines further on. The verb þyrelan is a causal verb, from the sb. þýrel, a hole (caused by boring), Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxiv. § 11 (b. iii. pr. 11). β. Lastly, þýrel is also found as an adj., with the sense of bored or pierced. 'Gif monnes þēoh bið þýrel' (various reading þýrl) = if a man's thigh be pierced; Laws of Ælfred, § 62, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 96. This is equivalent to the cognate MHG. durchel, pierced, an adj. derived from durch, prep., through; similarly, AS. þýrel stands for **þyrhel* (from **þurh-il-*), derived (with the usual vowel-change from u to y) from AS. þurh, through. γ. We thus see that AS. þýrl meant 'going through,' and hence, 'a hole'; whence the verb was formed. See THROUGH. Cf. Irish tar, through. ¶ The Du. drillen is from dril (MDu. drille), a hole; and drille must have been a derivative from the old form of Du. door, through; cf. OSaxon thurh, through. Der. thrill, sb., a late word; thrill-ing, pres. part. as adj. Also nos-tril, q. v. Doublet, drill (from Dutch).

THRIVE, to prosper, flourish, be successful. (Scand.) ME. þriuen (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 3677 (A 3675); Havelok, 280; Ormulum, 10868. A strong verb; pt. t. þraf, Ormulum, 3182, þrof, Rob. of Glouc. p. 11, l. 240; pp. þriuen. = Icel. þrifa, to clutch, grasp, grip, seize; hence þrifask (with suffixed -sk=sik, self), lit. to seize for oneself, to thrive. [It is suggested in the Icel. Dict. that þrifask is not connected with þrifa, but the transition from 'seizing to oneself' to 'thriving' is easy, and, as both are strong verbs, conjugated alike, it is hardly possible to separate them. Cf. Norw. triva, to seize, trivast, to thrive; and Widegren has Swed. trifven, thrifty, active, diligent, coinciding with the Icel. pp. þrifinn, from þrifa; and even Icel. þrifinn also means 'thrifty.'] The pt. t. is þreif, and the pp. þrifinn; hence the sb. þrif, prosperity, and E. thrift-t. + Dan. trives, reflex. verb, to thrive; whence trivelse, prosperity; Swed. trifvas, reflex. verb, to thrive; cf. trifnad, prosperity. Der. thriv-ing-ly; thrift-t., q. v.; thrift-ty, ME. þrifty, Chaucer, C. T. 12905 (B 1165); thrift-i-ly, thrift-i-ness; thrift-less, thrift-less-ly, thrift-less-ness.

THROAT, the forepart of the neck with the gullet and wind-pipe, the gullet. (E.) ME. þrote, Ancrén Riwe, p. 216, l. 4. AS. þrote, throat, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxii, § 1 (bk. iii. pr. 1); also þrotu, þrota; 'Guttur, þrotu,' Voc. 157. 41; 'Guttur, þrota,' id. 306. 13. + OHG. drozza, MHG. drozze, the throat; whence G. drossel, throat, throttle. β. Referred in Ettmüller to AS. þreotan (pp. þroten), to press; a verb treated of s. v. Threat. But it is more likely that an initial s has been lost, and that AS. þrote is allied to Du. strot, the throat, MDu. stroot, strot, 'the throat or the gullet,' Hexham, stroote, 'the wesen [weasand] or the wind-pipe,' id. So also OFries. stroibolla = AS. þrotbolla, the gullet or windpipe; and cf. Ital. strozza, the gullet, a word of Teut. origin. We must therefore refer it to a Teut. base **strut-*; and a connexion with E. strut is possible. The reference may be to the 'prominence' or swelling in the throat below the chin. Cf. Icel. þroti, a swelling; þrútna, to swell. See Throopple. Der. thrott-le, the wind-pipe, dimin. of throat; thrott-le, verb, to press on the windpipe, ME. þrotlen, Destruction of Troy, 12752. Also throopple, q. v.

THROB, to beat forcibly, as the heart. (E.) ME. þrobben, rare. 'With þrobbant herte' = with throbbing heart; P. Plowman, A. xii. 48. The word must be either E. or Scand., as it begins with þ; but it appears neither in AS. nor in the Scand. languages. We must call it E. β. Allied to Russ. trepēt(e), palpitation, throbbing, trembling, fear; trepētat(e), to throb, palpitate with joy; and prob. to trepāt(e), to beat hemp, also to knock softly. Also to L. trepidus; see Trepidation. Der. throb, sb., Spenser, Shep. Kal. May, 208.

THROE, pang, pain, agony. (Scand.) ME. þrowe. 'Throwe, Erumpna;' Prompt. Parv. And see þrowes, pl., pangs, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 181, l. 2. = Icel. þrā, a throe, pang, longing; Norw. traa, longing, traa, to long for; MSwed. trå, longing, trå, to long for, to pine away (Swed. tråna). Cf. OHG. drōa, burden, suffering, druoēn, drōēn, to suffer; AS. þrōwian, to suffer. Base **thraw-*, from Idg. root **trew-*; cf. L. trux, fierce. See Truculent. Cf. also Icel. þreyja, endurance, þreyja, to long for.

THRONE, a royal seat, chair of state. (F. — L. — Gk.) Now conformed to the Gk. spelling. ME. trone, Wyclif, Matt. v. 34. = OF. trone (13th cent.), spelt throne in Cot.; mod. F. trône. = L. thronum, acc. of thronus, Matt. v. 34. = Gk. θρόνος, a seat, chair; lit. a support. — ✓ TDHER, to hold, support; whence also Gk. θπάvos, a bench, Ion. θρήvvs, a stool.

THRONG, a great crowd of people. (E.) ME. þrong, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 135; þrang, Pricke of Conscience, 4704. AS. ge-þrang, a throng, Grein, i. 473; where the common prefix ge- makes no difference. = AS. þrang, 2nd grade of the strong vb. þringan, to crowd, to press (pp. þringen), Mark, v. 24. + Du. drang, a crowd, from dringen, to crowd; Icel. þröng, a throng; G. drang, a throng, from drang, 2nd grade of dringen (pp. drungen), to crowd, press. Cf. Dan. trang, Swed. trång, adj., pressed close, tight, prov. E. throng, adj., busy; Goth. threihan (pp. thraihans), to throng, press round (for **thrinhan*). β. All from the Teut. strong verb **threnchan-*, to throng, from Idg. root **trenk-*; whence Lithuan. trenkti, to jolt, to push, tranksmas, a tumult; and even L. truncus, maimed, mutilated. Brugmann, i. § 144 (1). Der. throng, verb, ME. þrongen, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3755.

THROPPLE, THRAPPLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt thrapple by Johnson, who gives it as a Lowland Sc. word; better throopple, see Halliwell and Jamieson. Halliwell gives also throopple, to throttle; a derived sense. Throopple is usually said to be a corruption of AS. þrotbolla, the wind-pipe, also the gullet; which requires rather violent treatment to reduce it to the required form. The AS. þrotbolla survived for a long time; Palsgrave gives: 'Throtegole or throtebole, neu de la gorge, gosier.' The usual sense of AS. bolla is 'bowl'; see Throat and Bowl (2), Bole.

THROSTLE, the song-thrush. (E.) ME. þrustel, Chaucer, C. T. 13703 (B 1963). 'Mavis' is glossed by 'a throstel-kok' in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Voc. i. 164, l. 1. AS. þrostle; 'Merula, þrostle,' Voc. 286. 20; spelt þrosle (by loss of t), id. 132. 25. + MHG. trostel. Teut. type **thrusilā*, fem.; Idg. type **tarzd-lā*, f. Allied to L. turdus, a thrush; also to Icel. þröstr (gen. þrastar), Swed. and Norw. trast, a thrush (from **prast*, 2nd grade of a Teut. root **prest*); cf. OPruss. tresde, a thrush. Also, with initial s, Lith. strazdas, m., strazda, f., a thrush. See further under Thrush (1). Throstle has a variant throskel, ME. thruskil, Prompt. Parv. Brugmann, i. §§ 818 (2), 882.

THROTTLE, the wind-pipe. (E.) See Throat.

THROUGH, from beginning to end, from one side to the other, from end to end. (E.) For the form thorough, see Thorough. ME. þurn, þuruh, Ancrén Riwe, p. 92, ll. 12, 17. Other forms are þurȝ, þurw, þurch, þurgh, þoru, þoruh, þoru, &c.; see Stratmann. Also pruh, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 102, by metathesis of r; and hence mod. E. through. AS. þurh, prep. and adv., through, Grein, ii. 607, 610; ONorthumb. þerh, Matt. xxvii. 18 (Lindisfarne MS.). + Du. door; G. durch, OHG. durh, duruh. Teut. type **þurh*. Allied to Goth. thairh (for **þerh*), through. β. The Goth. thairkō, a hole, is prob. connected with thairh; and the AS. þýrel, a hole, is a derivative from þurh, through; as shown under Thrill. The fundamental notion is that of boring or piercing; and we may refer through to the ✓ TER, to bore, as in L. terere, to bore, Gk. τερεῖν (for **tép-yew*). See Trite. Cf. through with Irish tar, beyond, over, through, tri, through, tair, beyond; L. tr-ans, across; Skt. tiras, through, over. Brugmann, i. § 527. Der. through-ly, thoroughly (see Thorough); through-out, ME. þuruhut, Ancrén Riwe, p. 212, l. 23, with which cf. G. durchaus, a similar compound. And see Throw.

THROW, to cast, to hurl. (E.) One sense of the word was to twist or wind silk or thread; hence throwster, a silk-winder; 'Throw-star, devideresse de soye,' Palsgrave. The orig. sense was to turn, twist, whirl; hence a turner's lathe is still called a throw (Halliwell). ME. þrowen, pt. t. þrew, P. Plowman, B. xx. 163; pp. þrowen, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24 (earlier version), now contracted to thrown. AS. þrāwan, to twist, whirl, hurl; pt. t. þrēow, pp. þrāwen; a verb which, strangely enough, is rare. 'Contorqueo, ic samod þrāwe,' i. e. I twist together, occurs in Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 155, l. 16. The pt. t. þrēow = turned itself, occurs in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 510, l. 8. Leo quotes, from various glossaries: 'ge-þrāwan, torquere; ā-þrāwan, crispere; ed-þrāwan, to twist double; þrāwing-spinl, a throwing (or winding) spindle.' The orig. sense is still preserved in the derived word thread = that which is twisted. β. Allied to G. drehen, OHG. drājan, to turn, whirl, Du. draaijen, to turn, twist, whirl; all from Teut. base *þrē- = Idg. base *trē-, as in Gk. τρῆ-τός, bored through, τρῆ-μα, a hole, τρή-σω, fut. of τε-τρῆναι, to bore through. The grade *ter occurs in L. ter-ere, Gk. τέλειν (for *τέρ-ναι), to bore. (✓TER). Der. throw, sb., throw-er; and see thread.

THRUM (1), the tufted end of a weaver's thread; coarse yarn. (E.) See Thrum in Nares. In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 291. ME. þrum. 'Thrumm, of a clothe, Filamen;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc licium, a throm;' Voc. 728. 17. AS. þrum, found in tunge-þrum, a ligament of the tongue; A. S. Leechdoms, i. p. lxxiv. l. 9; p. lxx. l. 9. Allied to Icel. þrömr (gen. þramar), the edge, verge, brim of a thing (hence the rough edge of a web); Norweg. tröm, tram, trum, edge, brim (Aasen); Swed. dial. tromm, trum, tröm, a stump, the end of a log (Rietz); MDu. drom, or drom-garen [thrum-yarn], 'thred on the shuttle of a weaver;' Hexham; Du. dreum; G. trum, end, thrum, stump of a tree. β. Allied to Gk. τέρ-μα, end, L. ter-minus, end, limit; see Term. Der. thrumm-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 2. 80.

THRUM (2), to strum, play noisy music. (Scand.) 'This single thrumming of a fiddle;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, i. 1 (Jaques). — Icel. þruma, to rattle, to thunder; cf. þrymr, an alarm, a noise; Dan. tromme, a drum; Swed. trumma, to beat, to drum. See Trumpet and Drum.

THRUSH (1), a small singing-bird. (E.) ME. þrusch. — 'Boþe þe þrusche and þe þrustele' = both the thrush and throstle, Will. of Palerne, 820. AS. þrysce, spelt þryssce in Voc. 286. 23; þrisce, id. 260. 30. + OHG. drosca, a thrush; whence G. drossel. β. The AS. word answers to the Teut. type **thruskjōn-*, f. Allied to Throstle, q. v.

THRUSH (2), a disease marked by small ulcerations in the mouth. (Scand.) 'Thrush, a disease in the mouth, esp. of young children;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The form shows that the word is English or Norse, as it begins with th. From ONorse **þruskr*, thrush; whence MDan. torsk, Dan. tröske, the thrush on the tongue, Swed. torsk, Swed. dial. trösk (Rietz); Norw. trausk, trosk, trösk, thrush (Ross). Prob. the same as Norw. trausk, variant of frausk, frosk, a frog; frosk, the thrush. In the same way, Gk. βάρανος and L. rāna meant (1) a frog, (2) a disease of the tongue (Falk).

THRUST, to push forcibly. (Scand.) ME. þrūsten, but more commonly þristen, as in Havelok, 2019, and sometimes þresten, as in Chaucer, C. T. 2614 (A 2612). The form thrust is properly of Scand. origin. — Icel. þrýsta, to thrust, compress, press, force, compel; Norw. trýsta, to thrust. The Teut. base is **þrūst*, perhaps for **þrūt-st*; prob. allied to Icel. þraut, a struggle, and to L. trūd-ere, to thrust, to push. See Threat. Der. thrust, sb., Oth. v. 1. 24.

THUD, a dull sound resulting from a blow. (E.) In Burns, Battle of Sheriffmuir, l. 8. Also used by G. Douglas and others (Jamieson); and see Notes and Queries, 4 S. i. 34, 115, 163, 231, 275. Allied to AS. þyddan, to strike, thrust, push.

THUG, an assassin. (Hindustani.) Modern. — Hind. tḥag, tḥug (with cerebral th), a cheat, knave, imposter, a robber who strangles travellers; Marāṭhī tḥak, tḥag, the same; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms; p. 517. And see Yule.

THUMB, the short, thick finger of the hand. (E.) ME. þombe, Chaucer, C. T. 565 (A 563); formed with excrescent b (after m) from the earlier þume, Ancren Riwle, p. 18, l. 14. AS. þūma, the thumb; 'Pollex, þuma,' Voc. 40. 22. + Du. duim; Swed. tumme; OHG. dūmo, G. däumen. Cf. Icel. þumall, the thumb of a glove; Dan. tommel-finger, thumb. β. Teut. type **thū-mon-*, m., thumb, lit. 'the thick finger;' Fick, iii. 135. From Teut. base THEU = ✓TEU, to swell, grow large; see Tumid. Cf. Tuber. Der. thumb-kin, a dimin. of thumb, but used as equivalent to thumb-screw, an instrument of torture for compressing the thumb (Webster); thumb-ring, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 365; also thimb-le, q. v.

THUMMIM, perfection. (Heb.) We have urim and thummim, Exod. xxviii. 30, Ezra, ii. 63, &c. The literal sense of these difficult words is, probably, 'fires (or lights) and perfections,' but the Heb.

pl. need not be exactly kept to in English; 'light and perfection' would probably be the best E. equivalent; Smith, Dict. of the Bible. — Heb. thummim, pl. of tōm, perfection, truth (with initial tau). — Heb. root tāmam, to be perfect. See Urim.

THUMP, to beat heavily. (E.) In Rich. III, v. 3. 334; and in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 10. 'Thomp! thomp!' Bale, Kyng Johan, p. 53 (C. S.). An imitative word; from the sound of a blow. Cf. EFries. dumpa, a thump; also Icel. dumpa, to thump, Swed. dial. dompa, to thump, dumpa, to make a noise. Of imitative origin. Der. thump, sb., thump-er.

THUNDER, the loud noise accompanying lightning. (E.) For thuner; the d after n is excrescent. ME. þoner, Iwain and Gawain, l. 370, in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 16; more commonly þonder or punder, Chaucer, C. T. 494, 6314 (A 492, D 732). AS. þunor, thunder, Grein, ii. 606. Allied to AS. þunian, to rattle, thunder; Grein, ii. 606. Cf. AS. ge-þun, a loud noise, in a gloss (Bosworth). + Du. donder; Icel. þörr (for þonr), Thor, the god of thunder; with which cf. Dan. torden, Swed. tordön, thunder; G. donner, OHG. thonar, thunder. β. All from Teut. base **thun-*, to thunder (Fick, iii. 130) = Idg. **tun-*. We have further allied words in L. tonāre, to thunder, tonitru, thunder, Skt. tan, to sound; from Idg. ✓TEN, to sound, by-form of ✓STEN, to thunder, make a noise, appearing in Skt. stan, to sound, sigh, thunder, stanita-, thunder, stanana-, sound, groaning, Gk. στέν-ειν, to groan, Lithuan. stenėti, to groan, Russ. stenat(e), stonat(e), to groan, moan; see Stun and Stentor. Der. thunder, verb, AS. þunrian, Grein; thunder-bolt, Temp. ii. 2. 38 (see Bolt); thunder-stone, J. Cæs. i. 3. 49; thunder-stroke, Temp. ii. 1. 204; thunder-struck, Milton, P. L. vi. 858; thunder-ous, id. P. L. x. 702; thunder-er, id. P. L. vi. 491. Also Thurs-day, q. v. See Brugmann, i. § 818(2).

THURIBLE, a censer for burning frankincense. (L. — Gk.) 'A pot of manna, or thurible;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2 (R.). Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the L. form thuribulum. Englished from L. thuribulum, also spelt tūribulum, a vessel for holding frankincense. — L. thūri-, tūri-, decl. stem of thūs or tūs, frankincense; with suffix -bulum, as in fundi-bulum (from fundere). This sb. thūs is not a true L. word, but borrowed from Gk. θυ-ός, incense. — Gk. θύ-ειν, to offer part of a meal to the gods, by burning it, to sacrifice. Cf. Skt. dhūma-, smoke; L. fūmus, smoke, which is the native L. word from the same root as Gk. θύός. — ✓DHEU, to shake, blow, fan a flame. See Fume. Der. (from L. thūri-), thuri-fer, one who carries incense; where the suffix -fer = bearing, from ferre, to bear. From the same root as thyme and fume.

THURSDAY, the fifth day of the week. (Scand.) The day of the god of thunder, the Scand. Thor. ME. þurs-dei, Ancren Riwle, p. 40, l. 7; þorsday, þoresday, þursday, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 140, and footnotes; (spelt þures-dæi, Layamon, 13929). — AS. þūres dag, Thursday. — AS. þūres, gen. of þūr, Thor; and dæg, day. Borrowed from Icel. þörs-dagr, Thursday; from þörs, gen. case of þörr, Thor, thunder; dagr, a day. So also are compounded Du. Donnerdag, Swed. and Dan. Torsdag, G. Donnerstag and the (native) AS. þunres dag. All are translations of L. diēs Iouis, Jupiter's day. See Sweet, Hist. E. Sounds, § 578. And see Thunder.

THUS, in this manner. (E.) ME. thus, Chaucer, C. T. 1880 (A 1878). AS. ðus, thus, so, Grein, ii. 611. + OFries. and OSax. thus, thus; Du. du. Of obscure origin; prob. allied to That; and perhaps to This.

THWACK, WHACK, to beat severely. (E.) In Levins, and in Shak. Cor. iv. 5. 189. 'If it be a thwack' [blow]; Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 2 (Lapet). Tusser has thwack as a verb; Husbandry, § 18, st. 3 (E. D. S.). Prob. of imitative origin. Cf. Icel. þjökka, to thwack, thump; þjaka, the same; prov. G. wackeln, to cudgel. β. For the change from thwack to whack, see Whittle. ¶ It does not agree, in form or sense, with ME. thakken, to stroke, as in: 'When Nicholas had doon thus euery del, And thakked her about the lendes wel;' Chaucer, C. T. 3304; AS. þaccian, to stroke, said of stroking a horse; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 41, ed. Sweet, p. 303, l. 10.

THWAITE, a clearing. (Scand.) Common in place-names, in Cumberland, as in Esthwaite, Legberthwaite, &c.; see Taylor's Words and Places, c. 8; Gent. Mag. Nov. 1856, p. 530. In N. and Q. 3 S. x. 68, an example of thwayt is given, as occurring in the 16th century. — Icel. þveit, a paddock, &c., orig. a 'cutting,' i. e. a clearing in a wood. As if from **þveit*, 2nd grade of a strong verb **þvita*, to cut; not found, but the same word as AS. þwitan, to cut; for which see Whittle (1). Cf. Norw. tveit, a cut, also a small clear space (Aasen); prov. Sw. tveit, a chip, -tveita, a suffix in place-names (Rietz); Dan. dial. tved. And see Doit.

THWART, transversely, transverse. (Scand.) Properly an adv., as used by Spenser: 'Yet whether thwart or flatly it did lyte' [light, alight]; F. Q. vi. 6. 30. He also has it as a prep.: 'thwart her horse' = across her horse, F. Q. iii. 7. 43. The ME. use shows clearly that the word was used adverbially, esp. in certain phrases, and then as an adj.; the verbal use was the latest of all. ME. þwert, þwart. 'Andelong, nouht ouer-þwert' = endlong, not across; Havellok, 2822. 'Ouerthwart and endelong' = across and endlong, Chaucer, C. T. 1993; þwertouer, Ancræn Riwe, p. 82, l. 12; þwert ouer þe ilond, Trevisa, v. 225; 'His herte ðo wurð ðwert' = his heart then became perverse, Genesis and Exodus, 3099. The word is of Scand. origin, as it is only thus that the final -t can be explained. The AS. for 'perverse' is þweorh, Grein, ii. 612, cognate with which is Icel. þverr, masc., the neut. being þvert. The sense of þverr is across, transverse, whence um þvert = across, athwart; taka þvert, to take athwart, to deny flatly; storm mikinn ok veðr þvert = a great storm and adverse winds. + Dan. tvær, adj., transverse; tvært, adv., across; Swed. tvär, adj., cross, unfriendly, tvärt, adv., rudely. Allied to Du. dwaars, adj. and adv., cross, crossly; AS. þweorh, perverse, transverse (as above); MHG. dwerch, twerch, G. zwerch, adv., across, awry, askance, obliquely; Goth. thwairhs, cross, angry. β. All from Teut. base **þwerh*, transverse, also cross, angry; answering to Idg. base **twerg*. Allied to L. torquere, to twist; Skt. tarku-, a spindle. Brugmann, i. § 593 (3). Allied to Twirl; and see Torsion. Der. thwart, verb, ME. þwerten, Genesis and Exodus, 1324; also a-thwart, q. v. And see Queer.

THWITE, to cut. (E.) Obsolete. AS. þwitan, to cut. See Thwaite and Whittle.

THY, shorter form of Thine, q. v. (E.) Der. thy-self, AS. þin self, where both þin and self are declined, the gen. being þines selves; see Grein, ii. 427, s. v. self.

THYME, a fragrant plant. (F. — L. — Gk.) The th is pronounced as t, because the word was borrowed from F. at an early period. ME. tyme, Prompt. Parv., p. 494. — OF. tym, F. thym, 'the herb time'; Cot. — L. thymum, acc. of thymus, thyme. — Gk. θύμος, θύμον, thyme; from its sweet smell; cf. Gk. θύος, incense, and L. fumus, smoke. See Thurible. (✓DHEU). Der. thym-y, Gay, Fable 22, l. 11.

THYROID, a term in anatomy. (Gk.) Lit. 'shield-shaped.' For thyreoid. — Gk. θυρεοειδής, shield-shaped (Galen). — Gk. θυρεο-, for θυρεός, a stone against a door; also, a shield, from θύρα, a door; and είδος, form. See Door and Idyll.

THYRSUS, a long wand, an attribute or emblem of Dionysus or Bacchus. (L. — Gk.) Herrick has thyrses: 'Shake the thyrses,' A Lyrick to Mirth, l. 8. — L. thyrsus, a stalk, stem. — Gk. θύρσος, the same. See Torso.

TI-TY

TIARA, a round wreathed ornament for the head. (L. — Gk. — Pers.?) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, vii. 337; and used by Tyndale; see Index to Parker Soc. publications. [The form tiar in Milton, P. L. iii. 625, is from F. tiare, given in Cotgrave.] — L. tiara, Virg. Æn. vii. 247. — Gk. τιάρα, τιάρας, the Persian head-dress, esp. on great occasions; see Herodotus, i. 132, vii. 61, viii. 120; Xenophon, Anab. ii. 5. 23. And see Smith's Dict. of Antiquities. β. Clearly not a Gk. word, and presumably of Persian origin. The modern name is Pers. tāj, 'a crown, a diadem, a crest'; see Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 351, where the tiara is described. Cf. tājwar, 'wearing a crown, crowned'; id. p. 352.

TIBERT, a name for a cat. (F. — Teut.) Alluded to as Tybolt in Shak. Romeo, iii. 1. 80. See Nares. 'Tybert the catte'; Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ch. iii. — Low G. Tibeert (Willem, author of Reynard). This answers to AS. Thēod-beorht, from thēod, people, and beorht, bright. β. But Tybolt is rather from OF. Thibaut, a form of Theobald, answering to AS. Thēod-beald, from beald, bold. See Teutonic; and Bright, Bold.

TIBIA, the large bone of the leg. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. A medical term. — L. tibia, the shin-bone. Der. tibi-al.

TIC, a convulsive motion of certain muscles, esp. of the face, a twitching. (F. — Teut.) Borrowed from F. tic, a twitching; and chiefly used of the tic douloureux, painful twitching, the name of a nervous disease; where douloureux = L. dolorōsus, painful, from dolor, pain. The F. tic was formerly esp. used with respect to a twitching of the muscles of horses (see Littré), and is the same word as MF. tiquet, or tiquet, 'a disease which, on a sudden stopping a horses breath, makes him to stop and stand still'; Cot. Cf. près du tiquet de la mort, 'near his last gasp'; id. The F. tic also means a vicious habit; cf. Ital. ticchio, a ridiculous habit, whim, caprice. β. Of Teutonic origin; guided by the etymology of caprice, Diez suggests a prob. origin from OHG. zikin, a kid, dimin. of OHG. ziga, G.

ziege, a goat, cognate with AS. ticcen, a goat, Gen. xxxviii. 19. γ. But rather from MHG. tuc, a quick movement, or Low G. tukken, to twitch; perhaps allied to Low G. twikken, to twitch. And see Tick (4).

TICK (1), a small insect infesting dogs, &c. (E.) 'A tick in a sheep'; Troil. iii. 3. 315. ME. tyke (dat. case), in Polit. Songs, p. 238, l. 4, in a poem of the time of Edw. II. Spelt teke, Voc. 565. 47. AS. ticia, Erfurt Glossary, 1130. Hence the F. tique was borrowed. + MDu. teke, 'a tike, or a doggs-lowse'; Hexham; Low G. teke, tūke; G. zücke, zecke, a tick (whence Ital. zecca). Allied to Lith. dygus, sharp, dėg-ti, to sting (Franck).

TICK (2), the cover into which feathers are put, to serve for a bed. (L. — Gk.) 'Quilts, ticks, and mattresses'; Holland. tr. of Pliny, b. xix, c. 1. § 2. 'And of federbeddes ryped the tekys & helde theym in the wynde, that the fethers myght be blowyn away'; Fabyan's Chron., an. 1305–6, fol. lxxx; ed. Ellis, p. 414. Spelt ticke in Palsgrave. The spelling teke used by Fabyan is Englished from L. thēca, a case, which became Late L. tēcha, a linen case, a tick (Ducange); also tēca, as in Prompt. Parv., s. v. teye. 'The teke of a bed, Teca culcitaria,' Levins; the L. th being sounded as t. [From the same L. thēca was derived the F. taie, spelt taye in Cotgrave, and explained as 'any filme or thin skin,' whence vne taye d'oreiller, 'a pillowbeer,' i. e. a pillow-case.] — Gk. θήκη, a case to put anything into; derived from the base θη- as seen in τί-θη-μι, I place, put. — ✓DHE, to put; see Theme. ¶ The Du. tijk, a tick, is likewise from L. thēca. Der. tick-ing.

TICK (3), to make a slight recurring noise, to beat as a watch. (E.) Todd cites from Ray, Remains, p. 324, 'the leisurely and constant tick of the death-watch.' The word is prob. imitative, to express the clicking sound, cf. click; or it may have been suggested by Tick (4), q. v. Cf. G. ticktack, pit-a-pat; F. tictac, the ticking of a clock.

TICK (4), to touch lightly. (E.) There is a game called tig, in which children endeavour to touch each other; see Halliwell. This was formerly called tick. 'At hood-wink, barley-break, at tick, or prison-base'; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 30, l. 132. ME. tek, a light touch. 'Tek, or lytyle towche, Tactulus'; Prompt. Parv. Not found earlier, except in the frequentative form tikelen; see Tickle. + Du. tik, a touch, pat, tick; tikken, to pat, to tick; Norw. tikka, to touch lightly; Low G. tikk, a light touch with the tip of the finger; metaphorically, a moment of time. 'Ik quam up den Tikk daar, I came there just in the nick of time'; Bremen Wörterbuch. β. Apparently a lighter form of the Teut. base **tak-*, to touch, just as tip (in tip and run) is a weakened form of tap, made by the substitution of a lighter vowel. See Take. Der. tick-le, q. v.

TICK (5), credit; see Ticket.

TICKET, a bill stuck up, a marked card, a token. (F. — G.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. — MF. etiquet, 'a little note, breviate, bill or ticket; especially such a one as is stuck up on the gate of a court, &c., signifying the seizure, &c. of an inheritance by order of justice'; Cot. This is the masc. form of étiquette (formerly estiquete, Littré), a ticket. — G. stecken, to stick, put, set, fix; allied to E. Stick, q. v. And see Etiquette. Der. tick-et, vb. Also tick, credit, by contraction for ticket; 'taking things to be put into a bill, was taking them on ticket, since corrupted into tick,' Nares; he gives examples, showing that tick occurs as early as 1668, and that the phrases upon ticket and on ticket were in use.

TICKLE, to touch slightly so as to cause to laugh. (E.) ME. tikelen, tiklen, Chaucer, C. T. 6053 (D 471). Not found earlier, but the frequentative from the base tik-, to touch lightly; see Tick (4). We also find ME. tikel, adj., unstable, ticklish, easily moved by a touch, Chaucer, C. T. 3428; from the same source. Cf. Icel. killa, to tickle; similarly formed from a base **kit-*. Der. tickl-er; tickl-ish, Troil. iv. 5. 61, formed by adding -ish to ME. tikel above; tickl-ish-ly, -ness.

TIDE, season, time, hour; flux or reflux of the sea. (E.) ME. tide, Chaucer, C. T. 4930 (B 510); the usual sense is 'season' or hour; hence the time between flux and reflux of the sea, and, finally, the flux or reflux itself. AS. tīd, time, hour, Mark, xiii. 33. + Du. tijd; Icel. tíð; Dan. and Swed. tíd; G. zeit; OHG. zit. β. All from Teut. type **tī-di-*, time, division of time, portion of time. Allied to Time, q. v. Der. tide, vb., to happen, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 205, ME. tiden, Chaucer, C. T. 4757 (B 337), AS. ge-tidan, to happen, John, v. 14; hence be-tide, q. v. Also morning-tide, morrow-tide, even-tide, harvest-tide, &c.; tide-mill, tide-table; tide-waiter, an officer who waits for the arrival of vessels with the tide, to secure payment of duties; tide-way; tīd-al, adj., tide-less; tīd-ings, tīd-y.

TIDINGS, things that happen; usually, information respecting things that happen. (Scand.) Not an E. word, but adapted from Norse. ME. tīdinde, Layamon, 2052, altered in the later text to tīdinge; spelt tīpennde (for tīpende), Ormulum, dedication, l. 158.

AS. tiding, tidings; A. S. Chron. an. 995. — Icel. tíðindi, neut. pl., tidings, news; also spelt tíðenda. The word may have originated from a pres. part. **tíðandi* of a verb **tíða*, to happen, with the same sense as AS. tídan; and this verb is from Icel. tíð, sb., tide, time, cognate with AS. tíð; see Tide. The final s is an E. addition, to show that the word is a pl. form; the ME. tiding or tithing (without s) is not uncommon; see Chaucer, C. T. 5146 (B 726). Cf. Dan. tidende, tidings, news; Du. tijding; G. zeitung. Noreen, § 150 (2).

TIDY, seasonable, hence, appropriate, neat. (E.) ME. tidy. 'Tidy men'; P. Plowman, B. ix. 104; 'þe tidy child'; Will. of Palerne, 160. Formed with suffix -y (< AS. -ig) from ME. tíd (AS. tíd), time; see Tide. + Du. tijdig, timely, from tijd; Dan. and Swed. tidig, timely, from tíd; G. zeitig. Der. tidi-ness.

TIE, a fastening, band; to fasten, bind. (E.) 1. ME. tiȝen, verb, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 464; tyen, P. Plowman, B. i. 96; teȝen, teyen, id. A. 94. The ME. forms tiȝen, teyen answer to AS. tiegan, to tie, fasten, spelt tigan, Matt. xxi. 2. The forms teȝen, teyen answer to an Anglian form tēgan. 2. The verb is an unoriginal form, due to the sb. teȝe. 'And teien heom to-gadere mid guldene teȝen' = and tie them together with golden ties; Layamon, 2097, 20998. The corresponding AS. word is tēag, or rather tēah (stem tēag-), a rope; see Grein. Again, we read: 'habbað langne tige to gelēafan trimminge' = they have a long-lasting tie for the establishment of the faith; Ælfric, Of the New Test., ed. De L'Isle, p. 27, last line; here tige = tȝge (with mutation). Cf. Icel. taug, a tie, string; tygill, a string. β. The form tēah corresponds to tēah, pt. s. of tēohan, to tow, pull, draw, drag; so that a tie means that which draws things together. For the strong verb tēohan or tēon (pt. t. tēah, pl. tugon, pp. togen), see Grein, ii. 527. It is cognate with Goth. tiuhan (pt. t. tauhan), to tow, tug, pull, and to G. ziehen. See further under Tow (1). γ. Thus tie, vb., is from tie, sb.; and the latter is ultimately from Teut. **tauh*, 2nd grade of the Teut. base TEUH = Idg. √DEUK, as in L. dūcere, to draw. Cf. Tether.

TIER, a rank, row. (F. — Teut. ?) 'Tire (or teer of ordnance, as the seamen pronounce it), a set of great guns on both sides of a ship, lying in a rank,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt tire, with the same sense of 'row of guns,' in Milton, P. L. vi. 605. We find 'tyres of batterie,' i. e. rounds of shot, Life of Lord Grey (ab. 1575), p. 20 (Camden Soc.). Also 'tyre of ordnance,' Florio, s. v. tiro. — OF. tire, tiere, a rank, row, series (Godefroy); cf. Prov. tieira, mod. Prov. tiéro, tieiro, a row, series. Perhaps of Teut. origin; see Körting, § 9464. And cf. attire, q. v. ¶ Distinct from Late L. tirare, to draw, pull, extend, hurl; whence also Ital. tirare, Span. Port. tirar.

TIERCE, TERCE, one of the canonical hours, a cask holding a third of a pipe; a sequence of three cards of a colour; a thrust in fencing. (F. — L.) In all its senses, it meant orig. 'third;' as the third hour, third of a pipe, third card, third sort of thrust. ME. tierce; 'At howre of tyerse,' Myroure of Our Lady, ed. Blunt, p. 13, l. 21; spelt tierce, Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 41. — F. tiers, masc., tierce, fem., 'third;' tiers, m., 'a tierce, third, third part;' Cot. — L. tertius, masc., tertia, fem., third; the ordinal corresponding to trēs, three, which is cognate with E. Three, q. v.

TIERCEL, the same as Tercel, q. v.

TIFF (1), to deck, dress out. (F. — O. Low G.) ME. tiffen; Will. of Palerne, l. 1725; tiffung, finery, Ancren Riwele, p. 420, note a. — OF. and MF. tiffer, tifer (more commonly atiffer, attiffer), 'to deck, pranke, trick, trim, adorn;' Cot. Of Low G. origin; cf. Du. tippen, to cut, clip (lit. to cut off the tip of the hair, to trim); Low G. tippen, to touch lightly, as with the tips of the fingers. These verbs are from Du. tip, Low G. tipp, sb. a tip. See Tip (1). Cf. prov. E. tippy, smart, fine (Brockett, Halliwell). So also Swed. tippa, to touch gently, from tipp, sb. See F. attiffer in Scheler.

TIFF (2), a pet, fit of ill-humour; also, liquor, drink. (Scand.) 'My lord and I have had another little—tiff, shall I call it? it came not up to a quarrel;' Richardson, Grandison, iv. 291 (1754, ed. 1812). Spelt tift in Jamieson and Brockett. 'Small acid tiff;' J. Phillips, The Splendid Shilling; where it means 'drink.' Spelt tiffe in Brome, To his University Friend, 1661, where it means 'thin small beer' (Halliwell, Richardson). The orig. sense is 'a sniff;' hence (1) an expression of indignation; (2) a sup or draught of beer (see Halliwell), or the beer itself. — Norweg. tev, a drawing in of the breath, scent, smell, esp. a bad smell; teva, to puff, sniff, smell; Swed. dial. täv, smell, scent, taste; Icel. þesfr, a smell, þesfa, to sniff. Hence tiff really stands for thiff, the old Scand. th being turned into t, as in tight. β. This etymology is at once verified by the Norweg. derivatives teft, sb. a scent, and tefta, verb, to scent, which explain the North E. tift. Wedgwood well remarks: 'a tiff or fit of ill humour must be explained from snuffing or sniffing the air.' Cf. AS. þefian, to pant. See Tiffin.

TIFFANY, a kind of thin silk, gauze. (F. — Late L. — Gk.) 'Velvets, tiffinies, jewels, pearls;' Fletcher, The Noble Gentleman,

A. i. sc. 1. Lit. 'a dress for Twelfth Night,' i. e. a holiday dress, gay dress. Tiffany was formerly a Christian name, esp. for a woman born on Twelfth Day; see Bardsley, Dict. of Surnames. — OF. Tiffanie (and numerous other forms, as Theophanie); see Godefroy, s. v. Tifaigne, a name for Twelfth Day. — Late L. Theophania, lit. 'manifestation of God;' another name for Epiphany. — Gk. θεός, God; φάνεια, appearance, from φαίνω, to show. See Epiphany.

TIFFIN, luncheon. (Scand.) An Anglo-Indian word, but originally provincial English. Wedgwood says it 'is the North-country tiffing (properly sipping), eating or drinking out of due season.' This is quoted from Grose, Lexicon Balatronicum (1785); see Tiffin in Yule, and Tiff in Davies, Supplementary Glossary. The latter has 'a tiff [draught] of punch;' Fielding, Amelia, bk. viii. ch. 10. Lowland-Scotch has the verb tift, to quaff, from the sb. tift, a drink; corresponding to which we have prov. E. tiff, to quaff; whence the sb. tiffin = tiffing, a quaffing, a drinking; hence, a luncheon. See Tiff (2).

TIGER, a fierce beast of prey. (F. — L. — Gk. — Pers.) ME. tigre, Chaucer, C. T. 1657. — F. tigre, 'a tiger;' Cot. — L. tigrem, acc. of tigris. — Gk. τίγρις. β. Said to be of Pers. origin; according to Littré, named from its 'swiftness,' the tiger being compared to an arrow. So also Mandeville (Trav. ch. xxx. p. 305) has: 'tigris, that is, faste rennyng.' — Zend. tighri, an arrow; from tighra, sharp, pointed; words cited by Fick, i. 333. Hence mod. Pers. tir, 'an arrow, also the river Tigris, so named from its rapidity;' Rich. Dict. p. 473. Horn, § 406. Allied to Skt. tigma-, sharp, tigmaga-, flying swiftly, from tij, to be sharp. All these words have lost initial s; tij being allied to Gk. στίχειν (= στίγ-γιν), to prick. — √STEIG, to stick, prick; see Stigma. Der. tigr-ess, tiger-ish.

TIGHT, close, compact, not leaky. (Scand.) It should rather be thight, as in the dialect of Orkney; the change from th to t is common in Scandinavian, since neither Danish nor Swedish admits of initial th, which is only preserved in Icelandic. The th still exists also in prov. E. thite, 'tight, close, compact, East;' Halliwell. ME. tigt; whence tigtli, closely, Will. of Palerne, 66; also þigt, spelt thyht, in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Thyht, bool, not brokyn, Integer, solidus;' also: 'Thyhtyn, or make thyht, Integer, consoldo.' Hence prov. E. theat, firm, close, staunch, spoken of barrels when they do not run (Halliwell). So also: 'as some tight vessel that holds against wind and water;' Bp. Hall, Contemplations, Ruth; bk. xi. cont. 3. § 11. It is spelt tith four times in Beaum. and Fletcher; see Nares. — Icel. þétr (for **þiht*), tight, esp. not leaking, water-tight, whence þetta, to make tight; Swed. tät, close, tight, solid, thick, hard, compact, whence täta, to make tight, tätina, to become tight (E. tighen used intransitively); Dan. tæt, tight, close, dense, compact, water-tight, used as a naut. term in tæt til vinden, close to the wind; tætte, to tighten; NFries. tacht (variant ticht), tight. β. The substitution of ME. iz for Icel. ē is curious; the E. has preserved the old guttural, which in the Icelandic is no longer apparent. Teut. type **þihtoz*, for **þinxtoz*, **þenxtoz*; whence also G. dicht, tight, compact, Du. dig, tight, compact (where the guttural is also preserved). Allied to Lith. tenku, I have enough, tankus, close, tight; Pers. tang, tight. See Thee (2). Der. tight-ly, tight-ness; tight-en, properly intransitive like Swed. tätina, but used, by analogy, in the sense 'to make tight.' Brugmann, i. § 577.

TIKE, a dog; contemptuously, a low fellow. (Scand.) ME. tike, tyke; P. Plowman, B. xix. 37; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 3642. — Icel. and Norw. tík, Swed. tik, a bitch; Dan. dial. tig, a male dog.

TILE, a piece of baked clay for covering roofs, &c. (L.) ME. tile, Chaucer, C. T. 7687 (D 2105). A contracted form of tigel, the long i being due to loss of g. Spelt tigel, Genesis and Exodus, 2552; tezele, Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 167, l. 13. AS. tigele; pl. tygelan, Gen. xi. 3; hence tigel-wyrhta, a tile-wright, a potter, Matt. xxvii. 7. — L. tégula, a tile, lit. 'that which covers;' formed with suffix -lā from tegere, to cover. — √STEG, to cover; see Tegument. Der. tile, verb, til-er, til-ing; also til-er-y, imitated from F. tuilerie, which is from F. tuile, L. tégula, a tile.

TILL (1), to cultivate. (E.) ME. tilien, Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 488. AS. tilian, teolian, to labour, endeavour, strive after, to till land; Grein, ii. 533. The orig. sense is to strive after, or aim at excellence. — AS. til, good, excellent, profitable; Grein, ii. 532; cf. til, sb., goodness. Allied to till, preposition; see Till (2). + Du. telen, to breed, raise, till, cultivate; G. zielen, to aim at, from ziel, OHG. zīl, an aim, mark; cf. Goth. ga-tīls, fit, convenient. Further allied to OIrish dīl, pleasant. Der. till-er, till-age; also til-th, Temp. ii. 1. 152, from AS. til-ð, cultivation, crop, A. S. Chron. an. 1098; cf. Du. teelt, a crop.

TILL (2), to the time of, to the time when. (Scand.) A Norse word; orig. used as a preposition, then as a conjunction. ME. til, prep., to, occurring (rarely) even in Chaucer, where it seems to be put for to because it is accented and comes before a vowel. 'Hoom til Athénés whan the play is doon;' C. T. 2964 (A 2966). As a rule, it is a distinguishing mark of works in the Northumbrian dialect, such as Barbour's Bruce, where til occurs for to throughout. Sommer cites 'cweð til him hælend' = the Saviour said to them, without a reference; but he really found 'cweð til him ðe hælend,' Matt. xxvi. 31, in the ONorthumb. (not the AS.) version. — Icel. til, till, to, prep. governing the genitive; Dan. til; Swed. till; in very common use; it even answers to E. too in phrases such as til ungr, too young; til gamall, too old. β. Quite distinct from to, and orig. a case of tili or tili, sb., in the sense of 'aim' or 'bent,' whence the notion of 'towards' was easily developed. The Icel. til frequently expresses 'purpose,' as in til hvārs = for what purpose. The sb. is rare in Icel., though it occurs in ū-tili, a mischance; but OHG. zīl, G. ziel, aim, purpose, is a common word; so also is the closely allied AS. adj. til, suitable, fit (cognate with Goth. ga-tīls, fit, convenient), as well as the AS. adv. tela, teala, excellently, Grein, ii. 524. See Till (1). Der. un-til, q.v.

TILL (3), a money-box or drawer in a tradesman's counter. (E.) The proper sense is 'drawer,' something that can be 'pulled' in and out. Dryden uses tiller in this sense, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 384, where till-er is just parallel to draw-er. Cotgrave explains F. layette by 'a till or drawer;' also, 'a box with tills or drawers.' Palsgrave has: 'Tyll of an almy, lyette' [sic]; an almy being a kind of cupboard or cabinet. Cf. also prov. E. tiller, a till, a place for money; E. D. D. Thus the word is by no means modern; and, just as drawer is from the verb to draw, so tiller is from ME. tillen, to draw, pull, allure, now obsolete, but once not uncommon. 'To the scole him for to tille' = to draw (or allure) him to school, Cursor Mundi, 12175. 'The world . . . tyl him drawes And tilles' = the world draws and allures to itself, Pricke of Conscience, 1183; and see Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 1563, and esp. Rob. of Glouc. p. 115, l. 2492, where it occurs in a literal, not a metaphorical sense. Spelt also tullen; the pt. t. tulde = drew, is in Ancrén Riwe, p. 320, l. 13. AS. tyllan, appearing only in the comp. for-tyllan, with the apparent sense of draw aside, lead astray, Grein, i. 332. AS. tyllan answers to Teut. type **tul-jan-*; but the root does not appear. Allied to Toll (2). See Tiller.

TILLER, the handle or lever for turning a rudder. (E.) Cf. prov. E. tiller, the stalk of a cross-bow, the handle of any implement (Halliwell). Phillips has it in the usual sense. 'Tiller, in a boat, is the same as helme in a ship;' Coles, ed. 1684. 'The tiller of their helme was burst;' Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 111. The word means 'pull-er' or handle; from ME. tillen, to pull, draw; see further under Till (3).

TILT (1), the canvas covering of a cart or waggon. (E.) ME. teld, a covering, tent, Layamon, 31384; a later form was telt. 'Teltie or tente;' Prompt. Parv.; hence our tilt. AS. teld; whence geteld, a tent, Gen. xviii. 1; the prefix ge- making no difference. + MDu. telde, telte, a tent; Hexham; Icel. tjald; Low G. telt (whence Dan. telt; Swed. tält); G. zelt. β. It thus appears that the form tilt (with final t for d) may have been due to Dutch influence. From the Teut. strong verb **teldan-*, to cover, spread over (pt. t. **tald*); found in AS. be-teldan, ofer-teldan, both strong verbs. If the reference is to covering over with boards, connexion with Gk. δέλτ-ος, a writing-tablet, is possible (Prellwitz).

TILT (2), to ride in a tourney, thrust with a lance; to cause to heel over. (E.) In 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 95. But the verb was orig. intransitive, meaning 'to totter, toss about unsteadily;' whence the active use of 'cause to totter, upset,' was evolved. The intrans. sense occurs at least as late as Milton, and is still in use when we say 'that table will tilt over.' 'The floating vessel . . . Rode tilting o'er the waves;' Milton, P. L. xi. 747. ME. tilten, to totter, fall; 'pis ilk toun schal tylte to ground,' Allit. Poems, C. 361. β. The lit. sense is 'to be unsteady,' formed from AS. tealt, adj., unsteady, tottering, unstable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, § xv. 74. Hence the verb **tieltan*, **tyltan*, to totter, would be regularly formed, with the usual vowel-change from ea to ie (y). + Icel. tölta, to amble as a horse; cf. Milton's use of tilting above; Norw. tylta, to walk on tiptoe; Swed. tulta, to waddle. Cf. Totter. Der. tilt, sb., tilt-ing; tilt-hammer, a hammer which, being tilted up, falls by its own weight. Also tott-er, q.v.

TILTH, sb. (E.) See Till (1).

TIMBER, wood for building. (E.) Thg b is excrement, as usual after m, but occurs very early. ME. timber, Chaucer, C. T. 3666. AS. timber, stuff or material to build with; Grein, ii. 534. + Du. timmer, 'timber or structure;' Hexham; Icel. timbr; Dan. tømmer; Swed. timmer; G. zimmer; a room; also timber. Cf. also Goth. timrjan, to build, timrja, a builder. β. All from Teut. type **tim-rom* < **tem-rom*, n., timber; formed with agential suffix -ro from Teut. base TEM = ✓DEM, to build, as seen in Gk. δέμ-ειν, to build; see Dome. Brugmann, i. § 421(8). Der. (from same root) dome, dom-icile, dom-estic, major-domo.

TIMBREL, a kind of tambourine. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 7. Dimin., with suffix -l (= -el), from ME. timber, used in the same sense, Gower, C. A. iii. 63; bk. vi. 1844. — F. timbre, 'the bell of a little clock;' Cot.; OF. tymbre, a timbrel, as shown by a quotation in Diez. — L. tympanum, a drum. — Gk. τύμπανον, a kettle-drum; see Tympanum. Cf. 'Hoc timpanum, a tymbre;' Voc. 616. 28.

TIME, season, period, duration of life, &c. (E.) ME. time, Chaucer, C. T. 35. 44. AS. tīma, time, Grein, ii. 534. + Icel. tīmi; Dan. time; Swed. timme, an hour. β. The Teut. type is **tī-man-*, closely allied to **tī-di-*, tide, time, from which it only differs in the suffix. See Tide. Der. time, verb, cf. ME. timen, to happen, AS. getimian; time-ly, adj., Macb. iii. 3. 7; time-ly, adv., Macb. ii. 3. 51; time-li-ness; time-honoured, -keeper, -piece, -server, -table, -worn.

TIMID, afraid, fearful. (F.—L.) 'The timid friend;' Pope, Prol. to Satires, 343. [The sb. timidity is earlier, occurring in Cotgrave.] — F. timide, 'timorous;' Cot. — L. timidus, full of fear. — L. timēre, to fear; see Timorous. Der. timid-ly, -ness; timid-i-ty, from F. timidité, 'timidity,' Cot., from L. acc. timiditatem.

TIMOROUS, full of fear. (L.) The Court of Love begins: 'With timorous herte;' but this is quite a late poem. Fabyan has timorousnesse, Chron. cap. 175; Sir T. Elyot has timerositie, The Governour, b. i. c. xxi. § 4. [There is no F. timoreux.] Coined, as if from L. adj. **timorōsus*, fearful, a word not used. — L. timor, fear; timēre, to fear. β. Prob. allied to Skt. tam, to become breathless, to be distressed, to be exhausted. Der. timorous-ly, timorous-ness; (from same root) tim-id, in-tim-id-ate.

TIN, a silvery-white metal. (E.) ME. tin, Chaucer, C. T. 16296 (G 828). AS. tin; 'stagnum, tin,' Ælfric's Gram. (ed. Zupitza), p. 15, l. 11; whence 'stagneus, tinen' as an adj., ibid. + Du. tin; Icel. tin; Dan. tin; Swed. tenn; G. zinn. β. All from Teut. type **tino-*, tin. Possibly connected with Teut. **taino-*, a rod, for which see Mistletoe; cf. G. zain, an ingot, a bar of metal. γ. Quite distinct from L. stagnum, stannum, tin, whence W. ystaen, Corn. stean, Bret. stéan, Irish stan, F. étain, are all borrowed; see Rhys, Lectures on Welsh, Appendix C. Der. tin-foil, spelt tynfoyle in Levins, i.e. tin-leaf; see Foil (2).

TINCTURE, a shade of colour, a solution. (L.) In Shak. Two Gent. iv. 4. 160. ME. tincture, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 180, l. 6. Englished from L. tinctura, a dyeing; cf. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. Der. tincture, verb. Shak. also has tinct, sb., a dye, Hamlet, iii. 4. 91, from pp. tinctus.

TIND, to light or kindle. (E.) Also spelt tine. Now obsolete, except in prov. E. Spelt tinde in Minsheu, ed. 1627. ME. tenden, Wyclif, Luke, xi. 33. AS. tendan, to kindle; chiefly in comp. on-tendan, Exod. xxii. 6. + Dan. tānde; Swed. tānda; Goth. tandjan. β. These are verbs of the weak kind, from the base of a Teut. lost strong verb **tendan-*, making **tand* in the pt. t., and **tundanoz* in the pp. γ. From the weak grade of the same strong verb was formed E. tinder, q.v.

TINDER, anything used for kindling fires from a spark. (E.) ME. tinder, Layamon, 29267; more often tunder, tondre, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245. AS. tyndre, Voc. 266. 39; tynder, id. 33. 41. Cf. OHG. zuntira, tinder. Teut. type **tund-ir-ōn-*, f.; from **tund-*, weak grade of a lost strong verb **tendan-*, to kindle, whence the weak verb tendan, to kindle; see Tind. + Icel. tundr, tinder; cf. tendra, to light a fire, tandri, fire; Dan. tønder; Swed. tunder; G. zunder; cf. anzünden, to kindle.

TINE (1), the tooth or spike of a fork or harrow. (E.) Formerly tind; cf. wood-bine for wood-bind. ME. tind, spelt tynde, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 78; 'tyndis of harowis,' Allit. Romance of Alexander, 3907, 3925. AS. tind, pl. tindas, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 150, l. 25. + Icel. tindr, a spike, tooth of a rake or harrow; Swed. tinne, Dan. dial. tind, the tooth of a rake; MHG. zint. Teut. type **tendoz*, m.; allied to L. dens (acc. dent-em), a tooth; see Tooth. Cf. Skt. danta-, a tooth; hasti-danta-, a peg to hang clothes on. Der. tin-ed.

TINE (2), to kindle; see Tind.

TINE (3), to lose. (Scand.) 'His blisse gan he tyne;' P. Plowman, B. i. 112. — Icel. týna, to lose. — Icel. tjón, loss, damage; cognate with AS. tēona, harm, loss; see Teen.

TINGE, to colour, dye. (L.) 'Tinged with saffron;' Holinshed, Desc. of Scotland, c. 7. The pp. form tinct is in Spenser, Shep. Kal. November, 107. — L. tingere (pp. tinctus), to dye, stain. + Gk. τέγγειν, to wet, moisten, dye, stain. Cf. OHG. thuncōn, G. tunken, to dip, steep; from the weak grade (tung-) of ✓TENG. Der. tinge, sb., tinct-ure, q.v.; also taint, tent (3), tint, stain, mezzo-tinto.

TINGLE, to thrill, feel a thrilling sensation. (E.) Spelt tingil in Levins. ME. tinglen. In Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1, we have: 'a cymbal tyngynge,' where other readings are tynclynge and tinglinge. Tingle is merely a weakened form of tinkle, being the frequentative of ting, a weakened form of tink. 'Cupyde the kynge tyngynge a syluer bel;' Test. of Creseide, st. 21 (Thynne). 'To ting, tinnire; to tingil, tinnire;' Levins. Cf. ting-tang, the saint's-bell (Halliwell); 'Sonner, to sound, . . . to ting, as a bell,' Cot. To make one's ears tinkle or tingle is to make them seem to ring; hence, to tingle, to vibrate, to feel a sense of vibration as when a bell is rung. Hence 'bothe his eeris shulen tynculen;' Wyclif, 1 Sam. iii. 11. See Tinkle, Tinker. β. But prob. affected by prov. E. ting, to sting, a by-form of sting. Cf. prov. E. tingling, sharp; MDu. tingel, a nettle; tingelen, 'to sting with nettles;' Hexham.

TINKER, a mender of kettles and pans. (E.) ME. tinkere, P. Plowman, A. v. 160; B. v. 317. So called because he makes a tinkling sound; from ME. tinken, to ring or tinkle. 'A cymbal tyngynge;' Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1. Of imitative origin; cf. MDu. tinge-tangen, to tingle (Hexham); also MDu. tintelen, 'to ring, tingle, or make a noise like brasse' (id.), where mod. Du. has tintelen only in the sense to tingle or sparkle. Cf. EFries. tinken, tingen; tengen, to make a bell ring; L. tinnire, to tinkle, ring, tintinnum, a tinkling; F. tinter, 'to ting, ring, tinkle,' Cot., whence les oreilles me tintent, 'mine ears tingle or glow,' id.; F. tintin, tinton, 'the ting of a bell,' id. Cf. Tudor E. tinkler, a tinker (Levins). ¶ Grimm's law does not necessarily apply to words so directly imitative as this.

TINKLE, to jingle. (E.) ME. tinklen, whence 'a cymbal tynclynge,' in some MSS. of Wyclif, 1 Cor. xiii. 1; frequentative of ME. tinken, to ring. See further under Tinker and Tingle.

TINSEL, gaudy ornament, showy lustre. (F.—L.) 'Tinsill clothe,' Baret, ed. 1580; cf. Much Ado, iii. 4. 22. 'Under a duke, no man to wear cloth of gold tinsel;' Literary Remains of K. Edw. VI, an. 1551–2; cited in Trench, Select Glossary, q.v. 'A gowne of silver tyncell;' Excerpta Historica, p. 288 (ab. 1516). 'Tinsell (dictum a Gall. estincelle, i. scintilla, a sparke). It signifieth with vs, a stuffe or cloth made partly of silke, and partly of gold or siluer, so called because it glistereth or sparkleth like starres;' Minshew, ed. 1627. [Minshew's etymology is correct; the OF. estincelle, later étincelle, lost its initial syllable just as did the F. estiquet or étiquet, which became ticket in English.]—MF. estincelle, étincelle, 'a sparke or sparckle of fire, a twinkle, a flash;' Cot.—L. scintilla, a spark; which seems to have been mispronounced as **stincilla*. Scintilla is dimin. from a form **scinta*, a spark, not used. Allied to AS. scīnan, to shine; see Shine. Der. tinsel, adj., i.e. tinsel-like; tinsel-slippered, Milton, Comus, 877. And see stencil.

TINT, a slight tinge of colour. (L.) 1. For tinct, which was the older form of the word; Hamlet, iii. 4. 91. 'The first scent of a vessel lasts, and the tinct the wool first receives;' Ben Jonson, Discoveries, Præcipiendi Modi. 'A rosy-tincted feature is heav'n's gold;' Drayton, K. John to Matilda, l. 57. Cf. tinct=dyed; Spenser, Shep. Kal. Nov. 107.—L. tinctus, pp. of tingere, to tinge; see Tinge. 2. But the mod. tint, as a term in painting, was prob. borrowed directly from Ital. tinta, a tint.—L. tincta, fem. of tinctus, pp. (as before). Der. tint, verb.

TINTINNABULATION, the ringing of bells. (L.) See E. A. Poe, The Bells. Formed from L. tintinnābulum, a bell.—L. tintinnāre, to clink, to ring; reduplicated form, from tinnire, to ring, to tinkle. Of imitative origin; cf. tink-le, ting-le.

TINY, very small. (F.—L.?) In Shak. Tw. Nt. v. 398, 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 29, v. 3. 60, K. Lear, iii. 2. 74, where it is always preceded by little; the old editions have tine or tyne. He speaks of 'a little tine boy' (twice), 'my little tyne thief,' and 'pretty little tine kick-shaws.' The word was formerly spelt tine or tyne; we find 'littel tyne child,' in a Coventry pageant pr. by Sharp; see note to Cov. Myst., ed. Halliwell, p. 414. 'A litill tyne egg,' Wars of Alexander, 507. It is almost always preceded by little, and was once a sb. 'He was constreynd . . . A lytyll tyne abak to make a bew retret,' Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 1063; 'A lytyll tyne his ey castyng hym besyde, id. 1283. 'Sir, I pray you a lytyll tyne stande backe;' Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 505. And later, we find: 'Thou hast striken the Lord of Learne A lille tinye above the knee;' Percy Folio MS., i. 192. The sense seems to be 'a little bit,' and the form corresponds to OF. tinee, lit. 'a tub-full,' from OF. tine, a vat, tub, basin, bowl.—Late L. tina, a wine-vessel (Lewis). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 300.

TIP (1), the extreme top, the end. (E.) 'The tippe of a staffe;' Levins. ME. typ, Prompt. Parv. 'Uort þe nede tippe'=until the extremity of need, i.e. until [there be] extreme need, Ancren Riwele, p. 338, l. 19. Prob. E., though not found in AS.—Du. tip, tip, end point; Low G. tipp, tip, point; up den Tipp van ter Tied, in the very nick of time, Brem. Wört.; NFries. tipp, tippken, a tip; Dan. tip, tip; Swed. tip, end, point, extremity; G. zipfel, a dimin. form. Allied to Du. and EFries. tepel, a teat, EFries. tippel, a point. Cf. MDu. tip-ken, a teat. Der. tip, verb, to place on the tip of, chiefly in the pp. tipped, as in Chaucer, C. T. 14909 (B 4093); hence the sb. tipped-staf, i.e. spiked or piked staff, Chaucer, C. T. 7319 (D 1737); and hence (just as piked-staff became pike-staff) tip-staff, a term afterwards applied to 'certain officers that wait on the judge bearing a rod tipt with silver,' Phillips; also to other officers who took men into custody. Cf. 'I typpe a staffe with yron,' Palsgrave. Also tip-toe; cf. on tiptoon=on tip-toes, Chaucer, C. T. 15313 (B 4497); tipp-le.

TIP (2), to tilt, cause to slant or lean over. (E.) Gen. in the phr. to tip up=to tilt up, or tip over=to overturn. It is a weakened form of tap, as in tip (i.e. tap) and run, a game. Thus tip up is to tilt up by giving a slight tap, or by the exercise of a slight force; cf. tip for tap (blow for blow), Bullinger's Works, i. 283, now tit for tat. From the sense of slight movement we can explain the phrase to tip the wink=to make a slight movement of the eye-lid, sufficient to warn a person; it occurs in Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 202. Johnson gives: 'tip, to strike lightly, to tap;' with an illustration from Swift: 'he tips me by the elbow.' Palsgrave has: 'I type ouer, I ouerthrowe or ouerwhelme, Je renuerse.' 'Tip, a fall;' Bradford's Works, ii. 104 (Parker Soc.). Not in AS. ME. tuppen, tipen. 'Tipe down 3onder toun;' Allit. Poems, C. 506. Cf. EFries. tuppen, to tap lightly.—Swed. tippa, 'to tap, to tip, to strike gently, to touch lightly; see Johnson's E. Dict.;' Widegren. Der. tip, sb., a slight tap, wink, hint; tip-cat.

TIPPET, a cape, a cape of a cloak. (L.—Gk.) Also tepet, as in Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, p. 301, l. 92. 'Teppet of velvet;' Paston Letters, iii. 325. ME. tivet, tepet, Chaucer, C. T. 233. AS. tæppet. 'Sipla, ān healf hruh tæppet,' i.e. a half rough tippet; Voc. 152. 14; (Vestium nomina). [We also find AS. tæppe, a fillet or band; 'Tenia, tæppan, vel dol-smeltas,' Voc. 107. 33; where tæppan is the nom. plural. Not E. words, but borrowed.]—L. tapête, cloth, hangings.—Gk. ταπητ, stem of τάπητ, a carpet, woollen rug. See Tape, Tapestry.

TIPPLE, to drink in small quantities, and habitually. (Scand.) Shak. has tippling, Antony, i. 4. 19. 'To tipple, potitare;' Levins, ed. 1570. A Scand. word; still preserved in Norweg. tipla, to drink little and often, to tipple (Aasen). It is the frequent. of Norw. tippa, to drip from a point or tip; Swed. dial. tippa, to drip, from tipp, a tip; cf. Du. tepel, a nipple, teat. See Tip (1). Der. tippel-er, tippel-ing.

TIPSY, intoxicated. (Scand.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 48. The formation of the word is difficult to explain, but it is clearly related to Tip (2), q. v. It means 'likely to tip over,' or 'unsteady;' ready to fall. Cf. ME. tipen, to upset. Cf. trick-sy, and other words with suffix -sy, in F. Hall, Modern English, p. 272. β. Wedgwood cites Swiss tips, a fuddling with drink, tipseln, to fuddle oneself, betipst, tipsy. These words present a remarkable likeness, especially as the E. and Swiss words can only be cognate, and neither language can easily have borrowed from the other; moreover, the Swiss words seem to be allied rather to tipple and to tip (1), than to tip (2). Cf. prov. E. tippy, tippiy, easily upset. Der. tipsi-ly, -ness.

TIRADE, a strain of censure or reproof. (F.—Ital.) Modern. —F. tirade, 'a draught, pull, . . . a shooting;' Cot. Hamilton explains F. tirade by 'a passage, a tirade or long speech (in a play).' The lit. sense is a drawing out, a lengthening out.—Ital. tirata, a drawing, a pulling.—Ital. tirare, to pull, draw, pluck, snatch. From Late L. tirāre, to pull, draw; of unknown origin; whence also F. tirer.

TIRE (1), to exhaust, weary, fatigue, become exhausted. (E.) ME. tiren, teorian, not a very common word. Stratmann refers us to the Towneley Mysteries, p. 126; and to p. 5 of a Fragment printed by Sir Thos. Phillips, where occur the words him teoreþ his miht=his might is exhausted. It occurs also in the compound atieren, as: 'gief mihte þe ne atiered'=if might (or power) fail thee not, i.e. if thy power be not tired out; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 29, l. 25. AS. týrgan; as in 'ðeah þū ge-týrige,' though thou grow weary; Alfred's tr. of Boethius, ch. xl (bk. v. pr. 1). The y is a mutation from eo, as in tēorian, (1) to be tired, be weary, (2) to tire, fatigue; Grein, ii. 529. β. It is remarkable that the dictionaries frequently refer tire (in the sense to be weary) to AS. tirigan, which is not the same thing, but related rather to Tarre, q. v. That tēorian is the real equivalent of E. tire may be seen by examining the uses of tēorian, getēorian, and ātēorian. One example may suffice. 'Tēorode hwæpre . . . strong . . . wērig þæs weorces'=nevertheless the strong one tired, being weary of the work; Exeter Book, ed. Thorpe, p. 436, Riddle lv, l. 16. 'Fatigatus, atered,' Voc. 170, 30. Further connexions doubtful; it can hardly be allied to E. tear, vb., or to G. zehren. Sweet marks the e long (tēoran); cf. OLow G.

tiurung, lassitude (Gallée). Der. tir-ed, tir-ed-ness, tire-some, tire-some-ness.

TIRE (2), a head-dress; as a verb, to adorn or dress the head. (F.—Teut.?) 'She . . . tired her head;' 2 Kings, ix. 30. The examples show that this is an abbreviation for attire. See esp. Prompt. Parv. p. 494: 'Tyre, or a-tyre of wemmene, Mundum muliebris.' Again, in Will. of Palerne, 1147, we have atir, but in l. 1725 we have tyr; cf. 'in no gay tyr,' Alexander and Dindimus, 883; 'tidi a-tir,' id. 599. β. We have also the verb to tire, 2 Kings, ix. 30; cf. 'Attouré, tired, dressed, attired, decked,' Cot. The ME. verb was atiren, whence atired, pp., Will. of Palerne, 1228. However, the sb. appears earlier than the verb, being spelt atyr, with the sense 'apparel;' Layamon, 3275, later text. See Attire.

TIRE (3), a hoop of iron that binds the felloes of wheels together. (F.—Teut.?) 'Tire, the ornament or dress of womens heads; also, the iron band of a cart-wheel;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The mettall [a kind of iron] is brittle and short . . . such as will not serve one whit for stroke and nail to bind cart-wheels withall, which tire indeed would [should] be made of the other that is gentle and pliable;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 14. [Here stroke = strake, rim of a wheel; see Halliwell.] β. The history of the word is obscure; it seems to me that the word is identical with Tire (2), the wheel-band being likened to a woman's tire. Tire meant to dress or arrange; 'I tyer an egge, Ie accoustre; I tyer with garmentes,' &c.; Palsgrave. To attire once meant to equip, or to furnish (N. E. D.). ¶ I have no belief in Richardson's jest-like suggestion, that a tire is a ti-er, because it ties the wheel together. The ME. tejere or tyere nowhere occurs in connexion with a wheel.

TIRE (4), to tear a prey, as is done by predatory birds. (F.—Late L.) In Shak. Venus, 56; 1 Hen. VI, i. 1. 269. ME. tiren, to tear a prey, only used of vultures, &c.; see Chaucer, Troilus, i. 787; tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 12, l. 30.—F. tirer, 'to draw, drag, . . . pull, pluck, tug, twitch;' Cot.—Late L. tirāre, to draw, extract; Dugange. See Tirade.

TIRE (5), a train. (F.—Late L.) Only in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 35.—F. tire, 'a draught, pull, . . . stretch . . . reach, gate, course, or length and continuance of a course;' Cot.—F. tirer, to draw; see Tirade.

TIRO, TYRO, a novice. (L.) Usually misspelt tyro. 'Tyro, a new fresh-water soldier, a novice, apprentice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'That timorous tyro should dare;' Blennerhasset, Introd. in Mirror for Magistrates (1578). In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, it appears as tyrone, evidently from Ital. tirone, 'a milkesop,' Florio, answering to L. acc. tirōnem.—L. tiro, a recruit, novice, tiro. Root uncertain. Der. tiro-cinium, a first campaign, school, apprenticeship; the title of a poem by Cowper.

TISIC, phthisis. (F.—Gk.) Spelt tysyke, Skelton, Magnificence, 561. See Phthisis.

TISSUE, cloth interwoven with gold or silver. (F.—L.) ME. tissew, a ribband, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 639.—F. tissu, 'a bawdrick, ribbon, fillet, or head-band of woven stuffe;' Cot. Also tissu, m., tissue, f., 'woven, plaited, interlaced;' id. Tissu was the old pp. of tistre (mod. F. tisser), to weave.—L. texere, to weave; see Text.

TIT (1), a small horse or child. (Scand.) 'The tits are little worth;' Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Metam. ix. 14; where tit means 'a little girl.' 'A little tit,' a small horse; Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. ii (R.).—Icel. tittr, a tit, bird (now obsolete); the dimin. titlingr, a sparrow, is still in use; Norweg. tita, a little bird, small trout (Aasen). The orig. sense is merely something small; cf. prov. E. titty, small; tiddy-wren, a wren (Halliwell). Der. tit-ling, a sparrow, from Icel. titlingr, as above, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also tit-lark, q. v., tit-mouse, q. v.

TIT (2), a teat. (E.) ME. titte; pl. tittes, Ancren Riwle, p. 330, l. 5. AS. tit, titt, Voc. 88, 24; pl. tittas (Toller).+Low G. titte, MDu. titte, G. zitze; cf. Welsh, did, didi, a teat. See Teat.

TIT FOR TAT, blow for blow. (E.) In Holinshed, Chron., ed. 1808, vi. 298. Perhaps a corruption of tip for tap, where tip is a slight tap; Bullinger's Works, i. 283 (Parker Society). 'That which requireth tip for tap;' Gascoigne, Works, i. 463. See Tip (2). β. Or it may be from the proverb—'To give one tint for tant,' in Walker's Proverbs (1672); see Hazlitt's Proverbs. And tint for tant seems to be an E. version of F. tant pour tant, lit. 'so much for so much.' Tit for tat is in Heywood's Prov. (1546); repr. 1874, p. 109.

TITAN, the sun-god. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. Rom. ii. 3. 4; &c. Spelt Tytan, Lydgate, Compl. of Black Knight, l. 28.—L. Titān, Titānus; whence Titānī, descendants of Titan, giants.—Gk. Titrān, the sun-god, brother of Helios.+Skt. tithā, fire; in the dict. by Böhtlingk and Roth, iii. 327.—√TEITH, to burn. Der. titan-ic, i. e. gigantic. Also titan-ium, a metal.

TITHE, a tenth part, the tenth of the produce as offered to the clergy. (E.) ME. tiithe, Chaucer, C. T. 541 (A 539). The proper sense is 'tenth;' hence tenth part. [Another spelling is tethe, as in 'the tethe hest' = the tenth commandment, Will. of Shoreham, p. 101, l. 1; AS. tēoda, tenth.] β. The form tiithe answers to AS. suffix -tigōða, as in twen-tigōða, twentieth. Also spelt -teogōða, O Merc. -tegōða; allied to Gk. dēkaros, tenth, from dēka, ten, see Ten. We also have ten-th, in which n is retained; so that tenth and tiithe are doublets. Cf. Icel. tíund, tenth, tiithe; see Decimal. Der. tiithe, verb, ME. tithen, tethen, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 73, AS. tēodian, Matt. xxiii. 23; tith-er, Chaucer, C. T. 6896; tith-ing, ME. tething, a district containing ten families, Rob. of Glouc. p. 267, l. 5402.

TITILLATION, a tickling. (F.—L.) [The verb titillare is in later use; cf. 'titillating dust,' Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 84.] The sb. is in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 766.—F. titillation, a tickling; Cot.—L. titillātiōnem, acc. of titillātiō, a tickling.—L. titillāre, to tickle.

TITLARK, a kind of lark. (Scand. and E.) Lit. 'small lark;' see Tit and Lark.

TITLE, an inscription set over or at the beginning of a book, a name of distinction. (F.—L.) ME. title, Chaucer, C. T. 14328 (B 3512); Wyclif, John, xix. 19.—OF. title; mod. F. titre, by change from l to r.—L. titulum, acc. of titulus, a superscription on a tomb, altar, &c.; an honourable designation. Der. title, verb; titl-ed, All's Well, iv. 2. 2; title-deed; title-page, Per. ii. 3. 4; titul-ar, from F. titulaire, 'titular, having a title,' Cot., as if from L. **titulāris*, from L. titulāre, verb, to give a title to. Hence titular-ly, titular-y. See also Tittle.

TITLING, a small bird. (Scand.) See Tit.

TITMOUSE, a kind of small bird. (Scand. and E.) Not connected with mouse; the true pl. should be titmouses, yet titmice is usual, owing to confusion with mouse. In Spenser, Shep. Kal., Nov. 26, it is spelt titmose. ME. titmose; spelt tytemose, Prompt. Parv.; titmase, Voc. 640. 28. Compounded of tit, small, or a small bird, Icel. tittr (see Tit); and AS. māse, a name for several kinds of small birds. β. The AS. māse occurs in: 'Sigatula, fræc-māse;' Parra, col-māse; Parrula, spic-māse, all names of birds; see Voc. 286. 13-15. The a is long, as shown by the ME. -mose.+Du. mees, a titmouse; G. meise, a titmouse; OHG. meisa; Icel. meisingr (F. mésange). Teut. type **māisōn-*, f. The sense was prob. 'twitterer;' cf. L. māerere (for **maesere*, cf. pp. maes-ius), to lament, mourn (Franck). Cf. also L. merula (for **mis-ula*), from the weak grade **mis*; see Merle.

TITTER, to giggle, laugh restrainedly. (E.) Cf. twitter. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 276. The same as ME. titeren, to chatter, prattle, tell idle tales, whence titerere, a teller of tales, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. A frequentative form from a base TIT, expressive of repeating the sound ti, just as tattle expresses the repetition of ta. See further under Tattle. Cf. Twitter. Der. titter, sb.

TITTLE, a jot, small particle. (F.—L.) ME. titel; titil, used by Wyclif to translate L. apex; Matt. v. 18; Luke, xvi. 17. [Really a doublet of title.]—OF. title, a title; (F. titre, a title); MF. titre, titre, 'a tittle, a small line drawn over an abridged word, to supply letters wanting; also a title,' &c.; Cot.—L. titulum, acc. of titulus, a title, used by Petronius in the sense of sign or token. β. In Late L. titulus must have meant a mark over a word in writing, as this sense appears again in Span. tilde, Port. til, a stroke over a letter such as the mark over Span. ñ; also in the Catalan tiilla; Wallachian title, a mark of an accent, cited by Diez, s. v. tilde. The latter forms are unmistakably Latin. See Title. ¶ Not allied to tit.

TITTLE-TATTLE, prattle. (E.) See Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 248. A reduplicated form of tattle. Note the use of titelere, also spelt titerere, a prattler, P. Plowman, B. xx. 297. See Tattle and Twaddle; and see Titter.

TO, in the direction of, as far as. (E.) ME. tō, Chaucer, C. T. 16; and, as sign of the gerund, 13, 17; now considered as the sign of the infin. mood, the gerundial use being nearly lost. AS. tō, prep.; also a sign of the gerund as distinct from the infin. mood; Grein, ii. 536-542.+Du. toe; G. zu; MHG. zuo, ze; OHG. za, ze, zi, zuo.+Russ. do, to, up to. Supposed to be further related to Gk. -δε, towards, as in οὐκὸν-δε, homewards; see Curtius, i. 289. Perhaps also to OIrish do, to; OWelsh di (mod. W. i), to; W. dy- as a prefix; see Rhys, Lectures on W. Philology. Doublet, too, q. v. And see to- (2), to-ward, to-day, to-night.

TO- (1), prefix, in twain, asunder, to pieces. (E.) Retained in the phr. all to-brake = utterly broke asunder, Judges, ix. 53. With regard to the dispute as to whether it should be printed all to-brake or all-to brake, it is certain that only the former is etymologically correct; but the phrase was already so ill understood in the Tudor period that such a mistaken use as all-to brake was possible, though it is charitable to give our translators the benefit of the doubt. It is purely a question of chronology. At first the prefix to- was used without all; later, all was often added as well, not only before the prefix to-, but before the prefixes for- and bi- also; next, all was considered as in some way belonging to to, as if all-to were short for altogether (which it is not), and consequently all-to appeared as a sort of adverb, and was considered as such, apparently, by Surrey and Latimer. It would be difficult to find any clear example of this latest use before A.D. 1530. It began with AS. tō-, prefix; appearing in tō-beran, to bear apart, remove; tō-berstan, to burst asunder; tō-blūwan, to blow asunder, dissipate; tō-brecan, to break asunder; and in nearly fifty other verbs, for which see Grein, ii. 542-549. We may particularly note 'hyra setlu he tō-bræc'=he brake in pieces their seats, Matt. xxi. 12. 2. ME. to-, prefix; appearing in tobean, to beat in pieces, tobiten, to bite in pieces, tobreken, to break in pieces; and in nearly a hundred other verbs; for which see Stratmann's Dict., 3rd ed., pp. 565-568. We may particularly note 'al his bondes he to-brak for ioye'=all his bonds he brake in twain for joy; Will. of Palerne, 3237. β. It should also be observed that most verbal prefixes (such as for-, be-) were usually written apart from the verb in old MSS.; ignorance of this fact has misled many. Good examples of the addition of al as an intensive, meaning 'wholly,' are the following. '[He] al to-tare his a-tir þat he to-tere miȝt'; Will. of Palerne, 3884; 'al for-waked'=entirely worn out with lying awake, id. 790; 'al bi-weped for wo'=all covered with tears for wo, id. 661; 'al is to-brosten thilke regioun,' Chaucer, C. T. 2759 (A 2757); 'he suld be soyne to-fruschit al'=he would soon be dashed in pieces, Barbour, Bruce, x. 597. The last instance is particularly instructive, as al follows the pp. instead of preceding it.

3. All-to or al-to, when (perhaps) misunderstood. 'To-day redy ripe, to-morowe all-to-shaken,' Surrey, Sonnet 9, last line. 'We be fallen into the dirt, and be all-to-dirtied,' Latimer, Remains, p. 397 (Parker Soc.). 'Smiling speakers . . . love and all-to love him,' Latimer, Sermons, p. 289. The last instance is a clear one. Spenser has all to-torne, F. Q. v. 9. 10, and all to-worne in the same stanza; all to-rent, F. Q. iv. 7. 8. Milton has all-to-ruffled, Comus, 380; this is a very late example. B. Etymologically, the AS. tō- is cognate with OFries. to-, te-; OHG. zar-, zer-, mod. G. zer-, as in zerbrechen, to break in pieces, pt. t. zerbrach (=to-brake). The sense of this prefix is 'in twain,' or 'asunder'; but it is difficult to connect it with AS. twa, two, or even with L. dis-.

TO- (2), prefix, to. (E.) Besides the prefix to- (=in twain) discussed above, we also have the prep. to in composition in some verbs, &c. Of these compounds, we still use to-ward, q. v. Others are obsolete; the chief are the sbs. tocume, advent, toflight, a refuge, tohope, hope, toname, a nick-name; and the verb tonejhen, to approach, Wyclif, Judith, xiv. 14. See Stratmann. And see Today.

TOAD, an amphibious animal. (E.) ME. tode; spelt toode, Prompt. Parv., p. 495; tade, Pricke of Conscience, 6900. AS. tādige; 'Buffo, tādige, Voc. 122. 11. Also tādīe, id. 321. 23. Root unknown. The Dan. tudse, Swed. tåssa, a toad, must be from a different root. Der. tad-pole, q. v.; also toad-stool, spelt todestoole, Spenser, Shep. Kal., Dec. 69, and in Palsgrave; toad-flax; toad-eater, formerly an assistant to a mountebank (see Wedgwood, and N. and Q. 3rd S. i. 128, 176, 236, 276, v. 142), now shortened to today; toad-stone, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 13, § 3.

TOAST (1), bread scorched before the fire. (F.—L.) ME. tost, toost, whence the verb tosten, to toast; see Prompt. Parv. p. 497.—OF. toster, to toast (Godefroy); the usual OF. sb. was tostēe, 'a toast of bread'; marked as a Picard word in Cotgrave.—L. tostus, pp. of torrere, to parch; see Torrid. Cf. Span. tostar, torrar, to toast, tostada, a toast, slice of toasted bread; Port. tostado, toasted, tostar, torrar, to toast. Der. toast, verb; toast-er, toast-ing-iron, K. John, iv. 3. 99.

TOAST (2), a person whose health is drunk. (F.—L.) It was formerly usual to put toasted bread in liquor; see Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 5. 3. The story of the origin of the present use of the word is given in the Tatler, no. 24, June 4, 1709. 'Many wits of the last age will assert that the word, in its present sense, was known among them in their youth, and had its rise from an accident at the town of Bath, in the reign of king Charles the Second. It happened that, on a public day, a celebrated beauty of those times was in the Cross Bath, and one of the crowd of her admirers took a glass of the water in which the fair one stood, and drank her health to the company. There was in the place a gay fellow half fuddled, who offered to jump in, and swore, though he liked not the liquor, he would have the toast. He was opposed in his resolution; yet this whim gave foundation to the present honour which is done to the lady we mention in our liquors, who has ever since been called a toast.' Whether the story be true or not, it may be seen that a toast, i. e. a health, easily took its name from being the usual accompaniment to liquor, esp. in loving-cups, &c. As to this putting of toast into drinks, see Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 340. Der. toast, vb.; toast-master, the announcer of toasts at a public dinner.

TOBACCO, a narcotic plant. (Span.—Hayti.) Formerly spelt tabacco, Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 4 (last speech). See remarks in Wheatley's Introduction to Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour. Harrison fixes on 1573 as the date when the smoking of tobacco became general in England. Spelt tabacco in Hakluyt, Voy. ii. 2. 158. Cotgrave mentions tobacco, s. v. Nicotiane.—Span. tabaco, tobacco. Las Casas (Hist. of the Indies) says that tabaco was the name of the tube or pipe in which the Indians or Caribs smoked the plant, transferred by the Spaniards to the herb itself. Oviedo (1535) says tabaco is a Hayti word; see Oviedo, ed. 1851, Madrid, iv. 96. So also Clavigero, in his Conquest of Mexico (E. transl. i. 430), says: 'tabaco is a word taken from the Haitine language,' i. e. the language spoken in the island of Hayti or St. Domingo. Der. tobacco-nist, a coined word, orig. used, not of the seller (as now), but of the smoker of tobacco; see examples in Trench, Select Glossary; tobacco-pipe.

TOBOGGAN, a kind of snow-sledge. (Amer. Indian). Said to be a Canadian perversion of an American Indian odabagan, a sledge. S. T. Rand, in his Micmac Vocabulary, gives the Micmac form as tobaakun (=to<sup>h</sup>akun), a sled. Micmac is a language belonging to the Algonkin family.

TOCHER, a dowry. (Gaelic.) 'Hey for a lass wi' a tocher,' Burns (Song).—Gael. and Irish tochar, a dowry, assigned portion.—OIrish tochur, a putting, assigning; tochurim, I put.—OIrish to-, do-, to, prep. and verbal prefix; cuir-im, I put, assign.

TOCSIN, an alarm-bell, or the sound of it. (F.—Teut. and L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. He quotes: 'The priests went up into the steeple, and rang the bells backward, which they call tockaine, whereupon the people . . . flocked together,' Fulke, Answer to P. Frarine (1580), p. 52.—MF. toquesing, 'an allarm bell, or the ringing thereof,' Cot. Mod. F. tocsin (see Littré).—OF. toquer, 'to clap, knock, hit,' Cot.; and OF. sing (Norm. dial. sin), 'a sign, mark, . . . also a bell or the sound of a bell, whence tocsing, an allarm bell,' id. Thus it means 'a striking of the signal-bell.' β. The Norm. dial. toquer, Picard toquer, are variants of F. toucher, to touch; see Touch. The OF. sing, mod. F. signe, is from L. signum, a mark, hence a signal, signal-bell; see Sign. Cf. AF. sein, a bell; Liber Albus, p. 119. Thus toc-sin=touch-sign. See Tucket.

TOD, a bush; a certain measure of wool; a fox. (Scand.) 'An yuie todde,' an ivy-bush; Spenser, Shep. Kal., March, 67. 'Wulle is bought by the sacke, by the tod, by the stone,' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 191. Palsgrave has 'Todde of woll'=tod of wool; and 'tode of chese'=tod of cheese. See Nares. Tod, a fox, occurs in Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary, hymn 4; and see Jamieson's Sc. Dict. The fox is supposed to be so named from his bushy tail.—Icel. toddi (nearly obsolete), a tod of wool; a bit, a piece.—Du. todde, a rag; EFries. todde, a bundle; G. zotte, zote, a tuft of hair hanging together, a rag, anything shaggy. Allied to EFries. todden, to trail, to draw along, drag after one. Perhaps allied to Ted.

TODAY, this day. (E.) Compounded of to, prep., and day. The etymology is obscured by the disuse of the prep. to in the old sense of 'for'; thus to day=for the day; to night=for the night; &c. Stratmann cites me ches him to kinge=people chose him for king, Rob. of Glouc. p. 302; yeuen to wyue=to give to wife, Chaucer, C. T. 1862 (A 1860). See particularly the article on AS. tō in Grein, p. 540: he gives examples of tō dage, for the day, today; tō dage ðissum, for this day, today; tō midre nihte, to or at midnight; tō morgene=for the morn, to-morrow. Hence our to-day, to-morrow, to-night, and prov. E. to-year, i. e. for the present year, this year; ME. toyere, Chaucer, C. T., 5750 (D 168).

TODDLE, to walk unsteadily, as a child. (E.) Given as a Northern word by Todd, in his additions to Johnson. The same as Lowl. Sc. tottle, to walk with short steps; Jamieson. Further, tottle is equivalent to totter, the frequentative suffixes -le and -er being equivalent; see Totter.—Swed. tulta, to toddle; the spelling with l is duly explained s. v. totter. And cf. G. (Bavar.) zotteln, to toddle, though probably formed in another way.

TODDY, a mixture of spirits. (Hindustani.—Pers.) 'The toddy-tree is not unlike the date or palm,' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 29 (R.).—Hindustani tāri, tādi, 'vulgarly toddy, the juice or sap of the palmyra-tree and of the cocoa-nut [which] when allowed to stand . . . becomes a fiery and highly intoxicating spirit,' H. H. Wilson, Glossary of Indian Terms, p. 510.—Hind. tār, 'a palm-tree, . . . most appropriate to the Palmyra, from the stem of which the juice is extracted which becomes toddy,' id.—Pers. tār, 'a species of palm-tree from which an intoxicating liquor, toddy, is extracted,' Rich. Dict. p. 353. The r in the Hind. word has a peculiar (cerebral) sound, which has come to be represented by d in English. Cf. Skt. tāla-, the palmyra tree.

TO-DO, stir, bustle. (E.) 'What a to-do is here!' Evelyn, Diary, Mar. 22, 1675. Compounded of to, prep., and do, verb. See Ado.

TOE, one of the five small members at the end of the foot. (E.) ME. too, pl. toon, Chaucer, C. T. 14868 (B 4052). AS. tā, pl. tān or taan, Laws of Æthelbirht, §§ 70, 71, 72, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 20. This is a contracted form, standing for tāhe; O Merc. tāhae, Corpus Gloss. 141. + Du. teen; Icel. tā, pl. tær; Dan. taa, pl. taær; Swed. tå; G. zehe; OHG. zēha, a toe, also a finger. We also find O Low G. tēwa, a toe (Gallée); with w (< gw) for h (< hw). β. All from Teut. type **taihwōn-*, f. Possibly allied to L. digitus (< **dic-itus*), a finger (Walde). See Digit and Token. ¶ Distinct from toe in mistletoe. Der. to-ed, having toes.

TOFFEE, TOFFY, a coarse kind of candy, made of sugar or molasses, &c. (F.—Malay.) In the United States, it is usually taffy. — F. tafia, a spirit made from molasses; in use in 1722 (Hatzfeld). — Malay tāfia, the same. See Ratafia.

TOFT, a green knoll, open ground, homestead. (Scand.) ME. toft, a knoll, P. Plowm. B. prol. 14. Late AS. toft (Toller). — Icel. toft (pron. toft), also tuft (pron. tuft), toft, tomt (the oldest spelling), a place to build on; Swed. tomt, the site of a building. Perhaps for **tumft* < **tum-f(e)t*, cognate with Gk. δά-πεδον, soil, floor; lit. 'site for building.' From the weak grade of **dem*, to build (Gk. δέμ-ειν); and **pedom*, as in Gk. πέδον, ground, earth. See Dan. tomt in Falk.

TOGA, the mantle of a Roman citizen. (L.) Whether toge = toga really occurs in Shakespeare is doubtful. Phillips gives it in his Dict. — L. toga, a kind of mantle, lit. a covering. — L. tog-, 2nd grade of tegere, to cover; see Tegument.

TOGETHER, in the same place, at the same time. (E.) ME. to-gedere, to-gedre, to-gidere, P. Plowman, B. prol. 46; togideres, id. xvi. 80. We even find the compound altogedere as early as in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 320, l. 25. For the spelling with d, cf. ME. fader, a father, moder, a mother. AS. tō-gædere, tō-gædre; together, Grein, ii. 544. — AS. tō, to; and gador, together, Grein, i. 491; see further under Gather. Der. al-together.

TOIL (1), labour, fatigue; as a verb, to labour. (F.—L.) ME. toil; the dat. toile, in Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1802, means a tussle or struggle. 'And when these com on ther was so grete toile and romour of noyse that wonder it was to heere, and therewith aroos so grete a duste;' Merlin, ed. Wheatley, p. 393, l. 1. Lowl. Sc. tuyll, disturbance; Bernardus, &c., ed. Lumby, p. 24, l. 45 (E. E. T. S.); tuyll, vb., to trouble, id. p. 27, l. 123. Thus the old sense was rather turmoil or disturbance than labour. Cf. AF. toyl, glossed 'strif,' Walter de Bibbesworth; in Wright, Vocab. 147, l. 3. Also AF. toiler, to strive; A Nomina, ed. Skeat, l. 131. β. As to the verb toilen, its meaning was also different from that of mod. E. toil. We find: 'reliche toyled to and fro' = ruefully pulled or tugged to and fro, Debate between Body and Soul, l. 368, in Mätzner, Sprachproben, i. 100. Also: 'tore and toyled' = torn and pulled about or spoilt, Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 143, l. 372. We may also note Lowland Sc. tuill, toil (Jamieson); and perhaps Sc. tuilzie, tuilyie, a quarrel, broil, struggle, is closely related; as well as tulze, to harass, occurring in Barbour's Bruce, iv. 152, where the Edinb. MS. has the pp. toilzit. γ. The origin seems to be found in OF. toillier, MF. touiller, 'filthily to mix or mingle, confound or shuffle together; to intangle, trouble, or pester by scurvy meddling, also to bedirt, begrime, besmear, smeech, beray;' Cot. The origin of this F. word is obscure; but Hatzfeld derives it from L. tudiculāre, to stir up (correctly, as it seems). — L. tudicula, a machine for bruising olives, dimin. of tudes, a mallet. — L. tud-, as in tu-tud-i, pt. t. of tundere, to beat. ¶ Sometimes derived from MDu. tuylen, 'to till, or to manure lands,' Hexham; cf. tuyt, sb., 'tilling or manuring of lands,' id.; but it seems impossible to explain the senses of ME. toilen from this source only. Der. toil-some, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 29; toil-some-ness.

TOIL (2), a net or snare. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 362. The pl. toyles is in Spenser, Astrophel, 97. — F. toile, 'cloth, linen cloth, also, a stalking-horse of cloth; toile de araigne, a cob-web; pl. toiles, toils, or a hay to inclose or intangle wild beasts in;' Cot. — L. tēla, a web, thing woven; for **tex-la*. — L. texere, to weave; see Text. Der. toil-et (below).

TOILET, TOILETTE, a small cloth on a dressing-table; hence, a dressing-table, or the operation of dressing. (F.—L.) 'Toilet, a kind of table-cloth, . . . made of fine linnen, &c. spread upon a table . . . where persons of quality dress themselves; a dressing-cloth;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt toylet in Cotgrave. — F. toilette, 'a toylet, the stuff which drapers lap about their cloths, also a bag to put nightcloths in;' Cot. Dimin. of toile, cloth; see Toil (2).

TOISE, a French measure of length. (F.—L.) It contains 6 feet, and a little over  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inches. — F. toise, 'a fadome, a measure containing six feet in length;' Cot. Cf. Ital. tesa, a stretching. — L. tensa, sc. brachia, the [length of the] outstretched arms, neut. pl. of pp. of tendere, to stretch. See Tense (2).

TOKAY, a white wine. (Hungary.) Mentioned in Townson's Travels in Hungary (1797); see quotation in Todd's Johnson. Also in Fielding, The Miser (1732), A. iii. Sc. 3. So named from Tokay, a town in Hungary, at some distance E.N.E. from Pesth.

TOKEN, a mark, sign, memorial, coin. (E.) ME. token, Chaucer, C. T. 13289 (B 1549). The o answers to AS. ā, as usual. AS. tācen, tācn, a very common word; Grein, ii. 520. + Du. teeken, a sign, mark, token, miracle; Icel. tākn, teikn; Dan. tegn; Swed. tecken; G. zeichen; Goth. taikns. Teut. types **taiknom*, n., **taikniz*, fem.; allied to Teach. The base **taik* answers to Idg. **doig*, 2nd grade of **deig*, which seems to be a variant of Idg. **deik*, to show, indicate; cf. L. dig-nus, worthy. Brugmann, i. § 762 (3). Cf. Index, Diction. Cf. L. in-dic-āre, to point out, AS. tīhan, Goth. gateihan, to show, G. zeigen, to show. Der. be-token.

TOLERATE, to bear, endure, put up with. (L.) 'To tollerate those things;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 14, § 2. — L. tolerātus, pp. of tolerāre, to endure; allied to tollere, to lift, bear. — **TEL*, to lift, bear; cf. Skt. tu, to lift, Gk. τῆλαι, to suffer, AS. þolian, to endure, L. lātus, pp. (for lātus). See Thole (2). Der. tolera-ble, from F. tolerable, 'tollerable,' Cot., from L. tolerābilis, that can be endured; toler-abil-y, toler-able-ness; toler-at-ion, from F. tolleration, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littré), from L. acc. tolerātiōnem, endurance; toler-ance, from MF. tolerance, 'tolleration, sufferance,' Cot., from L. tolerantia, sufferance; toler-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of tolerāre. From the same root are a-tlas, tal-ent, ex-tol; e-late, col-late, di-late, ob-late, pre-late, pro-late, re-late, trans-late, legis-late, ab-lat-ive, super-lat-ive.

TOLL (1), a tax for the privilege to use a road or sell goods in a market. (L.—Gk.) ME. tol, tribute, Wyclif, Rom. xiii. 7. AS. toll, Matt. xvii. 25. + Du. tol; Icel. tollr; Dan. told (for **toll*); Swed. tull; G. zoll. β. All from Teut. type **tullos*, m.; which might be explained as **tulnoz*, from the weak grade **tul-* (with suffix -noz) of Teut. **tel-*, the root of Tale. But the existence of by-forms, as AS. toln, a toll (whence toln-ere, a tollier), OSax. tolna, toll, OFries. tolne, OHG. zollan-tuom, as well as OHG. zolanari, MDu. tollenaer, a tollier, suggest that all these were borrowed from Late L. tollōnium, for L. telōnium; from Gk. τελώνιον, a toll-house, Matt. ix. 9. Cf. also F. tonlieu, a toll; from Late L. tonleium, toleneum, for L. telōnium. γ. The Gk. τελώνιον is from τέλος, a tax, toll, allied to L. tollere; to take, and Gk. τάλαντον (see Talent); a distinct word from τέλος, with the sense of 'end.' Der. toll, verb, ME. tollen, Chaucer, C. T. 564 (A 562); toll-er, ME. tollere, P. Plowman, B. prol. 220; tol-booth, ME. tolbothe, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 9; toll-bar, -gate, -house.

TOLL (2), to pull a large bell; to sound as a bell. (E.) We now say 'a bell tolls,' i.e. sounds, but the old usage was 'to toll a bell,' i.e. to pull it, set it ringing, as in Minshew, Skinner, and Phillips. The latter explains to toll a bell by 'to ring a bell after a particular manner.' It is remarkable that the sense of 'sound' occurs as early as in Shakespeare, who has, 'the clocks do toll;' Hen. V. chorus to act iv. l. 15. Yet we may be satisfied that the present word, which has given some trouble to etymologists, is rightly explained by Nares, Todd, and Wedgwood, who take toll to be the ME. tollen, to pull, entice, draw, and Wedgwood adds: 'To toll the bells is when they ring slowly to invite the people into church.' The double sense of toll is remarkably shown by two quotations given by Richardson from Dryden, Duke of Guise, Act iv: 'Some crowd the spires, but most the hallow'd bells And softly toll for souls departing knells;' and again: 'When hollow murmurs of their evening-bells Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them [invite them] to their cells.' Minshew has: 'To toll a bell,' and 'to tolle, draw on or entice.' See examples in Nares and Todd. β. ME. tollen. 'Tollyn, or meyn, or steryn to doon, Incito, provoco, excito;' Prompt. Parv. 'Tollare, or styare to do goode or badde, Excitator, instigator;' id. '[He] tollyd [drew] hys oune wyf away;' Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 3952. 'This tolleth him touward thee' = this draws him towards you; Ancrén Riwe, p. 290, l. 5. There is a long note on this curious word, with numerous examples, in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 110; the oldest sense seems to be to coax or fondle, entice, draw towards one. γ. All is clear so far; but the origin of ME. tollen is obscure; we may suppose it to be nearly related to AS. fortyllan, to allure, Grein, i. 332; cf. ME. tullen, to entice, lure, Chaucer, C. T. 4132 (A 4134). See Till (3).

TOLU, a kind of resin. (S. America.) Also called Tolu balsam or balsam of Tolu. 'Balme . . . from . . . Tollu, not farre from Carthage;' E. G., tr. of Acosta, Hist. Indies (1604), bk. iv. ch. 28. Named from Tolu, a place on the N.W. coast of New Granada, in S. America.

TOM, a pet name for Thomas. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) Spelt Thomme, P. Plowman, B. v. 28. — L. Thōmās. — Gk. Θωμάς, Matt. x. 3. Lit.

'twin'; cf. Heb. tōmīm, pl., twins. This is why Thomas was also called Didymus; from Gk. δίδυμος, a twin. Der. tom-boy, tom-cat, tom-tit.

TOMAHAWK, a light war-hatchet of the N. American Indians. (W. Indian.) Capt. J. Smith has: 'Tomahacks, axes'; in his Vocabulary of Indian words; Works, p. 44. From the Algonkin tomehagen, Mohegan tumnahegan, Delaware tamoihecan, a war-hatchet (Webster); Micmac tumigun (S. T. Rand). 'Explained by Lacombe from the Cree dialect; otamahuk, knock him down; otamahawaw, he is knocked down'; Cent. Dict.

TOMATO, a kind of fruit, a love-apple. (Span.—Mexican.) 'Tomates, which are . . . very wholesome'; E. G., tr. of Acosta, Hist. Indies (1604); bk. iv. ch. 20. From Span. (and Port.) tomate, a tomato; we probably used final o for e because o is so common an ending in Spanish. Borrowed from Mexican tomatl.

TOMAUN, a Persian gold coin. (Pers.—Mongol.) Worth about 7s. 6d. 'A Toman is five marks sterling'; Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (1638), p. 225 (Yule).—Pers. tūmān, 'a gold coin worth about 10s.'; Palmer. From a Mongol word meaning 'ten thousand'; spelt toman by Marco Polo, bk. i. ch. 54 (Yule).

TOMB, a grave, vault for the dead. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. toumbe, tombe, Chaucer, C. T. 10832 (F 518); tumbe, Layamon, 6080, later text.—OF. tumbe; F. tombe, 'a tombe'; Cot.—L. tumba, a tomb (White).—Gk. τύμβη, for the common form τύμβος, a tomb, sepulchre; properly a burial-mound. + Irish tomm, a little hill; Skt. tuṅga-, prominent, a height. Brugmann, i. § 103. Prob. allied to L. tumulus (Curtius, ii. 139); see TUMULUS. Der. tomb-less, Hen. V, i. 2. 229; tomb-stone; en-tomb.

TOMBAC, TOMBACK, a variety of brass. (F.—Port.—Malay.—Skt.) F. tombac (Hatzfeld).—Port. tambaca, 'tambac,' Vieyra; (and see Yule).—Malay tambaga, copper.—Skt. tāmraka-m, copper (Benfey).

TOMBOY, a rude girl. (L.—Gk.—Heb.; and E.) In Shak. Cymb. i. 6. 122. From Tom and Boy. ¶ So also tom-cat, tom-tit, tom-fool.

TOME, a volume of a book. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave.—F. tome, 'a tome, or volume'; Cot.—L. tomus, acc. of tomus, a volume.—Gk. τόμος, a section; hence, a volume. From τομ-, 2nd grade of τεμ-, as in τέμνειν, to cut.—✓TEM, to cut, whence L. tondere, to shear; see TONSURE. Der. (from same root) ana-tom-y, a-tom, en-tom-o-logy, epi-tom-e, litho-tom-y, phlebo-tom-y, zoo-tom-y.

TOMORROW, on the morrow, on the morn succeeding this one. (E.) ME. to morwe, P. Plowman. B. ii. 43. From to, prep., with the sense of 'for' or 'on'; and morwe, morrow. So also AS. tō morgen; Luke xiii. 32 (MS. A.). See Today and Morrow.

TOMTIT, a small bird. (L.—Gk.—Heb.; and Scand.) In the Tatler, no. 112; Dec. 27, 1709. From Tom and Tit, q.v.

TOMTOM, a kind of drum. (Bengali.) From Bengali ṭanṭan, vulgarly tom-tom, a small drum, esp. one beaten to bespeak notice to a public proclamation; laxly applied to any kind of drum; H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 509.

TON, TUN, a large barrel; 4 hogsheads; 20 hundredweight. (C.) We use ton for a weight; and tun for a cask; but the word is all one. Properly a large barrel, hence, the contents of a large barrel; and hence, a heavy weight. ME. tonne, Chaucer, C. T. 3892. AS. tunne, a barrel; 'Cupa, tunne,' Voc. 123. 9; 'Cuba, tunne,' id. 16. 21 (8th cent.); the pl. tunnan is in the A. S. Chron. an. 852. We find also Du. ton, a tun; Icel. and Swed. tunna, Dan. tønde, a tun, cask; G. tonne, a cask, also a heavy weight; Low L. tunna, tonna, whence F. tonneau, 'a tun,' Cot., Irish, and Gael. tunna, Irish tonna, W. tynell, a tun, barrel. β. The Low L. tunna, a cask, written tunne, occurs in the Cassel Glossary of the 9th century; see Bartsch, Chrest. Franc. col. 2, l. 15. It is supposed to be of Celtic origin; from the OIrish tonn, a skin, a hide, hence 'a wine-skin'; cognate with OGael. tonn, W. tonn, skin, hide. Celtic type **tunnā*, f. (Macbain; Stokes-Fick, p. 135). ¶ This explains AS. tyncen, a small wine-skin, used to support a swimmer; Ælfred's Orosius, ii. 4; ed. Sweet, p. 72, l. 30. Der. tonn-age, a coined word; tunn-el, q.v. Doublet, tun, q.v.

TONE, the sound emitted by a stretched string, the character of a sound, quality of voice. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt toone in Levins. In Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 112. ME. ton, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 292 (riming with nōn, noon).—F. ton, 'a tune or sound'; Cot.—L. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound.—Gk. τόνος, a thing stretched, a rope, sinew, tone, note; from the sound of a stretched string.—Gk. τον-, 2nd grade of τεν-, Idg. ✓TEN, to stretch; Skt. tan, to stretch, Gk. τέννειν, to stretch; see TEND (1). Der. tone, vb.; ton-ed; ton-ic, increasing the tone or giving vigour, a late word, from Gk. τονικός, relating to stretching. Also a-ton-ic, bary-tone, mono-tone, oxy-tone, semi-tone; in-tone. Doublet, tune, q.v.

TONGS, an instrument consisting of two jointed bars of metal, used for holding and lifting. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 44. But earlier, the singular form tonge or tange is usual. ME. tange, tonge. 'Thu tuest þarmid so doþ a tonge'=thou twingest therewith as doth a tong; Owl and Nightingale, 156. AS. tange; 'Forceps, tange,' Voc. 336. 25. Also spelt tang, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 67, l. 3. + Du. tang, a pair of tongs or pincers; Icel. töng (pl. tangir); Dan. tang; Swed. tång; G. zange. β. All from Teut. type **tangā*, f., with the sense 'a biter' or 'nipper'; cf. E. nippers, pincers (Fick, iii. 116). From the base **tang-*, nasalised form of **tah-* (Idg. **dak-*), to bite.—✓DENK, to bite; cf. Gk. δάννειν, to bite (from the weak grade), Skt. dañç, daç, to bite, dañça-, a bite, dañçaka-, a crab (a pincher). In particular, cf. OHG. zanga, a pair of tongs, with OHG. zanger, biting, pinching. See Tang (1), Tough. Brugmann, i. § 420, 431 (3).

TONGUE, the fleshy organ in the mouth, used in tasting, swallowing, and speech. (E.) The spelling with final -ue is of Norman origin, to show that the ng was not palatalised; cf. F. langue; a better spelling is tong, as in Spenser, F. Q., introd. to b. i. st. 2. ME. tunge, tonge, Chaucer, C. T. 267 (A 265). AS. tunge, a tongue, Luke, i. 64. + Du. tong; Icel. and Swed. tunga; Dan. tunge; G. zunge, OHG. zunga; Goth. tuggō (= **tungō*). β. All from Teut. type **tungōn-*, f. Further related to OL. dingua, L. lingua (whence F. langue), the tongue. Allied to LINGUAL. Brugmann, i. § 441. Der. tongue, vb., Cymb. v. 4. 148; tongue-ed; tongue-less, Rich. II, i. 1. 105; tongue-tied, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 104. From the same root are lingu-al, ling-o, langu-age.

TONIC, strengthening. (Gk.) See Tone.

TONIGHT, this night. (E.) See Today.

TONSIL, one of two glands at the root of the tongue. (F.—L.) 'Tonsils or almonds in the mouth'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 7. § 1.—F. tonsille; tonsilles, pl., 'certain kernels at the root of the tongue'; Cot.—L. tonsilla, a sharp pointed pole stuck in the ground to fasten vessels to the shore; pl. tonsillæ, the tonsils. 'There is one [Latin] sb. in -li-, viz. L. tōlēs, pl. m. "wen on the neck," for **tons-li-*, from tens-, "to stretch," Goth. at-thins-an, to draw towards one, Lith. tēs-ti, to stretch by pulling; tonsillæ, "tonsils," points to an older form **tons-lo-* or **tons-lā*," Brugmann, ii. § 98. Cf. Thistle.

TONSURE, a clipping of the hair, esp. the corona of hair worn by Romish priests. (F.—L.) ME. tonsure, Gower, C. A. iii. 291; bk. viii. 482.—F. tonsure, 'a sheering, clipping, the shaven crown of a priest'; Cot.—L. tonsūra, a clipping; cf. tonsus, pp. of tondere, to shear, clip. Cf. Gk. τένδειν, to gnaw; for **τέμν-ειν*; ultimately allied to Gk. τέμνειν, to cut; see Tome.

TONTINE, a certain financial scheme, the gain of which falls to the longest liver. (F.—Ital.) See Haydn's Dict. of Dates, and Littré. First started at Paris, about A.D. 1653.—F. ton-tine, a ton-tine. Named from Lorenzo Tonti, a Neapolitan, who originated the scheme.

TOO, more than enough, likewise. (E.) The emphatic form of to, prep. ME. to; 'to badde'=too bad; Will. of Palerne, 5024.—AS. tō, too; Grein, ii. 542, q.v. The same word as tō, prep., but differently used. See To.

TOOL, an instrument used by workmen. (E.) ME. tol, tool; pl. toles, toolles, P. Plowman, A. xi. 133; B. x. 177. AS. tōl, a tool; Ælfric's Hom. ii. 162, l. 12; spelt tool, Voc. 116. 35; tohl, id. 429. 15. + Icel. töl, neut. pl., tools. β. Teut. type **tōlom*, n.; for **tōu-lom*; where **tōu-* is related to **tau-*, **taw-*, as in AS. tawian, to prepare, dress, get ready; so that tool is the instrument by which this is done. Cf. Goth. taujan, to make, cause, and E. taw, tew, to work hard, to dress leather; see Taw. The Teut. base **tau-* seems to be connected with a Skt. root du or dū, to work. γ. 'This root is not recognized by Skt. grammarians, but it has to be admitted by comparative philologists. There is the verb duvasyati in the Veda, meaning to worship, a denominative verb derived from dūvas. Dūvas meant, originally, any opus operatum, and presupposes a root du or dū, in the sense of actively or sedulously working. It exists in Zend as du, to do. With it we may connect Goth. taujan, the G. zauen (Grimm, Gram. i. 1041), Goth. tawi, work, &c. See my remarks on this root and its derivatives in the Veda in my Translation of the Rig-Veda, i. 63, 191; Max Müller, letter to The Academy, July, 1874. See duvās in Uhlenbeck, p. 128. As to the connexion of tool with Goth. taujan, see Streitberg, § 85.

TOOM, empty. (Scand.) Common in Lowland Scotch; 'toom dish'=empty dish; Burns, Hallowe'en, l. 12 from end. ME. tom, toom. 'Toom, or voyde, Vacuus'; Prompt. Parv. Not an AS. word, though the adv. tōme occurs once (Grein).—Icel. tōmr, empty; Swed. and Dan. tom. Cf. OHG. zuomig, empty. The Teut. type is **tōmoz*, adj., empty. Der. teem (3), q.v.

TOOT (1), to peep about, spy. (E.) A form of Tout, q.v.

TOOT (2), to blow a horn. (Scand.) 'To tute in a horn, cornuciner; 'Levins. Not an AS. form, which would have given theet or thout; but borrowed from a dialect which sounded th as t.—MSwed. and Norw. tuta, to blow a horn. Cf. EFries. and Low G. tuten, to toot, MDu. tuyten, 'to sound or winde a cornet,' Hexham; Du. toet-horen, a bugle-horn; Swed. tjuta, to howl; Dan. tude, to howl, blow a horn; Icel. þjóta, strong verb, pt. t. þaut, to whistle as wind, sough, resound; also, to blow a horn; AS. þēotan, to howl, make a noise; Grein, ii. 589; also AS. þūtan (Toller); MHG. diezen, OHG. diozan, to make a loud noise; Goth. thut-hauru, a trumpet. β. All from Teut. base **theut-*, to make a noise, resound; of imitative origin. The Idg. form of the root agrees with that of L. tundere (<**teud-*), to strike; but this may be accidental.

TOOTH, one of the small bones in the jaws, used in eating; a prong. (E.) ME. toth, tooth; pl. teth, teeth, spelt teð, Ancrén Riwe, p. 288, l. 3 from bottom. AS. tōð, pl. tēð and tōðas, Grein, ii. 543. Here a short o has been lengthened, with ultimate loss of n before th following; tōð stands for **tonð*, for **tanð*; cf. OSax. tand.+Du. tand; Icel. tönn, gen. sing. tann-ar; Dan. tand; Swed. tand; G. zahn; MHG. zan, OHG. zand. β. All from Teut. type **tanth-us*, m.; cf. (from the weak stem) Goth. tunthus, a tooth. From the Idg. bases **dent-*, **dant-*, we have L. dens (stem dent-), W. dant, Gk. δδούς (stem δδόντ-), Lithuan. dantis, Skt. danta-, a tooth. And cf. Pers. dandān, a tooth. γ. The Idg. **dant-*, for **ad-ont-*, is a pres. participial form from ✓ED, to eat; see Eat. Der. tooth, verb, spelt tothe, Fitzherbert, Husbandry, § 24, l. 7; tooth-ed; tooth-ache, Much Ado, iii. 2. 21; tooth-less, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-drawer, Prompt. Parv.; tooth-pick, All's Well, i. 1. 171; tooth-some, i. e. dainty, nice, not an early word. Brugmann, ii. § 126. See Tine (1).

TOP (1), the highest part of anything, the summit. (E.) ME. top; top ouer tail=head over heels, Will. of Palerne, 2776. AS. top; 'Apex, summities galeæ, helmes top,' Voc. 143. 26.+Du. top; Icel. toppr, a tuft, lock of hair, crest, top; Dan. top, a tuft, crest, top; Swed. topp, a summit; G. zopf, a tuft of hair, pigtail, top of a tree; OHG. zoph. β. All from Teut. type **tuppoz*, m., a peak, top; allied to E. tap, a spike for a cask. Cf. G. zapfen, a peg, tap, also a fir-cone; Norweg. topp, a top, a bung (Aasen). Der. top, verb, Macb. iv. 3. 57; top-dressing; top-gallant-mast, for which Shak. has top-gallant, Romeo, ii. 4. 202; top-full, K. John, iii. 4. 180; top-less, Troil. i. 3. 152; top-mast, Temp. i. 1. 37; top-sail, Temp. i. 1. 7; top-mast, really a double superl. form, see Aftermost; topp-le, to tumble, be top-heavy, and so fall headlong, Macb. iv. 1. 56. Also top-sy-turvy, q. v.

TOP (2), a child's toy. (F.—G.) In Shak. Merry Wives, v. 1. 27. ME. top, a child's toy; King Alisaunder, 1727. Late AS. topp; Anglia, i. 465.—AF. **top* or **tope*; only found in the OF. dimin. topet, tupet. 'Trocus, topet,' Glasgow MS., in Godefroy; he also gives tupet, a top, and topier, to spin like a top, like MF. toupier, Cot.; cf. F. toupie, a top, and MF. tupin, a pipkin, Cot.—MHG. topf, a top; also, a pot, a scull (the humming-top being like a round pot).+Low G. dop, a shell; MDu. dop, doppe, a top (also top, from HG.); MDu. dop, a shell, doppe, a little pot, pipkin; EFries. dop, doppe, a shell. Allied to ME. doppen, to dive, to dip (a water-pot), WFlem. doppen, to dip, to plunge in (De Bo). Cf. Dip. ¶ Or from OLow G. top; from the same MHG. topf.

TOPAZ, a precious stone. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. topas, whence Chaucer's Sir Topas; spelt tupace, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 98, l. 172.—OF. topase, 'topase, a stone,' Cot.—L. topazus, topazon, topazion, a topaz.—Gk. τόπαζος, τόπάζιον, the yellow or oriental topaz. β. According to Pliny, b. xxxvii. c. 8, named from an island in the Red Sea called Topazas, the position of which was 'conjectural'; from Gk. τοπάζειν, to conjecture! But this is a popular etymology. It is probable that the name is of Eastern origin; cf. Skt. tapas, fire, tap, to shine. See Schade, OHG. Dict., p. 1432.

TOPE, a great drinker. (F. or Ital.—Teut.) 'Tope, to drink briskly or lustily,' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'The jolly members of a toping club,' Butler, Epigram on a Club of Sots, l. 1. 'Tope! here pledge me! (drinks),' Etheredge, The Comical Revenge, A. ii. sc. 3. Certainly connected, as Wedgwood shows, with F. tôper, to cover a stake, a term used in playing at dice; whence tôpe! interj. (short for je tôpe, lit. I accept your offer), used in the sense of good! agreed! well done! It came to be used as a term in drinking, though this only appears in Italian. 'According to Florio [i. e. in ed. 1688] the same exclamation was used for the acceptance of a pledge in drinking. [He gives] : topa, a word among dicers, as much as to say, I hold it, done, throw! also by good fellows when they are drinking; I'll pledge you,' Wedgwood. β. Of Teut. origin; from the striking together of hands or glasses; cf. Picard tope, to strike hands in bargaining, Ital. in-toppare, to strike against an obstacle. Originally from the act of placing together the tops of the thumbs, at the same time crying topp! See topp in Ihre, Outzen, and the Bremen Wörterbuch. Cf. Top (1).

TOPIARY, adj. (L.—Gk.) Topiary work is a term applied to clipped trees and shrubs, in landscape gardening.—L. topiarius, belonging to landscape gardening.—L. topia, fancy gardening.—Gk. τόπος, a place, a district.

TOPIC, a subject of discourse or argument. (F.—L.—Gk.) Properly an adj.; Milton has 'a topic folio'=a common-place book; Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 40, l. 27, on which see the note. 'Topics (topica), books that speak of places of invention, or that part of logick which treats of the invention of arguments,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt topickes in Minsheu, ed. 1627.—F. topiques, 'topicks, books or places of logical invention,' Cot.—L. topica, s. pl., the title of a work of Aristotle, of which a compendium is given by Cicero (White).—Gk. τοπικός, adj., local; also concerning τόποι or common-places. Aristotle wrote a treatise on the subject (τὰ τοπικά).—Gk. τόπος, a place. Der. topic-al (Blount), topic-al-ly; and see topo-graphy.

TOPOGRAPHY, the art of describing places. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt topographie in Minsheu, ed. 1627.—F. topographie, 'the description of a place,' Cot.—L. topographia.—Gk. τοπογραφία, a description of a place; Strabo.—Gk. τοπο-, for τόπος, a place; and γράφειν, to describe. See Topic and Graphic. Der. topograph-er, formed with E. suffix -er from Gk. τοπογράφος, a topographer, describer of places; topograph-ic, topograph-ic-al, -ly.

TOPPLE, to fall over. (E.) See Top (1).

TOPSYTURVY, upside down. (E.) Examples show that -sy does not stand for side, as the word is sometimes written; for topsytervy is the older form. In Stanyhurst's tr. of Virgil, ed. Arber, we have top-turuye, p. 33, l. 13; topsy-turuye, p. 63, l. 25; and top-syd-turuye, p. 59, l. 23. Topsy-turvey occurs twice (at least) in the play of Cornelia, printed in 1594, in Act i, and Act v; see Dodsley's Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vol. v. p. 186, l. 1, p. 250, l. 15. Much earlier, we find 'He tourneth all thyng topsy tervy,' Roy, Rede Me and Be Not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 51, l. 25 (printed in 1528). And Palsgrave (1530) has topsy tyrry, p. 843, col. 1. β. In Trench, Eng. Past and Present, we are told that topsy turvy is a corruption from topside the other way; to which the author adds: 'There is no doubt of the fact; see Stanishurst's Ireland, p. 33, in Holinshed's Chronicles.' After searching in three editions of Holinshed, I find, in the reprint of 1808, at p. 33, that Stanishurst has the equivalent expression topside the other waie; to which may be added that Richardson quotes topside tother way from Search's Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23. γ. But this only proves that such was a current explanation of the phrase in the time of Stanishurst and later. It can hardly be doubted that topsy tervy stood for top-so-tervy; just as upside-down was originally up-so-down, i. e. 'up as (if) down.' Hence the derivation is from top, so, and the old verb terve, to overturn, orig. 'to roll back'; see Terve in my Gloss. to Chaucer, and topsy-turvy in my Notes on E. Etym., p. 303. Cf. Lowl. Sc. our-tyrve, to turn upside down (Jamieson); ourtiruit, upset, turned over, Book of the Houlate, 837; ouer-terue, to overthrow; Hoccleve, De Regim. Princ., st. 259, l. 1811. G. Douglas has tiruit, stripped, despoiled, to translate L. detraherat, Æn. v. 260. Allied to AS. tearflian, to turn, roll over; Low G. iarven, to roll or turn up a cuff; OHG. zerben, umbi-zerben, to turn oneself round.

TORCH, a light formed of twisted tow dipped in pitch, a large candle. (F.—L.) ME. torche, Floriz and Blancheflur, l. 238.—F. torche, 'a link; also, the wreathed clowt, wisp, or wad of straw, layed by wenches between their heads and the things which they carry on them,' Cot. [Cf. Ital. torcia, a torch, torciare, to twist; Span. entorchar, to twist, antorcha, a torch.]—Late L. tortica, a torch; cf. also tortisius, occurring A.D. 1287; also tortius, &c. All various derivatives from L. torti-us, pp. of torquere, to twist; see Torture. A torch is simply 'a twist.' Der. torch-light.

TOREADOR, a bull-fighter. (Span.—L.) In use in 1618 (Stanford Dict.).—Span. toreador.—Span. tortear, to fight bulls.—Span. toro, a bull.—L. taurus, a bull; see Taurus.

TORMENT, anguish, great pain. (F.—L.) ME. torment, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 148, l. 6, where it means 'a tempest'; also tourment, K. Alisaunder, 5869.—OF. torment, 'torment'; Cot. Mod. F. tourment.—L. tormentum, an instrument for hurling stones, an instrument of torture, torture. Formed with suffix -men-tum from tor- (for torc-), base of torquere, to twist, hurl, throw; see Torture. Der. torment, verb, ME. tormenten, Rob. of Glouc. p. 240, l. 14 (ed. Wright, p. 349, l. 36); torment-ing-ly; torment-or, ME. tormentour, Chaucer, C. T. 15995 (G 527); also torment-er. And see tormentill.

TORMENTIL, the name of a herb. (F.—L.) In Levins. Spelt turmentyll; Palsgrave.—F. tormentille, 'tormentile,' Cot.—Late L. tormentilla; Voc. 713. 6. Cf. Ital. tormentilla, 'tormentill,' Florio. Said to be so called because it relieved tooth-ache, an idea which is at least as old as the 16th century; see Littré.—OF. torment, great pain, an ache; see Torment.

TORNADO, a violent hurricane. (Span.—L.) 'Tornado (Span. tornada, i. e. return, or turning about) is a sudden, violent, and forcible storm . . . at sea, so termed by the mariners;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. But this is only a popular etymology; due to misapprehension of the form of the word. 'Ternados, that is, thundrings and lightnings;' Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 719.—Span. tronada, a thunder-storm.—Span. tronar, to thunder.—L. tonāre, to thunder. See Thunder.

TORPEDO, the cramp-fish; a kind of eel that produces numbness by communicating an electric shock. (L.) 'Like one whom a torpedo stupefies;' Drummond, sonnet 53; and see Gosson, School of Abuse, p. 56.—L. torpēdo, numbness; also, a torpedo, cramp-fish.—L. torpēre, to be numb; see Torpid.

TORPID, sluggish, lit. numb. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. torpidus, benumbed, torpid.—L. torpēre, to be numb, to be stiff. Cf. Lith. tirpti, to grow stiff; Russ. terpnute, to grow numb. Der. torpid-ly, torpid-ness, torpid-i-ty; torp-or, L. torpor, numbness, inactivity; also torp-esc-ent, from the stem of pres. part. of torpescere, to grow torpid, inceptive form of torpēre; torp-esc-ence.

TORQUE, a twisted metal ornament, esp. for the neck. (L.) Englished from L. torques, a torque.—L. torquēre, to twist; see Torsion. Or from OF. torque, the same (Supp. to Godefroy). See Tort.

TORRENT, a boiling, rushing stream. (F.—L.) In Shak. J. Cæs. i. 2. 107.—F. torrent, 'a torrent, land-flood.'—L. torrentem, acc. of torrens, hot, boiling, raging, impetuous; and as a sb. a torrent, raging stream. Orig. pres. part. of torrēre, to parch, dry up; see Torrid. Der. (obs.) torrent-yne, a trout; Babees Book, p. 173, note 4.

TORRID, parching, violently hot. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. torride, 'torrid, scorched, parched;' Cot.—L. torridus, parched.—L. torrēre, to parch, dry up. β. Torrere stands for **torsēre*, like terra for **tersa*; from √TERS, to be dry; see Terrace and Thirst. Cf. Gk. τέρσεσθαι, to become dry. Der. torr-ent, torre-fy, to make dry, from F. torrefier, 'to scorch,' Cot.; torre-fact-ion, from L. torrefactus, pp. of torrefacere, to make dry, dry up.

TORSION, a violent twisting, twisting force. (F.—L.) A late word. In Johnson.—F. torsion, 'a winding, wrying, wrestling;' Cot.—L. torsionem, acc. of torsio, a wringing.—L. torquēre (pt. t. torsī), to twist; see Torture.

TORSK, a fish of the cod family. (Scand.) From Dan. and Swed. torsk; Icel. þorskr, a cod-fish; whence also G. dorsch. Perhaps named from its being dried; cf. Swed. torr, Dan. tör, Icel. þurr, dry. Cf. Torrid.

TORSO, the trunk of a statue. (Ital.—L.—Gk.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson.—Ital. torso, a stump, stalk, core, trunk.—L. thyrsus, acc. of thyrsus, a stalk, stem of a plant; a thyrsus.—Gk. θύρσος, a straight stem, stalk, rod. See Thyrsus.

TORT, a wrong. (F.—L.) 'Fraud or tort;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 31.—F. tort, a wrong, harm; also pp. of F. tordre, to twist.—L. tortus, pp. of L. torquēre, to twist. Cf. Irish torc, W. torch, a wreath; Russ. trok, a girth; Gk. ἀτρακτος, a spindle; Skt. tarku-, a spindle.—√TERQ, to twist. See Torture.

TORTOISE, a reptile. (F.—L.) ME. tortuce, Prompt. Parv.; tortoise, in Temp. i. 2. 316. We also find ME. tortu, Knight de la Tour, ch. xi. l. 2. 1. The latter form is immediately from MF. tortuē, a tortoise (now tortue); with which cf. Span. tortuga, a tortoise; both from Late L. tortūca, tartūca, a tortoise, for which Diez gives a reference. So also Mital. tartuga (Florio); now corrupted to tartaruga. 2. The E. tortoise answers to an OF. form, not recorded, but cognate with Prov. tortesa, a tortoise (Diez). In all these instances the animal is named from its crooked or twisted feet, which are very remarkable; cf. OF. tortis (fem. tortisse), 'crooked;' Cot. Both Late L. tort-ūca and Prov. tort-esa are formed as if from L. torti-us, pp. of torquēre, to twist; see Torture.

TORTUOUS, crooked. (F.—L.) ME. tortuos, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. c. 28, l. 19.—F. tortuēux, 'full of crookedness or crookings;' Cot.—L. tortuōsus, twisting about, crooked.—L. tortus, pp. of torquēre, to twist; see Torture. Der. tortuous-ly, -ness.

TORTURE, a wringing pain, torment, anguish. (F.—L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 177, &c.—F. torture, 'torture;' Cot.—L. tortūra, torture; allied to L. tortus, pp. of torquēre, to twist, whirl. See Tort. Der. (from L. torquēre) torch, tor-ment, tor-s-ion, tortoise, tort-u-ous; con-tort, de-tort, dis-tort, ex-tort, re-tort; also tart (2), tormentil.

TORY, a Conservative in English politics. (Irish.) 'Tory, an Irish robber, or bog-trotter; also a nick-name given to the stanch Royalists, or High-flyers, in the times of King Charles II. and James II.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. As to the use of the name, see Trench, Select Glossary, and Todd's Johnson. First used about 1680. Dryden even reduplicates the word into tory-rory. 'Before George, I grew tory-rory, as they say,' Kind Keeper, i. 1; 'Your tory-rory jades,' id. iv. 1. By this adj. he appears to mean 'wild.' 'Tories was a name properly belonging to the Irish bogtrotters, who during our Civil War robbed and plundered, professing to be in arms for the royal cause; and from them transferred, about 1680, to those who sought to maintain the extreme prerogatives of the Crown;' Trench, Select Glossary. Trench cites 'the increase of tories and other lawless persons' from the Irish State Papers, Jan. 24, 1656. In Irish the word means 'pursuer;' hence, I suppose, it was easily transferred to bogtrotters and plunderers.—Irish toiridhe, also toruighe, a pursuer; cf. torachd, pursuit, search, toir, a pursuit, diligent search, also pursuers; toireacht, pursuit, search; toirighim, I fancy, I think, I pursue, follow closely. Cf. Gael. toir, a pursuit, diligent search, also pursuers; torachd, a pursuit with hostile intention, strict search. From OIrish toracht (for **do-fo-racht*), pursuit; where do (to) and fo (under) are prefixes; and racht is from √REG, as in L. reg-ere, to direct, Irish rig-im, I stretch out (Macbain). Der. Tory-ism.

TOSE, to pull, or pluck; see Tease, Touse.

TOSS, to jerk, throw violently, agitate, move up and down violently. (Scand.) 'I tosse a balle;' Palsgrave.—Norw. tossa, to sprinkle, strew, spread out; hence, 'to toss hay.' Allied to Dan. tusse, to stir, move, shake; also to E. Touse, q. v.; and to Low G. teusen, to toss (hay). ¶ W. tosio, to toss, is from E.; not a Celtic word. Der. toss, sb.; toss-pot, Tw. Nt. v. 412.

TOTAL, complete, undivided. (F.—L.) 'Thei toteth [look] on her summe total;' Plowman's Tale, pt. i. st. 46. We still use sum total for total sum, putting the adj. after the sb., according to the F. idiom.—F. total, 'the total, or whole sum;' Cot.—Late L. tōtālis, extended from L. tōtus, entire. Der. total-i-ty, from F. totalité, 'a totality;' Cot. Also sur-tout.

TOTEM, a natural object, usually an animal, used as a badge or token of a clan, among N. American Indians. (Amer. Indian.) 'Each his own ancestral totem;' Longfellow, Hiawatha, xiv. Said to be from the Algonquin otem, with a prefixed poss. pron.; giving ni'otem, 'my totem;' Cent. Dict.

TOTTER, to be unsteady, stagger. (E.) For tolter, by assimilation; it is related to tilt (ME. tulten, tilten); and means to be always tilting over, to be ready to fall at any minute. 'Where home the cart-horse tolters with the wain;' Clare, Village Minstrel, Rural Evening, l. 20. 'The toltering [jolting] bustle of a blundering trot;' id., Rural Morning, 37. Cf. prov. E. tolter, to struggle, flounder about (Halliwell). Trevisa, ii. 387, has: 'men totrede þeron [swung upon ropes] and meued hider and þider;' here the l is dropped. The form tolter occurs twice in the King's Quhair, by James I of Scotland; but not as a verb, as Jamieson wrongly says. 'On her tolter quhele' = on her [Fortune's] tottering wheel, st. 9; where tolter is an adj. 'So tolter quhilum did sche it to wrye' = so totteringly (unsteadily) did she (Fortune) cause it (her wheel) to go aside, st. 164; where tolter is an adverb. The suffix -er is here adjectival; tolter means 'ready to tilt.' Precisely the same loss of l occurs in tatter (also spelt totter), a rag; see Tatter. β. Again, tolter is a frequent. related to ME. tulten, to totter or tilt over; 'Feole temples þer-inne tulten to þe eorþe' = many temples therein tottered (fell) to the earth; Joseph of Arimathie, ed. Skeat, 100. Tulten is another form of tilten; see Tilt (2). But it is important to remark that the word totter itself is allied to AS. tealtrian, to totter, vacillate, Grein, ii. 526; formed from the adj. tealt, tottery, unstable; id. Add, that we have the cognate MDu. touteren, 'to tremble,' Hexham; for **tolteren*, like Du. goud for gold. Hence Du. touter, a swing; like the Norfolk teeter-cum-tauter, a see-saw; cf. tytter-totter, a see-saw (Palsgrave, p. 282). Further allied to Bavar. zelter-n, to hobble along. Der. totter-er. Note also tott-y (i. e. tolty, tilty), unsteady, Chaucer, C. T. 4251 (A 4253); Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 39. And see toddle.

TOUCAN, a large-beaked tropical bird. (F.—Brazilian.) Littré gives a quotation of the 16th century. 'Il a veu aux terres neuves un oiseau que les sauvages appellant en leur gergon [jargon] toucan,' &c.; Paré, Monstr. app. 2. The form toucan is F., as above.—Brazil. tucana, toucan, Hist. Nat. Brasilæ (1648), p. 217. According to Burton, Highlands of Brazil, i. 40, the bird is named from its cry. The Guarani form is said to be tucã (whence Port. tucano); Granada gives the Guarani form as tucã (with ũ and ã both nasal).

TOUCH, to perceive by feeling, handle, move influence. (F.—Teut.) ME. touchen, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1195.—F. toucher, to touch. [Cf. Ital. toccare, Span., Port., and Prov. tocar, to touch; also OF. toquer, 'to clap, knock, or hit against;' Cot. To touch a lyre is to strike the strings, or rather to twitch them; so also Ital. toccare il liuto, to twang the lute; Florio gives 'to strike, to smite, to hit,' as senses of toccare.]—Teut. type **tukkōn*, represented by Low G. tukken, and OHG. zucken, mod. G. zucken, to draw with a quick motion, to twitch; cf. MDu. tocken, tucken, to touch (Hexham). This is an intensive form, from the weak grade (**tuh-*) of Teut. **teuhan-*, as seen in Goth. tiuhan, AS. tēon (<**tēohan*), to pull, to draw, cognate with OHG. ziohan, G. ziehen, and therefore with L. dūcere, to draw; see Tuck (1), Tow (1), and Duke. The Teut. base **tukk-* arose from the Idg. **duk-n-*; Brugmann, i. § 421 (7). Der. touch, sb., As You Like It, iii. 4. 15; touch-ing, i. e. relating to, orig. pres. part. of the verb touchen, Chaucer, C. T. 7872 (D 2290), spelt touchende (which is a pres. part. form) in Gower C. A. p. 249, l. 2 of Macaulay's edition, but spelt touchinge in Pauli's edition, i. 307, bk. iii. 842; touch-ing, adj., touch-ing-ly, touch-stone, a stone for testing gold, Palsgrave; touch-hole, Beaum. and Fletcher, Custom of the Country, iii. 3. 8. Also toc-sin, q. v., tuck-et.

TOUCH-WOOD, wood used (like tinder) for taking fire from a spark. (F.—Teut.; and E.) We find 'Peace, Touchwood!' in Beaum. and Fletcher, Little French Lawyer, Act ii (Cleremont). Capt. Smith has: 'smal peeces of touchwood;' Works, p. 74. Apparently, wood that catches fire at the touch of a spark; cf. touch-box, box for priming, touch-pan, pan of a flint-lock musket, touch-hole of a gun. Probably influenced by ME. tache, in the sense of touch-wood or tinder; Piers Plowman, C. xx. 211.

TOUCHY, apt to take offence. (F.—Low G.) 'You're touchy without all cause;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Maid's Tragedy, iii. 2 (Melantius). Doubtless often used as if derived from touch; but really a corruption of Tetchy, q. v.

TOUGH, firm, not easily broken, stiff, tenacious. (E.) ME. tough, Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 531. AS. tōh, tough; Voc. 29. 39. +Du. taai, flexible, pliant, tough, viscous, clammy; Low G. taa, tage, tau, tough; G. zähe, zäh, tough, tenacious, viscous, MHG. zähe, OHG. zāhi. β. Teut. type **tanxuz*, later **tāhuz*; allied to AS. ge-teng-e, close to, oppressive, OSax. bi-teng-i, oppressive. The orig. sense is 'holding tight' or 'tenacious;' cf. Tongs. ¶ The Teut. type regularly becomes **tanh*, **tonh*, tōh in AS.; cf. Tooth. Der. tough-ly, tough-ness, tough-ish; also tough-en, formed like heighten, &c.

TOUR, a going round, circuit, ramble. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Tour, a travel or journey about a country;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tour, 'a turn, round, compasse, . . . a bout or walk;' Cot. Cf. Prov. tors, also torns, a turn; Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale. Tour is a verbal sb. from tourner, to turn; it is a short form of tourn (as the Prov. form shows), in the sense of 'a turn;' the final n being lost.—L. tornum, acc. of tornus.—Gk. τόπος, a lathe. See Turn. Der. tour-ist.

TOURMALINE, the name of a certain mineral. (F.—Cingalese.) First brought from Ceylon by the Dutch in 1703; see tr. of Beckmann, Hist. of Inventions, ed. 1846, vol. i. 89.—F. tourmaline; formed from the native name in Ceylon, where it was called tōramalli. This name is explained (vaguely) as 'a general name for the cornelian;' Clough, Singhalese Dict. (1830), ii. 246.

TOURNAMENT, TOURNEY, a mock fight. (F.—L.—Gk.) So named from the swift turning of the horses in the combat. Cotgrave has F. tourney, 'a tourney;' Chaucer has turneyinge, sb., C. T. 2559 (A 2557). ME. turnement, Ancrén Riwe, p. 390, l. 5 from bottom.—OF. tornoieiment, a tournament (Burguy). Formed with suffix -ment (L. -mentum) from OF. tornoier, to joust.—OF. tornoï, a tourney, joust; properly, a turning about.—OF. torner, to turn; see Turn. 2. Tourney is from AF. torney=OF. tornoï, a tourney (above); see torney in Stat. Realm, i. 230.

TOURNIQUET, a bandage which is tightened by turning a stick round to check a flow of blood. (F.—L.—Gk.) Properly the stick itself. 'Tourniquet, a turn-still (sic); also the gripe-stick us'd by surgeons in cutting off an arm;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. tourniquet, 'the pin of a kind of fiddle, that which the fiddler turns with his hand as he plays;' Cot. He refers, apparently, to a sort of hurdy-gurdy, of which the F. name was vielle. 'Tourni-qu-et' is formed, with dimin. suffixes, from tourner, to turn; see Turn. [N.B. turn-still = turn-stile, a sense of F. tourniquet.]

TOUSE, to pull about, tear or rend. (E.) In Shak. Meas. v. 313. Spenser has touse in the sense to worry, to tease; F. Q. ii. 11. 33. ME. tūsen, in comp. tō-tūsen, to pull about (Stratmann). It answers to EFries. tūsen, NFries. tuse, to tear, pull, rend. Cf. Low G. tuseln, G. zausen, to touse. Der. tous-er; spelt also Towzer, as a dog's name; also tous-le, tuss-le; and cf. toss.

TOUT, to look about, solicit custom. (E.) 'A touter is one who looks out for custom;' Wedgwood. We often shorten the sb. to tout. But tout is properly a verb, the same as prov. E. toot, ME. toten, to peep, look about, P. Plowman's Crede, 142, 168, 339, 425. 'Totehille, Specula;' Prompt. Parv.; whence Tothill, a look-out hill

(W. Twthill, at Carnarvon). Also toot, to look, search, pry; Index to Parker Soc. publications; Tusser's Husbandry, § 94, st. 2; Peele, Arraignment of Paris, i. 2. See Toot in E. D. D., and in Nares. The latter has: 'The tradesmen of Tunbridge Wells were used formerly to hunt out customers on the road, at their arrival; and hence they were called tooters.' AS. tōtjan, to project, stick out; hence, to peep out; 'þā heafdu tōtōdun ūt' = the heads projected out; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. xvi, ed. Sweet, p. 104, l. 5. The orig. sense was 'to project;' hence, to put out one's head, peep about, look all round; and finally, to tout for custom. Der. tout-er. ¶ 'Tout and touter are found in no dictionaries but those of very recent date; yet these words were in use before 1754. See S. Richardson, Correspondence, &c., vol. iii. p. 316; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 134. Distinct from toot, verb, to blow a horn.

TOW (1), to tug or pull a vessel along. (E.) ME. towen, tojen; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 100; Layamon, 7536 (later text). AS. togian, to tug, draw (Toller); whence the sb. tōh-line, a tow-line, tow-rope, Voc. 182. 32. Cf. OFries. toga, to pull about. +Icel. toga, to draw, pull; tog, a cord, a tow-rope; MHG. zogen, OHG. zogōn, to tear, pluck, pull. β. Derived from Teut. **tuh-* (>**tug-*), weak grade of **teuhan-*, to draw; as seen in AS. togen, pp. of the strong verb tēohan, tēon, to pull, draw, which is cognate with G. ziehen, OHG. ziohan, Goth. tiuhan, to draw. All from the Teut. base TEUH, to draw (Fick, iii. 122), answering to ✓DEUK, as seen in L. dūcere, to draw. ¶ F. touer, to tow, is of Teut. origin. Der. tow-boat, -line, -rope; tow-age, Blount's Nomolexicon, 1691. And see tie, tug.

TOW (2), the coarse part of flax or hemp. (E.) ME. tow or towe, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 245; Tyrwhitt prints tawe in Chaucer, C. T. 3772 (A 3774). AS. tow (tōw?) it occurs in tow-lie, tow-like, fit for spinning. 'Textrinum opus, towlic weorc;' Voc. 125. 20; the next entries being 'Colus, distæf;' and 'Fusus, spinl;' i. e. distaff and spindle. Again, we find: 'tow-hūs of wulle' = a tow-house or spinning-house for wool, id. 186. 29; see the footnote. And see tow-craft, skill in spinning (Toller). Tow was, in fact, orig. the working or spinning itself, the operation of spinning; whence it came to be applied to the material wrought upon. Hence we find getawa, implements (Grein); and the word is brought into close connexion with E. taw and tew. See further under Tool, Taw. +MDu. touw, or werck, 'towe;' Hexham; touwe, 'the instrument of a weaver,' touwen, 'to tanne leather,' i. e. to taw; id., Icel. tō, a tuft of wool for spinning; vinna tō, to dress wool. (Quite distinct from Icel. tog, goat's hair.) Cf. Low G. tou, touw, implements; also Goth. taui, a work, a thing made, taujan, to make. Similarly G. werg or werk, tow, is merely the same word as werk, a work.

TOWARD, TOWARDS, in the direction of. (E.) As in other cases, towards is a later form, due to adding the adverbial suffix -es (orig. the mark of a gen. case) to the shorter toward. In Layamon, 566, we have 'toward Brutus' = toward Brutus; in l. 515, we have 'him towardes com' = he came towards him. The AS. tōweard is used as an adj. with the sense of 'future,' as in: 'on tōweardre worulde' = in the future world, in the life to come; Mark, x. 30. Hence was formed tōweardes, towards, used as a prep. with a dat. case, and commonly occurring after its case, as 'ēow tōweardes' = towards you, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4). β. Compounded of tō, to (see To); and weard in the sense of 'becoming' or 'tending to.' Weard only occurs as the latter element of several adjectives, such as afweard (lit. off-ward), absent; afterweard, afterward; andweard, present; foreweard, forward, in front; innanweard, inward; niderweard, netherward; ufanweard, upweard, upward; utanweard, outward; widerweard, contrary; and in the adverbs hiderweard, hitherward, þiderweard, thitherward; see Ettmüller's Dict., p. 107. γ. Cognate with Icel. -verðr, similarly used in the adj. utanverðr, outward, and in other adjectives; also with MHG. -wert, whence G. vorwärts, forwards, and the like; also with Goth. -wairths, as in andwairths, present, 1 Cor. vii. 26; also allied to L. uersus, towards, which is often used after its case.

δ. And just as L. uersus is from uertere, to turn, so AS. weard is from the cognate verb weorþan (pt. t. wearð), to become. See further under Worth (2), verb. ε. We may note that ward can be separated from to, as in to you-ward = toward you, 2 Cor. xiii. 3; see Ward in The Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Also that toward is properly an adj. in AS., and commonly so used in later E., as opposed to forward; it is common in Shakespeare.

Der. toward-ly, Timon, iii. 1. 37; toward-ness, toward-li-ness. And (with the suffix -ward) after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, for-ward, fro-ward, home-ward, hither-ward, in-ward, nether-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, to-ward (as above), thither-ward, up-ward, west-ward, whither-ward.

TOWEL, a cloth for wiping the skin after washing. (F.—OHG.) ME. towaille, Floriz and Blancheflur, 563; towaille, Chaucer, C. T.

14663 (B 3935).—F. touaille, 'a towel,' Cot.; OF. toaille. [Cf. Low L. toacula; Span. toalla; Ital. tovaglia. All of Teut. origin.] —OHG. twahila, dwahila, MHG. dwehele, G. zwehle, a towel. —OHG. twahan, MHG. dwahen, to wash. +Icel. þvā (pp. þvegninn), to wash; Dan. toe; AS. þwēan (contr. for **þwahan*), to wash; Goth. þwahan, to wash. And cf. AS. þwæle, a towel (O. E. Texts); þwēal, a bath; Du. dwaal, a towel; dweil, a clout, whence prov. E. dwile, a clout, coarse rag for rubbing. β. All from Teut. base THWAH, to wash. N.B. The AF. form towayle occurs in A Nominale, ed. Skeat, l. 498. Der. towell-ing, stuff for making towels.

TOWER, a lofty building, fort, or part of a fort. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt tur in the A. S. Chron. an. 1097.—OF. tur, later tour, 'a tower;' Cot.—L. turrem, acc. of turris, a tower.—Gk. τύρος, τύππης, a tower, bastion. We also find Gael. torr, a hill or mountain of an abrupt or conical form, a lofty hill, eminence, mound, tower, castle; Irish tor, a castle; cf. prov. E. (Devon.) tor, a conical hill, a word of Celtic origin. 'Scopulum, torr;' Voc. 147. 38. Cf. Skt. tōraṇa, an arch. Der. tower, verb; tower-ed, tower-ing, tower-y.

TOWN, a large village. (E.) The old sense is simply 'enclosure;' it was often applied (like Lowland Sc. toon) to a single farmhouse with its outbuildings, &c. ME. town, Wyclif, Matt. xxii. 5. AS. tūn, Matt. xxii. 5; where the L. text has uillam. The orig. sense is 'fence;' whence the derived verb týnan, to enclose. +Du. tuin, a fence, hedge; Icel. tūn, an enclosure, a homestead, a dwelling-house; G. zaun; OHG. zūn, a hedge. β. All from Teut. type **tūnoz*, m., a hedge, enclosure. Cognate words appear in Irish and Gael. dun, a fortress, W. din, a hill-fort (whence dinas, a town); this Celtic word is conspicuous in many old place-names, such as Augusto-dūnum, Camalo-dūnum, &c. Lit. 'fastness;' allied to Irish dur, firm, strong, L. dūrus, hard, lasting; Gk. δύ-vaμης, strength. See DURE. Brugmann, i. § 112; ii. § 66. Der. town-clerk, -crier, -hall, -house, -ship, -talk; also towns-man (= town's man), towns-folk (= town's-folk). Also town-ish, Sir T. Wyatt, Sat. i. 4.

TOXICOLOGY, the science which investigates poisons. (Gk.) Modern; not in Johnson. Coined from Gk. τοξικό-ν, poison for smearing arrows with; and -λογία, from λόγος, a discourse, λέγειν, to say (see LOGIC). Τοξικόν is neut. of τοξικός, adj., belonging to arrows or archery; from τόξον, a bow, lit. a piece of shaped wood. Perhaps from ✓TEKS, to cut, hew, shape; cf. Skt. taksh, to cut. See TECHNICAL. Or allied to L. taxis, a yew. Der. toxicologi-c-al, toxicolog-ist.

TOXOPHILITE, a lover of archery. (Gk.) Coined from Gk. τόξο-ν, a bow, and φιλ-εῖν, to love; with suffix -ite, Gk. -ιτης. See above.

TOY, a plaything; also, as a verb, to trifle, dally. (Du.) 'Any silk, any thread, any toys for your head;' Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 326. 'On my head no toy But was her pattern;' Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3. This is only a special sense. 'Any follyshe toy;' Barclay, Ship of Fools, i. 176. Palsgrave has: 'Toy, a tryfell;' also, 'I toy, or tryfell with one, I deale nat substancyally with hym; I toy, I playe with one; He doth but toy with you, Il ne fait que se jouer avecques vous.' Not in ME.—Du. tuig, tools, utensils, implements, stuff, refuse, trash; which answers to Palsgrave's definition as 'a trifle.' The sense of plaything occurs in the comp. speeltuig, playthings, child's toys; lit. 'stuff to play with.' Sewel gives: 'Speeltuyg, play-tools, toys;' also: 'Op de tuy houden, to amuse,' lit. to hold in trifling, toy with one; also: 'een tuyg op zy, silver chains with a knife, cissars, pincushion, &c. as women wear,' which explains the Shakespearian usage. +Low G. tüg, used in all the senses of G. zeug; Icel. tygi, gear; Dan. tøi, stuff, things, gear; dumt tøi, stuff and nonsense, trash; whence legetøi, a plaything, a toy, from lege (=prov. E. laik), to play; Swed. tyg, gear, stuff, trash. +G. zeug, stuff, matter, materials, lumber, trash; whence spielzeug, toys; MHG. ziuc, stuff, materials. β. Connected by some with the strong Teut. verb **teuhan-* (Goth. tiuhan, AS. tēon, OHG. ziohan, G. ziehen), to draw, cognate with L. dūcere, to lead (✓DEUK); which may be correct. ¶ The pronunciation of oy in toy is an attempt at imitating the pronunciation of Du. tuig, just as hoy, a sloop, answers to the Flemish hui; see HOY (1). Der. toy-ish.

TRACE (1), a track left by drawing anything along, a mark left, a footprint. (F.—L.) ME. traces, King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 7771; Pricke of Conscience, 4349.—F. trace, 'a trace, footing, print of the foot; also, a path or tract;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. traccia, a trace, track; Span. traza, a first sketch, outline.] A verbal sb., from MF. tracer, verb, 'to trace, follow, pursue;' of which another form was MF. trasser, 'to delineate, score, trace out;' Cot. Cf. Ital. tracciare, to trace, devise; Span. trazar, to plan, sketch. These verbs are all formed (as if from a Late L. **trāctiare*) from tract-us, pp. of trahere, to draw, orig. to drag with violence. See TRAIT. Der. trace, verb, ME. tracen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 54 (less common than the sb.), directly from F. tracer, to trace, as above; trac-er, trace-able, trac-ing; trac-er-y, a coined word, in rather late use. Also (from L. trahere) trace (2), tract (1), tract (2), tract-able, tract-ile, tract-ion, tract-ate, trail, train, trait, treat, treat-ise, treat-y; also abs-tract, at-tract, con-tract, de-tract, dis-tract, ex-tract, pro-tract, re-tract, sub-tract; en-treat, es-treat, mal-treat, por-trait, por-tray or pour-tray, re-treat.

TRACE (2), one of the straps by which a vehicle is drawn. (F.—L.) 'Trace, horse harness, trays;' Palsgrave. MF. traice; 'Trayce, horsys hameys, Tenda, traxus, restis, trahale;' Prompt. Parv. Evidently from the OF. trays, cited by Palsgrave, which is a pl. form equivalent to F. traits, pl. of trait. In Walter de Bibbesworth, we find: 'Les trays si unt braceroles,' and braceroles is glossed by 'henekes (?) of trays;' Wright, Vocab. i. 168. Golding has trace as a plural; tr. of Ovid, Met. ii.; fol. 16 b (1603). Cf. 'for v pair trays,' for the king's car; Privy Purse Exp. of Eliz. of York (1480), p. 123. Cotgrave gives as one sense of trait (which he spells tract) that of 'a teame-trace or trait, the cord or chain that runs between the horses, also the draught-tree of a caroch.' Thus trace=F. traits; so that traces is a double plural. See TRAIT.

TRACHEA, the wind-pipe. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1607.—L. trachēa; also trachia. The latter form is given in White.—Gk. τραχέα, lit. 'the rough,' from the rings of gristle of which it is composed; τραχέα is the fem. of τραχύς, rough, rugged, harsh. Allied to τέ-τρηχ-α, perf. tense of θράσσειν, ταράσσειν, to disturb. Der. trache-al.

TRACK, a path, course. (F.—Teut.) Confused with tract in old authors; also with trace both in old and modern authors. Minshew has: 'A trace, or track;' Cotgrave explains F. trac by 'a track, tract, or trace.' In Shak. Rich. II, iii. 3. 66, Rich. III, v. 3. 20, the folios have tract for track; and in Timon, i. 1. 50, the word tract is used in the sense of trace. 'The trak of his hors;' Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. x. c. 14. These words require peculiar care, because trace and tract are really connected, but track is not of L. origin, and quite distinct from the other two words.—F. trac, 'a track, tract, or trace, a beaten way or path, a trade or course.' Cf. Norm. dial. trac, a track; Walloon trak, a stage, or distance along a road. The sense of 'beaten track' is the right one; we still use that very phrase. Of Teut. origin.—MDu. treck, Du. trek, a draught; from trekken, to draw, pull, tow, travel, march, &c., MDu. trecken, 'to drawe, pull, or hale,' Hexham; also MHG. trecken, to draw, a secondary verb formed from the OHG. strong verb trehhan, to scrape, shove, draw. As the last is a strong verb, we see that track is quite independent of the L. trahere. Note that NFries. has tracke for Du. trekken. Der. track, verb; track-less, Cowley, The Muse, l. 25.

TRACT (1), continued duration, a region. (L.) Often confused both with trace and track; it is related to the former only; see TRACE (1). 'This in tracte of tyme made hym welthy;' Fabyan, Chron. c. 56.—L. tractus, a drawing out; the course of a river, a tract or region.—L. tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see TRACE (1). And see TRACTABLE.

TRACT (2), a short treatise. (L.) An abbreviation for tractate, which is now little used. 'Tractate, a treatise;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. tractātum, acc. of tractātus, a handling, also a treatise, tractate, or tract. See TRACTABLE. Der. tract-ar-i-an, one who holds opinions such as were propounded in 'Tracts for the Times,' of which 90 numbers were published, A. D. 1833-1841; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates.

TRACTABLE, easily managed, docile. (L.) In Shak. i Hen. IV, iii. 3. 194.—L. tractābilis, manageable, easily wrought.—L. tractāre, to handle, frequent. of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw. See TRACE (1). Der. tractabl-y, tractable-ness, tractabili-ty. Also (like L. pp. tractus) tract-ile, that may be drawn out; tract-ion, from F. traction, 'a draught or extraction,' Cot.; tract-ive, drawing or pulling; tract-or (see Webster). Also tract-ate, for which see TRACT (2).

TRADE, way of life, occupation, commerce. (E.) 'Properly that path which we tread, and thus the ever recurring habit and manner of our life;' Trench, Select Glossary. It once meant, literally, a path; 'A common trade, to passe through Priams house;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 593. Not common; the usual ME. words are tred and trod, both in the sense of footmark, Ancren Riwe, p. 380, note g. But we find the exact form in the ME. trade, Sir Guy (Caius MS.), 4731, the prov. E. trade (E. D. D.), and Low G. trade, Swed. dial. trad, a beaten track; from the 2nd grade of the vb. All from AS. tredan, to tread; see TREAD. Der. trades-man, i. e. trade's-man, one who follows a trade; trades-woman; trades-union (= either trade's union or trades' union). Also trade, vb., trad-ed, K. John, iv. 3. 109; trad-er, i Hen. IV, i. 2. 141. Also trade-wind, a wind blowing in a constant direction, formed from the phr. to blow trade=to blow always in the same course; 'the wind blowing trade,' Hakluyt's Voyages, iii. 849; the word trade-wind is in Dryden, Annus Mirabilis; last line but one.

TRADITION, the handing down to posterity of unwritten practices or opinions. (L.) ME. tradicioun, Wyclif, Col. ii. 8. Formed directly from L. trāditiō, a surrender, delivery, tradition (Col. ii. 8). [The F. form of the word gave us our word treason.] Cf. L. trādīt-us, pp. of trādere, to deliver; see Traitor. Der. tradition-al. Doublet, treason.

TRADUCE, to defame. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, ii. i. 175. In the Prologue to the Golden Boke, traduce occurs in the sense of translate, and traduction is translation. — L. trādūcere, to lead across, transfer, derive; also, to divulge, convict, prove guilty (whence our use to defame). — L. trā-, for trans, across; and dūcere, to lead; see Trans- and Duke. Der. traduc-er.

TRAFFIC, to trade, exchange, barter. (F.—Ital.) In Shak. Timon, i. i. 158; Macb. iii. 5. 4; we have also the sb. traffic, spelt trafficke in Spenser, F. Q. vi. 11. 9. — F. trafiquer, 'to traffick, trade'; Cot. We find also F. trafique, sb. 'traffick'; id. — Ital. trafficare, to traffic, manage (traficare in Florio). Cf. Span. traficare, trafagar; Port. traficar, trafeguar, to traffic, to cheat. Also Ital. traffico (trafico in Florio), Span. trafico, trafago, traffic, careful management; Port. trafico, trafego, traffic. β. Origin unknown. It has been proposed to derive it from Heb. traffik, a late Heb. rendering of late Gk. τροπαικός; which again is a Gk. rendering of L. victoriātus, the name of a silver coin bearing the figure of Victory (Lewis). See Athenæum, Apr. 7, 1900. Der. traffic, sb.; traffick-er, Merch. Ven. i. i. 12.

TRAGACANTH, a gum obtained from several shrubs of the genus Astragalus. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Bailey, vol. ii (1731), who explains it by 'gum dragon;' where dragon is due to the old name dragagant, from MF. dragagant in Cotgrave. — F. tragacanthé (Hatzfeld), the name of a shrub. — L. tragacantha, the tragacanth-shrub; cf. tragacanthum, also dragantum, gum tragacanth. — Gk. τραγάκανθα, astragalus, lit. 'goat-thorn.' — Gk. τράγ-ος, a goat; and ἀκανθα, a thorn, from ἀκ-ίς, a sharp point.

TRAGEDY, a species of drama of a lofty and mournful cast. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. tragédie; see Chaucer's definition of it, C. T. 13979 (B 3163). — MF. tragedie, 'a tragedy'; Cot. — L. tragœdia. — Gk. τραγῳδία, a tragedy. 'There is no question that tragedy is the song of the goat; but why the song of the goat, whether because a goat was the prize for the best performance of that song in which the germs of the future tragedy lay, or because the first actors were dressed, like satyrs, in goat-skins, is a question which has stirred abundant discussion, and will remain unsettled to the end;' Trench, Study of Words, lect. v. The latter theory now finds most favour. A third theory is that a goat was sacrificed at the singing of the song; a goat, as being the spoiler of vines, was a fitting sacrifice at the feasts of Dionysus. In any case, the etymology is certain. — Gk. τραγῳδός, lit. 'a goat-singer,' a tragic poet and singer. — Gk. τράγ-ος, a he-goat; and ὄδός, a singer, contracted from δοιδός; see Ode. Der. tragedi-an, All's Well, iv. 3. 299, apparently a coined word, not borrowed from French. Also trag-ic, 2 Hen. IV, i. i. 61, from F. tragique, 'tragicall, tragick,' Cot., L. tragicus, Gk. τραγικός, goatish, tragic, from τράγ-ος, a goat. Hence tragic-al, -al-ly, -al-ness.

TRAIL, to draw along the ground, to hunt by tracking. (F.—L.) ME. traillen. In Wyclif, Esther, xv. 7, later version, we find: 'but the tother of the seruantesiss suede the ladi, and bar vp the clothis fletinge down in-to the erthe;' where, for fletinge, some MSS. have trailinge, and the earlier version has flowende = flowing. Cf. 'Braunches doo traile;' Palladius, iii. 289, p. 71. 'Traylyn as cloþys, Segmento;' Prompt. Parv. We have also ME. traile, sb. 'Trayle, or trayne of a clothe;' Prompt. Parv. So also: 'Trayle, sledde [sledge], traha; to Trayle, trahere,' Levins, ed. 1570. John de Garlande, in the 13th cent., gives a list of 'instrumenta mulieribus convenientia;' one of these is trahale, of which he says: 'Trahale dicitur a traho, Gallice traail;' Wright's Voc. i. 134. Palsgrave has: 'I trayle, lyke as a gowne dothe behynde on the grounde;' also 'I trayle, as one trayleth an other behynde or at a horse-tayle.' — OF. trailler, to tow a boat (Supp. to Godefroy); MF. trailler, 'to wind a yarn; also, to traile a deer, or hunt him upon a cold sent;' Cot. — OF. traille, a tow-rope (Supp. to Godefroy); also, a ferry-boat with a cord. — L. trāgula, a drag-net, sledge; cf. traha, a sledge. — L. trahere, to draw; see Trait. And cf. Train. Cf. MDu. treysten, 'to drawe, or dragge a boate with a cord,' Hexham; borrowed (like MDu. treyn, a train) from French.

TRAILBASTON, a law-term. (F.—L.) See Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691, and Spelman. There were justices of traylbaston, appointed by Edw. I. [The common people in those days called them tray-baston, quod sonat trahē baculum;' Blount. Roquefort divides the word as tray-le-baston. It would seem that the word was considered as a compound of OF. tray (= L. trahē), give up, and baston, a wand of office, because many unjust officers were deprived of their offices.] But this view is proved to be wrong by the passage from Langtoft's Chronicle printed in Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 318; on which see Wright's note, p. 383. The Anglo-F. word was traylbastoun, traylebastoun or trayllebastoun, meaning 'trail-stick' or 'stick-carrier;' (id. pp. 231, 233, 319); and the name was given to a particular set of lawless men, who carried sticks, and committed acts of violence. Against these the articles of trailbaston were directed; and the justices of trailbaston tried them. The Outlaw's Song (Polit. Songs, p. 231) is explicit; he says that these articles were unreasonable; for if he merely gives his servant a buffet or two, the servant will have him arrested, and he will be heavily fined. Mr. Wright notes that some have supposed (quite wrongly) that the name was given, not to the outlaws, but the judges. For the form of the word, compare MDu. kolf-drager, a sergeant, lit. 'club-bearer.' See Trait and Baton.

TRAIN, the hinder part of a trailing dress, a retinue, series, line of gun-powder, line of carriages; as a verb, to trail, to allure, educate, discipline. (F.—L.) ME. train, sb., spelt trayn, with the sense of plot, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 295, l. 22; trayne, id. p. 263, l. 23; 'treson and trayne,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 4192; ME. traynen, verb, to entice, id. 1683. — F. train, m., 'a great man's retinue, the train or hinder part of a beast; . . . work, dealing, trade, practise;' Cot. Also traine, f., 'a sled, a drag or dray without wheels, a drag-net,' id. Also trainer, verb, 'to traile, drag, draw;' id. OF. trahin, trāin, a train of men; trahiner, trainer, verb; cf. Late L. trahināre, to drag; occurring A.D. 1268. — Late L. tragināre, to draw along (Schwan); evidently founded upon L. trahere, to draw; see Trace, Trail. Cf. AF. treine, pp. dragged along, Liber Custumarum, p. 284. Der. train-er; train-band, i.e. train'd band, a band of trained men, Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 1, and used by Dryden and Clarendon (Todd); train-bear-er. ¶ But not train-oil.

TRAIN-OIL, oil procured from the blubber or fat of whales by boiling. (Hybrid; Du.; and F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt trane-oyle, Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 477, last line; trayne oyle, Arnold's Chron. p. 236. In Hexham's Du. Dict., ed. 1658, we find: 'Traen, trayne-oile made of the fat of whales.' Also: 'traen, a tear; liquor pressed out by the fire.' Cf. mod. Du. traan, a tear; traan, train-oil. We thus see that the lit. sense of train is 'tear,' then, a drop of liquor forced out by fire; and lastly, we have train-oil, or oil forced out by boiling. Cf. Dan. and Swed. tran, train-oil, blubber, G. thran, all borrowed from Dutch; cf. G. thräne, a tear, also a drop exuding from a vine when cut. So also Low G. traan, train-oil; trane, a tear; very well explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch. Similarly, we use E. tear in the sense of 'a drop' of some balsams and resins, &c. β. The Du. traan (equivalent to OHG. trahan below) is the only form for 'tear' used in Dutch; the G. thräne is really a pl. form, due to MHG. trähene, pl. of trahen, OHG. trahan, a tear. It has been thought that the OHG. trahan is allied to E. tear; but the connexion is not clear. ¶ It thus appears that train-oil is a tautological expression; accordingly, we find trane, train-oil, in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775.

TRAIT, a feature. (F.—L.) Given in Johnson, with the remark 'scarcely English.' — F. trait, 'a draught, line, streak, stroak,' Cot. He also gives the MF. spelling traict. — F. trait, formerly also traict, pp. of traire, to draw. — L. tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Trace (1).

TRAITOR, one who betrays, a deceiver. (F.—L.) ME. traitour, spelt traitoure, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 61, l. 12; treitur, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 279, l. 22. — OF. traitor, traïteur, a traitor. — L. trādītorem, acc. of trāditor, one who betrays. — L. trādere, to hand over, deliver, betray. — L. trā-, for trans, across, over; and -dere, for dare, to give; (hence trā-didī, pt. t., is due to dedī, I gave). See Trans- and Date. Der. traitor-ous, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 173; traitor-ous-ly; traitr-ess, All's Well, i. i. 184. From the same source are tradit-ion, treason, be-tray.

TRAJECTORY, the curve which a body describes when projected. (F.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Suggested by MF. trajectoire, 'casting, thrusting, sending, transporting;' Cot. Formed as if from a L. **trāiectorius*, belonging to projection; formed from trā-iectus, pp. of trāicere (trājicere), to throw, cast, or fling over or across. — L. trā-, for trans, across; and iacere, to cast. See Trans- and Jet. Der. traject, which is perhaps the right reading for tranect in Merch. of Ven. iii. 4. 53; from MF. traject, 'a ferry, a passage over,' Cot., which from L. trāiectus, a passage over. Shakespeare would have written traiect, which was made into tranect, a false form.

TRAM, a coal-waggon, a carriage for passengers running on iron rails. (Scand.) There have been frequent inquiries about this word; see Notes and Queries, 2 Ser. v. 128, xii. 229, 276, 358; 4 Ser. xii. 299, 420; 6 Ser. ii. 225, 356. A tram is an old Northern word for a coal-waggon, esp. such a one as ran upon rails. In N. and Q., 2 Ser. xii. 276, J. N. quoted an Act of Parliament for the year 1794, for the construction of 'an iron dram-road, tram-road, or railway' between Cardiff and Merthyr Tydvil; but the date 1794 should have been 1820. In N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 356, A. Wallis stated that 'tramways were in use in Derbyshire before 1790; one of planks and log-sleepers was laid between Shipley coal-pit and the wharf near Newmansleys, a distance of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles, and was discontinued in the above year.' [About A.D. 1800, a Mr. Benjamin Outram made certain improvements in connexion with railways for common vehicles, which gave rise to the fiction (ever since industriously circulated) that tram-road is short for Outram road, in ignorance of the fact that the accent alone is sufficient to show that Outram, if shortened to one syllable, must become Out rather than ram or tram.] Brockett's Glossary (3rd ed. 1846) explains that a tram is the Northern word for 'a small carriage on four wheels, so distinguished from a sledge. It is used in coal-mines to bring the coals from the hewers to the crane.'  $\beta$ . The word is clearly the same as Lowland Scotch tram, '(1) the shaft of a cart or carriage of any kind, (2) a beam or bar,' Jamieson. Dunbar has barrow-tram; Of the same James Dog, l. 19. Cf. prov. E. tram, a small milk-bench (Halliwell); which was orig. a plank of wood. It was prob. used first of the shaft of a small carriage, and then applied to the small carriage itself, esp. such a one as was pushed or drawn by men or boys in coal-pits. This notion is borne out by the cognate Low G. traam, a word particularly used of the handles of a wheel-barrow or the handles by which a kind of sledge was pushed; Bremen Wörterbuch, ed. 1771. In N. and Q., 6 S. ii. 498, J. H. Clark notes that 'the amending of the highway or tram from the Weste ende of Bridgegait, in Barnard Castle' occurs in a will dated 1555; see Surtees Soc. Publications, vol. xxxviii. p. 37. Here a tram prob. means a log-road. The word is Scandinavian. — Norw. tram, a door-step (of wood); traam, a frame; Swed. dial. tromm, a log, stock of a tree; also a summer-sledge (sommar-slåde); also trömm, trum (Rietz); MSwed. trâm, trum, a piece of a large tree, cut up into logs. The orig. sense is clearly a beam or bar of cut wood, hence a shaft of a sledge or cart, or even the sledge itself. Cf. EFries. trame, a step of a ladder, handle of a barrow; Low G. traam, a balk, beam, esp. one of the handles of a wheel-barrow, as above; also MDu. drom, a beam (obsolete); Hexham. Also OHG. drām, trām, a beam, once a common word; see Grimm's Dict. ii. 1331, 1332. The last form may account for the variation dram-road, in the Act of Parliament cited above; and it has been already observed that a dramroad or tramroad might also be explained as a log-road.  $\gamma$ . The comparison of Swed. tromm with Du. drom shows that the original Low G. initial letter must have been th; which is proved by the Icel. þram-valr, lit. 'a beam-hawk,' a poet. word for a ship.  $\delta$ . The Swed. dial. trum (above) further resembles G. trum, lump, stump, end, thrum, fragment, and suggests a connexion with Thrum (1), to which Icel. þram- is related by gradation. Hence, the orig. sense was 'end;' then fragment, bit, lump, log, plank, shaft, &c. Der. tram-road, -way.

TRAMMEL, a net, shackle, anything that confines or restrains. (F.—L.) ME. tramayle, 'grete nette for fyschynge;' Prompt. Parv. Spenser has *tramel*s, nets for the hair, F. Q. ii. 2. 15. — MF. tramail, 'a trammel, or a net for partridges;' Cot. Cf. F. trameau (answering to an older form *\*tramel*), 'a kind of drag-net for fish, a trammel net for fowle;' this comes still nearer to Spenser's tramel. Cf. Ital. tramaglio, a drag-net, trammel; Port. trasmallo, Span. trasmallo, a trammel or net; Gascon tramail; mod. F. trémil. — Late L. tramacula, tramacula, a trammel, occurring in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern, xxvii. 20, col. 154; cf. coll. 158, 161. The word has numerous other forms, such as tremacle, tremale, trimacle, &c., in other texts of the Lex Salica. Kern remarks: 'tremacle, &c. is a diminutive, more or less Latinised. The Frankish word must have differed but slightly, if at all, from the Drenthian (N. Saxon) treemke (for tremike, tramike), a trammel. Both the English and Drenthian word point to a simplex trami or tramia;' col. 501.  $\beta$ . This assumes the word to be Teutonic, yet brings us back to no intelligible Teut. base; nor does it account for the Ital. form. Diez takes it to be Latin, and explains tremacula from L. tri-, thrice, three times, and macula, a mesh or net, as if it meant treble-mesh or treble-net. He remarks that a similar explanation applies to Trellis, q.v. [This account is accepted, without question, by Scheler, Littré, and Hatzfeld.] It is to be further noted that, according to Diez, the Piedmontese trimaj is explained by Zalli to mean a fish-net or bird-net made of three layers of net of different-sized meshes; and that Cherubini and Patriarchi make similar remarks concerning the Milanese tremagg and Venetian tramagio.  $\gamma$ . As to L. tri-, see Three; as to L. macula, see Mail (1). The Span. trasmallo is an altered form, as if from trans maculam, across the net, which is not very intelligible. See Körting, § 9739.

TRAMONTANE, foreign. (F.—Ital.—L.) The word is properly Italian, and only intelligible from an Italian point of view; it was applied to men who lived beyond the mountains, i.e. in France, Switzerland, Spain, &c. It came to us through the French, and was at first spelt tramountain. 'The Italians account all tramountain doctors but apothecaries in comparison of themselves;' Fuller, Worthies, Hertfordshire (R.). — MF. tramountain, 'northerly;' Cot. — Ital. tramontano, pl. tramontani, 'those folkles that dwell beyond the mountaines;' Florio. — L. transmontānus, beyond the mountains. — L. trans, beyond; and mont-, stem of mons, a mountain; see Trans- and Mountain. Cf. Ultramontane.

TRAMP, to tread, stamp. (E.) ME. trampen. 'Trampelyn, trampyn, Tero;' Prompt. Parv. 'He trampith with the foot;' Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13. Not in AS., but prob. E.; it is found in G. and Low G., whence the Scand. forms. Cf. Low G. and G. trampen, trampeln, to stamp; Dan. trampe, Swed. trampa, to tread, trample on. From the Teut. base TRAMP, to tread, occurring as the 2nd grade of the Goth. strong verb ana-trimpan. 'Managei ana-tramp ina' = the multitude pressed upon him, lit. trampled on him, Luke, v. 1.  $\beta$ . This is a nasalised form of the Teut. base TRAP, to tread; see Trap (1). Der. tramp, sb., a journey on foot; tramp-er, a vagrant (see Johnson); also tramp, a shortened familiar form of tramp-er, both forms being given in Grose's Dict. of the Vulgar Tongue, 1790. And see tramp-le.

TRAMPLE, to tread under foot. (E.) ME. trampelen; Prompt. Parv. The frequentative of Tramp, q.v. The sense is, accordingly, 'to keep on treading upon.' Cf. Low G. trampeln, G. trampeln, to trample, stamp; from Low G. and G. trampen, to tramp or stamp.

TRAM-ROAD, TRAM-WAY; see Tram.

TRANCE, catalepsy, ecstasy, loss of self-consciousness. (F.—L.) ME. trance, Chaucer, C. T., A 1572. — F. transe, 'extreme fear, dread, . . . a trance or swoon;' Cot. A verbal sb. from the OF. transir, of which Cot. gives the pp. transi, 'fallen into a trance or swoon, astonished, amazed, half dead.' — L. transire, to go or pass over; whence Ital. transire, 'to goe forth, passe ouer; . . . also to fall in a swoone, to dye or gaspe the last;' Florio. [This shows that transire came to have the sense of 'die' or 'swoon;' similarly the OF. trespasser (our trespass) commonly means 'to die.'] — L. trans, across; and ire, to go; see Transit. Der. en-trance (2). Also trans-ed, K. Lear, v. 3. 218.

TRANQUIL, quiet, peaceful. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 348. [The sb. tranquillity is in much earlier use; we find ME. tranquillitee, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 4, l. 99.] — F. tranquille, 'calm;' Cot. — L. tranquillus, calm, quiet, still. Prob. associated with qui-ēs, rest; compare -quillus with E. while. Der. tranquil-ly; tranquill-i-ty, from F. tranquillité, 'tranquillity,' Cot., from L. acc. tranquillitatem. Also tranquill-ise, Thomson, Castle of Indolence, c. ii. st. 19.

TRANS-, beyond, across, over. (L.) L. trans-, prefix; also as prep. trans, beyond. Trans is the pres. part. of a verb *\*trāre*, to cross, go beyond, only occurring in in-trāre, ex-trāre, pene-trāre. Cf. Skt. tara-, a crossing over. Brugmann, ii. § 579. Allied to Term.  $\beta$ . The comp. suffix -ter (in Latin) is prob. from the same root; cf. præ-ter, sub-ter, in-ter-ior, &c. In composition, trans- becomes tran- in tran-quil, tran-scend, tran-scribe, tran-sept, tran-spire, tran-substantiate; and tra- in tra-dition, tra-duce, tra-jectory, tra-montane (though the last is only an Ital., not a Latin spelling); also in tra-verse, tra-vesty.

TRANSACTION, the management of an affair. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transaction, 'a transaction, accord, agreement;' Cot. — L. transactiōnem, acc. of transactiō, a completion, an agreement; cf. L. transactus, pp. of transigere, to drive or thrust through, also to settle a matter, complete a business. — L. trans, across, through; and agere, to drive; see Trans- and Act. Der. transact-or, in Cot., to translate F. transacteur, but perhaps directly from L. transactor, a manager. Hence was evolved the verb transact, Milton, P. L. vi. 286.

TRANS-ALPINE, beyond the Alps. (F.—L.) 'Transalpine garbs;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, i. 1. — F. transalpin, 'forraign;' Cot. — L. transalpinus, beyond the Alps. — L. trans, beyond; and Alp-, stem of Alpēs, the Alps; with suffix -inus. See Trans- and Alp. ¶ So also trans-atlantic, a coined word, 'used by Sir W. Jones in 1782; see Memoirs, &c., p. 217;' F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 275.

TRANSCEND, to surmount, surpass. (L.) In Gawain Douglas, Palace of Honour, pt. ii. st. 18. — L. transcendere, to climb over, surpass. — L. trans, beyond; and scandere, to climb. See Trans- and Scan. Der. transcend-ent, used by Cot. to translate F. transcendant; transcend-ent-ly, transcendence, All's Well, ii. 3. 40, from L. sb. transcendentia; transcend-ent-al, given as a mathematical term in Phillips, ed. 1706; transcend-ent-al-ly, -ism, -ist.

TRANSCRIBE, to copy out. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Cot., to translate F. transcribere. — L. transcribere (pp. transcriptus), to transfer in writing, copy from one book into another. — L. trans, across, over; and scribere, to write; see Trans- and Scribe. Der. transcrib-er, Tatler, no. 271, § 3; transcript, in Minshew, from L. pp. transcriptus; transcript-ion.

TRANSEPT, the part of a church at right angles to the nave. (L.) Lit. 'a cross-enclosure.' Not an old word; and coined. Oddly spelt transcept in Wood's Fasti Oxonienses, vol. ii. (R.); of which the first edition appeared in 1691–2. — L. tran-, for trans, across; and septum, an enclosure. Septum is from septus, pp. of sēpire or sēpire, to enclose; from sēpēs, a hedge.

TRANSFER, to transport, convey to another place. (L.) In Shak. Sonnet 137. Cot. gives F. pp. transferé, 'transferred'; but the E. word was prob. directly from L. transferre, to transport, transfer. — L. trans, across; and ferre, to carry, cognate with E. bear. See Trans- and Bear (1). Der. transfer-able, also spelt transferr-ible (quite needless); transfer-ence, transfer-ee.

TRANSFIGURE, to change the appearance of. (F.—L.) ME. transfiguren, Chaucer, C. T. 1107 (A 1105). — F. transfigurer, 'to transfigure'; Cot. — L. transfigurāre, to change the figure of. — L. trans, across (hence implying change); and figūra, figure, outward appearance. See Trans- and Figure. Der. transfigurati-ion, from F. transfiguration, 'a transfiguration,' Cot., from L. acc. transfigurātiōnem.

TRANSFIX, to fix by piercing through. (L.) 'Quite through transfixed with a deadly dart;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 21. — L. transfixus, pp. of transfigere, to thrust through. See Trans- and Fix.

TRANSFORM, to change the form of. (F.—L.) ME. transformen, Wyclif, 2 Cor. iii. 18. — F. transformer, 'to transform'; Cot. — L. transformāre, to change the form of. — L. trans, across (implying change); and forma, form. See Trans- and Form. Der. transformat-ion, from F. transformation, 'a transformation,' Cot., from L. acc. transformātiōnem.

TRANSFUSE, to cause to pass from one person or part into another, to make to imbibe. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 389, vi. 704. — L. transfusus, pp. of transfundere, to pour out of one vessel into another, to decant, transfuse. — L. trans, across; and fundere, to pour; see Trans- and Fuse. Der. transfus-ion.

TRANSGRESSION, violation of a law, sin. (F.—L.) 'For the rage of my transgression;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii (How the Child was slain by a serpent). — F. transgression, 'a transgression, trespass'; Cot. — L. transgressiōnem, acc. of transgressio, a passing over, transposition, also a transgression of the law; cf. transgressus, pp. of transgredi, to step over, pass over. — L. trans, across; and gradi, to step, walk; see Trans- and Grade. Der. transgress-or, formerly transgressour, Fabyan, Chron. an. 1180, ed. Ellis, p. 299, from F. transgresseur, 'a transgressor,' Cot., from L. acc. transgressōrem. Hence was made transgress, verb, used by Tyn-dall, Works, p. 224, col. 1, l. 3 from bottom. Observe tres-pass, a similar formation to trans-gress.

TRANSIENT, passing away, not lasting. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xii. 554. Suggested by L. transiens, of which the oblique-case stem is transieunt-, not transient-. [Cf. ambient, from ambire, which is conjugated regularly.] Transiens is the pres. part. of transire, to go across, to pass away. — L. trans, across; and ire, to go, from √EI, to go. See Trans- and Itinerant. Der. transient-ly, -ness. Also (like pp. transitus) transit, in Phillips, ed. 1706, shortened from L. transitus, a passing over; transit-ion, Phillips, from L. acc. transitīōnem, a passing over, a transition; transit-ion-al; transit-ive, from L. transitivus, a term applied to a transitive or active verb; transit-ive-ly, -ness; transit-or-y, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 123, suggested by F. transitoire, 'transitory,' Cot.; from L. transitōrius, liable to pass away, passing away; transit-or-i-ly, -ness. And see trance.

TRANSLATE, to transfer, move to another place, to render into another language. (F.—L.) ME. translaten, to remove, Gower, C. A. i. 261; bk. ii. 3044. — F. translatier, 'to translate, . . . reduce, or remove'; Cot. — Late L. translātāre, to translate, in use in the 12th century. — L. translātus, transferred; used as the pp. of trans-ferre, but really from a different root. — L. trans, across; and lātus, carried, borne, for **lātus*, from √TEL, to lift, bear, whence L. tollere, to lift. See Trans- and Tolerate. Der. translat-ion, ME. translacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 15493 (G 25), from F. translation, 'a translation,' Cot., from L. translātiōnem, acc. of translātiō, a transference, transferring.

TRANSLUCENT, clear, allowing light to pass through. (L.) In Milton, Comus, 861. — L. translūcent-, stem of pres. part. of translūcere, to shine through. — L. trans, through; and lūcere, to shine; see Trans- and Lucid. Der. translucent-ly, trans-lucence.

TRANSMARINE, beyond the sea. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. transmarinus, beyond sea. — L. trans, beyond; and mar-e, sea; with suffix -inus. See Trans- and Marine.

TRANSMIGRATION, the passing into another country or state of existence. (F.—L.) Spelt transmygracioun, Trevisa, i. 33, l. 20. — F. transmigratiō, 'a transmigration, a flitting or shifting of abroad'; Cot. — L. transmigrātiōnem, acc. of transmigrātiō, a removing from one country to another. — L. transmigrāre, to migrate across, from one place to another. See Trans- and Migrate. Der. (from L. pp. transmigrātus) transmigrate, Antony, ii. 7. 51; transmigrat-or, transmigrat-or-y.

TRANSMIT, to cause or suffer to pass through, to deliver. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 576 (R.). — L. transmittere, to cause to go across, send over, dispatch, transmit. — L. trans, across; and mittere, to send; see Trans- and Mission. Der. transmitt-al, transmitt-er; transmiss-ion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 2, from L. acc. transmissiōnem; transmiss-ible, from F. transmissible, 'transmittable,' Cot.; transmiss-ibil-i-ty.

TRANSMUTE, to change to another form or substance. (L.) '[He] transmuted the sentence of deth vnto perpetuyte of pryson;' Fabyan, Chron. c. 159. [The ME. form was transmuēn, or transmewen, Chaucer, C. T. 8261 (E 385), from F. transmuere, 'to change or alter over,' Cot., from L. transmūtāre.] — L. transmūtāre, to change into another form. — L. trans, across (implying change); and mūtāre, to change; see Trans- and Mutable. Der. transmut-able; transmut-at-ion, spelt transmutacioun, Chaucer, C. T. 2841 (A 2839), from F. trans-mutation, 'a transmutation, alteration,' Cot., from L. acc. trans-mutātiōnem.

TRANSOM, a thwart-piece across a double window; the lintel over a door; in ships, a beam across the stern-post to strengthen the after-part. (L.) 'Transome, or lintell ouer a dore;' Baret, ed. 1580. 'The transome of a bed, trabula;' Levins. 'Meneau de fenestre, the transome, or cross-bar of a window;' Cot. 'Beames, prickeposts, groundels, summers or dormants, transoms, and such principals;' Harrison, Desc. of England, b. ii. c. 12, ed. Furnivall, p. 233. Spelt trampsom, meaning the part of the bedstead between the two headposts, Bury Wills, p. 23 (1463); spelt traunsom, Paston Letters, iii. 407. [Halliwell notes the spelling transumpt, but this is a corrupt form; the real meaning of transumpt is a copy of a record; see Transumpt in Cot. Webster says it is sometimes spelt transummer, but I can nowhere find it, and such a spelling is obviously due to confusion with summer, a beam, as used in the above quotation from Harrison.]

β. It is a corruption of L. transtrum, used as an architectural and nautical term. It means precisely a transom, in all its senses. 'Transtra et tabulæ nauium dicuntur et tigna, quæ ex pariete in parietem porriguntur;' Festus (White). 'Transoms est vox Architectonica et transversas trabes notat, Vitruvius transtra;' Skinner, 1671 Cooper's Thesaurus (1565) explains L. transtrum by 'a transome going ouerthwarte an house.' Florio explains Mital. transtri as 'crosse or overthwart beames, transtroms;' and trasto as 'a transome or beame going crosse a house.' γ. The L. transtrum is derived from L. trans, orig. 'going across' (see Trans-); -trum is a suffix, denoting the agent, as in arā-trum, that which ploughs. Hence trans-trum = that which goes across; cf. in-trans, going in.

TRANSPICUOUS, transparent, translucent. (L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 141. Coined, as if from *L. *transpicuus*, from L. transpicere, to see or look through; see Conspicuous, Perspicuous. — L. trans, through; and specere, to look; see Trans- and Spy.

TRANSPIERCE, to pierce through. (F.—L.) Used by Drayton; Civil War, bk. vi. last stanza. — F. transpercer, 'to pierce through'; Cot. See Trans- and Pierce.

TRANSPIRE, to pass through the pores of the skin, to become public, or ooze out. (L.) In Milton, P. L. v. 438. — L. tran-, for trans, through; and spirāre, to breathe, respire. See Trans- and Spirit. Der. transpir-at-ion, from F. transpiration, 'a transpiration, evaporation,' Cot. This sb. prob. really suggested Milton's verb.

TRANSPLANT, to plant in a new place. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — F. transplanter, 'to transplant'; Cot. — L. transplantāre. — L. trans, across, implying change; and plantāre, to plant. See Trans- and Plant. Der. transplant-at-ion, from F. transplantation, 'a transplantation,' Cot.

TRANSPORT, to carry to another place, carry away by passion or pleasure, to banish. (F.—L.) In Spenser, Hymn 4, Of Heavenly Beauty, l. 18. — F. transporter, 'to transport, transfer'; Cot. — L. transportāre, to carry across. — L. trans, across; and portāre, to carry.

See Trans- and Port (1). Der. transport, sb., Pope, Windsor Forest, 90; transport-able; transport-ance, Troil. iii. 2. 12; transport-at-ion.

TRANSPOSE, to change the position of, change the order of. (F.—L. and Gk.) ME. transposen, Gower, C. A. ii. 90; bk. iv. 2656. —F. transposer, 'to transpose, translate, remove'; Cot. See Trans- and Pose. Der. transpos-al.

TRANSPOSITION, a change in the order of words, &c. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. —F. transposition, 'a transposition, removal out of one place into another'; Cot. See Trans- and Position.

¶ Not ultimately connected with transpose, which is from a different source.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION, the doctrine that the bread and wine in the Eucharist are changed into Christ's body and blood. (F.—L.) In Tyndall, Works, p. 447, col. 2; he also has transubstantiated, id. p. 445, col. 2. —F. transubstantiation; Cot. —Late L. transubstantiatiōnem, acc. of transubstantiatio; see Hildebert, Bp. of Tours, Sermon 93. Hildebert died in 1134 (Trench, Study of Words). Cf. Late L. transubstantiatus, pp. of transubstantiāre, coined from trans, across (implying change), and substantia, substance. See Trans- and Substance.

TRANSVERSE, lying across or cross-wise. (L.) 'But all things tost and turned by transverse,' Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56; where by transverse = in a confused manner, or reversedly. —L. transuersus, turned across; hence, athwart. Orig. pp. of transuertere, to turn across. See Trans- and Verse. And see Traverse. Der. transverse-ly.

TRAP (1), an instrument or device for ensnaring animals. (E.) ME. trappe, Chaucer, C. T. 145. AS. treppe, a trap; Ælfric's Colloquy (Fowler); for **trappe*; cf. be-trappan, to entrap; A. S. Chron. an. 992. But the pronunciation has perhaps been affected by F. trappe, a trap, a word of Teut. origin. + MDu. trappe, 'a trap to catch mice in'; Hexham; OHG. trapa, trappa, a snare, trap [whence Low L. trappa, Ital. trappa, F. trappe, Span. trampa, a trap (Diez)]. β. Orig. sense 'step'; the trap is that on which an animal steps, or puts its foot, and is so caught. Cf. Westphal. trappe, a step; Du. trap, a stair, step, kick; G. treppe, a flight of steps; Swed. trappa, a stair; allied to Du. trappen, to tread on, EFries. and Low G. trappen, Norw. trappa, to tread on, trample. Allied to Tramp. The nasalised form tramp appears in Span. trampa, a trap. Der. trap, verb, spelt trappe in Palsgrave; trap-door, a door falling and shutting with a catch; also en-trap, q. v. Also trap-ball or trap-bat, a game played with a ball, bat, and a trap which, when lightly tapped, throws the ball into the air. And see trap (3).

TRAP (2), to adorn, or ornament with gay dress or clothing. (F.—Teut.) The pp. trapped occurs in Chaucer: 'Upon a stede bay, trapped in stele,' C. T. 2159 (A 2157); and see l. 2892 (A 2890). This is formed from a sb. trappe, meaning the trappings or ornaments of a horse. 'Mony trappe, mony croper' = many a trapping, many a crupper; King Alisaunder, 3421. 'Upon a stede whyt so milke; His trappys wer off tueli sylke;' Rich. Cœur de Lion, 1515; where tueli means 'scarlet.' Coined, with unusual change from dr to tr (by sound association with trap (1)), from F. drap, cloth; as shown by Chaucer's use of trappure, trappings of a horse, C. T., A 2499, from OF. drapure, trappings of a horse (Godefroy). We also find Late L. trapus, cloth (usually drappus), Span. and Port. trapo, cloth; Late L. trappātura, a horse's trappings. See Drape. β. Cf. F. draper, 'to dress, or to full cloath; to beat, or thicken, as cloath, in the fulling.' Possibly for **traper*; in which case it may come from Low G. and Du. trappen, to tread upon, trample on (hence, to full cloth). See Trap (1). Der. trapp-ings, s. pl., ornaments for a horse, Shak. Venus, 286, hence, any ornaments, Hamlet, i. 2. 86. Also ratile-traps, q. v.

TRAP (3), a kind of igneous rock. (Swed.) Modern. So called because such rocks often appear in large tabular masses, rising above each other like steps (Webster). —Swed. trappa, a stair, or flight of stairs, trapp, trap (rock); Dan. trappe, a stair, trap, trap. + Du. trap, a stair, step; G. treppe, a stair. See Trap (1) and Tramp.

TRAPAN, the same as Trepan (2), q. v.

TRAPEZIUM, a plane four-sided figure with unequal sides. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in M. Blundeville's Exercises, 1594, fol. 36 b (wrongly marked 39 b). —L. trapezium. —Gk. τραπεζίον, a small table or counter; a trapezium, because four-sided, like such a table. Dimin. of τράπεζα, a table, esp. a dining-table. Cf. ἀργυρόπεζα, i. e. silver-footed, as an epithet of Thetis. —Gk. τρα-, allied to τετρα-, prefix signifying 'four,' as in τετράγωνος, four-cornered, from τέτταρες, Attic for τέσσαρες, four; and πέζα, a foot, for **πέδ-ya*, an allied word to πούς (stem ποδ-), a foot, which is cognate with E. foot. See Tetragon and Foot. Der. trapezo-id, lit. 'trapezium-like,' from τράπεζο-, for τράπεζα, and εἶδ-ος, form; trapezo-id-al.

Also trapeze, from F. trapèze, the name of a kind of swing for athletic exercise, so called from being sometimes made in the shape of a trapezium, as thus: Δ. The F. trapèze is from L. trapezium.

TRAPPINGS, horse-ornaments; see Trap (2).

TRAPPIST, a member of a certain monastic body. (F.) 'Named from the village of Soligny-la-Trappe, in the department of Orne, France, where the abbey of la Trappe was founded in 1140;' Cent. Dict.

TRASH, refuse, worthless stuff. (Scand.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 223; Oth. iii. 3. 157; hence used of a worthless person, Oth. ii. 1. 312, v. 1. 85. The orig. sense is clippings of trees, as stated by Wedgwood, or (yet more exactly) the bits of broken sticks found under trees in a wood, and collected for fire-wood. Wedgwood quotes from Evelyn as follows, with a reference to Notes and Queries, June 11, 1853: 'Faggots to be every stick of three foot in length—this to prevent the abuse of filling the middle part and ends with trash and short sticks.' Hence it came to mean refuse generally; Cotgrave explains menüailles by 'small ware, small trash, small offals.' Of Scand. origin. Cf. Icel. tros, rubbish, leaves and twigs from a tree picked up and used for fuel, whence trosna, to become worn out, to split up as a seam does; cf. trassi, a slovenly fellow, trassa, to be slovenly. Norweg. trask, trash, scraps (Ross); tras, small pieces (Ross); trasa, a rag, tatter (Ross); trase, the same; also tros, fallen twigs, half-rotten branches easily broken, allied to trysja, to break into small pieces, to crackle. Swed. trasa, a rag, a tatter; Swed. dial. trase, a rag; träs, a heap of sticks, a worthless fellow (which is one sense of Cleveland trash), old useless bits of fencing. β. Rietz points out the true origin; he adduces Swed. dial. slå i tras, to break in pieces, which is obviously the same phrase as Swed. slå i kras, to break in pieces; the substitution of tr for kr being a Scan. peculiarity, of which we have an undoubted example in Icel. trani, Swed. trana, Dan. trane, all variants of the word which we spell crane; see Crane. Hence the etym. is from Swed. krasa, Dan. krase, to crash, as a thing does when broken; see Crash. The Icel. form tros answers to Swed. krassa, to bruise, crush, crash, a collateral form of krasa; cf. Orkney truss, refuse, also prov. E. trous, the trimmings of a hedge (Halliwell). γ. Thus trash means 'crashings,' i. e. pieces that break off short with a snap or crash, dry twigs; hence also a bit of torn stuff, a rag, &c. ¶ This throws no light on trash, as in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 81; which has prob. a different origin, perhaps trace (2). Der. trash-y.

TRAVAIL, toil, labour in child-birth. (F.—L.) ME. travail (with u for v), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 130, l. 32. —F. travail, 'travell, toile, labour, business, pains-taking;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. travaglio, Span. trabajo, Port. trabalho, Prov. trabalhs (Bartsch), toil, labour; orig. an obstacle or impediment, which is still a sense of Span. trabajo.] According to P. Meyer (Romania, xvii. 421) it answers to Late L. trepālium, a kind of rack for torturing martyrs (Ducange); perhaps made of three beams (tres pāli). Others equate it to Late L. **trabāculum*, which might have been formed from L. trab-, base of L. trabs, trabes, a beam. Cf. L. trabāle, an axle-tree; and see Trave. ¶ The W. trafael, travail, is borrowed from English. Der. travail, verb, ME. travaillen, King Alisaunder, 1612, Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 34, l. 3, from F. travailler, 'to travell, toile, also to harry, weary, vex, infest;' Cot. Doublet, travel.

TRAVE, a beam, a shackle. (F.—L.) 'Trave, a frame into which farriers put unruly horses;' Halliwell. 'Trave, Travise, a place enclosed with rails for shoeing an unruly horse;' Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. 'Trave, a trevis or little room made purposely to shoe unbroken horses in;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Treusys, to shoe a wyld horse in, trauayl a cheual;' Palsgrave. ME. traue (with u for v); 'And she sprong as a colt doth in the traue;' Chaucer, C. T. 3282. —OF. trave, a beam, Godefroy; traf, a beam, given in the Supp. to Roquefort; usually tref, 'the beam of a house;' Cot. [Cf. MItal. traue, 'any kinde of beame;' Florio.] —L. trabem, acc. of trabes or trabs, a beam. Der. archi-trave, q. v.

TRAVEL, to journey, walk. (F.—L.) Merely the same word as travail; the two forms are used indiscriminately in old editions of Shakespeare (Schmidt). So also travail, to travel; in Ben Jonson, Every Man, ii. 5. 32. The word forcibly recalls the toil of travel in former days. See Travail. Der. travel, verb; travell-er, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308. Doublet, travail.

TRAVERSE, laid across; as sb., a cross, obstruction, a thing built across; as a verb, to cross, obstruct, deny an argument, also to pass over a country. (F.—L.) 'Trees . . hewen downe, and laid trauers, one ouer another;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 186 (R.). 'Smote his hors trauerse;' Malory, Morte Arthure, bk. x. c. 65. Gower has trauers as a sb., meaning 'cross' or impediments, in the last line but 14 of his Conf. Amantis. —F. travers, m., traverse, f., 'crosse-wise, overthwart;' Cot. (Hence the sb. traverse, 'a cross-way, also . . a thwart, . . let, bar, hinderance;' id.; also the verb traverser, 'to thwart or go overthwart, to crosse or passe over,' id.) —L. transuersus, turned across, laid athwart; pp. of transuertere, to turn across; see Transverse. Der. traverse, verb, in Malory, M. A. bk. x. c. 30, from F. traverser, as above; traverser.

TRAVERTINE, TRAVERTIN, a kind of white lime-stone. (Ital. —L.) Used for building. Spelt Treuertino, R. Eden, Three Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 367. —Ital. travertino, M. Ital. tivertino, 'a kind of stone to build withall' (Florio). —L. Tibertinus, belonging to Tibur, the modern Tivoli.

TRAVESTY, a parody. (F. — Ital. — L.) 'Scarronides, or Virgile Travestie, being the first book of Virgils Æneis in English Burlesque; London, 1664;' by Charles Cotton. Probably travestie is here used in the lit. sense of 'disguised,' or as we should now say, travestied. It is properly a pp., being borrowed from F. travesti, pp. of se travestir, 'to disguise or shift his apparell, to play the counterfeit;' Cot. — Ital. travestire, 'to disguise or shift in apparel, to maske;' Florio. —L. trans, prefix, lit. across, but implying change; and vestire, to clothe. The verb vestire is from the sb. vestis, clothing. See Trans- and Vest. Der. travesty, verb.

TRAWL, to fish with a drag-net. (F. — Teut.) 'Trawler-men, a sort of fishermen that us'd unlawful arts and engines, to destroy the fish upon the river Thames; among whom some were styl'd hebbemen, others tinckermen, Petermen, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. —OF. trawler, to go hither and thither (Roquefort); Walloon trawler, the same (Sigart); mod. Prov. traula; also OF. troller, mod. F. trôler, to drag about; Hamilton. See Troll. ¶ Quite distinct from trail.

TRAY, a shallow vessel, a salver. (E.) 'A treie, or such hollowe vessel . . . that laborers carrie mortar in to serue tilers or plasterers;' Baret, ed. 1580. ME. treye; 'Bolles, treyes, and platers,' i. e. bowls, trays, and platters; Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 1490. AS. tryg, written trig; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 340. Derived, by mutation, from AS. trog, a trough; see Trough. Cf. Low G. trügge (Stratmann); deriv. of trog, trough; Icel. trygill, a little trough, tray; Swed. dial. trygel, Norw. trygel. ¶ The alleged AS. treg is an error for trog; but treg might be a Kentish form of tryg, and would give ME. treig.

TREACHERY, faithlessness, trickery of a gross kind. (F. — L.) ME. trecherie, spelt trecherye, P. Plowman, B. i. 196; older spelling tricheirie, id. A. i. 172; Ancrén Riwle, p. 202, l. 18. —OF. trecherie, tricheirie, Godefroy; MF. tricheirie, 'whence, as it seems, our trechery, cousenage, deceit, a cheating, a beguiling;' Cot. —OF. trechier, trichier, MF. tricher, 'to cousen, cheat, beguile, deceive;' id. Cf. Ital. treccare, to cheat; Prov. tricharia, treachery, trichaire, a traitor. —Late L. **triccāre*, for tricāre, to dally (Ecclus. xxxii. 15), L. triccāri, to make difficulties. —L. trīcā, pl., difficulties, wiles; see Intricate. See Körting, § 9727. But prob. confused with Du. trek, a stroke; see further under Trickery. Der. treacher-ous, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 41, spelt trecherous, Pricke of Conscience, 4232, coined by adding the suffix -ous to the old word trecher, a traitor, spelt trichour in Rob. of Glouc. p. 455, l. 9329, trechour in Wyclif's Works, ed. Matthew, p. 239, l. 6; trecherous-ly, -ness. Körting, § 9727.

TREACLE, the syrup drained from sugar in making it. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. triacle, a medicament, a sovereign remedy (very common), P. Plowman, C. ii. 147, B. i. 146; see my note on it, explaining the matter. It had some resemblance to the treacle which has inherited its name. —OF. triacle, 'treacle,' Cot. The l is unoriginal; triacle is only another spelling of OF. theriaque, 'treacle;' Cot. —L. thēriaca, an antidote against the bite of serpents, or against poison; also spelt thēriace. —Gk. θηριακός, belonging to wild or venomous beasts; hence θηριακὰ φάρμακα, antidotes against the bite of venomous animals; and (no doubt) **θηριακή*, sb. sing. fem., in the same sense, whence L. thēriacē. —Gk. θηρίον, a wild animal, poisonous animal; dimin. of θήρ, a wild beast, Æolic φῆρ; cf. Russ. zvier(e), a wild beast; Lith. žvėris, a wild beast; L. ferus. Brugmann, i. § 319.

TREAD, to set down the foot, tramp, walk. (E.) ME. treden; pt. t. trad, Ormulum, 2561; pp. troden, treden, Chaucer, C. T. 12646 (C 712). AS. tredan, pt. t. træd, pp. treden, Grein, ii. 550. +Du. treden; G. treten, pt. t. trat, pp. getreten. We find also Icel. troða, pt. t. trað, pp. troðinn; which accounts for our pp. trodden; Dan. træde; Swed. tråda; Goth. trudan, to tread, pt. t. trath. Teut. type **tredan-*, pt. t. **trad*, pp. **trudanoz*. Der. tread-le or tredd-le, the same as ME. treðyl, a step, AS. trædel; 'Bases, trædelas vel stæpas, i. e. steps; Voc. 117. 6. Also tread-mill; trade, q. v.

TREASON, a betrayal of the government, or an attempt to overthrow it. (F. — L.) ME. traison, treison; spelt trayson, Havelok, 444; treisun, Ancrén Riwle, p. 56, l. 17. —OF. traïson, mod. F. trahison, treason, betrayal. —L. acc. trāditiōnem, betrayal. —L. trādere, to deliver, betray; see Traitor. Der. treason-able, treason-abi-y. Doublet, tradition.

TREASURE, wealth stored up, a hoard. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. tresor, occurring very early, in the A. S. Chron. an. 1137. —OF.

tresor, mod. F. trésor, treasure. [Cf. Ital. tesoro, Span. tesoro, Port. thesouro, spelt without r after t.] —L. thēsaurum, acc. of thēsaurus, a treasure. —Gk. θησαυρός, a treasure, a store, hoard; formed (it is not very clear with what suffixes) from the base θη-, to lay up, as seen in τίθημι, I place, lay up; or from θησ-, as in the future θήσω. See Theme, Thesis. Der. treasure, verb, Shak. Sonnet 6; treasur-er, from F. tresorier, spelt thesorier in Cot., and explained by 'a treasurer;' treasur-y, ME. tresorie, tresorye, Rob. of Glouc. p. 274, l. 5540, contracted from OF. tresorerie, spelt thresorerie in Cotgrave, so that treasury is short for treasurership. Also treasure-trove, i. e. treasure found; see Trover. Doublet, thesaurus.

TREAT, to handle in a particular manner, to entertain, manage by applying remedies, discourse of. (F. — L.) ME. treten, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 12455 (C 521). —F. traiter, to treat. —L. tractāre, to handle; frequent. form of trahere (pp. tractus), to draw; see Trace. Der. treat-ment, from F. traitement; treat-ise, ME. treitis, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. l. 8, from OF. treitis, treitis, traictis (see traictis in Roquefort), meaning (a thing) well handled or nicely made, attractive, admirable, an adj. which was even applied by Chaucer to the Prioress's nose, C. T. 152, and answering to a Late L. form **tractitiis*. Also treat-y, ME. tretey, Chaucer, C. T. 1290 (A 1288), from F. traité (traicté in Cotgrave), 'a treaty,' properly the pp. of traiter, to treat, and therefore 'a thing treated of.'

TREBLE, threefold; the highest part in music. (F. — L.) Why the highest part in music is called treble is not clear; it is usually explained as being the third part, after the tenor and alto. In this sense, it is the same word as when it means triple. Indeed, we find triple used by Fairfax in the musical sense of treble. 'The human voices sung a triple hie;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xviii. st. 24. Palsgrave has: 'Treble of a song, le dessus; Treble-stryng of an instrument, chanterelle.' Reginald atte Pette, in 1456, bequeathed 6s. 8d. towards the making of a new bell called trebyll; Testamenta Vetusta, ed. Nicholas, p. 286. ME. treble, threefold, Gower, C. A. iii. 159; bk. vii. 2202. —OF. treble, triple (Burguy). —L. tripulum, acc. of tripulus, triple. See Triple. For the change from p to b, cf. E. double, due to L. duplus. Der. treble, verb, Temp. iii. i. 221; trebl-y. Doublet, triple.

TREDDLE, the same as Treadle; see Tread.

TREE, a woody plant, of a large size. (E.) ME. tree, tre; also used in the sense of timber. 'Not oneli vessels of gold and of siluer, but also of tree and of erthe;' Wyclif, 2 Tim. ii. 20. AS. trēo, treow, a tree, also dead wood or timber; Grein, ii. 551. +Icel. trē; Dan. træ; Swed. trä, timber; träd, a tree, a corruption of träet, lit. 'the wood,' with the post-positive article; Goth. triu (gen. triuvis), a tree, piece of wood. β. All from Teut. type **trewom*, n., a tree, Fick, iii. 118; further allied to Russ. drevo, a tree, W. derw, an oak, Irish. darag, darog, an oak, Gk. δρῦς, an oak, Skt. dru-, wood; cf. Gk. δόρυ, a spear-shaft, Skt. dāru, wood, a species of pine. γ. Benfey connects Skt. dru- and dāru with the root ✓DER, to tear, rend, whence E. tear; see Tear (1); so also Fick, i. 615, 616. The explanation is that it meant a piece of cleft wood; cf. Gk. δέπειν, to flay, E. tear, to rend. But this is improbable. Brugmann, i. § 486. Der. tre-ēn, adj., made of wood, or belonging to a tree, Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 26, Cursor Mundi, 12392; with suffix -en as in gold-en, wood-en. Also tree-nail, a peg, a pin or nail made of wood, a nautical term. And see rhodo-den-dron, dryad.

TREFOIL, a three-leaved plant such as the white and red clover. (F. — L.) Given by Cot. as the tr. of F. treffle. —AF. trifol; in a Vocabulary pr. in Voc. 556. 33, we find AF. trifol answering to L. trifolium and E. wite clouere [white clover]. —L. trifolium, a three-leaved plant, as above. —L. tri-, prefix allied to trēs, three; and folium, a leaf; see Tri- and Foil.

TRELLIS, a structure of lattice-work. (F. — L.) ME. trellis. 'Trelys, of a wyndow or other lyke, Cancellus;' Prompt. Parv. —F. treillis, 'a trellis;' Cot. —F. treiller, 'to grate or lattice, to support or underset by, or hold in with, crossed bars or latticed frames;' Cot.; F. treille, 'an arbor or walk set on both sides with vines, &c. twining about a latticed frame;' id. —Late L. trichila, tricla, a bower, arbour, or summer-house. Origin doubtful. ¶ Quite distinct from F. treillis, sackcloth, OF. treillis, treslis, adj., applied to armour covered with a sort of lattice-work, Late L. trislicium, a covering of sackcloth. —L. trēs, three; licium, a thread. But the suffix -is in the former OF. treillis seems to have been due to association with this latter word. Der. trellis-ed.

TREMBLE, to shiver, shake, quiver. (F. — L.) ME. tremblen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 235. —F. trembler, 'to tremble;' Cot. The b is excremental, as is common after m. —Late L. tremulāre, to hesitate, lit. to tremble. —L. tremulus, trembling. —L. trem-ere, to tremble, with adj. suffix -ul-us. +Lithuan. trim-ti, to tremble; Gk. τρέμειν, to tremble. —✓TREM, to tremble; Fick, i. 604; Brugmann, i. § 474. Der. trembl-er, trembl-ing-ly. From L. tremere are also trem-or, in Phillips, borrowed from L. tremor, a trembling; trem-end-ous, also in Phillips, from L. tremendus, that ought to be feared, fut. pass. part. of tremere; trem-end-ous-ly; trem-ul-ous, Englished from L. tremulus, as above; trem-ul-ous-ly, -ness.

TRENCH, a kind of ditch or furrow. (F.—L.?) ME. trenche, Chaucer, C. T. 10706; (F 392). Shortened from F. trenchée, 'a trench,' Cot., lit. a thing cut.—F. trencher (now spelt trancher), 'to cut, carve, slice, hack, hew;' Cot. Cf. Span. trinchea, a trench, trinchar, to carve, trincar, to chop; Port. trinchar, to carve, trincar, to crack asunder, break; Ital. trincea, a trench, trinciare, to cut, carve. β. There is no satisfactory solution of this word; see Littré, Scheler, and Diez. Prob. Latin; apparently from Late L. trincāre, to cut, substituted for L. truncāre, to lop, from truncus, the trunk of a tree. We may notice, in Florio, Ital. trincare, 'to trim or smug up,' trinci, 'gardings, fringes, lacings, iaggings, also cuts, iags, or snips in garments.' Der. trench, verb, Macb. iii. 4. 27, from trencher, to cut; trench-ant, cutting, Timon, iv. 3. 115, from F. trenchant, pres. part. of trencher; trench-er, a wooden plate for cutting things on, ME. trenchere, Voc. 610. 17, from F. trenchoir, 'a trencher,' Cot., OF. trencheor. Cf. Trinket (1).

TREND, to turn or bend away, said of direction or course. (E.) See Nares. 'The shoare trended to the southwestward;' Hakluyt, Voyages, i. 276, § 7. 'By the trending of the land [you] come backe;' id. i. 383. ME. trenden, to roll or turn about. 'Lat hym rollen and trenden,' &c.; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 11. 1. 2. The word is E., being formed from the same source as AS. trendel, a circle, a ring, esp. a ring seen round the sun, A. S. Chron. an. 806; cf. AS. tryndel, a ring. Allied words are Dan. trind, adj. round, trindt, adv. around, trindes, to grow round; Swed. trind, round, cylindrical; OFriesic trind, trund, round; see Trundle. Cf. trendil, a hoop, mill-wheel, trendle, to trundle, in Levins, ed. 1570; trindals, rolls of wax, Cranmer's Works, ii. 155, 503 (Parker Soc.). All from the Teut. str. vb. **trend-an-*, to roll; whence AS. trendan, to roll (Napier), and ā-trend-lian, to roll.

TRENTAL, a set of thirty masses for the dead. (F.—L.) See the poem of St. Gregory's Trental, in Polit. Relig. and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, and my note on P. Plowman, C. x. 320. See Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 453; and see Nares.—OF. trentel, trental, a trental, set of thirty masses; Roquefort. Cf. Low L. trentāle, a trental.—F. trente, thirty.—L. triginta, thirty.—L. tri-, thrice, allied to trēs, three; and -ginta, i. e. -cinta, short for **decinta* = **decenta*, tenth, from decem, ten. See Three and Ten.

TREPAN (1), a small cylindrical saw used in removing a piece of a fractured skull. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. trepane, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 127. Spelt trepane in Cot.—MF. trepan, 'a trepane, an instrument having a round and indented edge,' &c.; Cot.—Late L. trepanum (for **trypanum*).—Gk. τρύπανον, a carpenter's tool, a borer, augur; also a surgical instrument, a trepan (Galen).—Gk. τρύπαν, to bore.—Gk. τρύπα, τρύπη, a hole. Ultimately from ✓TER, to pierce; as in L. terere, to bore, Gk. τέρειν (for **τρέπ-yeu*).

TREPAN (2), TRAPAN, to ensnare. (F.—Teut.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 617. Usually spelt trepan, as in Phillips, by a ridiculous confusion with the word above. Rightly spelt trapan in South's Sermons, vol. v. ser. 3 (R.), and in Anson's Voyages, b. i. c. 9 (R.). 'Forthwith alights the innocent trapann'd;' Cotton, Wonders of the Peak, 1681, p. 38 (Todd). 'For fear his words they should trapan;' Tom Thumb (1630); in E. Eng. Pop. Poetry, ii. 247. Not an old word.—OF. trappan, a snare or trap for animals (Roquefort); he also gives trapan, a kind of trap-door; OF. trapan, trapani, a plank (Godefroy).—Late L. trapentum, a plank for a trap-door.—F. trappe, a trap.—OHG. trappa, a trap; see Trap (1). ¶ The E. word is now only used as a verb, but it must have come in as a sb. in the first instance, as it is used by South: 'It is indeed a real trapan,' i. e. stratagem, Sermon ii. 377; 'Nothing but gins, and snares, and trapans for souls,' Sermon iii. 166 (Todd). The last quotation puts the matter in a very clear light. Cotgrave has the verb attrapper, and the sbs. trape, trapelle, attrapoire.

TREPANG; see Tripang.

TREPHINE, an improved form of the trepan. (F.—L.—Gk.) F. tréphine; in Littré; not in Hatzfeld. An arbitrary variant of trépan; see Trepan (1).

TREPIDATION, terror, trembling, fright. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 483, where it is used in an astronomical sense. 'A continual trepidation,' i. e. trembling motion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 137.—F. trepidation, 'trembling, terrour;' Cot.—L. trepidationem, acc. of trepidatio, alarm, a trembling.—L. trepidare, to tremble.—L. trepidus, agitated, disturbed, alarmed. Allied to OSlav. trēpetu, to tremble, Russ. trēpetat(e), Skt. tarala-s, trembling. See Brugmann, ii. § 797 (note). Der. (from L. trepidus) in-trepid.

TRESPASS, a passing over a boundary, the act of entering another man's land unlawfully, a crime, sin, offence, injury. (F.—L.)

ME. trespas, Rob. of Glouc. p. 505, l. 10403, where it means 'sin.'—OF. trespas, a crime (Burguy); also 'a decease, departure out of this world, also a passage;' Cot. (The lit. sense is 'a step beyond or across,' so that it has direct reference to the mod. use of trespass in the sense of intrusion on another man's land. Cf. Span. trespasso, a conveyance across, also a trespass; Ital. trapasso, a passage, digression.) The sb. is from trespass, verb, ME. trespassen, Wyclif, Acts, i. 25.—OF. trespasser, 'to passe over,' Cot., also to trespass (Burguy).—L. trans, across; and Late L. passāre, to pass, from pass-us, a step; see Trans- and Pass. Der. trespass-er, ME. trespassour, P. Plowman, C. ii. 92; also trespass-offering.

TRESS, a curl or lock of hair, a ringlet. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) ME. tesse, Chaucer, C. T. 1051 (A 1049); the pp. tressed, adorned with tresses, is in King Alisaunder, l. 5409.—F. tresse, 'a tresse or lock of hair;' Cot. He also gives tresser, 'to plait, weave, or make into tresses.' (Cf. Ital. treccia, a braid, knot, curl; pl. treccie, 'plaites, tresses, tramels, or roubles of womens haire;' Span. trenza, a braid of hair, plaited silk.) β. The orig. sense is 'a plait.'—Late L. tricia, variant of trica, a plait.—Gk. τρίχα, in three parts, threefold (Diez); from the usual method of plaiting the hair in three folds.—Gk. τρι-, thrice; allied to τρεῖς, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. γ. This is borne out by the Ital. trina, a lace, loop, allied to trino, threefold, from L. trinus, threefold. Der. tress-ed, as above. Also tress-ure, q. v.

TRESSURE, a kind of border, in heraldry. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706, and in works on heraldry.—MF. trescheur, 'a tresseur, in blazon;' Cot.—F. tresser, 'to plait, weave;' Cot.—F. tresse, a tress or plait of hair; see Tress. ¶ I find 'Hoc tricatorium, Anglice, tressure;' and again, 'Hec tricatoria, Anglice, tresewyr,' Voc. 656. 17, 792. 18. Here tricatoria is merely a Latinised form of the F. word, the F. tresser being Latinised as tricator.

TRESTLE, TRESSSEL, a movable support for a table, frame for supporting. (F.—L.) 'Trestyll for a table, tresteau;' Palsgrave. 'Hic tristellus, Anglice, treste;' Voc. 656. 28. 'Hic tristellus, a trestylle;' id. 723. 33. The pl. trestelys, i. e. trestles, occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 23, l. 6, in a will dated 1463; and ME. pl. tresteles is in Rich. Coer de Lion, 102.—OF. trestel, spelt tresteau, treteau in Cot., and explained 'a tresle for a table, &c., also a kind of rack, or stretching torture.' Mod. F. tréteau (see Littré).—Late L. **transtellum*, for L. transtillum, dimin. of transtrum, a little cross-beam. See Transom. ¶ This Late L. form should rather have given OF. trastel; but we find F. tres- for L. trans- in our tres-pass. We must by no means neglect Lowland Sc. traist, trast, a trestle, trast, a beam, North E. tress, a trestle (Brockett), Lanc. trest, a strong large stool (Halliwell), and ME. treste, a trestle, above. These are from OF. traste, a cross-beam (Roquefort), the same word as MItal. trasto, 'a bench of a gallie, a transome or beame going cross a house,' which is obviously from L. transtrum. See Transom. Scheler takes the same view, proposing a Late L. **transtellum*, as a parallel form to transtillum, in order to give the exact OF. form. Cotgrave's explanation of the word as meaning a rack is much to the point; a rack requires two cross-beams (transilla) to work it, these beams being turned round with levers, thus pulling the victim by means of ropes wound round the beams. And note trestelli fortes, strong trestles, in John de Garlande; in Wright, Vocab. i. 132.

TRET, an allowance to purchasers on consideration of waste. (F.—L.) 'Tret, an allowance made for the waste, . . . which is always 4 in every 104 pounds;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. It appears much earlier. 'For the tret of the same peper,' i. e. pepper; Arnold's Chron. (1502), repr. 1811, p. 128.—AF. **trete*, f., answering to F. traite just as AF. tret (Gloss. to Britton) answers to F. trait; cf. F. traite, 'a draught, . . . also, a transportation, vent outward, shipping over, and an imposition upon commodities;' Cot. This F. traite answers to L. tracta, fem. of tractus, pp. of trahere, to draw; see Trace. Cf. MItal. trattia, 'leave to transport merchandise, also a trade or trading;' Florio. Also Late L. tracta, a payment on exports (Ducange).

TREWS, an old form of Trousers, q. v.

TREY, three, at cards or dice. (F.—L.) 'Two treys;' L. L. L. v. 2. 232. And in Chaucer, C. T. 12587 (C 653).—AF. treis; OF. trei, treis (mod. F. trois), three.—L. trēs, three; see Three.

TRI-, relating to three, threefold. (L. or Gk.; or F.—L. or Gk.) F. and L. tri-, three times, prefix related to L. tri-a, neut. of trēs, three, cognate with E. Three, q. v. So also Gk. τρι-, allied to τρί-a, neut., or τρεῖς, m., three.

TRIAD, the union of three. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'This is the famous Platonical triad;' More, Song of the Soul (1647), preface (Todd).—F. triade, 'three;' Cot.—L. triad-, stem of trias, a triad.—Gk. τριάς, a triad.—Gk. τρι-, from τρεῖς, three; see Tri-.

TRIAL, a test; see Try.

TRIANGLE, a plane, three-sided figure. (F.—L.) ME. triangle; Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 215. 'Tryangle, triangle; Palsgrave.—F. triangle, 'a triangle; Cot.—L. triangulum, a triangle; neut. of triangulus, adj., having three angles.—L. tri-, three; and angulus, an angle; see Tri- and Angle. Der. triangl-ed; triangul-ar, used by Spenser (Todd), from F. triangulaire, 'triangular,' Cot., from L. triangulāris; triangul-ate, a coined word; triangul-at-ion.

TRIBE, a race, family, kindred. (F.—L.) Gower, C. A. iii. 230 (bk. vii. 4118), has the pl. tribes.—F. tribu, 'a tribe,' Cot.—L. tribu-, decl. stem of tribus, a tribe; cf. Umbrian trifo. β. A tribus is supposed to have been, in the first instance, one of the three families of people in Rome, their names being the Ramnes, Tities, and Luceres. The etymology is thought to be from L. tri- (akin to trēs, three), and -bus, family, from ✓BHEU, to be; cf. Gk. φύλη, a tribe, family, from the same root. See Tri- and Be. But Brugmann thinks this unlikely; ii. § 104. Rather, allied to W. tref, a homestead; see Thorpe. Der. trib-une, q. v.; tri-bute, q. v.

TRIBRACH, a metrical foot consisting of three short syllables. (L.—Gk.) Written tribrachus or tribrachys in Phillips, ed. 1706; and tribrachus in Puttenham, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3.—L. tribrachys.—Gk. τρίβραχυς, a tribrach.—Gk. τρι-, akin to τρεῖς, three; and βραχυς, short. See Brief.

TRIBULATION, great affliction, distress. (F.—L.) ME. tribulacioun, spelt tribulaciun, Ancren Riwle, p. 402, l. 24.—F. tribulation, 'tribulation; Cot.—L. tribulatiōnem, acc. of tribulatio, tribulation, affliction; lit. a rubbing out of corn by a sledge.—L. tribulāre, to rub out corn, to oppress, afflict.—L. tribulum, a sledge for rubbing out corn, consisting of a wooden platform studded underneath with sharp flints or iron teeth.—L. tri-, base of tri-ūi, tri-tum, pt. t. and pp. of terere, to rub; with suffix -bulum denoting the agent (as in ueriti-bulum, that which turns about, a joint). See further under Trite.

TRIBUNE, a Roman magistrate elected by the plebeians. (F.—L.) ME. tribun; pl. tribunes, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 21.—F. tribun.—L. tribunum, acc. of tribūnus, a tribune, properly the chief of (or elected by) a tribe; also a chieftain, Mark, vi. 21.—L. tribu-, decl. stem of tribus, a tribe; with suffix -nus (Idg. -no-). See Tribe. Der. tribun-ship. Also tribun-al, Antony, iii. 6. 3, from L. tribūnal, a raised platform on which the seats of tribunes, or magistrates, were placed.

TRIBUTE, homage, contribution paid to secure protection. (F.—L.) ME. tribut, Wyclif, Luke, xxiii. 2; Gower, C. A. ii. 74, l. 7.—F. tribut, 'tribute; Cot.—L. tribūtum, tribute; lit. a thing contributed or paid; neut. of tribūtus, pp. of tribuere, to assign, impart, allot, bestow, pay; orig. to allot or assign (to a tribe?). Perhaps (says Bréal) from L. tribu-, decl. stem of tribus, a tribe; see Tribe. Der. tribut-ar-y, ME. tributairie, Chaucer, C. T. 14594 (B 3866), from AF. **tributarie*, F. tributaire, 'tributary,' Cot., from L. tribūtārius, paying tribute. Also at-tribute, con-tribute, dis-tribute, re-tribute-ion.

TRICE (1), a short space of time. (Low G.) In the phrases in a trice, Twelfth Nt. iv. 2. 133; on a trice, Temp. v. 238; in this trice of time, K. Lear, i. 1. 219. 'And wasteth with a trice; Turberville, To his Friend, &c., st. 5. Now only in the phr. in a trice, i. e. suddenly. 'Subitement, swiftly, quickly, speedily, in a trice, out of hand; Cot. ME. at a trise, at a (single) pull. 'The howndis that were of gret prise Pluckid down dere all at a trise; Ipomydon with his houndis thoo Drew downe bothe buk and doo; Ipomydon (ed. Weber), 392. Here tryce (tryce) is a verbal sb. from the verb trysen, trycen, to pull, haul; Chaucer, C. T. 14443 (B 3715). See further under Trice (2). ¶ The later phrase in a trice bears a remarkable resemblance to the Span. en un tris. We find Span. tris, noise made by the breaking of glass; also, a trice, a short time, an instant; venir en un tris, to come in an instant; estar en un tris, to be on the verge of (Neuman). So also Port. triz, a word to express the sound of glass when it cracks; estar por hum triz, to be within a hair's breadth, to have a narrow escape; en hum triz, in a trice. But it does not appear that we could have borrowed such a phrase from Spain. It occurs as early as in Skelton, Philip Sparowe, 1131.

TRICE (2), TRISE, to haul up or hoist. (Low G.) 'Trise (sea-word), to hale up anything into the ship by hand with a dead rope, or one that does not run in a block or pulley; Phillips, ed. 1706. ME. tricen, trisen, to pull, haul; Chaucer, C. T. 14443 (B 3715). 'They trisen vpe thaire saillez,' Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 832. A nautical term; of Low G. origin; and the sense noted by Phillips is unoriginal, as it must once have meant to haul by help of a pulley, and not only without it. Cf. ME. tryys, (and, with a final t) tryyste, 'troclea,' Prompt. Parv.—Low G. trissen, tritsen, to trice up; from trisse, tritse, a hauling-rope (which explains the sense given by Phillips), also a pulley (Lübben). Cf. also (from Low G.)

Swed. trissa, a sheave, pulley, truckle, triss, a spritsail-brace; Dan. tridse, a pulley, whence tridse, verb, to haul by means of a pulley, to trice; Norweg. triss, trissel, a pulley, or sheave in a block; Swed. dial. trissa, a roller, also a shoemaker's implement, a little round wheel with teeth on it. Note also Low G. trisel, a whirling round, giddiness, in the Bremen Wörterbuch; where also are cited OG. tryssen, to wind, and Hamburg drysen, up drysen, to wind up, dryse-blok, the block of a pulley, like Dan. tridseblok.

TRICENTENARY, a space of 300 years. (L.) Modern. From Tri- and Centenary.

TRICK (1), a stratagem, clever contrivance, fraud, parcel of cards won at once. (F.—L.) Common in Shakespeare. 'A trick, facinus; Levins, ed. 1570. 'It were but a schoole-trick,' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 512. 'Suche unknyghtly trikkes; Hoccleve, De Reg. Princ. 2286.—ONorth F. trique (for OF. triche); cf. Norm. dial. trique, a trick (Moisy, ed. 1895). Godefroy gives the vb. triquier, and Moisy has Norm. dial. triquier, for OF. trichier, to trick, deceive. Cf. ME. trichen, to deceive, cozen, trick, occurring early in the 14th century, Polit. Songs, p. 69, l. 7. This ME. trichen is from OF. trichier, trechier, explained under Treachery. β. Some of the senses are due to Du. trek. Thus Shakespeare has trick in the sense of lineament, K. John, i. 85; this is precisely the Du. trek. 'De trekken van't gelaat, the lineaments of the face; Sewel. Cf. Du. 'een slimme trek, a cunning trick; Iemand eenen trek speelen, to play one a trick; de kap trekken, to play tricks, play the fool; Sewel. γ. The Du. trek (treek), a trick (borrowed from, or suggested by the ONorth F. trique) is properly distinct from, but was easily confused with Du. trek, a pull, draught, tug; from the verb trekken, to draw, pull. We find also OFries. trekka or tregga, NFries. trecke, tracke (Outzen), Low G. trekken, Dan. trække, MHG. trecken, to draw, drag, pull. The MHG. trecken is a causal form, from the strong verb found as MHG. trechen, OHG. trekhan, to push, shove, also to pull. Der. trick-er, trick-ster; trick-er-y (doublet of treachery, q. v.); trick-ish, trick-ish-ly, trick-ish-ness; also tricks-y, full of tricks (formed by adding -y to the pl. tricks), Temp. v. 226. And see trigger, trick (2), trick (3).

TRICK (2), to dress out, adorn. (F.—L.) 'Which they trick up with new-tuned oaths; Hen. V. iii. 6. 80. 'To trick, or trim, Concinnare; Levins, ed. 1570. Minsheu also has the word, but it is not a little strange that Blount, Phillips, Coles, and Kersey ignore trick, in whatever sense. [It is remarkable that trick appears early as an adjective, synonymous with neat or trim. 'The same reason I finde true in two bowes that I haue, wherof the one is quicke of caste, tricke, and trimme both for pleasure and profyte; Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 28. So also in Levins. But this is prob. a different word; cf. Lowl. Sc. trig, neat, trim.] The verb is a derivative from the sb. trick, above, which obtained many meanings, for which see Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. For example, a trick meant a knack, neat contrivance, custom, particular habit, peculiarity, a trait of character or feature, a prank, also a toy or trifle, as in 'a knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap,' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 67. Cf. MF. trique-nisques, 'trifles; Cot. Hence to trick, to use a neat contrivance, to exhibit a trait of character, to have a habit in dress. Compare Trick (3), below. Der. trick-ing, ornament, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 79.

TRICK (3), to delineate arms, to blazon; an heraldic term. (Du.) This is the true sense in Hamlet, ii. 2. 479. It is much clearer in the following. 'There they are trick'd, they and their pedigrees; they need no other heralds; Ben Jonson, The Poetaster, i. 1 (Tucca).—Du. trekken, formerly trecken, 'to delineate, to make a draught or modell, to purtray; Hexham. Tricking is a kind of sketching. This is only a particular use of Du. trekken, to pull or draw; cf. our double use of draw. See Trick (1), § γ.

TRICKLE, to flow in drops or in a small stream. (E.) ME. triklen. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (B 1864), two MSS. have trikled, two have striked or stryked, and one has striklid; Tyrwhitt prints trilled. 'With teris trikland on hir chekes; Ywaine and Gawain, 1558; in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 66. 'The teeris trikilen down; Polit., Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 207, l. 47. 'Teres trekyl downe be my face; Cov. Mysteries, p. 72. In all these passages the word is preceded by the sb. teres, pronounced as a dissyllable, and such must often have been the case; this caused a corruption of strikelen by the loss of initial s; the phrases the teres strikelen and the teres trikelen being confused by the hearer. Trickle is clearly a corruption of strikelen, to flow frequently or to keep on flowing, the frequent. of ME. striken, to flow. 'Ase strem that strikeþ stille' = as a stream that flows quietly; Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 48, l. 21.—AS. strican, to move or sweep along, to hold one's course, Grein, ii. 489. This is the same word as AS. strican, to strike; see Strike. Cf. mod. E. streak; to trickle or strickle is to flow in a course, leaving a streak behind; G. streichen, to move onward, rove, sweep on. The loss of s was facilitated by association with trill (Dan. trille), to roll.

TRICOLOR, the national flag of France, having three colours, red, white, and blue. (F.—L.) The flag dates from 1789. — F. tricolore, short for drapeau tricolore, the three-coloured flag. — F. tricolor, the three-coloured amaranth (Hamilton). — L. tri-, prefix, three; and colorem, acc. of color, colour. See Tri- and Colour. Der. tri-colour-ed.

TRIDENT, a three-pronged spear. (F.—L.) In Temp. i. 2. 206. — F. trident, 'Neptune's three-forked mace;' Cot. — L. tridentem, acc. of tridens, an implement with three teeth, esp. the three-pronged spear of Neptune. — L. tri-, three; and dens, a tooth, prong. See Tri- and Tooth.

TRIENNIAL, happening every third year, lasting for three years. (L.) A coined word, made by adding -al (L. -ālis) to L. trienni-um, a period of three years. It supplanted the older word triennal, of F. origin, which occurs early, in P. Plowman, B. vii. 179; this is from F. triennal, 'triennial,' Cot., formed by adding -al to L. adj. trienn-is, lasting for three years. β. Both triennium and triennis are from L. tri-, three, and annus, a year; see Tri- and Annual. Der. triennial-ly.

TRIFLE, anything of small value. (F.—L.) The spelling with i is remarkable, as the usual ME. spelling was trufle. Spelt tryfyl, Rob. of Brunne, Handl. Synne, 5031; but trufle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 417, l. 8613; trufle (one MS. has trefle), P. Plowman, B. xii. 140; also id. B. xviii. 147 (other MSS. have tryfule, truyfle); also id. C. xv. 83 (other MSS. trefele, trifle). Spelt trofle (also trefle), P. Plowman's Crede, 352. There is the same variation of spelling in the verb; the proper ME. form is trufsten, spelt truffy, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 214; trofle, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2932, trifelyn, Prompt. Parv. 'Trufa, a trefele; Trufo, to trefele;' Voc. 617. 42, 43. The sb. is the more orig. word; we find 'þeos ant oðre trufles þet he bitrufleð monie men mide' = these and other delusions that he beguiles many men with, Ancren Riwe, p. 106, l. 7. The old sense was a delusion or trick, a sense still partly apparent in the phr. 'to trifles with.' — OF. trufle, truffle, mockery, raillery (Godefroy; who quotes 'Nuga, truffle' from a glossary); variant of truffe, 'a gibe, mock, flout, jeast, gullery; also, a most dainty kind of round and russet root, which grows in forrests or dry and sandy grounds,' &c.; Cot. He refers to a truffle. That truffle and trifle are the same word, or rather that both senses of F. truffe arose from one form, is admitted by Burguy, Diez, and Littré. It is supposed that a truffle became a name for a small or worthless object, or a subject for jesting. Similarly, in English, the phrases not worth a straw, not worth a bean, not worth a cress (now turned into curse) were proverbial; so also 'a figo for the phrase,' or 'a fig for it.' See further under Truffle. Cf. WFlem. truffel, trijfel, false news (De Bo). Note also; 'Mantiglia, a kinde of clouted creame called a foole or a trifle, in English; Florio. Der. trifle, verb, ME. trufsten, as above; trifl-er, trifl-ing, trifl-ing-ly.

TRIFOLIATE, three-leaved. (L.) Modern. — L. tri-, three; and foliātus, leaved, from folium, a leaf; see Trefoil.

TRIFORIUM, a gallery above the arches of the nave and choir of a church. (L.) From L. tri-, for trēs, three; and fori-s, a door, an opening. ¶ Now usually built with but two arches or openings (within a third); but some early examples had three such. See wood-cut in Cent. Dict.

TRIFORM, having a triple form. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 730. — L. triformis; often applied to the moon or Diana. — L. tri-, three; and form-a, form; see Tri- and Form.

TRIGGER, a catch which, when pulled, lets fall the hammer or cock of a gun. (Du.) A weakened or 'voiced' form of tricker. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 528, Bell's edition, we find: 'The trigger of his pistol draw.' Here the editor, without any hint and free from any conscience in the matter, has put trigger in the place of tricker; see the quotation as it stands in Richardson and Todd's Johnson. Spelt tricker in Farquhar, Recruiting Officer, i. 1 (1706). — Du. trekker, a trigger; formerly trecker, 'a drawer, a haler, or a puller,' Hexham. — Du. trekken, to pull, draw; see Trick (3). Der. trig, vb., to skid a wheel (Phillips).

TRIGLYPH, a three-grooved tablet. (L.—Gk.) A term in Doric architecture. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. triglyphus; Vitruvius, iv. 2 (White). — Gk. τρίγλυφος, thrice-cloven; also, a triglyph, three-grooved tablet. — Gk. τρι-, three; and γλύφειν, to carve, hollow out, groove, which is allied to E. cleave; see Cleave (1). Der. triglyph-ic.

TRIGON, a combination of three zodiacal signs, so as to form an equilateral triangle. (L.—Gk.) 'The fiery trigon;' Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 288. The combination of Aries, Leo, and Sagittarius was the 'fiery' trigon. — L. trigōnum, a triangle, trigon. — Gk. τρίγωνον, a triangle, neut. of τρίγωνος, three-cornered. — Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; γων-ία, an angle, akin to γόνυ, a knee. Cf. Trine.

TRIGONOMETRY, the measurement of triangles. (Gk.) Shak. has trigon, i.e. triangle, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 288. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. τρίγωνο-, for τρίγωνον, a triangle; and -μετρία, measurement (as in geo-metry, &c.), from μέτρον, a measure. β. Τρίγωνον is properly neut. of τρίγωνος, three-cornered; from τρι-, three, and γων-ία, an angle, akin to γόνυ, a knee. See Tri-, Knee, and Metre. Der. trigonometri-c-al, -ly.

TRILATERAL, having three sides. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined with suffix -al (L. -ālis) from L. trilater-us, three-sided. — L. tri-, three; and later-, decl. stem of latus, a side; see Tri- and Lateral.

TRILINGUAL, consisting of three languages. (L.) Coined with suffix -al (L. -ālis) from L. trilingu-is, triple-tongued, speaking three languages. — L. tri-, three; and lingua, a tongue. See Tri- and Lingual.

TRILITERAL, consisting of three letters. (L.) A term applied to Hebrew roots. From Tri- and Literal.

TRILL (1), to shake, to quaver. (Ital.) 'The sober-suited songstress trills her lay;' Thomson, Summer, 746. 'His trills and quavers;' Tatler, no. 222, Sept. 9, 1710. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: 'Trill, a quavering in musick,' and rightly notes that it is an Ital. word, like many other musical terms. — Ital. trillare, to trill, shake, quaver; trillo, sb., a trill, shake. A word of imitative origin, meaning 'to say tril.' Cf. Span. trinar, to trill. Hence are derived E. trill, Du. trillen, G. trillern, &c. Der. trill, sb.

TRILL (2), to turn round and round. (Scand.) Perhaps obsolete, but once common. 'As fortune trills the ball;' Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 67. 'To tril, circumuertere;' Levins. 'I tryll a whirlygig rounde aboute, je pirouette;' Palsgrave. ME. trillen, Chaucer, C. T. 10630 (F 316). — Swed. trilla, to roll, whence trilla, a roller; Dan. trille, to roll, trundle, whence trille, a disc, trillebör, a wheelbarrow. Perhaps allied to E. drill; but this is by no means certain. It may be allied to Low G. triseln, to turn round; see Trice (2).

TRILL (3), to trickle, to roll. (Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 78; K. Lear, iv. 3. 13. 'With many a teere trillyng on my cheek;' Chaucer, C. T., 7246, D 1864 (Corpus MS.). — Dan. trille, to roll, to trickle (as tears), Larsen; Swed. trilla ned, to roll down. This is merely a particular use of Trill (2).

TRILLION, a million raised to the third power. (F.—L.) A coined word, said in Todd's Johnson to have been invented by Locke. Composed of tr-, for tri-, three; and -illion, the latter part of the word million. See Tri- and Million; and see Billion.

TRILOBITE, a kind of fossil. (Gk.) Named from its three lobes. — Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; λοβ-ός, a lobe; -ιτ-ης, suffix.

TRILOGY, a series of three tragedies or poems. (F.—Gk.) F. trilogie (1812); Hatzfeld. — Gk. τριλογία. — Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; -λογία, from λόγ-ος, a tale, story; see Logic.

TRIM, to put in due order, to adjust, to deck, dress, arrange. (E.) 'I trymme, as a man doth his heare [hair];' Palsgrave. ME. trumen, trimen, a rare word. 'Ich iseo godd seolf mid his eadi engles bitrumen þe abuten' = I see God Himself with His blessed angels be-trim [surround] thee about; St. Marharete, p. 20, l. 3. 'Helle hundes hadde bitrumet me' = hounds of hell have surrounded me; id. p. 6, l. 4 from bottom. AS. trymian, trymman, to make firm, strengthen (a common word), Grein, ii. 554; also, to set in order, array, prepare, Blickling Homilies, p. 91, l. 31; p. 201, l. 35. The orig. sense is preserved in our phrase 'to trim a boat,' i.e. to make it steady; hence to put in perfect order. Formed (by the regular vowel-change from u to y) from the Teut. type of AS. trum, adj., firm, strong, Grein, ii. 553. + Low G. trim; only in the derivative betrimmed, betrimmd, decked, trimmed, adorned; trimmke, an affected or over-dressed person. Root uncertain. Der. trim, sb., Cor. i. 9. 62; trim, adj. (with the vowel i of the derived verb), Much Ado, iv. 1. 323; trim-ly, trim-ness; trimm-er, trimm-ing; also be-trim, verb, Temp. iv. 65.

TRIMETER, a division of a verse consisting of three measures. (L.—Gk.) In Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace, Art of Poetry, l. 333. — L. trimetrus, Horace, Art of Poetry, ll. 252, 259. — Gk. τρίμετρος, consisting of three measures. — Gk. τρι-, three; and μέτρον, a measure, metre. See Tri- and Metre.

TRINE, a certain aspect of the planets. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 659. 'Tryne in trone;' Cov. Myst., p. 88. 'Trine, belonging to the number three; as, a trine aspect, which is when 2 plants are distant from each other [by] a third part of the circle, i.e. 120 degrees. It is noted thus Δ, and accounted by astrologers an aspect of amity and friendship;' Phillips. — L. trinus, more common in pl. trīni, three by three. For **tris-nus*, allied to trēs, three. Brugmann, ii. § 66. See Tri- and Three. Der. trin-al, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 39. Also trin-i-ty, q.v.

TRINITY, the union of Three in One Godhead. (F.—L.) ME. trinitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7406 (D 1824); Ancren Riwe, p. 26,

1. 10. —OF. trinite, later trinité. —L. trinitatem, acc. of trinitas, a triad. —L. trinus, threefold; see Trine. Der. Trinity-Sunday; Trinit-ar-i-an, Trinit-ar-i-an-ism.

TRINKET (1), a small ornament. (F.—L.?) We find ME. trenket, sower's knife, i.e. a shoemaker's knife, Prompt. Parv. Trenket, an instrument for a cordwayner, batton a torner [soulies]; Palsgrave. Way, in his note to Prompt. Parv., says: 'In a Nominale by Nich. de Minshull, Harl. MS. 1002, under pertinentia allutarii, occur:—Anserium, a schavyng-knyfe; Galla, idem est, trynket; also, under pertinentia rustico, occur:—Sarculum, a wedehoke; Sarpa, idem est, trynket.' This shows that a trynket was a general name for a sort of knife, whether for shoemaking or weeding. Palsgrave gives the spelling trynket as well as trenket. We may fairly assume that trinket was also used to denote a toy-knife, such as could be worn about the person, and that for three reasons. These are: (1) the sense of something worn about the person still clings to trinket at this day; (2) trinket, as used by old authors, means sometimes a tool or implement, sometimes a knife; and (3) toy-knives were very commonly given as presents to ladies, and were doubtless of an ornamental character, and worn on the person. As early as Chaucer's time, the Friar had his tippet 'farsed [stuffed] ful of kniues And pinnes, for to giuen faire wiues.' A few examples of the use of the word may be added. 'The poorer sort of common souldiers haue euery man his leather bag or sachell well sowen together, wherin he packs up all his trinkets;' Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 62. 'What husbandlie husbands, except they be fooles, But handsome haue storehouse for trinkets and tooles?' Tusser, Husb. § 53. 13. Todd cites from Arbuthnot: 'She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses.' More extracts would probably make this matter clearer. β. The etymology of trinket, formerly trenket, in the sense of 'knife,' is from ONorth F. trenquet, variant of OF. tranchet, a small knife (see Supp. to Godefroy). —ONorth F. trenquer, occurring in trenquefile, variant of tranchefile (Godefroy), so that trenquer is a variant of OF. tranchier, trenchier, to cut. Cf. Span. trinchete, a shoemaker's paring-knife, tranchete, a broad curved knife, used for pruning, a shoemaker's heel-knife; mod. F. tranchet, a shoemaker's knife; OF. trinchet, supp. to Godefroy, s.v. tranchet. And cf. Span. trinchar, to cut. See further under Trench. γ. Perhaps we may also note MItal. trincare, 'to trim or smug up,' whence trincato, 'fine, neat, trim,' Florio. This seems allied to trinci, 'frings, lacings, cuts, or snips in garments,' id.; and to trinciare, to cut, allied to Span. trinchar, as above.

TRINKET (2), TRINQUET, the highest sail of a ship. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 411. Spelt trinkette in Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Trinquet, is properly the top or top-gallant on any mast, the highest sail of a ship;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —F. trinquet, 'the top or top-gallant,' &c. (as in Blount); Cot.—Ital. trinchetto, 'a small saile in a ship called a trinket;' Florio. [Or from Span. trinquete, a trinket.] Prob. from L. triquetrum, acc. of triquetrus, three-cornered (with reference to lateen sails). Prob. from L. tri-, allied to trēs, three; and **quadrus*, quadrus, square, hence 'cornered.' Cf. L. quater, four times, quatuor, four. ¶ The n may have been due to association with Span. trinca, a rope for lashing fast; trincar, to keep close to the wind; poner la vela a la trinca, 'to put a ship that the edges of the sailes may be to the wind;' Minshew.

TRINOMIAL, in mathematics, an expression consisting of three terms. (L.) Not a good form; it should rather have been trinomial. Coined, in imitation of binomial, from tri-, three; and nōmi-, for nōmini-, decl. stem of nōmen, a name. See Tri- and Nominal; and Binomial.

TRIO, in music, a piece for three performers. (Ital.—L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. —Ital. trio, a trio, three parts together. —L. tri-, three, allied to trēs, three; see Tri- and Three.

TRIP, to move with short, light steps, to stumble, err; also, to cause to stumble. (F.—Tent.) ME. trippen; 'This hors anon gan for to trippe and daunce;' Chaucer, C. T. 10626 (F 1312). —OF. treper (Wace), triper, tripper, to dance; Norm. dial. triper. —MDu. trippen, 'to tread under foot'; trippelen, 'to trip or to daunce;' Hexham. Cf. Low G. trippeln, to trip; Swed. trippa, to trip; Dan. trippe, to trip, trip, a short step; Icel. trippi, a young colt (from its tripping gait). The base trip- is a lighter form of trap-, as in MDu. trappen, to tread under foot; the nasalised form appears in Tramp, q.v. Der. trip, sb., Tw. Nt. v. 170; tripp-ing-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 2.

TRIPANG, TREPANG, an edible sea-slug. (Malay.) Malay tripang.

TRIPARTITE, divided into three parts, having three corresponding parts, existing in three copies. (L.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 80. 'Indentures trypartite indented;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 57, in a will dated 1480. —L. tri-, three; and partit-us, pp. of partiri, to part, divide, from parti-, decl. stem of pars, a part. See Tri- and Part.

TRIPE, the stomach of ruminating animals, prepared for food. (F.) ME. tripe, Prompt. Parv.; King Alisaunder, l. 1578. —F. tripe, tripe. Cf. Span. and Port. tripa, Ital. trippa. Of unknown origin. We also find Irish triopas, s. pl., tripes, entrails; W. tripa, the intestines; Bret. stripen, tripe, more commonly used in the pl. stripennoù, stripon, the intestines.

TRIPHONG, three vowel characters representing a single sound. (Gk.) Little used; coined in imitation of diphthong, with prefix tri- (Gk. τρι-), three, instead of di- (Gk. δι-), double. See Tri- and Diphthong. Der. triphthong-al.

TRIPLE, threefold, three times repeated. (F.—L.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dr. v. 391. [Rich. refers us to Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7, l. 26, but the reading there is treble, a much older form.] —F. triple, 'triple, threefold;' Cot. —L. tripplus, triple. —L. tri-, three; and -plus, related to L. plenus, full. See Tri- and Double. Der. tripl-y; tripl-et, formed in imitation of doubl-et, doublet, treble.

TRIPPLICATE, threefold. (L.) In mathematics, a triplicate ratio is not the ratio of 3 to 1, but the ratio of two cubical numbers, just as the duplicate ratio is a ratio of squares. In Phillips, ed. 1706. —L. triplicatus, pp. of triplicare, to treble. —L. tri-, three; and plic-are, to fold, weave. See Tri- and Ply. Der. triplicat-ion, from L. acc. triplicatiōnem. Also triplex, from L. triplex, threefold, Tw. Nt. v. 41; triplic-i-ty, Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 39.

TRIPOD, anything supported on three feet, as a stool. (L.—Gk.; or Gk.) In Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, b. ix. l. 127; where it was taken directly from Gk. Also in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, 1102, where we find 'tripode or three-footed table' (R.). ME. tripod, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 179. —L. tripod-, stem of tripūs. —Gk. τρίπους (stem τρίποδ-), three-footed; or, as sb., a tripod, a three-footed brass kettle, a three-legged table. —Gk. τρι-, three; and πούς (stem ποδ-), a foot, cognate with E. foot; see Tri- and Foot. Der. trīpos (for L. nom. tripūs, Gk. τρίπους), an honour examination at Cambridge, so called at present because the successful candidates are arranged in three classes; but we must not forget that a trīpos sometimes meant an oracle (see Johnson), and that there was formerly a certain scholar who went by the name of trīpos, being otherwise called prevaricator at Cambridge or teræ filius at Oxford; he was a master of arts chosen at a commencement to make an ingenious satirical speech reflecting on the misdemeanours of members of the university, a practice which gave rise to the so-called trīpos-verses, i.e. facetious Latin verses printed on the back of the trīpos-lists (after 1798). The orig. reference was to the Trīpus on which the M.A. sat; and the lists were named from the verses which took the place of his speech. See Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Wits, . . who never . . were at all inspired from a Trīpus's, Terræ-filius's, or Prævaricator's speech;' Eng. Garner, vii. 267 (1670). Doublet, trivet.

TRIPTYCH, a picture in three compartments. (Gk.) Frequently, the two side-pictures can be folded over the central one, which is of double their breadth. —Gk. τρίπτυχον, neut. of τρίπτυχος, threefold, or consisting of three layers. —Gk. τρι-, for τρεῖς, three; πτυχή, a fold, from πτύσσειν (for **πτύχ-yein*), to fold.

TRIEME, a galley with three ranks of oars. (L.) 'Thucydides writeth that Aminocles the Corinthian built the first trieme with three rowes of oars to a side;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 56. —L. trirēmis, a trireme. —L. trirēmis, having three banks of oars. —L. tri-, three; and rēmus, an oar. β. The L. trirēmis corresponds to Gk. τρίρης, a trireme; Thucydides, i. 13. γ. The L. rēmus = OL. resmos, is allied to Gk. ῥεῖσμός, a rudder, orig. a paddle. The Gk. ῥε-εῖσμός, like -ρη-ης in τρίρης, is allied to E. rudder and row. See Row (1).

TRISE, the same as Trice (2); q.v.

TRISECT, to divide into three equal parts. (L.) Coined (in imitation of bi-sect) from L. tri-, three; and sect-um, supine of secāre, to cut. See Tri-, Section, Bisect. Der. trisection.

TRIST, the same as Tryst, q.v.

TRISYLLABLE, a word of three syllables. (F.—L.—Gk.) From Tri- and Syllable; see Dissyllable. Cotgrave gives F. trisyllabe, adj., of three syllables. Der. trisyllab-ic, trisyllab-ic-al, -ly.

TRITE, worn out by use, hackneyed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —L. tritius, worn, pp. of terere, to rub, to wear. +Russ. teret(e), to rub; Lithuan. triti, to rub; Gk. τρίπεω (for **τρέπ-yein*). —✓TER, to rub. Der. trite-ly, -ness. Also trit-ur-ate, tri-bul-at-ion, q.v. And see try. From the same root, con-trite, de-tri-ment.

TRITON, a marine demi-god. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 89. —L. Trītōn. —Gk. Τρίτων, a Triton. Cf. Irish triath, the sea; Skt. trita-, the name of a deity.

TRITURATE, to rub or grind to powder. (L.) Blount, ed. 1674, has triturable and trituration. Perhaps the sb. trituration was first introduced from the F. sb. trituration, 'a crumming, crumbling,' Cot. — L. tritūrātus, pp. of tritūrāre, to thrash, hence to grind. — L. tritūra, a rubbing, chafing; formed like the fut. part. of terere, to rub; see Trite. Der. triturat-ion, trituri-able.

TRIUMPH, joy for success, rejoicing for victory. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. triumphe, Chaucer, C.T. 14369 (B 3553). — OF. triumphe, triomphe, 'a triumph;' Cot. — L. triumphum, acc. of triumphus, a triumph, or public rejoicing for a victory. — Gk. θρίαμβος, a hymn to Bacchus, sung in festal processions to his honour; also used as a name for Bacchus. Der. triumph, verb, L. L. L. iv. 3. 35; triumph-er, Titus Andron. i. 170; triumph-ant, Rich. III. iii. 2. 84, from the stem of the pres. part. of L. triumphāre, to triumph; triumph-ant-ly; also triumph-al, from L. triumphālis, belonging to a triumph. Doublet, trump (2). (Perhaps L. triumphus is a native word.)

TRIUMVIR, one of three men in the same office or government. (L.) Shak. has triumvirate, Antony, iii. 6. 28; and even triumvir, L. L. L. iv. 3. 53. — L. triumvir, one of three men associated in an office. A curious form, evolved from the pl. triumviri, three men, which again was evolved from the gen. pl. triumvirorum, so that trium is the gen. pl. of trēs, three; whilst vir, a man, is a nom. sing. See Three and Virile. Der. triumvir-ate, from L. triumvirātus, the office of a triumvir.

TRIUNE, the being Three in One. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from L. tri-, three; and ūnus, one, cognate with E. one. See Tri- and One.

TRIVET, TREVET, a three-legged support. (L.) 'A triuette, tripes;' Levins. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 82, we find trevid under the date 1493, and the pl. treuettis at p. 100, under the date 1504. AS. trefet, Cart. Saxon., ed. Birch, iii. 367. — L. tripedem, acc. of tripēs, having three feet. — L. tri-, three, and pēs, a foot, cognate with E. foot. Doublet, tripod, which is a Greek form.

TRIVIAL, common, slight; of small worth. (F. — L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 61. It also meant trite or well-known; see Trench, Select Glossary. — F. trivial, 'triviale, common;' Cot. — L. trivialis, that which belongs to the cross-roads, that which may be picked up anywhere, ordinary, common-place. — L. trivium, a place where three roads meet. — L. tri-, three; and via, a way; see Tri- and Voyage. Der. trivial-ly, -ness.

TROCHEE, a metrical foot of two syllables, a long one followed by a short one. (L. — Gk.) Spelt trocheus in Puttenham, Art of Poetry, b. ii. c. 3; now shortened to trochee. — L. trocheus. — Gk. τροχαῖος, running; also a trochee, from its tripping measure. — Gk. τροχός, a running. — Gk. τρέχειν, to run. The form of the root appears to be DHREGH. Der. trocha-ic, from Gk. τροχαϊκός. And see truck (2).

TROGLODYTE, a dweller in a cave. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'These savages . . . flew away at last into their caves, for they were troglo-dites;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. x; ed. Arber, p. 51. And see Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 159. — F. troglo-dyte, used by Montesquieu, and doubtless somewhat older than his time. — L. trōglodyta. — Gk. τρωγλοδύτης, one who creeps into holes, a cave-dweller; Herod. iv. 183. — Gk. τρωγλο- for τρώγλη, a hole, a cave; and δύ-ειν, to enter, creep into; with suffix -της, of the agent. β. τρώγλη is from Gk. τρώγ-ειν, to gnaw, to bite, hence to gnaw a hole; whence also Trout.

TROLL, to roll, to sing a catch, to fish for pike with a rod of which the line runs on a reel. (F. — Teut.) ME. trollen, to roll; Prompt. Parv. To troll the bowl, to send it round, circulate it; see Troul in Nares. To troll a catch is, probably, to sing it irregularly (see below); to troll, in fishing, is prob. rather to draw the line hither and thither than to use a reel; see Trawl. — MF. troller, which Cot. explains by 'hounds to trowle, raunge, or hunt out of order;' to which he subjoins the sb. trollerie, 'a trowling or disordered ranging, a hunting out of order;' this shows it was a term of the chase. Roquefort gives OF. trouler, troller, to run hither and thither; cf. mod. F. trôler, to lead, drag about, also to stroll about, to ramble. — G. trollen, to roll, to troll; cognate with MDu. drollen, 'to troole,' Hexham; Low G. drulen, to roll, troll, Bremen Wörterbuch. Prob. allied to EFries. drallen, to turn, to roll; and to Drill (1). ¶ Distinct from trail. Der. troll-er; also troll-op, a stroller, slattern, loitering person, where the suffix is obscure; perhaps suggested by gallop. Phillips gives troll about, 'to ramble up and down in a careless or sluttish dress;' also trollop, 'an idle, nasty slut.' And see trull.

TROMBONE, a deep-toned bass instrument of music. (Ital. — G. — Slav.) Not in Todd's Johnson. — Ital. trombone, a trombone, trumpet, sackbut; augmentative form of tromba, a trumpet; see Trump (1).

TRON, a weighing-machine. (F. — L.) See Riley, tr. of Liber Albus, pp. 124, 199, 548; hence tronage, pp. 199, 215. The tron was gen. used for weighing wool. The Tron Church in Edinburgh is so called from being situate near the site of the old weighing-machine. We read of 'Tronage and Poundage' in Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 100; where we also find: 'To tronage per teinen thoos thingis that shal be weyen by the trone of the kynge.' — AF. trone, a weighing-machine, Liber Albus, p. 246; and Latinised as Low L. trona (in Ducange); cf. OF. trosnel, a dimin. form in Godefroy. — L. trutina, a pair of scales. Cf. Gk. τρύτνη, a tongue of a balance, a pair of scales. Der. tron-age; with F. suffix -age < L. -aticum.

TROOP, a company, especially of soldiers, a crew. (F.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 220. — F. troupe, 'a troop, crew;' Cot. OF. trope, in use in the 13th cent., Littré; cf. Span. tropa, Mital. troppa, 'a troupe,' Florio; mod. Ital. truppa; Late L. troppus. β. Origin doubtful; perhaps from Norw. torp, a flock, a crowd, Icel. þorp; cf. Icel. þyrpast, to throng. Körting, § 9520. Der. troop, verb, Romeo, i. 5. 50; hence troop-er, moss-troop-er.

TROPE, a figure of speech. (L. — Gk.) In Levins; and in Sir T. More, Works, p. 1340 a. — L. tropus, a figure of speech, a trope. — Gk. τρόπος, a turning, a turn, a turn or figure of speech. — Gk. τροπή, 2nd grade of τρέπειν, to turn. + OL. trepere, to turn. Der. trop-ic, q.v. Also trop-ic-al, i. e. figurative; tropo-log-ic-al, expressed in tropes, Tyndall, Works, p. 166, col. 1 (see Logic). Also helio-trope. And see trophy, troubadour, trover.

TROPHY, a memorial of the defeat of an enemy, something taken from an enemy. (F. — L. — Gk.) Formerly spelt trophee, as in Cotgrave, and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 56. — F. trophée, 'a trophée, a sign or mark of victory;' Cot. — L. tropæum, a sign of victory. — Gk. τρόπαιον, τροπαιών, a trophy, a monument of an enemy's defeat, consisting of shields, &c., displayed on a frame. Neut. of τροπαῖος, adj., belonging to a defeat. — Gk. τροπή, a return, a putting to flight of an enemy by causing them to turn. — Gk. τροπή, 2nd grade of τρέπειν, to turn; see Trope. Der. troph-ic-ed.

TROPIC, one of the two small circles on the celestial sphere, where the sun appears to turn, after reaching its greatest declination north or south; also one of two corresponding circles on the terrestrial sphere. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. tropik, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. c. 17, l. 8. — F. tropique, 'a tropick;' Cot. — L. tropicum, acc. of tropicus, tropical. — Gk. τροπικός, belonging to a turn; δ τροπικός κύκλος, the tropic circle. — Gk. τρόπος, a turn; see Trope. Der. tropic, adj.; tropic-al, tropic-al-ly.

TROT, to move or walk fast, run as a horse when not going at full pace. (F. — L.?) ME. trotten, Chaucer, C. T. 9412 (E 1538); P. Plowman, B. ii. 164. — F. trotter, 'to trot;' Cot. OF. troter, 13th cent.; Littré. We also find OF. trotier, a trotter, messenger, Late L. trotārius; and this answers so nearly to L. tolūtārius, going at a trot, that it is usual to suppose OF. troter to result from a Late L. **tolūtāre*, to trot, by the common change of l into r, and loss of o. β. Tolūtārius is derived from tolūtūm, adv., at a trot; used of horses. The lit. sense is 'with a lifting up of the feet.' — L. tollere, to lift; see Tolerate. γ. This etymology is accepted by Diez, Scheler, and Littré; but some compare MHG. trotten, to run, perhaps allied to G. treten, to tread; MDu. tratten, 'to goe, to pace, or to trot;' Hexham. G. treien is cognate with E. tread. Der. trot, sb., trott-er.

TROTH, truth, fidelity. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 2. 36. ME. trowþpe, Ormulum, i. 44. Formed from the verb Trow, q.v. Der. troth-ed, Much Ado, iii. 1. 38; troth-plight, a plighting of troth, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 278; troth-plight = troth-plighted, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 151. Also be-troth, q.v.

TROUBADOUR, a Provençal poet. (Prov. — L. — Gk.) See Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. iii. And see Littré, Roquefort, and Raynouard. Troubadour does not seem to be the right Prov. word, but a F. modification of it. The Prov. word is trobador (Littré), or (very commonly) trobair; see Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale. From a L. type **tropātōrem*, acc. of **tropātor*, from a verb **tropāre*, formed from L. tropus, which was used by Venantius Fortunatus (about A.D. 600) with the sense of 'a kind of singing, a song,' White; and see Ducange. This is only a peculiar use of L. tropus, which usually means a trope; see Trope. β. The Late L. **tropāre* would have the exact sense 'to make or write, or sing a song' which is so conspicuous in OF. trouver (F. trouver), Prov. trobar, Port. and Span. trovar, Ital. trovare; for, though the mod. F. trouver means 'to find' in a general sense, this is merely generalised from the particular sense of 'to find out' or 'devise' poetry; cf. Port. trova, a rime, trovar, to make rimes, trovador, a rimer; Span. trova, verse, trovar, to versify, also to find; trovador, a versifier, finder; trovista, a poet; Ital. trovare, 'to finde, to devise, to invent, to imagine, get, obtain, procure, seeke out,' Florio. It may be added that, even in Gk., τρόμος was used with reference to music, to signify a particular mode, such as τρόμος Αὔδιος, the Lydian mode, &c. γ. As regards the letter-changes, a L. p rightly gives Ital. v and Prov. b, as in Ital. arrivare = Prov. arribar < L. adripare (see Arrive). Cf. also Prov. troubaire, a troubadour; from L. nom. **trōpātor*. See Trover.

TROUBLE, to agitate, disturb, confuse, vex. (F.—L.) ME. troublen, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 19; trublen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 268, l. 20. —OF. trubler, trubler, later troubler, 'to trouble, disturb'; Cot. Formed as if from a Late L. **turbulāre*, a verb made from L. turbula, a disorderly group, a little crowd of people (White), dimin. of turba, a crowd. In fact, we find OF. torbleur, one who troubles. [From the L. turba we have also the verb turbāre, to disturb, with much the same sense as F. troubler.] β. The L. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people, is cognate with Gk. τύβη, also written σύβη, disorder, throng, bustle; whence τυβάειν, to disturb. See Turbid. Der. trouble, sb., spelt torble, turble in Prompt. Parv., from OF. trouble, truble, later trouble, 'trouble,' Cot.; trouble-some, Mer. Wives, i. 1. 325; troubl-ous, 2 Hen. VI, i. 2. 22. Also turb-id, turb-ul-ent, q. v. Also (from L. turbāre) dis-turb, per-turb.

TROUGH, a long hollow vessel for water. (E.) ME. troghe, trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3627. AS. troh or trog (gen. trogas), a trough or hollow vessel; used by Ælfred in the sense of a little boat, tr. of Orosius, b. ii. c. 5. § 7 (end). 'Littoraria, troh-scip,' i.e. a little boat, Voc. 166. 4; 'Canthera, trog,' id. 12. 125. + Du. trog; Icel. trog; Dan. trug; Swed. tråg; G. trog, MHG. troc. We find also G. truhe, OHG. truha, a chest or trunk. Teut. type **trugōz*, Idg. type **drukós*, m.; from **Idg. dru-*, as in Skt. dru, a tree; with adj. suffix. Thus the sense is 'wooden'; see Tree. Der. tray.

TROUNCE, to beat, castigate. (F.—L.) 'But the Lord trounced Sisara and all his charettes,' Bible, 1551, Judges, iv. 15. Lit. 'to beat with a truncheon.' —OF. trons, m. a truncheon; tronce, f., variant of OF. tronche, 'a great piece of timber,' Cot., allied to F. tronc, a trunk; cf. also F. tronson, mod. F. tronçon, 'a truncheon or little trunk, a thick slice,' id. See Truncheon and Trunk. Cf. also F. troncir, 'to cut or break off in two,' Cot.; Span. tronzar, to shatter.

TROUSERS, TROWERS, a garment worn by males on the lower limbs. (F.—L.—Gk.) The form trousers does not seem to be old; Richardson quotes 'by laced stockings and trowsers' from Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 18; Wiseman died in 1676. In older books the word appears without the latter r, in the forms troozes, trouses, &c., and even trooze; cf. Lowland Sc. trews. We find, however, the curious and corrupt form strossers in Shak. Hen. V, iii. 7. 57, where most mod. editions have trossers, though the same form occurs also in Dekker and Middleton; see Dyce's Glossary to Shakespeare. β. The word was particularly used of the nether garments of the Irish; Nares cites, from Ware's Antiquities of Ireland, 'their little coats, and strait breeches called trouses.' 'Their breeches, like the Irish trooze, have hose and stockings sewed together,' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 297 (Todd); or p. 313, ed. 1665. Hence Irish trius, triubhas, trousers; Irish tribus; Gael. triubhas. Herbert also has the spelling troozes, p. 325, ed. 1665. 'The poor trowz'd Irish there,' Drayton, Polyolbion, song 22. Cf. also: 'And leaving me to stalk here in my trowzes,' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, i. 1 (Pennyboy junior). 'Four wild Irish in trowzes,' Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 1; stage direction. —F. trousses, s. pl., trunk-hose, breeches (Hamilton; see also Littré). Trousses is the pl. of trousse, a bundle, a 'truss,' formerly also a case, such as 'a quiver for arrows,' Cot. Hence trousses became a jocular term, used esp. of the breeches of a page (Littré), and was so applied by the English to the Irish garments. —F. troussier, 'to trusse, pack, tuck, bind or girt in, pluck or twitch up,' Cot. These senses help to explain the sb. See further under Truss. Der. trousseau, q. v.

TROUSSEAU, a package; esp. the lighter articles of a bride's outfit. (F.—L.—Gk.) Modern; yet it is not a little remarkable that trousseaus, i.e. packages, occurs in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 168, l. 1. —F. trousseau, 'a little trusse or bundle,' Cot.; OF. troussel, dimin. of F. trousse, a truss, bundle; see Truss.

TROUT, a fresh-water fish. (L.—Gk.) ME. troute, spelt trowte in the Prompt. Parv. AS. truht: 'Tructa, truht,' Voc. 180. 37. —L. tructa (whence also F. truite); also tructus. —Gk. τρώκτης, a gnawer, lover of dainties; also a sea-fish with sharp teeth. —Gk. τρώγειν, to gnaw; with suffix -της of the agent. As the sense is 'gnawer' or 'nibbler,' it was easily applied to fish of various kinds. Cf. Troglodyte.

TROVER, the gaining possession of goods, by finding or otherwise. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Trover is the name of an action, which a man hath against one who, having found any of his goods, refuseth to deliver them upon demand,' Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3, l. 648. An old law-term, in early use, as shown by the spelling. —OF. trover, later trouver, to find. It answers in form to the Late L. **trōpāre*, orig. used in the sense to find out poetry, to invent, devise, which was a sense of OF. trover, and prob. the orig. one. See further under Troubadour. Hence treasure-trove, treasure found, where trove is now barbarously pronounced as a monosyllable, though it stands for OF. trove (trōvé), pp. of trover, to find; see Blackstone, Commentaries, b. i. c. 8. Der. con-trive, re-trieve.

TROW, to believe, think, suppose to be true. (E.) In Luke, xvii. 9 (A. V.). ME. trowen, Chaucer, C. T. 693 (A 691). OFries. trouwa, EFries. trōen, to believe. AS. trūwian, to trow, trust; from Teut. base **trū-*. We also find AS. trēowian, to believe, allied to trēow, sb., faith, and to trēowe, adj., true; from the Teut. base **trew(w)*. Cf. Icel. trúa, to trow, trūr, true; Dan. troe, to trow, tro, true; Swed. tro, to trow; Low G. trouen, to trow, trou, true; Du. trouwen, to marry, trouw, true; G. trauen, OHG. trūwēn, to trust; Goth. trauan, to believe. See True.

TROWEL, a tool used in spreading mortar and in gardening. (F.—L.) ME. truel; 'a truel of [a] masoun,' Wyclif, Amos, vii. 7, earlier version; the later version has trulle. 'Hec trolia, a trowylle,' Voc. 728. 29. Spelt trowell in Palsgrave. —F. truelle, a trowel, spelt truele in the 13th cent. (Littré). —Late L. truella, a trowel, in use A. D. 1163 (Ducange); cf. L. trulla, a small ladle, scoop, firepan, trowel. A dimin. of L. trua, a stirring-spoon, skimmer, ladle. See Twirl.

TROWERS, the same as Trousers, q. v.

TROY-WEIGHT, the weight used by goldsmiths. (F.; and E.) Spelt troie-weight in Minshew, ed. 1627. Troy weyt; Paston Letters, iii. 297. 'The received opinion is that it took its name from a weight used at the fair of Troyes; this is likely enough; we have the pound of Cologne, of Toulouse, and perhaps also of Troyes. That there was a very old English pound of 12 oz. is a well-determined fact, and also that this pound existed long before the name Troy was given to it, [is] another. The troy-pound was mentioned as a known weight in 2 Hen. V. cap. 4 (1414), and 2 Hen. VI. cap. 13 (1423), &c.; Eng. Cyclopædia. And see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. This explanation is verified by the expression 'a Paris pece of syluer weyng bee the weyght off troye viij. vuncis,' Arnold's Chronicle, ed. 1811, p. 108; at p. 191, it appears simply as 'troy weyght.' As early as 1392–3, we find 'penderis . . . de Troye,' Earl of Derby's Expeditions (C. S.), p. 100, l. 28. Troyes is a town in France, to the S.E. of Paris. Cotgrave, s. v. livre, mentions the pounds of Spain, Florence, Lyons, and Milan; and explains la livre des apothecaries as belonging to 'Troy weight.'

TRUANT, an idler, a boy who absents himself from school without leave. (F.—C.) ME. truant, Gower, C. A. ii. 13; bk. iv. 342. The derived sb. trewandise occurs as early as in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 330, l. 2. —AF. truant, Boeve de Haumtone, ed. Stimming, l. 281; Vie de St. Auban; F. truand, 'a common beggar, vagabond, a rascal, a lazze rascall,' Cot. He also gives the adj. truand, 'beggarly, rascally, roguish.' [We find also Span. truhan, Port. truhão, a buffoon, jester.] Of Celtic origin. —W. truán, wretched, truán, a wretch; cf. truedd, wretchedness, trueni, pity, trugar, compassionate, truenus, piteous. Corn. tru, interj. alas! woe! troc, wretched. Breton truez, truhez, pity, trueza, to pity; truant, a vagabond, beggar, of which Legonidec says that, though this particular form is borrowed from French, it is none the less of Celtic origin, and that, in the dialect of Vannes, a beggar is called truch. Irish trogha, miserable, unhappy; troighe, grief; tru, lean, piteous; truadh, a poor, miserable creature; truagh, pity, also poor, lean, meagre; &c. Gael. truaghan, a poor, distressed creature; truaghanta, lamentable, from truagh, wretched; cf. truas, pity, trocair, mercy. β. Thus the F. truand is formed, with excrescent d, from the sb. which appears as W. truán, Gael. truaghan, a wretched creature; which sb. was orig. an adj. extended from the shorter form seen in W. tru, Corn. troc, Irish trogha, Gael. truagh, wretched; OIrish trūag; Celtic type **trougos*, wretched (Stokes-Fick, p. 138). Allied to Gk. στρεψύ-ομαι, I am wretched, I feel distress.

TRUCE, a temporary cessation of hostilities, temporary agreement. (E.) The etymology is much obscured by the curious modern spelling; it is really a plural form, and might be spelt trews, i.e. pledges, pl. of trew, a pledge of truth, derived from the adj. true. This comes out clearly in tracing the ME. forms: ME. trives, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 10005; treowes, K. Alisaunder, 2808; trewes, Rich. Coer de Lion, 3207. 'Truways, trwys, or truce of pees,' Prompt. Parv. All these are pl. forms; the sing. trew, a truce, pledge of reconciliation, occurs in P. Plowman, B. vi. 332, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 879. —AS. trēow, a compact, promise, pledge, faith (Grein); cf. AS. trēowa, by-form trūwa, used in the sense of compact in Gen. xvii. 19; it also means faith, Mark, xi. 22. Allied to AS. trēowe, true; see True. Cf. AF. trues, truce, Gaimar, 567; triwes, id. 3046; trewe, sing., Stat. Realm, i. 300 (1344).

TRUCK (1), to barter, exchange. (F.—Teut.) 'All goods, wares, and merchandises so trucked, bought, or otherwise dispended;' Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 228. Just above, on the same page, we have: 'by way of merchandise, trucke, or any other respect.' ME. trukken, Prompt. Parv.; and even in Ancien Riwle, p. 408, l. 15.—AF. troquier, La Clef d'Amors, l. 1067; F. troquer, 'to truck, chop, swab, scorce, barter;' Cot. Cf. Span. (and Port.) trocac, to barter; Ital. truccare, 'to truck, barter;' Florio. β. From OF. troque, sb., barter (1537), Godefroy; MF. troc, troq, 'a bartering;' Cot. And the Vocab. du Haut Maine has tric pour troc, a simple exchange; and we find Norm. dial. faire la troque, to barter; Walloon trouk po trouk, a simple exchange (Rémacle). A North F. form; the Central F. trocher occurs in 1434 (Ducange, s. v. Trocac).—WFlem. trok, truk, sale; used with regard to the (good or bad) 'sale' of goods, trokken, to procure goods. The WFlem. trok and trokken are used in all the senses of Du. trek, trekken (De Bo). Cf. Du. trek, demand, quick sale; in trek zijn, to be in vogue; from trekken, vb., to draw. See Trigger. Der. truck, sb., as above, from F. trog, 'a truck, or trucking;' Cot.; cf. Span. trueca, trueque, barter, Port. troco, the change of a piece of gold or silver, troca, barter. Also truck-age. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 307.

TRUCK (2), a small wheel, a low-wheeled vehicle for heavy articles. (L.—Gk.) 'In gunnery, trucks are entire round pieces of wood like wheels fixed on the axle-trees of the carriages, to move the ordnance at sea;' Phillips, ed. 1706. He also gives: 'trochus, a wheel, a top for children to play with.' Truck is an English adaptation of L. trochus, now disused in its L. form.—Gk. τροχός, a runner, a wheel, disc.—Gk. τροχ-, 2nd grade of τρέχειν, to run; see Trochee. Der. truck-le, a little wheel, answering to L. trochlea; Phillips gives: 'trochlea, a truckle or pulley, . . . which is one of the six mechanical powers or principles;' showing that the L. form trochlea was once in use. Baret has: 'Pullie, trochlea; a truckle, or pullie.' Cotgrave explains F. jabot by 'a truckle or pulley;' and the word occurs rather early, as shown under Truckle, verb. Hence truckle-bed, a bed that runs on small wheels and can be pushed under another bed, Romeo, ii. 1. 39; see Nares. And see truckle below.

TRUCKLE, to submit servilely to another. (L.—Gk.) 'Truckle, to submit, to yield or buckle to;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Not an old word; Todd's Johnson has: 'Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a nation that truckles under us?' Cleaveland (no reference). Also: 'For which so many a legal cuckold Has been run down in courts and truckled;' Butler's Hudibras, Part iii. c. 1. l. 613. To truckle under is a phrase having reference to the old truckle-bed, which could be pushed under another larger one; and the force of the phrase is in the fact that a pupil or scholar slept under his tutor on a truckle-bed. See Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 6, where he intentionally reverses the order of things, saying that a complaisant tutor would submit 'to lie upon the truckle-bed, Whiles his young maister lieth o'er his head.' Warton, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 419, has a note upon this passage in which he proves that such was the usual practice both at Oxford and Cambridge, citing: 'When I was in Cambridge, and lay in a trundle-bed under my tutor,' Return from Parnassus (1606), Act ii. sc. 6 (Amoretto). He quotes from the statutes of Magdalen College, Oxford, 1459, the statute: 'Sint duo lecti principales, et duo lecti rotales, trookyll-beddys vulgariter nuncupati;' cap. xlv. He adds: 'And in the statutes of Trinity College, Oxford, given [in] 1556, trocche-bed, the old spelling, ascertains the etymology from trocchea, a wheel.' In fact, this shows how the words truckle and truck (2) came to be taken immediately from the Latin; they originated at the universities. ¶ No connexion with AS. trucian, to fail, which does not in any way explain the word or its use.

TRUCULENT, fierce, barbarous, cruel. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—MF. truculent, 'truculent, cruel;' Cot.—L. truculentum, acc. of truculentus, cruel; extended from trux (gen. truc-is), fierce, wild. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'threatening;' cf. G. drohen, MHG. drouwen, OHG. drauwen, to threaten, AS. þrægan, to threaten. Der. truculent-ly, truculence.

TRUDGE, to travel on foot slowly, march heavily. (F.—Teut.?) In Shak. it means to run heavily, trot along or away; Merry Wives, i. 3. 91; iii. 3. 13; Romeo, i. 2. 34; i. 3. 34. 'May from the prison trudge;' Turberville, That Lovers must not despair, st. 6. 'And let them trudge hence apace;' Bale, Apologie, fol. 6 (R.). 'I trudge about from gate to gate;' Mirror for Magistrates (Alured). Perhaps it meant to go about like a vagabond or idle beggar.—F. trucher, to beg idly (16th cent.), Littré; Picard trucher, to beg; Norm. dial. trucher, to sponge upon. Of Teut. origin; cf.

Low G. truggeln, to beg fawningly; Du. troggelen, to beg, to wheedle; MDu. truggelen, 'to trugge up and downe a begging.' Hexham; WFlem. troggelen, to walk with difficulty, De Bo (who notices that in Limburg it is pronounced truggelen or trukkelen); EFries. trüggeln, to press back, also to beg with importunity. From Teut. base þrüg-, to press; as in Icel. þruga, Swed. truga, Dan. true, to press. ¶ Florio has Ital. truccare, 'to trudge, to skud, or pack away.' Cf. grudge < OF. groucher. (Doubtful.)

TRUE, firm, established, certain, honest, faithful. (E.) ME. trewe (properly dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. i. 88. AS. trēowe, true, also spelt trýwe, Grein, ii. 552. Cf. AS. trēow, trýw, truth, preservation of a compact. + Du. trouw, true, faithful; trouw, fidelity; Icel. tryggr, trúr, true; Dan. tro, true; tro, truth; Swed. trogen, true; tro, fidelity; G. treu, OHG. triuw, true; treue, OHG. triuwa, fidelity; Goth. triggws, true; triggwa, a covenant; cf. trauan, to throw, trust, be persuaded. β. The Teut. type appears to be **treuwoz*, adj., 'believed in, relied upon;' from Idg. ✓DREU, to rely upon, trust in; whence also Lith. drú-ias, firm, OPrussian druwis, druwi, belief, druwit, to believe. Der. tru-ly, tru-ism (a coined word); also tru-th, ME. trewiþe, trouthe, Chaucer, C. T. 10877 (F 563), AS. trēowdu, Exod. xix. 5, cognate with Icel. tryggð; hence truth-ful, -ly, -ness. Also troth (doublet of truth), trow, tru-st.

TRUFFLE, a round underground edible fungus. (F.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A dish of truffles;' Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 30, 1644.—MF. trufle, another spelling of truffe, 'a most dainty kind of round and russet root;' Cot. Cf. Span. trufa, a truffle; also a cheat (see Trifle). We also find F. tartoufle in the same sense; Ital. tartufo, a truffle; tartufi bianchi, white esculent roots, i.e. potatoes. β. The F. truffe, Span. trufa, is supposed to be derived from L. tüber, a tuber, esculent root, a truffle (Juv. v. 116); the neut. pl. tübera would give a nom. fem. **tufre* (whence trufe by shifting of r) as in other instances; e.g. the L. fem. sing. antiphōna = Gk. neut. pl. ἀντίφωνα. γ. That this is the right explanation (for which see Diez and Scheler) is rendered almost certain by the Ital. form tartufo (also tartufola), where tar- stands for L. terræ (of the earth), and tartufo is from terræ tüber. Florio gives Ital. tartuffo, tartuffola, 'a kinde of meate, fruite, or roote of the nature of potatoes called truffles [truffles?]; also, a kind of artichock.' Brugmann derives Ital. -tufo (in tar-tufo) from an Oscan-Umbrian dialect; i. § 413 (8). 8. From the Ital. tartufola is derived (by dissimilation of the double t) the curious G. kartoffel, a potato; of which an earlier form was tartuffel. See further under Tuber. Doublet, trifle, q. v.

TRULL, a drab, worthless woman. (G.) In Shak. Antony, iii. 6. 95; and in Levins. 'The Governour [of Brill, in Holland] was all bedewed with drinke, His truls and he were all layde downe to sleepe;' Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A. D. 1572; Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 391. We should expect to find it a Du. word, but it is German, imported, perhaps, by way of Holland, though not in Hexham's or Sewel's dictionaries.—G. trolle, trulle, a trull (whence Walloon trouille (Sigart), Picard troule, the same. It is a fem. form, allied to MDu. drol, m., 'a pleasant or a merrie man, or a gester,' Hexham, and to Dan. trolld, Swed. and Icel. troll, a merry elf; see Droll. The orig. sense was merely a merry or droll companion.

TRUMP (1), a trumpet, kind of wind instrument. (F.—G.—Slav.) ME. trumpe, trompe, Chaucer, C. T. 676 (A 674); Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 30, l. 13.—F. trompe, 'a trump, or trumpet;' Cot. [Cf. Span., Port., and Prov. trompa, Ital. tromba.]—OHG. trumba, a trumpet (Hatzfeld). Of Slavonic origin.—OSlav. type **tromba* (Miklosich); evidenced by OSlav. and Polish tra(m)ba, with the former a nasal, Slovenian tromba, trôba, a trumpet; Russ. truba, a pipe, a tube, a trumpet. Der. trump-et, ME. trompette, Gower, C. A. iii. 217; bk. vii. 3744; from F. trompette, 'a trumpet,' Cot., dimin. of F. trompe; trump-et-er, from F. trompeteur, 'a trumpeter,' Cot. Also trumpet-fish; trumpet-tongued, Macb. i. 7. 19. And see trumpety.

TRUMP (2), one of the suit of cards that takes any other suit. (F.—L.) Well known to be a corruption of triumph; see Latimer's Sermons (Parker Society), i. 1, 8, 13, and Foxe's remarks on them, id. vol. ii. p. xi. Triumph in Shak. Antony, iv. 14. 20, prob. means a trump-card; see Nares.—F. triomphe, 'the card-game called ruffe, or trump; also the ruffe or trump at it;' Cot. See Triumph. Der. trump, verb; trump-card.

TRUMPERY, falsehood, idle talk, trash. (F.—L.) In Temp. iv. 186; and in Levins. Caxton has tromperye, meaning 'deception;' Godfrey of Bulloigne, p. 238. The proper sense is deceit, or something deceptive, hence imposture, &c.—F. tromperie, 'a craft, wile, fraud;' Cot.—F. tromper, 'to couzen, deceive,' id. β. Littré says that the orig. sense was to play on the trump or trumpet; thence arose the phrase se tromper de quelqu'un, to play with any one, to amuse oneself at his expense; hence the sense to beguile, cheat.

This seems to be the right and simple solution; and Littré also quotes, s. v. trompette (1), the [15th cent.] phrase me joues tu de la trompette? are you playing the trumpet with me, i. e. are you playing with me, which confirms it. See further under Trump (1).

TRUMPET, the dimin. of Trump (1), q. v.

TRUNCATE, to cut off short. (L.) Phillips has 'truncated pyramid or cone.'—L. truncatus, pp. of truncare, to cut off, reduce to a trunk.—L. truncus, a trunk, stock; see Trunk. Der. truncat-ion, from F. truncation, 'a truncation, trunking, mutilation, cutting off,' Cot., from L. acc. truncatiōnem.

TRUNCHEON, a cudgel, short staff. (F.—L.) ME. tronchon, Chaucer, C. T. 2617 (A 2615), where it means the shaft of a broken spear; so also tronchon, King Alisaunder, 3745.—ONorth F. tronchon (Norm. dial.); see Moisy and Godefroy; OF. tronçon; MF. tronson, 'a truncheon, or little trunk, a thick slice, luncheon, or piece cut off;' Cot. Mod. F. tronçon. Dimin. of F. tronc, 'trunk, stock, stemme;' Cot.; see Trunk. Der. truncheon-er, Hen. VIII, v. 4. 54.

TRUNDLE, a wheel, anything round; to roll. (F.—Low G.) Now chiefly used only as a verb, to roll round; the sb. occurs in trundle-bed, a bed running on wheels, trundle-tail, a round tail of a dog; cf. AS. tryndyled, rounded; Voc. 152. 5. [We also find: 'Trendyll, sb., tournouer;' Palsgrave. 'I tryndell, as a boule or a stone dothe, je roule;' id. ME. trendil, sb., trendelen, verb. 'Trendyl, troclea;' 'Trendelyn a rownd thyng, Trocleo, volvo,' Prompt. Parv.; from AS. trendel, a circle; see further under Trend.] β. The vowel is due to borrowing from MF. (Picard) trondeler, 'to trundle,' Cot.; Walloon trondeler, to roll (Sigart). Of Low G. origin; cf. Low G. tründeln, Pomeran. tründeln, to trundle a hoop.—Teut. **trund-*, weak grade of a lost str. vb. **trendan-*, to roll (pt. t. **trand*); whence also AS. sin-tryndel, a large round shield; OFries. trund, round. Cf. NFries., Swed., Dan. trind, round. The ME. trenden, to turn, roll, is a secondary verb from **trand*, 2nd grade of **trendan-*. See Trend. Der. trundle-bed, see quotation s. v. truckle; trundle bedstead occurs in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 220, l. 11, in a will dated 1649; trundle-tail, a cur, Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Cure, iii. 3. 16, according to Richardson, but Darley's ed. has trindle-tail; see, however, K. Lear, iii. 6. 73.

TRUNK (1), the stem of a tree, proboscis of an elephant, shaft of a column, chest for clothes. (F.—L.) 'A cheste, or trunke of clene syluer;' Fabyan, Chron. cap. 131, fol. lxvii, ed. Ellis, p. 113. ME. tronke, a body without limbs; Caxton, Golden Legend, Saul, § 3.—F. tronc, 'the truncke, stock, stemme, or body of a tree; also a trunk, or headlesse body; also, the poor man's box in churches' [whence E. trunk=box]; Cot.—L. truncum, acc. of truncus, a trunk, stem, trunk of the body, piece cut off. Spelt troncus in Lucretius, i. 354; cf. truncus, adj., maimed, mutilated. See Brugmann, i. § 144. The elephant's trunk owes its name to an error (see below). The AF. trunk, a trunk of a tree, is in Wm. of Wadington's Manuel, l. 11090. Der. trunk-ed, having a trunk; trunk-line (of a railway); trunk-hose, trunk-breeches (see Nares), short wide breeches, reaching a little above or sometimes below the knee, and striped, meaning (I suppose) trunked hose, i. e. cut short (cf. trunked=truncated, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 5. 4). Also trunc-ate, q. v., trunch-eon, q. v., trunn-ion, q. v., trounce, q. v.

TRUNK (2), the proboscis of an elephant. (F.—G.—Slav.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. viii. c. 7. A mistaken form of trump; which was confused with trunk, because the latter was sometimes used with the notion of a (hollow) stem or a 'tube,' which was also a sense of trump (Palsgrave). Cf. F. trompe, 'a trump, or trumpet; . . . also, the snout of an elephant,' Cot. See Trump (1). For trunk, a speaking-tube, see Ben Jonson, Epiccene, i. 1. Halliwell gives both trunk and trump, as meaning 'a pea-shooter;' and notes the corrupt use of trunk to mean a trump at cards. See Trunk (1).

TRUNNION, one of the stumps or round projections on each side of a cannon, on which it rests in the carriage. (F.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. trognon, 'the stock, stump, or trunk of a branchless tree;' Cot. Dimin. of tron, 'a piece of anything, a trunk, stem,' &c.; Cot. This is a shortened form of tronc, due perhaps (as Diez suggests) to misdividing the derived word tronçon as tron-pon; in any case tron and tronc meant the same thing, as Cotgrave tells us. Cf. Ital. troncone, from tronco. See Trunk.

TRUSS, to pack, bind up, fasten as in a package or in bundles. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. trussen, P. Plowman, B. ii. 218; Ancrén Riwele, p. 322, l. 6. [The sb. trusse, a package, is in the Prompt. Parv., p. 504.]—OF. trusser, trusser (also tourser, torser), MF. troussier, 'to trusse; pack, bind or girt in;' Cot. The old spelling torser (tourser in Godefroy) is supposed to be due to Late L. tursus, L. thyrsus, a stalk.—Gk. θύσος, a stalk, stem; see Thyrsus. See Körting, § 9606. Hence OF. tourse, a bundle, tourser, troussier, a little bundle, F. trousseau. ¶ The idea seems to be that of 'gathering stalks together,' as in making up a bunch of flowers, &c. Cf. Ital. torso, 'a stem or stalk of any herbe;' Florio. Der. truss, sb., ME. trusse, as above. Also trous-ers, q. v., trouss-eau, q. v.

TRUST, confidence, belief, credit, ground of confidence. (E.) ME. trust, Ancrén Riwele, p. 202, l. 7. AS. **trūst*, not found; cf. trēows-ian, to pledge oneself, trūw-ian, to trust.—OFries. trāst; Icel. traust, trust, protection, firmness; Dan. and Swed. tröst, comfort, consolation.—G. trost, consolation, help, protection; Goth. trausti, a covenant; Eph. ii. 12. β. The Teut. base of the Icel. form is **traus-to-*, formed with Idg. suffix -to- from **trau-s-*, extended from **trau-*, as seen in Goth. trau-an, to believe, to trust; see True, Trow. Der. trust, verb, ME. trusten, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 213, l. 7; trust-er; trust-ee, one who is trusted, a coined word, with the suffix -ee=F. é (L. -ātus); trust-ful, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 434, trust-ful-ly, trust-ful-ness; trust-less, Shak. Lucrece, 2; trust-y, ME. trusti, Ancrén Riwele, p. 334, l. 21; trust-i-ly, trust-i-ness; trust-worthy (not in Todd's Johnson), trust-worthi-ly, trust-worthi-ness. Also mis-trust, q. v., tryst, q. v.

TRUTH, sb.; see True. Doublet, troth.

TRY, to test, sift, select, examine judicially, examine experimentally; also, to endeavour. (F.—L.) The old sense is usually to sift, select, pick out. ME. trien, tryen, P. Plowman, B. i. 205. 'Tryin, tryyn, Eligo, præligo, discerno;' Prompt. Parv.—F. trier, 'to pick, chuse, cull out from among others;' Cot. Cf. Prov. triar, to choose, tria, choice (Bartsch).—Late L. tritäre, to triturate; cf. Ital. tritäre, 'to bruze, to weare, . . . also to grinde or thresh come,' Florio.—L. tritrus, pp. of terere, to rub, to thresh corn; see Trite. β. Diez explains it thus: L. terere grānum is to thresh corn; the Prov. triar lo gra de la palha is to separate the corn from the stalk; to which he adds other arguments. It would appear that the meaning passed over from the threshing of corn to the separation of the grain from the straw, and thence to the notion of selecting, culling, purifying. Cf. Ital. tritäre, 'to crumble, grind; to ponder, consider, sift, scan, examine;' Baretti. To try gold is to purify it; cf. 'tried gold,' Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 53; 'the fire seven times tried this;' id. ii. 9. 63. Der. try, sb., Timon, v. i. 11. Also try-ing; try-sail, a small sail tried when the wind is very high. Also tri-al, a coined word, spelt triall in Frith's Works, p. 81, col. 1.

TRYST, TRIST, an appointment to meet, an appointed meeting. (F.—Scand.) See Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary. A trist (ME. trist, trister) was an appointed station in hunting, a place where a man was stationed to watch. 'Lo, holde thee at thy triste cloos, and I Shal wel the deer unto thy bowe dryve;' Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1534. 'To triste was he set, forto waite the chance;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 94. Spelt tryster, Gawain and Grene Knight, 1712; tristre, Ancrén Riwele, p. 332. Hence the phr. to hold trist, to keep trist, to bide trist, to stay where placed, or to come to an appointed place. 'Halden triste,' O. Eng. Met. Hom., ed. Small, p. 82.—OF. triste, tristre, station to watch (in hunting), ambush (Godefroy); Low L. trista. Prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. treysta(st), to trust to, rely upon; Swed. trösta, Dan. tröste, to trust; see Trust. Hence ME. trist, trust. 'Lady, in yow is all my tryste;' Erl of Tolous, 550, in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii.

TSAR, a better spelling of Czar, q. v.

TUB, a kind of vessel, a small cask. (O. Low G.) ME. tubbe, Chaucer, C. T. 3621. Not improbably a term introduced by Flemish brewers.—MDu. tobbe, dobbe, 'a tubbe;' Hexham; mod. Du. tobbe; EFries. tubbe; Low G. tubbe, a tub, esp. a tub in which orange-trees are planted. ¶ The G. zuber, cognate with Low G. töver, means a two-handled vessel, and is the same as OHG. zupar, zubar; this is derived from zui, later zwei, two, and the suffix -bar (as in frucht-bar, fruit-bearing) from OHG. beran, peran, to bear. Thus G. zu-ber=Low G. tü-ver, (=two-bearing), i. e. a vessel borne or carried by two handles. But this throws no light on tub, since tubbe and töver are a long way apart. Der. tubb-y, tub-like.

TUBE, a pipe, long hollow cylinder. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. iii. 590.—F. tube, 'a conduit-pipe;' Cot.—L. tubum, acc. of tubus, a pipe, tube; akin to tuba, a trumpet. Der. tub-ing, a length of tube; tubul-ar, from L. tubul-us, dimin. of tubus; tubul-at-ed, from L. tubulātus, formed like a pipe.

TUBER, a knob on a root, a rounded root. (L.) 'Tuber, a truffle, a knot in a tree,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1617.—L. tüber, a bump, swelling, tumour, knob on plants, a truffle. To be divided as tü-b-er (cf. L. plu-u-ia, rain, with plu-it, it rains); allied to tu-m-ēre, to swell; so that tüber is lit. 'a swelling.' See Tumid. Brugmann, i. § 413 (8). Der. tuber-cle, from F. tubercle, 'the small rising or swelling of a pimple,' Cot., from L. tüber-cu-lum, double dimin. of tüber; whence tubercul-ar, tubercul-ous<F. tuberculeux, 'swelling,' Cot. Also tuber-ous (Phillips), from F. tubereux, 'swelling, bunchy,' Cot., from L. tüberösus, full of swellings; also tuber-ose (Phillips), directly from L. tüberösus. Also tuberosa (Phillips), fem. of L. tuberösus, as the name of a flower: now tuberosa (often absurdly pronounced as tube-rose!). Also truffle, q. v.; trifle, q. v.; pro-tuberant.

TUCK (1), to draw close together, fold or gather in a dress. (OLow G.) ME. tukken. 'Tukkyn vp, or stykkyn vp, truckyn vp or stakkyn vp, Suffarcino;' Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has tukked, i. e. with the frock drawn up under the girdle, C. T. 623; also y-tukked, 7319 (D 1737). Not an E. word, but borrowed from abroad. — Low G. tukken, tokken, to pull up, draw up, tuck up; also to entice; allied to Low G. tukken, to ruck up, lie in folds, as a badly made garment. The same word as MDu. tocken, 'to entise,' Hexham; MSwed. tocka, to draw towards one. + G. zucken, OHG. zucchen, to draw or twitch up, to shrug. β. Teut. base **tukk-; intensive form from the weak grade (*tuh-*) of **teuhan-*, the strong verb appearing as Goth. tiuhan, AS. teōn, G. ziehen, to draw; see Touch. Allied to Tug. The verb means 'to draw up with a tug or twitch,' to hitch up. Der. tuck, sb., a fold; tuck-er, a piece of cloth tucked in over the bosom. ME. trukken, in Prompt. Parv. as above, is a Scand. word; Swed. trycka, Dan. trykke, to press, squeeze; cf. G. drücken.

TUCK (2), a rapier. (F.—Ital.—G.) 'Dismount thy tuck;' Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 244. A fencing term, and, like other such terms, an Ital. word, but borrowed through French. Just as E. ticket is from F. estiquet or étiquet, so tuck is short for étoc, occasional form of MF. estoc, 'the stock of a tree; ... also a rapier, or tuck; also a thrust;' Cot. — Ital. stocco, 'a truncheon, a tuck, a short sword;' Florio. — G. stock, a stump, stock, stick, staff; cognate with E. Stock, q. v.

TUCK (3), beat of drum, blow, stroke. (F.—Teut.) 'Hercules it smyttis with a mighty tuck;' G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, Æn. viii; ch. iv. 119. — Picard (or Walloon) toquer, toker, ONorth F. toquer, to touch, strike; variant of F. toucher, to touch; see below.

TUCKER, a fuller. (F.—Teut.) ME. tokker, lit. 'beater;' though the cloth was worked up with the feet; P. Plowman, A. prol. 100. — ONorth F. toquer (above). — Low G. tukken, to beat, to touch. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 308.

TUCKET, a flourish on a trumpet. (F.—Teut.) In Hen. V, iv. 2. 35. The form answers to ONorth F. **touket*, for OF. touchet, a blow; given in Godefroy. The sense answers to that of Ital. toccata, a prelude to a piece of music (Torriano); Florio only gives toccata, 'a touch, a touching;' but he notes tocco di campana (lit. a touch of the bell), 'a knock, a stroke, a knell or peale, or toule upon the bells.' Toccata is properly the fem. of the pp. of toccare, to touch; of Teut. origin. See Touch. And compare Toecin.

TUESDAY, the third day of the week. (E.) ME. Tewesday; spelt Tewisday in Wyclif's Select Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 75, l. 14. AS. Tiwes dæg, Mark, xiv. 1, rubric. Lit. the day of Tiw, of which Tiwas is the gen. case. + Icel. Týs dagr, the day of Týr; where Týs is the gen. of Týr, the god of war; Dan. Tirsdag; Swed. Tisdag; G. Dienstag, MHG. Zistag, OHG. Zies tac, the day of Ziu, god of war. β. The AS. Tiw (Icel. Týr, OHG. Ziu) answers to the L. Mars as far as the sense goes; but the name itself answers to Skt. dēva-s, god; allied to L. deus, and to L. Iu- in Iu-piter, Gk. Zeús, Skt. Dyaus, and means 'the shining one.' ¶ A translation of L. dies Martis.

TUFA, a soft stone, usually calcareous. (Ital.—L.) Not from Ital. tufa, 'volcanic earth;' Baretti. But an error for tufo, 'a kind of porous stone;' id. — L. tōfus, tōphus. Cf. Gk. τόφος, tufa. ¶ Also written tuff, from MF. tuf, tuffe (from Ital. tufo), 'a kind of soft and brittle stone;' Cotgrave.

TUFT (1), a small cluster or knot, crest. (F.—Teut.) 'With a knoppe, othir-wyse callyd a tuff;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 36, in a will dated 1463. 'A tuft (or toft) of heres' = a tuft of hairs; Chaucer, C. T. 557 (A 555). The proper form should rather be tuff, as in prov. E. tuff, a lock of hair (Halliwell), Lowland Sc. tuff, a tuft of feathers (Jamieson). Howell has tuffs, pl.; Famil. Letters, i. let. 25. Cf. W. tuff (from E.). The final t was due to confusion with Tuft (2), q. v.; or it may have been excrescent. — F. touffe; 'tousse de cheveux, a tuft or lock of curled hair;' Cot. [He also gives touffe de bois, 'a hault, a tuft of trees growing near a house;' which was easily altered to tuft (2) below.] Of Teut. origin; cf. Swed. dial. tuppa, a tuft, fringe; Icel. toppr, a top, tuft or lock of hair, horse's crest; MDu. top, 'a tuft of haire, a top,' Hexham; G. zopf. If so, tuft is a doublet of top (1). 2. Otherwise, F. touffe may be from Late L. tūfa, a kind of standard, perhaps a tuft; said to be from AS. þūf, a tuft (see Toller). Cf. Swed. tofva, a tuft, matted hair; EFries. tūf-ke, a little tuft; Swed. tofs, a tuft. Perhaps also MDu. tuyf, a Turkish turban (Hexham); called in E. a tuff (Nares). Der. tuff-et, Norm. dial. touffette, a little tuft, a bow of ribbon (Moisy); dimin. of touffe (above).

TUFT (2), a plantation, clump of trees. (F.—Teut.) 'The tuft of olives;' Shak. As You Like It, iii. 5. 75. Halliwell gives: 'Tuft, a plantation.' It seems to be the same as tuft (1); and is sufficiently explained by Cotgrave's 'touffe de bois, a hault or tuft of trees growing near a house;' see Tuft (1). Perhaps sometimes confused with Toft, q. v.

TUG, to pull, drag along. (Scand.) ME. toggen, Prompt. Parv.; Ancrer Riwe, p. 424, last line but one, where it means to sport or dally. A verb formed from Icel. tog, MSwed. tog, a rope to pull by; or, as a secondary verb, from the weak grade (**tuh*, **tug*) of the strong verb which appears as Icel. tjúga (pp. tog-inn), AS. teōn, G. ziehen, Goth. tiuhan, to draw, whence a great number of derivatives have arisen. One of these derivatives, to tow, comes very near to tug in sense. See Tow (1). Allied to EFries. tokken, to pull, tug; Low G. tukken, to pull up, draw up; cf. Low G. togg, a pull, a tug (Danneil). Cf. also MDu. toge, 'a draught of beere,' Hexham; G. zug, a pull, tug, draught; Icel. töggla, to tug. Der. tug, sb. Allied to tuck (1).

TUITION, care and instruction of the young. (F.—L.) 'Tuicyon and gouernaunce;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 6; ME. tuicion, Libell of Eng. Policy, l. 1138. — F. tuition, 'tuition, protection;' Cot. — L. tuitionem, acc. of tuicio, protection; cf. tuio, pp. of tuēri, to watch, protect. Der. in-tuition; and see tu-tel-age, tu-tor.

TULIP, the name of a flower. (F.—Ital.—Turk.—Pers.) In Ben Jonson, Pan's Anniversary (Shepherd). — MF. tulippe, also tulipan, 'the delicate flower called a tulipa, or tulipie, or Dalmatian Cap;' Cot. So called from its likeness to a turban. — Ital. tulipa, tulipano, a tulip. — Turk. tulband, vulgar pronunciation of dulband, a turban; Zenker's Turk. Dict. p. 433. — Pers. dulband, a turban. (See Turban in Yule.) See Turban. Doublet, turban.

TULLE, a kind of silk open-work or lace. (F.) Named from Tulle, in the department of Corrèze, France; where it was first made (Littre).

TULWAR, an Indian sabre. (Hind.) From Hind. talwār, tarwār, a sword (Forbes).

TULY, red or scarlet. (F.—L.) 'Off tuely silk;' Rich. Coer de Lion, 67, 1516; and see Halliwell. — OF. tieulé, of the colour of a tile; i. e. red (Godefroy). — OF. tieule, F. tuile, a tile. — L. tēgula, a tile. See Tile.

TUMBLE, to fall over, fall suddenly, roll over. (E.) ME. tumbelen, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 6, in one MS. of the later version; tombelen, King Alisaunder, 2465. Frequentative form (with the usual -l- for -el-) of tumben or tomben; in Trevisa, iv. 365, we have þe wenche þat tombede (various reading tomblede); Stratmann. — AS. tumbian, to tumble, turn heels over head, Matt. xiv. 6; in some old pictures of this scene, Herodias' daughter is represented as standing on her head. + Du. tuimelen, to tumble; MDu. tumelen (Hexham); also tommelen, tummelen, id.; G. taumeln, tummeln, to reel, to stagger; OHG. tūmon, to turn round and round, whence tūmari, a tumbler, acrobat (an OLow G. form, acc. to Gallée); Dan. tumle, Swed. tumla, to tumble, toss about. The F. tomber is of Teut. origin. β. It will be observed that, contrary to Grimm's law, the word begins with t both in German and English; this points to borrowing, and suggests that the G. word is of Low G. origin. Der. tumble, sb.; tumbl-er, an acrobat, L. L. L. iii. 190, which took the place of AS. tumbere; 'Saltator, tumbere,' Voc. 150. 20; cf. 'Saltator, a tumbler,' in a Nominal of the 15th century, id. 696. 35; also tumbl-er, a kind of drinking-glass, orig. without a foot, so that it could not be set down except (inverted) when empty. Also tumb-r-el (see Nares), spelt tumrell-cart in Palsgrave (for which he gives tumbreau as the F. equivalent), from OF. tumbrel, tumberel, later tumbereau, 'a tumbrell,' Cot., also spelt tomberel, tombereau (Cot.), lit. a tumble-cart, or two-wheeled cart which could be tumbled over or upturned to deposit the manure with which it was usually laden; derived from F. tomber, to fall, a word of Teut. origin, as above. Cf. AF. tumberel, a tumbrel, Stat. Realm, i. 218.

TUMEFY, to cause to swell, also to swell. (F.—L.) Spelt tumify in Phillips, who also has the sb. tumefaction. — F. tumefier, 'to make to swelle, or puffed up;' Cot. — Late L. **tumeficāre*, for L. tumefacere, to tumefy, make to swell. — L. tumēre, for tumēre, to swell; and facere, to make; see Tumid and Fact. Der. tumefaction, as if from L. **tumefactio* (not used), like tumefactus, pp. of tumefacere.

TUMID, inflated, bombastic. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 288. — L. tumidus, swelling. — L. tumēre, to swell. — ✓TEU, to swell, increase; whence also Gk. τύ-λη, τύ-λος, a swelling. Cf. Skt. tu, to be powerful, to increase. Brugmann, i. § 413 (8). Der. tumid-ly, -ness. Also (from tumēre) tum-our, a swelling, Milton, Samson, 185, from F. tumeur, 'a tumor, swelling,' Cot., from L. acc. tumōrem. And see tum-ult, tum-ul-us. From the same root are tu-ber, pro-tuberant, truffle, trifle, thumb.

TUMP, a hillock. (C.) The W. tump; a tump, may be from E. But the word is prob. Celtic; from W. tom, Gael. and Irish tom, a hillock; allied to Gk. τύμβος, L. tumulus, a mound. See Tumulus, Tomb.

TUMULT, excitement, uproar, agitation. (F.—L.) In K. John, iv. 2. 247; tumulte in Levins. —F. tumulte, 'a tumult, uproar'; Cot. —L. tumultum, acc. of tumultus, a restless swelling or surging up, a tumult. —L. tum-ēre, to swell; cf. tumulus, of which tumultus seems to be an extended form; cf. Skt. tumula-m, n., tumult; tumula-, adj., noisy, tumultuous. See Tumulus, Tumid. Der. tumult, verb, Milton, tr. of Ps. ii. 1; tumult-u-ar-y, from F. tumultuaire, 'tumultuary', Cot., from L. tumultuarius, hurried. Also tumult-u-ous, Rich. II, iv. 140, from F. tumultueux, 'tumultuous', Cot., from L. tumultuosus, full of tumult, which from tumultu-, decl. stem of tumultus, with suffix -ōsus; tumultuous-ly, -ness.

TUMULUS, a mound of earth over a grave. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. —L. tumulus, a mound; lit. a swelling. —L. tum-ēre, to swell; see Tumid. And see Tump.

TUN, a large cask; see Ton.

TUNE, tone, sound, melody, a melodious air. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'With many a tun and many a note'; Gower, C. A. iii. 303; bk. viii. 830. —AF. tun, Life of Edw. Conf. p. 18; F. ton, 'a tune, or sound'; Cot. —L. tonum, acc. of tonus, a sound. —Gk. τόνος, a tone; see Tone. ¶ The old word tune was afterwards re-introduced as tone, which is a later form. Der. tune, verb, Two Gent. iv. 2. 25; tune-able, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 184; tun-er, Romeo, ii. 4. 30; tune-ful, Spenser, Tears of the Muses, 27; tune-ful-ly; tune-less, Spenser, Sonnet 44.

TUNGSTEN, a very heavy metal. (Swedish.) Also called wolfram, and scheelium (from the discoverer). 'From tungstate of lead, Scheele in 1781 obtained tungstic acid, whence the brothers De Luyart in 1786 obtained the metal'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'The name indicates heavy stone, in consequence of the high specific gravity of its Swedish ore'; Engl. Cycl. The word is Swedish. —Swed. tungsten, compounded of tung, heavy; and sten, a stone. Ferrall and Repp's Dan. Dict. gives the very word tungsteen, tungsten, from similar Danish elements, viz. tung, heavy, and steen. β. Swed. sten, Dan. steen, are cognate with E. Stone. Swed. and Dan. tung are the same as Icel. þungr, heavy; whence þungi, a load, þunga, to load. Cf. Lithuan. tunku, I become fat, infin. tukti.

TUNIC, an under-garment, loose frock. (L.) Introduced directly from the Latin, before the Norman conquest. AS. tunice, tuneca. 'Tunica, tunice'; also 'Tonica, tuneca'; Voc. 151. 8; 268. 1. —L. tunica, an under-garment of the Romans, worn by both sexes; whence also F. tunique (Cot.). Perhaps of Semitic origin; see Gk. χιτών in Prellwitz. Der. tunic-le, P. Plowman, B. xv. 163, from OF. tunicle (Roquefort) < L. tunicula, dimin. of tunica. Also tunic-at-ed, a botanical term, from L. tunicatus, provided with a coating; from tunica in the sense of coating, membrane, or husk.

TUNNEL, a hollow vessel for conveying liquors into bottles, a funnel, a passage cut through a hill. (F.—C.) Formerly, when a chimney meant a fireplace, a tunnel often meant a chimney, or flue. 'Tonnell to fyll wyne with, antonnoyr'; Palsgrave. 'Tonnell of a chymney, tuyau'; id. Hence the sense of flue, shaft, railway-tunnel. —OF. tonnel (Burguy), later tonneau, 'a tun, or (generally) any great vessel, or piece of cask for wine, &c., as a tun, hoghead, &c., also a tunnell for partridges'; Cot. The tunnel for partridges was a long tunnel or covered passage made of light wire, strengthened with hoops, into which partridges were decoyed, and could not afterwards escape. Cf. prov. E. tunnel, a funnel, an arched drain; OF. tonnelle, with like senses (Godefroy). The word evidently once meant a sort of cask, then a hooped pipe or funnel, then a flue, shaft, &c. In the Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 20, we find (in 1463) 'my newe hous with the iij. tunnys of chemeneyis'; Mr. Tymms remarks (p. 241): 'The passage of the chimney was called a tunnel till the beginning of the present century, and the chimney-shaft is still called a tun'. β. F. tonneau is the dimin. of F. tonne, 'a tun'; Cot. Ultimately of Celtic origin; see Ton. Cf. AF. tonel, a tun; Stat. Realm, i. 156 (1309); tonel, a tunnel (for birds), Bozon, p. 173. Der. tunnel, verb; modern.

TUNNY, the name of a fish. (F.—Prov.—L.—Gk.) 'A tuny fish, thunnus'; Levins. Palsgrave gives 'Tonny, fyshe' without any F. equivalent. The final -y is an E. addition. —F. thon, 'a tunny fish', Cot. —Prov. ton (mod. Prov. ton); see Hatzfeld. —L. thunnus, acc. of thunnus, a tunny; also spelt thynnus. —Gk. θύννος, a tunny; also spelt θύνος. Lit. 'the darter', the fish that darts about (cf. E. dart). Cf. Gk. θύειν, allied to θύειν, to rush along. —✓DHEU, to shake, blow, rush; see Dust.

TUP, a ram. (Scand.) ME. tuppe; Palladius on Husbandrie, viii. 71; 'Vervex, a tuppe'; Voc. 698. 29. Prob. a transferred name; cf. Swed. and Norw. tupp, a cock, allied to Dan. top, a cock's crest, Icel. toppr, a top, a crest. See Top.

TURBAN, a head-covering worn in the East. (F.—Ital.—

Turkish.—Pers.) Spelt turbant, Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. xvii. st. 10; turribant, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 28; turband, Cymb. iii. 3. 6. 'Nash, in his Lenten Stuffe (1598) has turbanto'; F. Hall, Mod. English, p. 112. [Todd remarks that it is spelt tulibant in Puttenham, Art of Poesie (1589), and tulipant repeatedly in Sir T. Herbert's Travels. As a fact, Puttenham has tolibant, Art of Poesie, b. iii. c. 24; ed. Arber, p. 291. These forms with l are really more correct, as will be seen, and answer to the occasional F. form tolopan, given in Cotgrave as equivalent to turbant.] —MF. turbant (given by Cotgrave, s. v. tolopan), but usually turban, 'a turbant, a Turkish hat'; Cot. —Ital. turbante, 'a turbant', &c.; Florio. —Turkish tulbend, vulgar pronunciation of Turkish dulbend, a turban; a word borrowed from Persian; Zenker's Dict., p. 433, col. 3. —Pers. dulband, a turban; Rich. Dict., p. 681. Vüllers, in his Etym. Pers. Dict. i. 893, col. 2, says that dulband seems to be of Hindustāni origin; cf. Hind. dulband, a turban; Shakespeare, Hind. Dict. p. 1059. But this is doubtful. See Turban in Yule. See tulip.

TURBARY, a right of digging turf, or a place for digging it. (F.—Teut.) 'Turbary (turbaria) is a right or interest to dig turves on another man's ground'; Blount, Nomolexicon (1691). —OF. torberie, Low L. turbāria, the same. —OHG. **turba*, older form of zurba, turf; see Turf. Cf. AF. torberie, Year-books, 1304-5, p. 485. TURBID, disordered, muddy. (L.) 'Lees do make the liquor turbide'; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 306. —L. turbidus, disturbed. —L. turbāre, to disturb. —L. turba, a crowd, confused mass of people; see Trouble. Der. turbid-ly, -ness.

TURBINE, a hydraulic wheel, wheel driven by water. (F.—L.) Used in various ways. —F. turbine, a hydraulic wheel; MF. turbine, a whirlwind (Cot.). —L. turbinem, acc. of turbo, a wheel, a top, a whirlwind; cf. turbāre, to disturb.

TURBOT, a flat, round fish. (F.—L.) ME. turbut, Prompt. Parv.; Havelok, 754; spelt turbote, Wright's Voc. i. 189. —F. turbot, 'the turbot-fish'; Cot. According to Diez, formed with suffix -ot from L. turb-o, a whipping-top, a spindle, a reel; from its rhomboidal shape. This is verified by two facts: (1) the L. rhombus, a circle, a turbot, is merely borrowed from Gk. ῥόμβος, a top, wheel, spindle, having, in fact, just the same senses as L. turbo; and (2) the Late L. turbo was used to mean a turbot; thus we have: 'Turbut, turtur, turbo', Prompt. Parv. We also find Irish turbit, a turbot, a rhomboid, Gael. turbaid, W. torbuit; but it is a borrowed word in Celtic. Cf. 'The Lozange . . . Rhombus . . . the Turbot'; Puttenham, Arte of E. Poesie, bk. ii. c. 11 (12). Also AF. turbut, Liber Albus, p. 234.

TURBULENT, disorderly, restless as a crowd, producing commotion. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iii. 1. 4. —F. turbulent, 'turbulent, blustering'; Cot. —L. turbulentus, full of commotion or disturbance. —L. turb-āre, to disturb. —L. turba, a crowd of people; see Trouble. Der. turbulent-ly; turbulence, Troil. v. 3. 11, from F. turbulence (which Cotgrave omits, but see Littré), which from L. turbulentia; also turbulenc-y, from L. turbulentia.

TUREEN, the same as Terreen, q. v.

TURF, the surface of land matted with roots of grass, &c., sward, sod, peat. (E.) ME. turf, sometimes torf; pl. turves (= turves), Havelok, 939; Chaucer, C. T. 10109 (E 2235). AS. turf (dat. tyrf), turf, A. S. Chron. an. 189 (Laud MS.). So also: 'Gleba, turf', Voc. 146. 13; pl. tyrf, id. 236. 18. +Du. turf, peat; Icel. torf, a turf, sod, peat; Dan. törv; Swed. torf; OHG. zurba, turf (the mod. G. torf being borrowed from Low German). β. All from Teut. base **terð-*; and allied to Skt. darbha-, a kind of grass, Benfey, p. 388; so called from its being twined or matted together, from Skt. dybh, to string, to bind. —✓DERBH, to wind, twine, knit together. Der. turf-y, Temp. iv. 62.

TURGID, swollen, pompous, bombastic. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. —L. turgidus, swollen, extended. —L. turgēre, to swell out. Der. turgid-ly, -ness, turgid-i-ty. Also turg-esc-ence, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 7, part 5, formed as if from L. **turgescencia*, swelling up, from turgescere, inceptive form of turgēre.

TURKEY, the name of a bird. (F.—Tatar.) 'Turky-cocke, or cocke of India, auis ita dicta, quod ex Africa, et, ut nonnulli volunt alii, ex India vel Arabia ad nos illata sit; Belg. Indische haen, Teut. Indianisch hun, Calekuttisch hun, i. e. Gallina Indica seu Calecuttensis, Ital. gallo, o gallina d'India, Hispan. pauon de las Indias, Gall. pouille d'Inde, &c.; Minshew, ed. 1627. 'A turkie, or Ginnie henne, Belg. Indisch hinne, Teut. Indianisch henn, Ital. gallina d'India, Hispan. gallina Morisca, &c.; id. Turkey in Shak. means (1) the bird, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 29; (2) adj. Turkish, Tam. Shrew, ii. 355; hence he also says turkey-cock, Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Meliagrides, Birdes that we call hennes of Ginnie or Turkey hennes'; Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1565. Turkeys were 'unknown in Europe until introduced from the New World'; see Trench, Study of Words. The date of their introduction was about 1530 (Beckmann). As they were strange birds, they were hastily called Turkey-cocks and Turkey-hens, by which it was merely meant that they were foreign; it must be remembered that Turkey was at that time a vague term, and often meant Tartary. 'Turkie, Tartaria;' Levins. Similarly, the French called the bird poule d'Inde, whence mod. F. dinde, a turkey; Cotgrave gives: 'Dindar, Indar, a turkey-cock.' Minshew, in his Span. Dict., gives 'gallina Morisca, a hen of Guynie, gallina de India, a Turkie hen;' whilst in his Eng. Dict. (as quoted above) he calls gallina Morisca, the turkey-hen; showing that he was not particular. The German Calecutische hahn, a turkey-cock, means 'a cock of Calicut,' not 'Calcutta;' a name extremely wide of the mark.  $\beta$ . The E. Turkey, though here used as an adj. (since turkey is short for turkey-cock or turkey-hen) was also used as a sb., to denote the name of the country.—F. Turquie, 'Turkie,' Cot.—F. Turc, m., Turque, f., 'Turkish,' id.—Tatar turk, orig. meaning 'brave.' [The Turkish word for Turk is 'osmānli.'] (Cf. Pers. Turk, 'a Turk, comprehending likewise those numerous nations of Tartars . . . who claim descent from Turk, the son of Japhet. . . . Also a Scythian, barbarian, robber, plunderer, villain, vagabond;' Richardson's Dict., p. 392. Hence Pers. Turkī, 'Turkish, Turk-like;' id. p. 393. (See Turkey in Yule.) ¶ So also maize was called Turkey wheat, F. bled de Turquie; Wedgwood. Der. turq-uoise, q. v.

TURMERIC, the root of an E. Indian plant, used as a yellow dye, and in curry-powder. (F.—L.—Arab.?) Spelt turmeric in Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer). A gross corruption of the F. name.—F. terre-mérite, turmeric; not given in Littré under terre, but under Curcuma he says that the root is called in commerce 'safran des Indes, et curcuma, dite terre-mérite, quand elle est réduite en poudre.'—L. terra merita; turmeric 'is likewise called by the French terra merita; Curcuma, hæc Gallis terra merita male dicitur,' see Royle, Antiquity of Hindoo Medicine, p. 87; (Eng. Cycl. Division Arts and Sciences). I suppose it means 'excellent earth;' as if from L. terra, earth, and merita, fem. of meritus, pp. of merēri, to deserve. But terra merita is hardly Latin, and is doubtless a barbarous corruption; perhaps of Arab. karkam, kurkum, saffron or curcuma (whence Span. and Port. curcuma, turmeric); Rich. Dict., p. 1181.

TURMOIL, excessive labour, tumult, bustle; as a verb, to harass. (F.—L.?) 'The turmoyle of his mind being refrained;' Udal, on St. John, c. 11 (R.). The pp. turmōild occurs in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 9. 39; and turmōil-ēd in Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 18. 'At seas turmōylde five days with raging winde;' Mirror for Mag., Brennus, st. 9. The origin is somewhat doubtful; the form is prob. corrupt, the latter part of the word being perhaps due to E. moil, q. v., and the former part assimilated to turn.  $\beta$ . It has been suggested that it may have something to do with MF. trameul, tremouille, 'the hopper of a mill,' Cot., also called tremie, and prob. so called from being in continual movement, from L. tremere, to tremble, shake. But the old accent on the latter syllable suggests that tur- is a mere prefix, and may represent the OF. intensive prefix tra- or tres- (both from L. trans); as in OF. tres-batre, tra-batre, to beat extremely (Godefroy). If so, the sense is 'tomoil (or harass) greatly.' See MOIL.

TURN, to cause to revolve, transfer, convert, whirl round, change. (L.—Gk.) ME. turnen, tornen, turnen; Ormulum, 169; cf. F. tourner, OF. torner, turner, to turn. But it occurs in late AS. as turnian, tyrnan (Toller); so that it was taken directly from L. tornāre, to turn in a lathe, to turn.—L. tornus, a lathe, turner's wheel.—Gk. τόρνος, a carpenter's tool to draw circles with, compasses, whence τορνεύειν, to turn, work with a lathe. Allied to Gk. τορός, adj. piercing, τέρειν, to pierce, L. terere, to rub.— $\surd$ TER, to rub, hence to bore a hole; see TRITE. Der. turn, sb., turn-er; turn-er-y, from F. tournerie, 'a turning, turner's work;' turn-ing, turn-ing-point; turn-coat, Much Ado, i. 1. 125; turn-key, one who turns a prison-key, a warder; turn-pike, q. v.; turn-sol, a heliotrope, or flower that turns with the sun, OF. torne-sol (Supp. to Godefroy), from L. sōl, the sun; turn-spit, one who turns a spit; turn-stile, a stile that turns, Butler's Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 23; turn-stone, a small bird that turns over stones to find food; turn-table, a table that turns. Also (from tornāre) tour, tour-na-ment, tour-ni-quet.

TURNIP, TURNEP, a plant with a round root, used for food. (F.—L.; and L.) The pl. turneps is in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 13; spelt turnepes in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. 1. The latter part of the word is nep or nepe. We find 'wild nepe, Cucurbita, brionia' in Prompt. Parv. p. 528. 'Hoc bacar, nepe;' Voc. 645. 17. 'As a nepe white'—as white as a turnip; Destruction of Troy, 3076. This is from AS. næp, a turnip, borrowed from L. nāpus, a kind of turnip. 'Napus, næp; Rapa, næp;' Voc. 135. 30, 37. Hence the etymological spelling should rather be turnep than turnip, and we know that the latter part of the word is from Latin. Cf. Irish and Gael. neip, a turnip. 2. The former part of the word is less obvious; but it is most likely F. tour in the sense of 'wheel,' to signify its round shape, as if it had been 'turned.' Cotgrave gives, among the senses of tour, these: 'also a spinning-wheel, a turn, or turner's wheel.' Or it might be the E. turn, used in a like sense; Cotgrave also gives: 'Tournoir, a turn, turning-wheel, or turners wheel, called a lathe or lare.' It makes but little difference, since F. tour is the verbal sb. of tourner, to turn; see TOUR, TURN. Cf. Ital. torno, 'a turne, a turners or spinners wheele,' Florio; W. turn, a turn, also round (from E.); Irish turnapa, a turnip, turnoir, a turner (from E.).

TURNPIKE, a gate set across a road to stop those liable to toll. (F.—L.) The name was given to the toll-gate, because it took the place of the old-fashioned turn-pike, which had three (or more) horizontal bars or pikes (sharp at one end) revolving on a central post. For the difference between a turn-pike and a turn-stile, see figs. 266, 267, in Boutell's Heraldry. Jamieson cites turn-pyk from Wyntoun, viii. 38. 74. The word occurs in Cotgrave, who translates F. tour by 'a turn, . . . also, a turn-pike or turning-stile.' So also: 'I move upon my axle like a turnpike;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 1 (Picklock); see Nares. The word turn-pike was also used in the sense of chevaux de Frise, as in Phillips, ed. 1706. From TURN and PIKE. Der. turn-pike-gate, turn-pike-road.

TURPENTINE, the resinous juice of the terebinth tree, &c. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Levins, ed. 1570. ME. turbentine, Mandeville's Trav. ch. v. p. 51.—MF. turbentine, 'turpentine;' Cot.—L. terebinthus, a terebinth-tree; whence the adj. terebinthinus, made from the terebinth-tree.—Gk. τερεβινθος, made from the tree called τερεβινθος; see TEREBINTH. Cf. Norm. dial. turbentine (Moisy).

TURPITUDE, baseness, depravity. (F.—L.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 112.—F. turpitude, 'turpitude;' Cot.—L. turpiūdo, baseness.—L. turpi-, decl. stem of turpis, base; with suffix -iūdo.  $\beta$ . The L. turpis is 'shameful;' cf. Skt. trap, to be embarrassed, be ashamed; causal, trāpaya, to make ashamed; trāpā, shame.

TURQUOISE, TURQUOIS, TURKHOISE, TURKIS, a precious stone. (F.—Low L.—Tatar.) In Cotgrave; also Palsgrave has: 'Tourques, a precious stone, turquois.' Turcas, a turquoise, Bale's Works, p. 607 (Parker Soc.).—F. turquoise, 'a turquoise, or Turkish stone;' Cot. Turquoise is the fem. of Turquois, 'Turkish,' id.; cf. Mital. Turchesa, 'a blue precious stone called a Turkish;' Florio. The sense is Turkish; the Late L. turchesius is found with the sense of turquoise in A.D. 1347 (Ducange). The F. Turquois is an adj. form, from Low L. Turcus, a Turk, which is from Tatar turk, a Turk; see TURKEY.

TURRET, a small tower. (F.—L.) ME. touret, Chaucer, C. T. 1909 (A 1911); toret, Prompt. Parv.—F. tourette, 'a turret or small tower;' Cot. Dimin. of F. tour (OF. tor, tur), a tower.—L. turrem, acc. of turris, a tower; see TOWER. Cf. AF. turette, French Chron. of London, p. 49. Der. turret-ed.

TURTLE (1), a turtle-dove, kind of pigeon. (L.) ME. turtle, Chaucer, C. T. 10013 (E 2139). AS. turtile. 'Turtur, turtle;' Voc. 132. 1.—L. turtur, a turtle; with the common change from r to l. Hence also G. turtel-taube, a turtle-dove; Ital. tortora, tortola, a turtle.  $\beta$ . The L. tur-tur is of imitative origin; due to a repetition of tur, imitative of the coo of a pigeon. Cf. Du. kirren, to coo.

TURTLE (2), the sea-tortoise. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. This word is absolutely the same as the word above. It occurs, according to Richardson, in Dampier's Voyages, an. 1687; see ed. 1699, i. 395. The islands called Tortugas in Spanish were called Tortiles in English, because turtles bred there; Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, v. 121; vii. 355, 357–8. The English sailors having a difficulty with the Portuguese tartaruga, a tortoise or turtle, and the Span. tortuga, tortoise, turtle, overcame that difficulty by substituting the E. turtle, with a grand disregard of the difference between the two creatures. The Span. and Port. names did not readily suggest the E. tortoise; whereas tartaruga could easily become **tortaluga*, and then **tortal* for short. See TORTOISE.

TUSH, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Much Ado, iii. 3. 130; &c. Holinshed (or Stanihurst) gives the form twish. 'There is a . . . disdainfull interiection vsed in Irish called boagh, which is as much in English as twish;' Holinshed, Desc. of Ireland, c. 8 (R.). Twish is expressive of disgust; cf. pish; also tut. Note also Low G. tuss, silence! Dan. tysse, to be silent; tys, hush! NFries. tüss, hush! tüsse, tüsche, to command silence. See TUT.

TUSK, a long pointed tooth. (E.) Shak. uses the pl. form tushes, Venus, 617, 624. ME. tusk, tusch, tosch; spelt tosche, Prompt. Parv.; we even find the pl. tuxes in K. Alisaunder, 6547. AS. tusc, almost always spelt tux, esp. in the pl. tuxas, just as AS. fisc is often spelt fix; here sc = cs, by metathesis of sc. Spelt tux, translated 'grinder' by Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 95, § 49. 'Canini, vel colomelli, mannes tuxas;' Voc. 157. 31.—OFries. tusk, tosch; EFries.

tusk; Icel. toskr. Perhaps the AS. form was orig. tusk (with long u). Hardly allied to Tooth; see Brugmann, i. § 795. Der. tusk-ed, tusk-y.

TUSSLE, to scuffle. (E.) Allied to tousle, to disorder, frequent. of Touse, q.v. Cf. Westphal. tusseln, to pull about; Dan. dial. tusse, to move about, to confuse. And cf. Toss.

TUSSOCK, a clump or tuft of growing grass. (Scand.?) Latimer has: 'tussocks nor tufts'; see Todd's Johnson. The suffix -ock is a diminutive, as in hill-ock. Cf. Swed. dial. tuss, a wisp of hay (Rietz); and cf. E. touse. Dryden has tuzzes, i.e. tufts or knots of hair; tr. of Persius, iv. 90.

TUT, an exclamation of impatience. (E.) Common in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 117; &c. 'And that he said. . . Tut, tut, tut'; State Trials, Hen. VIII, an. 1536; Q. Anne Boleyn (R.). Cf. F. trut, 'an interjection importing indignation, tush, tut, fy man'; Cot. 'Pitrot, skornefulle word, or trut'; Prompt. Parv., p. 415. And cf. Tush.

TUTELAGE, guardianship. (L.; with F. suffix.) 'The tutelage whereof,' &c.; Drayton, Polyolbion, song 3; l. 218. Coined with F. suffix -age (< L. -aticum) from L. tutēla, protection; see Tutelar.

TUTELAR, protecting, having in charge. (L.) 'Tutelar god of the place'; Ben Jonson, Love's Triumph through Callipolis, Introduction. — L. tutēlāris, tutelār. — L. tutēla, protection; allied to tūtōr, a protector; see Tutor. Der. tutelar-y, from F. tutelaire, 'tutelary, guarding'; Cot.

TUTOR, an instructor, teacher, guardian. (F. — L.) For tutour, the older form. ME. tutour, P. Plowman, B. i. 56. — F. tuteur, 'a tutor'; Cot. — L. tūtōrem, acc. of tūtōr, a guardian; allied to L. tūt-us (short for tuitus), pp. of tūeri, to look after, guard; see Tuition. Der. tutor, verb, L. L. L. iv. 2. 77; tutor-ship, tutor-age, tutor-i-al.

TUTTY, a collyrium. (F. — Pers.) 'Tutie, a medicinale stone or dust'; Blount (1681). ME. tutie, Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 95. — MF. tuthie, 'a medicinale stone or dust, said to be the heavier foile of brasse, cleaving to the upper sides and tops of brasse-melting houses'; Cot. F. tutie. — Pers. tūtiyā, tutty; Rich. Dict. p. 461. Cf. Skt. tuttha-m, blue vitriol (Benfey).

TWADDLE, to tattle, talk unmeaningly. (E.) Formerly twattle. 'No gloosing fabul I twattle'; Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii; ed. Arber, p. 46. 'Vaynelye toe twattle'; id. Æn. iv; p. 101. A collateral form of Tattle, q.v. So also twittle-twattle, sb., used by L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson) as equivalent to titile-tattle. Cf. 'such fables twiled, such untrue reports twailed'; Stanihurst, Desc. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 48. Cf. AS. twædding, adulation (Napier). Der. twaddle, sb., twaddl-er.

TWAIN, two; see under Two.

TWANG, to sound with a sharp noise. (E.) 'Sharply twanged off'; Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 198. 'To Twangue, resonare'; J. Levens. 'To twang, as the string of an instrument'; Minsheu. A collateral form of tang, used with the same sense; see Tang (2), Tingle. It represents the ringing sound of a tense string. Der. twang, sb.

TWEAK, to twitch, pull sharply, pinch. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 601. A better form is twick; cf. prov. E. twick, a sudden jerk (Halliwell). ME. twikken, Prompt. Parv. p. 505. AS. twiccan (pt. t. twicc-ode), The Shrine, ed. Cockayne, p. 41. Besides which, we find AS. angel-twicca = a hook-twitcher, the name of a worm used as bait for fishing; Voc. 320. 32. Twitch is a palatalised form of it; see Twitch. + Low G. twikken, to tweak, nip; G. zwicken, to pinch, nip; whence zwick, a pinch, zwick bei der Nase, tweak by the nose; also G. zwacken, to pinch, to twitch. Cf. Twinge. Der. tweak, sb.

TWEEZERS, nippers, small pincers for pulling out hairs. (F. — Teut.; with E. suffix.) 'Handkerchers, rosaries, tweezers'; Middleton, Span. Gipsy, ii. 1. The history of this word is remarkable; it exhibits an unusual development. A tweez-er or twees-er is, properly, an instrument contained in a tweese, or small case for instruments. And as the tweese contained tweezers, it was also called a tweezer-case; hence it is that we find tweese and tweezer-case used as synonymous terms. 'Tweezers, nippers or pincers, to pull hair up by the roots'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Then his tweezer-cases are incomparable; you shall have one not much bigger than your finger, with seventeen several instruments in it, all necessary every hour of the day'; Tatler, no. 142; March 7, 1709–10. This shows that a tweezer-case was a case containing a great number of small instruments, of which what are now specifically called tweezers was but one. See another quotation under Trinket (1). B. Next, we observe that the proper name for such a case was a tweese, or a pair of tweeses; probably a pair of tweeses means that the case was made double, folding up like a book, as some instrument cases are made still. 'Drawing a little penknife out of a pair of tweeses I then chanced to have about me'; Boyle, Works, ii. 419 (R.). 'I have sent you by Vacandary the post, the French bever [hat] and tweeses you writ for'; Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. let. 17; May 1, 1620. 'A Surgeon's tweese, or box of instruments, pannard de chirurgien'; Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. C. Lastly, the word tweese is a new pl. formed from twee, short for etwee, from MF. estuy (mod. F. étui). 'Estuy, a sheath, case, or box to put things in, and more particularly, a case of little instruments, or sizzers, bodkin, penknife, &c., now commonly tearmed an etwee'; Cot. And again: 'Pennarol de Chirurgien, a chirurgian's case or etui; the box wherein he carries his instruments'; id. Hence twee; 'sure I have not dropt my twee'; Hoadly, The Suspicious Husband, A. ii. sc. 2 (1747). Here we see that the F. estuy was pronounced et-wee; then the initial e (for es) was dropped, just as in the case of Ticket and Tuck (2); then twee became twees or tweese, probably because the case was double; then it was called a pair of tweeses, and a particular implement in it was called a tweezer or tweezers, prob. from some confusion with the obsolete twich, tweezers; see additions to Nares, by Halliwell and Wright. The most remarkable point is the double addition of the pl. form, so that twee-s-es is from twee; this can be explained by the common use of the plural for certain implements, such as shears, scissors, pliers, snuffers, tongs, scales, nippers, pincers, &c. So far, the history of the word is quite clear, and fully known. D. The etymology of OF. estuy or estui is difficult; it is the same as Span. estuche, a scissors-case, also scissors (note this change of sense), Port. estojo, a case, a tweezer-case, Low Lat. estugium, a case, box, occurring A.D. 1231 (Ducange). We also find Ital. stuccio, stucchio, 'a little pocket-case with cisors, pen-knives, and such trifles in them,' (sic) Florio; whence (with prefix a- < L. ad) Ital. astuccio, a small box, case, sheath. The form stucchio does not seem to have been observed before; perhaps it helps the etymology, proposed by Diez, from MHG. stūche, OHG. stūcha, a cuff, a muff (prov. G. stauche, a short and narrow muff). + Icel. stūka, a sleeve. If so, the orig. case for small instruments was a muff, or a cuff, or a part of the sleeve. Körtling, § 9128.

TWELVE, two and ten. (E.) ME. twelf; whence also twelf-e, twel-ue (= twel-ue), a pl. form and dissyllabic. It was not uncommon to use numerals in the pl. form of adjectives; cf. E. five (= fi-vē), from AS. fif. 'Twelue winter' = twelve years, P. Plowman, B. v. 196, where two MSS. have twelf. We have, in the Ormulum, the form twelff, 11069; but also twelff-e (dissyllabic), 537. AS. twelf, also twelfe, Grein, ii. 556. + OFris. twelff, twilif, twelf, tolef; Du. twaaif; Icel. tōlf; Dan. tolv; Swed. tolf; G. zwölf; OHG. zwelif; Goth. twalif. β. All from the Teut. type twalif, as in Gothic. Here twa- is two; see Two. The suffix -lif is the Teut. equivalent (but from another root leip, to stick, remain, leave) to the Lithuan. -lika occurring in duy-lika, twelve. The Lithuan. -lika is due to the adj. lēkas, signifying 'what is over,' or 'remaining over'; see Nesselmann, p. 365. In fact, the phr. antras lēkas, lit. 'second one over,' is used as an ordinal, meaning 'twelfth.' Lēkas is from Lith. lik-ti, to leave, allied to L. linquere. See Eleven. Brugmann, ii. § 175. Der. twelf-th, used instead of twelfth (ME. twelfte, AS. twelfsta, Grein, ii. 556) by analogy with seven-th, eigh-th, nin-th, &c.; hence twelfth-day, twelfth-night (often called twelfday, twelfnight, as in Shakespeare's play of 'Twelfth Night'); twelve-month, ME. twelf-monthe, P. Plowman, C. vii. 80.

TWENTY, twice ten. (E.) ME. twenty, Chaucer, C. T. 17118 (H 169). AS. twentig, Grein, ii. 557. Prob. for twēn-tig = twegen-tig; from AS. twegen, twain, and the suffix -tig, cognate with Goth. tigjus, Gk. dekās, a decade, a collection of ten things; allied to E. ten, Goth. taihun, Gk. deka. See Two and Ten. + Du. twintig; Icel. tuttugu; Goth. twaitigjus, Luke, xiv. 31; G. zwanzig, MHG. zweinzic, OHG. zueinzuc. All similarly formed. β. So also L. ui-ginti, twenty; from ui- (for **dui*, twice, related to duo, two), and -ginti (for **centi*, short for decenti, tenth, from decem, ten); whence F. vingt, twenty, &c. Der. twenti-eth, AS. twentigoda, Exod. xii. 18.

TWIBILL, TWYBILL, a two-edged bill or mattock. (E.) Still in use provincially; see Halliwell. In Becon's Works, ii. 449; Parker Society. ME. twibil; spelt twybyl, Prompt. Parv. AS. twibille or twibill. 'Bipennis, twibille, vel stān-æx [stone-axe]; Falcastrum, bill'; Voc. 141. 27, 28. Also: 'Bipinnis, twibill'; id. 361. 6. — AS. twi-, double; and bill, a bill. See Twice and Bill.

TWICE, two times. (E.) For ME. twiēs or twyēs, formerly dissyllabic; the word has been reduced to a single syllable, and the final -ce is a mere orthographical device for representing the fact that the final s was voiceless, and not sounded as z. 'He twyēs wan Jerusalem the citee'; Chaucer, C. T. 14153 (B 3337). AS. twiges; A. S. Chron. an. 1120 (Laud MS.). This is a genitive form, genitives being often used adverbially; the more common AS. word is tuwa, Luke, xviii. 12, older form twiwa, twice, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 2. § 7. Both twi-ges and twi-wa are from the base twi-, double, only used as a prefix, answering to Icel. tvī-, L. bī- (for **dvis*), Gk. di-, Skt. dvi-, and allied to twā, two; see Two. Cf. prov. E. twi-bill, a mattock (above), twi-fallow, to till ground a second time; and see Twilight.

TWIDDLE, to twirl idly. (Scand.) As in the phr. 'to twiddle one's thumbs.' From Norw. tvidla, variant of tvilla, to mix up by stirring round; and tvilla is a mere variant of tvirla, with the same sense; see Aasen and Ross. See Twirl. (Prob. twir-la > tvil-la > **tvil-da* or tvil-la.) Cf. mod. Icel. kalla, to call; pronounced (kad-la).

TWIG (1), a thin branch, small shoot of a tree. (E.) ME. twig, spelt tuyg in Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 22, l. 5; pl. twiggas, Chaucer, Persones Tale, De Superbia (I 390). AS. twig, pl. twigu, a twig; Northumb. twigge, pl. twiggo, John, xv. 5. + Westphalian twich, twick; Du. twijg; G. zweig. β. From the AS. base twi-, double, because orig. applied to the fork of a branch, or the place where a small shoot branches off from a larger one. In fact twi-g is cognate with Skt. dvi-ka, 'consisting of two,' Gk. disśós, double, twofold. Brugmann, ii. § 166. A similar explanation applies to ME. twist, often used in the sense of twig or spray, as in Chaucer, C. T. 10223 (E 2349). Cf. G. zwiesel, a forked branch; and see Twilight, Twice, Twist, Two.

TWIG (2), to comprehend. (E.) Orig. to observe, mark, take note of; as in 'Now twig him; now mind him;' Foote, Mayor of Garratt (1763), ii. 2. Cf. prov. E. twig, a glance; twig, to pull quickly; twick, to twitch; twitch, to snatch, pinch, also to hold tight, to nip. See E. D. D. β. Otherwise, twig may be from the Irish tuig-im, I understand, discern; Stokes-Fick, p. 50.

TWILIGHT, the faint light after sunset or before sunrise. (E.) ME. twilight, spelt twelyghite in Prompt. Parv. The AS. twi-, prefix, means 'double,' like Icel. tvī-, Du. twē-, G. zwie-; but it is here used rather in the sense of 'doubtful' or 'half.' The ideas of double and half are liable to confusion; cf. AS. twēo, doubt, from the hovering between two opinions; see Doubt and Between. β. Precisely the same confusion appears in German; we there find zwiefach, double, zwielicht, twilight, zwiesel, a branch dividing into two ends, zwietracht, discord, all with the prefix zwie- = AS. twi-. The prefix is related to Two; cf. Twice, Twig. And see Light. By way of further illustration, I find MDu. tweelecht, twylicht, 'twilight,' Hexham; cf. Du. twēe, two, twēedubbel, twice double, &c. Also Low G. twē-lecht; AS. twēone-leōht, twilight, Voc. 175. 34. But this last would only give a mod. E. form tweenlight, and does not account for the form twilight.

TWILL, an appearance of diagonal lines in textile fabrics produced by causing the weft-threads to pass over one and under two warp-threads, instead of over one and under one. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson; Lowland Sc. twēel, twēil, twēal (Jamieson). 'De i. mappa mensali de twill,' York Wills, iii. 14 (1400); 'panno vocato twylled,' id. iii. 71 (1423). The form is very old, and has reference to a peculiar method of doubling the warp-threads, or taking two of them together. From AS. twilic (Toller), OLowG. twili, adj., woven with double thread, twill (Gallée). Cognate with G. zwillich, 'ticking,' MHG. zwilich, zwilch, OHG. zwi-līh, 'two-threaded,' a word suggested by L. bilix, two-threaded, from bi-, double, and licium, a thread. See EFries. twillen, to double, in Koolman. Formed, like twig, twine, twist, from the Teut. base twi-, double, appearing in AS. twi-, Du. twē-, G. zwie-, all allied to Two, q.v. We also find: 'Trilicis, þrylen hrægel,' i.e. a garment woven with three threads, corresponding to an E. form **thrill*; Voc. 151. 34. And see Twilight, Twice. Der. twill, verb. ⚡ Twilled in Temp. iv. 64, is yet unexplained. Ray tells us that North E. twill means a spool, and is a corruption of quill (see E. D. D.). I doubt it as regards this passage; the Swed. dial. twill is to turn round like a spindle, to become entangled, as thread (Rietz); Norweg. tvilla is to stir milk round and round, also to twist into knots, as a thread; tvilla, sb., is a twist or knot in a thread. And the Norw. verb tvilla is merely an assimilated form of Norw. tvirla, to twirl, to turn round; like prov. E. twell, to turn a spadeful over (E. D. D.). I explain pioned as 'dug out,' and twilled as 'turned over;' said of excavated trenches with sloping sides, on which the mud is laid. See the context. Halliwell gives twilly, to turn reversedly.

TWIN, one of two born at a birth. (E.) ME. twin, adj., double. 'Iosep gaf ilc here twinne scrud' = Joseph gave each of them double raiment, 'changes of raiment,' cf. Gen. xlv. 22. 'Piss twinne seollþe' = this double blessing, Ormulum, 8769. AS. ge-twinn-as, pl. twins (Bosworth); 'bini, getwinne;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 13, l. 14; 'gemellus, getwin;' Corpus Gloss., 12. + Icel. tvinnur, tvennur, two and two, twin, in pairs; cf. tvinna, to twine, twist two together. We also find Dan. tvilling, Swed. tvilling, a twin, perhaps for **tvinling*, by assimilation; cf. ME. twinling, Bavar. zwin-ling, G. zwil-ling, a twin. Due to AS. twi-, double; see Twibill. + Lithuan. dwyni, twins, sing. dwynys; from dwi, two, The n seems to give a collective force, as in Goth. twēihnai, two apiece, Luke, ix. 3; L. bini, two at a time. Hence twin, by two at a time, orig. an adj., as above. Der. twin, verb, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 67.

TWINE, to double or twist together; as sb., a twisted thread. (E.) ME. twinen, to twine; pp. twyned, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 204. In Layamon, 14220, the later text has 'a twined þred,' where the earlier text has 'a twines þræd' = a thread of twine. The supposed AS. twīnan is unauthorised, but the verb was early coined from the sb. twin, a twisted thread, curiously used to translate L. byssos in Luke, xvi. 19 (as if from L. bis, twice). + Du. twijn, twine, twist, whence twijnen, to twine; Icel. tvinni, twine, whence tvinna, to twine; Dan. tvinde (for **tvinne*), to twine; Swed. tvinntråd, twine-thread, tvinna, to twine; also Du. twieern, twine, G. zwirn. β. All from Teut. type **twis-no-* > **twiz-no-*, double; the iz becomes i in AS. twin, Du. twijn; the zn becomes nn in Icel. and Swed.; and the z becomes r in Du. and G. The base **twis-* occurs in Goth. twis-, prefix, and in E. twis-t; cf. L. bis (for **dvis*), Gk. dis, Skt. dvis, twice. Brugmann, i. § 903 (c, note 2).

TWINGE, to affect with a sudden, sharp pain, to nip. (E.) ME. twengen, weak vb. (ng = nj), to twinge, tweak; Owl and Night, 156. Cf. 'Whil þat twinges me the foe' = while the foe afflicts me; E. Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. xli. 10. Causal of ME. twingen, str. vb.; 'I am meked and twungen smert,' id. Ps. xxxvii. 9. AS. twengan, weak vb. (Toller); for earlier **þwengan*, causal of **þwingan*, whence the derived word Thong. For change of thw- to tw-, cf. twirl below, q.v. It is preserved in OFriesic thwīnga, also twīnga, dwīnga, to constrain, pt. t. twang, twong, pp. twongen. + OSax. thwīngan, in the pp. bithwungan, oppressed; Dan. twinge, to force, compel, constrain; Swed. twīnga, to force, bridle, restrain, compel; Icel. þwīnga, to oppress; Du. dwīngen, to constrain, pt. t. dwong, pp. gedwongen; G. zwīngen, pt. t. zwang, pp. gezwungen. β. All from the Teut. type **þwengan-* (pt. t. **þwang-*), to constrain, compel; whence also the secondary verbs appearing in G. zwāngen, to press tightly, constrain, and ME. twengen, to press tightly, tweak, or twinge (as above), and in the Life of St. Dunstan, l. 81: 'he twengde and schok hir bi þe nose' = he twinged and shook her by the nose, Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. The mod. E. twinge answers rather to this secondary or causal form than to the strong verb; just as in the case of swinge, due to the strong verb swing. γ. Cf. Lithuan. twenkti, to be hot, to smart; twankas, sultry. (✓TWENK). Der. twinge, sb. Also thong, q.v.

TWINKLE, to shine with a quivering light. ME. twinklen, Chaucer, C. T. 269 (A 267). AS. twinclian, to twinkle, shine faintly, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxv. § 3; b. iii. pr. 12. Twinkle is a frequentative from a form twink, appearing in ME. twinken, to blink, wink; Prompt. Parv., p. 505. And again, twink is a nasalised form of AS. twiccan, to twitch; see Tweak, Twitch. The sense is to keep on twitching or quivering, hence to twinkle. + Bavar. zwinkern, frequentative of zwinken, to blink. Der. twinkle, sb.; twinkl-er. Also twinkl-ing, sb., a twitch or wink with the eye, ME. twinkeling; 'And in the twinkeling of a lōke' [look, glance], Gower, C. A. i. 144, bk. i. 3033; this is from ME. twinkelen in the sense to wink, as: 'he twincleþ with the eȝen' = he winks with the eyes, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 13 (earlier version); see twink, sb., a twinkling, in Shak. Temp. iv. 43.

TWINTER, a beast two winters old. (E.) 'Five twinteris britnit he;' G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. v. ch. ii. 105. AS. twi-wintre, adj., of two years. = AS. twi-, double (see Twibill); and winter, a winter, a year.

TWIRE, to peep out. (E.) In Shak. Son. 28. Recorded in the cognate Bavarian zwiren, zwieren, to peep out (Schmeller); MHG. zwieren, to peep out (Schade). Not in Chaucer, as Nares asserts; but known in prov. E. (E. D. D.).

TWIRL, to whirl, turn round rapidly. (Scand.) Twirl stands for thwirl, as twinge (q.v.) for thwinge. 'Leave twirling of your hat;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, Act ii. sc. 3 (Altea); twyrle, Fitzherbert, Husb., § 55, l. 1. = Norw. tvirla, to twirl. (Ross). Twirl is a frequentative form, from Teut. **þwer-an-*, AS. þwer-an, to agitate, turn; it means 'to keep on turning,' and is used of rather violent motion. The AS. þweran only occurs in the āþweran, to stir round, to churn, and ge-þweran, to churn (Toller). We have also the derived sb. þwiril, supposed to mean the handle of a churn, which was steadily turned round. We find: 'Lac, meole [milk]; Lac coagolatum, molcen [curdled milk]; Verberaturum, þwiril; Caseum, cysc [cheese];' &c.; Voc. 280. 27-33. Slight as these traces are, they are made quite certain by the cognate words; it may be necessary to observe that, in AS. þwir-il, the final -il denotes the implement, and is an agential suffix, distinct from the frequentative -l in twirl. Cf. Du. dwarlen, to whirl; whence dwarlwind, a whirlwind (the Du. d = AS. þ). That the l is frequentative, appears at once from the Low G.

dweerwind, a whirlwind, as well as from MHG. dwer(e)n, OHG. dweran, tweran, strong verb, to turn round swiftly, to whirl, to mix up. From the Teut. type **thweran-*, to stir round (pt. t. **thwar*); whence also Icel. þvara, Norw. tvare, AS. þwære, OHG. thwiril, MHG. twirl, G. quirl, a stirring-stick. Note also EFries. dwireln, dwirlen, to twirl, dwarrel, a whirl, from dweren, to turn. From Idg. **TWER*, whence also Gk. top-ύνη, L. trua, a stirrer. See Trowel.

TWIST, to twine together, wreath, turn forcibly. (E.) ME. twisten, Chaucer, C. T. 10880 (F 566); O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 213. Not found in AS., but regularly formed from a sb. twist, a rope, occurring in the comp. mast-twist, a stay, a rope used to stay a mast. 'Parastates, mast-twist,' Voc. 182. 8; one sense of Gk. παροστάρης is a stay. Again, twis-t is formed, with suffix -t, from AS. **twis-*, double, explained under Twine. The suffix -t is the very common Idg. suffix -to-. We should also notice ME. twist, a twig, i. e. forked branch, branch dividing into two; see under Twig. +Du. twisten, to quarrel; from twist, a quarrel. This is the same form, but used in quite a different sense, from the notion of two persons contending; cf. Du. twesfalt, discord, twedragt, discord, twestrijd, a duel; Dan. twiste, to strive, from twist, strife; the Dan. twist also means a twist; Swed. twista, to strive, from twist, strife; G. zweist, a twist, also discord, whence zweistig, discordant. And cf. Icel. twistr, the two or 'deuce' in card-playing. Der. twist, sb. (really an older word, as appears above); twist-er. Cf. obsol. twiss-el, a double fruit (Nares), from AS. twisel, double.

TWIT, to remind of a fault, reproach. (E.) For twite; the i was certainly once long, which accounts for the extraordinary form twight (miswritten for twite, like delight for delite) in Spenser, F. Q. v. 6. 12, where it rhymes with light and plight. Palsgrave has the queer spelling twkyte, prob. a misprint for twyte, as it occurs immediately before twyne and under the heading 'T before W: I twkyte one, I caste hym in the tethe or in the nose, 'Je luy reproche; this terme is also northren.' The orig. length of the vowel leaves no doubt that twite is due to ME. atwiten, to twit, reproach, by loss of initial a; and this verb is used in much the same way as the mod. E. word, and was once common; Stratmann gives more than 12 examples. 'Imputo, to a-twyte;' Voc. 589. 17. Spelt atwytte, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 198, l. 16; whence atwytinges, twittings, reproaches, id. p. 194, l. 6. 'Pat atwytede hym' = that twitted him, Rob. of Glouc. p. 33, l. 782. AS. ætwtan, to twit, reproach; see Sweet, AS. Reader, and Grein. [We also find AS. ed-witan with the same sense, but the prefix differs.] = AS. æt, at, prep. often used as a prefix; and witan, to blame, the more orig. sense being to behold, observe, hence to observe what is wrong, take notice of what is amiss; Grein, ii. 724. For the prefix, see At. The AS. witan is cognate with Goth. weitjan, occurring in idweitjan, to reproach (= AS. ed-witan), and in fairweitjan, to observe intently. AS. witan, Goth. weitjan, are allied to AS. and Goth. witan, to know, and to L. uid-ere, to see. = WEID, to see; see Wit and Vision. Cf. Du. wijten, to reproach, G. ver-weisen.

TWITCH, to pluck, snatch, move suddenly. (E.) ME. twicchen, a palatalised form of twikken, to tweak. 'Twikkyn, twychyn, or somewhat drawyn, Tractulo;' Prompt. Parv. We find also the comp. verb to-twicchen, to pull to pieces, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 53, l. 4; with the pt. t. to-twijte, spelt to-twijt, Will. of Palerne, 2097. Similarly the simple verb twicchen makes the pt. t. twijte, and pp. twijt. This explains twight = twitched, pulled, Chaucer, C. T. 7145 (D 1563). For the form, cf. AS. angel-twicce, prov. E. angletwitch, an earth-worm (for fishing). See Tweak. Der. twitch, sb.; twitch-er.

TWITTER, to chirp as a bird, to feel a slight trembling of the nerves. (E.) ME. twiteren; whence 'pilke brid . . . twitereth' = that bird twitters, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 2, l. 21. Twitter is a frequentative from a base twit, and means 'to keep on saying twit;' and twit is a lighter or weakened form of twat, appearing in the old word twatt-le, now twaddle; see Twaddle. Again, twaddle is related to tattle; and as twitter : twattle :: titter : tattle. All these words are of imitative origin. +G. zwitchern, to twitter; Bavar. zuitzern. And cf. Du. kwetteren, to twitter, warble, chatter; Dan. kvidre, Swed. quitra, to chirp, twitter. Der. twitter, sb. The sense of trembling may follow from that of tremulous sound; but a twitter of the nerves may be due to the influence of ME. twikken, to tweak or twitch.

TWO, TWAIN, one and one. (E.) The difference between two and twain is one of gender only, as appears from the AS. forms. Twain is masc., whilst two is fem. and neuter; but this distinction was early disregarded. ME. twaien, twieje, twain, twieie, twiei, twey, &c.; also two, two, in which the w was pronounced; the pronunciation of two as too being of rather late date. 'Us tweyne' = us twain, us two, Chaucer, C. T. 1136 (A 1134). 'Sustren two' = sisters two, id. 1021 (A. 1019). Our poets seem to use twain and two indifferently. AS. twegen, masc. nom. and acc.; twā, fem. nom. and acc.; twā, tu, neut. nom. and acc.; twegra, gen. (all genders); twām, dat. (all genders). The neut. tu already shows an occasional loss of w; and even in AS. twā was used instead of twegen when nouns of different genders were conjoined; see Grein, ii. 556. +Du. twee; Icel. twair, acc. twā, two; Dan. to; Norw. two; Swed. två, tu; Goth. twai, masc., twōs, fem., twā, neut.; gen. twaddje, dat. twaim; acc. twans, twōs, twā; G. zwei; also zween, only in the masc. gender; also zwo, fem. (rare); OHG. zwēnē, zwa, zwo, zwei. +Irish da; Gael. da, do; W. dau, dwy; Russ. dva; Lithuan. du, m., dvi, f.; L. duo (whence F. deux, Ital. due, Span. dos, Port. dous, E. deuce); Gk. duo; Skt. dvā, dvā.

β. All from the Idg. type **dwo-*, **duwo-*; Brugmann, ii. § 166. γ. In composition, we find, as a prefix, AS. twi- (E. twi- in twi-ce, twi-light), Icel. tvī-, Du. twee-, Dan. and Swed. tve-, G. zwie-, L. bi- (for **dwi-*), Gk. di- (for **dwi-*), Skt. dvi-, dvā-; also E. twis- (L. bis), as in twis-t; see Twine. Der. two-edged; two-fold, a modern substitution for ME. twifold, Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, Ps. cviii. 29, AS. twifeald, spelt twigfeald in Gen. xliii. 15, so that two-fold should rather be twy-fold. Also a-two, ME. a two, Chaucer, C. T. 3569, AS. on tu, Grein, ii. 556, so that the prefix a- = on; see A- (2). Also twain (as above), two-lve, twen-ty, twi-bill, twi-ce, twi-light, twill, twig, twin, twine, twist; bi-, prefix; bis-, prefix, in bis-sextile; di-, prefix, dia-, prefix, dis-, prefix. Also deuce (1).

TYBALT, the 'prince of cats.' (AF.—Low G.) See Shak. Romeo, iii. 1. 80. — AF. Tebalt, Tebaud. — OSax. Thiod-bald, Theobald. — OSax. thiod, people, bald, bold. See Tibert.

TYMPANUM, the hollow part of the ear, &c. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [He also gives: 'Tympan, the drum of the ear, a frame belonging to a printing-press covered with parchment. . . . pannel of a door,' &c.; this is from F. tympan, 'a timpan, or timbrell, also a taber; . . . also, a printer's timpane,' &c.; Cot.] — L. tympanum, a drum; area of a pediment (in architecture); panel of a door. — Gk. τύμπανον, a drum, roller, area of a pediment, panel of a door. Formed with inserted μ from the rarer τύπανον, a drum. — Gk. τυπ-, base of τύπτειν, to strike, beat, beat a drum; see Type. And see Timbrel. Der. tympan-y, a flatulent distension of the belly, Dryden, Mac-Flecknoe, 194, from Gk. τυμpanias, a kind of dropsy in which the belly is stretched tight like a drum; the F. form tympanie is given in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave; Palsgrave has E. tympan.

TYPE, a mark or figure, emblem, model, a raised letter in printing. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Rich. III, iv. 4. 244; and in Spenser, F. Q. Intro. to b. i. st. 4. — F. type, a type; in Sherwood's index to Cotgrave. — L. typum, acc. of typus, a figure, image, type. — Gk. τύπος, a blow, the mark of a blow, stamp, impress, mark, mould, outline, sketch, figure, type, character of a disease. — Gk. τυπ-, base of τύπτειν, to strike, beat. Allied to Skt. tup, tump, to hurt; and to Gk. στυφ-ερίζειν, to strike. (✓STEU). β. We also find Skt. tud, L. tundere (pt. t. tu-tud-i), to strike. These are from a base **steud-*, to strike; whence Goth. stautan, to strike. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 818 (2). Der. typ-ic, from Gk. τυπικός, typical, figurative; typ-ic-al, typ-ic-al-ly; typi-fy, a coined word, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, § 1; type-founder, type-metal; also typo-graphy, orig. in the sense of 'figurative description,' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 8. § 15, where the suffix is from Gk. γράφειν, to write; typo-graph-ic, typo-graph-ic-al, -ly; typo-graph-er. And see tympanum, thump.

TYPHOON, a violent whirlwind or hurricane. (Arab.—Gk.) [The word has been claimed as Chinese, from the Chinese ta, 'great,' and fang (Cantonese fung), 'wind;' as if 'great wind.' But this seems to be a late mystification, and unhistorical.] In old authors, the forms are tuffon, tuffoon, tiphon, &c. Spelt touffon, and explained as 'an extraordinary storme at sea;' Hakluyt, Voy., ii. 1. 239; tuffoons, pl., W. Dampier, New Voyage (1699), ii. 1. 35. (See Typhoon in Yule). — Arab. tūfān, a hurricane, storm; Rich. Dict., p. 466. — Gk. τύφάν, better τύφός, a whirlwind. Allied to τύφος, smoke, cloud; see Typhus.

TYPHUS, a kind of continued fever. (L.—Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Todd says it is 'one of the modern names given to low fever.' — L. typhus; a Latinised form from the Gk. — Gk. τύφος, smoke, cloud, mist, stupor, esp. stupor arising from fever; so that 'typhus fever' = stupor-fever. — Gk. τύφειν, to raise a smoke, to smoke. Allied to θυ-μός, vigour, courage, θύ-ειν, to rush along; from ✓DHEU, to blow, fan a flame, shake; see Fume. Der. typhous, adj.; typho-id, resembling typhus, from Gk. τύφο-, for τύφος, and ειδ-ος, resemblance, from εἶδομαι, I seem; see Idol.

TYRANT, a despotic ruler, oppressive master. (F.—L.—Gk.) The word was not originally used in a bad sense; see Trench, Study of Words. The spelling with y is modern, and due to our knowledge of Gk.; the word was really derived from French, and might as well have i. ME. tirant, but spelt tyrant in Rob. of Glouc. p. 374, l. 7689; tiraunt in Chaucer, prol. to Legend of Good Women,

1. 374. — OF. tiran, also tiranz, whence an oblique case tirant; also spelt tyran, tyrant; see Littré. Cotgrave gives: 'Tyran, a tyrant.' — L. tyrannum, acc. of tyrannus. — Gk. τύραννος, a lord, master, an absolute sovereign; later, a tyrant, usurper. Prob. orig. an adj. signifying kingly, lordly, in a good sense; as in the tragedians. Der. tyrann-y, ME. tyrannie or tyrannye, Chaucer, C. T. 943 (A 941), from F. tyrannie, 'tyranny,' Cot., L. tyrannia, Gk. τυραννία, sovereign sway; also tyrann-ic, F. tyrannique, L. tyrannicus, Gk. τυραννικός; tyrann-ic-al, Cor. iii. 3. 2; tyrann-ic-al-ly, tyrann-ous, Meas. for Meas. iv. 2. 87, a coined word; tyrann-ous-ly; tyrann-ise, K. John, v. 7. 47, from F. tyrannizer, 'to tyrannize, to play the tyrant,' Cot., as if from L. **tyrannizāre* = Gk. τυραννίζειν, to take the part of a tyrant (hence to act as one).

TYRO, a gross misspelling of Tiro, q. v.

U

UBIQUITY, omnipresence. (F.—L.) In Becon's Works, iii. 450, 524 (Parker Soc.); and in Cotgrave. — F. ubiquité, 'an ubiquity,' Cot. It answers to L. **ubiquitatem*, acc. of **ubiquitās*, a coined word, coined to signify 'a being everywhere,' i. e. omnipresence. — L. ubique, wherever, also, everywhere. — L. ubi, where; with suffix -que, answering to Gk. τε, and allied to L. quis, Gk. τίς, and E. who. β. Ubi is short for cubi, appearing in ali-cubi, anywhere, nē-cubi, nowhere; and **cubi* stands for **quibī*, where -bī is a suffix as in i-bī, there. Cf. Skt. ku-, as in ku-ha, where; also Oscan pu-f, Umbrian pu-fe, where. Brugmann, i. § 667. Der. ubiquit-ous, -ous-ly.

UDDER, the breast of a female mammal. (E.) ME. uaddir (= uaddir); 'Iddyr, or uddyr of a beeste,' Prompt. Parv. AS. ūder, in a Gloss. to Prov. vii. (Bosworth); cf. L. uberibus in Prov. vii. 18 (Vulgate); see Kentish Glosses, 203. + MDu. uder, uyder (Hexham); Du. uier; Low G. ūder (Danneil); Icel. jūgr (an abnormal form; for **jūdr*); Swed. jufver, jur; Dan. yver (cf. North E. yure, a Scand. form); G. euter, OHG. ūtār. Teut. type **ūdro-*; Idg. type **ūdhro-*. Further cognate with L. uber (for **ādher*), Gk. οὔθηρ (gen. οὔθηρος), Skt. ūdhar, an udder. Der. (from L. uber) ex-uber-ant.

UGLY, frightful, hateful. (Scand.) ME. ugly, Chaucer, C. T. 8549 (E 673); spelt uglike, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2805. We also find ugsom, frightful, Destruction of Troy, 877. — Icel. uggligr, fearful, dreadful, to be feared. — Icel. ugg-r, fear; with suffix -ligr = AS. -lic = E. -like, -ly. Cf. Icel. ugga, to fear. Apparently allied to Icel. agi, whence E. awe. Also to Goth. ōgan, to fear, ōgjan, to terrify. See Awe. Der. ugli-ness, spelt uglynes, Pricke of Conscience, 917, where it is used to translate L. horror.

UHLAN, ULAN, a lancer. (G.—Polish—Turkish.) Modern. 'Each Hulan forward with his lance!' Scott, Field of Waterloo, x. 5. — G. uhlan, a lancer. — Pol. ulan, an uhlan; not of Polish origin. β. According to Heyse, uhlans were a kind of light cavalry of Tataric origin, first introduced into European armies in Poland; the Polish ulan, a lancer, having been borrowed from Turkish oglan, also olan, a youth, lad. Of Tataric origin. From Tatar oglan, a son, child; formerly also a Mogul title. See Zenker, Turk. Dict., p. 124; Pavet de Courteille, Dict. Turk-Oriental, p. 68.

UKASE, an edict of the Czar. (F.—Russ.) Modern. — F. ukase. — Russ. ykaz', an ordinance, edict; cf. ykazuivat(e), ykazat(e), to indicate, show, order, prescribe. — Russ. y-, prefix; kazat(e), to show. The Russ. y-, Church Slav. u-, is allied to Skt. ava, away, off; and kazat(e) is the Ch. Slav. kazati, to show. Brugmann, i. § 163 (note), § 616.

ULCER, a dangerous sore. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, iv. 7. 124. — MF. ulcere (Cot.), mod. F. ulcère, 'an ulcer, a raw scab.' — L. ulcer, decl. stem of ulcus, a sore; cf. Span. and Ital. ulcera, an ulcer. + Gk. ἔλκος, a wound, sore, abscess; Skt. arṣas, hemorrhoids. Der. ulcerat-ion, from F. ulceration, 'an ulceration,' Cot., from L. acc. ulcerationem; ulcer-ate, from L. ulcerātus, pp. of ulcerāre, to make sore; ulcer-ous, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147, from L. adj. ulcerōsus, full of sores.

ULLAGE, the unfilled part of a cask. (Prov.—L.) 'Ullage of a Cask, is what a cask wants of being full;' Phillips, ed. 1706. A Prov. word; due to the wine trade. — Prov. ulhage (given by Mistral s. v. uiage), a filling up of a cask; OF. eullage (Roquefort); ouillage (Godefroy). — Prov. ulha, OProv. ulhar (in Mistral, s. v. uia), to fill up; OF. eullier, ouillier; MF. oeiller, to fill up wine vessels, Cot. The Late L. type is **oculāre*, to fill up to the oculus, the eye, or orifice. — L. oculus, the eye; see Ocular. We also find OF. aoillier, as if for **adoculāre*. Cf. MF. oeillade, an amorous look, oel, the eye (Cot.).

ULTERIOR, further, more remote. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. — L. ulterior, further; comp. of ulter, beyond, on that side, an old adj. only occurring in the abl. ultrā (= ultrā parte) and ultrō, which are used as adverbs with the sense of beyond; ultrā is also used as a preposition. β. Ul-ter is also a comparative form (ul-ter-ior being a double comparative, like ex-ter-ior from ex); cf. OL. uls, beyond, allied to OL. ollus, that, yon, olle (= ille), he. Hence ul-ter = more than that way, more in that direction. γ. OL. ollus is for **olnus*; cf. Skt. arāṇa-s, foreign, far, yon. Brugmann, i. § 163. Der. ultra-, prefix, q. v.; ultim-ate, q. v. Also outrage, utterance (2).

ULTIMATE, furthest, last. (L.) 'The ultimate end of his presence;' Bp. Taylor, Of the Real Presence, s. i. (R.). — L. ultimātus, pp. of ultimāre, to come to an end, to be at the last. — L. ultimus, last. Ul-ti-mus is a superl. form (like op-ti-mus, in-ti-mus), formed from the base ul- appearing in ul-ter, ul-ter-ior; see Ulterior. Der. ultimate-ly; also ultimat-um, from L. ultimātum, neut. of pp. ultimātus. Der. pen-ultimate, ante-pen-ultimate.

ULTRA-, beyond. (L.) L. ultrā-, prefix; ultrā, beyond, adv. and prep., orig. abl. fem. of OL. ulter, adj.; see Ulterior. ¶ The F. form is oultre, Ital. oltra, Span. ultra.

ULTRAMARINE, beyond sea; as sb., sky-blue. (Ital.—L.) 'Ultramarine, that comes or is brought from beyond sea; also, the finest sort of blew colour used in painting;' Phillips, ed. 1706; spelt ultramarin in ed. 1658. And used by Dryden, On Painting, § 354 (R.), who talks of 'ultramarine or azure.' 'Asure, . . such as the paynters caule Azurro Oltramarino, that is, Asure of beyonde the sea;' Eden, Three E. Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 366 (1555). The word is Ital. (the Ital. oltra being altered to L. ultrā). — Ital. oltra marino, of beyond the seas (Florio). Cf. Span. ultramarino, beyond sea, foreign; also as sb. 'ultramarine, the finest blue colour, produced by calcination from lapis lazuli,' Neuman. — L. ultrā, beyond; mar-e, sea; and suffix -inus. See Ultra- and Marine. So called because lapis lazuli was a foreign production; see Azure.

ULTRAMONTANE, beyond the Alps. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'Ultramontanes, a name given by the Italians to all people living on the hither side of the Alps, who, with respect to their country, are beyond those mountains;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'He is an ultramontane;' Bacon, Observations on a Libel (R.). — F. ultramontain, applied by the French to the Italians themselves, as being beyond the Alps from the French side, and in use as early as the 14th cent. (Littré). This is also the E. view of the word, which is used with reference to the Italians, esp. to those who hold extreme views as to the Pope's supremacy. — Ital. ultramontano, beyond the mountains; Late L. ultrāmōntānus, coined in imitation of classical L. trāmōntānus. — L. ultrā, beyond; and mont-, stem of mons, a mountain; with suffix -ānus. See Ultra- and Mountain; and see Tramontane. Der. ultramontan-ist, -ism (F. ultramontanisme).

ULTRAMUNDANE, beyond the limits of our solar system, beyond the world. (L.) 'Imaginary ultramundane spaces;' Boyle's Works, vol. v, p. 140 (R.). And in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. ultrāmūndānus, beyond the world. — L. ultrā, beyond; and mūndānus, worldly, from mūndus, world. See Ultra- and Mundane.

UMBEL, a form of flower in which a number of stalks, each bearing a flower, radiate from a centre. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives it in the form umbella; it has since been shortened to umbel. Florio gives Ital. umbella, 'a little shadow, . . also the round tuft or head of fenell or dill.' So called from its likeness in form to an umbrella. — L. umbella, a parasol; Juvenal, ix. 50. Dimin. of umbra, a shade. See Umbrella. Der. umbelli-fer-ous, bearing umbels (Phillips), coined with suffix -fer-ous, as in cruci-ferous, from L. suffix -fer, bearing, and E. -ous (F. -eux, L. -ōsus). Doublet, umbrella.

UMBER, a species of brown ochre. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Shak. As You Like It, i. 3. 114. — F. ombre, used shortly for terre d'ombre, 'beyond-sea azur, an earth found in silver mines, and used by painters for shadowings;' Cot. [As 'beyond-sea azur' is properly ultramarine, it must here be differently applied.] — Ital. ombra, used shortly for terra d'ombra, umber. Torriano has 'terra d'ombra, a kind of earth found in silver-mines used by painters for shadowings.' Lit. 'earth of shadow,' i. e. earth used for shadowing; cf. Ital. ombreggiare, to shadow. The Ital. ombra is from L. umbra, shadow; see Umbrage. ¶ See Wedgwood (p. 746), who notes that 'the fable of the pigment taking its name from Umbria [which is only a guess by Malone] is completely disproved by the Span. name sombra (shade); sombra di Venecia, Venetian umber; sombra de hueso, bone-umber.' Some paintings of the Venetian school in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, are remarkable for their umbered or sombre appearance. Cf. also F. ombré, 'umbered or shadowed,' Cot.; and see Sombre.

UMBILICAL, pertaining to the navel. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. —MF. umbilical, 'umbilicall, belonging to the navell'; Cot. —MF. umbilic, 'the navell or middle of'; id. —L. umbilicum, acc. of umbilicus, the navel, middle, centre. Allied to Gk. ὀμφαλός, the navel; umbilicus being really an adjectival form, from a sb. **umbilus* = ὀμφαλός. Cf. L. umbo, a boss. Allied to Skt. nābhi-, navel; and E. Navel, q.v. All from a common root **enebh* (Uhlenbeck).

UMBLE-PIE, pie containing the umbles or numbles (entrails) of deer. (F.—L.) 'The umblis of venyson'; Skelton, Garland of Laurell, 1240. See further under NUMBLES. And see UMBLES in Nares.

UMBRAGE, a shade or screen of trees, suspicion of injury, offence. (F.—L.) The proper sense is 'shadow,' as in Hamlet, v. 2. 125; thence it came to mean a shadow of suspicion cast upon a person, suspicion of injury, &c. 'It is also evident that St. Peter did not carry himself so as to give the least overture or umbrage to make any one suspect he had any such preëminence'; Bp. Taylor, A Dissuasive from Popery, p. i. § 8 (R.); and see Trench, Select Glossary. —F. ombrage (also umbrage), 'an umbrage, shade, shadow; also jealousy, suspicion, an inclining of; whence donner ombrage à, to discontent, make jealous of'; Cot. —F. ombre, a shadow; with suffix -age (<L. -aticum); cf. L. umbrāticus, belonging to shade. —L. umbra, a shadow. Der. umbrage-ous, shadowy, from F. ombrageux, 'shady, . . . umbragious'; Cot.; umbrageous-ly, -ness. And see umb-el, umber, umbr-ella, sombre.

UMBRELLA, a screen carried in the hand to protect from sunshine or rain. (Ital.—L.) Now used to protect from rain, in contradistinction to a parasol; but formerly used to protect from sunshine, and rather an old word. Cotgrave translates F. ombraire by 'an umbrello, or shadow,' and F. ombrelle by 'an umbrello.' 'Now you have got a shadow, an umbrella, To keep the scorching world's opinion From your fair credit'; Beaum. and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 1. 2. —Ital. umbrella (see below); better spelt ombrella, 'a fan, a canopy, . . . also a kind of round fan or shadowing that they vse to ride with in sommer in Italy, a little shade'; Florio. Dimin. of Ital. ombra, a shade. —L. umbra, a shade; see UMBRAGE. ¶ The true classical L. form is umbella; umbrella is an Ital. diminutive, regularly formed from ombra; the spelling with u is found even in Italian. Florio has umbella, umbrella, 'a little shadow, a little round thing that women bare in their hands to shadow them; also, a broad brimmed hat to keepe off heate and rayne; also, a kind of round thing like a round skreene that gentlemen vse in Italie in time of sommer.' This account of the word, in the edition of Florio of 1598, clearly implies that the word umbrella was not, in that year, much used in English; for he does not employ the word. Doublet, umbel.

UMPIRE, a third person called in to decide a dispute between two others. (F.—L.) This curious word has lost initial n, and stands for numpire, once a common form. See remarks under the letter N. Spelt umpire in L. L. L. i. 1. 170. ME. nompere or noumpere. 'N(o)mpere, or oumpere, Arbitrer'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt noumpere, noumpere, noumpier, P. Plowman, B. v. 337; nompere, id. C. vii. 388; noumpere, id. A. v. 181. In Wyclif, Prologue to Romans, ed. Forshall and Madden, p. 302, l. 24, we have noumpere, where six MSS. read umpere. It also occurs, spelt nompere, in the Testament of Love, bk. i. ch. 2. l. 96. Tyrwhitt shows (in his Glossary to Chaucer) that the L. impar was sometimes used in the sense of arbitrator, and rightly suggests a connexion with mod. F. nonpair, odd. β. The ME. nompere exactly represents the OF. form nonper, peerless (Godefroy). Later, it occurs in Cotgrave as nonpair, 'peerless, also odde'; and an earlier spelling nonper is given by Roquefort, with the sense of peerless. It is simply a compound of F. non, not, and OF. per, a peer, an equal; from L. non, not, and par, equal; see Non- and Peer (1). γ. The OF. nonper became nompere regularly, since n before p becomes m, as in hamper < hanaper; see Hamper (2). It may also be noted that it is not the only ME. word in which the same F. prefix occurs, since we also have ME. nonpower, i.e. lack of power, in P. Plowman, C. xx. 292, spelt nounpower, noumpower, and even unpower. The last form suggests that the loss of initial n was due to some confusion between the F. non and E. un-, with much the same negative sense. Hence a numpire or an umpire was a non-peer or an un-peer, orig. the former. δ. The sense is curious; but the use of L. impar, lit. odd, in the sense of arbitrator or umpire sufficiently explains it; the umpire is the odd man, the third man, called in to settle a dispute between two others. It may also be noted that pair and peer are doublets.

UN- (1), negative prefix. (E.) Prefixed to substantives, adjectives, and adverbs; distinct from the verbal prefix un- below. ME. un-, AS. un-; very common as a neg. prefix. +Du. on-; Icel. ú- or ö- (for un-); Dan. u-; Swed. o-; Goth. un-; G. un-. +W. an-; Irish an-, in-; L. in-; Gk. ἀν-, ἀ-; Zend. an-, a-; Skt. an-, a-.

β. All from Idg. **an*, negative prefix; cf. Brugmann, i. § 432. Allied to Skt. na, not; Goth. ni, not, Lith. nė; also to L. nē, not, Gk. νη-, neg. prefix.

B. It is unnecessary to give all the words in which this prefix occurs; it is used before words of various origin, both English and French. The following may be noted in particular. 1. It occurs in words purely English, and appears in many of these in Anglo-Saxon; Grein gives AS. words, for example, answering to un-clean, un-even, un-fair, un-whole, un-smooth, un-soft, un-still, un-wise. Some compounds are now disused, or nearly so; such as un-bold, un-blithe, un-little, un-right, un-sad, un-slow (all in Grein). In the case of past participles, the prefix is ambiguous; thus un-bound may either mean 'not bound,' like AS. unbunden; or it may mean 'opened' or 'released,' being taken as the pp. of unbind, verb. 2. Un- is frequently prefixed to words of F. origin; examples such as un-feyned (unfeigned) and un-stable occur in Chaucer; we even find un-famous in House of Fame, iii. 56, where we should now say not famous. Palsgrave has un-able, un-certaine, un-cortoyse (uncourteous), un-gentyll, un-gracious, un-honest, un-maryed, un-parfyte (imperfect), un-profytable, un-raysonable (unreasonable). 3. In some cases, such as un-couth, the simple word (without the prefix) is obsolete; such cases are discussed below.

UN- (2), verbal prefix, expressing the reversal of an action. (E.) In the verb to un-lock, we have an example of this; it expresses the reversal of the action expressed by lock; i.e. it means to open again that which was closed by locking. This is quite distinct from the mere negative prefix, with which many, no doubt, confound it. ME. un-, AS. un-; only used as a prefix in verbs. +Du. ont-; as in ont-laden, to unload, from laden, to load; G. ent-, as in ent-laden, to unload; OHG. ant-, as in ant-lūhan, to unlock; Goth. and-, as in and-bindan, to unbind. β. It is precisely the same prefix as that which appears as an- in E. an-swer, and as and- in AS. and-svarian; and it is cognate with Gk. ἀντι-, used only in the not very different sense of 'in opposition to'; thus, whilst E. un-say is to reverse what is said, to deny it, the Gk. ἀντι-λέγειν is to with-say or gain-say, to deny what is said by others. See Answer and Anti-. B. It is unnecessary to give all the words with this prefix; I may note that Grein gives the AS. verb corresponding to E. un-do, viz. undōn, with which cf. EFries. und-dōn, un-dōn, Du. ontdoen; also un-tynan, to unfasten, open, now obsolete; Bosworth gives unbindan, to unbind, unfealdan, to unfold, unlūcan, to unlock, and a few others, but verbs with this prefix are not very numerous in AS. γ. However, it was so freely employed before verbs of French origin, that we have now many such words in use; Palsgrave has un-arm, un-bend, un-bind, un-boukell (unbuckle), un-bridle, un-clasp, &c., with others that are obsolete, such as un-custume, to disuse a custom. δ. The most common and remarkable of the mod. E. verbs with this prefix are: un-bar, -bend, -bind, -bolt, -bosom, -brace, -buckle, -burden, -button, -case, -chain, -clasp, -close, -clothe, -coil, -couple, -cover, -curl, -deceive, -do, -dress, -earth, -fasten, -fetter, -fix, -fold, -furl, -gird, -hand, -harness, -hinge, -hook, -horse, -house, -kennel, -knit, -knot, -lace, -lade, -learn, -limber, -load, -lock, -loose, -make, -man, -mask, -moor, -muffle, -muzzle, -nerve, -pack, -people, -ravel, -rig, -robe, -roll, -roof, -root, -saddle, -say, -screw, -seal, -seat, -settle, -sex, -shackle, -ship, -stop, -string, -thread, -tie, -tune, -twine, -twist, -warp, -weave, -wind, -wrap, -yoke. See further under the simple words. ¶ Note the ambiguity in the case of past participles; for which see under Un- (1).

UN- (3), prefix. (E.) See Unto, Until.

UNANELED, without having received extreme unction. (E.; and L.—Gk.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 77. Lit. 'not on-oiled.' —AS. un-, not; and ME. an-eled, pp. of anelien, anelen, to give extreme unction to; Rob. of Brunne, Handling Synne, 11269 (1303). The verb is from ME. an (AS. on), on, upon; and elien, to oil, regularly formed from AS. ele, sb., oil. The AS. ele is not a Teut. word, but borrowed from L. oleum, oil, Gk. ἐλαιον. See Un- (1), On, and Oil. Cf. also anoil, v., which see in N. E. D. 'I aneele, . . . I anoynt . . . with holy oyle'; Palsgrave.

UNANIMOUS, of one mind. (L.) 'The universall and unanimous belief'; Camden, Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588 (R.). Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.), from L. ūnanimus, of one mind. —L. ūn-us, one; and animus, mind; see Unit and Animosity. Der. unanimous-ly; also unanim-i-ty, spelt unanimitee in The Libell of Englishe Policye (A.D. 1436), l. 1068 (quoted in Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 206), from F. unanimité, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century (Littré), from L. acc. ūnanimi-tatem, due to the adj. ūnanimis, by-form of ūnanimus.

UNCIAL, pertaining to a certain style of writing. (L.) 'Uncial, belonging to an ounce or inch'; Blount, ed. 1674. Applied to a particular form of letters in MSS. from the 4th to the 9th centuries. The letters are of large size, and the word signifies 'of the size of an inch.' Phillips gives uncial only in its other sense, viz. 'belonging to an ounce.' Cotgrave gives F. oncial, 'weighing as much as an ounce;' but he also gives lettres onciales, 'huge letters, great letters.' — L. uncialis, belonging to an inch, or to an ounce. — L. uncia, an inch, an ounce. See Inch and Ounce (1). ¶ 'The term uncial was orig. a misapplication of St. Jerome's expression litterae unciales, "inch-high," i. e. large, handsome letters;' Cent. Dict. See Jerome's Prologue to the book of Job (near the end).

UNCLE, the brother of one's father or mother. (F. — L.) ME. uncle, uncle; Rob. of Glouc. p. 58, l. 1337. — AF. uncle, Gaimar, 188; F. oncle, 'an uncle;' Cot. — L. auunculum, acc. of auunculus, a mother's brother; auunculum was shortened to unculum, whence F. oncle. The lit. sense is 'little grandfather;' it is a double dimin. (with suffixes -cu-lu-) from avus, a grandfather. Allied to Goth. awō, a grandmother, Lith. avynas, an uncle, W. ewythr, an uncle. Brugmann, i. § 330. ¶ The G. onkel is also from Latin. The E. nuncle, K. Lear, i. 4. 117, is due to the phrase my nuncle, corrupted from mine uncle.

UNCOMEATABLE, unapproachable. (E.; with F. suffix.) In the Tatler, no. 12. A strange compound, with prefix un- (1) and suffix -able, from Come and At.

UNCOUTH, unfamiliar, odd, awkward, strange. (E.) The lit. sense is simply 'unknown;' hence strange, &c. ME. uncouth, strange, Chaucer, C. T. 10598 (F. 284). A common word; see Stratmann. AS. uncūð, unknown, strange (common); Grein, ii. 616. — AS. un-, not; and cūð, known, pp. of cunnan, to know, but used as an adj.; Grein, i. 172. See further under Can (1); and see Un- (1). ¶ The Lowland Sc. unco 'is the same word; and, again, the prov. E. unked or unkid (spelt unkard in Halliwell), strange, unusual, odd, also lonely, solitary, corresponds to ME. unkid, 'not made known,' where kid (= AS. cýðed) is the pp. of the causal verb cýðan, to make known, a derivative from cūð by vowel-change from ū to y; Grein, i. 181.

UNCTION, an anointing, a salve; also, warmth of address, sanctifying grace. (F. — L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 4. 145, iv. 7. 142. 'His inward unction wyl work with our diligence;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 763 a. ME. uncioun; spelt uncicioun, Trevisa, i. 113. — F. onction, 'unction, an anointing;' Cot. — L. unctionem, acc. of unctio, an anointing; cf. unctus, pp. of ungere, to anoint; see Unguent. Der. unctu-ous, Holinshed, Desc. of Britain, c. 24 (R.), Trevisa, i. 113, also spelt unctious, Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 195 (first folio), and even uncteous, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 12, p. 510, from F. onctueux, 'oily, fatty,' Cot., from Late L. unctuosus (Ducange); due to L. unctu-, decl. stem of unctus (gen. unctus), an anointing. Hence unctu-os-i-ty, from F. onctuosité, 'unctuositie;' Cot.

UNDER, beneath, below. (E.) ME. under, under, Chaucer, C. T. 1697. AS. under; Grein, ii. 617. + Du. onder; Icel. undir; Swed. and Dan. under; Goth. undar; G. unter; OHG. untar. β. Further allied to Skt. adharas, lower; and to adhās, prep. under, adv. below; L. infrā, beneath. Brugmann, i. § 446; ii. § 75. ¶ For the phrase under way, see Way.

UNDER-, prefix, beneath. (E.) The same word as the above. Very common; the chief words with this prefix are under-bred, -current, -done, -gird (Acts, xxvii. 17), under-go (AS. undergān, Bosworth), under-graduate, i. e. a student who is under a graduate, one who has not taken his degree, under-ground, -growth, under-hand, adv., secretly, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 34, also as adj., As You Like It, i. 1. 146, under-lay (AS. underleggan, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 190, l. 5), under-lie (AS. underlicgan, Bosworth), under-line. Also under-ling, Gower, C. A. iii. 80 (bk. vi. 2350), Layamon, 19116, with double dimin. suffix -ling. Also under-mine, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 20, early version; under-m-ost, with double superl. suffix, as explained under Aftermost; under-neath, ME. vnderneþ, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 5, l. 15, compounded like Beneath, q. v. Also under-plot, sb., -prop, vb., -rate, -sell; -set, Ancren Riwele, p. 254, l. 5; under-sign; under-stand, q. v.; under-state; under-take, q. v.; under-tone, -value, -wood (Ben Jonson), -write, -writer.

UNDERN, a certain period of the day. (E.) The time denoted by undern differed at different periods. In Chaucer, C. T. 15228 (B 4412), it denotes some hour of the fore-noon, perhaps about 11 o'clock. 'At undren and at midday,' O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 33; with reference to the parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard. 'Abuten undern deies' = about the undern-tide of the day, Ancren Riwele, p. 24; where perhaps an earlier hour is meant, about 9 A.M. AS. undern; whence undern-tid, undern-tide, Matt. xx. 3; here it means the third hour, i. e. 9 A.M. + Icel. undorn, mid-afternoon; also mid-forenoon; MHG. undern, OHG. untorn, a time of the day; Goth. undaurni-; only in the compound undaurni-mats, a morning-meal, Luke, xiv. 12. β. The true sense is merely 'intervening period,' which accounts for its vagueness; this sense does not appear in under, prep., but suggests a connexion with L. inter, between,

Skt. antar, within. Cf. L. internus, inward. ¶ The word is by no means obsolete, but appears in various forms in prov. E., such as aandorn, aunder, orndorns, doundrins, dondinner, all in Ray, aunder, in Halliwell, &c. (Here Nares is wrong.)

UNDERSTAND, to comprehend. (E.) ME. understanden, understanden, a strong verb; the pp. appears as understanden, Pricke of Conscience, l. 1681. The weak pp. understanded occurs in the Prayer-book. AS. understandan, lit. to stand under or among, hence to comprehend (cf. L. intel-ligere); Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, c. xxxiv. § 8. — AS. under, under; and standan, to stand; see Under and Stand. So also MSwed. understå, from under and stå, to stand; see Ihre. Another AS. word, with the same prefix and the same sense, is undergitan (lit. to underget), John, viii. 27, xii. 16. Der. understand-ing, spelt onderstandinge, Ayenbite of Inwyrt, p. 24, l. 8.

UNDERTAKE, to take upon oneself, attempt. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) ME. undertaken, strong verb; pt. t. undertok, see Have-lok, 377. It first appears in the Ormulum, l. 10314. The latter part of the word is of Scand. origin; see Under and Take. β. The word is a sort of translation of (and was suggested by) the AS. underniman, to understand, receive, Matt. xix. 12, and AS. underfōn, to receive, Matt. x. 40, John, xviii. 3. Neither of these words have precisely the same sense, but both niman and fōn have the sense of E. take (Icel. taka). Der. undertak-ing, Haml. ii. 1. 104; undertak-er, orig. one who takes a business in hand, Oth. iv. 1. 224, Tw. Nt. iii. 4. 349.

UNDULATE, to wave, move in waves. (L.) In Thomson, Summer, 982. Phillips, ed. 1706, has undulate only as a pp. Blount, ed. 1674, gives undulated and undulation. — L. undulatus, undulated, wavy. — *L. *undula*, a little wave; not used, but a regular dimin. of unda, a wave, properly 'water.' β. Unda is a nasalised form, like OPruss. unds, water, allied to Gk. ὕδωρ, water, and to E. water. Cf. Skt. udan, water, und, to wet; Lithuan. wandū, water; Russ. voda, water. — ✓ WED, to wet; see Water. Brugmann, i. § 512, 594. Der. undulat-ion (Phillips); undulat-or-y. Also (from unda) ab-ound, ab-und-ant, in-und-ate, red-ound, red-und-ant, super-ab-ound, surr-ound.

UNEATH, scarcely, with difficulty. (E.) Obsolete; in Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 38; misused, with the sense 'almost,' id. i. 12. 4. ME. unēþe, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 134. AS. unēaðe, with difficulty, Gen. xxvii. 30; adv. from adj. unēaðe, difficult, Grein, ii. 620. — AS. un-, not; and ēaðe, easy, smooth, common also in the adv. form ēaðe, easily, Grein, i. 254; we also find ēðe, yðe, easy, id. i. 230, ii. 767. + OSax. ōði, easy. Some further compare it with the OHG. ōdi, desert, empty, G. öde, deserted, desolate; Icel. auðr, empty; Goth. auþs, auþis, desert, waste. But it is probable that these words, though similar in form, are of independent origin.

UNGAINLY, awkward. (Hybrid; E. and Scand.) ME. ungeinliche, used as an adv., awkwardly, horribly, St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 9, l. 14. Formed by adding -liche (-ly) to the adj. ungein, inconvenient, spelt ungayne in Le Bone Florence, l. 1421, in Ritson, Met. Romances, iii. 60. — AS. un-, not, see Un- (1); and Icel. gegn, ready, serviceable, convenient, allied to gegna, to meet, to suit, gegen, against, and E. again; see Again. Cf. Icel. geigniligr, meet; ögegn (ungain), ungainly, ungentle. Der. ungainli-ness. ¶ We also find AS. gægne in a gloss: 'Compendiose, breuiter, gægne;' Voc. 207. 17. Perhaps the word is of native origin.

UNGUENT, ointment. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. — L. unguentum, ointment. — L. unguent-, stem of pres. part. of ungere, ungere, to anoint. + Skt. añj, to anoint, smear. Brugmann, i. § 398. Der. (from ungere, pp. unctus) unct-ion, q. v.; also oint-ment, an-oint.

UNICORN, a fabulous animal with one horn. (F. — L.) ME. unicorne, Ancren Riwele, p. 120, l. 9. — AF. unicorne, Psalm xxi. 22; F. unicorne, 'an unicorn;' Cot. — L. unicornem, acc. of unicornis, adj., one-horned. — L. ūni-, for ūno, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and corn-u, a horn, cognate with E. horn. See Unity and Horn.

UNIFORM, consistent, having throughout the same form or character. (F. — L.) Spelt uniforme in Minsheu, ed. 1627; uniform in Cotgrave. — F. uniforme, 'uniform;' Cot. — L. uniformem, acc. of uniformis, having one form. — L. ūni-, for ūno, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and form-a, a form; see Unity and Form. Der. uniform, sb., a like dress for persons who belong to the same body; uniformly; uniform-i-ty, from F. uniformité, 'uniformity,' Cot., from L. acc. uniformitatem.

UNILITERAL, consisting of one letter. (L.) The only such words in E. are a, I, and O. Coined from L. ūni-, for ūno, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and litter-a, a letter; with suffix -al; cf. bi-literal, tri-literal.

UNION (1), concord, harmony, confederation in one. (F. — L.) Spelt unyon, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 233 (R.). — F. union, 'an union; Cot. -L. ūniōnem, acc. of ūnio, oneness. -L. ūn-us, one, cognate with E. One, q. v. And see Unity.

UNION (2), a large pearl. (F.-L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 283. -AF. union; Bestiary, 1482. Really the same word as the above; the L. ūnio means (1) oneness, (2) a single pearl of a large size. Union is also the same word. See above; and see Onion. Doublet, onion.

UNIQUE, single, without a like. (F.-L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. -F. unique, 'single,' Cot. -L. unicum, acc. of unicus, single. -L. ūni-, for ūno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; with suffix -cus (Idg. -ko-). See Unity.

UNISON, concord, harmony. (F.-L.) 'In concordēs, discordes, notes and clifēs in tunes of unisonne;' Gascoigne, Grene Knight's Farewell to Fansie, st. 7; Works, i. 413. Spelt unysounne, York Plays, p. 209, l. 262. -MF. unisson, 'an union;' Cot. [The spelling with ss is remarkable, as it is not etymological.] -L. unisonum, acc. of unisonus, having the same sound as something else. -L. ūni-, for ūno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and sonus, a sound. See Unity and Sound (3). Der. unison-ous; uni-son-ant (from sonant-, stem of pres. part. of sonāre, to sound); uni-son-ance.

UNIT, a single thing, person, or number. (F.-L.) Not derived from L. unitum, which would mean 'united,' but a purely E. formation, made by dropping the final letter of unit-y. 'Unit, Unite, or Unity, in arithmetic, the first significant figure or number 1; in Notation, if a number consist of 4 or 5 places, that which is outermost towards the right hand is called the Place of Unites;' Phillips, ed. 1706. The number 1 is still called unity. See Unity.

UNITE, to make one, join. (L.) 'I unyte, I bringe diverse thynges togyther in one;' Palsgrave. -L. ūnit-us, pp. of ūnīre, to unite. -L. ūn-us, one; see Unity.

UNITY, oneness, union in one, concord. (F.-L.) ME. vnitee, vnite, vnite, Gower, C. A. iii. 181 (bk. vii. 2836); P. Plowman, C. vi. 10. -AF. unitē, Stat. Realm, i. 186 (1322); F. unitē, 'an unity;' Cot. -L. unitātem, acc. of unitās, oneness. -L. ūni-, for ūno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; with suffix -tās. The L. ūnus is cognate with E. One, q. v. Der. unit-ari-an, a coined word, added by Todd to Johnson; hence unit-ari-an-ism. Doublet, unit, q. v. We also have (from L. ūn-us) un-ite, un-ion, uni-que, uni-son, uni-vers-al, uni-corn, uni-form, uni-literal, uni-vocal; also un-animous, dis-un-ite, dis-un-ion, re-un-ite, re-un-ion, tri-une, onion. Also null, q. v.; an-nul, q. v.

UNIVERSAL, comprehending the whole, extending to the whole. (F.-L.) ME. vniversal; spelt univērsal, Gower, C. A. iii. 91; (bk. vii. 215). -F. universel (sometimes universal in the 14th century), 'vniversall,' Cot. -L. ūniuersālis, belonging to the whole. -L. ūniuersum, the whole; neut. of ūniuersus, turned into one, combined into a whole. -L. ūni-, for ūno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and uersus, pp. of uertere, to turn; see Unity and Verse. Der. universal-ly, universal-i-ty, universal-ism. Also (from F. univers < L. ūniuersum) universe, Henry V, iv. chor. 3; also univers-i-ty, a school for universal knowledge, ME. vniversite, used in the sense of 'world' in Wyclif, James, iii. 6, AF. universitē, Yearbooks of Edw. I, 1304-5, p. 429, from F. université, 'university, also an university,' Cot., from L. acc. ūniuersitātem.

UNIVOCAL, having one voice, having but one meaning. (L.) Now little used; it is the antithesis of equi-vocal, i. e. having a variable meaning. In Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). Cf. F. univoque, 'of one onely sence;' Cot. -L. ūniuoc-us, univocal; with suffix -alis. -L. ūni-, for ūno-, decl. stem of ūnus, one; and uoc-, allied to uox, voice, sound. See Unity and Voice.

UNKEMPT, not combed. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10, 29; and Shep. Kal. November, 51; in both places in the metaphorical sense of rough or rude. A contracted form of unkembed. From un-, not; and ME. kembed, kempt, combed, Chaucer, C. T. 2145 (A 2143). Kembed is the pp. of kemben, to comb, P. Plowman, B. x. 18. -AS. cemban, to comb; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 168, l. 6; formed (by vowel-change of a to e) from AS. camb, a comb; see Comb.

UNLESS, if not, except. (E.) Formerly written onless, onlesse, with o; Horne Tooke remarks: 'I believe that William Tyndall . . . was one of the first who wrote this word with a u;' and he cites: 'The scripture was geven, that we may applye the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, unlessse then we entend to be idle disputers;' Tyndal, Prol. to the 5 books of Moses. Horne Tooke gives 16 quotations with the spellings onles and onlesse; the earliest appears to be: 'It was not possible for them to make whole Cristes cote without seme, onlesse certeyn grete men were brought out of the way;' Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, an. 1413. We may also note: 'That, lesse than synne the soner swage, God wyl be vengyd,' &c.; Coventry Myst. p. 40. Also: 'Charitie is not perfect onles that it be burninge,' T. Lupset, Treatise of Charitie, p. 8. 'Onles that ye tary ouer longe;' Malory, Morte Arthur, bk. x. c. 20. [But Horne Tooke's own explanation of the phrase is utterly wrong.] Palsgrave, in his list of conjunctions, gives onlesse and onlesse that. β. Thus the full phrase was on lesse that; but that was soon dropped. Here on is the preposition; and lesse is mod. E. less; see On and Less. The sense is 'in less than,' or 'on a less supposition.' Thus, if charity be (fully) burning, it is perfect; in a less case, it is imperfect. The use of on in the sense of in is extremely common in ME., as in on liue = in life (see Alive), on sleep = in sleep (see Asleep); and see numerous examples in Stratmann. On less or in less is similar to at least, at most. ¶ Mätzner, and Mahn (in Webster, 1864) wrongly explain un- in unless as a negative prefix; this is contrary to all the evidence, and makes nonsense of the phrase. Morris (Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 332) rightly gives on lesse as the orig. form, but does not explain it.

UNRULY, disregarding restraint. (Hybrid; E. and F.-L.; with E. suffix.) In James, iii. 8 (A.V.), where Wyclif has unpesible; here the E. version translates the Gk. ἀκατάσχετον, i. e. that cannot be ruled. Thus unruly is for unrule-ly; it does not seem to be a very old word, though going back to 1483; the Cathol. Anglicum has: 'Reuly, tranquillus;' and 'unreuly, inquietus;' also 'reule, regula; reule, regulare.' Cf. 'Ye . . . unrulilye haue ruled;' Sir J. Cheke, Hurt of Sedition (R.). Cotgrave translates F. modéré by 'moderate, quiet, ruly, temperate, orderly.' From Un- and Rule; with suffix -ly. ¶ It is remarkable that the ME. unro, unrest, might have produced a somewhat similar adj., viz. unroly, unrouly, restless. [But Stratmann gives no example of the word, and the vowel-sound does not accord; so that any idea of such a connexion may be rejected. This ME. unro is from AS. un-, not, and rōw, rest (Grein, ii. 384), cognate with Icel. rō, G. ruhe, rest.] We must also note that unruled occurs as equivalent to unruly, as in 'theyse unrulyd company,' Fabyan, Chron. an. 1380-1. Der. unruli-ly, -ness.

UNTIL, till, to. (E. and Scand.) ME. until, P. Plowman, B. prol. 227; Pricke of Conscience, 555; spelt ontil, Havelok, 761. A substituted form of unto, due to the use of the Northern E. til for to; the two latter words being equivalent in sense. ME. til (E. till) is of Scand. origin, as distinguished from to (= AS. tō). See Till (2), and see further under Unto.

UNTO, even to, to. (E.) Not found in AS. ME. unto, Chaucer, C. T. 490 (A 488); earlier in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 1, l. 7. It stands for **und-to*; where to is the usual E. prep. (AS. tō), and und is the OFries. and (also ont), unto, OSax. und, unto (whence OSax. unt, shortened from und-te, unto, where te = AS. tō, as well as untō, unto, shortened from und-tō). 'Fōrun folk untō = folk went unto him; Heliand, 2814. So also Goth. und, unto, until, as far as, up to; 'und Bethlahaim' = unto Bethlehem, Luke, ii. 15; whence untē (= und tē), until. [It is remarkable that a closely related word is common in AS. in a different form, viz. ōð, for an older **anth*.] β. The Goth. und is the weak-grade form answering to the Goth. and-, prefix, cognate with Gk. ἀντ, so that the un- in un-to is allied to the verbal prefix un-; see Un- (2). And see Until.

UP, towards a higher place, aloft. (E.) ME. vp, up; common. AS. up, upp, up, adv.; Grein, ii. 630. + Du. op; Icel. upp; Dan. op; Swed. upp; Goth. iup; OHG. uf. β. AS. upp < the Teut. type **upp-*, from Idg. **up-n-*; and thus allied to Teut. **uf*, as seen in Goth. uf, under, uf-ar, over (comparative form), and in E. over; further allied to Gk. ὑπό, under, Skt. upa, near, on, under. See the account under Over. Der. upp-er, ME. upper, King Alisaunder, 5691; Chaucer uses over in the same sense, as in ouer lippe = upper lip, C. T. 133. Hence upper-most (not an old form), as in 'euen vpon the uppermost pinnacle of the temple,' Udall, On St. Luke, iv. 9; this is not a correct form, but made on the model of Aftermost, q. v. Also up-most, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 24, which appears to be simply a contraction for uppermost, though really a better form. And see Up- below, and Upon; also Open.

UP-, prefix. (E.) The same word as the above. The chief words in which it occurs are: up-bear, up-bind, up-braid, q. v.; up-heave, Shak. Venus, 482; up-hill; up-hoard, Hamlet, i. 1. 136; up-hold, up-holsterer, q. v.; up-land, up-land-ish = ME. uplondysche in Prompt. Parv.; up-lift, Temp. iii. 3. 68; up-right, AS. upriht, uppriht, Grein, ii. 632; up-ris-ing, L. L. L. iv. 1. 2, with which cf. ME. uprissyng, resurrection, Rob. of Glouc. p. 379, l. 7792; up-roar, q. v.; up-root, Dryden, St. Cecilia's Day, 49; up-set = set up, Gower, C. A. i. 53 (bk. i. 339), also to overset, id. iii. 283 (bk. viii. 244); up-shot, Hamlet, v. 2. 395; up-side; up-side-down, q. v.; up-start, q. v.; up-ward, AS. upweard, Grein, ii. 632; up-ward-s, AS. upweardes, adv., ibid.

UPAS, the poison-tree of Java. (Malay.) Not in Todd's Johnson; the deadly effects of the tree have been grossly exaggerated. - Malay ūpas, 'a milky juice extracted from certain vegetables, operating, when mixed with the blood, as a most deadly poison, concerning the effects of which many exaggerated stories have been related; see Hist. of Sumatra, ed. 3, p. 110. Pūhn ūpas, the poison-tree, arbor toxicaria Macassariensis; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 24. The Malay pūhun or pūhn means 'tree'; id. p. 239. Now commonly pronounced pōhun ipōh, 'upas tree.'

UPBRAID, to reproach. (E.) ME. upbreiden, to upbraid; we also find upbreid, sb., a reproach. 'The deuyls ranne to me with grete scornes and upbraydis;' and again, 'wykyd angelles of the deuylle upbreidyn me;' Monk of Evesham, c. 27; ed. Arber, p. 67. Up-breiding, sb., a reproach, occurs in Layamon, 19117; also upbreid, upbræid, sb., id. 26036. AS. up-bregdan; found in the equivalent form up-gebrædan, to upbraid, in Wulfstan's Homilies, ed. Napier, p. 249. — AS. upp, up; and bregdan, brædan, to braid, weave, also to lay hold of, pull, draw, used (like Icel. bregða) in a variety of senses; so that up-braid is simply compounded of Up and Braid (1), q. v. The orig. sense of upbraid was prob. to lay hands on, lay hold of, hence to attack, lay to one's charge. Cf. 'Bregdeð sōna fēond be ðām feaxe' = he shall soon seize the fiend by the hair, Salomon and Saturn, ed. Grein, 99; and see bregdan in Grein, i. 138. Cf. Dan. bebreide, to upbraid, which only differs in the prefix (Dan. be = E. be-). Der. upbraid-ing, sb., as above.

UPHOLSTERER, one who supplies beds and furniture. (E.) Formerly called an upholder. An equivalent form was upholdster, used by Caxton (see Prompt. Parv., p. 512, note 2), with suffix -ster for -er; see -ster. Hence, by a needless addition of -er (as in poult-er-er), was made upholdster-er, whence the corrupt form upholsterer, by loss of d after l. 'Upholster or upholsterer, a tradesman that deals in all sorts of chamber-furniture;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Already spelt upholstar in Palsgrave. ME. upholder, a broker, a tradesman, P. Plowman, B. v. 325; C. xiii. 218. At the latter reference we read: 'Vpholderes on the hul shullen haue hit to selle' = upholders on the hill [Cornhill] shall have it to sell. It is clear from this and from my note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 377, that the upholder was a broker or auctioneer; so that the name may have arisen from his holding up wares for inspection while trying to sell them. The derivation is from Up and Hold. Cf. 'Vpholdere, þat sellythe smal thyngys;' Prompt. Parv. Der. upholster-y, a coined word, from the form upholster.

UPON, on, on the top of. (E.) ME. upon, uþon, prep., Chaucer, C. T. III. AS. uppon, upon, Gen. xxii. 2; also uppan, Matt. xxi. 44. — AS. upp, up, above, adv.; and on, an, on. See Up and On. + Icel. up ā, upp ā, upon; where upp = AS. upp, and ā (for an) = AS. on; Swed. på, upon, clearly a shortened form of upp ā, where ā = E. on; Dan. paa, upon.

UPROAR, a tumult, clamour, disturbance. (Du.) In Acts, xvii. 5, xix. 40, xx. 1, xxi. 31, 38; in Shak. Lucrece, 427, we have: 'his eye . . . Unto a greater uproar tempts his veins;' where there is no notion of noise, but only of excitement or disturbance. 'To haue all the worlde in an uprore, and unquieted with warres;' Udall, on St. Mark, preface, fol. vi. 1. 9. Spelt uprore in Levins. It is a corrupt form, due to confusion with E. roar, with which it has no real connexion; it is not an E. word at all, but borrowed from Dutch. — Du. oproer, 'uprore, tumult, commotion, mutiny, or sedition; oproer maken, to make an uprore; oproerigh, seditious, or tumultuous;' Hexham. — Du. op, up; and roeren, to stir, move, touch; so that uproer = a stirring up, commotion, excitement. [Formerly also spelt rueren (Hexham); the Du. oe is pronounced as E. oo; Du. boer = E. boor.] + Swed. uppror, revolt, sedition; allied to upp, up, and röra, to stir; Dan. oprör, revolt; opröre, to stir up, from op, up, and röre, to stir; G. aufuhr, tumult; auführren, to stir up, from G. auf, up, and rühren, to stir. β. The verb appears as Du. roeren, Swed. röra, Dan. röre, Icel. hræra, G. rühren, AS. hræran, OSax. hrōrian, to stir; and is the same word as rear- or rere- in E. rearmouse, reremouse, a bat; see Reremouse. γ. The AS. hræran, to stir, agitate, is from hrōr, motion, allied to hrōr, adj., active (with the usual change from ō to æ); the Swed. uppror preserves the orig. unmodified ō. Perhaps allied to Skt. grā, to boil. See Crater. Der. uproar-i-ous, an ill-coined word; uproar-i-ous-ly, -ness.

UPSIDE-DOWN, topsyturvy. (E.) 'Turn'd upside-down to me;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, v. 1 (Gregory). 'I tome upsyde downe;' Palsgrave, p. 760. From up, side, and down. But it is remarkable that this expression took the place of ME. up so down, once a common phrase, as in Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 12, Luke xv. 8; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5. l. 91, b. v. pr. 3. l. 60; this is composed of up, so, and down, where so has (as often) the force of as, or as it were, i. e. up as it were down.

UPSTART, one who has suddenly started up from low life to wealth or honour. (E.) In Shak. 1 Hen. VI, v. 7. 87. A sb. coined from the verb upstart, to start up; the pt. t. upstart is in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 16. From Up and Start; see note to Start, § γ.

UPWARD, UPWARDS; see Up and -ward, suffix.

URBANE, pertaining to a city, refined, courteous. (L.) Spelt urbane in Levins, ed. 1570. — L. urbānus, belonging to a city. — L.

urb-s, a city. Der. urban, belonging to a city (which is only another spelling of the same word); sub-urban, q. v. And see below.

URBANITY, courteousness. (F.—L.) Spelt urbanitie in Levins, ed. 1570. — F. urbanité, 'urbanity, civility;' Cot. — L. urbānitas, acc. of urbānitas, city-manners, refinement. — L. urbāni, from urbānus, urbane; with suffix -itas; see Urbane.

URCHIN, a hedgehog; a goblin, imp, a small child. (North F.—L.) In Shak. it means (1) a hedgehog, Temp. i. 2. 326, Titus, ii. 3. 101; (2) a goblin, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 49. Spelt urchone in Palsgrave. ME. urchon, vrchone, Prompt. Parv., see the note; also spelt irchon, Early E. Psalter, Ps. ciii. 18 (l. 42); see Specimens of English, ed. Morris and Skeat (Glossary). — ONorth F. herichun, Marie (Fable 62); cf. Picard irechon; Walloon urechon, irchon (Sigart); Rouchi urchon (Hécart); Norm. dial. hérichon; also OF. iregon, a hedgehog; also spelt herigon, erigon (Burguy); mod. F. hérisson. Formed, with dimin. suffix -on (as if from a L. acc. **ēriciōnem*), from L. ēricius, a hedgehog. β. Ericius is a lengthened form from ēr (gen. ēris), a hedgehog; for **hēr*, and cognate with Gk. χῆρ, a hedgehog. The Gk. χῆρ is allied to χάρ-αξ, a pointed stake, χαρ-άσσειν, to scratch (see Character); and further, to L. horrere, to be bristly, hirsūtus, bristly, Skt. hṛsh, to bristle. Named from its sharp prickles.

URE, practice, use. (F.—L.) Obsolete, except in the derivative in-ure; and cf. man-ure. The real sense is work, practice; and, as it often has the sense of use, Richardson and others confuse it with use or usage; but it has no connexion with those words. It was once a common word; see examples in Nares. 'To put in ure, in usum trahere;' Levins, 193. 17. 'I ure one, I accustume hym to a thyng;' Palsgrave. ME. ure; 'Moche like thyng I haue had in ure;' Remedie of Loue, st. 23, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323. [Distinct from ME. ure = good luck.] — OF. eure, uevre, oure, work, action, operation. — L. opera, work. See further under Inure, Manure, and Operate. Doublet, opera.

URGE, to press earnestly, drive, provoke. (L.) Levins, ed. 1570, has both urge and urgent. — L. urgere, to urge, drive. β. For **uurg-ere*, where uurg- is the weak grade of **uerg-*. Allied to Gk. εἰργειν (for **ἐφέργειν*), to repress, constrain, Lithuan. werz-iū, I press tight, Goth. wrikan, to persecute. — ✓ WERG, to compel; see Wreak. Brugmann, i. § 350. Der. urg-ent, from L. urgent-, stem of pres. part. of urgere; urgent-ly, urgency.

URIM, lit. lights. (Heb.) Only in the phr. urim and thummim; see Thummim. The lit. sense is 'lights,' though the word may be used in the sing. sense 'light.' — Heb. urim, lights, pl. of ūr, light. — Heb. root ūr, to shine.

URINE, the water separated by the kidneys from the blood. (F.—L.) In Macb. ii. 3. 32; and in Chaucer, C. T. 5703 (D 121). — F. urine, 'urine;' Cot. — L. urina, urine; where -ina is a suffix. + Gk. οὔρον, urine; Skt. vāri, water; vār, water. Allied to Icel. ūr, drizzling rain; ver, the sea; AS. war, the sea. β. Orig. sense 'water.' Der. urin-al, ME. urinal, Chaucer, C. T. 12239 (C 305), Layamon, 17724, from F. urinal (Cot.); urin-ar-y, from F. urinaire (Cot.).

URN, a vase for ashes of the dead. (F.—L.) ME. vrne, urne, Chaucer, Troil. v. 311. — F. urne, 'a narrow necked pot, or pitcher of earth;' Cot. — L. urna, an urn. For **urc-na*; and allied to L. urc-eus, a pitcher. Brugmann, i. § 756.

URSINE, of or belonging to a bear. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — L. ursinus, bear-like. — L. ursus, a bear. Allied to Gk. ἄρκτος, a bear; W. arth, Skt. ṛksha-s, a bear; see Arctic. Brugmann, i. § 598.

US, the objective case of we. (E.) ME. us, ous, us; used both as acc. and dat. AS. ūs, dat.; ūs, ūsic, ussic, acc. pl., us (Grein). + Du. ons; Icel. oss, dat. and acc. pl.; Swed. oss; Dan. os; G. uns; Goth. uns, unsis, dat. and acc. pl. β. All from a Teut. base **uns-*. Cf. L. nōs, Skt. nas; also Gk. ἡμᾶς, Skt. asmān, us. Brugmann, i. § 437 (2); ii. § 436.

USE (1), sb., employment, custom. (F.—L.) ME. use, use; properly us, as in Ancrén Riwle, p. 16, l. 7; the word being monosyllabic. — AF. us (Havelok, 860), OF. (and F.) us, use, usage (Burguy); spelt uz in Cotgrave. — L. ūsus, acc. of ūsus, use; cf. ūsus, pp. of ūtī, to use. Der. use, vb., ME. usen, usen, Layamon, 24293, from F. user, to use, from Late L. ūsārē, to use, for **ūsārī*, frequentative form of ūtī, to use. Also us-able, from the verb to use; us-age, ME. vsage, usage, King Alisaunder, l. 1286, from AF. usage (Stat. Realm, i. 100), F. usage, 'usage,' Cot. Also use-ful, use-ful-ly, use-ful-ness; use-less, use-less-ly, use-less-ness; all from the sb. use. Also us-u-al, Hamlet, ii. 1. 22, from L. ūsualis, from ūs-, decl. stem of ūsus; us-u-al-ly. And see usurp, usury, utensil, utility. Also ab-use, dis-use, mis-use, ill-use, per-use.

USE (2), profit, benefit. (F.—L.) When use is employed, in legal documents, in the special sense of 'benefit,' it is a modernised spelling of the Anglo-F. form of the L. opus, employment, need. Cf. Anglo-F. oes, use, profit, Annals of Burton, pp. 474, 482, A.D. 1258; oepe, Liber Custumarum, p. 202; Statutes of the Realm, i. 144, A.D. 1299; uoese, service, Vie de St. Auban, 1554. A good example is the following: 'Que il feist a sun oes guarder,' which he caused to be kept for his own use; Roman de Rou, 2336. See oes, ues, eus, obs, in Bartsch.

USHER, a door-keeper, one who introduced strangers. (F.—L.) ME. uschere; Vschere, Hostiarius [i.e. ostiarius]; Prompt. Parv. 'That doré can non huisscher schette' [shut]; Gower, C. A. i. 231 (bk. ii. 2130).—AF. usser, Gaimar, 5995; OF. ussier, uissier (Burguy); also huissier, 'an usher, or door-keeper of a court, or of a chamber in court'; Cot.—L. ostiarius, acc. of ostiarius, belonging to a door, or (as sb.) a door-keeper.—L. ostium, a door, an entrance; extended from os, a mouth; see ORAL. Cf. OPruss. austo, a mouth. Der. usher, verb, L. L. L. v. 2. 328; usher-ship.

USQUEBAUGH, whiskey. (Irish.) In Ben Jonson, The Irish Masque; Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, ii. 3 (Savil); Ford, Perkin Warbeck, iii. 3.—Irish uisge beatha, usquebaugh, whiskey, lit. 'water of life'; cf. L. aqua vitæ, F. eau-de-vie.—Irish uisge, water, whiskey (see Whiskey); and beatha, life, OIrish bethu, allied to Gk. βίος, L. vita, life, and E. quick (see Quick). Brugmann, i. §§ 85, 368.

USURP, to seize to one's own use, take possession of forcibly. (F.—L.) Spelt usurpe in Palsgrave; ME. usurpen, Chaucer, Astrolabe, prol. 42.—F. usurper, 'to usurpe,' Cot.—L. usurpare, to employ, acquire; and, in a bad sense, to assume, usurp. β. Bréal suggests a formation from a sb. **usu-rapus* (**usu-ripus*?), one who seizes for his own use. Cf. L. surpere for surripere. Der. usurp-er; usurp-ation, from F. usurpation, 'a usurpation,' Cot., from L. acc. usurpationem.

USURY, large interest for the use of money. (F.—L.) 'Userer, usurier; Usury, usure'; Palsgrave. ME. usure, of which usury was another form. 'Ocur, or usure of gowle, Usura'; Prompt. Parv. p. 362; usurye, id. p. 513. Spelt usurie, P. Plowman, B. v. 240; userie, id. C. vii. 239. Here usurie seems to be a by-form of usure.—F. usure, 'the occupation of a thing, usury'; Cot.—L. usura, use, enjoyment; also, interest, usury.—L. us-um, supine of utī, to use; see USE. Der. usur-er, ME. usurere, Prompt. Parv., F. usurier, from L. usurarius.

UT, the first note of the musical scale. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. 102. Cf. F. and L. ut, the same. See Solfa.

UTAS, the octave of a feast. (F.—L.) Also utis, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 22; where it means 'the time between a festival and the eighth day after it, merriment'; Schmidt. 'Utas of a feast, octaves'; Palsgrave. ME. utas, Trevisa, vii. 259. Utas is shortened from AF. utaves, utavs, Yearbooks of Edw. I., 1302-3, p. 407; 1292-3, p. 75; corresponding to OF. oitaves (Burguy), oitieues (Roquefort), the pl. of oitave, octave, or eighth (day). Utas occurs in the statute concerning General Days in the Bench, 51 Hen. III, i.e. A.D. 1266-7 (Minshen). 'El dyemanche des oitieues de la Resurrection' = on the Sunday of the octaves of the resurrection; Miracles de S. Louis, c. 39 (Roquefort). The OF. oitave is from the L. octava (diēs), eighth day; cf. OF. oit, oyt, uit (mod. F. huit), from L. octo, eight. Thus utis is, as it were, a pl. of octave; see OCTAVE.

UTENSIL, an instrument or vessel in common use. (F.—L.) 'All myn hostilmentis, utensiles,' &c.; Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 94; in a will dated 1504. 'Alle the utensyl of myn hows'; Early E. Wills, ed. Furnivall, p. 18 (1411).—MF. utensile, 'an utensile'; Cot.—L. utensilis, adj., fit for use; whence utensilia, neut. pl., utensils. β. L. utensilis is for **utent-tilis*, formed with suffix -tilis (as in fer-tilis, fic-tilis) from utent-, stem of pres. part. of utī, to use; see USE. The mod. F. is ustensile (corruptly).

UTERINE, born of the same mother by a different father. (F.—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. ME. uterynes, pl. Trevisa, v. 29.—MF. uterin, 'of the womb, born of one mother or damme'; Cot.—L. uterinus, born of the same mother.—L. uterus, the womb. Cf. Gk. ὕστερα, the womb; Skt. udara-, belly. Brugmann, i. § 706.

UTILISE, to put to good use. (F.—L.) Not in Todd's Johnson; quite modern.—F. utiliser, to utilise; a modern word (Littré). Coined, with suffix -iser (< L. -izare = Gk. -ιζω), from L. utilis, useful; see UTILITY.

UTILITY, usefulness. (F.—L.) ME. utilitē, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. ii. § 26. l. 16.—F. utilité, 'utility'; Cot.—L. utilitatem, acc. of utilitas, usefulness.—L. utili-, decl. stem of utilis, useful; with suffix -tās.—L. utī, to use; see USE. Der. utilit-ar-i-an, a modern coined word.

UTMOST, outmost, most distant, extreme. (E.) ME. utemest, orig. trisyllabic; spelt utemaste in Layamon, 11023; outemeste in Rich. Coer de Lion, 2931; utemeste, Trevisa, vi. 359. From AS. ūte-m-est, double superl. from ūt, out, also found as ūte, adv. out.

[We also find the mutated forms ȳtemest, ȳtmest, Grein, ii. 777.] This word is therefore a doublet of outmost; see OUT. On the double suffix, see AFTERMOST; utmost became utmost by confusion with most. We also find utt-er-most; see UTTER (1).

UTOPIAN, imaginary, chimerical. (Gk.) An adj. due to Sir T. Moré's description of Utopia, an imaginary island situate nowhere, as the name implies. Coined (by Sir T. More, A.D. 1516) from Gk. οὐ, not; and τόπος, a place; see TOPIC.

UTTER (1), outer, further out. (E.) ME. utter, utter; whence was formed a superlative utter-est, used in the def. form utereste by Chaucer, C. T. 8663 (E 787). AS. utera (which occurs as well as ūtera), compar. adj. formed from ūt, adv., out; see OUT. Thus utter is a doublet of outer. Der. utter-ly; utter-most (see UTMOST). And see utter (2).

UTTER (2), to put forth, send out, circulate. (E.; perhaps confused with F.—L.) ME. utren, attributed to Chaucer, C. T. 16302, in Thynne's edition (1532), but every one of the MSS. in the Six-text edition has outen, Group G, l. 834; so also the Harl. MS. Hence there is really no authority for supposing that Chaucer used the word. The verb outen, which he really uses, is to put out, to 'out with,' as we say; answering to AS. ūtian, vb., to put out, expel; from ūt, out; see OUT. β. The verb outre, to utter, speak, occurs frequently in the Romance of Partenay, ll. 1024, 1437, 1563, 2816, 3156, &c. It is possible that the r was suggested by OF. outrier, to go beyond, surpass, finish (Godefroy); cf. F. outré, beyond; see UTTERANCE (2). And this last partly owed its form to UTTER (1). Cf. AS. ūtian, to put out, eject; Laws of the Northumb. Priests, § 22, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 294. Der. utter-able; utter-ance, Hamlet, iii. 2. 378.

UTTERANCE (1), an uttering; see UTTER (2); as above.

UTTERANCE (2), extremity. (F.—L.) Only in the phrases to the utterance, Macb. iii. 1. 72; at utterance, Cymb. iii. 1. 73. ME. oultrance; in Lydgate, Siege of Troy, bk. i. ch. 2; fol. b 4, back, col. 1: 'Unto oultrance with these bulles to fyght.'—F. oultrance, MF. oultrance, 'extremity'; Cot. 'Combatre à oultrance, to fight it out, or to the uttermost'; id.—F. oultre (Cotgrave), beyond; with suffix -ance.—L. ultrā, beyond; see OUTRAGE.

UVULA, the fleshy conical body suspended from the soft palate. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. uvule.—Late L. uvula, dimin. of ūua, a cluster, grape, also the uvula.—Lith. ūga, a berry. Brugmann, i. § 223(2).

UXORIOUS, excessively fond of a wife. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, iv. 1 (Otter).—L. uxorius, belonging to a wife; also, fond of a wife.—L. uxōri-, decl. stem of uxor, a wife. Der. uxorious-ly, -ness.

V

V. In Middle-English, v is commonly written u in the MSS., though many editors needlessly falsify the spellings of the originals to suit a supposed popular taste. Conversely, u sometimes appears as v, most often at the beginnings of words, especially in the words us, use, up, un-to, under, and vn- used as a prefix. The use of v for u, and conversely, is also found in early printed books, and occurs occasionally down to rather a late date. Cotgrave ranges all F. words beginning with v and u under the common symbol V. We may also note that a very large proportion of the words which begin with V are of French or Latin origin; only vane, vat, vinewed, vixen, are English.

VACATION, leisure, cessation from labour. (F.—L.) In Palsgrave, spelt vacacion. ME. vacacioun, Chaucer, C. T., D 683.—F. vacation, 'a vacation, vacancy, leisure'; Cot.—L. vacationem, acc. of vacatio, leisure; cf. vacātus, pp. of vacāre, to be empty, to be free from, to be unoccupied. See VACUUM. Der. vacant, in early use, in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 110, l. 15, from F. vacant, 'vacant,' Cot., from the stem of the pres. part. of L. vacāre; hence vacanc-y, Hamlet, iii. 4. 117; vacate, vb., a late word, from vacātus, pp. of vacāre. And see vac-uum.

VACCINATE, to inoculate with the cow-pox. (L.) 'Of modern formation, from the inoculation of human beings with the variola vaccina, or cow-pox. . . Dr. Jenner's Inquiry was first published in 1798;' Richardson. Coined, as if from the pp. of **vaccināre*, to inoculate, from L. vaccinus, belonging to cows.—L. vacca, a cow. Cf. Skt. vagā, a cow. It prob. means 'the lowing animal'; cf. Skt. vāg, to cry, to howl, to low. Der. vaccinat-ion; also vaccine, from L. vaccinus.

VACILLATION, wavering, unsteadfastness. (F.—L.) 'No remainders of doubt, no vacillation;' Bp. Hall, The Peace-maker, § 15 (R.). And in Blount.—F. vacillation, 'a reeling, staggering, wagging; Cot.—L. uacillātionem, acc. of uacillātio, a reeling, wavering; cf. uacillātus, pp. of uacillāre, to sway to and fro, waver, vacillate. Formed as if from an adj. **uacillus*, from a base uac-. —✓WAG, to bend, sway to one side; cf. Skt. vaṅk, to go tortuously, to be crooked, vakra-, bent; AS. wōh, crooked. Der. vacillate, from L. pp. uacillātus; a late word. Cf. woo.

VACUUM, an empty space. (L.) It was supposed that nature abhorred a vacuum; see Cranmer's Works, i. 250, 330 (Parker Society).—L. uacuum, an empty space; neut. of uacius, empty. Allied to L. uacūre, to be empty; see Vacation. +W. gwag, empty. Der. vacu-i-ty, in Cotgrave, from F. vacuité, 'vacuity,' Cot., from L. acc. uacuitātem.

VADE, to wither. (Du.—F.—L.) In Shak. Pass. Pilgrim, 131, 170, 174, 176; Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 40.—MDu. vadden, 'to fade;' Hexham.—OF. fader, to fade; see Fade.

VAGABOND, adj., wandering; as sb., a wandering, idle fellow. (F.—L.) Spelt vacabonde in Palsgrave; he gives the MF. form as uacabond; so also 'Vacabonds, vagabonds,' Cot. Rich. cites vagabunde from the Bible (1534), Gen. iv. 12; spelt vacabund in the edit. of 1551. Also vacabonde, Caxton, Siege of Troy, fol. 334, back.—F. vagabond, 'a vagabond,' Cot. We also find OF. vacabond (Godefroy).—L. uagābundus, adj., strolling about. Formed, with suffix -bundus (a gerundive form), from uagā-rī, to wander.—L. uagus, wandering; see Vague.

VAGARY, a wild freak, a whim. (L.) In The Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 3. 54 (82); figaries, pl., Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, iii. 3. Also vagare, sing., a trisyllabic word, in Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. ii, ed. Arber, p. 44, l. 10. Perhaps orig. a verb; see below. Apparently borrowed directly from L. uagā-rī, to wander; and, in any case, due to this verb. Cf. F. vaguer, 'to wander, vagary, gad, range, roam,' Cot.; also Ital. vagare, 'to wander, to vagarie, or range,' Florio. We have instances of F. infinitives used as sbs. in attainder, remainder, leisure, pleasure. See above.

VAGRANT, wandering, unsettled. (F.—OHG.) 'A vagarant and wilde kinde of life,' Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 490; quoted by Richardson, who alters vagarant to vagrant; but vagarant is, I think, quite right. Cf. vagarantes, vagrants, Harman's Caveat, p. 19. It corresponds to Anglo-F. wakerant, a vagrant, vagabond; see Liber Albus, p. 275. Also found as AF. and OF. waucrant, pres. pt. of OF. walcrer, to wander about. Spelt wacrant, Tristan, ii. 75, 80; Bozon, p. 72; walcrant, Horn, fol. 8, back, col. 2. See walcrer, wacrer, vacrer, in Godefroy. Of Germanic origin; cf. MLow G. welkern, MHG. walgern, to walk about; allied to OHG. walkan, walchan, to move oneself about, to full cloth; cognate with E. walk, AS. wealcian. See Walk. Der. vagrant, sb., vagranc-y. ¶ Doubtless confused with L. uagā-rī, to wander; but not derived from it. Roquefort notes the use of OF. wakerant to translate L. uaga in Prov. vii. 10. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 311.

VAGUE, unsettled, uncertain. (F.—L.) It seems to have been first in use as a verb, parallel in use to vagary, q. v. 'Doth vague and wander;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 231 (R.); 'To vague and range abroad;' id. p. 630 (R.). As an adj. it is later. 'Vague and insignificant forms of speech;' Locke, Human Understanding, To the Reader (R.).—F. vaguer, 'to wander; vague, wandering;' Cot.—L. uagā-rī, to wander; from uagus, adj., wandering. β. Connected by Fick, iii. 761, with AS. wancol, unsteady; from ✓WAG, a by-form of ✓WAQ, to swerve, for which see Vacillate. Der. vague-ly, -ness; and see vag-abond, vag-ar-y. From the same L. uagā-rī we have extra-vagant.

VAIL (1), the same as Veil, q. v.

VAIL (2), to lower. (F.—L.) In Merch. Ven. i. 1. 28, &c.; and not uncommon. A headless form of avail or avale, in the same sense. 'I avale, as the water dothe whan it goeth downewardes or ebbeth, fauale;' Palsgrave.—F. avaler (in Cot. avaller), 'to let, put, lay, cast, fell down,' Cot. See further under Avalanche. Der. vail, sb., Troil. v. 8. 7.

VAIL (3), a gift to a servant. (F.—L.) Dryden has the pl. vails; tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 1. 311. 'Vails, profits that arise to servants, besides their salary or wages;' Phillips, ed. 1706. A headless form of avail, sb., in the sense of profit, help. 'Avayle, sb., prouffit;' Palsgrave. 'Vaile my prejerres'=let my prayers avail, Wyclif, Jer. xxxvii. 19, earlier version. See Avail.

VAIN, empty, fruitless, unreal, worthless; also, conceited. (F.—L.) ME. vain, vein, veyn, Chaucer, C. T. 15965 (G 497).—F. vain, 'vain;' Cot.—L. vānus, acc. of vānus, empty, vain. Brugmann, i. § 414 (3). Der. vain-ly, -ness; also the phr. in vain, a translation of F. en vain (Cot.). Also vain-glory, ME. veingloire, Gower, C. A. i. 132, b. i. 2677; vain-glori-ous, -ly, -ness. Also van-i-ty, q. v.; vaunt, q. v.; van-ish, q. v.

VAIR, a kind of fur. (F.—L.) A common term in heraldry; whence the adj. vairy or verry, given in Phillips, ed. 1706, and spelt varry in Blount. ME. veir, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 121; Rob. Manning, ed. Furnivall, l. 615.—F. vair, 'a rich fur of ermines,' &c.; Cot.—L. varius, variegated. See Minever and Various. Cf. Late L. varium, vair; Gloss. to Liber Custumarum. Der. vair-y, adj., from F. vairé, 'verry, diversified with argent and azure;' Cot. Also mine-ver.

VALANCE, a fringe of drapery, now applied to a part of the bed-hangings. (F.—L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 356; he also has valanced=fringed, Hamlet, ii. 2. 442. 'Rich cloth of tissue, and vallance of black silk;' Strype, Eccles. Mem., Funeral Solemnities of Henry VIII. Cf. 'A subtil kerchief of Valence;' Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 272. Florio (1598) has Ital. 'Valenzana, a kind of saye, serge, or stuffe to make curteins for beds with; Valenzana del letto, the valances of a bed.' Torriano (1688) has Valenza as well as Valenzana in the former sense, and Valenzane for Valenzana in the latter one. Prob. named from Valence in France, not far to the S. of Lyons, where silk is made even to this day; Lyons silks are well-known. Sir Aymer de Valence, whose widow founded Pembroke College, Cambridge, may have taken his name from the same place. Valence=L. Valentia, a name given to more towns than one, and clearly a derivative of ualère (pres. part. ualent-), to be strong; whence also the names Valens and Valentinian; see Valiant. ¶ See Todd; Johnson derives Valence from Valencia in Spain, which was also famous for silk. Mahn (in Webster) derives valance (without evidence) from a supposed Norm. F. valaunt, answering to F. avalant, pres. part. of avaler, to let fall; for which see Avalanche.

VALE, a valley. (F.—L.) ME. val, as a various reading for ualeie (valley), in Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 47.—F. val, 'a vale;' Cot.—L. uallēm, acc. of uallis, a vale. Der. vall-ey, q. v.; also a-val-anche, vail (2).

VALEDICTION, a farewell. (L.) 'He alwayes took this solemn valédiction of the fellowes;' Fuller, Worthies; Shropshire (R.). Englished from a supposed L. **ualēdictio*, coined like ualēdictus, pp. of ualēdicere, to say farewell.—L. ualē, farewell; and dicere, to say. β. L. ualē, lit. 'be strong, be of good health,' is the 2 pers. sing. imp. of ualère, to be strong. See Valiant and Diction. Der. valédict-or-y.

VALENTINE, a sweetheart; also a love-letter sent on Feb. 14. (F.—L.) In Nares and Brand. See Hamlet, iv. 5. 48, 51. Named from St. Valentine's day, when birds were supposed to pair; see Chaucer, Assembly of Foules, 309, 322, 683; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 32.—F. Valentin.—L. Valentīnus.—L. ualent-, stem of pres. part. of ualère, to be strong; see Valiant.

VALERIAN, the name of a flower. (F.—L.) 'Valeryan, an herbe;' Palsgrave. And in Chaucer, C. T., G 800.—F. valeriane, 'garden valerian;' Cot.—Late L. ualerīāna, valerian. β. Orig. unknown; ualerīāna is the fem. of Valerīānus, which must mean either 'belonging to Valerius' or 'belonging to Valeria, a province of Pannonia. Both names are doubtless due to L. ualère, to be strong, whence many names were derived; see Valance, Valentine, and Valiant.

VALET, a man-servant. (F.—C.) In Blount. 'The king made him his valett;' Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. Valet-de-chambre occurs in Vanbrugh, The Provoked Wife, Act v. 3.—F. valet, 'a groom, yeoman, &c.,' Cot.; valet de chambre, 'a chamberlain,' id. The same word as Varlet, q. v.

VALETUDINARY, sickly, in weak health. (F.—L.) In Sir T. Brown, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 26.—F. valētudinaire, 'sickly;' Cot.—L. ualētudinārius, sickly.—L. ualētudin-, stem of ualētūdo, health, whether good or bad, but esp. bad health, feebleness; with suffix -ārius.—L. ualē-re, to be in good health; with suffix -tūdo. See Valiant. Der. valētudinari-an, adj. and sb.; as sb. in Spectator, no. 25; valētudinari-an-ism.

VALHALLA, the hall of the slain. (Scand.) In Scand. mythology, the place of immortality for the souls of heroes slain in battle. The spelling Valhalla is hardly correct; it is probably due to Bp. Percy, who translated M. Mallet's work on Northern Antiquities; see chap. v of the translation.—Icel. valhöll (gen. valhallar), lit. the hall of the slain.—Icel. valr, the slain, slaughter; and höll or hall, a hall, cognate with E. Hall. β. The Icel. valr is cognate with AS. wæl, slaughter, the slain, also a single corpse; prob. allied to OHG. wuol, slaughter, AS. wōl, disease. It was thought that the dead were selected from the field of battle by the deities called in Icelandic Valkyrjur and in AS. Wælcyrigan, lit. 'choosers of the slain.' See Valkyria.

VALIANT, brave. (F.—L.) ME. valiant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 4; p. 177, l. 3.—F. vaillant, 'valiant;' Cot. Also spelt valant in OF., and the pres. part. of the verb valoir, 'to profit, serve, be good for;' id.—L. ualère, to be strong, to be worth. Allied to E. Wield, q. v. Der. valiant-ly, -ness; and see vale- diction, Val-ent-ine, vale-tu-din-ar-y, val-id, val-our, val-ue; also a-vail, counter-vail, pre-vail, con-val-esce; equi-val-ent, pre-val-ent, in-val-id.

VALID, having force, well-founded, conclusive. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. valide, 'valid, strong, weighty'; Cot.—L. validus, strong.—L. ualère, to be strong; see Valiant. Der. valid-ly; valid-i-ty, Hamlet, iii. 2. 199, from F. validité, 'validity,' Cot., from L. acc. validitatem.

VALISE, a travelling-bag, small portmanteau. (F.—Late L.) 'Seal'd up In the vallies of my trust, lock'd close for ever;' Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. ii. sc. 1 (Metaphor).—F. valise, 'a male, cloak-bag, budget, wallet'; Cot. The same word as Span. balija, Ital. valigia (Florio), with the same sense. Corrupted in G. into felleisen (Diez).—Late L. valisia (1401), Ducange; also spelt valixia (id.). β. Etym. unknown. Diez imagines a Late L. form **uidul-itia*, made from L. uidulus, a leathern travelling-trunk; which at any rate gives the right sense. Devic (Supp. to Littré) suggests Pers. walichah, 'a large sack,' or Arab. waliha(t), 'a corn-sack'; Rich. Dict. p. 1657.

VALKYRIA, one of the handmaidens of Odin. (Scand.) Icel. valkyrja, a goddess; lit. 'chooser of the slain'; pl. valkyrjur.—Icel. val, acc. of valr, the slain (AS. uæl); and -kyrja, f., a chooser, from kur- (<**kuz-*), weak grade of kjōsa, to choose, cognate with E. choose. Cf. AS. walcyrge, Corpus gloss., 2017.

VALLEY, a vale, dale. (F.—L.) ME. valé, Assumption of St. Mary, ed. Lumby, l. 590; ualeie, Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 22, l. 47.—OF. valee (F. vallée), a valley; Burguy. This is parallel to Ital. vallata, a valley, and appears to mean, literally, 'formed like a vale,' or 'vale-like.' Formed, with suffix -ee (<L. -āta), from F. val, a vale; see Vale.

VALOUR, courage, bravery. (F.—L.) Spelt valoure, King Alisaunder, 2530.—OF. valor, valur, F. valeur, 'value, worth, worthiness'; Cot.—L. ualōrem, acc. of ualor, worth; hence, worthiness, courage.—L. ualère, to be strong, to be worth; see Valiant. Der. valor-ous, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 236, from F. valeureux, 'valorous, valiant,' Cot.; valor-ous-ly.

VALUE, worth. (F.—L.) 'All is to him of o [one] value,' Gower, C. A. iii. 346 (bk. viii. 2121).—F. valuē, fem., 'value'; Cot. Fem. of valu, pp. of valoir, to be worth.—L. ualère, to be worth. Der. value, verb, in Palsgrave; valu-able; value-less, K. John, iii. 1. 101; valu-at-ion, a coined word.

VALVE, one of the leaves of a folding-door, a lid which opens only one way, one of the pieces of a (bivalve) shell. (F.—L.) 'Valves, folding-doors or windows,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Valves, pl., doors, Trevisa, iv. 499.—F. valve, 'a foulding, or two-leaved door, or window'; Cot.—L. ualua, sing. of ualuæ, the leaves of a folding-door. Allied to L. uolvere, to roll, turn round about; from the revolving of the leaves on their hinges. See Voluble. Der. valv-ed, valv-ul-ar; bi-valve, uni-valve.

VAMBRACE, VANTBRACE, armour for the fore-arm. (F.—L.) 'Plate, cum vambrace et rerebrace;' York Wills, i. 171 (1392). The word properly signifies 'fore-arm.' It is short for avant-brace.—MF. avant-bras, 'a vambrace, armour for an arm; also, the part of the arm which extends from the elbow to the wrist'; Cot.—F. avant, before; bras, the arm.—L. ab ante, from before, in front; brachium, arm (of which the pl. brachia gave OF. brace, arm; see Scheler). See Van (1), Vamp, Vamplate. ¶ The armour for the upper arm was called a rere-brace, i.e. rear-brace.

VAMP, the fore-part or upper leather of a boot or shoe. (F.—L.) ME. uampé (dissyllabic). 'Hosen widuten *uampe*z' = hose without vamps; Ancrer Riwle, p. 420, l. 3. [Another copy has uampeð; Reliq. Antiquæ, ii. 3.] 'Vampe, or uampe of an hoose, Pedana'; Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc antepedale, Anglice wampe' [for vampé]; Wright's Voc. i. 197, col. 1. 'Hec pedana, Anglice wampay', id. 201, col. 2.—MF. avant-pied, 'the part of the foot that's next to the toes, and consisteth of five bones'; Cot. (Hence E. vampé, vamp; by loss of initial a, change of ntp to mp, and suppression of the unstressed termination).—F. avant, before; and pied, the foot. For F. avant, see Advance or Van (1). The F. pied is from L. pedem, acc. of pēs, a foot; see Foot. ¶ This etymology is verified by the fact that the word also appears as vautpe. 'Vautpe of a hose, vautpie;' Palsgrave (where the final d is dropped, as well as the initial a, in the F. form). So also ME. vampay, above, and later vampay (Phillips). Godefroy has OF. avantpied, a kind of sandal. Der. vamp, verb, to mend with a new vamp, Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, Act i. sc. 2 (Petillius); hence vamp up = to patch up, vamp, to improvise a musical accompaniment.

VAMPIRE, a ghost which sucks the blood of men, a blood-sucker. (F.—G.—Servian.) In Todd's Johnson. 'Of these beings many imaginary stories are told in Hungary; Ricaut, in his State of the Greek and Armenian Churches (1679), gives a curious account of this superstitious persuasion, p. 278;' Todd. Todd also cites:

'These are the vampires of the publick, and riflors of the kingdom;' Forman, Obs. on the Revolution in 1688 (1741), p. 11.—F. vampire.—G. vampyr (Flügel).—Servian vampir, a werewolf, blood-sucker, Popović, Servian Dict.; cf. Polish upior, upir, a vampire. Prob. of Turkish origin; from N. Turk. uber, a witch (Miklosich). Der. vampire-bat; so named by Linnæus.

VAMPLATE, an iron plate protecting a lance. (F.—L.) 'Pro uno pare de schynbaldes, aliter vamplattes;' York Wills, iii. 73 (1423). From F. avant, in front, fore; and plate. See Vambrace.

VAN (1), the front of an army. (F.—L.) In Shak. Antony, iv. 6. 9. An abbreviated form of van-guard, vant-guard, or avant-garde, also spelt van-ward, vaut-ward. 'And when our vautgard was passed the tounne;' Holinshed, Chron. Edw. III, an. 1346. 'And her vantward was to-broke;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 362, l. 7478; the pl. vantwardes occurs, id. p. 437, l. 9006. Spelt vaut-ward, vaut-ward, vaunt-ward, P. Plowman, C. xxiii. 94.—OF. avant-ward, later avant-garde, 'the vanguard of an army'; Cot. Here avant is from L. ab ante, 'from in front'; see Advance. And see Guard, Ward.

VAN (2), a fan for winnowing, &c. (F.—L.) 'His sail-broad vans, i.e. wings; Milton, P. L. ii. 927.—F. van, 'a vanne, or winnowing sieve'; Cot.—L. uannum, acc. of uannus, a fan; see Fan. L. uannus is for **cuannus*; cf. OHG. hwennen (for **hwanjan*), to swing, vibrate. Brugmann, i. § 357. (Doubtful; it may be allied to L. uentus, wind.) Der. van, v., to winnow, spelt vanne in Levins, from F. vanner, 'to vanne'; Cot. Doublet, fan.

VAN (3), a caravan or large covered wagon for goods. (F.—Pers.) A modern abbreviation for caravan, just as we now use bus for omnibus, and wig for periwig. See Caravan. 'The little man will now walk three times round the cairawan;' Dickens, Going into Society. 'Carry me into the wan;' ibid.

VANDAL, a barbarian. (L.—Teut.) See Vandalick and Vandalism in Todd's Johnson.—L. Vandalus, a Vandal, one of the tribe of the Vandali, whose name means, literally, 'the wanderers'; see Pliny. Vandali answers to AS. pl. Wendlas (sing. Wendil). Cf. Icel. Vendill (also Vandill), a proper name. Cf. G. wandeln, to wander; a frequentative verb cognate with E. Wander, q.v. Der. Vandal, adj.; Vandal-ic, Vandal-ism.

VANE, a weather-cock. (E.) Also spelt fane (cf. vat, velch); it formerly meant a small flag, pennon, or streamer; hence applied to the weather-cock, from its likeness to a small pennon. 'Fane of a stepylle;' Prompt. Parv. p. 148; and see Way's note. 'Chaungynge as a vane' (other MSS. fane); Chaucer, C. T., Group E, 996; in the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. AS. fana, a small flag; Grein, i. 263. + Du. vaan; Icel. fāni; Dan. fane; Swed. and Goth. fana; G. fahne, MHG. fano. β. Teut. type **fanon*-, m. Orig. 'a bit of cloth'; cognate with L. pannus, a cloth, piece of cloth; see Pane. Der. gon-fan-on or gon-fal-on, q.v. Doublet, pane.

VANGUARD; see under Van (1).

VANILLA, the name of a plant. (Span.—L.) In Todd's Johnson; Johnson says: 'the fruit of those plants is used to scent chocolate.' Misspelt for vainilla, by confusion with F. vanille, which is merely borrowed from Spanish, like the E. word.—Span. vainilla, a small pod, husk, or capsule; which is the true sense of the word. Dimin. of vaina, a scabbard, case, pod, sheath.—L. uagina, a scabbard, sheath, husk, pod.

VANISH, to disappear. (F.—L.) ME. vanissen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 4, l. 53. The pt. t. appears as vanishide, vanysched, vansched, vanshede, in P. Plowman, C. xv. 217. Certainly derived from OFrench, but the F. word is not recorded as commencing with v. Prob. shortened from the pres. pt. stem (evaniss-) of AF. evanir, OF. esvanir, to vanish away; cf. Ital. svanire, to vanish (where s is from L. ex).—Late L. type **evānīre*, for L. ēvānescere, to vanish away.—L. ē, ex, away; and uānescere, to vanish; lit. to become empty, from uānus, empty; see Vain. Der. e-van-esc-ent.

VANITY, empty pride, conceit, worthlessness. (F.—L.) ME. vanité (= uanitee), Hali Meidenhad, p. 27, l. 25.—F. vanité, 'vanity'; Cot.—L. uānitatem, acc. of uānitās, emptiness, worthlessness.—L. uānus, empty, vain; see Vain.

VANQUISH, to conquer, defeat. (F.—L.) ME. venkisen, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 106; venkusen, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xiv. 47, earlier version; venquishen, Chaucer, C. T. 4711 (B 291).—AF. venquiss-, OF. veinquiss-, stem of pres. pt. of AF. venquir, OF. veinquir, occurring in the 14th century as a collateral form of OF. veindre (mod. F. vaincre); cf. F. vainquis, still used as the pt. t. of vaincre, and the form que je vainquise.—L. vincere, to conquer; pt. t. uicī, pp. uictus (stem uic-).—√WEIQ, to fight, strive; whence also Goth. weihan, weigan (pp. wig-ans), OHG. and AS. wigan, to strive, fight, contend. Brugmann, i. §§ 85, 367. Der. vanquish-er; and see victor.

VANTAGE, advantage. (F.—L.) Common in Shak.; in K.

John, ii. 550, &c.; spelt vauntage in Palsgrave; who also gives: 'I vauntage one, I profyte him, je vantaige; What dothe it vauntage you, quest ce quil vous vantage, or aduantage.' — AF. vantage, advantage; Year-books of Edw. I., 1302–3, p. 209; F. avantage, 'an advantage; avantage, to advantage;' Cot. See Advantage. Thus vantage is a headless form of F. avantage; and it is clear from Palsgrave (as above) that the loss of initial a occurred in F. as well as in E.

VANWARD; see Vaward and Van (1).

VAPID, spiritless, flat, insipid. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Prob. directly from L. uapidus, vapid, spoiled, flat, rather than from F. vapide, 'that sends up an ill fume,' marked by Cotgrave as a scarce or old word. Allied to L. uappa, wine that has emitted its vapour, vapid or palled wine; closely allied to L. uap-or, vapour, β. The L. uap-or is allied to Gk. καπνός, smoke, καπνέειν, to breathe forth; Lithuan. kwápas, breath, fragrance, evaporation, kwēpti, to breathe, smell, kwēpalas, perfume. Brugmann, i. § 193. — ✓QWEP, to reek, breathe out; cf. Fick, i. 542. Der. vapid-ly, -ness. And see vapour.

VAPOUR, water in the atmosphere, steam, fume, fine mist, gas. (F.—L.) ME. vapour, Chaucer, C. T. 10707 (F 393). — F. vapeur, 'a vapor, fume;' Cot. — L. uapōrem, acc. of uapor, vapour; see Vapid. Der. vapour, verb; vapor-ous, Mach. iii. 5. 24; vapour-y; vapor-ise, a coined word; vapor-is-at-ion, e-vapor-ate.

VARICOSE, permanently dilated, as a vein. (L.) A late word. [Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Varix, a crooked vein.'] — L. uaticōsus, varicose. — L. uatic-, stem of uatic, a dilated vein. Perhaps allied to L. uarius, a blotch, a pimple.

VARIEGATE, to diversify. (L.) 'Variegated tulips;' Pope, Moral Essays, ii. 41. — L. uariēgātus, pp. of uariēgāre, to make of various colours. — L. uari(o)-, for uarius, of divers colours; and -igāre, due to agere, to drive, cause, make; agere being used to form verbs expressive of an object (see Agent). See Various. Der. variegat-ion, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

VARIETY, difference, diversification, change, diversity. (F.—L.) In Shak., Antony, ii. 2. 241. — F. variété, 'variety;' Cot. — L. uarietātem, acc. of uarietās, variety. — L. uarius, various; see Various.

VARIOUS, different, several. (L.) 'A man so various;' Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, 545. Englished from L. uarius, variegated, diverse, manifold; with suffix -ous. Der. various-ly; varie-gate, varie-ty; also, vary, q. v.; vair, q. v.

VARLET, a groom, footman, low fellow, scoundrel. (F.—C.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 40. 'Not sparyng maisters nor varlettis;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 16 (R.). — OF. varlet, 'a groom; also, a yonker, stripling, youth;' Cot. He notes that 'in old time it was a more honourable title; for all young gentlemen, untill they come to be 18 years of age, were tearmed so.' β. An older spelling was vaslet (Godefroy), which became varlet, vallet, valet. We also find the AF. spelling vadlet in the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 46, where d stands for an older sd, as in medlar. medley; which again proves that vaslet was the orig. form. γ. Vaslet is for **vasalet*, the regular diminutive of OF. vasal, vassal, a vassal; so that a varlet was orig. a young vassal, a youth, stripling; hence, a servant, &c.; and finally a valet, and a varlet as a term of reproach. OF. vaslet became **vasdlet*, vadlet in AF.; also varlet, vallet, valet. See Vassal. Doublet, valet.

VARNISH, a kind of size or glaze, a liquid employed to give a glossy surface. (F.) ME. vernisch. 'Vernysche, Vernicium;' Prompt. Parv. In P. Plowman, A. v. 70, the Vernon MS. wrongly reads vernisch for vergeous (verjuice); still, this shows that the word was already known before A. D. 1400. — F. vernish, 'varnish, made of linseed oyle and the gumme of the juniper-tree;' Cot. Hence the verb vernisser, 'to sleeke or glaze over with varnish;' Cot. Cf. Span. berniz, barniz, varnish, lacquer; barnizar, to varnish, lacquer; Ital. vernice, varnish; verniciare, verniciare, to varnish. β. Of doubtful origin; but compare the MGk. βερνίκη; see Schade, O. H. G. Dict., p. 1439. Wedgwood says: 'It seems to me probable that it is from Gk. βερνίκη, βερνίκη, amber, applied by Agapias to sandarach, a gum rosin similar in appearance to amber, of which varnish was made; Gk. βερνικιάζειν, to varnish; Ducange, Greek Glossary. Cf. mod. Gk. βερνίκι, varnish.' But the MGk. βερνίκη seems to be merely a Gk. form of Ital. vernice. Ducange gives a Late L. form vernicium (A. D. 1243). Der. varnish, verb; Palsgrave has: 'I vernyshe a spurre, or any yron with vernyshe, je vernis;' which exemplifies the MF. verb vernir, late by-form of vernisser.

VARSOVIENNE, a dance in imitation of a Polish dance. (F.—Polish.) F. Varsovienne, a dance (about 1853); lit. 'belonging to Warsaw.' — F. Varsovie, Warsaw. — Pol. Warszawa, Warsaw.

VARY, to alter, change. (F.—L.) ME. varien, Prompt. Parv.; pres. part. variande, Pricke of Conscience, 1447. — F. varier, 'to vary;' Cot. — L. uariāre, to diversify, vary. — L. uarius, various; see

Various. Der. vari-able, spelt varyable in Palsgrave, from F. vari-able, 'variable,' Cot., from L. uariābilis; variable-ness, vari-abil-i-ty; vari-at-ion, ME. variacion, Chaucer, C. T. 2590 (A 2588), from F. variation, 'a variation,' from L. acc. uariātiōnem; vari-ance, Chaucer, C. T. 8586 (E 710), as if from L. **uariantia*. And see vair, mine-ver.

VASCULAR, consisting of vessels, as arteries, veins, &c. (L.) In Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -ar (from L. -āris) from L. uascul-um, a small vessel; formed with the double dimin. suffix -cu-lu-, from uās, a vessel; see Vase. Der. vascular-i-ty.

VASE, a vessel, particularly an ornamented one. (F.—L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 122. — F. vase, 'a vessel;' Cot. — L. uāsum, a vase, vessel; a collateral form of uās (gen. uās-is), a vessel; the pl. uāsa is common, though the sing. uāsum is hardly used. β. L. uāsum resembles Skt. vāsana-, a receptacle, box, basket, water-jar; also, an envelope, cover, cloth; the orig. sense being perhaps 'case' or protecting cover. Perhaps allied to Vest. Der. vas-cu-lar; vessel.

VASELINE, a semi-fluid greasy substance, used in ointments, &c. A fanciful name; given by the maker. Said to have been suggested by G. wass(er), water, and Gk. ἐλαιον, oil; with F. suffix -ine. (Cent. Dict.)

VASSAL, a dependent. (F.—C.) In Spenser, Daphnida, 181. Certainly in early use; the ME. vassal, however, is rare, though the derivative vasselage (vassalage) is in Chaucer, C. T. 3056 (A 3054), where it means 'good service' or prowess in arms; it has the same sense in Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 86, l. 21, and in Gower (as cited in Richardson). [The word vassayl, cited by Richardson from Rob. of Glouc., means wassail.] — AF. vassal, Philip de Thaur, Livre des Creatures, l. 698; F. vassal, 'a vassal, subject, tenant;' Cot. (Cotgrave well explains the word.) The orig. sense is 'servant;' and the word is of Celtic origin, Latinised (in Low Latin) as vassallus, in which form it is extremely common. We also find the shorter form uassus or uasus, a servant; which occurs in the Lex Salica, ed. Hessels and Kern, coll. 55, 56. — OBret. uwas = was, Bret. gwaz, a servant, vassal; W. and Corn. guas, a youth, servant. Cf. Irish foss, a servant. All from Celtic type **wassos*, a servant; Stokes-Fick, p. 278. Cf. L. verna, a home-born slave. See Vernacular. Der. vassal-age; also varlet, valet.

VAST, great, of great extent. (F.—L.) We possess this word in two forms, viz. vast and waste, both being from French; the latter being much the older. They are generally used with different senses, but in the Owl and Nightingale, l. 17, we have: 'in ore waste pikke hegge' = in a vast thick hedge, in a great thick hedge. We may, however, consider vast as belonging to the 16th century; it does not seem to be much older than the latter part of that century. 'That mightie and vaste sea;' Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. iii. p. 822. — F. vaste, 'vast;' Cot. — L. uastum, acc. of uastus, vast, of large extent. See further under Waste. Der. vast, sb., Temp. i. 2. 327, Wint. Tale, i. 1. 33; vast-ly, vast-ness; also vast-y, adj., Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 41. Also de-vast-ate.

VAT, a large vessel for liquors. (E.) ME. fat. 'Fate, vesselle;' Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has fatte; and the A. V. of the Bible has fats (Joel, ii. 24) and wine-fat (Mark, xii. 1). The difference between the words fat and vat is one of dialect; vat is Southern English, prob. Kentish. The use of v for f is common in Devonshire, Somersetshire, and in Old Kentish; the connexion of the word with Kent may have been due to the brewing trade; cf. vane, vetch. AS. fæt (pl. fatu), a vessel, cask; Mark, iii. 27. — Du. vat; Icel. fat; Dan. fad; Swed. fat; G. fass; MHG. vaz. β. All from the Teut. type **fatom*, n., a vat, a barrel. From the Teut. base **fat-*, to catch, take, seize, comprehend, contain; cf. OFries. fatia, EFries. faten, Du. vatten, to catch, take, contain, G. fassen, to seize, also to contain; so that the sense is 'that which contains.' Der. wine-fat or wine-vat.

VATICAN, the palace of the pope. (F.—L.) F. Vatican. — L. Vaticānus (mons), the Vatican hill in Rome.

VATICINATION, a prediction, prophecy. (F.—L.) 'This so clear vaticination;' Jeremy Taylor, Works (1835); ii. 333. — MF. vaticination, 'a prophesying;' Cot. — L. acc. uaticinātiōnem. — L. uaticināri, to prophesy; uaticinium, a prophecy. — L. uāti-, decl. stem of uātes, a prophet; and -cin-, weak grade of can-ere, to sing. Cf. Wood (2).

VAUDEVILLE, VAUDEVIL, a lively satirical song; a kind of drama. (F.) Spelt vaudevil in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. vaudeville, 'a country ballade, or song; so tearmed of Vaudevire, a Norman town, wherein Olivier Bassel [or Basselin], the first inventor of them, lived;' Cot. Olivier de Basselin was a Norman poet of the 15th century, and his songs were called after his native valley, the Vau (or Val, i. e. valley) de Vire; see Vale. Vire is a town in Normandy, to the S. of Bayeux.

VAULT (1), an arched roof, a chamber with an arched roof, esp.

one underground, a cellar. (F.—L.) The spelling with l is comparatively modern; it has been inserted, precisely as in fault, from pedantic and ignorant notions concerning 'etymological' spelling. The ME. form is voute, also vowte; in King Alisaunder, 7210, it is spelt vawte. 'Vout under the ground, voute;' Palsgrave. 'Vowte, lacunar; Vowtyd, arculus; Vowtyn, or make a vowte, arcuo;' Prompt. Parv.—MF. voute (also voulte, with inserted l as in English), 'a vault, or arch, also, a vaulted or enbowed roof;' Cot. OF. volte, voute, vaute, a vault, cavern; Burguy (mod. F. voute); where volte is a fem. form, from OF. volt, vaulted, lit. bent or bowed. Volte is the same word as Ital. volta, 'a time, a turn or course; a circuit, or a compass; also, a vault, cellar, an arche, bow;' Florio. β. The OF. volt answers to L. uol'tus, and the OF. volte, Ital. volta, to L. uol'ta; these are abbreviated forms of uolūtus (fem. uolūta), pp. of uoluere, to roll, turn round; whence the later sense of bend round, bow, or arch. Similarly we have volute, in the sense of a spiral scroll. γ. Thus a vault means an arch, an arched roof; hence, a chamber with an arched roof, and finally a cellar, because it often has an arched roof, for the sake of strength. See Voluble. Der. vault, verb, to overarch, ME. vouten, as above; vault-ed, Cymb. i. 6. 33; vault-y, concave, Romeo, iii. 5. 22; vault-age, a vaulted room, Hen. V. ii. 4. 124.

VAULT (2), to bound, leap. (F.—Ital.—L.) 'Vaulting ambition;' Macb. i. 7. 27.—MF. volter, 'to vault;' Cot.—MF. volte, 'a round or turn; and thence, the bounding turn which cunning riders teach their horses; also a tumbler's gamboll;' id.—Ital. volta, 'the turn that cunning riders teach their horses;' Florio. The same word as Ital. volta, a vault; both from the orig. sense of 'turn;' see further under Vault (1). Der. vault, sb.; vault-er, vault-ing-horse.

VAUNT, to boast. (F.—L.) 'I vaunte, I boste, or crake, le me vante;' Palsgrave. [It is remarkable that the ME. form was avaunten or auaunten, from OF. avanter, to boast (Godefroy), in which the a- (from L. ad) was intensive, or may have been due to confusion with F. avant, before, and avancer, to advance. This ME. auaunten occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 5985 (D 403), and at least twice in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1, l. 21, b. 1, pr. 4, l. 158; and hence the sb. auaunt, avaunt, avant, in Chaucer, C. T. 227. However, the prefix is to be neglected. Cf. avauntour, a vaunter, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 724.]—F. vanter; 'se vanter, to vaunt, brag, boast, glory, crack;' Cot.—Late L. vānitāre, to speak vanity, flatter (Ducange); so that se vanter=to speak vainly of oneself. (Diez remarks that vānitāre, to boast, occurs in S. Augustine, Opp. i. 437, 761.) This verb is a frequentative formed from L. uānus, vain. See Vain; and cf. L. uānitās, vanity. Der. vaunt, sb., ME. auaunte; vaunt-er, formerly avauntour (as above), or avaunter, Court of Love, 1219.

VAVASSOR, a vassal not holding immediately from the sovereign, but from a great lord, having inferior vassals under him. (F.—Late L.—C.) 'A worthy vavasour;' Chaucer, C. T., prol. 360.—OF. vavassour.—Late L. vassus vassorum, lit. 'vassal of vassals.' The Late L. vassus is of Celtic origin; see Vassal.

VAWARD, another spelling of vanward or vanguard. (F.—L. and G.) In Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 209; and vanward, in Drayton, Battle of Agincourt, st. 218. Spelt vaward, in Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, l. 602. See Van (1).

VEAL, the flesh of a calf. (F.—L.) ME. veal, Chaucer, C. T. 9294 (E 1420).—OF. veäl, later veau, 'a calfe, or veale;' Cot.—L. vitellum, acc. of vitellus, a little calf, allied to vitulus, a calf. + Gk. ἰραλός, the same (little used). Allied to Skt. vatsa, a calf, vatsatara, a steer, vatsalā, a cow anxious for her calf. β. All from Idg. **wetos*, a year, as in Gk. ἔτος, a year. See Wether. Hence the sense of Skt. vatsa was really 'a yearling calf;' and the same sense of 'yearling' was the orig. one of L. vitulus. γ. From the same sense of 'year,' differently applied, we have L. uetus, old in years, aged, uetulus, a little old man. See Veteran. Der. vell-um, q. v.

VEDA, knowledge; one of the ancient sacred books written in Skt. (Skt.) vēda, 'knowledge; the generic name for the sacred writings of the Hindus, esp. the 4 collections called rig-vēda, yajur-vēda, sāma-vēda, and atharva-vēda;' Benfey, p. 900. Formed by gradation (Skt. ē=Gk. oi=AS. ā) from vid, to know, cognate with E. Wit, q. v. The Skt. nom. case is vēdas.

VEDETTE, VIDETTE, a cavalry sentinel. (F.—Ital.—L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson.—MF. vedette, 'a sentry; any high place from which one may see afar off;' Cot.—Ital. vedetta, a horse-sentry; also a sentry-box; formerly a watch-tower, a beacon, a peeping-hole (Florio). An altered or dimin. form of Ital. veduta, 'a high prospect' (Florio); orig. fem. pp. of vedere, to see.—L. uidēre, to see; see Vision. See Körting, § 10156. ¶ Diez takes it to be an Ital. corruption of veletta, a sentry-box; due to confusion with vedere, to see (pp. veduto), from which vedetta cannot (he thinks) be derived. Veletta is a dimin. of veglia, a watch, watching, vigil; just as Span. veleta, a weather-cock (lit. a watcher), is a dimin. of Span. vela, a watching, vigil (Diez).—L. uigilia; see Vigil. But, as Körting notes, the dimin. of veglia would have been veglietta, not veletta.

VEER, to turn round, change direction, swerve. (F.—L.) 'Vere the main shete;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 1; 'and vereth his main sheat,' id. v. 12. 18. 'Vere the shete;' Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 2 (15th cent.). [The spelling with e or ee is hard to explain; but it may have been due to the confusion between the sound of ee in late ME. and that of F. i. Sir P. Sidney writes vire; see Nares.]—F. virer, 'to veer, turne round, wheele or whirle about;' Cot. β. The F. virer is the same word as Span. virar, birar, to wind, twist, tack, or veer, Port. virar, to turn, change, Prov. virar, to turn, to change (Bartsch). Allied words are Port. viravolta, a circular motion, Ital. violare, 'to scruē,' i. e. twist round (Florio); &c. The orig. sense is to turn round, and it appears as Late L. virāre, which is rather an old word (Diez); it appears also in F. en-vir-on, round about, in a circle (whence E. environs), in F. vir-ole (whence E. ferrule), and in MF. vir-ol-et, 'a boy's windmill,' Cot. γ. The key to this difficult word lies in the sense of 'ring' or 'circle' as appearing in environ and ferrule; the Late L. virola, a ring to bind anything, answers to L. uiriola, a bracelet, dimin. of uiria, an armlet, large ring, gen. used in the pl. form uiria.—✓WEI, to twist, wind round; see Ferrule, Withy. ¶ The Du. viere, to veer, is merely borrowed (like our own word) from F. virer. The old derivation of virer from L. gyrāre cannot possibly be sustained; even the above solution is doubtful. See Diez; and Körting, § 10135. The latter refers (but obscurely) Late L. virāre to ✓WEI. Der. (from L. uir-ia), en-vir-on, ferr-ule.

VEGETABLE, a plant for the table. (F.—L.) Properly an adj., as used by Milton, P. L. iv. 220. The pl. vegetables is given (both as E. and F.) in Supp. to Palsgrave, p. 1053. [Instead of vegetables, Shak. has vegetives, Pericles, iii. 2. 36; and Ben Jonson has vegetals, Alchemist, i. 1. 40.]—MF. vegetable, 'vegetable, fit or able to live;' Cot.—L. uegetābilis, animating; hence, full of life. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from L. uegetā-re, to enliven, quicken.—L. uegetus, lively.—L. uegēre, to excite, quicken, arouse; allied to uig-il, wakeful, and uig-ēre, to flourish. See Vigil, Vigorous. Der. (from uegetāre) veget-ate; veget-at-ion, from F. vegetation, 'a giving of life,' Cot.; veget-at-ive (Palsgrave), from F. vegetatif, 'vegetative, lively,' Cot.; veget-al (as above), from MF. vegetal, 'vegetall,' Cot.; veget-arian, a modern coined word, to denote a vegetable-arian, or one who lives on vegetables (though it should rather mean 'vigorous'); veget-ar-i-an-ism.

VEHEMENT, passionate, very eager. (F.—L.) In Palsgrave.—MF. vehement, 'vehement;' Cot.—L. uehementem, acc. of uehemens, passionate, eager, vehement. Vehe- has been explained as equivalent to uē-, 'apart from,' as in uē-cors, senseless; cf. Skt. vahis, apart; cf. E. de-ment-ed. For mens, the mind, see Mental. Der. vehement-ly; vehemence (Levins), from MF. vehemence, 'vehemence,' from L. uehementia.

VEHICLE, a carriage, conveyance. (L.) 'Alms are but the vehicles of prayer;' Dryden, Hind and Panther, l. 1400. Englished from L. uehiculum, a carriage.—L. ueh-ere, to carry; with double dimin. suffix -cu-lum.—✓WEGH, to carry; whence also Skt. vah, to carry, Gk. ὄχ-os, a chariot. Brugmann, i. § 128. Der. vehicul-ar, from L. uehicularis, adj. And see veil, con-vex, in-veigh, vex, vein, via-duct, voy-age.

VEIL, a curtain, covering, cover for the face, disguise. (F.—L.) ME. veile, Ancrer Riwle, p. 420.—OF. veile (Burguy), later voile, 'a vaille;' Cot.—L. uēlum, a sail; also, a cloth, covering. The orig. sense was sail or 'propeller' of a ship; Curtius, i. 237.—Velum is for **uexlum*=**uēc-slum*; cf. uexillum, a standard. Brugmann, i. § 883.—L. ueh-ere (pt. t. ueh-i), to carry, bear along; see Vehicle. But Walde derives it from ✓WEG, to weave; as seen in OIrish fig-im, I weave; cf. W. gwe, a web of cloth. Der. veil, verb.

VEIN, a tube conveying blood to the heart, a small rib on a leaf. (F.—L.) ME. veine, Gower, C. A. iii. 92 (bk. vii. 245); Chaucer has veine-blood, C. T. 2749 (A 2747).—F. veinz, 'a vein;' Cot.—L. uēna, a vein. For **uēc-sna*; perhaps (like uē-lum, see Veil) from L. ueh-ere, to carry; a vein being the 'conveyer' of blood.—✓WEGH, to carry; see Vehicle. Der. vein-ed.

VELDT, an open grassy tract of country. (Du.) A term used in S. Africa.—MDu. veldt, 'a field, or a campagne,' Hexham; Du. veld. The same word as AS. feld, a field; see Field.

VELLUM, prepared skin of calves, &c., for writing on. (F.—L.) ME. velim, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 204; spelt velyme in Prompt. Parv., and velym in Palsgrave.—F. velin, 'vellam;' Cot. Mod. F. velin. (For the change of final n to m, compare venom).—L. uitulinus, adj., belonging to a calf.—L. uitulus, a calf; see Veal. Cf. Late L. uitulinum, or pellis uitulina, vellum.

VELOCIPEDE, a light carriage for one person, propelled by the feet. (L.) Modern; coined from L. uēlōci-, from uēlōx, swift; and ped-, stem of pēs, the foot, cognate with E. Foot. Thus the sense is 'swift-foot,' or 'swift-footed.' See Velocity.

VELOCITY, great speed. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. — MF. velocité, 'velocity'; Cot. — L. acc. uēlōcitatē, acc. of uēlōcītās, swiftness, speed. — L. uēlōci-, decl. stem of uēlōx, swift; with suffix -tās. The lit. sense of uēlōx is 'flying'; if it be allied to uol-āre, to fly; see Volatile.

VELVET, a cloth made from silk, with a close, shaggy pile; also made from cotton. (F.—L.) 'Velvet, or veluet, Velvetus;' Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has the pl. veluētīs (four syllables), C. T. 10958, F 644; whilst Spenser has vellet, Shep. Kal., May, 185. [Again, the form vellure occurs in Holinshed, Descr. of England, b. iii. c. r (R.); which is borrowed from F. velours, 'velvet,' Cot.] But velvet, veluet, velouet, vellet are from AF. velwet, veluet, Late L. velluētum; from a Romanic type **villūtettum*. Allied to MItal. veluto, 'veluet,' Florio; mod. Ital. velluto. β. The Ital. velluto answers to a Late L. type **villūtus*, shaggy, allied to L. uillōsus, shaggy; whilst F. velours (OF. velous, the r being unoriginal) answers to L. uillōsus directly. — L. uillus, shaggy hair, a tuft of hair; so that velvet means 'woolly' or shaggy stuff, from its nap. Allied to uellus, a fleece; see Wool. Der. velvet-y, velvet-ing.

VENAL, that can be bought, mercenary. (F.—L.) In Pope, Epistle to Jervas, l. 2. — MF. venal, 'vendible, saleable'; Cot. — L. uēnālis, saleable, for sale. — L. uēn-us, or uēn-um, sale. Allied to Gk. ōvos, price, ōvḗ, a buying; Brugmann, i. § 329. Der. venal-ity, from MF. venaliē, 'venality,' Cot.; from L. acc. uēnālītātē.

VEND, to sell. (F.—L.) 'Twenty thousand pounds worth of this coarse commodity is yearly . . . vended in the vicinage;' Fuller, Worthies, Yorkshire. — F. vendre, 'to sell'; Cot. — L. uendere, to sell; contracted from uēmundare, to sell, which again stands for uēnum dare, to offer for sale, a phrase which occurs in Claudian, &c. — L. uēnum, sale; and dare, to give, offer; see Venial and Date (1). Der. vend-er or vend-or; vend-ible, Merch. Ven. i. r. 112, from F. vendible, 'vendible,' Cot., from L. uendibilis, saleable; we also find vend-able, a spelling due to MF. vendable (Cot.), formed from the F. verb vendre; vend-ibl-y, vend-ible-ness.

VENDETTA, a blood-feud; esp. in Corsica. (Ital.—L.) Ital. vendetta, lit. 'vengeance, revenge.' — L. vindicta, revenge; see Vindictive.

VENEER, to overlay or face with a thin slice of wood. (G.—F. — OHG.) This curious word, after being borrowed by French from Old German, was again borrowed back from French, as if it had been foreign to the G. language. It is not old in E., and the sense has changed. It was orig. used with reference to marquetry-work. 'Veneering, a kind of inlaid work;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Johnson (quoting from Bailey) describes to veneer as signifying 'to make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine wood of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood.' Also formerly spelt fanneer, as in Old Farming Words (E. D. S.), Part I; and fineer, Smollett, France and Italy, let. 28 (Davies). The E. verb (older than the sb.) is borrowed from G. furniren, to inlay, to veneer, lit. 'to furnish' or provide small pieces of wood; from the careful arrangement of the pieces. — F. fournir, 'to furnish, supply, minister, find, provide of [i. e. with], accommodate with;' Cot. A word of OHG. origin; see Furnish. Der. veneer, sb., veneering. Doublet, furnish.

VENERABLE, worthy of reverence. (F.—L.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 167. — MF. venerable, 'venerable'; Cot. — L. uenerābilis, to be revered. — L. uenerārī, to reverence, worship, adore. — L. uener-, for **uenes-*, stem of uenus, love; allied to Skt. van, to serve, to honour. — ✓WEN, to love, to win; Fick, i. 768; Benfey, p. 812. See Venereal, and Win. Der. venerabl-y, venerable-ness; also (from pp. uenerātus) venerate, Geo. Herbert, The Church Porch, st. 45; eneration, from MF. eneration, 'veneration,' Cot., from L. acc. uenerātiōnem.

VENEREAL, pertaining to sexual intercourse. (L.) Spelt veneriall in Levins. Coined, with suffix -al, from L. Venerius (also Venerius), belonging to Venus. [The MF. word is venerien (Cotgrave), whence venerean in Chaucer, C. T. 6191 (D 609).] — L. Vener-, for **uenes-*, stem of Venus, Venus, love. Allied to Skt. van, to love. See Venerable and Win. Der. venery, sb., spelt venerie in Levins, from L. Venerius.

VENERY, hunting, the sport of the chase. (F.—L.) ME. venerie, Chaucer, C. T. 166. — MF. venerie, 'a hunt, or hunting'; Cot. — MF. vener, 'to hunt'; id. — L. uēnārī, to hunt; see Venison.

VENESECTON, blood-letting. (L.; and F.—L.) According to Richardson, it is spelt venæsection in Wiseman's Surgery, b. i. c. 3. — L. uēnæ, uēnæ, gen. case of uēna, a vein; and F. section. See Vein and Section.

VENUE, VENUE, VENUEY, a thrust received at playing with weapons; a turn or bout at fencing. (F.—L.) In Merry Wives, i. r. 296; L. L. L. v. r. 62. — MF. venue, 'a coming, arrivall, also a venny in fencing, a turn, trick'; Cot. The sense is 'an arrivall,' hence a thrust that attains the person aimed at, one that reaches home. Venue is the fem. of venu, pp. of venir, to come. — L. uenire, to come, cognate with E. Come, q. v. Doublet, venue, q. v.

VENGEANCE, retribution, vindictive punishment. (F.—L.) ME. vengeance, vengeaunce; but spelt vengeaunce, King Alisaunder, 4194. — F. vengeance, 'vengeance'; Cot. — F. venger, 'to avenge,' id.; with suffix -ance (< L. -antia). Cf. Span. vingar, Ital. vingiare. — L. uindicare, to lay claim to, also to avenge; cf. F. manger < L. manducare. See Vindicate. Der. a-venge, re-venge (from F. venger); also venge-ful, i. e. avenge-ful, Tit. Andron. v. 2. 51; venge-ful-ly.

VENIAL, excusable, that may be pardoned. (F.—L.) ME. uenial (= venial), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 16, l. 9; P. Plowman, B. xiv. 92. — OF. venial (Littre). — L. ueniālis, pardonable. — L. uenia, grace, favour, kindness; also, pardon. Allied to Skt. van, to love. — ✓WEN, to love, win; see Venerable and Win. Der. venial-ly, venial-ness or venial-ity.

VENISON, the flesh of animals taken in hunting, esp. flesh of deer. (F.—L.) ME. veneison; spelt ueneyusun, Havelok, 1726, veneson, Rob. of Glouc. p. 243, l. 101. — OF. veneisun (Burguy), later venaison, 'venison, the flesh of (edible) beasts of chase, as the deer, wild boar,' &c., Cot. — L. uēnātiōnem, acc. of uēnātio, the chase; also, that which is hunted, game; cf. uēnātus, pp. of uēnārī, to hunt. See Gain (2). Der. (from L. uēnārī) venery, q. v.

VENOM, poison. (F.—L.) ME. venim; spelt venyme, King Alisaunder, 2860; venym, Rob. of Glouc. p. 43, l. 1010. — OF. venim, 'venome,' Cot. We also find OF. velin; mod. F. venin. — L. uenenum, poison. (For change of n to m, cf. vellum.) Perhaps uenenum is for **uenesnum*, a love-potion; from **uenes-*, **uenos-*; cf. uenus, love. Der. venom-ous, ME. venimous, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 203, l. 17, from F. venimeux, 'venomous,' Cot., from L. uēnēdōsus, poisonous; venomous-ly, -ness.

VENOUS, contained in a vein. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from L. uēnōsus, belonging to a vein. — L. uēna, a vein; see Vein.

VENT (1), an opening for air or smoke, an air-hole, flue. (F.—L.) 'A vent, meatus, porus; To vent, aperire, euacuare;' Levins. Halliwell gives Somerset vent-hole, a button-hole in a wristband. It is most likely that the word has been connected in popular etymology with F. vent, the wind, as if it were a hole to let wind or air in; but the senses of 'aperture' and 'wind' are widely different. The older spelling was fent or fente, used in the sense of slit in a garment, whence the notion of 'button-hole.' The Prompt. Parv. gives: 'Fente of a clothe, fibulatorium,' on which Way notes that 'the fent or vent, in the 13th cent., appears at the collar of the robe, . . . being a short slit closed by a brooch, which served for greater convenience in putting on a dress so fashioned as to fit closely round the throat;' see the whole note. 'The collar and the vente;' Assemblée of Ladies, 526. 'Fent of a gowne, fente;' Palsgrave. The sense was easily extended to slits and apertures of all kinds, esp. as the F. original was unrestricted. — F. fente, 'a cleft, rift, chinke, slit, cranny;' Cot. A participial sb. from the verb fendre, to cleave. — L. findere, to cleave; see Fissure. Der. vent, verb, to emit from an orifice, as in 'can he vent [emit] Trinculos?' Temp. ii. 2. 111; but it is tolerably certain that the use of this verb was influenced by F. vent, wind; see Vent (3). And see Vent (2).

VENT (2), sale, utterance of commodities, and hence, generally, utterance, outlet, publication. (F.—L.) 'The merchant-adventurers likewise . . . did hold out bravely; taking off the commodities . . . though they lay dead upon their hands for want of vent;' Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 146, l. 6. 'Vent of utterance of the same,' viz. of 'spices, drugges, and other commodities;' Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 347. 'Find the meanes to haue a vent to make sales;' id. i. 356. — F. vente, 'a sale, or selling, an alienation, or passing away for money,' &c.; Cot. Vente is a participial sb. from the F. vendre, 'to sell,' Cot. — L. uendere, to sell; see Vend. Der. vent, to utter, as in: 'when he found ill money had been put into his hands, he would never suffer it to be vented again,' Burnet, Life of Hale (R.); but it is tolerably certain that the use of vent as a verb has been largely influenced by confusion with Vent (1) and Vent (3), and it is extremely difficult to determine its complete history without very numerous examples of its use.

VENT (3), to snuff up air, breathe, or puff out, to expose to air. (F.—L.) 'See howe he [a bullock] venteth into the wynd;' Spenser, Sheph. Kal. Feb. 75. Explained by 'snuffeth in the wind' in the Glosse, but more likely it means to puff out or exhale. In Spenser,

F. Q. iii. 1. 42, we are told that Britomart 'vented up her umbriere. And so did let her goodly visage to appear.' Here the poet was probably thinking of F. vent, the wind, and of the part of the helmet called the ventail or aventail, which was the lower half of the movable front of a helmet as distinct from the upper half or visor, with which it is often confused; see my note on aventail in Chaucer, C. T. Group E, 1204. If we had a large collection of quotations illustrative of the use of vent as a verb, I suspect it would appear that the connexion with the F. vent, wind, was due solely to a misunderstanding and misuse of the word, and that it is etymologically due to Vent (1) or Vent (2), or to confusion of both; and, in particular, to inability to account for Vent (1), shown above to be used in place of ME. fente. That writers used the word with reference to air is certain; we have: 'there's none [air] abroad so wholesome as that you vent;' Cymb. i. 2. 5; also: 'which have poisoned the very air of our church wherein they were vented;' Bp. Hall, Ser. Eccl. iii. 4 (R.); and hence the sbs. ventage, venting-hole (see below). — F. venter, '(the wind) to blow or puffe,' Cot. — F. vent, the wind. — L. uentum, acc. of uentus, wind, cognate with E. Wind, q.v. Der. vent-age, the air-hole of a flute (app. a coined word), Hamlet, iii. 2. 373; vent-ing-hole, an outlet for vapour, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxi. c. 3. § last. And see vent-ail, vent-il-ate.

VENTAIL, the lower half of the movable part of the front of a helmet. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 24, iv. 6. 19. ME. ventaile, Early E. Wills, ed. Furnivall, p. 19, l. 4 (1411); also aventaille, Chaucer, C. T. 9080 (E 1204), which is the same word with the addition of F. prefix a- (<L. ad-). — AF. ventaile, Langtoft, ii. 428; MF. ventaille, 'the breathing-part of a helmet.' — F. venter, 'to blow or puffe,' Cot.; with suffix -aile <L. -ā-cu-lum. — F. vent, wind. — L. uentum, acc. of uentus, wind; see Vent (3), Ventilate, and Wind.

VENTILATE, to fan with wind, to open to air, expose to air or to the public view. (L.) Spelt ventylate in Palsgrave. Ventilate is used as a pp. by Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 25, § 3; and in Trevisa, ii. 141, 299 (later text). — L. uentilātus, pp. of uentilāre, to blow, winnow, ventilate. From an adj. **uentilus* (not used), from uentus, wind, cognate with E. Wind. Der. ventilat-or, from L. uentilātor, a winnower; ventilat-ion, MF. ventilation, 'a ventilation, breathing,' Cot., from L. acc. uentilātiōnem.

VENTRAL, belonging to the belly. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. — L. uentrālis, belonging to the belly. — L. uentr-, for uenter, the belly. Der. ventri-cle, q.v.; ventri-loquist, q.v.

VENTRICLE, the stomach; a part of the heart. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave; and in Lanfrank, Chirurgie, p. 113. — F. ventricule, 'the ventricle, the place wherein the meat sent from the stomach is digested, some call so the stomach itself;' Cot. — L. uentriculum, acc. of uentriculus, the stomach, also a ventricle of the heart. A double dimin. (with suffix -cu-lu-) from uentri-, decl. stem of uenter, the belly; see Ventral. Der. ventricul-ar.

VENTRILOQUIST, one who speaks so that the voice seems to come from a distance or from some one else. (L.) 'Ventriloquium, a speaking in the belly;' Ady, Discovery of Witches (1661), p. 77. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; but Phillips has ventriloquus, 'a person that speaks inwardly;' this is the true L. word, whence ventriloqu-ist has since been formed, by adding the suffix -ist (L. -ista, Gk. -ιστης). — L. uentriloquus, a ventriloquist, lit. one who speaks from (or in) the belly. — L. uentri-, decl. stem of uenter, the belly; and loqu-i, to speak; see Ventral and Loquacious. Der. ventriloqu-ism.

VENTURE, chance, luck, hazard. (F.—L.) Common in Shak. both as sb. and vb.; as sb., Merch. Ven. i. 3. 92; as a verb, id. iii. 2. 10. It is a headless form of ME. aventure or auenture, which also took the form Adventure, q.v. Der. ventur-ous, Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 39, short for ME. auenturous, later adventurous; ventur-ous-ly, -ness. Also venture-some, in Strype, Eccles. Mem., Henry VIII, an. 1546 (R.), where the suffix -some is English.

VENUE, the same as Venew, q.v. (F.—L.) As a law-term, it is the place where the jury are summoned to come; from F. venüē, 'a coming, arrival, approach, a passage, access,' Cotgrave; which is merely another sense of venew, as above. β. Blackstone has: 'a change of the venue, or visne (that is, the vicinia or neighbourhood in which the injury is declared to be done);' Comment. b. iii. c. 20. His interpretation of visne as having the same sense as L. vicinia is right; but that has nothing to do with the etymology of venue, which is, of course, a different word. Der. a-venue.

VENUS, the goddess of love. (L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 1538 (A 1536). — L. Venus; see Venereal.

VERACIOUS, truthful. (L.) A late word; Phillips, ed. 1706, has only the sb. veracity. Coined from L. uērāci-, decl. stem of uērax, truthful; with suffix -ous. — L. uēr-us, true. β. The orig. sense is 'credible;' see Very. Der. verac-i-ty, Englished from L. uērāci-tās, truthfulness.

VERANDA, VERANDAH, a kind of covered balcony. (Port.—L.?) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson; it should be spelt varanda. 'The other gate leads to what in this country [India] is called a veranda or feranda, which is a kind of piazza or landing-place before you enter the hall or inner apartments;' Archæologia (1787), viii. 254. — Port. varanda, a balcony. Marsden, in his Malay Dict., 1812, p. 30, has: 'barāndah (Portuguese), a varānda, balcony, or open gallery to a house;' but the Malay word is, as Marsden says, adapted from the Portuguese. Cf. OSpan. varanda, in the sense of balustrade or stair-railing; as early as A.D. 1505; see the quotation in Yule. Perhaps from Port. and Span. vara, a rod; from L. nāra, a forked pole. Cf. Port. varal, the shaft of a post-chaise. Dryden has varē, a rod; Absalom, i. 595. ¶ Hence also mod. Skt. varaṇḍa, a portico; the Skt. (or Hind.) word being quite modern. Minshen's Span. Dict. (1623) has 'Vara, a rod;' and 'Varanda, railes to leane the brest on.'

VERB, the word; in grammar, the chief word of a sentence. (F.—L.) ME. verbe (15th cent.), Reliq. Antiquæ, ii. 14. Palsgrave gives a 'Table of Verbes.' — F. verbe, 'a verbe;' Cot. — L. uerbum, a word, a verb. β. Here the L. b represents an Idg. dh (> Teut. d); and uerbum is cognate with E. Word, q.v. — ✓ WER, to speak; cf. Gk. εἰπ-ειν (< fép-yeiv), to speak; Fick, i. 772. Der. verb-al (Palsgrave), from F. verbal, 'verball,' Cot., from L. uerbālis, belonging to a word; verbal-ly; verbal-ise, to turn into a verb, a coined word; verbal-ism; verb-i-age, wordiness, not in Johnson's Dict., but used by him on April 9, 1778 (Boswell), from F. verbiage, a late F. word, coined (according to Littré) from OF. verboier (**verbier*), to talk; verb-ose, wordy (Phillips), from L. uerbōsus; verb-ose-ly, verb-ose-ness, verb-os-i-ty. Also verbatim, 1 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 13, from L. uerbātīm, adv. word by word.

VERBENA, vervain. (L.) See Vervain.

VERDANT, green, flourishing. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 13. Coined as if from a F. **verdant*, substituted for F. verdissant, pres. part. of verdir, 'to flourish, to wax green;' Cot. — F. verd, green. — L. uiridem, acc. of uiridis, green. See Vert. Cf. also OF. verdoyant, becoming green (Supp. to Godefroy). Der. verdant-ly, verdanc-y; also verd-ure, Temp. i. 2. 87, from F. verdure, 'verdure,' Cot.; also verdur-ous (Nares). And see farthingale, verdigris, verjuice.

VERDERER, a wood-ward, forester. (F.—L.) 'Forresters, verderers;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. iv. let. 16. Formed by adding -er (needlessly) to AF. verder, which is glossed by 'wode-ward' in W. de Bibbesworth; Wright's Voc. i. 164. — Late L. uiridarius, a forester (Ducange). — L. uirid-is, green (above).

VERDICT, the decision of a jury, decision. (F.—L.) Lit. 'a true saying.' The true word is verdit, pedantically altered to the mongrel form verdict, to bring the latter half of it nearer to the L. spelling. ME. verdit, Chaucer, C. T. 789 (A 787). — OF. verdit, a verdict; see verdict in Littré, the mod. F. form being borrowed again from English. — L. uērē dictum, truly said, which passed into Late L. uērēdictum, with the sense of true saying or verdict, occurring A.D. 1287 (Ducange). Formed similarly to bene-diction, male-diction. — L. uērē, truly, adv., from uērus, true; and dictum, a saying, orig. neut. of pp. of dicere, to say; see Very and Diction.

VERDIGRIS, the rust of bronze, copper, or brass. (F.—L.) Spelt verdgrese in Arnold's Chronicle (1502), repr. 1811, p. 74; verdegrees, Chaucer, C. T. 16258 (G 790). Cf. MF. verd de gris, 'verdigrease, Spanish green,' Cot.; spelt verte grez in the 13th cent. (Littré). But the Prompt. Parv. has: 'Verte grece, viride grecum, flos eris.' So also: 'Viride grecum, verdegrece;' Wright's Voc. 619. 35. Hence the sense is 'Greek green,' or 'green of Greece'; and we may explain ME. verte grece as from AF. vert de Grece, for which see Vie de S. Gile, 853. See Verdant. See Academy, no. 1118, Oct. 1893.

VERDITER, a green pigment. (F.—L.) Adapted from MF. verd de terre, a green pigment; Cot. — L. acc. uiridem, green (see Verdant); dē, of; terra, earth.

VERGE (1), a wand of office, extent of jurisdiction, edge, brink. (F.—L.) In the sense of edge or brink it is quite a different word from verge, to incline (see below), though some late writers may have confused the words, as indeed is done in Johnson's Dict. The sense of 'edge' follows at once from the use of verge (as a law-term) to mean a limit or circuit, hence a circle, Rich. II, ii. 1. 102; cf. i. 1. 93. In the sense of 'wand,' it is best known by the derivative verger, a wand-bearer. ME. verge. 'Verge, in a wrytys [wright's] werke, Virgata;' Prompt. Parv. Here it must mean a yard (in length); cf. verge le roy, a standard length; Liber Albus, p. 278. — F. verge, 'a rod, wand, stick; also, a sergeant's verge or mace; also, a yard; . . . a plaine hooue, or gimmel, ring; also, a rood of land;' Cot. — L. uirga, a twig, rod, wand. Der. verg-er, a wand-bearer, 'that bereth a rodde in the churche' (Palsgrave), from MF. verger, 'one that beares a verge before a magistrate, a verger,' Cot., from Late L. uirgarius, an apparitor, occurring A. D. 1370 (Ducange).

VERGE (2), to tend towards, tend, slope, border on. (L.) 'Verging more and more westward;' Fuller, Worthies, Somersetshire (R.).—L. uergere, to bend, turn, incline, verge towards, incline. Allied to Skt. vrjana-, crooked, vrj, to exclude (of which the orig. sense seems to be to bend; Benfey).—✓WERG, to bend, turn, force; Fick, i. 772. ¶ The phrase 'to be on the verge of' is perhaps connected with this verb by many writers; but belongs to VERGE (1). Der. con-verge, di-verge.

VERIFY, to show to be true, confirm by evidence. (F.—L.) 'I verifie, Je verifie;' Palsgrave.—MF. verifier, 'to verifie;' Cot.—L. uerificāre, to make true.—L. ueri-, for uerus, true; and -ficāre, for facere, to make; see Very and Fact. Der. verifi-er, verifi-able, verific-at-ion, from MF. verification, 'a verification, verifying,' Cot.

VERILY, adv.; see Very.

VERISIMILITUDE, likelihood. (F.—L.) In Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 845 (R.).—MF. verisimilitude, 'likelihood;' Cot.—L. uerisimilitūdo, likelihood.—L. ueri similis, likely, like the truth.—L. ueri, gen. of uerum, the truth, orig. neut. of uerus, true; and similis, like; see Very and Similar.

VERITY, truth, a true assertion. (F.—L.) Spelt verytie in Levins.—MF. verité, 'verity;' Cot.—L. ueritatem, acc. of ueritās, truth.—L. uerus, true; see Very. Der. verit-able, spelt veritable in Palsgrave, from MF. veritable, 'true,' Cot., a coined word.

VERJUICE, a kind of vinegar. (F.—L.) ME. vergeous, verious, P. Plowman, A. v. 70 (footnote).—F. verjus, 'verjuice, esp. that which is made of sowre, and unripe grapes;' Cot. Lit. 'green juice.'—F. vert (spelt verd in Cotgrave), green; and jus, juice; see Verdant and Juice.

VERMEIL, vermilion. (F.—L.) 'A vermeil-tinctured lip;' Milton, Comus, 752.—F. vermeil, vermilion; see Vermilion.

VERMICELLI, dough of wheat flour formed into thin worm-like rolls. (Ital.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—Ital. vermicelli, lit. 'little worms;' from the shape. It is the pl. of vermicello, a little worm, which is the dimin. of verme, a worm.—L. uermem, acc. of uermis, a worm, cognate with E. Worm.

VERMICULAR, pertaining to a worm. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vermiculares, certain muscles, &c.; Vermicularis, worm-grass, lesser house-leek; Vermiculated, inlaid, wrought with checker-work; Vermiculation, worm-eating;' &c. All are derivatives from L. uermiculus, a little worm, double dimin. of uermis, a worm; see Worm. Der. So also vermi-form, worm-shaped; from uermi-, decl. stem of uermis, and form; also vermi-fuge, a remedy that expels a worm, from L. -fugus, putting to flight, from fugare, to put to flight; see Fugitive. And see vermilion, vermin, vermicelli.

VERMILION, a scarlet colouring substance obtained from cochineal, &c. (F.—L.) 'Vermilyone, minium;' Prompt. Parv.; spelt vermyloun, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 1 (later version).—F. vermillon, 'vermillion;' also, a little worm; Cot.—F. vermeil, 'vermillion;' id.—L. uermiculus, a little worm; double dimin. of uermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm. ¶ For the reason of the name, see Crimson and Cochineal; but vermillion is now generally made of red lead, or various mineral substances, and must have been so made at an early date; it was perhaps named merely from its resemblance to crimson.

VERMIN, any small obnoxious insect or animal. (F.—L.) ME. vermine, Chaucer, C. T. 8971 (E 1095).—F. vermine, 'vermine; also little beasts ingendred of corruption and filth, as lice, fleas, ticks, mice, rats;' Cot. As if from a L. adj. **uerminus*, formed from uermi-, decl. stem of uermis, a worm; see Vermicular and Worm.

VERNACULAR, native. (L.) 'In the vernacular dialect;' Fuller, Worthies, General (R.); and in Phillips, ed. 1706. Blount has vernaculous. Formed with suffix -ar (L. -āris) from L. uernācul-us, belonging to home-born slaves, domestic, native, indigenous; double dimin. of L. uernā, a home-born slave. β. Verna is for **ues-ina*, dwelling in one's house, from ✓WES, to dwell, live, be; see Was. Brugmann, ii. § 66. Der. vernacular-ly.

VERNAL, belonging to spring. (L.) Spelt vernall in Minshew, ed. 1627.—L. uernālis, vernal; extended from L. uernus, belonging to spring.—L. uer, the spring.—Gk. ēap (for **Fēap*), the spring; Russ. vesna, the spring; Lithuan. wasarā, summer; Icel. vār; Dan. vaar; Swed. vår. β. All from ✓WES, to brighten, dawn; cf. Skt. vasanta-, spring, ush, to burn, L. aurōra, dawn; Irish fáir, W. gwawr, dawn. Fick, i. 780.

VERNIER, a short scale made to slide along a graduated instrument for measuring intervals between its divisions. (F.) So named from its inventor (1631). 'Peter Vernier, of Franche Comté; inventor of scale, born 1580, died Sept. 14, 1637;' Hole, Brief Biographical Dictionary.

VERSATILE, turning easily from one thing to another. (F.—L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—F. versatil, 'quickly turning;' Cot.—L. uersātilis, that turns round, movable, versatile.—L. uersāre, to turn often, frequentative of uertere, to turn (pp. uersus); see Verse. Des. versatil-i-ty.

VERSE, a line of poetry, poetry, a stanza, short portion of the Bible or of a hymn. (L.) In very early use, and borrowed from Latin directly, not through the F. vers. 'Veerce, verse, Versus;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt fers in the Ormulum, 11943. AS. fers, a verse, a line of poetry; 'hū man tōdælð þā fers on ræðinge' = how one divides the verse in reading; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 291, l. 2.—Late L. uersus, a verse; L. uersus, a turning, a line, row; so named from the turning to begin a new line. [Vaniček separates uersus, a furrow, which he connects with uerrere, to sweep.]—L. uersus, pp. of uertere, to turn.—✓WERT, to turn; whence also E. worth, verb, to become; see Worth (1). Der. vers-ed, Milton, P. R. iv. 327, only in the phr. versed in = conversant with, and used (instead of versate) as a translation of L. uersatus, pp. of uersāre, to keep turning oneself about, passive form of the frequentative of uertere; and see vers-i-fy, vers-ion, &c. Also (from uertere), ad-vert, ad-verse, ad-vert-ise, anim-ad-vert, anni-vers-ary, a-vert, a-verse, contro-vert, con-vert, con-verse, di-vert, di-vers, di-verse, di-vers-i-fy, di-vorce, e-vert, in-ad-vert-ent, intro-vert, in-vert, in-verse, mal-vers-at-ion, ob-verse, per-vert, per-verse, re-vert, re-verse, sub-vert, sub-vers-ion, tergi-vers-at-ion, trans-verse, tra-verse, uni-verse, vers-at-ile, vert-ebra, vert-ex, vert-ig-o, vort-ex; and see verst.

VERSIFY, to make verses. (F.—L.) ME. versifien, P. Plowman, B. xv. 367.—F. versifier, 'to versifie,' Cot.—L. uersificāre, to versify.—L. uersi-, for uersus, a verse; and -ficāre, for facere, to make; see Verse and Fact. Der. versific-at-ion, in Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 977 (R.), from F. versification (omitted by Cotgrave), from L. acc. uersificātiōnem; versifi-er, Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 49.

VERSION, a translation, statement. (F.—L.) Formerly used in the sense of turning or change; Bacon's Essays, Ess. 58 (Of Vicissitude).—F. version, a version, a translation (not given in Cotgrave).—Late L. uersiōnem, acc. of uersio, regularly formed from uers-, as in uers-us, pp. of uertere, to turn.

VERST, a Russian measure of length. (Russ.) In Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 388, l. 30.—Russ. versta, a verst, 3,500 Eng. feet, a verst-post; also, age. For **vert-iā*; from ✓WERT, as in Russ. vertiet(e), to turn. Brugmann, ii. § 79.

VERT, green, in heraldry. (F.—L.) In Blount, ed. 1674. From F. vert, green; formerly verd, Cot.—L. uiridem, acc. of uiridis, green. Cf. L. uirāre, to be green.—W. gwyrdd, green; Corn. guirt. Or (if these Celtic words are borrowed from L.) perhaps allied to vivid; cf. Skt. jī-ra-, active, jī-va-, living. Brugmann, ii. § 74.

VERTEX, the top, summit. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; the adj. vertical is in Cotgrave.—L. uertex, the top, properly the turning-point, esp. the pole of the sky (which is the turning-point of the stars), but afterwards applied to the zenith.—L. uertere, to turn; see Verse. An older form of uertex was uortex. Brugmann, i. § 144. Der. vertic-al, from F. vertical, 'verticall,' Cot., from L. uertic-ālis, vertical, from uertic-, stem of vertex. Hence vertical-ly. Doublet, vortex.

VERTIGO, giddiness. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. uertigo (gen. uertigin-is), a turning or whirling round, giddiness.—L. uertere, to turn; see Verse.

VERVAIN, a plant of the genus verbena. (F.—L.) ME. verveyne, Gower, C. A. ii. 262 (bk. v. 4039).—F. verveine, 'verveine;' Cot.—L. uerbēna, used in pl. uerbēnce, sacred boughs, usually of olive, laurel, or myrtle. Allied to uerber, a rod, properly a twig, shoot.

VERVE, spirit, energy, enthusiasm. (F.—L.) 'If he . . . is resolved to follow his own verve, as the French call it;' Dryden, Ded. of the Æneid.—F. verve, 'a brawling, jangling, jarring; also, an odd humour in a man;' Cot. Supposed to represent a Late L. **uerua*, for L. uerba, lit. 'words,' i. e. talk, a neut. pl. treated as a fem. sing.; pl. of L. uerbum, a word; see Verb. (So Hatzfeld).

VERY, true, real, actual. (F.—L.) ME. verrai, verrei; 'verrey charite' = true charity, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 289; 'verrei man' = true man, id. C. xxii. 153. It occurs as verray in An Old Eng. Miscellany, p. 27, l. 26, in the O. Kentish Sermons (about A. D. 1240).—OF. verai, later vrai (in Cotgrave vray), true. Cf. Prov. verai, true. It answers to a Late L. type **uerācus*, not found; similarly, Scheler compares F. Cambrai, Douai from L. Cameracum, Duacum.

Cf. Schwan, § 56. This **vērācus* is a by-form of L. uērax (stem uērāc-), truthful, extended from uērus, true (represented in OF. by ver, veir, voir, true). β. The orig. sense of uērus is 'existing.' For **ues-ro-*; from ✓WES, to be. + W. gwir, OIrish fir, true; cf. Russ. viera, faith; G. wahr, true; AS. wær, true. Brugmann, i. § 367; § 818 (note 3). Der. very, adv., as in 'very well,' i.e. truly well, Sir T. More, Works, p. 108 h; veri-ly, adv., ME. verrailly, verailly, Chaucer, C. T. 13590 (B 1850). Also (from L. uērus) veri-fy, verisimilar, veri-ty, ver-acious; ver-dict; a-ver.

VESICLE, a small tumour, bladder-like cell. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Vesicula, a vesicle, or little bladder.' Englished from L. uēsīcula, a little bladder; dimin. of uēsīca, a bladder. Allied to Skt. vasti-, the bladder. Der. vesicul-ar, adj.; also vesic-at-ion, the raising of blisters on the skin.

VESPER, the evening star; the evening; pl. verspers, even-song. (L.) In the ecclesiastical sense, the word does not seem to be old, as the E. name for the service was eve-song or even-song. Vespers occurs in Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 7 (R.); and see the Index to Parker Soc. Publications. But we already find vesper, in the sense of evening-star, in Gower, C. A. ii. 109 (bk. iv. 3209). — L. uesper, the evening-star, the evening; cf. uespera, even-tide. Hence OF. vespre (F. vêpre), 'the evening,' Cot., and vespres, 'even-song,' id. + Gk. ἑσπερος, adj. and sb., evening, ἑσπερος ἀστήρ, the evening star; ἑσπέρα, even-tide; OIrish fescor, W. ucher, evening. Brugmann, i. §§ 329, 565 (3); Stokes-Fick, p. 278.

VESSEL, a utensil for holding liquids, &c., a ship. (F.—L.) ME. vessel, Chaucer, C. T. 5682 (D 100). — AF. vessel, a vessel, OF. vaissel, a ship (Burguy); later vaisseau, 'a vessel, of what kind soever;' Cot. — L. uascellum, a small vase or urn; dimin. of uas, a vase, whence also the dimin. uasculum; see VASCULAR, VASE.

VEST, a garment, waistcoat. (L.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 241. — L. uestis, a garment; orig. the act of putting on clothes (Bréal). Formed (with Idg. suffix -ti-) from ✓WES, to clothe, protect; cf. Skt. vas, to put on (clothes), Gk. ἐν-νυμι (< ἑσ-νυμι), I clothe, ἑσ-θής, clothing, Goth. gawasjan, to clothe, wasti, clothes; Curtius, i. 470. Der. vest, vb., formerly used in such phrases as to vest one with supreme power, and (less properly) to vest supreme power in one; see Phillips, ed. 1706; hence vest-ed, fully possessed. And see vestment, vest-ry, vest-ure. Also di-vest, in-vest, tra-vest-y.

VESTAL, chaste, pure. (F.—L.) As adj. in Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 38; as sb., a Vestal virgin, priestess of Vesta, Antony, iii. 12. 31. — F. vestal, a Vestal virgin; see Cotgrave. — L. Vestālis, belonging to a Vestal, also (for Vestālis uirgo), a priestess of Vesta. — L. Vesta, a Roman goddess; goddess of the flocks and household. + Gk. Ἑστία, daughter of Chronos and Rhea, goddess of the domestic hearth. — ✓WES, to dwell (Walde). See Was.

VESTIBULE, a porch. (L.) In Swinburne, Travels in Spain, p. 216. Phillips has only the L. form vestibulum. Englished from L. vestibulum, a fore-court, entrance-court, entrance. Lit. 'that which forms a part of the abode.' Perhaps from *L. *ues-ti-*, a dwelling; with suffix -bulum, as in sessi-bulum, a seat. Cf. Skt. vasta-, vāstu-, a house, OHG. wist, an abode; from ✓WES, to dwell (Walde).

VESTIGE, a foot-print, a trace. (F.—L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. vestige, 'a step, foot-step, track, trace;' Cot. — L. uestīgum, a foot-step, track. β. Of doubtful origin; see Walde.

VESTMENT, a garment, long robe. (F.—L.) ME. vestment; pl. vestimenz, Ancren Riwle, p. 418. This form occurs as late as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 29; whilst the Prompt. Parv. has both vestment and vestymētum. — OF. vestement, 'a vestment,' Cot. (Mod. F. vêtement). — L. uestimentum, a garment. — L. uesti-re, to clothe. — L. uesti-, decl. stem of uestis; see Vest.

VESTRY, a place for keeping vestments. (F.—L.) ME. vestrye, Prompt. Parv. Slightly altered from OF. vestiaire, whence MF. vestiaire, 'the vestry in a church;' Cot. — L. uestiārium, a wardrobe; orig. neut. of uestiārius, adj., belonging to a vest or robe. — L. uesti-, decl. stem of uestis, a garment; see Vest.

VESTURE, dress, a robe. (F.—L.) In P. Plowman, B. i. 23. — OF. vestūre, MF. vesture, 'a clothing, arraying;' Cot. — Late L. uestitūra, clothing. — L. uestit-us, pp. of uestire, to clothe. — L. uesti-, decl. stem of uestis; see Vest. Cf. E. in-vestiture.

VETCH, a genus of plants. (F.—L.) The same as fitch; pl. fitches, Isaiah xxviii. 25, Ezek. iv. 9 (A.V.). In the earlier of Wyclif's versions of Isaiah xxviii. 25, the word is written fiche, and in the later fetichis. Baret (Alvearie) gives: 'Fitches, Vicia . . Plin. βίκιον; A. vinciendo, vt Varroni placet; Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. For the variation of the initial letter, cf. fane and vane, fat and vat; the variation is dialectal, and in the present case the right form is that with initial v. The correct ME. spelling would be veche; we actually find 'Orobis, vech' in Voc. 599. 26; also 'Hec uicia, Anglice fêche' in Voc. 664. 24, in a vocabulary strongly marked by Northern forms; fêche being the Northern form corresponding to the Southern veche. — ONorth. F. veche (Walloon veche), OF. vece, MF. vesce, a vetch. Palsgrave has: 'Fetche, a lytell pease, uesse, ueche, lentille;' whilst Cotgrave has: 'Vesce, the pulse called fitch or vitch.' — L. uicia, a vetch; whence also G. wicke, Dn. wikke. β. As the vetch has tendrils, Varro's derivation is perhaps to be accepted; viz. from the base WEIK, to bind, as appearing in uincire, to bind, uinca, a plant (orig. a climbing one). Cf. ✓WEI, to wind, whence L. uī-tis, a vine, uī-men, a pliant twig. See Withy.

VETERAN, experienced, long exercised in military life. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. ueterānus, old, veteran, experienced; as sb., a veteran. — L. ueter-, for **uetes-*, stem of uetus, old, aged; lit. 'advanced in years.' Cf. Gk. ἔτος (= Fér-os), a year, Skt. vatsa-, a year. See Veal. Der. veteran, sb. From the same base are veter-in-ar-y, in-veter-ate, veal, wether.

VETERINARY, pertaining to the art of treating diseases of domestic animals. (L.) 'Veterinarian, he that lets horses or mules to hire, a hackney-man, also a horse-leech or farrier;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Sir T. Browne has veterinarian as a sb., Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 2, § 1. — L. ueterinārius, of or belonging to beasts of burden; as sb., a cattle-doctor. — L. ueterinus, belonging to beasts of burden; pl. ueterinæ (sc. bestiæ), beasts of burden. β. The L. ueterina probably meant, originally, an old animal, one that was no longer fit for anything but carrying burdens; from the same base as that which occurs in uetus (gen. ueter-is), old; see Veteran and Veal. And see Wether. Der. veterinari-an, as above.

VETO, a prohibition. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. — L. ueto, I forbid; hence, the saying of 'I forbid,' i.e. a prohibition. OL. uoto. Der. veto, verb.

VEX, to harass, torment, irritate. (F.—L.) ME. vexen, Prompt. Parv. — F. vexer, 'to vex;' Cot. — L. uexāre, to vex, orig. to shake; of doubtful origin. Der. vex-at-ion, from F. vexation, 'vexation,' Cot., from L. acc. uexātiōnem; vex-at-i-ous, vex-at-i-ous-ly, vex-at-i-ous-ness.

VIADUCT, a road or railway carried across a valley or river. (L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Englished from L. uia ducta, a way conducted across; from L. uia, a way, and ducta, fem. of ductus, pp. of dūcere, to lead, conduct; see Duct, Duke. Prob. coined in imitation of aqueduct. β. L. uia was formerly written uea, and some connect it with E. way; which can hardly be right. Der. uiaticum, a doublet of voyage, q. v.; also con-vey, con-voy, de-vi-ate, de-vi-ous, en-voy, im-per-vi-ous, in-voice, ob-vi-ate, ob-vi-ous, per-vi-ous, pre-vi-ous, tri-vi-al.

VIAL, PHIAL, a small glass vessel or bottle. (F.—L.—Gk.) Phial is a pedantic spelling; the spelling vial is historically more correct, as we took the word from French; another (French) spelling was viol. 'Vyole, a glasse, fiolle, uiole;' Palsgrave. ME. viole; pl. violis, Wyclif, Rev. v. 8, where the A. V. has vials. — OF. viole, fiolle, fiolle (for which forms see Palsgrave above), later phiole, 'a violl, a small glass bottle;' Cot. Mod. F. fiolle. — L. phiala, a saucer, a shallow drinking-vessel (the form of which must have been altered). — Gk. φιάλη, a shallow cup or bowl.

VIAND, food, provision. (F.—L.) Usually in pl. viands. (F.—L.) 'Deintie viande;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 6 b. — F. viande, 'meat, food, substance;' Cot. [The same as Ital. vivanda, victuals, food, eatables.] — L. uiuenda, neut. pl., things to live on, provisions; considered as a fem. sing., by a change common in Late L. — L. uiuendus, fut. pass. of uiuere, to live; see Victuals.

VIBRATE, to swing, move backwards and forwards. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has vibration; the verb is perhaps a little later. — L. uibrātus, pp. of uibrāre, to shake, swing, brandish. — WEIB, variant of ✓WEIP, to shake, agitate; cf. Skt. vep, to tremble, Icel. veifa, to vibrate, wave. Brugmann, i. § 701. See Sweep, Waive. Der. vibrat-ion, vibrat-or-y.

VICAR, lit. a deputy; the incumbent of a benefice. (F.—L.) ME. vicar, a deputy, Chaucer, Parl. of Fowles, 379; also vicary, a vicar, id. C. T. 17333 (I 22). — F. vicaire, 'a vicar, or vice-gerent, also the tenant or incumbent who, in the right of a corporation or church, is to pay duties, or do services, unto the lord of the land;' Cot. — L. uicārium, acc. of uicārius, a substitute, deputy; orig. an adj., substituted, deputed, said of one who supplies the turn or place of another. — L. uic-, stem of uicis (gen.), a turn, change, succession. — ✓WEIQ, to yield, give way; hence to succeed in another's turn: cf. Gk. ἐκ-ειν, to yield, G. wech-sel, a turn. Brugmann, i. § 701. Der. vicar-age, spelt vyorage in Palsgrave (prob. a misprint for vyarage); vicar-i-al; vicar-i-ate, sb., from F. vicariat, 'a vicarship,' Cot. Also vicar-i-ous, Englished from L. uicārius, substituted, delegated, vicarious (as above); vicar-i-ous-ly. And see vice-gerent, vic-iss-i-tude.

VICE (1), a blemish, fault, depravity. (F.—L.) ME. vice, vyce, Rob. of Glouc., p. 195, l. 4025. — F. vice, 'a vice, fault;' Cot. — L. uitium, a vice, fault. Der. vici-ous, from F. vicieux, 'vicious,' Cot.,

from L. uitiosus, faulty; vici-ous-ly, vici-ous-ness, spelt viciousness in Palsgrave; viti-ate, spelt viciate in Cot. (to translate F. vicier), from L. uitiat, pp. of uitiāre, to injure; viti-at-ion.

VICE (2), an instrument, tightened by a screw, for holding anything firmly. (F.—L.) ME. vice, vyce, in Wyclif, 3 Kings, vi. 8, where it means 'a winding-stair' (see the A. V.), the orig. sense being 'a screw.' A vice is so called because tightened by a screw. — F. vis, 'the vice, or spindle of a presse, also a winding-staire'; Cot. OF. viz; Burguy. — L. vitis, a vine, bryony, the lit. sense being 'that which winds or twines'; hence the OF. viz (= vits), where the suffixed s represents the termination -is of the L. nom. sing. or -ēs of the L. nom. pl. — WEL, to wind, bind, or twine about; cf. E. withe, withy, L. vit-men, a pliant twig, &c. Cf. Ital. vite, 'the vine, also a vice or a scrue,' Florio.

VICE-GERENT, having delegated authority, acting in place of another. (F.—L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 222. — F. vicegerent, 'a vicegerent, or deputy'; Cot. — L. uice, in place of; and gerent-, stem of pres. part. of gerere, to carry on, perform, conduct, act, rule. Here uice is the abl. from the gen. uicis, a turn, change, stead (the nom. not being used); see Vicar. For gerere, see Gesture. ¶ With the same prefix vice- (F. vice, L. uice, in place of) we have vice-admiral, vice-chancellor; also vice-roy, Temp. iii. 2. 116, where roy = F. roi, from L. rēgem, acc. of rex, a king; vice-regal; and see vis-count.

VICINAGE, neighbourhood. (F.—L.) Vicinage is a pedantic spelling of voisinage, due to an attempt to reduce the F. word to a L. spelling; both forms are given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Bp. Taylor has the spelling voisinage more than once, in Episcopacy Asserted, § 21 (R.), and Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4 (R.). — F. voisinage, 'neighbourhood'; Cot. — F. voisin, 'neighbouring,' id. — L. uicinum, acc. of uicinus, neighbouring, near, lit. belonging to the same street. — L. uic-us, a village, street (whence the AS. wic, E. wick, a town, is borrowed). + Gk. oikos, a house, dwelling-place; Russ. ves(e), a village; Skt. vega(s), a house, entrance. — WELK, to come to, enter, enter into; Skt. vig, to enter. Der. vicin-i-ty, from MF. vicinité, 'vicinity,' Cot., from L. acc. uicinitatem, neighbourhood. Der. (from Gk. oikos), par-ish, par-och-i-al.

VICISSITUDE, change. (L.) In Bacon, Essay On Vicissitude of Things. — L. uicissitudo, change. Allied to uicissi-m, by turns; where the suffix -sim may be compared with pas-sim, reces-sim, &c. — L. uicis (gen.), a change; see Vicar.

VICTIM, a living being offered as a sacrifice, one who is persecuted. (F.—L.) In Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xii. l. 319. — F. victime (not in Cotgrave). — L. uictima, a victim. Allied to Goth. weihan, to consecrate, weihs, holy. Brugmann, i. § 606. Der. victim-ise, a coined word.

VICTOR, a conqueror. (L.) In K. John, ii. 324; and in Trevisa, i. 239. — L. uictor, a conqueror; see below.

VICTORY, success in a contest. (F.—L.) ME. victorie. In King Alisaunder, 7663. — OF. victorie (Burguy), later victoire, 'victory,' Cot. — L. uictoria, conquest; L. uictor, a conqueror; cf. uict-us, pp. of uincere, to conquer (pt. t. uic-i). — WELQ, to fight; whence also Goth. weigan, weihan (pp. wigans), to strive, contend; AS. wig, war. Brugmann, i. § 367. Der. victori-ous (Palsgrave), from F. victorieux, L. uictoriosus, full of victory; victori-ous-ly. Also (from uincere) victor, as above; vanquish, vinc-ible; con-vince, con-vict, e-vince, e-vict, in-vinc-ible.

VICTUALS, provisions, meat. (F.—L.) The sing. victual is little used now, but occurs in Exod. xii. 39 (A. V.), and in Much Ado, i. 1. 50. The word is misspelt, by a pedantry which ignores the F. origin; yet the true orthography vittle fairly represents the pronunciation still commonly used by the best speakers. ME. vitaille, Chaucer, C. T. 248. — OF. vitaille (Burguy), later victuaille (with inserted c, due to pedantry); Cot. gives 'victuailles, victuals,' but Palsgrave has 'Vytaille, uitaille, uures; Vytaylles, mete and drinke, toute maniere de uitailles.' — L. uictualia, neut. pl., provisions, victuals. — L. uictualis, belonging to nourishment. — L. uictu-, for uictus, food, nourishment; with suffix -alis. — L. uict-us, pp. of uiuere, to live; allied to uiuus, living. — WEL, to live; cf. Skt. jīva, to live, Gk. βίος, life, Russ. jit(e), to live; and see Quick. Brugmann, ii. § 488. Der. victual, verb, As You Like It, v. 4. 198; victuall-er, spelt vytailer in Palsgrave. Also (from the same root) vi-and, vi-tal, viv-ac-i-ous, viv-id, viv-i-fy, vivi-par-ous, vivi-section; con-viv-i-al, re-vive, sur-vive; also bio-graphy, bio-logy; quick; but hardly viper, wyvern.

VICUNA, a quadruped of the camel tribe. (Span.—Peruv.) 'Those beastes, which at Peru they call . . . Vicunas'; E. G., tr. of Acosta's Nat. Hist. (1604); bk. i. c. 21; p. 70. — Span. vicuña; Minshew (1623). Of Peruvian origin; Monlau gives the form as vicunna; see Garcilasso de la Vega (bk. viii. c. 17).

VIDELICET, namely. (L.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 330. In old MSS. and books, the abbreviation for L. -et (final) closely resembled a z. Hence the abbreviation viz. = viet., short for videlicet. — L. uidelicet, for uidēre licet (like scilicet = scire licet), it is easy to see, it is manifest, hence plainly, to wit, namely. — L. uidēre, to see; and licet, it is allowable, hence, it is easy. See Vision and License.

VIDETTE, another spelling of Vedette, q. v.

VIE, to contend, strive for superiority. (F.—L.) ME. vien, a contracted form of ME. envien, due to the loss of the initial syllable, as in story for history, fence for defence, &c. In Chaucer, Death of Blaunche, l. 173, we have: 'To vye who might slepe best,' ed. Thynne (1532), and so also in the Tanner MS. 346; but MS. Fairfax 16 has: 'To envye who myght slepe best,' where To envye = Tenvye in pronunciation, just as Chaucer has tabiden = to abiden, &c. β. This ME. envien is quite a different word from envien, to envy; it is really a doublet of invite, and is a term formerly used in gambling. — OF. 'envier (au ieu), to vie; Cot. — L. inuitāre, to invite; see Invite. γ. This is proved by the Span. and Ital. forms; cf. Span. envidar, 'among gamesters, to invite or to open the game by staking a certain sum,' Neuman; Ital. inuitare (al giuoco), 'to vie or to reue at any game, to drop vie; inuito, a vie at play, a vie at any game; also, an inviting, proffer, or bidding'; Florio. See plentiful examples of vie, to wager, and vie, sb., a wager, in Nares; and remember that the true sense of with is against, as in with-stand, fight with, &c., so that to vie with = to stake against, wager against, which fully explains the word. Much more might be added; Scheler's excellent explanation of F. à l'envi is strictly to the point; so also Wedgwood's remarks on E. vie. In particular, the latter shows that the OF. envier also meant 'to invite,' and he adds: 'From the verb was formed the adv. expression à l'envi, E. a-vie, as if for a wager: "They that write of these toads strive a-vie who shall write most wonders of them," Holland, tr. of Pliny; [b. xxxii. c. 5]. Doublet, invite.

VIEW, a sight, reach of the sight, a scene, mental survey. (F.—L.) Very common in Shak.; see Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 144, iii. 2. 377, &c. Levins has the verb to vewe. — AF. view, Liber Albus, p. 182; vewe, Stat. Realm, i. 192 (1323); MF. veuē, 'the sense, act, or instrument of seeing, the eyes, a glance, a view, look, sight,' &c.; Cot. Properly the fem. of veu, 'viewed, seen,' pp. of veoir (mod. F. voir), 'to view, see; id. — L. uidēre, to see; see Vision. Der. view, verb; view-er; re-view; view-less, invisible, Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 124.

VIGIL, the eve before a feast or fast-day. (F.—L.) Lit. 'a watching; so named because orig. kept by watching through the night. ME. uigile, Ancren Riwe, p. 412, l. 23; Chaucer, C. T. 379 (A 377). — F. vigile, 'a vigile, the eve of a holy or solemn day; Cot. — L. uigilia, a watch, watching. — L. uigil, awake, lively, vigilant, watchful. — L. uigēre, to be lively or vigorous, flourish, thrive; allied to uegēre, to arouse. + Irish feil, W. gwyl, a festival (lit. vigil). — WEG, to be strong, to wake; see Vegetable. Der. vigil-ant, 1 Hen. IV, iv. 2. 64, from F. vigilant, 'vigilant,' Cot., from L. uigilant-, stem of pres. part. of uigilāre, to watch; vigil-ance, Temp. iii. 3. 16, from F. vigilance, 'vigilancy,' Cot., from L. uigilantia. From the same root are veg-etable, vig-our, in-vig-or-ate, re-veillē, sur-veillance; also wake, watch, wait.

VIGNETTE, a small engraving with ornamented borders. (F.—L.) So called because orig. applied to ornamented borders in which vine-leaves and tendrils were freely introduced. In the edition of Cotgrave's Dict. published in 1660, the English Index (by Sherwood) has a title-page with such a border, in which two pillars are represented on each side, wreathed with vines bearing leaves, tendrils, and bunches of grapes. ME. vinettes, vine-branches; Lydgate, Siege of Troy, fol. F 5, col. 2. — F. vignette, 'a little vine; vignettes, vignets, branches, or branchlike borders or flourishes, in painting or engraving'; Cot. Dimin. of F. vigne, a vine; see Vine.

VIGOUR, vital strength, force, energy. (F.—L.) ME. vigour; spelt vigor, King Alisaunder, l. 1431. — OF. vigur, vigor, later vigueur, 'vigor'; Cot. — L. uigōrem, acc. of uigor, liveliness, activity, force. — L. uigēre, to be lively or vigorous; see Vigil. Der. vigorous, spelt vygorouse in Palsgrave, from F. vigoureux, 'vigorous,' Cot.; vigor-ous-ly, vigor-ous-ness.

VIKING, a Northern pirate. (Scand.) The form wicing occurs in AS., but viking is borrowed from Scandinavian. — Icel. víkingr, a freebooter, rover, pirate, used in the Icel. Sagas esp. of the bands of Scand. warriors who, during the 9th and 10th centuries, harried the British Isles and Normandy. [Wrongly explained as 'a creek-dweller,' one of the men who haunted the bays, creeks, and fjords. — Icel. vík, a creek, inlet, bay; with suffix -ingr (AS. -ing) in the sense of 'son of' or belonging to. Cf. also Swed. vik, Dan. vig, a creek, cove.] Explained also as 'a warrior;' for **vigningr* (where ign > ik); allied to Icel. víg, war, Goth. weihan, to fight, L. uincere, to conquer; see Victor. (So Noreen, § 252; Sweet, Hist. E. Sounds, § 319). + AS. wicing, the same.

VILE, abject, base, worthless, wicked. (F.—L.) ME. vil, Rob. of Glouc. p. 488, l. 10003.—F. vil (fem. vile), 'vile, abject, base, low, meane, . . . good cheape, of small price,' Cot.—L. uilem, acc. of uilis, of small price, cheap, worthless, base, vile.—W. gwael, vill; Stokes-Fick, p. 259. Der. vile-ly, vile-ness; vil-i-fy, a coined word, to account vile, defame, properly to make vile, as in Milton, P. L. xi. 516; vil-i-fi-er, vil-i-fi-c-at-ion, re-vile.

VILIPEND, to despise. (L.) Spelt vilepende in Skelton; i. 202.—L. vilipendere, to hold cheap.—L. uili-, for uilis, vile, cheap; and pendere, to weigh, esteem. See POISE.

VILLA, a country residence or seat, a house. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Lucretius, b. iii. l. 283.—L. villa, a farm-house; lit. 'a house in a village.' Perhaps for **uic-sla*, i. e. 'dwelling'; from uic-us, a village; see VICINAGE. Der. vill-age, Chaucer, C. T. 12621 (C 687), from F. village, 'a village,' Cot., from L. adj. uillaticus, belonging to a villa; villag-er, Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 172; villag-er-y, a collection of villages, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 35. And see vill-ain.

VILLAIN, a clownish or depraved person, a scoundrel. (F.—L.) ME. vilein, vileyn, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 18, l. 7. 'For vilany makith vilein;' Rom. of the Rose, 2181.—OF. vilein, 'servile, base, vile;' Cot. He also gives vilain, 'a villaine, slave, bondman, servile tenant.'—Late L. uillanus, a farm-servant, serf; the degradation by which it passed into a term of reproach is well stated by Cotgrave, who further explains villain as meaning 'a farmer, yeoman, churle, carle, boore, clown, knave, rascall, varlet, filthy fellow.'—L. villa, a farm; see VILLA. Der. villain-ous, Merry Wives, ii. 2. 308; villain-ous-ly; also villain-y, ME. vileinie, Chaucer, C. T. 70, Ancren Riwele, p. 216, from OF. vilenie (or villanie), 'villainy,' Cot.

VINCIBLE, that can be conquered. (L.) Rare. In Bp. Taylor, Of Repentance, c. 3. § 3 (R.).—L. vincibilis, easily overcome.—L. vincere, to conquer; see VICTOR. Der. vincibil-i-ty; in-vincible.

VINCULUM, a link. (L.) Modern; chiefly used as a mathematical term.—L. vinculum, a bond, fetter, link.—L. vincire, to bind, fetter. Brugmann, ii. § 631. See VETCH.

VINDICATE, to lay claim to, defend, maintain by force. (L.) In Milton, P. R. ii. 47.—L. uindicatus, pp. of uindicare, to lay legal claim to, arrogate, avenge.—L. uindic-, decl. stem of uindex, a claimant, maintainer. Orig. 'one who favours or protects a friend;' from uen- (as in uen-ia, favour, cf. AS. win-e, a friend), and dī-āre, to appoint, dicere, to say; cf. the suffix in iū-dex, a judge. See Walde. Der. vindicat-or, vindic-able, vindic-at-ion; vindic-at-ive, i. e. vindictive, Troil. iv. 5. 107; vindic-at-or-y; and see vindic-tive, vengeance.

VINDICTIVE, revengeful. (F.—L.) Vindictive is merely a shortened form of vindicative, obviously due to confusion with the related L. uindicta, revenge. Bp. Taylor, in his Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3, speaks of 'vindicative justice,' but in the same work, b. ii. c. 2, of 'vindictive justice;' if Richardson's quotations be correct. Shak. has vindicative=vindictive, Troil. iv. 5. 107.—F. vindicatif, 'vindicative, revenging,' Cot. Formed with suffix -if (L. -iuus) from uindicāt-um, supine of uindicāre, (1) to claim, (2) to avenge; see VINDICATE. Der. vindictive-ly, -ness.

VINE, the plant from which wine is made. (F.—L.) ME. vine, vyne; Wyclif, John, xv. 1.—F. vigne, 'a vine;' Cot.—L. vinea, a vineyard, which in late L. (see Lewis) also had the sense of 'vine,' for which the true L. word is uītis. Vinea is properly the fem. of adj. uīneus, of or belonging to wine.—L. uīnum, wine.—Gk. oīvos, wine; allied to oīvō, the vine, oīvās, the vine, grape, wine. Cf. L. uītis, the vine.—✓WEI, to twine; as seen in L. uīre, to twist together, uī-men, a pliant twig, uī-tis, the vine, &c. Brugmann, ii. § 66. And see Curtius, i. 487, who notes that the Gk. words were used 'by no means exclusively of the drink, but just as much of the vine. Pott very appropriately compares the Lithuan. ap-vynys, a hop-tendrill. . . . The fact is therefore that the Indo-Germans had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various pliant twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice. The Northern names (Goth. wein, &c.) are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed.' See the whole passage. To which we may add that the L. uīnum also meant 'a vine,' and the E. vine-yard=AS. win-geard=wine-yard, which identified wine with the vine itself. Der. vine-dress-er; vin-er-y, occurring in 'the vinery of Ramer,' in Fabyan's Chronicle, John of France, an. 8 (ed. Ellis, p. 511), a word coined on the model of butt-er-y, paul-ry, brew-er-y; vine-yard, ME. vyneyerd, Trevisa, i. 337, AS. win-geard, Matt. xx. 1; vin-ous, a late word, from L. uīnōsus, belonging to wine. Also vin-egar, vin-t-age, vin-t-ner, which see below. From the same root are withe or withy, wine; cf. vetch, vinculum.

VINEGAR, an acid liquor made from fermented liquors. (F.—L.) ME. vinegre, vynegre, Wyclif, Mark, xv. 36. Lit. 'sour wine.'—F. vinaigre, 'vineger;' Cot.—F. vin, wine; and AF. egre, F. aigre, sharp, sour; see VINE or WINE, and EAGER.

VINewed, mouldy. (E.) In mod. edd. of Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 15, we generally find vinewed'st, where the folios have whinid'st. Minshew, ed. 1627, has finewed, as equivalent to 'mustie;' and also the sb. vinewedness; and see vinewed, finewed, fenowed in Nares. Cf. prov. E. vinewed (West), Halliwell. The form finewed answers to the pp. of AS. finegian, fynegian, to become mouldy or musty, occurring in the Canons of Ælfric, § 36; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 360, l. 7. It is a verb formed from an adj. finig or fynig, mouldy, occurring in the same passage. We also find the pl. finie (for finige) in Josh. ix. 5, where it is used of mouldy loaves. The true form is fynig (with y, mutation of u); the adj. is from the sb. fyne, mouldiness, Voc. 183. 19. From a Teut. base **fun-*; allied to Du. vuns, rank, ME. vinstigh, 'mustie (as hay);' Hexham. Cf. FOUL.

VINTAGE, the gathering or produce of grapes, time of grape-gathering. (F.—L.) 'Tyll they had inned [gathered in] all their corne and vyntage;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 22 (R.). Vintage is for ME. vindage, Wyclif, Levit. xxv. 5, or vendage, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 367, which was also pronounced as ventage, as shown by the various readings in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 414. And again, ME. vendage is for vendange, the unfamiliar ending -ange being turned into the common suffix -age; it is clear that the word was confused with vint-ner, vint-ry; see VINTNER.—AF. vendenge, Statutes of the Realm, i. 331 (1353); F. vendange (MF. vendenge in Cotgrave), 'a vintage;' Cot.—L. uindemia, a vintage.—L. uīn-um, (1) wine, (2) grapes; and dēm-ere, to take away; so that uīn-dēmia = a taking away of grapes, grape-gathering. β. For L. uīnum, see VINE, WINE. The L. dēmere is for **dē-imere*, to take away; from dē, prep., off, away, and emere, to take; see DE and REDEEM.

VINTNER, a wine-dealer, tavern-keeper. (F.—L.) 'Vyntenerre, Vinarius;' Prompt. Parv. Thus vintner is short for vintener; and again, vintener is an altered form of vineter or vinter, which is the older form. It occurs, spelt vinter, in Rob. of Glouc., p. 542, l. 11226, in a passage where we also find vinterie, now shortened to vintry, and occurring as the name of a house in London (Stow, Survey of London, ed. Thoms, p. 90).—AF. vineter, Bozon, p. 19; MF. vinetier, 'a vintner, taverner, wine-seller;' Cot.—Late L. vinētarius, a wine-seller (occurring A.D. 1226). Really derived from L. uīnētum, a vine-yard, but used with the sense of L. uīnārius, a wine-seller.—L. uīnum, grapes, wine; see VINE and WINE.

VIOL, a kind of fiddle, a musical instrument. (F.—Prov.—Late L.) In Shak. Rich. II, i. 3. 162.—MF. viola (also violle), 'a (musical) viol, or violin;' Cot.—Prov. viola, a viol; see Bartsch. Cf. Ital., Span., and Port. viola (Diez). Diez takes the Prov. viola (a trisyllabic word) to be the oldest form, derived from Late L. vitula, vidula, a viol, which was first transposed into the form **viudla* (cf. Prov. veuza from L. uidua, teune from L. tenuis), and then became **viulla*, viulla, viola. 'Vidulatores dicuntur a vidula, Gallice, viele;' John de Garlande, in Wright's Voc. i. 137, l. 4 from bottom. The AS. fidol, OHG. fidula, E. fiddle appear to be the same as Late L. vitula, vidula; see FIDDLE, which may be a doublet. [The i in vitula was short (Ducange); connexion with L. uītulārī, to rejoice, is doubtful.] Der. viol-in, Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, l. 103, from Ital. violino, dimin. of viola, a viol; viol-in-ist, a player on the violin; viol-on-cell-o, a bass violin, from Ital. violoncello, dimin. of violone, a bass-viol, augmentative form of viola. Also bass-viol, Comedy of Errors, iv. 3. 23. Doublet, fiddle.

VIOLATE, to injure, abuse, profane, ravish. (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 1. 21.—L. uīolātus, pp. of uīolāre, to violate. Orig. 'to treat with force;' formed as if from an adj. **uīolus*, due to uī-s, force. β. Allied to Gk. īs, strength, force; cf. Skt. vayas, youth. See Brugmann, i. § 91. Der. violat-or; from L. uīolātor; viola-ble, from L. uīolābilis; violat-ion, from F. violation, 'a violation,' Cot., from L. acc. uīolātiōnem. Also viol-ent, q. v.; (from the same root) per-vi-cac-i-ous.

VIOLENT, vehement, outrageous, very forcible. (F.—L.) In Chaucer, C. T. 12801 (C 867).—F. violent, 'violent,' Cot.—L. uīolentus, violent, full of might. Formed with suffix -entus from an adjectival form **uīolus*, due to uīs, strength; see above. Der. violent-ly; violence, Chaucer, C. T. 16376 (G 908), from F. violence, 'violence,' Cot., from L. sb. uīolentia.

VIOLET, a flower; a light purple colour. (F.—L.) ME. violet, vyolet, Prompt. Parv.; Trevisa, i. 261. 'Tunicam de vyolet;' York Wills, i. 23 (1346).—MF. violet, m., also violette, fem., 'a violet; also, violet-colour;' Cot. Dimin. of MF. viola, 'a gilliflower,' Cot.; it must also have meant a violet.—L. uīola, a violet. Formed with dimin. suffix -la from a base uīo-, cognate with Gk. īo-, base of īov (for **īlov*), a violet. See IODINE. Der. violet, adj., violet-coloured.

VIOLIN, VIOLONCELLO; see under Viol.

VIPER, a poisonous snake. (F.—L.) In Levins, ed. 1570.—F. vipère, 'the serpent called a viper'; Cot.—L. vipera, a viper. Usually explained as the serpent 'that produces living young'; Buffon says that the viper differs from most other serpents in being much slower, as also in excluding its young completely formed, and bringing them forth alive. As if vipera were short for vivipara, fem. of viviparus, producing live young; see Viviparous. β. Walde prefers a derivation from the  $\sqrt{\text{WEIP}}$ , to wind round, as in Goth. biwaibjan, to wind round; from the viper's coils. Der. viper-ous, Cor. iii. 1. 287; viper-ine, Blount, from L. viperinus, adj. Doublet, wyvern.

VIRAGO, a bold, impudent, manlike woman. (L.) In Stanyhurst, tr. of Virgil, Æn. b. i, ed. Arber, p. 34, l. 2. 'This [woman] schal be clepid virago,' Wyclif, Gen. ii. 23.—L. uirago, a manlike maiden, female warrior; extended from uir, a man. See Virile.

VIRELAY, an old French form of poem, running on two rimes. (F.) Chaucer has: 'roundels, virelayes;' C. T., F 948 (Frank. Ta. 220).—OF. virelay, MF. virelay, 'a virelay, round, freemans song;' Cot.—OF. virer, to turn, change the direction of (see Veer); and OF. lai, a lay, song (see Lay).

VIRGATE, an (old) measure of land. (L.) Also formerly called a yardland; see Blount, who says:—'This Yardland, Bracton (lib. 2. cap. 10 and 27) calls virgatum terræ; but expresseth no certainty what it contains. It is called a verge of land, anno 28 Edw. I.—Late L. virgata, a fem. pp. form, from L. uirga, a rod. See Verge (1).

VIRGIN, a maiden. (F.—L.) In early use; the pl. virgines occurs in St. Katharine, l. 2342.—OF. virgine (Burguy).—L. uirginem, acc. of uirgo, a virgin. Root uncertain (not allied to uir, a man, or uirere, to flourish, as the base is uirg-, not uir-). Der. virgin-ity, ME. virginitie, Chaucer, C. T. 5657 (D 75), from F. virginité, 'virginity,' Cot., from L. acc. virginitatem. Also virgin-al, spelt virginall in Levins, ed. 1570; an old musical instrument, also named the virginals, or a pair [set] of virginals, and so called because played upon by virgins (Blount, Nares); cf. ME. virginal, adj., Hoccleve, Reg. Princes, 3584; from F. virginal, 'belonging to a virgin,' Cot., from L. adj. uirginālis. Also Virgo (L. uirgo), the Virgin, a zodiacal sign.

VIRIDITY, greenness. (L.) Little used; in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who gives an example from Evelyn. Englished from L. uiriditās, greenness.—L. uiridis, green. See Verdant.

VIRILE, male, masculine, manly. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. viril, 'virile, manly;' Cot.—L. uirilis, manly.—L. uir, a man, a hero.—W. gwr, OIrish fer, Irish fear, a man; Goth. wair, a man; AS. wer; Icel. verr; OHG. wer. See Werwolf. Further allied to Skt. virā-s, sb., a hero; adj., strong, heroic; Zend vira, a hero (Fick, i. 786). Der. viril-ity (Blount), from F. virilité, 'virility,' Cot., from L. acc. uirilitatem, manhood. Also (from L. uir) vir-ago, q. v., vir-tue, q. v.; decem-vir, trium-vir.

VIRTUE, excellence, worth, efficacy. (F.—L.) ME. vertu, Ancren Riwle, p. 340, l. 9.—F. vertu, 'virtue, goodness;' Cot.—L. uirtutem, acc. of uirtus, manly excellence.—L. uir, a man; see Virile. ¶ The spelling has been changed from vertu to virtue to bring it nearer to Latin. Der. virtu-ous, ME. vertuous, Chaucer, C. T. 251, from F. vertueux, 'vertuous,' Cot., from Late L. uirtuōsus, full of virtue (Ducange); virtu-ous-ly; virtu-al, having effect, in Bp. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, § 3 (R.), from F. virtuel (Littré), as if from a L. form **uirtuālis*; virtu-al-ly. Also virtu, a love of the fine arts, a late word, borrowed from Ital. virtù (also vertù), shortened form of virtute, virtue, excellence, used in the particular sense of learning or excellence in a love of the fine arts, from L. acc. uirtutem; whence virtu-os-o, Evelyn's Diary, Feb. 27, 1644, from Ital. virtuoso, lit. virtuous, learned, esp. a person skilled in the fine arts.

VIRULENT, very active in injuring, spiteful, bitter in animosity. (F.—L.) Lit. poisonous. 'The seed of dragon is hot and biting, and besides of a virulent and stinking smell;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 16. ME. virulent, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 80.—F. virulent, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th century (Littré); and prob. much earlier.—L. uirulentus, poisonous, virulent.—L. uiru-, for uirus, slime, poison; with suffix -lentus.+Gk. lōs (for φίος), poison; Skt. visha-m, poison. Allied to Irish fi, poison, W. guy, fluid; and to E. Wizen. Der. virulent-ly; virulence, from F. virulence, 'stench, rankness, poison,' Cot., from L. uirulentia. The sb. virus, borrowed immediately from Latin, is now also in use.

VISAGE, the face, mien, look. (F.—L.) ME. visage, King Alisaunder, 7652.—F. visage, 'the visage, face, look;' Cot. Formed with suffix -age (< L. -aticum) from MF. vis, 'the visage, face,' Cot.—L. uisum, acc. of uisus, the vision, sight; whence the sense was transferred to that of 'look' or mien, and finally to that of 'face'; perhaps (as Scheler suggests) under the influence of G. gesicht, the face, lit. the sight.—L. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see; see Vision. Der. visag-ed, as in tripe-visaged, 2 Hen. IV, v. 4. 9.

VISARD, the same as Visor, q. v.

VIS-A-VIS, in a position (that is) face to face. (F.—L.) F. vis à vis, 'face to face, directly opposite;' Cot. The F. vis represents the L. acc. uisum; see Visage. The F. à is from L. ad, to, towards.

VISCACHA, VIZCACHA, a South-American rodent mammal. (Span.—Peruv.) Span. viscacha, vizcacha, 'a creature like a hare;' Pineda.—Peruv. viskacha, 'conejo de la tierra;' Peruv. Dict.

VISCERA, the entrails. (L.) A medical term.—L. viscera, neut. pl., the entrails; from nom. sing. uiscus. Perhaps allied to L. uiere, to twist together. Der. viscer-al (Blount), e-viscer-ate.

VISCID, sticky, clammy. (F.—L.) 'Viscid, or Viscous, clammy, fast as glue;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. viscide, 'clammy,' Cot.—L. uiscidus, clammy, like birdlime.—L. uisum, the mistletoe, also birdlime.+Gk. ἱός, ἱία, mistletoe, the mistletoe-berry, from which birdlime was made. Der. viscid-i-ty, from F. viscidité, 'visciditie,' Cot. So also visc-ous, Lanfrank, Cirurgie, p. 178, from L. uiscoſus, clammy; visc-os-i-ty, from F. viscosité, 'viscositie,' Cot.

VISCOUNT, a title; an officer who formerly supplied the place of a count or earl. (F.—L.) The s (in the E. word) is not pronounced; the usual E. spelling was formerly vicounte (pronounced with i as in F., whence the mod. E. vicount, pronounced with i as in modern E.); spelt vicounte in Fabyan, Chron. c. 245. But we also find AF. visconte, a sheriff, Stat. Realm, i. 28 (1275).—F. vicomte, 'a vicount, was at the first the deputy or lieutenant of an earle,' &c., Cot.; OF. viscomte (12th cent.).—L. uice, in place of; comitem, acc. of comes, count. In the 12th century the word was spelt visconte (Littré), a traditional spelling which we still retain, though the s was early lost in F., and ceased to be sounded in E. The prefix was also written vice, as in MF. vice-admirall, 'a viceadmirall,' vice-conte, 'a vicount,' Cot.; Roquefort notes the OF. vis-admiral, a vice-admiral. See Vicegerent and Count (1). Der. viscount-ess, from OF. vis-, prefix, 'vice-,' and Countess.

VISE, another spelling (chiefly American) of Vice (2), q. v.

VISE, an endorsement made upon a pass-port. (F.—L.) Modern.—F. visé, i. e. 'examined,' pp. of viser, to view, inspect.—Late L. **visāre*, used for L. uisere, to behold; from uidere (pp. uisus), to see; see Visit. ¶ The true F. word is visa, sb.

VISIBLE, that can be seen. (F.—L.) Spelt vysyble in Palsgrave. F. visible, 'visible;' Cot.—L. uisibilis, that may be seen.—L. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see. See Vision.

VISIER, the same as Vizier, q. v.

VISIGOTH, one of the West Goths. (Late L.—Teut.) The Goths were divided into Ostro-Goths and Visi-Goths, i. e. Eastern and Western Goths. See Gibbon, Roman Empire, cap. 36.—Late L. Visigothi or Visigothæ, pl., the Visigoths. Of Teut. origin; from Teut. west, West; and Teut. **Gutōs* or **Gutans*, pl.; only found in Gothic in the comp. Gut-thiuda, the Gothic people.

VISION, sight, a sight, dream. (F.—L.) ME. visioun, visiun, Cursor Mundi, 4454.—F. vision, 'a vision, sight;' Cot.—L. uisionem, acc. of uisio, sight; cf. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see.+Gk. ἰδέν (for ἰδεῖν), to see, infin. of ἰδω, I saw, a 2nd aorist form; whence perf. t. oīda (I have seen), I know (= E. wot).+Skt. vid, to know; Goth. witan, to know; AS. witan. β. All from  $\sqrt{\text{WEID}}$ , to see, know; see Wit, verb. Der. vision-ar-y, adj., Dryden, Tyrannick Love, Act i. sc. 1 (R.), a coined word; also vision-ar-y, sb., one who sees visions, or forms impracticable schemes. Also (like L. uisus) vis-age, q. v., vis-ible, q. v., vis-or, q. v., vis-it, q. v., vis-ion, q. v., vis-u-al, q. v.; also ad-vice, ad-vise, de-vice, de-vise, im-pro-vice, pre-vis-ion, pro-vis-ion, pro-vis-o, pro-vis-or, re-vise, super-vise. Also (from L. uidere), en-vy, e-vid-ence, in-vid-i-ous, juris-pr-ud-ence, pro-vid-e, pro-vid-ent, pr-ud-ent, pur-vey, re-view, sur-vey, vide-licet, view. And see veda.

VISIT, to go to see or inspect, call upon. (F.—L.) ME. visiten, Ancren Riwle, p. 154, l. 8.—F. visiter, 'to visit, or go to see;' Cot.—L. uisitare, to go to see, visit; frequentative of uisere, to behold, survey, intensive form of uidere (pp. uisus), to see; see Vision. Der. visit, sb.; visit-at-ion, from F. visitation, 'a visitation, visiting,' Cot., from L. acc. uisitātiōnem; visit-ant, Milton, P. L. xi. 225; from L. uisitant-, stem of pres. part. of uisitare; visit-or, Timon, i. 1. 42 (for visitour), from F. visiteur, 'a visitor, searcher, overseer,' Cot., the true L. word being uisitator; visit-or-i-al.

VISOR, VIZOR, VISARD, VIZARD, a mask, part of a helmet. (F.—L.) In the forms visard, vizard, the final d is excrement and unoriginal. It is variously spelt in Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 30, L. L. L. v. 2. 242, Macb. iii. 2. 34, &c. ME. visere; 'Vysere, larva,' Prompt. Parv.—AF. visere (A. Neckam), in Wright, Vocab. i. 113; MF. visiere, 'the visier, or sight of a helmet;' Cot. Formed from F. vis, the face; and so called from its protecting the face. In the same way, the vizard was named from its covering the face; cf. faux visage, 'a maske, or vizard,' Cot.; lit. a false face. — L. uisum, acc. of uisus, the sight; see further under Vision. Der. visor-ed; spelt vizard-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 6. 40.

VISTA, a view or prospect, seen as through an avenue of trees. (Ital. — L.) In Pope, Moral Essays, iv. 93. — Ital. vista, 'the sence of sight, seeing, a looke, a prospect, a view;' Florio. — Ital. vista, fem. of visto, seen, one of the forms of the pp. of vedere, to see; the other form being veduto. — L. uidere, to see; see Vision.

VISUAL, used in sight or for seeing. (F. — L.) 'Visual, belonging to, or carried by the sight; extending as far as the eye can carry it;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — F. visual, 'visuall,' Cot. — L. visuālis, belonging to the sight. — L. uisu-, for uisus, the sight; with suffix -ālis. — L. uisus, pp. of uidere, to see; see Vision.

VITAL, containing life, essential. (F. — L.) ME. vital, Chaucer, C. T. 2804 (A 2802). — F. vital, 'vitall,' Cot. — L. vitalis, belonging to life. — L. vita, life. Allied to vivere, to live; cf. βίος, life. — GwEI, to live; see Victuals. Der. vital-ly; vital-i-ty, in Blount, Englished from L. vitaliūs, vital force; vitalise, to give life to, a coined word. Also vital-s, parts essential to life, coined in imitation of L. vitalia, parts essential to life, neut. pl. of vitalis, vital.

VITIATE, see under Vice.

VITREOUS, pertaining to glass, glasslike. (L.) In Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. § 11, where he speaks of 'the vitreous humor' of the eye (R.). Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c.) from L. vitreus (also uitrius), glassy. — L. uitri-, for uitrum, glass. β. The i of uitrum is short in Horace (Odes, iii. 13. 1), but may have been orig. long, as in Propertius, iv. 8. 37; and ui-trum may be for **uid-trum*, i. e. an instrument or material for seeing with. — L. uidere, to see; see Vision. (But this is doubtful). Der. vitri-fy, from F. vitriifier, 'to turn or make into glasse,' formed as if from a L. verb **uitrificāre*; hence also vitrific-at-ed, Bacon, New Atlantis, ed. 1631, p. 34; vitric-at-ion, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5, pt. 2; vitri-able; also vitri-ol, q. v.

VITRIOL, the popular name of sulphuric acid. (F. — L.) ME. vitriole, Chaucer, C. T. 16276 (G 808). — F. vitriol, 'vitrioll, copperose;' Cot. Cf. Ital. vitriolo, 'vitrioll or coperasse,' Florio. Said to be so called from its glassy look. — Late L. **uitriolus*, answering to L. vitreolus, glassy, made of glass. — L. vitreus, glassy. — L. uitrum, glass; see Vitreous. ¶ It is not improbable that vitriol was supposed to be made from glass; from the popular belief that glass was poisonous; see Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. Der. vitriol-ic.

VITUPERATION, blame, censure, abuse. (F. — L.) Spelt vituperacyon in The Boke of Tulle of Old Age, c. 8 (Caxton); cited in the Appendix to Richardson's Dict. Also in Cotgrave. — F. vituperation, 'a vituperation, or dispraising;' Cot. Cf. L. vituperātus, pp. of vituperāre, to censure, abuse. The orig. sense is 'to get ready a blemish,' i. e. to find fault. — L. uitu-, for uiti-, base of uitium, a vice, fault, blemish; and parāre, to get ready, furnish, provide. See Vice and Parade. Der. vituperate (from L. pp. vituperātus), used by Cot. to translate MF. vituperer; vituperat-ive, -ly.

VIVACITY, liveliness. (F. — L.) In Cotgrave. Also formerly used to mean 'longevity;' see Trench, Select Glossary. — F. vivacité, 'vivacity, liveliness;' Cot. — L. vivacitatem, acc. of vivacitās, natural vigour. — L. vivāci-, decl. stem of vivax, tenacious of life, vigorous. — L. vivus, lively; see Vivid. Der. (from L. vivāci-), vivaci-ous, -ly, -ness.

VIVANDIERE, a sutler, a woman attached to French and other continental regiments, who sells provisions and liquor. (F. — L.) F. vivandière, fem. form of vivandier, 'a victualler, sutler;' Cot. — L. vivenda, viands, provisions; see Viands.

VIVID, life-like, having the appearance of life, very clear to the imagination. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — L. vividus, animated, true to life, lively. — L. vivus, living; allied to vivere, to live; see Victuals, and Quick. Cf. Skt. jiva-, living; Lith. gyvas, living; Russ. jivoi. Der. vivid-ly, -ness.

VIVIFY, to quicken, endue with life. (F. — L.) Bacon has vivifie and vivification, Nat. Hist. § 696. — F. vivifier, 'to quicken;' Cot. — L. vivificāre, to vivify, make alive. — L. vivui-, for vivus, living; and -ficāre, for facere, to make; see Vivid and Fact. Der. vivific-at-ion.

VIVIPAROUS, producing young alive. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21, part 2. Englished from L. viviparus, producing living young. — L. vivui-, for vivus, alive; and parere, to produce, bring forth. See Vivid or Victuals, and Parent.

VIVISECTION, dissection of a living animal. (L.) Modern. From vivi-, as seen in Viviparous; and Section.

VIXEN, a she-fox, an ill-tempered woman. (E.) Vixen is the same as fixen, occurring as a proper name (spelt Fixsen) in the Clergy List, 1873. Spelt vixen, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 324. That false fixen; Gammer Gurton, A. iii. sc. 2. Halliwell quotes ME. fixene fox, i. e. vixen-fox, from MS. Bodley 546. Cf. AS. fixenhyd, vixen hide, AS. Leechdoms, i. 342; fyxan dic, Kemble, Cod. Dipl. ii. 29, l. 1. It is the fem. form of fox; and by the ordinary laws of vowel-change, the AS. fem. form is fyx-en; cf. AS. gyd-en, a goddess, from god, a god. From the Teut. type **fuhs-in-jā*, fem.; cf. Teut. type **fuhs-*, a fox; see Fox. The Southern E. form vox for fox is common, as in Ancrén Riwle, p. 128, l. 5; so also vane for fane, and vat for fat. + G. fuchsin, fem. of fuchs, a fox; similarly formed. The fem. suffix occurs again in G. königinn, a queen, &c. Cf. L. rēg-ina, Faust-ina, &c.

VIZ., an abbreviation for Videlicet, q. v.

VIZARD, a mask; see Vizor.

VIZIER, VISIER, an oriental minister or councillor of state. (Arab.) 'The Gran Visiar;' Howell, Foreign Travel, Appendix; ed. Arber, p. 85. — Arab. wazir, 'a vazir, counsellor of state, minister, a vicegerent, or lieutenant of a king; also, a porter;' Rich. Dict. p. 1642. The sense of 'porter' is the orig. one; hence it meant, the bearer of the burden of state affairs. — Arab. root wazara, to bear a burden, support, sustain; id. p. 1641. Doublet, al-guazil, q. v.

VOCABLE, a term, word. (F. — L.) 'This worde aungell is a vocable or worde sygnifyng a minyster;' Udall, on Hebrews, c. 1; fol. 206, back. — F. vocable, 'a word, a term;' Cot. — L. uocābulum, an appellation, designation, name. — L. uocā-re, to call; allied to uōx, voice; see Voice. Der. vocabul-ar-y, from F. vocabulaire, 'a vocabulary, dictionary, world of words,' Cot., from Late L. uocābularium.

VOCAL, belonging to the voice, uttering sound. (F. — L.) 'They'll sing like Memnon's statue, and be vocal;' Ben Jonson, Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 1 (Lickfinger). — F. vocal, 'vocal;' Cot. — L. uocālis, sonorous, vocal. — L. uōc-, stem of uōx, the voice; see Voice. Der. vocal-ise, from F. vocaliser; Cotgrave has vocalizé, 'vowelled, made a vowel;' vocal-is-at-ion, vocal-ist; vowel.

VOCATION, a calling, occupation. (F. — L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. — F. vocation, 'a vocation,' Cot. — L. uocātiōnem, acc. of uocātiō, a bidding, invitation; cf. uocātus, pp. of uocāre, to call, bid; see Vocable. Der. vocat-ive, Merry Wives, iv. 1. 53, lit. the calling case, from L. uocātivus, the vocative case.

VOCIFERATION, a loud calling, noisy outcry. (F. — L.) 'Of Vociferation;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 35 (misprinted 25 in ed. 1561). — MF. vociferation, 'vociferation;' Cot. — L. uōciferātiōnem, acc. of uōciferātiō, a loud outcry; cf. uōciferātus, pp. of uōciferāre, commonly uōciferārī, to lift up the voice; lit. 'to bear the voice afar.' — L. uōci-, for uōx, the voice; and fer-re, to bear, cognate with E. Bear. See Voice. Der. vociferate, from L. pp. uōciferātus; vocifer-ous, -ly.

VODKA, a Russian strong liquor. (Russ.) Russ. vodka, brandy; a dimin. of voda, water, which is cognate with E. water; see Water.

VOGUE, mode, fashion, practice. (F. — Ital. — Teut.) We now say to be in vogue, i. e. in fashion. Formerly vogue meant sway, currency, prevalent use, power, or authority. 'The predominant constellations, which have the vogue;' Howell, Foreign Travel, sect. 6, ed. Arber, p. 34. 'Considering these sermons bore so great a vogue among the papists;' Strype, Eccl. Mem., i. Mary, an. 1553. — F. vogue, 'vogue, sway, swindge, authority, power; a cleer passage, as of a ship in a broad sea;' Cot. β. The orig. sense is 'the swaying motion of a ship,' hence its sway, swing, drift, or course; or else the sway or stroke of an oar. It is the verbal sb. of F. voguer, 'to saile forth, set saile;' Cot. — Ital. voga, 'the stroke of an oare in the water when one roweth,' Florio; verbal sb. of vogare, 'to rowe in a gallie or any bote,' id. (So also Span. boga, the act of rowing; estar en boga, to be in vogue.) Of Teut. origin. — G. wogen, to fluctuate, be in motion; MHG. wāgen. — MHG. wāg, OHG. wāc, a wave (G. woge). + AS. wæg, Goth. wēgs, a wave; Teut. type **wēgoz*, m.; from **wēg*, 3rd stem of Teut. **wegan*, to move. See Weigh. ¶ Thus the idea of vogue goes back to that of 'movement,' as exhibited in the 'wave' or swaying of the sea.

VOICE, sound from the mouth, utterance, language. (F. — L.) The spelling with ce (for s) is adopted to keep the hard sound of s. ME. vois, voys, King Alisaunder, 3864. — OF. vois (Burguy), later voix, 'a voice, sound;' Cot. — L. uōcem, acc. of uōx, a voice. — ✓ WEQ, to resound, speak; cf. Skt. vākya-m, speech, also vacha-s, speech, cognate with Gk. ἔπος, a word. Brugmann, i. § 678. Der. voice, verb, Timon, iv. 3. 81; voice-less. From L. uox (stem uōc-) or from L. uocāre (stem uoc-) we also have voc-al, voc-able, voc-at-ion, voci-fer-at-ion, ad-voc-ate, a-voc-at-ion, ad-vow-son, a-vouch, con-voc-at-ion, con-voke, equi-voc-al, e-voke, in-voc-ate, in-voke, ir-re-voc-able, pro-voke, re-voke, uni-voc-al, vouch, vouch-safe, vow-el. And see ep-ic.

VOID, empty, unoccupied, unsubstantial. (F. — L.) ME. voide, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 5, l. 127. — OF. voide (Burguy), MF. vuide, 'void, empty,' Cot. Mod. F. vide. The OF. voide is a fem. form; masc. void, vuit. Due to a supposed Romance **voc-i-tus*, related to L. uac-uis, empty, void. Körtling, § 10280. Der. void, verb, ME. voiden, to empty, King Alisaunder, 373, from OF. voider, MF. uider, 'to void,' Cot. Also void-able, void-ance (cf. MF. uidange, 'a voidnesse,' Cot.); void-ness; a-void.

VOLANT, flying, nimble. (F.—L.) Rare. 'In manner of a star volant in the air;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 525 (R.).—F. volant, pres. part. of voler, 'to fly,' Cot.—L. uolāre, to fly. Formed from the adj. **uolus*, flying, occurring only in uēli-uolus, flying on sails. Allied to Skt. garut, a wing, garuḍa, a mythical bird; Brugmann, i. § 663. Der. vol-at-ile, Ben Jonson, Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 1 (Subtle), from F. volatil, 'flying,' Cot., from L. uolātīlis, flying, from uolātus, flight, which from uolātus, pp. of uolāre. Hence volatile-ness, volatil-i-ty, volatil-ise, volatil-is-at-ion. Also volley, q. v.

VOLAPUK, a kind of world-speech. (E.) An artificial language for international speech, invented about 1879 by J. M. Schleyer, of Constance, Baden. Properly written Volupük. This form was suggested by E. world (here turned into vola) and E. speech (here turned into pük).

VOLCANO, a burning mountain. (Ital.—L.) 'A vulcano or volcano;' Skinner, ed. 1691. Spelt volcan, J. Frampton, Joyfull Newes, fol. 31 (1577). Borrowed from Italian, because the chief burning mountain known to sailors was that of Ætna.—Ital. volcano, 'a hill that continually burneth;' Florio.—L. Volcānum, Vulcānum, acc. of Volcānus or Vulcānus, Vulcan, the god of fire, hence fire. β. The true form is Volcānus (with o). Allied to Skt. ulkā, a fire-brand, fire falling from heaven, a meteor. Der. volcan-ic; and see vulcan-ise.

VOLE, a field-mouse. (Scand.) A word that reached us from the Orkney Islands. A shortened form of vole-mouse; see Jamieson, who quotes from the Edin. Mag., July, 1819, p. 505; and from Barry's Orkney, p. 314 (ed. 1805), who says:—'with us it has the name of the vole-mouse.' So also vole-mouse is given in Edmondston's Shetland and Orkney Words. Of Norse origin; from an unrecorded (prob. colloquial) Norw. **volmus*, field-mouse; for the word is known in Iceland in the colloquial form vallarmūs (E. Magnusson). The former element is the Norw. voll, Swed. vall, Icel. völlr, a plain, field; which is cognate with E. wold; see WOLD. There are many compounds with Norw. voll (and the like); cf. Norw. voll-gras, field-grass, voll-høy, meadow-hay, Icel. vallar-garðr, a paddock-fence, vall-humall, milfoil; Swed. vall-hund, a shepherd's dog; Swed. dial. vall-gås, wild goose.

VOLITION, the exercise of the will. (F.—L.) 'Consequent to the mere internal volition;' Bp. Taylor, Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. i.—F. volition, found in the 16th century (Hatzfeld); we find cognate terms in Span. volicion, Ital. volizione, volition. All these answer to a Late L. volitiōnem, acc. of **volitio*, volition; a word not recorded by Ducange, but prob. a term of the schools. It is a pure coinage, from L. uol-o, I wish; of which the infinitive is uelle; see Voluntary.

VOLLEY, a flight of shot, the discharge of many fire-arms at once. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 363. See Nares.—F. volée, 'a flight, or flying, also a whole flight of birds;' Cot. [Cf. Ital. volata, a flight, volley.]—L. uolāta, orig. fem. of uolātus, pp. of uolāre, to fly; see Volant.

VOLT, a bound, a leap; the same as Vault (2), q. v.

VOLTAIC, originated by Volta. (Ital.) Applied to Voltaic electricity, or galvanism; the Voltaic pile or battery, first set up about 1800, was discovered by Alessandro Volta, of Como, an experimental philosopher, born 1745, died March 6, 1826; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates, and Hole, Brief Biograph. Dict. Der. (from Volta) volt, a unit of electromotive force.

VOLUBLE, flowing smoothly, fluent in speech. (F.—L.) In Shak. Comedy of Errors, ii. 1. 92.—F. voluble, 'voluble, easily rolled, turned, or tumbled; hence, fickle, . . . glib;' Cot.—L. uolūbīlem, acc. of uolūbīlis, easily turned about; formed with suffix -bīlis from uolū-, as seen in uolūtus, pp. of uoluere, to roll, turn about.—Goth. walujan, to roll; Gk. εἰλεῖν, to roll; from a base **welu-* (**wolu-*). The shorter base WEL occurs in Lithuan. welti, to full, Russ. valit(e), to roll, Skt. val, to move to and fro; cf. AS. weallan, to boil, Icel. valr, round, Gk. ἐλῖς, a spiral, ἐλ-ίσσειν, to turn round. See Helix. Der. volubīl-y, volubīl-i-ty; also (from L. uoluere), vault (1), vault (2), vol-ume, vol-ute, circum-volve, con-volv-ul-us, con-vol-ut-ion, de-volve, e-volve, e-volu-t-ion, in-volve, in-volu-t-ion, in-vol-ute, re-volt, re-volu-t-ion, re-volve. From the same root are valve, wale, helix.

VOLUME, a roll, a book, tome. (F.—L.) ME. volume, Chaucer, C. T. 6263 (D 681).—F. volume, 'a volume, tome, book;' Cot.—L. uolūmen, a roll, scroll; hence, a book written on a parchment roll.—L. uolū-, as seen in uolū-tus, pp. of uoluere, to roll. See Voluble. Der. volum-ed; volumin-ous, Milton, P. R. iv. 384, from L. uolūminōsus, full of rolls or folds, from uolūmin-, decl. stem of uolūmen; volumin-ous-ly.

VOLUNTARY, willing, acting by choice. (F.—L.) Spelt voluntarie in Levins, ed. 1570.—MF. voluntaire, also spelt volontaire, 'voluntary, willing, free, of his owne accorde;' Cot.—L. uoluntārius, voluntary.—L. uoluntās, free will. Formed, with suffix -tās, from a present participial stem **uolunt-*, a variant of uolent-, from uolens, willing, from uolo, I will; infin. uelle.+Lithuan. welīti, Goth. wiljan; Skt. vr, to select, choose. Brugmann, ii. §§ 102, 493. See Will. Der. voluntari-ly, voluntari-ness; also volunteer, Drayton, Miseries of Qu. Margaret, st. 177, from F. voluntaire (used as a sb.), 'a voluntary, one that serves without pay or compulsion,' Cot.; hence volunteer, verb. And see vol-up-tu-ous, vol-it-ion; bene-volent, male-volent.

VOLUPTUOUS, sensual, given up to pleasure. (F.—L.) ME. voluptuous, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1573. [Gower has voluptuosite, sb., C. A. iii. 280; bk. viii. 156.]—F. voluptueux, 'voluptuous,' Cot.—L. uoluptuōsus, full of pleasure.—L. uoluptu-, akin to uoluptās, pleasure.—L. uolup, uolupe, adv., agreeably.—L. uol-o, I wish; uelle, to wish; see Voluntary. Cf. Gk. ἐλπίς, hope. Der. voluptuous-ly, -ness (Palsgrave); volup-tu-ar-y, from L. uoluptuārius, uoluptārius, devoted to pleasure. Hence prob. the vulgar goleptious.

VOLUTE, a spiral scroll on a capital. (F.—L.) Spelt voluta in Phillips, which is the L. form.—F. volute, 'the rolling shell of a snail; also, the writhen circle that hangs over the chapter of a pillar;' Cot.—L. uolūta, a volute (Vitruvius). Orig. fem. of uolūtus, pp. of uoluere, to roll; see Voluble. Der. volut-ed.

VOMIT, matter rejected by, and thrown up from the stomach. (L.) ME. vomite, vomyte, sb.; Prompt. Parv. Palsgrave has vomyt, verb.—L. uomitus, a vomiting, vomit; whence uomitāre, to vomit often.—L. uomitus, pp. of uomere, to vomit.—Gk. ἐμείν, to vomit; Skt. vam, to vomit, spit out; Lithuan. wemti.—✓WEM, to spit out; Fick, i. 769. Der. vomit, vb.; vomit-or-y, causing to vomit. And see em-et-ic.

VORACITY, eagerness to devour. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. voracité, 'voracity;' Cot.—L. uorācīātem, acc. of uorācītās, hungriness.—L. uorāci-, decl. stem of uorax, greedy to devour.—L. uor-āre, to devour.—L. -uorū, adj., devouring; only in compounds, such as carni-uorū, flesh-devouring. β. The L. -uorū stands for **guorū*, as shown by the allied Skt. -gara-, devouring, as seen in aja-gara-, a boa constrictor, lit. 'goat-devouring,' from aja-, a goat. Cf. also Gk. βορός, gluttonous, βορά, meat, βιβρώσκειν, to devour.—✓GWER, to swallow down. Brugmann, i. § 653. Der. voraci-ous, from L. uorāci-, decl. stem of uorax, greedy to devour; voraci-ous-ly. From the same root are gramini-vorū, carni-vorū, omni-vorū, &c., also de-vour.

VORTEX, a whirlpool, whirlwind. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. uortex (also uertex), a whirlpool, whirl, eddy.—L. uertere, to turn, whirl; see Verse. The pl. is vortices, as in Latin.

VOTE, an ardent wish, the expression of a decided wish or opinion, expressed decision. (L.) In Selden, Table-talk, Bishops in the Parliament, § 4.—L. uōtum, a wish; orig. a vow.—L. uōtum, neut. of uōtus, pp. of uōuere, to vow; see Vow. Der. vote-ive, from L. uōtiuus, promised by a vow; voteive-ly. Also vote-ar-y, a coined word, L. L. L. ii. 37; vote-ar-ess, Pericles, iv. prol. 4; vote-ress, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 123; vote-ar-ist, Timon, iv. 3. 27.

VOUCH, to warrant, attest, affirm strongly. (F.—L.) ME. vouchen, Gower, C. A. ii. 24; bk. iv. 668.—MF. voucher, 'to vouch, cite, pray in aid or call unto aid, in a suit,' Cot. Marked by Cotgrave as a Norman word; cf. Norm. dial. vocher, to call (Moisy).—L. uocāre, to call, call upon, summon. See Vocable. Der. vouch-er; vouch-safe, q. v.

VOUCHSAFE, to vouch or warrant safe, sanction or allow without danger, condescend to grant. (F.—L.) Merely due to the phr. vouch safe, i. e. vouch or warrant as safe, guarantee, grant. The two words were run together into one. ME. vouchen safe, or saue. 'The kyng vouches it saue;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 260. 'Vowche sauf þat his sone hire wedde;' Will. of Palerne, 1449; 'sauf wol I fouche,' id. 4152. See Vouch and Safe.

VOUSSOIR, a stone forming part of an arch, the key-stone being the central one. (F.—L.) F. voussoir, OF. volsoir, a stone for an arch (Godefroy).—Late L. type **volsōrium*, from **volsum*, equivalent to L. uolūtum, neut. pp. of uoluere, to roll. See Volute.

VOW, a solemn promise. (F.—L.) ME. vow, vou; pl. vowes, P. Plowman, B. prol. 71. [The ME. avow is commoner; it is a compound word, with prefix a- (<L. ad), but is frequently misprinted a vow; Tyrwhitt rightly has 'min avow,' Chaucer, C. T. 2239 (A 2237); 'this avow,' id. 2416 (A 2414).]—OF. vou, vo, veu (mod. F. vœu), a vow.—L. uōtum, a vow, lit. 'a thing vowed;' neut. of uōtus, pp. of uōuere, to promise, to vow. (N.B. Another avow answers to F. avouer, L. aduocāre, and is a doublet of avouch.) Der. vow, verb, ME. vowen, Prompt. Parv. Also (from L. uōtum), vote, q. v.

VOWEL, a simple vocal sound; the letter representing it. (F.—L.) Spelt vowel in Levins, ed. 1570; and in Palsgrave, b. i. c. 2.—OF. vouel, voiel; F. voyelle, 'a vowel'; Cot.—L. uocālem, acc. of uocālis (sc. littera), a vowel. Fem. of uocālis, adj. sounding, vocal.—L. uōc-, stem of uōx, a voice; see Vocal, Voice.

VOYAGE, a journey, passage by water. (F.—L.) ME. viage, Chaucer, C. T. 4679, 4720 (B 259, 300); veiage, Rob. of Glouc. p. 200, l. 4112. The later form voyage (as in Caxton, Siege of Troy, fol. 120) answers to the 15th cent. spelling of the F. word.—AF. veiage; OF. voiage, later voyage, 'voyage'; Cot.—L. uiaticum, provisions for a journey, money or other requisites for a journey; whence also Ital. viaggio, Span. viage, Prov. viatge; see Ducange.—L. uiaticus, belonging to a journey.—L. uia, a way, journey. Der. voyage, verb, from F. voyager, 'to travel, goe a voyage'; Cot.; voyag-er. Also (from L. uia), via-duct, and related words given under Viaduct.

VULCANISE, to combine caoutchouc with sulphur, by heat. (F.—L.) Modern; F. vulcaniser (1878). Formed with suffix -ise (F. -iser, from Gk. -izein) from L. Vulcān-us, god of fire, hence fire; see Volcano. Der. vulcan-ite, vulcanised caoutchouc.

VULGAR, used by the common people, native, common, mean, rude. (F.—L.) In Cor. i. 1. 219.—F. vulgaire, 'vulgar, common'; Cot.—L. ulgāris, vulgar.—L. ulgus, the common people; also spelt volgus. The lit. sense is 'a throng, a crowd'; allied to Skt. varga-s, a troop; OIrish folc, abundance (Stokes); W. gwala, fullness; Bret. gwalc, repletion. Stokes-Fick, p. 286. Der. vulgar, sb., L. L. L. i. 2. 51, from F. vulgaire, sb., Cot.; vulgar-ly, vulgar-ise, vulgar-ism, vulgar-i-ty. Also vulg-ate, the E. name for the Latin version of the Bible known as the Editio Vulgata (see publications of the Parker Society, &c.); where ulgāta is the fem. of ulgātus, pp. of ulgāre, to make public, to publish.

VULNERABLE, liable to injury. (L.) In Macb. v. 8. 11.—L. uulnerābilis, wounding, likely to injure; but also (taken in the pass. sense) vulnerable (in late Latin).—L. uulnerāre, to wound.—L. uulner-, stem of uulnus, a wound; OL. uolnus. Allied to uellere (pt. t. uul-si), to pluck, pull, tear.—Gk. ούλῃ, W. gweli, Corn. goly, Skt. vraṇa-, a wound. Stokes-Fick, p. 285. Der. vulner-ar-y, from F. vulneraire, 'vulnerary, healing wounds'; Cot., from L. uulnerārius, suitable for wounds. And see vul-ture.

VULPINE, fox-like, cunning. (F.—L.) 'The slyness of a vulpine craft'; Feltham, pt. i. Res. 10. Blount, ed. 1674, has: 'Vulpinate, to play the fox.'—MF. vulpin, 'fox-like'; Cot.—L. vulpinus, fox-like.—L. vulp-, base of vulpes, a fox; with suffix -inus. Allied to Wolf (see Darbishire, Reliquiae Philologicae, p. 92).

VULTURE, a large bird of prey. (L.) In Macb. iv. 3. 74. ME. vultur, Wyclif, Job, xxviii. 7, later version.—L. vultur, a vulture; OL. uolturus; lit. 'a plucker' or 'tearer'.—L. uul- (uol-), as seen in uul-si, pt. t. of uellere, to pluck; with suffix -tur denoting the agent. See Vulnerable. Der. vultur-ine, from L. vulturinus, vulture-like.

WA-WE

WABBLE, WOBBLE, to reel, move unsteadily. (E.) 'Wabble, to vacillate, reel, waver'; Brockett. A voiced form of **wapple*, equivalent to prov. E. wapper, 'to move tremulously, Somerset'; Halliwell. Both wabble and wapper are frequentatives of wap in the sense 'to flutter, beat the wings' (Halliwell), whence also wapping, quaking, used by Batman, 1582 (id.). There are several verbs which take the form wap, but the one now under consideration is properly whap, a by-form of ME. quappen, to palpitate; see Quaver. Cf. quabbe, a bog, quagmire (Halliwell). So also Low G. wabbeln or quabbeln, to wobble; EFries. wabbeln, kwabbeln, to wobble; Swed. dial. vabbla, to move food to and fro in the mouth, which is given as a sense of wobble in the E. D. D. Cf. AS. wapol, foam. See Whap.

WACKE, a kind of soft rock. (G.) Modern; geological.—G. wacke, 'a sort of stone, consisting of quartz, sand, and mica'; Flügel. MHG. wacke, OHG. waggo, a kind of flint.

WAD, a small bundle of stuff, a little mass of tow, &c. (Scand.) Nares (ed. Halliwell) cites 'a wadde of hay', a bundle of hay, from the poet Taylor's Works, 1630. 'Make it [lupines] into wads or bottles'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvii. c. 9; cf. the phrase 'a bottle of hay'.—Swed. vadd, wadding; MSwed. wad, clothing, cloth, stuff (Ihre); Icel. vadr, stuff, only in the comp. vadmāl, a plain woollen stuff, wadmal; cf. MSwed. wadmal, Dan. vadmæl. Cf. G. watte, wadding, wad, a large fishing-net; watten, to dress cloth, to wad; also wat, cloth (Flügel). Hence Dan. vat, F. ouate, wadding. β. The stuff called wadmal was formerly well known in England; in Arnold's Chronicle (repr. 1811), p. 236, we find, among imports, notice of 'Rollys of wadmoll' and 'curse [coarse] wadmoll'. 'Pann' grisei qui voca[n]tur wadmal'; (1326), Wardrobe Acc. 20 Edw. II. 26. 3. Q. R. Halliwell gives: 'Wadmal, a very thick coarse kind of woollen cloth; coarse tow used by doctors for cattle is also so called.' It may be that our wad is nothing but a shortened form of wadmal in the sense of coarse tow, or coarse stuff; it brings us, however, ultimately, to the same source. [The Icel. vadr properly means 'a fishing-line,' just as the G. watte means a fishing-net.] The Icel. vadmāl (from māl, a measure=E. meal (2)) is for vādmāl; from Icel. vād, vōð, voð, a piece of stuff, cloth as it leaves the loom, which is again allied to E. weed, a garment, as used in the phr. 'a widow's weeds'. γ. From Teut. base **wēd*, 3rd grade of Teut. root WED, as in Goth. ga-wīdan, OHG. wetan, to bind together. This base accounts for wad, stuff wound together < Icel. vād, stuff bound or woven together, whilst the 2nd grade **wad* accounts for G. watte, a fishing-net (because twined together), and Icel. vadr, a fishing-line (because twisted together). See further under Weed (2). δ. The Russ. vata, F. ouate, wadding, Span. huata, Ital. ovata, may be of Teut. origin, the last form being due to an attempt to give it a sense from Ital. ovo, an egg. It is quite unnecessary to suppose (as Diez, not very confidently, suggests) that the whole set of words allied to wad are derived from the L. ōvum, an egg. Der. wadd-ing; wad-mal, as above. (The prov. E. wadmel shows that the Oicel. form was vādmāl.)

WADDLE, to walk with short steps and unwieldy gait. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 37. The frequentative of Wade, q. v. Der. wadd-er.

WADE, to walk slowly, esp. through water. (E.) ME. waden, Chaucer, C. T. 9558 (E 1684). AS. wadan, pt. t. wōd, to wade, trudge, go; 'wadan ofer wealdas, to trudge over the wolds, Genesis, ed. Grein, 2886; see Grein, ii. 636. + Du. waden, to wade, ford; Icel. vada, strong verb, pt. t. vōð, to wade, to rush through, whence vōð, sb., a ford; Dan. vade; Swed. vada; OHG. watan, pt. t. wuot; the mod. G. waten is only a weak verb. β. All from the Teut. base WAD, to go, press through, make one's way; Idg. ✓WADH, to go; whence also L. uādere, to go, uadum, a ford. Der. wadd-le, q. v.; wad-er; and compare (from L. uādere) e-vade, in-vade, per-vade.

WADI, WADY, a water-course, river. (Arab.) From Arab. wādī, a water-course, channel, river-bed; Rich. Dict., p. 1624.

WADMAL, WADMALL; see under Wad.

WAFER, a thin small cake, usually round, a thin leaf of paste. (F.—OLow G.) ME. wafre, pl. wafres, Chaucer, C. T. 3379; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 271. We find Low L. gafras, glossed by wafurs, in John de Garlande; Wright's Voc. i. 126, l. 14.—AF. wafre, Liber Custum. p. 473; OF. waufre, mod. F. gaufre, a wafer. The form waufre occurs in a quotation, dated 1433, given by Roquefort in his Supplement, s. v. Audier; cf. waufret in Godefroy. (The more usual OF. form was gaufre, or goffre, in which g is substituted for the orig. w.) In this quotation we have mention of un fer a wafres, an iron on which to bake wafers. Cf. Walloon wāfe, wauffe, a wafer. β. The word is of Low G. origin; Hexham gives MDu. waeffel, 'a wafer'; waeffel-yser, 'a wafer-iron to bake wafers in,' of which fer a wafres is a translation; mod. Du. wafel, a wafer, wafel-ijzer, a wafer-iron. So also Low G. wafeln, pl. wafers; wafel-iseren, a wafer-iron. Webster's Dict. gives waffle and waffle-iron as E. words; they are obviously borrowed from Dutch immediately, and seem to be modern. Cf. also G. waffel, a wafer, waffel-eisen, a wafer-iron; Dan. vaffel, Swed. våffa; from Low G. wafel. γ. The wafer (dotted regularly with small indentations) was named from its resemblance to a piece of honey-comb or cake of wax in a bee-hive; from a Low G. form allied to G. wabe, a honey-comb, cake of wax, a derivative from the Teut. base **wēb* (2nd grade **wab*), to weave, Fick, iii. 289; the comb constructed by the bees being, as it were, woven together. The f appears in Icel. vaf, a weft, Swed. väf, a web, AS. wefan, to weave; see Weave. The spelling with ae (in Hexham) of the MDu. word suggests a derivation from **wēb*, the 3rd grade of the root. The form waeffel is a diminutive. Der. wafer, verb; wafer-er, a wafer-seller, Chaucer, C. T. 12413 (C 479); ME. wafr-estre, a female wafer-seller, P. Plowman, B. v. 641.

WAFT, to bear along through air or water. (E.) 'Neither was it thought that they should get any passage at all, till the ships at Middleborough were returned, . . . by the force whereof they might be the more strongly wafted ouer'; Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 175. Shak. has it in several senses; (1) to beckon, as by a wave of the hand, Merch. Ven. v. 11; Timon, i. 1. 70; (2) to turn quickly, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 372; (3) to carry or send over the sea, K. John, ii. 73, 2 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 114, 116; 3 Hen. VI, iii. 3. 253; v. 7. 41. He also has waftage, passage by water, Com. Errors, iv. 1. 95; wafture (old edd. wafter), the waving of the hand, a gesture, Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 246. We must also note, that Shak. has waft both for the pt. t. and pp.; see Merch. Ven. v. 11; K. John, ii. 73. [Rich. cites waft as a pt. t., occurring in Gamelyn, 785, but the best MSS. have fast; so that this is nothing to the point.] β. The word waft is not old, and does not occur in ME.; it seems to be nothing but a variant of wave, used as a verb, formed by taking the pp. and pt. t. waved (shortened to waft by rapid pronunciation), as the infinitive mood of a new verb. This is by no means an isolated case; by precisely the same process we have mod. E. hoist, due to hoised, pp. of Tudor Eng. hoise, and mod. E. graft, due to graffed, pp. of Tudor Eng. graff; while Spenser actually writes waift and west instead of Waif, q. v. By way of proof, we should notice the exact equivalence of waved and waft in the following passages. 'Yet towards night a great sort [number of people] came doune to the water-side, and waved us on shoare [beckoned us ashore] with a white flag;' Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 34 (also on p. 33). 'And waft [beckoned] her love To come again to Carthage;' Merch. Ven. v. 11. And again, we must particularly note Lowland Sc. waff, to wave, shake, fluctuate, and as a sb., a hasty motion, the act of waving, a signal made by waving (Jamieson); this is merely the Northern form of wave. 'And therefore schall y waffe it away;' York Plays, p. 301. In Gawain Douglas's translation of Virgil (Aeneid, i. 319), we have, in the edition of 1839, 'With wynd waving hir haris lowsit of tres,' where another edition (cited by Wedgwood) has waffing. So also, in Barbour's Bruce, ix. 245, xi. 193, 513, we have the forms vafand, vaffand, wawand, all meaning 'waving,' with reference to banners waving in the wind. γ. We thus see that waft is due to waft or waved, pp. and pt. t. of waff or wave; cf. AS. wafian, to wave with the hand, and see further under Wave (1). Der. waft-age, waft-ure, as above; waft, sb., waft-er.

WAG, to move from side to side, shake to and fro. (Scand.) ME. waggen, introduced (probably) as a Northern word in Chaucer, C. T. 4037 (A 4039); cf. P. Plowman, B. viii. 31, xvi. 41. Earlier, in Havelok, 89.—MSwed. wagga, to wag, fluctuate; whence wagga, a cradle, wagga, to rock a cradle (Ihre); Swed. vagga, a cradle; or as verb, to rock a cradle; Norw. vagga, to wag. Cf. Icel. vagga, a cradle; Dan. vugge, a cradle, also, to rock a cradle; AS. wegan, to wag, OHG. weggen, Goth. wagian. Closely allied to AS. wagian, to move, vacillate, rock (Grein, ii. 637), which became ME. wawen, and could not have given the mod. form wag. In Wyclif, Luke, vii. 25, the later version has 'waggid with the wynd,' where the earlier version has wawid. β. The AS. wagian is a secondary weak verb, from the strong verb wegan (pt. t. wæg, pp. wegen), to bear, move, carry (weigh), Grein, ii. 655; and similarly the MSwed. wagga is from the 2nd grade **wag* of Teut. **wegan-*, cognate with L. ueh-ere, to carry, from Idg. **WEGH-*, to carry; see Weigh, Waggon. Der. wag, sb., a droll fellow, L. L. L. v. 2. 108, as to which Wedgwood plausibly suggests that it is an abbreviation for wag-halter, once a common term for a rogue or gallows-bird, one who is likely to wag in a halter (or rather, to wag or sway a halter), see Nares; and cf. 'little young wags . . these are lackies;' Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 68; also 'Oh! thou crafty wag-string!' Heywood, Eng. Traveller, Act iv (near end); 'a wag-halter page,' Ford, The Fancies, A. i. sc. 2. Hence wagg-ish, wagg-ish-ly, wagg-er-y (formed like knave-er-y). Also wagg-le, q. v.; wag-tail, q. v.; wag-moire, a quagmire, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Sept. 130. And see wedge.

WAGE, a gage, pledge, stake, pay for service; pl. Wages, pay for service. (F.—Teut.) ME. wage, usually in the sense of pay, Rob. of Brunne, p. 319, l. 19; for which the pl. wages occurs only two lines above. 'Wage, or hyre, Stipendium, salarium;' Prompt. Parv. We now usually employ the word in the plural.—AF. wage, a prize, Langtoft, i. 222; wages, pl., Fr. Chron. of London, p. 83; OF. wage, also gage, a gage, pledge, guarantee (Burguy); hence it came to mean a stipulated payment. The change from initial w to g (and even, as here, to g) is not uncommon in OF. A verbal sb. from OF. wager, gager, gagier, to pledge; cf. Walloon wager, to pledge.—Low L. wadiäre, to pledge.—Low L. wadium, a pledge.—Goth. wadi, a pledge; whence gawadjōn, to pledge. β. The Goth. wadi is cognate with AS. wedd, a pledge; see Wed (1). Der. wage, verb, ME. wagen, to engage or go bail, P. Plowman, B. iv. 97, from OF. wager, verb, as above. Also wag-er, q. v.; en-gage, q. v. Doublet, gage (1). γ. To wage war was formerly to declare war, engage in it, not merely to carry it on, as now; cf. the phr. 'wager of battle;' see Wedgwood.

WAGER, a pledge, bet, something staked upon a chance. (F.—Teut.) ME. wageour, Assembly of Ladies, st. 55, l. 383; spelt waiour, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 218, l. 19, in a song dated 1308.—OF. wageure, orig. form of OF. gageure, 'a wager,' Cot.—Low L. wadiātūra, sb. formed from the pp. of wadiäre, to pledge, also to wager (as shown in Ducange); see Wage. Der. wager, verb, Haml. iv. 7. 135; wager-er.

WAGGLE, to wag frequently. (Scand.) Shak. has wagging, Much Ado, ii. 1. 119. The frequentative of Wag, q. v. Another frequentative form (with -er instead of -el or -le) appears in ME. wageren, to tremble, in Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 3, early version; the later version has tremble. Cf. Swed. dial. vagla, to totter; also G. wackeln (whence Swed. vackla); Pomeran. waggeln, to waggle; Low G. wigel-wageln, to wiggle-waggle; Du. waggelen, to totter.

WAGON, WAGGON, a wain, a vehicle for goods. (Du.) The spelling with double g merely serves to show that the vowel a is short. We find the spelling waggon in Romeo. i. 4. 59 (ed. 1623); wagon, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 28. The word is not very old, and not E., being borrowed from Dutch. (The E. form is wain.) 'They trussed all their harness in waganes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 62 (R.); 'charyotts or waggans;' Cavendish, Life of Wolsey, p. 88.—Du. wagen, 'a wagon, or a waine,' Hexham.—AS. wægn, a wain; see Wain. γ. The mod. F. wagon is borrowed from English. Doublet, wain. Der. waggon-er, Romeo, i. 4. 64.

WAGTAIL, the name of a bird. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) In King Lear, ii. 2. 73; and in Palsgrave. Formerly called a wag-start (start meaning tail); ME. wagstyrt, Voc. 763. 2. From Wag and Tail. Cf. Swed. vippstjert, a wagstart or wagtail; from vippa, to wag.

WAIF, anything found astray without an owner. (F.—Scand.) ME. waif, weif; the pl. is wayues or weyues (with u=v), P. Plowman, B. prol. 94; C. i. 92. A Norman-French law-term.—AF. wayf, Lib. Custumarum, 434, 775; OF. waif, later gaif, pl. waives, gaives. Godefroy gives gaif, a thing lost and not claimed; choses gaives, things lost and not claimed; also wayve, a waif, which is a feminine form, evolved from a pl. form wayves, of which the sing. would be wayf or waif. Cotgrave has: 'Choses gayves, weifes, things forsaken, miscarried, or lost,' &c. Waif is an old Norman-French term, and of Norse origin.—ONorse **weif*, Icel. veif, anything flapping about, applied, e. g. to the fin of a seal; veifan, a moving about uncertainly, whence veifanar-örð, 'a word of wafting,' a rumour; from veifa, to vibrate, move about, whence veifi-skati, a spendthrift, lit. one who squanders coin. β. The ONorse v was sounded as E. w, and thus **weifa* (Icel. veifa) is the source of E. waive, vb., whence waif seems to have been derived as a verbal sb. Cf. Norw. veiva, to swing about. A waif is a thing tossed loosely abroad, and then abandoned. See further under Waive. γ. We may also note that Spenser writes waift, F. Q. iv. 12. 31; weft, id. v. 3. 27, where the t is unoriginal (just as in waft), and due to the pp. waived. ¶ The E. weft (from weave) is a different word. So also is wave, though easily confused with waive, when used as a verb.

WAIL, to lament. (Scand.) ME. weilen, wailen, Chaucer, C. T. 1297 (A 1295); Wyclif, Matt. xxiv. 30.—Icel. væla (formerly **wæla*), to wail; also spelt våla, mod. Icel. vola; Swed. dial. våla, to wail; Dan. dial. vælle, to wail, væl, a wail; Norw. væla, to bleat. Orig. 'to cry woe;' from væ, vei, woe! used as an interjection; cf. the curious ME. waymenten, to lament, Prompt. Parv., formed from the same interjection with the F. suffix -ment, and apparently imitated from L. lamentare.—Ital. guajolare, to wail, cry woe; from guai, woe! a word of Teut. origin; cf. Goth. wai, woe! whence Goth. wajamērjan, to lament. See Wo. Der. wail-ing.

WAIN, a waggon, vehicle for goods. (E.) ME. wain; written wayn, Rob. of Glouc. p. 416, l. 8596. AS. wægn, a wain; also used in the contracted form wæn, Grein, ii. 644.—Du. wagen (whence E. wagon was borrowed in the 15th or 16th century); OSax. wagan; Icel. vagn; Dan. vogn; Swed. vagn; G. wagen, OHG. wagan. β. The AS. wægn soon passed into the form wæn by the loss of g (sounded as y), just as AS. regn became ræn, mod. E. rain; cf. hail, nail, tail, in which g similarly disappears; so also E. day from AS. dæg, &c. Hence it is impossible to regard wagon as a true E. word. γ. All the above forms are from Teut. **wagnoz*, m., a wain, carriage; from the 2nd grade (**wag*) of Teut. **wegan-*, to carry; from Idg. **WEGH-*, to carry, whence E. vehicle. From the same root we have L. ueh-iculum, Skt. vahana-, a vehicle, Skt. vah-ya-, Gk. ὄχος, a car, OIrish fén, a car, Russ. voz, a load. See Vehicle. Doublet, wagon or waggon. And see weigh.

WAINSCOT, panelled boards on the walls of rooms. (Du.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 3. 88. Applied to any kind of panelled work. I find: 'a tabyll of waynskott with to [two] joynyd trestellis;' Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 115, in a will dated 1522; also 'a rownde tabyll of waynskott with lok and key,' id., p. 116; also 'a brode cheste of wayneskott,' id. p. 117. Still earlier, I find waynskot in what appears to be a list of imports; Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 236, l. 4. And much earlier 'c du bord appelle weynskott,' Liber Albus, p. 238. Hakluyt even retains something of the Du. spelling, where he speaks of 'boords [boards] called waghenscot;' Voyages, i. 173.—Du. wagen-schot, 'wainscot;' Hexham. Low G. waghenscot, the best kind of oak-wood, well-grained and without knots. Cf. Low G. bökenschoot, the best kind of beech-wood, without knots, in which the former part of the word is Low G. böken, beechen, adj. formed from book, a beech. (We may here remark that E. wainscot, in the building trade, is applied to the best kind of oak-timber only, used for panelling because it would not 'cast' or warp; see Wainscot in Trench, Select Glossary.) β. The Du. schot (like E. shot) has numerous senses, of which one is 'a closure of boards,' Hexham. It also meant 'a shott, a cast, or a throwe, the flowre of meale, revenue or rent, gaine or money, a shot or score to pay for any things,' id. Sewel also explains schot by 'a wainscot, partition, a stop put to anything, the pace (of a ship), a hogs-sty.' See Shot. γ. The mod. Du. wagen-schot is an altered form, due to popular etymology; as if the derivation were from Du. wagen, a wain or waggon; see Wain. But the older form is MDu. waeghe-schot (without n, Kilian); which some (see Ten Kate, Aenleiding, &c. (1723), ii. 507) wrongly take to be connected with MDu. weech, weegh, Du. weeg, a wall, cognate with AS. wāh, OFries. wāch, OSax. wēg, a wall, and allied to Icel. veggr, Goth. waddjus, a wall. See the article by J. B. Vinckers, in Taalstudie, dated Oct. 7, 1882, from which I quote: 'Dutch shipwrights still use a very remarkable term wageren, meaning "to cover the inside of a ship with boards," from which is derived the pl. noun wageringen, the inside boards.' δ. A better theory is that given in Kilian, which connects waeghe with MDu. waeghe (G. woge, AS. wāg, Goth. wēgs), a wave; with reference to the waving grain appearing upon the cleft wood. This suits the phonology better. ε. Hexham also has want-schot, wainscot, from want, a wall; and explains wantschotten by 'to wainscott walls.' Der. wainscot, verb.

WAIST, the middle part of the human body, or of a ship. (E.) Spelt wast in Palsgrave. ME. wast, called waste of a mannys myddel or wast of the medyl in Prompt. Parv. The dat. waste is in Gower, C. A. ii. 373, l. 13. The right sense is 'growth,' hence the thick part or middle of the body, where the size of a man is developed; we find the spelling waeste (dat. case) with the sense of 'strength,' in O. Eng. Homilies, i. 77, l. 3. It answers to an AS. form **wæhst*, **wæst*, not found, though the nearly related wæstm, growth, also fruit, produce, is a very common word; see Grein, ii. 650. Indeed, the AS. wæstm became wæstme, westme in later English, and it is by no means improbable that the mod. E. waist was suggested by it. In Genesis and Exodus, 1910, Joseph is described as being 'bricetest of waspene,' certainly miswritten (in the MS.) for 'bricetest of wasteme,' i. e. fairest of form or shape, 'well-waisted.'—AS. wæxan, to grow, to wax; from Teut. base **waxh-* (as in Goth. wahsjan, to wax); whence AS. **wæhs-t*, **wæst*; cf. AS. wæstm, formed like blō-stma (E. blossom) from blōwan, to flourish. See Wax (1). So also Goth. us-wahsts, out-growth, wahsjan, to grow; OHG. wahst, wast, growth, wahs-an, to grow. Further allied to Goth. wahstus, growth; Icel. vōxtr, stature, also shape, vaxa, to grow; Dan. væxt, Swed. våxt, growth, size. Der. waist-band; waist-coat, spelt wast-coate in Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5, l. 106 from the end; and see Nares.

WAIT, to watch, stay in expectation, abide, lie in ambush. (F.—Low L.—OHG.) ME. waiten, P. Plowman, B. v. 202; Havelok, 512.—AF. wayter, to watch, Langtoft, i. 448; OF. waiter, waitier, also gaitier, gaitier (Godefroy), later guetter, 'to watch, warde, mark, heed, note, dog, stalk after, lie in wait for;' Cot. Cf. Walloon waitier, to spy. A denominative verb.—AF. wayte, Liber Albus, p. 646; OF. waite, gaite (Godefroy), a guard, sentinel, watchman, or spy; later guet, 'watch, ward, heed, also the watch, or company appointed to watch;' Cot.—Low L. wacta, a guard; whence wactāre, to guard, Ducange (>OF. waiter).—OHG. wahta, MHG. wahte, G. wacht, a guard, watch; whence was formed G. wächter, a watchman. (The Icel. wakta, to watch, is merely borrowed from G., not a true Scand. word.) β. The sb. wah-ta answers to a Teut. type **wah-ton-*, m., for **wak-ton-*, a watcher, one who is awake; from Teut. **wak-an-*, to wake; see Wake (1). Der. wait-er, ME. waitere, a watchman, Wyclif, 4 Kings ix. 17 (one MS. of later version). Also wait, sb., chiefly in the phr. 'to lie in wait,' Acts, xxiii. 21. The ME. waite properly signifies a watchman or spy, as in Cursor Mundi, 11541, from OF. waite, as above, and is really an older word than the verb, as above shown; it only remains to us in the phrase 'the Christmas waits,' where a wait is 'one who is awake,' for the purpose of playing music at night; cf. 'Wayte, a spy; Wayte, waker, Vigil;' Prompt. Parv. 'Assint etiam excubie vigiles [glossed by OF. veytes veliables], comibus suis strepitum et clangorem et sonitum facientes;' Wright's Voc. i. 106, l. 1. Also wait-ing, wait-ing-woman, K. Lear, iv. i. 65; a-wait, vb., q. v.

WAIVE, to relinquish, abandon a claim. (F.—Scand.) Chiefly in the phr. 'to waive a claim,' as in Cotgrave (see below). ME. waiuen, weiuen (with u=v), a difficult and rather vague word, chiefly in the sense 'to set aside' or 'shun,' also 'to remove' or 'push aside;' see P. Plowman, B. v. 611 (where the MS. may be read wayne); id. B. xx. 167; Chaucer, C. T. 4728, 9357, 10298, 17127, 17344 (B 308, E 1483, 2424, H 178, I 33), Troil. ii. 284; Gower, C. A. i. 276, bk. ii. 3469.—AF. weiver, to waive, Year-Books of Edw. I (1292-3), pp. 39, 53, 55, 205; OF. gaiver (Godefroy), to cede, abandon; later guesver, 'to waive, refuse, abandon, give over, surrender, resigne;' Cot. The AF. waif, sb., is in the Liber Custumarum, pp. 151, 434, 486; OF. gaif in Godefroy; see Waif. Ducange gives Low L. waviāre, to waive, abandon, wayvium, a waif, or a beast without an owner, vayvus, adj., abandoned as a waif, which are merely Latinised forms of the F. words; and he remarks that these words are of common occurrence. β. The sb. seems to be from the vb.—ONorse **weifa*, Icel. veifa, to vibrate, swing about, move to and fro in a loose way; Norw. veiva, to swing about, to turn a grindstone, Swed. vefva, to wind; cf. Low G. weifen, to swing about, to toss (Schambach). Hence the sense 'to cast loose.'—OHG. weibōn, MHG. weiben, waiben, to fluctuate, swing about; cf. Goth. bi-weibjan, to wind about; Skt. vēp, to shake. (✓WEIP.) Distinct from wave, despite some similarity in the sense; but the words have been confused.

WAKE (1), to cease from sleep, be brisk. (E.) ME. waken, strong verb, pt. t. wook, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1393 (Six-text); where Tyrwhitt, l. 1395, prints awook; also wakien, weak verb, to keep awake, pp. waked, Havelok, 2999. Corresponding to these verbs, we should now say 'he woke,' and 'he was waked.' [They are both distinct from ME. waknen, to waken; which see under Waken.] AS. wacan, to arise, come to life, be born, pt. t. wōc, pp. wacen; also wacian, to wake, watch, pt. t. wacode, wacode; Grein, ii. 635.—Goth. wakan, pt. t. wōk, pp. wakans, to wake, watch; whence wakjan, weak verb, only in comp. uswakjan, to wake from sleep; Du. waken (weak verb); Icel. vaka (weak); Dan. vaage; Swed. vaka; G. wachen. β. All from Teut. base WAK, to be brisk, be awake, allied to Idg. ✓WEGw, to be vigorous, whence Vigil, Vegetable, q. v. Brugmann, ii. § 804. Der. wake (weak verb), to rouse, answering to AS. wacian, as above; wake, sb., a vigil, ME. wake, Ancrén Riwle, p. 314, l. 2 from bottom, from AS. wacu, occurring in the comp. niht-wacu, a night-wake, Grein, ii. 286, l. 5. Also wake-ful, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 9. 7, substituted for AS. wacol or wacul (allied to L. uigil), Voc. 315. 26; hence wake-ful-ly, wake-ful-ness. Also wak-en, q. v., watch, q. v.

WAKE (2), the track of a ship. (Scand.) 'In the wake of the ship (as 'tis called), or the smoothness which the ship's passing has made on the sea;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1699 (R.). 'Wake, (among seamen) is taken for that smooth water which a ship leaves astern when under sail, and is also called the ship's way;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'In Norfolk, where the broads [large tarns] are mostly frozen over, the spaces of open water are called wakes;' Wedgwood. Like many other E. Anglian words, wake is of Scand. origin. It was originally applied to an open space in half-frozen water, and esp. to the passage cut for a ship in a frozen lake or sea; thence it was easily transferred to denote the smooth watery track left behind a ship that had made its way through ice, and at last (by a complete forgetfulness of its true use) was applied to the smooth track left behind a vessel when there is no ice at all. And even, in prov. E., rows of green damp grass are called wakes (Halliwell).—Icel. vök (stem vak-, gen. sing. and nom. pl. vakar), a hole, opening in ice; draga þeir skipit milli vakanna=to drag their ship between [or along] wakes (Vigfusson); Swed. vak, an opening in ice; Norw. vak, the same, whence vekkja, to cut a hole in ice, 'especially to hew out a passage for ships in frozen water' (Aasen); NFries. wak, Dan. vaage, the same. The mod. Du. wak (like E. wake) is merely borrowed from Scandinavian. The orig. sense is a 'moist' or wet place; and it is allied to Icel. vökr, moist, vökva, to moisten, to water, vökva, moisture, juice, whence Lowland Sc. wak, moist, watery; so also Du. wak, moist. Teut. type **wakwoz*, moist (Franck); Teut. base WEQ, to wet, answering to Idg. root WEGw, to wet, whence Gk. ύγρός, L. ū-midus, wet; see further under Humid. Brugmann, i. § 658 (b). β. The F. ouaiche, formerly also ouage, now usually houache, the wake of a ship, is clearly borrowed from English, as Littré says. γ. The connexion between wake, a wet track through ice, and prov. E. wake, a row of damp grass, is sufficiently clear. Cf. Homer's ύγρα κέλευθα, Od. iii. 71. From the same root is quaff, q. v.

WAKEN, to awake. (E.) This verb is of considerable grammatical importance, and should be carefully studied, being one of a class not very common in mod. E., and peculiarly liable to be misunderstood. The point is, that it was orig. intransitive, whereas in Shak. it is transitive only, 3 Hen. VI, iv. 3. 19, Romeo, iii. i. 28, iv. 4. 24, Oth. ii. i. 188; &c. In mod. English, verbs in -en, by a singular change, are mostly transitive, such as strengthen, embolden, &c.; but this is just contrary to the older usage, not only in ME. and AS. but in the Teut. languages generally. The subject is discussed in Grimm's Grammar, ed. 1837, iv. 23, where he shows that Goth.

auk-a, I eke, or increase, answers to Gk. αὐξάνω, whereas aukna (= I eke-n) answers to Gk. αὐξάνομαι, in the middle voice; and there was even in Gothic a third form aukada=Gk. αὐξάνομαι in the passive voice. β. The ME. form is waknen or wakenen, intransitive. 'So þat he bigan to wakne'=so that he began to waken (or be aroused from sleep), Havelok, 2164. AS. wæcnan, to arise, be aroused, be born; Grein, ii. 642. The formative -n- in wæc-n-an is due to the pp. suffix -en (Teut. -anoz) seen in AS. wacen, pp. of wac-an, to wake; so that wæc-n-an orig. meant 'to become awake.' Allied to AS. wacan, to wake; see Wake.+Icel. wakna, to become awake; allied to vaka, to wake; Swed. wakna, allied to vaka; Dan. vaagne, allied to vaage; Goth. gawaknan, allied to wakan; whence pres. part. pl. gawaknandans=becoming awake, Luke, ix. 32. Der. a-waken.

WALE (1), WEAL, the mark of a stroke of a rod or whip upon the flesh, a streak, a ridge, a plank along a ship's side. (E.) Sometimes spelt wheel, but a wheel is properly a blister; see Wheal (1). 'The wales, marks, scars, and cicatrices,' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 459 (R.). 'The wales or marks of stripes and lashes,' id. p. 547 (R.). ME. wale. 'Wale, or strype,' Prompt. Parv. 'Wyghtly on the wale [gunwale] thay wye vp thair ankers,' Morte Arthure, 740. AS. walu (pl. wala), a weal, mark of a blow, occurring 4 times in glosses; also, a ridge (Toller). We also find AS. wyrt-wala (-walu), properly the shoot or stem of a root, as when the root of a tree projects from the ground, hence used for 'root' simply; cf. 'ðū plantudest wyrttruman hys'=thou plantedst his roots, Ps. lxxix. 10, ed. Spelman, where the Trinity MS. has 'ðū wyrtwalodes (sic) wirtwaloda,' the last word being corruptly written for wyrtwala. The orig. sense was 'rod,' hence the rounded half-buried side-shoot of a root (as above), or the raised stripe or ridge caused by the blow of a rod or whip. Hence also the sense of ridge or plank along the edge of a ship, as in the comp. gun-wale, q. v. +OFries. walu, a rod, wand; only in the comp. walubera, walebera, a rod-bearer, a pilgrim; EFries. wale, a weal; NFriesic waal, a staff, rod (Outzen); Icel. völur (gen. valar), a round stick, a staff; Swed. dial. val, a round stick, cudgel, flail-handle (Rietz); Goth. walus, a staff; Luke, ix. 3. β. All from the Teut. types **walon-*, **walā*, **waluz*, a round stick, so named from its roundness; the sense of 'rounded ridge' still lingers in mod. E. wale; cf. Icel. valr, round, EFries. walen, to turn round, Russ. val, a cylinder, valiat(e), to roll; allied to L. uoluere, to turn, Gk. ἐλίσσειν, to turn round. (✓WEL). See Volute. Der. gun-wale.

WALE (2), choice; as a vb., to choose. (Scand.) Obsolete; except in N. dialects. ME. walen, to choose, Wars of Alexander, 4655; from wale, sb., choice, Allit. Troy-book, 11952. -OIcel. **wal*, Icel. val, choice; Swed. val; MDan. val.+OHG. wala, choice; G. wahl. Hence Icel. velja, to choose, Swed. välja, Dan. valge; cf. Goth. waljan, to choose, Skt. varaya, to choose, causal form of vr, to choose. From Teut. **wal*, Idg. **wol*, 2nd grade of ✓WEL, to desire. See Will (1).

WALK, to move along on foot without running. (E.) ME. walken, formerly a strong verb, pt. t. welk, pp. walken. The pt. t. welk occurs in the Pricke of Conscience, ll. 4248, 4390; the pp. is spelt walke, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 953. AS. wealcen, pt. wēole, pp. wealcen, to roll, to toss oneself about, rove about, esp. used of the movement or flow of water; Grein, ii. 669. Thus the orig. sense was 'to roll,' much as in the proverb 'a rolling [moving] stone gathers no moss.' Hence the ME. walker, Wyclif, Mark, ix. 2 (earlier version), lit. a roller, a term applied to a fuller of cloth (from his stamping on or pressing it); AS. wealcere=L. fullo, Voc. 407. 29; Walker is still common as a proper name.+Du. walken, to work or make a hat; MDu. walcken, 'to presse, to squeeze, or to straine'; walcker, 'a fuller'; Hexham; Icel. válka, volka, to roll, to stamp, to roll oneself, to wallow; válk, a tossing about; Swed. valka, to roll, to full, to work; Dan. valke, to full, to mill; G. walken, to full, OHG. walchan, to full, also to roll or turn oneself round, to move about; hence G. walker, a fuller. β. All from Teut. base WALK, to roll about, answering to Idg. WALG, whence Skt. valg, to go by leaps. Der. walk, sb., Tw. Nt. i. 3. 138; walk-ing-staff, Rich. II, iii. 3. 151; walk-ing-stick. Also walk-er, a fuller, P. Plowman, C. i. 222. And see wallow.

WALL, a stone fence, a fence of stone or brick, a rampart. (L.) ME. wal, appearing as walle, Chaucer, C. T. 8923 (E 1047). AS. weal, weall, a rampart of earth, a wall of stone; Grein, ii. 671. Not a Teut. word, but borrowed from the famous L. uallum, a rampart, whence also W. gwal, a rampart, as well as Du. wal, Swed. vall, G. wall, &c. β. The L. uallum is a collective sb., signifying a row or line of stakes. -L. uallus, a stake, pale, palisade; lit. a protection. Allied to OIrish fál, a hedge; Stokes-Fick, p. 276. ¶ The true AS. word for 'wall' was wāh, Grein, ii. 643 (where the accent is wrongly omitted), whence ME. wowe, P. Plowman, B. iii. 61 (obsolete). Der. wall, verb, ME. wallen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 51, l. 1169; wall-flower; wall-fruit; also wall-newt, K. Lear, iii. 4. 135. No connexion with wall-eyed.

WALLA, WALLAH, short for Competition-walla. (Hind. -Skt.) A competition-walla is an Anglo-Indian term, applied, after 1836, to one who entered the Civil Service by the competitive system then established. See Yule, who explains that the Hind. -wālā is properly a Hindi adjectival suffix, with a similar value to that of Lat. -ārius, or E. -er; so that competition-walla=competition-er, i. e. competitor. Cf. Hind. gwālā, a cow-herd; for **gō-wālā*; from gō, a cow. -Skt. -vala-, suffix; as in vid-vala-, clever, from vid, to know; Brugmann, ii. § 76, note 1.

WALLABY, a small kangaroo. (Australian). 'Wallaby, a name used for the smaller kinds of kangaroos,' E. E. Morris, Austral. Dict.; q. v. From the native Austral. walla, to jump.

WALLET, a bag for carrying necessities, a budget. (E. ?) ME. walet (with one l), Chaucer, C. T. 683 (A 681); P. Plowman, C. xi. 269, where for 'bag-full' some MSS. have watel-ful and others have walel-ful. In the latter passage we have the probable solution of the word; the ME. walet being apparently a corruption of watel. In the same way, wallets, used by Shakespeare for bags of flesh upon the neck (Temp. iii. 3. 46), may be the same as wattles, 'teat-like excrescences that hang from the cheeks of swine,' Brockett. That wattle should turn into wallet is not very surprising, for l is near akin to r, and a similar shifting of r is a common phenomenon in English, as in AS. irnan=rinnan, to run, ME. brid=a bird, ME. burd=a bride, &c.; so also neeld, a needle, mould=model; wordle for world, i. e. world, P. Plowm. C. i. 10, &c. We even find faddock for fagot, Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vi. 77; and maddock with the same sense as maggot. At any rate, the very special use of wallets=wattles=fleshy bags, is remarkable, as well as the equivalent use of walel and watel in the MSS. of P. Plowman. β. The E. wattle commonly means 'hurdle,' but ME. watel appears to have also meant a basket, and hence a bag. See further under Wattle. It is perhaps worth while to add that we find, in Voc. 656. 9, the entry 'Hic pero, wolyng,' which Mr. Wright explains as 'a leathern sack.' This ME. wolyng, having no obvious etymology, is perhaps a contraction of walling (the dimin. of watel), by loss of t. (Doubtful; some assume an OF. **walel*, bag; as if from OHG. wallōn, to go on pilgrimage.)

WALL-EYED, with glaring eyes, diseased eyes. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, iv. 3. 49, Titus, v. 1. 44. Spenser has whally eyes, F. Q. i. 4. 24. 'Glauciolus, An horse with a waule eye;' Cooper's Thesaurus, ed. 1565. Nares writes it whally, and explains it from whaule or whall, the disease of the eyes called glaucoma; and cites: 'Glaucoma, a disease in the eye; some think it to be a whal eye;' A. Fleming's Nomenclator, p. 428. Cotgrave has: 'Oeil de chevre, a whall, or over-white eye; an eie full of white spots, or whose apple seems divided by a streak of white.' But the spelling with h is wrong. ME. wald-eyed, Wars of Alexander, 608; wolden-eighed, King Alis. 5274. Also wawil-eyed, Wars of Alexander, 1706. -Icel. vald-eygðr, a corrupted form of vagl-eygr, wall-eyed, said of a horse. -Icel. vagl, a beam, also a beam in the eye, a disease of the eye (as in vagl ā auga, a wall in the eye); and eygr, eygðr, eyed, an adj. formed from auga, the eye, which is cognate with E. Eye. β. The Icel. vagl is the same as Swed. vagel, a roost, a perch, also a sty in the eye; vagel på ögat, 'a tumor on the eyelid, a sty on the eyelid,' Widegren. Cf. Norweg. vagl, a hen-roost, Aasen. The lit. sense is 'a perch,' or 'a small support;' closely allied to Icel. vagn, a wain. -✓WEGH, to carry, as in Skt. vah, L. uehere (whence uec-tis, a pole); see Wain. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 316.

WALLOW, to boil; see Potwalloper and Gallop.

WALLOW, to roll oneself about, as in mire. (E.) ME. walwen, Chaucer, C. T. 6684 (D 1102). AS. wealwian, to roll round, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. 6 (b. i. met. 7).+Goth. walujan, to roll, in comp. atwalujan, afwalujan, faurwalujan; L. uoluere, to roll. See Volute.

WALNUT, lit. a foreign nut. (E.) ME. walnote, spelt walnot, P. Plowman, B. xi. 251. Omerc. walk-hnutu, a walnut; Voc. 452. 34. Lit. 'foreign (i. e. Gaulish) nut.' -Omerc. walk, AS. wealh, foreign; and hnutu, a nut. The pl. Wealas means 'strangers,' i. e. the Welsh; but in mod. E. it has become Wales.+Du. walnoot, MDu. walnute (Hexham); Icel. valknöt; Dan. valnød; Swed. valnöt; G. walnuss; also Wälsche nuss, i. e. foreign nut. β. For the latter element, see Nut. The former element is AS. wealh, foreign, OHG. walah, a foreigner, whence G. Wälsch, Italian. The sense 'foreign' is inexact; the AS. Wealh meant a Celt, either of Wales or Gaul. It answers in form to 'one of the tribe of Volcæ,' who occupied Southern Gaul; Cæsar, Bellum Gallicum, vii. 7.

WALRUS, a kind of large seal. (Du.-Scand.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. -Du. walrus, 'a kind of great fish with tusks;' Sewall, ed. 1754. Hence also the modern Scand. forms; as Swed. vallross, a morse, walrus; Dan. hvalros. The name is very old, since the word ross (for horse) is no longer in use in Swedish and Danish, which languages now employ häst, hest in its stead; but we find the right word, in an inverted form, in Icel. hross-hvalr, a walrus, lit. a horse-whale; the name being given (it is suggested) from the noise made by the animal, somewhat resembling a neigh. So also AS. hors-hwæl, a horse-whale or walrus.  $\beta$ . The Swed. vall, Dan. hval, Icel. hvalr, are cognate with E. Whale. The Swed. ross, Dan. ros, Icel. hross or hors, are cognate with AS. hors (the r in which has shifted); see Horse. ¶ The name morse, q. v., is of Finnish origin.

WALTZ, the name of a dance. (G.) Introduced in 1812; see Byron's poem on 'The Waltz.' A shortened form of G. walzer (with z sounded as ts, whence the E. spelling), 'a jig, a waltz'; Flügel. — G. walzen, 'to roll, revolve, dance round about, waltz'; id. + AS. wealtan. to roll, twist; see further under Welter. Der. waltz, verb.

WAMPUM, small beads, used as money. (N. American Indian.) 'Wampum, small beads made of shells [sometimes white], used by the N. American Indians as money, and also wrought into belts, &c. as an ornament'; Webster. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. From the Narragansett wompi, white, and -ompeag, a suffix to denote a string of money; whence the compound wampumpeag, or briefly, wampum; Notes and Queries, 9 S. x. 226. Cf. Algonkin wab, white (Cuq); Massachusetts wómpi. Delaware wápi, white (Mahn). See Wapiti.

WAN, colourless, languid, pale. (E.) ME. wan, Chaucer, C. T. 2458 (A 2456). AS. wann, wonn, dark, black, Grein, ii. 638. It occurs as an epithet of a raven, and of night; so that the sense of the word appears to have suffered a remarkable change; the sense, however, was probably 'dead' or 'colourless,' which is applicable to black and pallid alike. Hence Ettmüller derives it from AS. wann, 2nd grade of winnan, to strive, contend, toil (whence E. win); so that the orig. sense would have been 'worn out with toil, tired out,' from which we easily pass to the sense of 'worn out' or 'pallid with sleeplessness' in the mod. E. word. (Cf. Goth. wunns, affliction; from the weak grade wunn-.) So also in Stokes-Fick, p. 259, who takes it to be cognate with Irish fann, W. gwan, feeble, weak, faint. It seems to be distinct from Wane, confusion with which has affected its sense. See further under Win. Der. wan-ly, wan-ness.

WAND, a long slender rod. (Scand.) ME. wand, Pricke of Conscience, 5880; Ormulum, 16178. — Icel. vöndr (gen. vandar), a wand, a switch, whence vandahús, a wicker-house; MSwed. wand (Ihre); Dan. vaand. + Goth. wandus, a rod, 2 Cor. xi. 25.  $\beta$ . The Teut. type is \**wanduz*, m. It was perhaps named from its pliancy and use in wicker-work, the orig. sense being a lithe twig, that could be wound into wicker-work. From Teut. \**wand*, 2nd grade of \**windan-*, to wind; see Wind (2). But some give it the sense of 'weapon,' and connect it with Wound.

WANDER, to ramble, rove. (E.) ME. wandrien, wandren, P. Plowman, B. vi. 304. AS. wandrian, to wander, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, lib. iv. met. i (cap. xxxvi. § 2). The frequentative form of wend, to go; hence it means 'to keep going about.' From wand-, base of **wand-jan*, the orig. form of wend. See Wend. + EFries. wandern, wandeln; Swed. vandra, Dan. vandre (from Low G.); Du. wandelen, 'to walke,' Hexham; G. wandeln, to wander, travel, walk. Der. wander-er. Also Vandal, q. v.

WANDEROO, a large Cingalese and Malabar monkey. (Cingalese. — Skt.) Spelt wanderow in 1681 (Yule). — Cing. wanderu; cf. Hind. bandar, an ape. — Skt. vānara-, vanara-, a monkey. Lit. 'forest-dweller.' — Skt. vana-, forest. Allied to Goth. winja, pasture; Icel. vin, meadow; orig. free space or 'pleasure-ground'; and allied to Winsome and Win. (✓WEN.)

WANE, to decrease (as the moon), to fail. (E.) ME. wanien, wanen, Chaucer, C. T. 2080 (A 2078). AS. wanian, wonien, to decrease, grow less; Grein, ii. 639. — AS. wan, won, deficient, id. 638. + Icel. vana, to diminish, from vanr, lacking, wanting; also van-, in composition. Cf. OHG. and MHG. wanōn, wanēn, to wane, from wan, deficient, appearing in mod. G. compounds as wahn-. So also Du. wan-, prefix, in wanhoop, despair (lit. lacking hope). Also Goth. wans, lacking.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type \**wa-noz*, adj., deficient; perhaps orig. a pp. Allied to the Gk. ἐνδύς, bereaved, Skt. ūna-s, wanting, lessened, inferior. Der. want, wan-ton; and prob. wan-i-on, q. v.

WANION, in the phrase with a wanion. (E.) In Shak. Per. ii. 1. 17; the phr. with a wanion means 'with a curse on you,' or 'with bad luck to you,' or 'to him,' as the case may be. Explained by Wedgwood, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1873-4, p. 328; the connexion with the verb to wane was pointed out by Nares. There is no doubt (1) that it stands for waniand, and (2) that waniand was taken to be a sb., instead of a pres. part. Rich. quotes from Sir T. More: 'He would of likelyhod binde them to cartes and beate them, and make them wed in the waniand,' Works, p. 306 h; which means, I suppose, he would flog them at the cart's tail (a common expression), and make them marry in the waning moon, i. e. at an unlucky time. So also: 'in woo to wonne [dwell], in the wanyand,' York Plays, p. 124. 'It was in the waniand' [in an unlucky time]; Minot, ed. T. Wright, i. 87. And even in AS. we have: 'Ealle eorðlice lichaman beoð fulran on weaxendum mōnan þonne on wanigendum'; i. e. all earthly things are fuller in the waxing than in the waning moon; Pop. Treatises on Science, ed. T. Wright, p. 15. Halliwell gives 'waniand, the wane of the moon,' without any authority; but compare the following. 'So myghte he wel sey, that in the crook [crescent] of the mone com he thiderward, and in the wylde wanyande [i. e. waning] wente homward'; A Chronicle of London, ed. Sir H. Nicolas, 1827, p. 122; see note to Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 398. So that the first and last quarters of the moon were both unpropitious.  $\beta$ . Waniand is the Northern form of the pres. part. of ME. wanien, to wane, also used actively in the sense to lessen, deprive (see below). The confusion of the pres. part. with the sb. in -ing is so common in English that many people cannot parse a word ending in -ing. Thus in the waniand came to mean 'in the waning,' and with a wanion means with a diminution, detriment, ill-luck. On 'the fatal influence of the waning moon, . . . general in Scotland,' see Brand's Popular Antiquities, chapter on The Moon. The Icel. vana, to wane, is commonly transitive, with the senses 'to make to wane, disable, spoil, destroy,' which may have influenced the superstition in the North, though it is doubtless widely spread. Cf. 'wurreð uppe chirches, oðer waniæð hire rihtes, oðer letteð' = war upon churches, or lessen their rights, or hinder them; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 177, l. 6. See Wane.

WANT, lack, deficiency, indigence, need. (Scand.) ME. want, first in the Ormulum, 14398, where it is spelt wannt, and has the adj. sense of 'deficient'; spelt wonte, and used as a sb., Ancrén Riwle, p. 284, l. 2. — Icel. vant, neuter of vanr, adj., lacking, deficient. This neuter form was used with a gen. case following; as, var þeim vettugis vant = there was lacking to them of nothing, i. e. they wanted nothing. [The Icel. sb. for want is vansi.]  $\beta$ . Thus the final t was orig. merely the termination of the neut. gender (as in E. i-t, tha-t, thwar-t); but the word vant was in common use, and even the verb vanta, to want, to lack, was formed from it, which is the origin of E. want as a verb.  $\gamma$ . The Icel. vanr, adj., is explained under Wane, q. v. Der. want, verb, ME. wanten, spelt wonten in Ancrén Riwle, p. 344, l. 14; from Icel. vanta, verb, as above. Also want-ing, pres. part., sometimes used as adj.

WANTON, playful, sportive, unrestrained. (E.) The true sense is unrestrained, uneducated, not taken in hand by a master; hence, licentious. ME. wantoun, contracted form of wantowen; spelt wantoun, Chaucer, C. T. 208; spelt wantowen, wantowne, wanton, P. Plowman, C. iv. 143, where it is applied to women. Compounded of wan-, prefix, and towen, pp.  $\beta$ . The prefix wan- signifies 'lacking, wanting,' and is explained under Wane. In composition it has sometimes the force of un- (to which it is not related), but also gives an ill sense, almost like Gk. δυσ-.  $\gamma$ . The pp. towen stands for AS. togen, pp. of tēon, to draw, to educate, bring up, Grein, ii. 527. The change from AS. g to ME. w (after a, o, or u) is seen again in AS. mugan = ME. mowen, to be able, and is regular. The AS. togen is cognate with G. gezogen, so that E. wanton, ill-bred, corresponds very nearly to G. ungezogen, 'ill-bred, unmannerly, rude, uncivil,' Flügel. For an account of AS. tēon, see Tow (1). Mr. Wedgwood well cites wel i-towune, well educated, modest, Ancrén Riwle, p. 204, l. 17; untowune, licentious, id. p. 342, l. 26. So also fūl itowene, foully (badly) educated; id. p. 140, l. 26. Der. wanton-ly; wanton-ness, ME. wantounesse, Chaucer, C. T. 266 (A 264). Also wanton, sb.

WAPENTAKE, an old name for a hundred or district. (Scand.) 'Fraunchises, hundredis, wapentakes'; Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 181. 'Candred . . . is a contray þat conteyneþ an hundred townes, and is also in Engliche i-cleped wepentake'; Trevisa, ii. 87; spelt wapentake, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 145, l. 16. The word occurs in the AS. Laws, but was merely adapted from Norse; the AS. tēcan does not mean 'to touch,' but 'to teach,' and is altogether removed from the word under discussion. It is remarkable that various explanations of this word have been given, seeing that all the while the Laws of Edward the Confessor fully explain the orig. sense. AS. wæpengetæce, dat. case, a district, wapentake, Secular Laws of Edgar, § vi, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, vol. i. p. 274; we also find wæpentake, dat. case, id. p. 292. The nom. is wæpengetac or wæpentac, Latinised as wapentac or wapentagium, Laws of Edw. Conf. § xxx, in Thorpe, i. 455, where we also read: 'Quod alii vocant hundredum, supradicti comitatus vocant wapentagium, et hoc non sine causa; cum enim aliquis accipiebat prefecturam wapentagii, die constituto, conveniebant omnes majores contra eum in loco ubi soliti erant congregari, et, descendente eo de equo suo, omnes assurgebant contra eum, et ipse erigebat lanceam suam in altum, et omnes de lanceis suis tangebant hastam ejus, et sic confirmabant se sibi. Et de armis, quia arma vocant wappa, et taccare, quod est confirmare. To which another MS. adds: 'Anglice vero arma vocantur wapen, et taccare confirmare, quasi armorum confirmacio, vel ut magis expresse, secundum linguam Anglicam, dicamus wapentac, i. e. armorum tactus: wapen enim arma sonat, tac tactus est. Quamobrem potest cognosci quod hac de causa totus ille conventus dicitur wapentac, eo quod per tactum armorum suorum ad invicem confederate (sic) sunt.' We may then dismiss other explanations, and accept the one above, that when a new chief of a wapentake was elected, he used to raise his weapon (a spear), and his men touched it with theirs in token of fealty. However the word (as above said) is Norse. — Icel. vāpnatak, lit. a weapon-taking or weapon-touching; hence, a vote of consent so expressed, and lastly, a subdivision of a shire in the Danish part of England, answering (somewhat) to the hundred in other parts; the reason for this being as above given. — Icel. vāpna, gen. pl. of vāpn, a weapon, cognate with E. weapon; and tak, a taking hold, a grasp, esp. a grasp in wrestling (here used of the contact of weapons), from taka, to take, seize, grasp, also to touch. See Weapon and Take. ¶ As the Icel. taka means to touch as well as to take, it will be seen that the explanation 'weapon-grasping' in the Icel. Dict. is insufficient; it means more than that, viz. the clashing of one spear against another. 'Si placuit [sententia], frameas concutiunt; honoratissimum assensus genus est armis laudare,' Tacitus, Germania, chap. 11; &c. Cf. Lowland Sc. wapinschaw (weapon-show), an exhibition of arms made at certain times in every district; Jamieson.

WAPITI, the American elk. (Amer. Indian.) From the Cree wapitik, 'white deer'; cf. Delaware wāpi, white. See Wampum. ¶ The name is misapplied, as the wapiti is not white; it was first given to the Rocky Mountain goat (Haplocerus montanus); and then transferred to the wapiti, which does not much resemble it. See Century Dict.

WAR, hostility, a contest between states by force of arms. (F.—Teut.) ME. werre (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 47. It occurs in the A. S. Chron. an. 1119, where it is spelt wyrre, but a little further on, an. 1140, it is spelt uerre (= werre). But we also find 'armorum oneribus, quod Angli war-scot dicunt' in the Laws of Cnut, De Foresta, § 9; Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 427 (evidently from a MS. of later date). The word is really French; the usual AS. word is wig; we also find hild, winn, gūð, &c. The derivatives warrior and warrye (to make war on, Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 48), respecting which see below, are also of F. origin. — OF. werre, war (Burguy, Roquefort), whence mod. F. guerre. Of Teut. origin. From the sb. seen in MDu. werre, 'warre,' Hexham; OHG. werra, broil, confusion, strife. — OSax. and OHG. werran, str. vb., to confuse, embroil; cf. mod. G. verwirren. The Teut. base is **werr-*, for older **werz-*, **wers-*, meaning 'to confuse.' Prob. allied to worse; see Worse. Der. war, verb, late AS. werrien, A. S. Chron. an. 1135, formed from the sb. werre. Also war-fare, properly 'a warlike expedition'; 'he was nat in good poynt to ride a warfare,' i. e. on a warlike expedition, Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron. vol. ii. c. 13 (R.); see Fare. Also war-like, K. John, v. 1. 71; warr-i-or, ME. werreour, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 166, l. 5, from OF. **werreür*, not recorded, old spelling of OF. guerreür (Burguy), a warrior, one who makes war, formed with suffix -ur from OF. werreier, guerreier (spelt werrier in Supp. to Godefroy, s. v. guerreier), to make war, borrowed by E. and appearing as ME. werreien or werreyen, Chaucer, C. T. 1546, 10324 (A 1544, F 10), and in Spenser as warry or warrey, F. Q. i. 5. 48, ii. 10. 21; so that warrior is really a familiar form of warreyour; cf. guerroyeur, 'a martialist, or warrior,' Cot., from guerroyer, 'to warre,' id.

WARBLE, to sing as a bird, chirp, carol. (F.—MHG.) ME. werblen, spelt werbelen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2004; the sb. werble occurs in the same, 119. — OF. werbler, to quaver with the voice, speak in a high tone (Burguy). — MHG. **wirbeln* (not given), or **werbelen*, mod. G. wirbeln, to whirl, to run round, to warble, frequentative form of MHG. werben, OHG. hwerben, to be busy, to set in movement, urge on (whence mod. G. be-werben, to sue for, erwerben, to acquire), the orig. sense being to twirl oneself about, to twirl or whirl. See Whirl, which is, practically, a doublet. Der. warble, sb., ME. werble, as above; warbl-er.

WARD, a guard, a watch, means of guarding, one who is under a guardian, &c. (E.) 1. ME. ward, dat. warde, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 320; pl. wardes, guards, King Alisaunder, 1977. AS. weard, a guard, watchman, Grein, ii. 673. This is a masc. sb. (gen. weardes); we also find AS. weard, fem. (gen. wearde), a guarding, watching, protection; id. Both senses are still retained. Both sbs. are formed from the Teut. base WER, to watch; see Wary. Thus the orig. sense of the masc. sb. is 'a watchman,' and of the fem. sb. is 'a watching.' + Icel. vörðr, gen. varðar, (1) a warder or watchman, (2) a watch; G. wart, a warder; Goth. -wards, masc. sb., a keeper, only in the comp. daurawards, a door-keeper. All these are from the same root. 2. From this sb. was formed the verb to ward, AS. weardian, to keep, to watch, Grein, ii. 674; cognate with which are Icel. varða, to warrant, G. warten, and OSax. wardōn, to watch, from the last of which were derived the OF. (and AF.) warder, to guard, whence E. ward-en, and (through the French) E. guard. Der. ward-er, Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 21; ward-room, ward-ship. Also ward-en, q. v., ward-robe, q. v. Also bear-ward, door-ward, hay-ward (= hedge-ward, from AS. hege, a hedge); ste-ward, q. v. Doublet, guard, sb. and verb.

-WARD, suffix. (E.) A common suffix, expressing the direction towards which one tends. AS. -weard, as in tō-weard, toward; see Toward, where the suffix is fully explained. It occurs also as Icel. -verðr, Goth. -wairths, OHG. -wert, -wart; and cf. L. uersus, towards, from the same root. We also have -wards, AS. -weardes, where -es is a genitival suffix giving an adverbial force. Der. after-ward, back-ward, east-ward, for-ward, fro-ward, hind-ward, hither-ward, home-ward, in-ward, neither-ward, north-ward, out-ward, south-ward, thither-ward, to-ward, up-ward, west-ward. To most of these s can be added, except to froward. See also way-ward, wool-ward, verse, prose, suzerain.

WARDEN, a guardian, keeper, one who keeps guard. (F.—OSax.) Though the verb to ward is English, and so is its derivative warder, the sb. warden is F., as shown by the suffix. ME. wardein, Ancr. Riwe, p. 272, l. 4. — AF. wardein, Liber Albus, p. 247; OF. wardain (Godefroy), old spelling of OF. gardein, gardain, a warden, guardian. Cf. Low L. gardiānus, a guardian; showing that OF. wardein was formed from OF. ward-er by help of the L. suffix -i-ānus. See Ward.

WARDON, WARDEN, a pear. (E.) A wardon was 'a large coarse pear used for baking,' Voc. 717, note 1, where we find it spelt wardun, in a Nominale of the 15th century; it is spelt warden in Voc. 629. 7, and in Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 48. By popular etymology, a keeping pear (see Nares); Cotgrave has 'poire de garde, a warden, or winter pear, a pear which may be kept very long,' but the adj. gardien, 'keeping, warding, guarding,' answering to Low L. gardiānus (for **wardiānus*), had an active sense, and is therefore inappropriate. The better spelling is wardon, as in Palsgrave, the Prompt. Parv., and the Catholicon; in Two Cookery Books, ed. Austin, we find wardon, wardone, wardoun. In Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 15, the pl. wardouns rimes with two sbs. ending with -ouns, showing that the form wardon (-oun, -un) is right. Cf. 'medlers and wardones,' Excerpta Historica, p. 115 (1498). So named from Wardon (<AS. Weard-dūn) in Beds. The arms of Wardon (or Warden) Abbey were argent, three wardon-pears, or; see Privy Purse Expenses of Princess Mary, ed. Madden, p. 272.

WARDROBE, a place to keep clothes in. (F.—Teut.) ME. warderobe; 'Jupiter hath in his warderobe bothe garmentes of ioye and of sorowe,' Test. of Love, b. ii. ch. ix. 140. — OF. warderobe, old spelling of garderobe; see Godefroy. The spelling garderobe is in Palsgrave, s. v. wardroppe. Cotgrave spells it garderobbe, 'a wardrobe, also a house of office' [see wardrope in Halliwell]. — OF. warder, to ward, keep, preserve; and robe, a robe; both words being of G. origin. See Ward and Robe.

WARE (1), merchandise. (E.) ME. ware (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 4560 (B 140). AS. waru, ware; 'Merx, waru;' Voc. 311. 35. We also find AS. waru, protection, guard, care, custody, which is tolerably common; Grein, ii. 641. These words are doubtless related; the sense of wares appears to have been 'things kept in store'; cf. Icel. varnaðr, (1) protection, (2) wares. + Du. waar, a ware, commodity; pl. waren, wares. Cf. MDu. waren, 'to keepe or to garde,' Hexham; Low G. ware, Icel. vara, pl. vörur, wares; Dan. ware, pl. varer; cf. vare, care; Swed. vara, pl. varor; cf. vara, care; G. waare, pl. waaren; cf. wahre, care, wahren, to guard. Teut. type **warā*, fem.; from the Teut. base WER, to guard; as distinct from the base WER, to watch. See Weir (1) and Worth. Der. ware-house (Palsgrave).

WARE (2), aware. (E.) 'They were ware of it,' Acts, xiv. 6; so also in Romeo, i. 1. 131, ii. 2. 103, &c. See further under Wary.

WARE (3), sea-weed. (E.) The Northern form; see Jamieson, who quotes from G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil. Prov. E. wore, waur. AS. wār, sea-weed. 'Alga, waar;' Voc. 5. 1. + MDu. wier, 'sea-grasse,' Hexham. Perhaps from ✓WEI, to twine; see Withy.

WARE (4), pt. t. of Wear, q. v.

WARFARE, WARLIKE; see under War.

WARILY, WARINESS; see under Wary.

WARISON, protection, reward. (F.—Teut.) ME. warisoun, protection, Rob. of Brunne, p. 198, l. 1. This is the true sense; but it is much more common in the sense of help or 'reward'; see Will. of Palerne, 2259, 2379, Barbour, Bruce, ii. 206, x. 526, xx. 544. The usual sense of mod. F. guérison is 'recovery from illness,' which is yet a third sense of what is really the same word. Cf. ME. warisshen, to cure, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 105. — OF. warison, garison (Godefroy), surety, safety, provision, also healing. Cot. has guarison, 'health, curing, recovery.' — OF. warir, garir, to keep, secure, also to heal (Godefroy); mod. F. guérir. β. Of Teut. origin; from the verb appearing as Goth. warjan, to defend, forbid, keep off from, whence the sense 'secure'; and in OHG. werjan, to keep off, AS. werian, to defend; Teut. type **warjan-*, to keep off. Allied to Gk. ἐρυσθαι, to keep off; see Weir. γ. We may note that the OF. garison corresponds to the mod. E. garrison in form; but the sense of garrison is such as to link it more closely with OF. garnison, another sb. from a different ✓WER, for which see Ware (1). And see Garrison. ¶ Sir W. Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel, iv. 24, uses warrison in the sense of 'note of assault,' as if it were a warry (warlike) sound. This is a singular blunder.

WARLOCK, a wizard. (E.) In Jamieson's Scot. Dict. '[Æneas] was no warlock, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron-free or lead-free;' Dryden, Dedication to tr. of Virgil's Æneid; § 28. The final ck stands for an orig. guttural sound, just as most Englishmen say lock for the Scottish loch; the suffix was prob. confused with that of hem-lock or wed-lock. ME. warloghe, a wicked one, a name for the devil, Destruction of Troy, 4439. Spelt warlagh, a warlock, devil, Cursor Mundi, 8915; warlau, id. 725; warlawe, a deceiver, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 783. AS. wærlaga, a traitor, deceiver, liar, truce-breaker, Grein, ii. 650. Lit. 'one who lies against the truth.' — AS. wær, truth (as in wærlās, false, lit. 'truthless,' Grein), cognate with L. uērūm, truth; and loga, a liar, from log- (Teut. **lug-*), weak grade of lēogan (pp. log-en), to lie, Grein, ii. 176, 194. See Verity and Lie (2).

WARM, moderately hot. (E.) ME. warm, Chaucer, C. T. 7409 (D 1827). AS. wearm, Grein, ii. 675. + Du. warm; Icel. varmr; Dan. and Swed. varm; G. warm. Cf. Goth. warmjan, to warm; the adj. warms does not occur. β. The Teut. is type **war-moz*, warm, Fick, iii. 292. It is usual to connect this with L. formus, Gk. θερμός, hot, Skt. gharma-s, heat, from the ✓GwHER, to glow; with labio-velar gh. γ. But this is not very satisfactory. On this account, Fick (ii. 465) connects warm with Russ. varile, to boil, brew, scorch, burn, Lithuan. werdu, I cook, seethe, boil (infin. wirti), and hence infers a ✓WER, to cook or boil, common to Teutonic and Slavonic. So also Brugmann, i. § 680; cf. § 650. Der. warm-ly, warm-ness; also warm, verb, AS. wearmian, Grein, ii. 675, whence warm-er, warm-ing-pan; also warm-th, sb., ME. wermpe, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 37, l. 33 (not found in AS., which has wearm-ness).

WARN, to caution against, put on one's guard. (E.) ME. warnien, warnen, Chaucer, C. T. 3535. AS. warnian, warnian, (1) to take heed, which is the usual sense, Luke, xi. 35; (2) to warn, Gen. vi. 6; cf. warning, a warning, Gen. xli. 32. Cognate with OHG. warnōn, to provide for oneself against, used reflexively, whence G. warnen, to warn against, to caution against. Further allied to beware and wary; see Wary. ¶ Distinct from the AS. sb. wearn, a refusal, denial (Grein), an obstacle, impediment (Bosworth); the orig. sense being a guarding of oneself, a defence of a person on trial, as in Icel. vörn, a defence; cf. Icel. varna, to warn off, refuse, abstain from. Der. warn-ing. And see garn-ish, garr-i-son (for garn-ison). Also fore-warn, pre-warn.

WARP, the thread stretched lengthwise in a loom, to be crossed by the woof; a rope used in towing. (E.) Lit. 'that which is thrown across;' see Nares. ME. warþ; 'Warþ, threde for webbynge,' Prompt. Parv. AS. wearþ, a warp; 'Stamen, wearþ,' Voc. 48. 33. + Low G. warþ (Danneil); Icel. varþ, a casting, throwing, also the warping of anything; Dan. varþ, only as a naut. term; Swed. varþ, a warp; OHG. warf, a warp. Teut. type **warþom*, n. β. All from the Teut. base **warþ*, 2nd grade of Teut. **werþan-*, to throw, as seen in AS. weorþan, G. werfen, Goth. wairþan, to throw. If the Teut. **werþ* is for an older **werq*, from Idg. ✓WERGw, we may compare Russ. verg-at(e), to throw. ¶ The ME. werþen, to throw, pt. t. warþ, pp. worþen, occurring in Havelok, 1061, &c., is obsolete. Der. warþ, verb, to pervert, twist out of shape (cf. cast in the sense of to twist timber out of shape); Palsgrave has: 'I warþe, as bordes do.' This is not the ME. werþen (as above), but a derived weak verb, and is of Scand. origin; ME. warþen, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. varþa, to throw, cast; cf. varþ, sb., a casting, also a warping. Cf. Swed. varpa, Dan. varþe, to warp a ship, from Swed. varþ, the draught of a net, Dan. varþ, a warp; Dan. varþanker, a warp-anchor or kedg.

WARRANT, a voucher, guarantee, commission giving authority. (F.—OHG.) ME. warrant, Havelok, 2067, St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 8, l. 10. — OF. warrant, guarant (Burguy, Supp. to Godefroy), later garant, 'a vouchee, warrant; also, a supporter, defender, maintainer, protector;' Cot. Cotgrave also gives the spelling garent, 'a warrenter.' In the Laws of Will. I, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 476, 477, the AF. spelling is guarant, and the Low L. warantum and warrantum. The suffix -ant is clearly due to the -ant- used as the suffix of a present participle; so that the orig. sense of OF. war-ant was 'certifying' or 'securing.' — OHG. werēnt-, stem of pres. pt. of werēn (G. gewähren), to certify, to warrant. Allied to OFries. wera, to warrant. Of uncertain origin; Schade suggests connexion with OHG. and AS. wer, a man; as if 'to offer oneself as a surety.' Der. warrant, verb, ME. waranten, K. Alisaunder, 2132 (cf. Walloon waranti, to warrant); warrant-er, warrant-or, warrant-able, warrant-abl-y, warrant-able-ness. Also warrant-y, from OF. warantie, later garrantie, 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantie,' Cot., orig. fem. of pp. of warantir, later garrantir, to warrant, guarantee. Also guarant-ee (error for guarant-ie), q. v.

WARREN, a preserved piece of ground, now only used of a place where rabbits abound, not always a preserved place. (F.—OHG.) ME. wareine, P. Plowman, B. prol. 163. — OF. warene, warene, warene (Roquefort); warene, garene, garene (Godefroy); later garene, 'a warren of conies [conies], also a certain, or limited fishing in a river;' Cot. The orig. sense was 'a preserve.' Cf. Low L. warena, a preserve for rabbits, hares, or fish, occurring A.D. 1186 (Ducange). Formed (with Low L. suffix -enna) from OHG. warjan (>OF. warir), to protect, keep, preserve; see Warison. Cf. Du. warande, a park; borrowed from OFrench. Der. warren-er, contracted to warner, P. Plowman, B. v. 316; which explains the name Warner.

WART, a small hard excrescence, on the skin, or on trees. (E.) ME. werte (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T., A 555 (Six-text edition, where one MS. has wrete); spelt wert in Tyrwhitt, l. 557. AS. wearte, pl. weartan, Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 130, l. 20. 'Papula, wearte;' Voc. 37. 9. + Du. wrat; MDu. warte, wratte (Hexham); Pomeran. wratte; Icel. varia; Dan. vorte; Swed. vårta; G. warze. β. All from Teut. type **wariōn-*, f. Perhaps the orig. sense is 'growth,' hence out-growth or excrescence; and closely allied to Wort (1), q. v. Some connect it with AS. wearr, a callosity, L. uerrūca, a wart, from an allied root **wers*, to rise. Brugmann, i. § 380. Der. wart-y.

WARY, WARE, guarding against deception or danger, cautious. (E.) The ME. form is war; war-y is a comparatively late formation; perhaps the -y was subjoined as in murk-y from ME. mirke, merke, and swarth-y from swart. In Meas. for Meas. iv. 1. 38. ME. war, Chaucer, C. T., A 309 (Six-text ed.), misspelt ware in Tyrwhitt, l. 311. AS. wær, cautious, Grein, ii. 649. + Icel. varr; Dan. and Swed. var; Goth. vars; G. gewahr, aware. β. All from Teut. type **waroz*, cautious. From Teut. base **war*, answering to Idg. **wor*, as in Gk. ὥρᾱν, I perceive, look out for, observe, 2nd grade of Idg. ✓WER, to watch, regard, as in L. uerēri, to regard, respect, dread. Der. wari-ly, wari-ness; a-ware, be-ware. And see war-d, guar-d; ware (1); re-vere; pan-or-a-ma, di-or-a-ma.

WAS, WAST, WERE, WERT, used as parts of the verb to be. (E.) ME. pt. t. sing. was, wast, was; pl. weren or were. AS. wesan, infin. to be; whence pt. t. indic. sing. wæs, wære, was; pl. wæran, wæron, or wærun; pt. t. subj. sing. wære (for all persons), pl. wæren or wæron (for all persons). See Grein, ii. 664. β. As to the use of was in the 1st and 3rd persons, there is no difficulty. γ. As to the 2nd person, the AS. form was wære, whence ME. were, as in 'thou were betrayed,' Chaucer, C. T. 14690 (B 3570). In Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 67, where 7 MSS. read were, one MS. has was, and another has wast; no doubt was-t was formed (by analogy with hast) from the dialectal was, which was prob. Northern. When you came to be used for thou, the phrase you was took the place of thou was, and is very common in writings of the 18th century. Cf. I has, Barbour, Bruce, xiii. 65; I is, ye is (Northern dialect), Chaucer, C. T. 4043; thou is, id. 4087 (A 4045, 4089). In the subj. mood, the true form is were; hence wer-t (by analogy with wast), K. John, iii. 1. 43, ed. 1623. δ. In the first and third persons singular of the subjunctive, and in the plural, the true form is were; but the use of were in the singular is gradually becoming obsolete, except when the conjunction if precedes. The forms if I were, if he were, if I be, if he be, if he have, exhibit the clearest surviving traces of a (grammatically marked) subj. mood in mod. English; and of these, if he have is almost gone. Some careful writers employ if he do, if it make, and the like; but it is not improbable that the subjunctive mood will disappear from the language; the particular phrase if I were will probably linger the longest. + Du. infin. wezen; indic. sing. was, waart, was; pl. waren, waart, waren; subj. sing. ware, ware, ware; pl. waren, waret, waren; Icel. infin. vera; indic. sing. var, vart, var, pl. vārum, vārut, vāru; subj. sing. væra, værir, væri; pl. værim, værit, væri; Dan. infin. være; indic. sing. var; pl. voro, voren, voro; subj. sing. vore; pl. vore, voren, voro; Goth. wisan, to be, dwell, remain; pt. t. indic. sing. was, wast, was; dual, wēsū, wēsuts; pl.

wēsum, wēsuth, wēsun; subj. sing. wēsiau, wēseis, wēsi; dual, wēseīwa, wēseits; pl. wēseima, wēseith, wēseina; G. pt. t. sing. war, warest or warst, war; pl. waren, waret, waren; subj. sing. wäre, wärest or wärst, würe; pl. wären, wäret, würen. B. All from WES, to dwell; cf. Skt. vas, to dwell, remain, live; Gk. ἐσ-ρία, a hearth, ἀσ-ρυ, a dwelling-place, city; L. uer-na (for **ues-na*), a household slave; Ves-ia, goddess of the household; Irish feis-im, I remain. Der. wass-ail, q. v. And see ver-na-cul-ar.

WASH, to cleanse with water, overflow. (E.) Formerly a strong verb; hence un-waschen, Mark, vii. 2. ME. waschen, weschen, pt. t. wesch, wosch, pp. waschen. The pt. t. is wessh in Chaucer, C. T. 2285 (A 2283), misprinted wesshe by Tyrwhitt. AS. wascan, Grein, ii. 641. Just as we find āxian (= ācsian) as well as ācsian, so also wascan appears as waxan; the pt. t. is wōsc or wōx; the pp. is wascen or wāscen. 'Hig hira rēaf wōxon' = they washed their robes, Exod. xix. 14. + Du. wasschen; Icel. and Swed. vaska; Dan. vaske; G. waschen, pt. t. wusch, pp. gewaschen. β. The Teut. type is **waskan-*, to wash, prob. for **wasskan-*, **wat-skan-*, to rinse in wet or in water, where **wat* is allied to E. wat-er, wet. Brugmann, i. § 942. Der. wash, sb., as in The Wash (place-name); wash-er, wash-er-woman, wash-y.

WASP, a stinging insect. (E.) ME. waspe, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 648. Cf. prov. E. waps, wops. AS. wæps. 'Vespa, wæps;' Voc. 121. 14. In a very old AS. glossary of the 8th century, we find: 'Fespa, wæfs, Voc. 21. 42. + OHG. wefsa, wafsa; G. wespe; Bavarian webes, a wasp; OLow G. wepsia (Gallée). Contracted from a Teut. type **wabis-*, answering to Idg. **wobhes-* (whence Russ. osa, a wasp, Lith. wapsū, a gadfly); from **wobh*, 2nd grade of W. WEBH, to weave (whence L. uespa, a wasp, for **uepsa, *uebsa*), from the nests which they construct. See Weave. Brugmann, i. § 918. Cf. Skt. ūrṇa-vābhi-, a spider, lit. 'wool-weaver,' in Macdonell's Dict. Der. wasp-ish, As You Like It, iv. 3. 9; wasp-ish-ly, -ness.

WASSAIL, a festive occasion, a carouse. (AF. — Teut.) See Brand's Popular Antiquities, vol. i. p. 2, where also Verstegan's 'etymology' (from wax hale) and Selden's (from wish-hail) and other curiosities may be found. In Macb. i. 7. 64; Hamlet, i. 4. 9, &c. ME. wasseyl, washayl, Rob. of Glouc. p. 117, 118, ll. 2514, 2522; and see Hearne's Glossary, p. 731, and Layamon. The story is that Rowena presented a cup to Vortigern with the words was heil, and that Vortigern, who knew no English, was told to reply by saying drinc heil. Whatever truth there be in this, we at any rate learn that was heil and drinc heil were phrases used at a drinking-bout. The former phrase is a salutation, meaning 'be of good health,' lit. 'be hale'; the latter phrase is almost untranslatable, meaning literally 'drink, hale!' i. e. 'drink, and good luck be with you.' β. These forms are not AS., but Norman; Wace, describing the night before the battle of Hastings, gives the forms wessexil and wesse heil (error for wes heil). The latter represents the OSax. wes hēl, OIcel. **wes heill* (Icel. ver heill). The corresponding AS. (Wessex) form of salutation was wæs þū hāl, occurring in Beowulf, 407; or hāl wes ðū, Luke, i. 28. It occurs in the plural in Matt. xxviii. 9; 'hāle wese gē' = whole be ye, or peace be unto you; from AS. wes, wæs, be thou, imperative sing., 2nd person, of wesan, to be; and hāl, whole. See Was and Whole. γ. In the Icel. Dict. we find similar phrases, such as kom heill, welcome, hail! (lit. come, hale!); far heill, farewell! (lit. fare, hale!); sit heill, sit hail! (lit. sit, hale!); the last of these fully explains drinc heill. We may also notice Icel. heill, sb., good luck; and we even find AS. hæl (as a sb.), health, salvation, Luke, xix. 9. See Hail (2). Explained by me in N. and Q. 10 S. iii. 455. Cf. ONorthumbrian wes hāl, whence mod. Yorks. wessal, a wassail.

WASTE, desert, desolate, unused. (F. — OHG. — L.) ME. wast, Rob. of Glouc. p. 372, l. 7667. — OF. wast, in the phr. faire wast, to make waste (preserved in E. as lay waste), Roquefort; later form gast. He also gives waster, to waste; see also gast, gaster, in Godefroy. We find AF. wast, adj., and wastee, pp. fem., in Stat. Realm, i. 48 (1278). — MHG. waste, sb., a waste; wasten, to lay waste; whence also Ital. guastare, to waste, F. gâter, to spoil. Not a Teut. word; but simply borrowed from L. uastus, waste, desolate, also vast, whence the verb uastāre, to waste, lay waste. Allied to OIrish fās, empty; Idg. types **wāstos, wāstios*; Brugmann, i. § 317. B. It is remarkable that we should have adopted this word from French, since we had the word already in an AS. form as wēste; but it is quite certain that we did so, since wēste would have been weest in mod. E.; besides which, there are two ME. forms, viz. wast (from F.) and weste (from AS.), of which the latter soon died out, the latest example noted by Stratmann being from the Owl and Nightingale, l. 1528. And the result is remarkably confirmed by the ME. wastour for waster (see below). C. The history of the word in G. is equally curious. There also the OHG. has wuosti, adj., empty, wuosti, sb., a waste, and wuostan, to waste; yet, in addition to these, we also find waste, sb., wasten, verb, borrowed from Latin, as shown above. But in G. the native form prevailed, as shown by mod. G. wüst, waste, wüste, a waste, wüsten, to waste. Cf. also OHG. wuosti, AS. wēste, OSax. wōsti, Du. woest, adj. waste, empty; Teut. type **wōstjoz*, Idg. type **wāstios* (as above). ¶ Hatzfeld derives OF. waster from L. uastāre, explaining the w as due to OHG. influence. It comes to much the same thing. See Vast. Der. waste, sb., ME. waste, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2098; waste, verb, ME. wasten, Layamon, 22575, from OF. waster < OHG. wasten, from L. uastāre; wast-er, ME. wastour, P. Plowman, B. prol. 22, vi. 29, where the suffix -our is French. Also waste-ful, K. John, iv. 2. 16; waste-ful-ly, -ness; waste-ness, Zeph. i. 15. (A. V.) Doublet, vast.

WATCH, a keeping guard, observation. (E.) ME. wacche, P. Plowman, B. ix. 17. AS. wæcce, a watch, Grein, ii. 641. — AS. wacian, to watch; Mait. xxvi. 40; AS. wacan, to wake; see Wake (1). Der. watch, verb, ME. wacchen, Gower, C. A. i. 163; bk. ii. 110; watch-er; watch-ful, Two Gent. i. 1. 31, watch-ful-ly, -ness; watch-case, a sentry-box, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 17; watch-dog, Temp. i. 2. 383; watch-man (Palsgrave); watch-word, 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 231.

WATCHET, light blue. (F.) Cotgrave has: 'pers, watchet, blunket, skie-coloured.' Nares gives exx. of watchet from Browne, Lily, Drayton, and Taylor; and Richardson from Beaum. and Fletcher, Hakluyt, Spenser, Ben Jonson, and Chaucer. 'Watchet eyes;' tr. of Juvenal, Sat. xiii. (not by Dryden). 'Al in a kertell of a liht watchett;' Chaucer, C. T., A 3321; Lansdowne MS. The Camb. MS. has vachet, the Harl. MS. has wachet; the rest waget, waget. — OF. wachet, a sort of stuff (Godefroy); cf. wache, wasce, the same. Perhaps from OHG. wāt, clothing; see Wadmal. As with blunket (see N. E. D.), the difficulty is to know whether the stuff gave name to the colour or conversely.

WATER, the fluid in seas and rivers. (E.) ME. water, Chaucer, C. T. 402 (A 400). AS. wæter, Grein, ii. 651. + Du. water; OSax. water; G. wasser, OHG. wazar, wazzar. β. From the Teut. type **watrom*, n., water. There is also a Teut. type **watōn-*, water, appearing in Icel. vatn, Dan. vand, Swed. vatten, Goth. watō (pl. watna), water. Allied words are Russ. voda, Gk. ὕδωρ, L. unda, Lithuan. wandz, Skt. udan, water; OIrish fand, a tear. All from the *W*ED, to wet; see Wet. Der. water, verb, AS. wætrian, Gen. ii. 6, 10; water-ish, K. Lear, i. 1. 261; water-y, AS. wæterig, Voc. 147. 6. Also water-carriage, -clock, -closet; -colour, 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 80; -course; -cress, ME. water-kyrs, Voc. 643. 26; -fowl; -gall, a rainbow, Shak. Lucrece, 1588; -level; -lily, ME. water-lille, Voc. 644. 1; -line, -logged, -man, -mark, -mill (Palsgrave), -pipe; -pot, Chaucer, C. T. 8166 (E 290); -power, -proof, -shed (modern), -spout, -tight, -wheel, -work; &c., &c.

WATTLE, a twig, flexible rod, usually a hurdle; the fleshy part under the throat of a cock or turkey. (E.) In all senses, it is the same word. The orig. sense is something twined together; hence it came to mean a hurdle, woven with twigs, a basket; hence, a bag; also, the baggy flesh on a bird's neck. (It also appears in the corrupt form wallet; see Wallet.) ME. watel, a bag, P. Plowman, C. xi. 269; see further under Wallet. Hence ME. watelen, verb, to wattle, twist together or strengthen with hurdles, P. Plowman, B. xix. 323. AS. watel, a hurdle, covering; also watul. 'Teges, watul;' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 52, l. 13. Watelas, pl., coverings of a roof, tiles, Luke, v. 19; also in the sense of twigs or hurdles, Ælfric, tr. of Bede, b. iii. c. 16. Allied to AS. wætla, a bandage. There appear to be no cognate words, and the root is unknown. Der. wattle, verb, ME. watelen, as above. Doublet, wallet.

WAUL; see under Wawl.

WAVE (1), to fluctuate, to move or be moved about with an undulating motion or up and down. (E.) ME. wauen, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 256. The pres. part. is spelt vafand, vaffand, Barbour, Bruce, ix. 245, xi. 193, 513; the scribe constantly writes v for w. AS. wafian, to wave (with one's hand), Leechdoms, ii. 318; Ælfric's Saints' Lives, xxvii. 151. The sense also comes out in the derived adj. wafre, wavering, restless, Grein, ii. 642; see Waver. + OIcel. **vafa*, cited by E. Müller and Stratmann; the Dict. gives the derivatives vafra, vafra, to waver, vafsl, hesitation (which presuppose an orig. verb **vafa*); also vāfa, vōfa, vofa, to swing, vibrate. Cf. also MHG. waberen, waberen, to move about, to stir; Bavarian wabern, to sway to and fro; see Wabble. Der. wave, sb., a late word, occurring in the Bible of 1551, James, i. 6; it is due to the verb, and took the place of ME. wave, a wave, Wyclif, James, i. 6, which is not the same word, but allied to E. Wag, q. v. (cf. Icel. vāgr, Dan. vove, G. woge, a wave). Also wave-less; wave-let, a coined word, with double dimin. suffix; wave-offering, Exod. xxix. 24; wave-worn, Temp. ii. 1. 120; wav-y. Also wav-er, q. v.; and waft. Dis- tinct from waive, waif.

WAVE (2), the same as Waive, q. v.

WAVER, to vacillate. (E.) ME. waueren (= waveren), Prompt. Parv. p. 518. Barbour has waverand, wandering about; Bruce, vii. 112, xiii. 517, cf. vii. 41. 'Wauerd wynd' = a changeable wind, Wallace, iv. 340; waferyng, wavering, York Plays, p. 39, l. 111. [Apparently a Northern and E. Anglian word; and perhaps of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. vafra, to waver, Norw. vavra.] If a native word, it was suggested by AS. wæfre, adj., wandering, restless, Grein, ii. 652. + Icel. vafra, to hover about; Norw. vavra, to flap about; OHG. wabar- (in compounds), wavering. β. It is the frequentative form of Wave, q. v. Der. waver-er.

WAWL, WAUL, to cry as a cat, cry, squall. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'houaller, to yawl, wawl, cry out aloud.' It is the frequent. form of waw, as in ME. waw-en; see a-cater-wawed in Chaucer, C. T., D 354; and the note. A more usual old form is wrawl, frequent. of wraw-en; cf. 'he [a cat] began to wrawen,' Caxton; Reynard the Fox, ch. x; ed. Arber, p. 22. Of imitative origin; see Wail. Cf. also Swed. våla, to bellow, Dan. vraale, vralle, to squall; Norw. raala, to cry as a cat; also Icel. våla, to wail.

WAX (1), to grow, increase, become. (E.) ME. waxen, wexen, a strong verb, pt. t. wox, wex, pp. woxen, waxen, wexen; Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 30; Luke, ii. 40, xxiii. 5, 23; Matt. xiii. 32. AS. weaxan, pt. t. wēox, pp. geweoxen, Grein, ii. 676. + Du. wassen, pt. t. wies, pp. gewassen; Icel. vaxa, pt. t. ðax, pp. vaxinn; Dan. væxe; Swed. våxa; G. wachsen, pt. t. wuchs, pp. gewachsen; Goth. wahsan, pt. t. wōhs, pp. wahsans. β. All from Teut. base **wahs-*, to grow; from Idg. **weks-*, to grow; whence Gk. δέξω, αὔξω, αὔξω, to wax, Skt. vaksh-, to wax, grow. Extended from **weg-*, to be strong, be lively and vigorous; cf. Skt. vaj-, to strengthen, L. augere, to increase, uigere, to flourish, &c. When extended by the addition of s, the form **wegs* became **weks*. Brugmann, i. § 635; ii. § 657. See Eke (1).

Vigour, Vegetable, Augment, Auction. Der. waist, q. v.

WAX (2), a substance made by bees; other substances resembling it. (E.) ME. wax, Chaucer, C. T. 677 (A 675). AS. weax, Grein, ii. 676. + Du. was; Icel. and Swed. vax; Dan. vox; G. wachs; Russ. vosk; Lithuan. waszkas. Root unknown. Some (wrongly) connect it with L. uisum, birdlime; see Viscid. Der. wax, verb; wax-cloth, wax-work; wax-en, Rich. II, i. 3. 75; wax-y.

WAY, a road, path, distance, direction, means, manner, will. (E.) ME. wey, way, Chaucer, C. T. 34. AS. weg, Grein, ii. 655. + Du. weg; Icel. vegr; Dan. vei; Swed. väg; G. weg; OHG. wec; Goth. wigs. β. All from Teut. type **wegoz*. Further allied to Lithuan. weža, the track of a cart, from wēszi, to drive, or draw, a waggon; L. uia (?), a way; Skt. vaha-, a road, way, from vah, to carry. All from **wegh-*, to carry; see Wain, Viaduct, Vehicle.

¶ Under way is from the Du. onderweeg, on the way. Der. al-way, al-ways, q. v.; length-ways, side-ways, &c.; also way-faring, i. e. faring on the way, spelt wayfaring, Trevisa, v. 449; cf. AS. weg-færend, Matt. xxvii. 39, where færend is the pres. part. of færan, to fare, travel, Grein, i. 285, a derivative of the more primitive verb faran, to go (see Fare); way-far-er; way-lay, Tw. Night, iii. 4. 176; way-mark, Jer. xxxi. 21 (A. V.); way-worn; way-ward, q. v.

WAYWARD, perverse. (E.) ME. weiward; 'if thin iþe be weiward [L. nequam], al thi bodi shal be derk,' Wyclif, Matt. vi. 23; used as an adj., but orig. a headless form of awaiward, adv., Owl and Nightingale, 376, Layamon, 8878, 21464; Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 292, ii. 9; cf. aweiwardes, in a direction away from, Layamon, 22352, Will. of Palerne, 2188. In Trevisa, ii. 215, we find: 'man is euer faillynge and awayward,' where Caxton prints wayward. Thus wayward is away-ward, i. e. turned away, perverse. A parallel formation to fro-ward, q. v. It is now often made to mean bent on one's way. Cf. 'ouerthwartlie waiwarded' = perversely turned away, Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 274. Der. wayward-ness, ME. weiwardnesse, Wyclif, Rom. i. 29.

WE, pl. of the 1st pers. pronoun. (E.) ME. we, Chaucer, C. T. 29. AS. wē; Grein, ii. 652. + Du. wij; Icel. vēr, vær; Dan. and Swed. vi; G. wir; Goth. weis. Cf. Skt. vay-am, we.

WEAK, yielding, soft, feeble. (E.) [A. The verbal form has ousted the AS. wāc, which became ME. wook, spelt wooc in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1874; and would have given a mod. E. woak, like oak from AS. āc. We also find ME. weik, waik, whence the pl. weike, for which Tyrwhitt prints weke, Chaucer, C. T. 889; but see Six-text ed., A 887; the pl. is spelt wayke, Havelok, l. 1012. This is a Scand. form; from Icel. veikr, veykr, weak, Swed. vek. + AS. wāc, pliant, weak, easily bent, Grein, ii. 635; Du. week, tender, weak; G. weich, pliant, soft. All from the Teut. type **waikoz*, weak; from **waik*, 2nd grade of Teut. **weikan-*, as in AS. and OSax. wican, G. weichen, to yield, give way. From an Idg. base WEIGw-, a by-form of **WEIQ-*, as in Gk. εἰκν, to yield, Brugmann, i. § 701.] B. But the mod. E. weak is a back-formation from the verb to weaken, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1144 (in Thynne's ed.), from AS. wēcan; for **wācian*, formed by mutation from AS. wāc, weak, adj. (above). Der. weak-ly, weak-ness. Also weak-en, in which the suffix is added as in length-en, &c.; cf. ME. weken, Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1144, AS. wēcan, wācian, Grein, ii. 641, 636, Icel. veikja-sk, to grow ill; as above. Also weak-ly, adj., used by Raleigh (Todd's Johnson, no reference); weak-l-ing, 3 Hen. VI, v. 1. 37, with double dimin. suffix, as in gos-l-ing. And see wick (3), wicked, wick-er.

WEAL, prosperity, welfare. (E.) ME. wēle, Chaucer, C. T. 3103, 4595 (A 3101, B 175). AS. wēla, wēala, wēola, weal, opulence, prosperity; Grein, ii. 1656. + OHG. wēla, wōlo, G. wohl, welfare; cf. Dan. vel, weal, welfare; Swed. väl. β. The orig. sense is a 'well-being', welfare, and (like the words well-being, well-fare, well-come, fare-well) it is allied to AS. wel, well, adv., the notion of condition being expressed by the nominal suffix -a. See Well (1). And see Wealth.

WEALD, a wooded region, an open country. (E.) The peculiar spelling of this word is not improbably due to Verstegan, who was anxious to spell it so as to connect it at once with the AS. form, forgetting that the diphthong ea was scarcely ever employed in the 13th and 14th centuries. Minshew, in his Dict., ed. 1627, has: 'Weald of Kent, is the woodie part of the countrey. Verstegan saith that wald, weald, and wold signifie a wood or Forrest; à Teut. Wald, i. sylua, a wood.' This fashion, once set, has prevailed. β. It also appears that two words have been confused, viz. wald and wild. Wald (now also wold) was sometimes spelt wæld, as in Layamon, 21339; hence it passed into weld or weeld. Caxton, in the preface to his Recuyell of the Histories of Troye, tells us that he was born in Kent, 'in the wæld.' In the reprint of this book by Copland, this phrase appears as 'in the wilde.' Lyly, in his Euphues and his England, says: 'I was borne in the wylde of Kent;' ed. Arber, p. 268. Shak. has 'wilde of Kent,' 1 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 60, ed. 1623. γ. For the further explanation of ME. wald, see Wold. For the further explanation of wild, see Wild. Both words are English. Der. weald-en, adj., belonging to the wealds of the S. of England; a term in geology. For the suffix -en, cf. gold-en.

WEALTH, prosperity, riches. (E.) ME. welthe (dissyllabic), P. Plowman, B. i. 55. Spelt welðe, Genesis and Exodus, l. 796. Not in AS. A longer by-form of weal (ME. wēle), made with the suffix -th, denoting condition or state; cf. heal-th and heal, dear-th and dear, &c. See Weal. + Du. weelde, luxury; from wel, adv., well; OHG. welida, riches. Der. wealth-y, spelt welthy in Fabyan, Chron. c. 56; wealth-i-ness, spelt welthines in Fabyan, in the same passage.

WEAN, to accustom a child to bread, &c., to reconcile to a new custom. (E.) The proper sense is to 'accustom to;' we also use it, less properly, in the sense of to 'disaccustom to.' These opposite senses are easily reconciled; the child who is being accustomed to bread, &c. is at the same time disaccustomed to, or weaned from, the breast. Cf. G. entwöhnen, lit. to disaccustom, also to wean; where ent- is equivalent to E. un- as a verbal prefix; so that ent-wöhnen = un-wean. ME. wēnen. 'Wene chylde fro sokynge [sucking], Ablacto, elacto,' Prompt. Parv. AS. wēnian, to accustom, Grein, ii. 660. Hence āwenian, answering to G. entwöhnen; 'ær þonne þæt acennede bearn fram meolcum āwened sī = before the child that is born be weaned from milk; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, l. i. c. 27, ed. Wheloc, p. 88. 'Ablacto, to awenye;' Voc. 560. 8. + Du. wennen, to accustom, inure; afwennen, to wean; Icel. venja, to accustom; Dan. venne, to accustom; vanne fra Brystet, to wean; Swed. vänja, to accustom; vänjaaf, to wean; G. gewöhnen, to accustom, OHG. wēnian, wennan, MHG. wēnen; whence entwöhnen, to wean. β. All from a Teut. weak verb **wanjan*, to make accustomed, accustom; from the adj. **wanoz*, wont, accustomed, used to, as in Icel. vanr, Swed. van, accustomed, allied to Icel. vani, a usage. From Teut. **wan*, 2nd grade of **WEN*, to desire, earn; see Win and Wont.

WEAPON, an instrument for offence or defence. (E.) ME. wēpen, Chaucer, C. T., A 1591. AS. wēpen, a weapon, shield, or sword; Grein, ii. 648. + Du. wapen; Icel. vāpn; Dan. vaaben; Swed. vapen; G. waffe, OHG. wāfan (also wappen, borrowed from Dutch or Low G.); Goth. wēpna, neut. pl., John, xviii. 3. β. All from the Teut. type **wēpnom*, n., a weapon. A by-form (with k for p) is found in MSwed. wākn, a weapon (Ihre). Der. weapon-ed, Oth. v. 2. 226; weapon-less. Also wapen-shaw, wapen-take.

WEAR (1), to carry on the body, as clothes; to consume by use, rub away. (E.) The pt. t. wore, now in use, is due to analogy with bore, pt. t. of bear; the word is not really a strong one, the ME. pt. t. being wered. We also find pt. t. ware, Luke, viii. 27. (A. V.) ME. weren, pt. t. wered, Chaucer, C. T. 75. AS. werian (pt. t. wārode), Exod. xxix. 29. (Quite distinct from AS. werian, to defend; Grein.) + Icel. verja, to wear (quite distinct from verja, to defend); OHG. werian; Goth. wasjan, to clothe; pp. wasids, Matt. xi. 8. β. From the Teut. and Idg. **WES*, to clothe; the r standing for s (by Verner's law), as shown by the Gothic form. Hence also L. uestis, clothing;

Gk. ἔσ-θῆς, clothing; Skt. vas, to put on clothes. See Vest. Der. wear, sb., As You Like It, ii. 7. 34; wear-able; wear-er, Antony, ii. 2. 7. All the senses of wear can be deduced from the carrying of clothes on the body; it hence means to bear, to carry; also to consume or use up by wear, destroy, tire, efface; also, to become old by wearing, to be wasted, pass away (as time); to wear well = to bear wear and tear, hence to last out, endure. There is no connexion with the sense of AS. werian, to defend.

WEAR (2), the same as Weir, q. v.

WEAR (3), in phr. 'to wear a ship'; the same as Veer, q. v.

WEARISH, insipid, weakly. (E.) 'A wretched wearish [weak] elfe'; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 34. 'Werysshe, as meate is that is nat wel tastye'; Palsgrave. Prov. E. wairsh, wairish, weerish, insipid, squeamish, weak. See Wearish in Nares, whose explanation is conjectural. The orig. sense may have been 'watery'; from AS. war, the sea; cf. Icel. ver, the sea, orig. 'water.' Cf. also Skt. vār, vāri, water; Gk. ὄρον; Swed. var, pus. See Urine.

WEARY, exhausted, tired, causing exhaustion. (E.) ME. weri, wery, Chaucer, C. T. 4232 (A 4234). (The e is long, as in mod. E.) AS. werig, tired; Grein, ii. 663; wōerig, O. E. Texts. + OSax. wōrig, weary; in the comp. sīð-wōrig, fatigued with a journey; Heliand, 660, 670, 678, 698, 2238; cf. OHG. wuorag, intoxicated. β. The long ē is (as usual) due to a mutation of long ō, as shown by the cognate OSaxon form. It is, consequently, connected with AS. wōrian, to wander, travel, Gen. iv. 14; Numb. xiv. 33; Grein, ii. 736. γ. This verb is a weak one, formed from the sb. wōr, which probably meant a moor or swampy place; so that wōrian was orig. 'to tramp over wet ground,' the most likely thing to cause weariness. Hence AS. wōr-hana, a moor-cock, O. E. Texts, p. 465. Not allied to Wear (1). δ. Prob. allied to Skt. vār, water; the prime grade appears in AS. war, sea. Der. weari-ly, -ness; weary, verb, Temp. iii. 1. 19; weari-some, Two Gent. ii. 7. 8; weari-some-ly, -ness.

WEASAND, WESAND, the wind-pipe. (E.) Spelt wesand in Spenser, F. Q. v. 2. 14; he also has weasand-pipe, id. iv. 3. 12. ME. wesand; spelt wesande, Voc. 676. 24; waysande, id. 635. 19. AS. wāsand, Voc. 157. 45; 264. 19; used to translate L. rūmen, the gullet. The mod. E. weasand answers rather to a by-form wāsēnd; whilst the AS. wāsēnd answers to prov. E. wosen, the wind-pipe (Halliwell). + OFries. wāsēnde, wāsande. Cf. Bavar. waisel, the gullet of animals that chew the cud; MHG. weisant, OHG. weisunt, weasand, cited by E. Müller. The form is like that of a pres. part.

WEASEL, a small slender-bodied quadruped. (E.) ME. wesele, wesel, Chaucer, C. T. 3234. AS. wesle, Voc. 119. 6; oldest forms, weosule, wesulæ; O. E. Texts. + Du. wezel; Icel. visla (given in the comp. hreyvisla); Dan. væsel; MSwed. wisla; Swed. vessla; G. wiesel; OHG. wisala, wisela, wisula. β. The Teut. type seems to be **wisalōn-* or **wisulōn-*, f. (Franck); evidently a dimin. form. Root uncertain; cf. Gk. αἰόλουπος, αἰλουπος, a weasel; perhaps allied to αἰόλος (for **ἀφισόλος?*), nimble.

WEATHER, the condition of the air, &c. as to sunshine or rain. (E.) ME. weder, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326; Chaucer, C. T. 10366, where Tyrwhitt prints weither, but the MSS. mostly have weder, as in all the six MSS. in the Six-text edition, Group F, l. 52. The mod. E. th for ME. d occurs again in ME. fader, moder, and is prob. due to dialectal influence. AS. weder, Grein, ii. 654. + Du. weder; Icel. veðr; Dan. veir (a contracted form); Swed. väder, wind, air, weather; G. wetter; OHG. wetar; cf. G. gewitter, a storm. β. All from the Teut. type **wedrom-*, n., weather, storm, wind; allied words appear in G. gewitter, as above, and in Icel. land-viðri, a land-wind, heið-viðri, bright weather. Further allied to Lithuan. wētra, a storm, OPruss. wetro, wind; Russ. vieter, vietr, wind, breeze; Skt. vātara-, adj. windy. γ. To be divided as **we-drom*, where the suffix (as in fa-ther, mo-ther) answers to Idg. -tró-, denoting the agent; and the base is **we*, weak grade of **WĒ*, to blow, which occurs in Gothic waian, to blow, Skt. vā, to blow; cf. Gk. ἀνμ (for ἀφν-μ), I blow; whence also E. wi-nd; see Wind (1). δ. Thus weather and wind mean much the same, viz. 'that which blows,' and they are constantly associated in the E. phrase 'wind and weather.' 'Wind ligeð, weder bið fæger,' Phoenix, ed. Grein, l. 182. A weather-cock means a wind-cock. Der. weather, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 4. 42; weather-board, cf. Icel. veðrbord, the windward side; weather-bound; weather-cock, ME. wedercoec, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 180, l. 27, and in Wright, Voc. i. 115 (12th cent.), so called because formerly often in the shape of a cock, as some are still made (cf. Du. weerhaan = wederhaan, from haan, a cock); weather-fend, i. e. to defend from the weather, Temp. v. 10, where fend is a clipped form of defend (see Fence); weather-gage, weather-side; weather-wise, ME. wederwis, P. Plowman, B. xv. 350. And see weather-beaten, withér.

WEATHER-BEATEN, WEATHER-BITTEN, harassed by the weather. (E. or Scand.) Weather-beaten, lit. beaten by the weather, or beaten upon by the weather, makes such good sense that I do not know that we can disallow it as being a genuine phrase; it occurs in 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 67, in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 2, and in Nich. Breton, ed. Grosart (see the Index). Cf. also prov. E. weather-bet, i. e. 'weather-beaten'; E. D. D. β. At the same time there can be little doubt that, in some cases, the right word is weather-bitten, i. e. bitten by the weather, as in Shak. Wint. Tale, v. 2. 60. The latter is a true Scand. idiom. We find Swed. väderbitten, lit. weather-bitten, but explained in Widegren as 'weather-beaten'; so also Norweg. vederbitten, which Aasen explains by Dan. veirbidt, also as 'tanned in the face by exposure to the weather,' said of a man; he also gives the expressive Norw. vederslitten, weather-worn (lit. weather-slit).

WEAVE, to twine threads together, work into a fabric. (E.) ME. weuen (for weven); pt. t. waf, Gower, C. A. ii. 320; bk. v. 5770; pp. wouen (= woven), spelt wouun, Wyclif, John, xix. 23. AS. wefan, pt. t. waf; pp. wefen; Grein, ii. 654. + Du. weven; Icel. vefa, pt. t. vaf, pp. ofinn; Dan. væve; Swed. vefva; G. weben, to weave, pt. t. wob, pp. gewoben; also as a weak verb. β. All from Teut. type **weban-*, to weave; from Idg. **WEBH-*, to weave, which further appears in Gk. ὑφ-ή, ὑφ-ος, a web, ὑφ-αίν-ειν, to weave, and Skt. ṛṇa-vābhis, a spider (lit. a wool-weaver), Brugmann, i. § 562. Der. weav-er, weav-ing; also web, q. v., wef-t, q. v., woof, q. v., waf-er, wasp, weevil.

WEB, that which is woven; a film over the eye, the skin between the toes of water-birds. (E.) ME. web, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6; also webbe, P. Plowman, B. v. 111. AS. webb, gen. written web, Voc. 50. 28. + Du. web; Icel. vefr (gen. vefjar); Dan. væv; Swed. väf; G. ge-webe, OHG. weppi, wappi. β. All from the Teut. type **wad-jom-*, n., a web; from **wad-*, 2nd grade of **weban-*, from **WEBH-*, to weave; see Weave. Der. webb-ing, webb-ed, web-foot-ed. Also ME. webbe, Chaucer, C. T. 364 (A 362), AS. webba, a weaver, Voc. 188. 10, where the suffix -a denotes the agent (obsolete, except in the name Webb); ME. webster, Wyclif, Job, vii. 6, AS. webbestre, a female weaver, used to translate L. textrix, Voc. 188. 11 (obsolete, except in the name Webster); for the suffix -ster, see Spinster.

WED, to engage by a pledge, to marry. (E.) ME. wedden, Chaucer, C. T. 870 (A 868). AS. weddian, lit. to pledge, engage, Luke xxii. 5. - AS. wed, sb., a pledge, Grein, ii. 653. + Du. wedden, to lay a wager, from MDu. wedde, 'a pledge, a pawne,' Hexham; Icel. veðja, to wager, from veð, a pledge; Dan. vedde, to wager; Swed. vådja, to appeal, from vad, a bet, an appeal; G. wetten, to wager, from wette, a wager; Goth. ga-wadjōn, to pledge, betroth, from wadi, a pledge. β. All from the Teut. type **wad-jom-*, n., a pledge. Further allied to Lithuan. wadōti, to redeem a pledge; L. uas (gen. uad-is), a pledge. - **WEDH-*, to carry home, to marry, Fick, i. 767; cf. Lithuan. wēsti, pres. tense wēdi, to marry, take home a bride, wadas, a conductor, guide, leader by the hand, Russ. vesti, to lead, conduct; OIrish fed-im, I carry off, W. dy-weddio, to wed; Skt. vadhū-, a bride. Der. wedd-ed; wedd-ing, AS. wedding, Gospel of Nicodemus, c. 7; also wed-lock, q. v. Also see wage, wager, gage (1), en-gage.

WEDGE, a piece of metal or wood, thick at one end and sloping to a thin edge at the other. (E.) Also used to denote simply a mass of metal, as in Rich. III, i. 4. 26. ME. wegge, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 14, l. 3. AS. wecg, a mass of metal; Sweet, A. S. Reader. 'Cuneus, wecg;' Voc. 216. 12. + Du. wig, wigge, a wedge; Icel. veggr; Dan. vægge; Swed. vigg; OHG. wekki, MHG. wecke, a wedge; G. wecke, a kind of loaf, from its shape (cf. prov. E. wig, a kind of cake). β. All from Teut. type **wag-joz-*, m., a wedge; from Teut. base **wag-* = Idg. **wogh-*, with velar gh, as shown by the cognate Lithuan. wagis, a bent wooden peg for hanging things upon, also a spigot for a cask, also a wedge. See Brugmann, i. §§ 367, 654. Der. wedge, verb.

WEDLOCK, marriage. (E.) ME. wedlok (with long o), written wedloke, P. Plowman, B. ix. 113, 119; where some MSS. have wedlok. AS. wedlāc, in the sense of pledge; 'Arrabo, wedlāc,' Voc. 115. 42. - AS. wed, a pledge; and lāc, a sport, also a gift, in token of pleasure. Thus the sense is 'a gift given as a pledge, and in token of pleasure,' hence, the gift given to a bride. It was usual to make a present to the bride on the morning after marriage; cf. G. morgengabe, a nuptial (lit. morning) gift. However, -lāc is also used as a mere suffix, with but slight meaning. See Wed. And see Knowledge, which has a like suffix.

WEDNESDAY, the fourth day of the week. (E.) ME. wednesday, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 154, where one MS. has wodnesday. AS. Wōdnes dæg, rubric to Matt. v. 25. The change from ō to ē is the usual vowel-change, when the vowel i follows; this vowel appears in the OFries. Wernisdei, for *\*Wēdnisdei*; cf. OFries. Wēda, Woden (Weigand, s. v. Wotan), NFries. Weensdi, Outzen, p. 38; so that the ē for ō is Friesian. 'Wōdnes dæg' means 'day of Wōden or Wōdin,' after whom it was named; see Day. Cognate words are Du. woensdag, Icel. ōðinsdagr, Swed. Dan. onsdag (for odensdag). The G. name is simply mitwoch (mid-week).  $\beta$ . The AS. Wōden is cognate with Icel. Óðinn, OHG. Wōtan, Wuotan. The name signifies 'the furious,' or rather 'the divinely inspired,' being apparently closely related to L. uātes (stem uāti-), a prophet, a seer, and to OIrish faihk (Celtic stem *\*wāti-*), a singer, minstrel. Also, to AS. wōd, raging, mad (cognate with Icel. ōðr, Goth. wōds), whence ME. wood, mad, a word which occurs as late as in Shakespeare, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 192; see Wood (2). ¶ It is remarkable that the Romans, whilst looking upon Wōden as the chief divinity of the Teutonic races, nevertheless identified him with Mercury; hence dies Mercurii was translated into AS. by Wōdnesdag. Cf. 'kōlluðu þeir Pál Óðin, en Barnabas þór' = they called Paul Odinn, but Barnabas Thor; Icel. Bible, Acts, xiv. 12.

WEE, small, tiny. (E.) 'A little wee face,' Merry Wives, i. 4. 22. ME. we, only as a sb., a bit. 'A little we,' a little bit, for a short space; Barbour, Bruce, vii. 182, xiii. 217. 'And behynd hir a litill we It fell' = and it fell a little way behind her; id. xvii. 677. In all three passages it occurs in the same phrase, viz. 'a little we,' and in the last case we should now say 'a little way.' So also: 'a litill wee;' G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, Æn. bk. x. ch. 6; cf. 'in a litell wei,' in a short time, Cursor Mundi, 12531; 'He ne es yitt bot a litell wei,' he is yet but young; id. 8419. And as it is a sb., I believe it is nothing but the Northern form of E. way. See Way. ¶ That the constant association of little with we (=way) should lead to the supposition that the words little and wee are synonymous, seems natural enough; and we have the evidence of Barbour that the word is Northern. The above solution is strongly corroborated by the fact that way-bit is still in use, in the North, in the sense of wee bit or little bit; see Halliwell, and wee in E. D. D.; also Way-bit in Davies, Supp. Glossary. 'In the North parts, wher ther is a wea-bit to every mile;' Howell, Letters, bk. iv. let. 28.

WEED (1), any useless and troublesome plant. (E.) ME. weed, Prompt. Parv. p. 519. AS. wēod, wīod; Grein, ii. 676. +OSax. wīod; whence Du. wieden, vb., to weed. Teut. type **weudom*, n. Root unknown. Der. weed, verb, ME. weeden, Palladius on Husbandry, ii. 289; cf. Du. wieden, Low G. wēden, to weed. Der. weed-y, Hamlet, iv. 7. 175.

WEED (2), a garment. (E.) Chiefly in the phr. 'a widow's weeds,' i.e. a widow's mourning apparel. Common in Shak. as a sing. sb., in the sense of garment, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 256, &c. ME. wede (disyllabic), Havelok, l. 94. AS. wēde, neut., also wēd, fem., a garment; Grein, ii. 642. +OFriesic wēde, wēd; OSax. wādi; MDu. wade, 'a garment, a habit, or a vesture,' Hexham; Icel. vād, a piece of stuff, cloth; also, a garment; OHG. wāt, wōt, clothing, armour; O. Low G. wād, a coverlet (Gallée).  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base *\*wēd-*, a garment, perhaps 'something woven,' cf. Skt. vē, to weave. Others connect it with Goth. ga-wīdan, pt. t. gawath, Mark, x. 9, OHG. wētan, to bind, yoke together. Cf. Skt. vi-vadha, a yoke for carrying a burden. See Wad.

WEEK, a period of seven days. (E.) The vowel, in ME., is very variable; we find weke, wike, on the one hand, and wouke, woke, wike, wike, as well as wouke; Tyrwhitt, C. T. 1541, prints weke. 1. The forms weke, wike (together with mod. E. week) answer to AS. wice, wicu, of which the gen. wican occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 438, l. 23 (Eccl. Institutes, § 41). 2. The forms wouke, woke, wike, answer to AS. wice, wucu, Grein, ii. 744. We find the same change in AS. widu, later form wudu, wood. +Du. week; Icel. vika; Swed. vecka; OHG. wecha, wehha; but the MHG. form is woche, which is also the mod. G. form. Cf. Dan. uge (= vuge), a week.  $\beta$ . The prevalent Teut. type is *\*wikōn-*, f. The Goth. wikō occurs only once, in Luke, i. 8, where the Gk. ἐν τῇ τάξει τῆς ἐφημερίας αὐτοῦ (L. in ordine uicis suæ) appears in Gothic as in wikōn kunjis: seinis = in the order of his course. It is by no means clear what is the precise force of this Goth. wikō (which exactly answers in form to E. week), and some have (wrongly) supposed that it was borrowed from L. uicis, which is, however, equivalent in this passage to kunjis, not to wikō.  $\gamma$ . It is usual to consider week as a true Teut. word, and allied to AS. wice, an office, duty, function; perhaps it meant 'succession' or 'change,' being related to Icel. vikja, to turn, return; from Teut. *\*wik-*, weak grade of *\*wikān-*, to yield, give way, give place to. Cf. Icel. vixl, a change, vixling, a changeling, G. wechsel, a change; a week corresponds to a phase of the moon. Cf. also Skt. vij, to tremble; and see Weak. Der. week-day, Icel. wikudagr; week-ly.

WEEN, to suppose, imagine, think. (E.) ME. wenen, Chaucer, C. T. 1655. AS. wēnan, to imagine, hope, expect; Grein, ii. 658. = AS. wēn, expectation, supposition, hope; id. +Du. wanen, to fancy, from waan, conjecture; Icel. vāna, to hope, from vān, expectation; G. wānen, from wān, OHG. wān, sb.; Goth. wēnjan, to expect, from wēns, expectation.  $\beta$ . From the sb. of which the Teut. type is *\*wēniz*, f., expectation, hope. Perhaps it meant orig. 'a striving after,' and hence an expectation of obtaining. Some compare it with L. uēnārī, to hunt after; and with Teut. *\*wēn*, 3rd grade of Teut. *\*wenan-*, to crave, desire; cf. L. uen-us, desire, Skt. van, to crave. See Win.

WEEP, to wail, lament, shed tears. (E.) ME. wēpen, orig. a strong verb, pt. t. weep, wep, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text ed., Group D, l. 588, where only one MS. has wēpte (disyllabic), for which Tyrwhitt erroneously prints wēpt, C. T. 6170. AS. wēpan, pt. t. wēop; Grein, ii. 661. The lit. sense is to cry aloud, raise an outcry, lament loudly; wēpan (for *\*wōpian*) is regularly formed, with the usual vowel-change, from wōp, a clamour, outcry, lament, Grein, ii. 732. +OSax. wōpian, to raise an outcry; wōp, sb.; Goth. wōpjan, to cry out; OHG. wuofan, to lament, weep, str. vb.; also wuoffan, weak vb., wuof, wuaf, an outcry; Icel. æpa, to shout, cry; ōp, a shout.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base *\*wōp-*, appearing in *\*wōpoz*, m. (AS. wōp), an outcry, loud lament. ¶ This AS. wōp is quite distinct from E. whoop, in which the initial w is unoriginal, but the h essential. Der. weep-er, weep-ing.

WEET, to know, the same as Wit (1), q. v.

WEEVIL, a small kind of beetle very destructive to grain. (E.) ME. wewel, wiuel (with u=v), spelt wewyl, wyuyll in Prompt. Parv., pp. 523, 531. AS. wifel, to translate L. scarabius (sic), Voc. 261. 13; spelt wibil in a very early gloss of the 8th century, where it translates L. cantarus, i.e. cantharis, a beetle; Voc. 11. 28. We even find the older form wibba; 'Scarabeus, scarn-wibba,' Voc. 319. 2; where scarn means dung. +Icel. -yfill, in comp. tordyfill, a dung-beetle; MDu. wewel, 'a little worme eating corne or beanes, or a wevill,' Hexham; OHG. wibil, MHG. wibel; G. wiebel.  $\beta$ . The Teut. type is *\*wēbilo*, m., a beetle; a dimin. form of Teut. *\*wēbjon-*, m., whence AS. wibba. From the Teut. *\*wēb-an-*, to weave; from the filaments spun for the larva-case. See Weave.  $\gamma$ . Further allied to Lithuan. wābalas, a chafer, winged insect.

WEFT, the threads woven into and crossing the warp. (E.) ME. weft, Wyclif, Exod. xxxix. 3, earlier version, where the later version has warp. AS. wēft, wēfta; 'Deponile, wēft, vel wēfta,' Voc. 187. 32; and again 'Deponile, wēfta' in a gloss of the 8th century, id. 17. 6. +Icel. veftr; also vipta, vifta.  $\beta$ . The Teut. types are *\*wēftoz*, m., *\*wēfton-*, m., lit. 'a thing woven,' formed with participial suffix -to- from *\*wēb-an-*, to weave, whence AS. wēb-an, to weave; see Weave and Wool.

WEIGH, to balance, ponder, to have weight, be heavy. (E.) ME. weghen, wēzen, weyen, weien, Chaucer, C. T. 456 (A 454). AS. wegan, str. vb., pt. t. wæg, to carry, bear; also, intrans., to move; Grein, ii. 655. From the sense of 'carry' we pass to that of 'raise' or 'lift,' as when we say 'to weigh anchor,' so also Cowper says: 'Weigh the vessel up,' Loss of the Royal George, st. 7. From the sense of raising or lifting, we pass to that of weighing. +Du. wegen, to weigh; Icel. vega, to move, carry, lift, weigh; Dan. veie, to weigh; Swed. väga, to weigh; väga upp, to weigh up, to lift; G. wegen, to move, wiegen, to move gently, rock, wägen, to weigh; OHG. wegan, to move, bear, weigh. Cf. Goth. gawigan, to shake about.  $\beta$ . The AS. wegan is a strong verb; pt. t. wæg, pp. wegen; so also is the Icel. vega; pt. t. vā, pp. veginn. All from the Teut. type *\*wegan-*, pt. t. *\*wag*, pp. *\*weganoz*, to carry, move, weigh, answering to Idg. ✓ WEGH, to carry, as in Skt. vah, L. uehere; see Vehicle. Der. weigh-t, ME. weght, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 292, also spelt wight, Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1385, AS. ge-wiht, Gen. xxiii. 16, cognate with MDu. wicht, gewicht (Hexham), Du. gewigt, G. gewicht, Swed. vigt; cf. Icel. vætt, Dan. vægt. Teut. type *\*weg-tom*, n., which became *\*weh-tom*; and AS. *\*weht* became wiht by palatal mutation (Sievers); whence weight-y, spelt wæyghty in Palsgrave; weight-i-ly, -ness. Also wag, q. v.; wagg-on, wain, wey, wight, whit.

WEIR, WEAR, a dam in a river. (E.) ME. wer; dat. were, Chaucer, Parliament of Foules, 138. AS. wer, a weir, dam, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 38, ed. Sweet, p. 278, l. 16; the pp. gewered, dammed up, occurs in the line above. The lit. sense is 'defence,' hence a fence, dam; closely allied to AS. werian, to defend, protect, also (as above) to dam up, Grein, ii. 662. +Icel. vörr, a fenced in landing-place, ver, a fishing-station; G. wehr, a defence; cf. wehren, to defend, also to check, constrain, control; mühl-wehr, a mill-dam; MDu. weer, 'a palissado, or a rampard,' Hexham. Cf. also Goth. warjan, to defend, Icel. verja; allied to Skt. vrj, to cover, vārāya, to stop, hinder, keep off, varitra, a dam, embankment (Macdonell); Gk. ἐρ-υρθαι, to ward off. From the ✓ WER, to protect.

WEIRD, fate, destiny. (E.) As an adj. in Shak. Macb. i. 3. 32; i. 5. 8; ii. 1. 20; iii. 4. 133; iv. 1. 136, where it means 'subservient to destiny.' But it is properly a sb. ME. wirde, wyrde; 'And out of wo into wele þoure wyrdes shul change' = and out of woe into weal your destinies shall change; P. Plowman, C. xiii. 209. AS. wyrd, also wird, fate, destiny, also one of the 'Norns' or Fates, an extremely common word in poetry, Grein, ii. 760. Teut. type **wurðiz*, f. Formed, by vowel-change from u to y, from Teut. **wurð-* (with **wurð-* <**wurþ*, by Verner's Law), weak grade of Teut. **werthan* > AS. weorþan, to be, become, take place, happen, come to pass; see Worth (2). The lit. sense is 'that which happens,' or 'that which comes to pass;' hence fate, destiny. + Icel. urðr, fate, one of the three Norns or Fates; cf. urð-, stem of pt. t. pl. of verða, to become; OSax. wurð, fate; OHG. wurt. (✓WERT.)

WELCOME, received gladly, causing gladness by coming. (Scand.) Now used as an adj., and derived from well, adv., and the pp. come of the verb to come; and hence of Scand. origin. - Icel. velkominn, welcome; cf. Dan. velkommen, Swed. välkommen. - Icel. vel, well; and kominn, pp. of koma, to come. Hence also the AF! verb welcomer, to welcome (Godefroy). β. Substituted for AS. wilcuma, masc. sb., one who comes so as to please another, Grein, ii. 705. - AS. wil-, prefix, allied to willa, will, pleasure; and cuma, a comer, one who comes, formed, with suffix -a of the agent, from cuman, to come; Grein, ii. 706; i. 169. See Will and Come. Hence AS. wilcumian, to welcome.

WELD (1), to beat metal together. (Scand.) The final d is excrement, like d after l in alder, a tree, elder, a tree, and Shakespeare's alder-liefest for alder-lieftest, 2 Hen. VI, i. 1. 28. It is only a particular use of the word well, verb, to spring up as a fountain, lit. to boil up. It meant (1) to boil, (2) to heat to a high degree, (3) to beat heated iron. We find this particular use in Wyclif, Isaiah, ii. 4; where the earlier version has 'thei shul bete togidere their swerdes into shares,' the later version has 'thei schulen well togidere her swerdes in-to scharris.' See further under Well (2). The word is apparently Scand., not E.; for (1) the Swed. välla (lit. to well) is only used in the sense 'to weld,' as in välla järn, to weld iron (Widegren); the sense 'to well' appearing in the comp. uppvälla, to boil up; (2) Sweden exports large quantities of iron and steel. Cf. Dan. valde (with excrement d), to well up; Pomeran. wellen, to weld iron; prov. E. well, to weld. In Icel. and Norw., a distinction is made between vella, intr., to well, pt. t. vall (str. vb.), and vella, tr., to cause to boil (wk. vb.); the Swed. välla, to weld, answers to the latter. ¶ 'The process of welding iron is named, in many languages, from the word for boiling; cf. Illyrian variti, to boil, weld iron, Lettish wárit, to boil, sawárit, to weld,' &c.; Wedgwood.

WELD (2), dyer's weed; Reseda luteola. (E.) ME. welde; 'Madyr, welde, or wood' = madder, weld, or woad; Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 17. 'Welde, or wolde;' Prompt. Parv. pp. 520, 532. According to Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 349, it is spelt wolde in MS. Harl. 3388. In Lowland Scotch, it is wald; see Jamieson. It appears to be an E. word. Cognate with Low G. wolde, weld (Lübben), Du. wouw, MDu. wouwe (for **wolde*); also G. wau, Swed. Dan. vau (from Du.). We also find Span. gualda, F. gaude (of Teut. origin). Prob. allied to AS. weald, a wood, as if 'belonging to the wood or wold;' see Wold. Cf. OSax. sin-weldi, a great wood. ¶ Quite distinct from Woad.

WELFARE, prosperity. (E.) Lit. a state of faring or going on well. ME. welfare, Chaucer, C. T. 11150 (F 838); compounded of wel, adv. well, and fare = AS. faru, sb., lit. a journey, from faran, to fare, go. See Well (1) and Fare. Cf. Icel. velferð, a well-doing.

WELKIN, the sky, the region of clouds. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 101, &c. ME. welkin, as printed in Tyrwhitt's edition of Chaucer, C. T. 9000, where the MSS. have welkne, welken, welkine, walkyn, Six-text, Group E, 1124. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 160, we have welkne, wolkne, þe welkene, welken in the various MSS. It thus appears that welkne is a mutated form of wolkne, which is an older spelling; in Layamon, 4574, 23947, we have wolkne, wolcne, weolcene, prob. a pl. form, and signifying 'the clouds.' AS. wolcnu, clouds, pl. of wolcen, a cloud, Grein, ii. 731. + OSax. wolkan, a cloud. Du. wolk, Low G. wulke; G. wolke, OHG. wolka, f., wolkan, n., a cloud. Teut. base **wulk(e)no-*. β. Some have connected it with AS. gewealc, a rolling about, as in þā gewealc, the rolling of the waves, Grein, i. 477; from wealcan, to roll, walk; see Walk. There is no proof of this; if it were true, wolcen would mean 'that which rolls about;' cf. AS. wealca, a wave, billow. γ. Or else connected with OHG. welk, moist, damp; Russ. vlaga, moisture; Lith. wilg-yti, to wet, moisten; from an Idg. ✓WELG.

WELL (1), in a good state, excellently. (E.) ME. wel, Chaucer, C. T. 106; weel, 4728 (B 308). AS. wel, Grein, ii. 656; also spelt well. + Du. wel; Icel. vel; Dan. vel; Swed. väl; Goth. waila. + G. wohl, wol; OHG. wela, wola. β. The Goth. waila answers to a Teut. type **wela*. The orig. sense is 'agreeably,' or suitably to one's will or wish; from the Idg. ✓WEL, to wish; cf. L. wol-o, I wish, uel-le, to wish, Russ. vol-ia, sb., will, W. gwell, better, Skt. vara-, better, vara-, a wish; prati varam, according to a wish; see Will. Der. well-behaved, Merry Wives, ii. 1. 59; -beloved, Jul. Cæs. iii. 2. 180; -born, -bred, -disposed; -favoured, Two Gent. ii. 1. 54; -meaning, Rich. II, ii. 1. 128; -meant, 3 Hen. VI, iii. 3. 67; -nigh; -spoken, Rich. III, i. 1. 29; -won, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 51; and numerous other compounds. And see well-come, well-fare; also weal, weal-th.

WELL (2), a spring, fountain of water. (E.) ME. welle (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 5689 (D 107). AS. wella, also well, Grein, ii. 657; also spelt wylla, wylle, wyll, id. 756. Teut. type **walljon-*, m.; allied to AS. weallan (strong verb, pt. t. wēoll, pp. weallen), to well up, boil, id. 672; the mod. E. verb to well being derived, not from this strong verb, but from the sb.; so that the pt. t. in mod. E. is welled. + Icel. vell, ebullition; from vella, to well, boil, pt. t. vall, pp. ollinn (strong verb); whence also vella, weak verb, to make to boil; Du. wel, a spring; Dan. væld (for vell), a spring; G. welle, a wave, surge; cf. wallen, to undulate, boil, bubble up, of which the OHG. pt. t. was wial. β. All from the Teut. **wallan-*, str. vb., to boil up, undulate; from the Idg. ✓WEL, to turn round, roll, as in Skt. val, to move to and fro, Russ. valiate, to roll. See further under Helix. From the weak grade we have Goth. wulan, to boil; cf. also AS. wielm, wylm, a boiling, and Skt. ūrmi-, a wave. Der. well, verb, ME. wellen, verb, in P. Plowman, B. xix. 375, from AS. wellan, wyllan; we find 'Ferueo, ic welle,' Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 156, l. 14, in the Royal MS. (see the footnote), though most MSS. have ic wealle. Der. wellspring, ME. wellespring, Genesis and Exodus, l. 1243. And see weld (1).

WELLAWAY, an exclamation of great sorrow. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 8. 46. ME. weilawey, Chaucer, C. T. 13048 (B 1308); the MSS. have weylawey, weilaweie, and (corruptly) well awaye, wele away, showing that some scribes mistook it to mean 'weal [is] away,' i.e. prosperity is over! 'Weilawei, and wolowo' = alas! and alas! Ancren Riwe, p. 88, l. 7; weilawei, id. p. 274, l. 2. 'Wo is us þat we weren born! Weilawei!' Havelok, 462; cf. l. 570. Written waila wai, Layamon, 8031; wala wa, 7971; also wela, wo la (without wei or wa following), 3456. It stands for wei la wei or wā lā wā (wo lo wo). AS. wā lā wā, written wālā wā, alas! lit. 'woe! lo! woe!' Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 1 (b. iv. met. 4); wei lā wei, id., c. xxxv. § 6 (b. iii. met. 12); we also find wālā, Mark, xv. 29, and simply wā, Mark, xiv. 21. - AS. wā, woe; lā, lo; wā, woe. See Woe and Lo. ¶ The expression was early misunderstood; and was even turned into wella-day, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 106; in which unmeaning expression, though intended as an exclamation of sorrow, we seem to have well in place of wo, and day introduced without any sense; perhaps alas! the day also owed its existence to this unmeaning corruption.

WELSH, pertaining to Wales. (E.) Welsh properly means 'foreign.' ME. walsh, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; Walsh is still in use as a proper name. AS. wælsce, welisc; 'þā welisce menn' = the foreigners, i.e. Normans, A. S. Chron. an. 1048; see Earle's edition, p. 178, l. 15; 'þā wælsce men,' ibid. l. 24; and see the note. Formed, with suffix -isc (>E. -ish) and vowel-change, from AS. wealh, a foreigner; orig. a Celt. (From the pl. Wealas we have mod. E. Wales, now the name of a country.) The Teut. form **Walh-* answers to L. Volc-, i.e. 'one of the tribe of Volcæ,' who occupied Southern Gaul. See Walnut. Der. Welsh-rabbit, a Welsh dainty, i.e. not a rabbit, but toasted cheese; this is a mild joke, just as a Norfolk-capon is not a capon at all, but a red-herring (Halliwell). There is no authority for the assertion that rabbit is a corruption of rare bit; which renders Welsh pointless.

WELT, a narrow strip of leather round a shoe. (E.) The old sense seems to be hem or border. Cotgrave explains F. orlet by 'a little hemme, selvidge, welt, border;' and the verb orler by 'to hemme, selvidge, border, welt the edges or sides of.' 'Take care of the skirts, fringes, and welts of their garments,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 51. 'Welt of a garment, ourellet [F. orlet]; Welte of a shoe, ourelure;' Palsgrave. ME. welte. 'Welte of a schoo, Incucium, vel intercucium;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hec pedana, Anglice wampay [a vamp]; Hoc intercucium, Anglice welte;' Voc. 664. 34, 35. Palsgrave also has the verb; 'I welte, as a garment is, je ourle: This kyrtell is well welte, ce corset icy est bien ourlé.' Lowl. Sc. waut, ME. walte, a welt, walte, to welt; Cathol. Anglicum. The pl. waltys occurs as a gloss to intercucia, in John de Garlande; Wright's Vocab. i. 125. Lit. 'a hem,' or 'strip turned over;' cf. Norw. vælt, a card turned up as a trump; allied to AS. wyltan, gewæltan, to roll, Icel. velta, to roll over; see Welter and Wale. We also find W. gwald, a hem, welt, gwalties, the welt of a shoe; gwaldu, to welt, hem; Gael. balt, a welt of a shoe, a border; Irish balt, a welt, border; all (apparently) borrowed from E. Der. welt, verb.

WELTER, to wallow, roll about. (Scand.) Surrey has 'waltring tongs,' i.e. rolling or lolling tongues of snakes, tr. of Virgil's Æneid, bk. ii. l. 266. 'I walter, I tumble, je me voystre; Hye you, your horse is walteringe yonder, hastez vous, vostre cheual se voystre la; Palsgrave. 'I welter, je verse; Thou weltest in the myer, as thou were a sowe'; Palsgrave. ME. weltren, to wallow; Cursor Mundi, 4503; prob. of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. vältra, to roll, to wallow. Walter and welter are frequentative forms, with the usual suffix -er, from ME. walten, to roll over, overturn, hence to totter, fall, throw, rouse, rush, &c.; Destruction of Troy, 1956, 3810, 4627, 4633, 4891, pt. t. welt, id. 4418, 4891, &c. This ME. walten is from the AS. **wealtan*, weltan, a strong verb, of which the pp. gewalten (for gewealten) occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the ONorthumb. translation of Matt. xvii. 14, where cnēum gewalteno occurs as a gloss on genibus prouolutis; hence the secondary verb wyltan, to roll round, Grein, ii. 757, also the adj. unwealt, steady, lit. 'not tottering'; A. S. Chron. an. 897, ed. Earle, p. 95, l. 14, and the note. Cf. Low G. weltern, wältern, to roll over; Icel. veltast, to rotate, to roll over, as a horse does, from velia, pt. t. valt, to roll; Dan. valte, to roll, overturn; Swed. vältra, to roll, wallow, welter, frequentative of välta, to roll; G. wälzen, to roll, wallow, welter, from walzen, to roll; Goth. us-waltjan, to subvert. See Waltz, Wallow. From Idg. base **wel-d-*, extended from **WEL*, to turn; see Well (2).

WEN, a fleshy tumour. (E.) ME. wenne; 'Wenne, veruca, gibbus,' Prompt. Parv. AS. wenn; acc. pl. wennas, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 12, l. 22; nom. pl. wænnas, id. 46, l. 21. + Du. wen; Low G. ween; ween-bulen [wen-boils]; prov. G. wenne, wehne, wähne, cited by E. Müller; Dan. dial. van, a wen, wart. β. The orig. sense was prob. 'pain,' or painful swelling; Teut. type **wanjoz*, m. Prob. from **wann*, 2nd grade of the Teut. str. vb. seen in Goth. winnan, to suffer, as in aglōns winnan=to suffer afflictions, 1 Tim. v. 10; cf. wunns, affliction, suffering, 2 Tim. iii. 11. So also Icel. vinna, though cognate with E. win, means not only to work, labour, toil, but also to suffer, and vinna ā is to do bodily harm to another. See Win.

WENCH, a young girl, vulgar woman. (E.) Common in prov. E. without any depreciatory intention; as, 'a fine young wench.' 'Temperance was a delicate wench,' Temp. ii. 1. 43. ME. wenche, Chaucer, C. T. 3254; P. Plowman, B. v. 364. We also find the form wenche, Ancrén Riwe, p. 334, note k. β. It is to be particularly noted that wenche is the earlier form; Stratmann gives no references for wenche earlier than Will. of Palerne, l. 1901, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 24, and Poems and Lives of the Saints, ed. Furnivall, xvi. 98, where, however, the form printed is wenclen. But wenche (spelt wennchell) occurs in the Ormulum, 3356, where it is used of a male infant, viz. in the account of the annunciation of Christ's birth to the shepherds. The orig. sense was simply 'infant,' without respect of sex, but, as the word also implies 'weak' or 'tender,' it was naturally soon restricted to the weaker sex. The ME. wenche resulted from wenche by loss of l, which was doubtless thought to be a dimin. suffix; yet in this particular instance, it is not so. The sb. wenche, an infant, is closely allied to the ME. adj. wankel, tottery, unsteady, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 221. AS. wencel, a child, a daughter (Toller); pl. winco, children (of either sex), Exod. xxi. 4. Allied to wencel, wencele, weak, Grein, ii. 659; wancol, woncol, unstable, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. vii. § 2 (b. ii. pr. 1). γ. The lit. sense of wancol is 'tottery,' whence the senses unstable, weak, infantine, easily followed. Formed, with AS. suffix -ol, from Teut. base **wank-*, to bend sideways, nod, totter, as in G. wanken, to totter, reel, stagger, waddle, flinch, shrink; cf. MHG. wenken (causal form), to render unsteady. + MHG. wankel, OHG. wanchal, unstable; mod. G. (provincial) wankel, 'tottering, unsteady,' Flügel. The base **wank-* is the 2nd grade of Teut. **wenkan-*; see further under Wink.

WEND, to go, take one's way. (E.) Now little used, except in the pt. t. went, which is used in place of the pt. t. of go. When used, it is gen. in the phr. 'to wend one's way'; but Shak. twice has simply wend, Com. of Errors, i. 1. 158, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 372. ME. wenden, Chaucer, C. T. 16. AS. wendan, (1) trans. to turn; (2) intrans. to turn oneself, proceed, go; common in both senses, Grein, ii. 659. The pt. t. was wende, which became wente in ME., and is now went. The lit. sense was orig. 'to make to wind,' and it is the causal of wind; formed, by vowel-change of a to e, from Teut. **wand*, 2nd grade of **wendan-*, windan-, to wind. + Du. wenden, to turn, to tack, causal of winden; Icel. venda, to wend, turn, change, causal of vinda; Dan. vende, caus. of vinde; Swed. vända, caus. of vinda; Goth. wandjan, caus. of windan; G. wenden, caus. of winden. See Wind (2).

WERE, pl. of was; also as subj. sing. and pl. See Was.

WERGILD, in AS. law, a fine paid for manslaughter or crime against the person. (E.) See Blount's Nomolexicon. AS. wergild, the price set upon a man according to his rank (Toller). = AS. wer, a man; and gild, a payment, from gildan, gieldan, to pay. See Werwolf and Yield.

WERWOLF, a man-wolf. (E.) On the subject of werwolves, i. e. men supposed to be metamorphosed into wolves, see pref. to William of Palerne, otherwise called William and the Werwolf, p. xxvi; where the etymology is discussed. Cf. Gk. λυκάνθρωπος, i. e. wolf-man. ME. werwolf, Will. of Palerne, 80, &c. AS. were-wulf, a werwolf; as an epithet of the devil (meaning fierce despoiler). Laws of Cnut, § 26, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 374. Usually explained as from AS. wer, a man; and wulf, a wolf. + G. währwolf, a werwolf; MHG. werwolf; as if from MHG. wer, a man, and wolf, a wolf. This was Latinised as garulphus or gerulphus, whence OF. garoul (Burguy), mod. F. loup-garou, i. e. wolf-man-wolf, the word loup being prefixed because the sense of the final -ou had been lost. For the latter syllable, see Wolf. For the AS. wer, see Virile. B. Kluge thinks this is uncertain; for the AS. prefix were- (answering to OHG. weri- in Weri-wolf, a man's name) suggests connexion with AS. weri-an, to wear clothes; cf. Icel. úlf-hamr, lit. 'wolf-skin,' applied to the skin of a werwolf. But it is easy to reply that the AS. wergild (certainly derived from AS. wer, a man) is also spelt weregild; the OHG. forms being weragilt, werigelt. Hence the usual explanation 'man-wolf' may certainly be accepted. See Wergild. Cf. O. Low G. weregild (Gallée).

WEST, the quarter where the sun sets. (E.) ME. west, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 113. AS. west, Grein, ii. 667, where it occurs as an adv. with the sense 'westward'; we also find westan, adv., from the west, id. 668; west-dæl, the west part, west-ende, the west end, west-mest, most in the west. + Du. west, adj. and adv.; Icel. vestr, sb., the west; Dan. and Swed. vest, sb.; G. west (whence F. ouest) β. All from Teut. base **wes-t-*, west. Prob. allied to Gk. ἔσ-περος, L. ues-per, evening. See Vesper. Der. west-ward, AS. weste-weard, adj., Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xvi. § 4 (b. ii. met. 6) west-ern; west-er-ly (short for west-ern-ly).

WET, very moist, rainy. (E.) ME. wēt (with long e), spelt weet in The Castle of Love, l. 1433 (Stratmann); whence pl. wēte (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1282 (A 1280), riming with grēte, pl. of grēt, great. AS. wæt, Grein, ii. 651. + Icel. vatr; Dan. vaad; Swed. våt; NFries. weet. β. All from Teut. type **wætōz*, wet; from the same root as E. water. From Teut. **wæt-*, 3rd grade of **wet*, Idg. **WED*, to wet, or spring up (as water). See Water. Der. wet, verb, AS. wētan (Grein); wet, sb., AS. wēta (Grein); wett-isk, wet-ness; wet-shod, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 161. From the same root are ott-er, und-ul-ate, hyd-ra, hyd-raul-ic, hyd-ro-gen, &c.

WETHER, a castrated ram. (E.) ME. weither, Chaucer, C. T. 3249. AS. wēðer, Ps. xxviii. 1, ed. Spelman (marginal reading). + OSax. wethar, withar; Kleinere Altniederdeutsche Denkmäler, ed. Heyne, p. 186; Icel. veðr; Dan. væder, vædder; Swed. vådur; G. widder, OHG. widar; Goth. withrus, a lamb, John, i. 29. β. All from Teut. type **wethruz*, m. The orig. sense was doubtless 'a yearling,' as the word corresponds very closely to L. uitulus, a calf, Skt. vatsa-, a calf, allied to Skt. vatsara-, Gk. ἔτος, a year. See Veterinary and Veal. ¶ We may note the distinction between weather and wether by observing that the former is wea-ther (with Idg. suffix -tro-), whilst the latter is weth-er (with suffix -ro-), the th answering to the t in uitulus.

WEY, a heavy weight. (E.) The weight varies considerably, from 2 cwt. to 3 cwt. ME. weye, P. Plowman, B. v. 93. The lit. sense is merely 'weight.' AS. wæge; 'Pondus, byrðen oððe wæge,' i. e. burden or weight; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 58, l. 17. Allied to AS. wæg-, stem of pl. of pt. t. of wegan, to bear, carry, weigh; so that the sb. is from Teut. **wæg-*, 3rd grade of **wegan-*, to carry. See Weigh.

WH

WH. This is distinct from w, just as th is from t. The mod. E. wh is represented by hw in AS., and by hv in Icelandic; it answers to L. qu, Gk. π, τ, κ; Idg. kw.

WHACK, to beat. (E.) See Thwack, which is supposed to be the same word. But it is rather a variant, i. e. a similarly sounding imitative word. Cf. EFries. and Westphalian wack-eln, to beat, to cudgel; prov. G. (Thüringen) wackeln, walken, to beat (Hertel).

WHALE, the largest of sea-animals. (E.) ME. whal, Chaucer, C. T. 7512 (D 1930); qual, Havelok, 753. AS. hwæl, Voc. 94. 15. + Du. walvisch, i. e. whale-fish; Icel. hvalr; Dan. and Swed. hval; G. wal, walfisch. β. The Teut. type is **hwaloz*, m. The name was orig. applied to any large fish, including the walrus, grampus, porpoise, &c. Thus Ælfric explains hwæl by 'balena, vel cete, vel pistris.' Cf. G. wels, a catfish; OPruss. kalis, a catfish. Perhaps it meant 'roller,' from the rolling of porpoises; cf. Icel. hvel, a wheel, OPruss. kelan, a wheel; Gk. πέλαγος, a monster, πόλος, a pivot; see Pole (2), and Wheel. ¶ Whale and balæna have nothing in common but the letter l, and cannot be compared. Der. whale-bone, formerly whales bone, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 1. 15, where the reference is to the ivory of the walrus' tusk, ME. whales bon, Layamon, 2363; whal-ing, whal-er. Also wal-rus, q. v.

WHAP, to beat, flutter. (E.) Sometimes spelt whop; and wap. Halliwell has wap, 'to beat; to flutter, to beat the wings, to move in any violent manner; also wapping (for whapping), 'quaking, used by Batman, 1582.' 'A whapp,' a blow; York Plays, xxxii. 199. 'The waters wappe,' i. e. lap; Malory, Morte Arthur, bk. xxi. c. 5. A variant of quap; an imitative word. Cf. ME. quappen, to palpitate, Chaucer, Troil. iii. 57, Legend of Good Women, 865; Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4, earlier version. From a base **kwap*, to throb; see Quaver. Allied to Low G. quabbeln, to palpitate, with which cf. E. wabble. Note also W. chwap, a sudden stroke, chwapio, to strike, to slap; EFries. wappen, to swing, to rock; wip-wap, a swing. Der. wabb-le. And see whip.

WHARF (1), a place on the shore for lading and unlading goods. (E.) Spelt warf in Fabyan's Chron. an. 1543, where we read that 'the maior wente to the woode-warfes, and solde to the poore people billet and faggot,' because of the severe frost. Palsgrave has warfe. ME. Wharfe, in Liber Custumarum, p. 447 (1343); cf. pp. 62, 150. Blount, ed. 1694, explains wharf as meaning, not only a landing-place, but also 'a working-place for shipwrights;' see below. AS. hwerf, a dam or bank to keep out water; 'þa grynðe hē þæt hē mōste macian foran gēn Mildryðe æker ænne hwerf wið þon wodaŋ tō werianne,' which Thorpe translates by 'then desired he that he might make a wharf over against Mildred's field as a protection against the ford, where "ford" is a conjectural translation of wodaŋ; Diplomatarium Ævi Anglo-Saxonici (A. D. 1038), p. 384; and again, 'þat land and ðane wearf ðartō' = the land and the wharf thereto; id. (an. 1042), p. 361. The orig. sense seems to have been a bank of earth, used at first as a dam against a flood; the present use is prob. of Dutch or Scand. origin. The lit. sense is 'a turning,' whence it came to mean a dam, from its turning the course of water; the allied AS. hwearf not only means 'a returning,' but also 'a change,' and even 'a space or distance,' as in the ONorthumb. tr. of Luke, xxiv. 13; also 'a crowd,' Grein, ii. 118; cf. hwearfan, to turn about. A good example is seen in the comp. mere-hwearf, the sea-shore, Grein, ii. 233. It corresponds, as to form, with AS. hwearf, pt. of hwearfan, to turn, turn about, Grein, ii. 119. + Du. werf, a wharf, yard; also a turn, time; Hexham has werf, 'a wharfe, or a working-place for shipwrights or otherwise;' Icel. hvarf, a turning away, also, a shelter; cf. hvarf, pt. t. of hverfa, to turn; Dan. værft, a wharf, a dock-yard; Swed. varf, a shipbuilder's yard; MSwed. hvarf, skeps-hvarf (ship's wharf), the same (Ihre). The MSwed. hvarf also meant a turn or time, order, stratum, or layer; Ihre, i. 945; from hwerfwa, to turn, return. B. It thus appears that, even in AS., this difficult word, with a great range of senses, meant not only a turning, reversion, but also turning-place, dam, shore, space, distance. Cf. prov. E. wharfstead, a ford in a river (Halliwell). In Swedish and Dutch it had a narrower sense, that of 'ship-builder's yard,' so called from its being situate on a shore. And from this sense to that of 'landing-place' the step is not a long one. C. The AS. strong verb hwearfan, answering to Goth. hwaiban, to turn oneself about (hence to walk), and to Icel. hverfa, answers to a Teut. type **hwerfan-*, pt. t. **hwarf*, to turn, turn about. Cf. Gk. καρπ-ός, the wrist (from its turning). ¶ Not allied to G. werfen, to throw, which is allied to E. warp. Der. wharf-age, Hakluyt's Voyages, i. 135; wharf-ing-er, which occurs (according to Blount, ed. 1674) anno 7 Edw. VI, cap. 7, a corruption of wharfager, just as messenger is of messager.

WHARF (2), the bank of a river. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 5. 33; Antony, ii. 2. 218. The occurrence of mere-hwearf, the sea-shore (for which see Grein, ii. 233), justifies Shakespeare's spelling, and shows that the present word is only a peculiar sense of Wharf (1), q. v. Hence perhaps the river-name Wharfe.

WHAT, neuter of Who, q. v. (E.) We find the form whatsom-euer in Dictes and Sayings, pr. by Caxton, fol. 18, back, l. 2. Der. what-ever, what-so-ever; what-not, a piece of furniture for holding anything, whence the name.

WHAUP, the curlew. (E.) Prov. E. whaup; Lowl. Sc., quhaip, in 1551 (Jam.). Prob. the same as AS. hwilpa (for hwilpa) in The Sea-farer, l. 21. Of imitative origin.

WHEAL (1), a pimple. (E.) Not to be confused with weal, another spelling of wale, the mark caused by a stripe; for which see Wale. A wheal is a swelling, pimple, caused by ill-health. It occurs frequently in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 25, where is mention of 'pushes, wheals, and blains,' and of 'pushes and angry wheales,' &c.; a push being a pustule, still in use in Cambs. ME. whele; 'Whele, whelle, wheel, or whelke, quelke, soore, Pustula;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. pl. whelkes, Chaucer, C. T. 634 (A 632). AS. hwele, a wheal; an unauthorised word, due to Somner. [Ettmüller cites AS. hweal, with a reference to Ælfric's Glossary; but Wright prints it hweal; 'Lotium, hweal,' Wright's Voc. i. 46, l. 7; and the word is very doubtful.] There is also a verb hweelian, to turn to pus or matter (Toller), also to pine away, as in sect. 15 of the Liber Scintillarum: 'Unde bonus proficit, inde invidus contabescit,' glossed by 'þanon þe se goda framað, þanon se andiga hweled.' The pp. is gehweled, inflamed. Cf. W. chwiler, a maggot, wheal, pimple. The ME. whelke, a pimple, is clearly a dimin. form; hence whelk, Hen. V, iii. 6. 108.

WHEAL (2), a mine. (C.) Still common in Cornwall. — Corn. hwel, a work, a mine; also written wheal, whel, weyl; Williams, Corn. Dict. Williams compares it with W. chwyl, a turn, a course, a while, chwyllo, to turn, revolve, run a course, bustle; cf. also W. chwel, a course, turn. Stokes-Fick, p. 324.

WHEAT, the name of a grain used for making bread. (E.) ME. whete, Chaucer, C. T. 3986 (A 3988). AS. hwæte; Grein, ii. 117. + Du. weite, weit; Icel. hveiti; Dan. hvede; Swed. hvet; G. weizen; Goth. hwaitis. (The Lithuan. kwėtyš, wheat, is borrowed from Teutonic.) β. All from a Teut. type **hwaitjo-*, wheat; from **hwait*, 2nd grade of **hweit-*; so named from the whiteness of the meal. See White. Der. wheat-en, AS. hwæten, John, xii. 24; wheat-fly; buck-wheat.

WHEAT-EAR, the name of a small bird. (E.) In Phillips; formerly wheatears (with final s), in T. Fuller, Worthies of England, ii. 382 (see Palmer, Folk-Etymology); as to which Smollett says: 'this is a pleasant corruption of white-a-e, the translation of their French name cul blanc, . . . for they are actually white towards the tail;' Travels, letter iii. Swainson, in his Bird-names (E. D. S.), gives the name white ass [= white-arse] as in use in Cornwall, and white-rump in Norfolk; while Cotgrave has: 'Cul blanc, the bird called a whittaille,' i. e. white tail. Hence the etymology is from white and arse. Cf. Du. wit-staart, 'a white-tail, white-ear;' Calisch; MDan. hvid-stjært (Kalkar).

WHEEDLE, to cajole, flatter. (E.?) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 760. In Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act i. sc. 1, we find: 'I must wheddle her.' Blount, ed. 1674, notes it as a new word, saying; 'Wheddle in the British tongue signifies a story, whence probably our late word of fancy, and signifies to draw one in by fair words or subtil insinuation,' &c. He is referring to W. chwedl, a saying, sentence, fable, story, tale, chwedla, to gossip, chwedlu, to tell a fable; but this is not a satisfactory explanation, nor does it account for the long e. But we should note his spelling with ea (from an open ē). It seems more likely that the word should be weddle, and that it was a prov. E. word, answering to AS. wæddlian, to beg. 'Mē sceamaþ þæt ic wæddige,' to beg I am ashamed, Luke, xvi. 3. The orig. sense of wæddlian was 'to be poor;' from wæddl, poverty, indigence, wæddla, poor. Cf. ME. wædle, poor; Ormulum, 5638. Der. wheedl-er.

WHEEL, a circular frame turning on an axle. (E.) ME. wheel, Wyclif, James, iii. 6. AS. hwēol, Grein, ii. 119. Hwēol is a shortened form of hweowol, Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman; it is also spelt hweogul (Toller), and hweohl, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxix. § 7 (b. iv. pr. 6). + Icel. hjöl; Dan. hiul; Swed. hjul; MSwed. hiughl (Ihre). Teut. type **hwegwōlōm*, n., for **hwehwōlōm*, Idg. type **qegló*, as in Skt. chakrá, Gk. κύκλος, a wheel. The Idg. **qe-qlo-* is a reduplicated form, from **QwEL*, to drive; whence Gk. πόλος, an axis, Russ. koleso, Icel. hvel, a wheel. See Cycle and Pole (2). Brugmann, i. § 658. Cf. Calash. Der. wheel, verb; wheel-er; wheel-barrow, spelt whelebarowe in Le Bone Florence, l. 2031, pr. in Ritson's Met. Romances, iii. 86; wheel-wright (see Wright).

WHEEZE, to breathe audibly and with difficulty. (E.) ME. whesen, Towneley Mysteries, 152 (Stratmann); rare. AS. hwēsan, to wheeze, A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 365 (glossary). [The 3rd pers. pres. sing. hwēst occurs in the same volume, p. 126, l. 9, according to Cockayne; but perhaps hwēst is here for hwōstēd, from hwōstan, to cough, which is a related word, but not quite the same thing.] The only sure trace of the verb is in Ælfric's Homilies, i. 86, where we find the strong pt. t. hwēos = wheezed (mistranslated by Thorpe, but rightly explained by Cockayne). As ē is the mutation of ō, the Teut. base is **hwōs-*, whence also AS. hwōs-la, a cough, prov. E. hoast, a cough, Du. hoest, G. husten. Teut. base **hwōs-* = Idg. **qās-*, as in Skt. kās, to cough; 2nd grade of Idg. **QAS*, to cough, as in Irish cas-achdach, W. pas, a cough; cf. Lith. kosti, to cough. See Pose (3). Brugmann, i. § 675. Connexion with Icel. hvæsa, to hiss, is doubtful.

WHELK (1), a mollusc with a spiral shell. (E.) The h is unoriginal, and due to confusion with the word below; the right (etymological) spelling is welk or wilk. Spenser has 'whelky pearls' =shelly pearls, pearls in the shell; Virgil's Gnat, l. 105. ME. wilk; spelt wylke, Prompt. Parv.; and in Voc. 642. 6. Pl. welkes, Liber Albus, pp. 179, 244, &c. AS. wiloc (8th cent.), Voc. 13. 40; also weoluc, weluc, id. 261. 22, 181. 10. +Du. wulk, also spelt welk, wilk, willok, wullok (Franck). Cf. 'inuolucus, wulloc', Corpus Gloss. 1115; prov. E. wulk, wullok. Prob. named from its convoluted shell; cf. Gk. ελίξ (for ἐλά-ξ), a volute; see Helix. And cf. Walk. Der. Hence prob. welk-ed, K. Lear, iv. 6. 71, spelt wealk'd, i.e. convoluted, in the first folio; cf. 'welked horns,' in Golding's Ovid, pp. 60 b, 107 b, 122 b.

WHELK (2), a small pimple. (E.) The dimin. of Wheal (1), q. v.

WHELM, to overturn, cover over by something that is turned over, overwhelm, submerge. (Scand.) 'Ocean whelm them all,' Merry Wives, ii. 2. 143. ME. whelmen, to turn over; Chaucer, Troilus, i. 139. 'Whelmyn, a vessel, Suppino,' Prompt. Parv.; on which Way cites Palsgrave: 'I whelme an holowe thyng over an other thyng, je mets dessus; Whelme a platter upon it, to save it from flies.' He adds: 'in the E. Anglian dialect, to whelm signifies to turn a tub or other vessel upside down, whether to cover anything with it or not; see Forby.' 'Whelm, to turn upside down, cover over,' E. D. D.; which see. The Lowland Sc. form is quhemle, whemmle, or whommel, to turn upside down; ovir quhemlit = did overturn, occurs in Bellenden's Chron., prol. st. 2 (Jamieson). Jamieson gives Sibbald's opinion (which is correct) that the Lowl. Sc. whemmle is due to E. whelm, the letters being transposed to make the word easier of utterance; but he afterwards assumes the Lowl. Sc. word as the older form, in order to deduce its etymology from MSwed. hwimla, to swarm (=G. wimmeln), which he explains wrongly. β. The word presents some difficulty; but it is obvious that whelm and overwhelm must be closely related to ME. wheluen (whelven) and overwheluen (overwhelven), which are used in almost precisely the same sense. Wheluen is also spelt hwelfen; 'He hwelfde at þare sepulchre-dure enne grete ston' = he rolled (or turned) over a great stone at the door of the sepulchre; O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 51, l. 513. 'And perchaunce the overwhelve' = and perchaunce overwhelm thee; Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 161. Cf. AS. ā-hwylfan; as in: 'ā-hwylfte Pharaones cratu,' (the sea) overwhelmed Pharaoh's chariots; Exod. xiv. 27. γ. The only difficulty is to explain the final -m; this is due to the fact that whelm, verb, is really formed from a substantive whelm; and the sb. whel-m stands for whelf-m, in which the f was dropped; the suffix -m being substantival, as in doo-m, bloo-m. This appears from MSwed. hvalma, to cock hay, derived from hwalma, a hay-cock; and he connects hwalma with hwälfwa, to arch over, make into a rounded shape, and hwälf, an arch, a vault. So also Rietz gives Swed. dial. hvalm, a haystack, from hwälwa (pt. t. hwalu); cf. Swed. välma, to cock hay, välma, a hay-cock (which have lost the h); hwälfwa, to arch, hwälf, an arch. Cf. Dan. hvalve, to arch, vault over. Thus the orig. sense of whelm was to arch over, vault, make of a convex form; hence, to turn a hollow dish over, which would then present such a form; hence, to upset, overturn, which is now the prevailing idea. δ. We conclude that whelm (for **whelf-m*) is from the strong verb appearing in Swed. dial. hwälwa (for **hvelva*), pt. t. hwalu, Norw. kvelva (for **hvelva*), pt. t. kwalu, MHG. welben (pt. t. walb), to distend oneself into a convex form, swell out, become convex, answering to the Teut. base HWELF, to become convex. Derivatives are seen in AS. hwealf, adj. convex, sb. a vault (Grein, ii. 118); ā-hwylfan, to overwhelm; be-hwylfan, to vault over (Grein); Icel. hwälf, hölf, a vault, hwälfa, hölf, to 'whelve' or turn upside down, overwhelm or capsize a ship, hwälfa, to arch, vault, to turn upside down, &c.; mod. G. wölben, to arch over. All from Idg. ✓QWELP; whence also OPruss. po-quelb-ton, kneeling, Gk. κόλπος, bosom, a hollow. See Prellwitz. Der. overwhelm.

WHELP, a puppy, young of the dog or lion. (E.) ME. whelp, Chaucer, C. T. 10805 (F 491). AS. hwelp, Matt. xv. 27. +Du. welp; Icel. hvelpr; Dan. hvalp; Swed. valp; MSwed. hwalp (Ihre); MHG. welf. β. The Teut. types are **hwelpoz*, **hwalpoz*, m. Root unknown. Der. whelp, vb., J. Caesar, ii. 2. 17.

WHEN, at what time, at which time. (E.) ME. whan, Chaucer, C. T. 5, 169; whanne, Ormulum, 133. AS. hwæne, hwonne; Grein, ii. 115. +MDu. wan (Hexham); Goth. hwan; G. wann; OHG. hwanne. β. Evidently orig. a case of the interrogative pronoun; cf. Goth. hwana, acc. masc. of hwas, who; see Who. So also L. quan-do, when, quis, who; W. pan, when; OIrish can. Der. when-ever, when-so-ever; and see when-ce.

WHENCE, from what place. (E.) ME. whennes (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 12269 (C 335). This form whenn-es, in which the suffix imitates the adverbial -es (as in twi-es, twice, ned-es, of necessity), was substituted for the older form whanene, written wonene in Laya-mon, l. 16. The suffix -es was orig. a genitive case-ending, as in dæg-es, of a day. β. The form whanene is from AS. hwanan, also hwanon, hwanan, whence, Grein, ii. 114. This is closely connected with AS. hwæne, when; the suffix -an being used to express direction, as in AS. sūð-an, from the south. See When. +G. wannen, whence; allied to wann, when. ¶ Compare hen-ce, similarly formed from ME. henn-es, AS. heon-an, hence; see Hence. Also Thence. Der. whence-so-ever.

WHERE, at which place. (E.) ME. wher, Chaucer, C. T. 4918 (B 498). AS. hwār, hwār, Grein, ii. 116. +Du. waar; Icel. hvar; Dan. hvor; Swed. hvar. +OHG. hwār, whence MHG. wār, wā, G. wo; cf. G. war- in war-um, why, lit. about what; Goth. hwar. Evidently allied to AS. hwā, who, and to when. Cf. Lithuan. kur, where? Skt. kar-hi, at what time? Der. where-about, where-about-s, where-as, where-at; whereby, ME. whar-bi, Will. of Palerne, 2256; where-fore, ME. hwarfore, Ancrén Riwle, p. 158, note g; where-in; where-of, ME. hwarof, Ancrén Riwle, p. 12, l. 12; where-on, ME. whær-on, Layamon, 15502; where-so-ever; where-to, ME. hwerto, St. Marharete, p. 16, l. 29; where-unto, Cymb. iii. 4. 109; where-upon, K. John, iv. 2. 65; wher-ever, As You Like It, ii. 2. 15; where-with, ME. hwerwið, Hali Meidenhad, p. 9, l. 19; where-with-al, Rich. II, v. 1. 55. ¶ These compounds were prob. suggested as correlative to the formations from there; see There.

WHERRY, a shallow, light boat. (E.) 'A wherry, boate, ponto,' Levins, ed. 1570. The pl. is wheries in Hakluyt, Voyages, iii. 645. In use on the Thames in particular. Spelt whirry in Latimer, Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 170. 'A whery, cymbe,' Du Wez, appendix to Palgrave, p. 916, col. 3. Cf. Lowl. Sc. whirry, to whirl, to hurry; prov. E. whirry, dizzy; see Whir. Perhaps named from its lightness. Cf. Icel. hverfr, shifty, crank (said of a ship); Norw. kvurv, crank, also swift of motion. See Wharf.

WHET, to sharpen, make keen. (E.) ME. whetten, Prompt. Parv. AS. hwettan, to sharpen, Grein, ii. 118. For **hwatjan*; from **hwat-*, as in AS. hwæt, keen, bold, brave; ibid. +Du. wetten, to sharpen; cf. OSax. hwat, sharp, keen; Icel. hvetja, to sharpen, to encourage; cf. hwatr, bold, active, vigorous; Swed. vättja, to whet; G. wetzen, OHG. hwazan; cf. OHG. hwaz, sharp. β. All from Teut. type **hwatoz*, sharp, keen; allied to Skt. chōd-ana-m, an inciting. ¶ Not allied to L. cōs, a whet-stone, which is related to E. hone and cone. Der. whet, sb.; whett-er; whet-stone, AS. hwetstān, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. iv. c. 13. § 5.

WHETHER, which of two. (E.) 'Whether of the twain,' Matt. xxvii. 21. ME. whether, Chaucer, C. T. 1858 (A 1856). AS. hwæðer, which of two; Grein, ii. 114. +Icel. hvār (a contracted form); MHG. weder, OHG. hwedar, adj., which of two; Goth. hwathar, adj. Formed, with comparative suffix -ther (Idg. -tero-), from the base of who; see Who. Cf. Lith. katras, Gk. κόρεπος, Skt. katara, which of two. Der. whether, conj., AS. hwæðer, Grein, ii. 115. Also neither, nor.

WHEY, the watery part of milk, separated from the curd. (E.) Lowland Sc. whig, see Jamieson; and see Nares. ME. wey, Prompt. Parv. AS. hwæg; 'Serum, hwæg,' Voc. 46. 28. +MDu. wey; Du. wei. Cf. W. chwig, 'wey fermented with sour herbs,' chwig, adj. fermented, sour. β. In the Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 161, we find various Low G. words for wey, which are not all related; the related forms are the Holstein waje and the Ditmarsch hei, heu, which (like Du. hui) are from a weaker grade (**hujo-) of the base (*hwajo-*) of AS. hwæg. Der. wey-ey, wey-ish; wey-foce, Mach. v. 3. 17.

WHICH, a relative and interrogative pronoun. (E.) ME. which, formerly used with relation to persons, as in Chaucer, C. T. 16482 (G 1014); spelt quhik in Barbour, Bruce, i. 77. AS. hwilc, hwelc, hwylc, Grein, ii. 121. A contracted form of AS. hwi-līc, of what form. -AS. hwi-, allied to hwā, who; and līc, like. See Who and Like. +OSax. hwilik; OFriesic hwelik, hwelk, hwek; Du. welk; Icel. hvīlkr, of what kind; Dan. hvilk-en, masc., hvilk-et, neut.; Swed. hvilk-en, hvilk-et; G. welcher; OHG. hwelīh; Goth. hwileiks. Also Goth. hwēleiks; from hwē, instrumental case of hwas, who, and leiks, like. Allied to L. quā-lis, of what sort, lit. 'what-like'; Gk. πῆλίκος. Brugmann, ii. § 88. Der. which-ever, which-so-ever; also (from L. quālis) quali-ty, q. v.

WHIFF, a puff of wind or smoke. (E.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 495. ME. weffe, vapour; Prompt. Parv. An imitative word; cf. puff, pipe, fife. Cf. W. chwiff, a whiff, puff; chwiffio, to puff; chwaff, a gust; Dan. vift, a puff, gust; Lowl. Sc. wheef, a fife. Cf. G. piff-paff, to denote a sudden explosive sound; also Icel. hwiða, a puff; AS. hwiða, a breeze; Voc. 175. 21. Der. whiff, verb, whiff-le, q. v.

WHIFFLE, to blow in gusts, veer about as the wind does. (E.) 'But if the winds whiffle about to the south,' Dampier, Discourse of Winds, c. 6 (R.). Whiffle is the frequentative of whiff, to puff, and was specially used of puffing in various directions; hence it came to mean to trifle, to trick (Phillips). See Whiff. Der. whiff-er, Henry V, v. chor. 12, orig. a piper or fifer, as explained by Phillips, who says that 'it is also taken for a piper that plays on a fife in a company of foot-soldiers;' hence it meant one who goes first in a procession; see Whiffle in E. D. D., and Whiffer in Nares, whose account is sufficient.

WHIG, one of a political party. (North E.) First about 1678 (Haydn). 'Wit and fool are consequents of Whig and Tory;' Dryden, Pref. to Absalom and Achitophel (1681). See the full account in Todd's Johnson and Nares. The standard passage on the word is in b. i. of Burnet's Own Times, fully cited by Johnson; it is to the effect that whig is a shortened form of whiggamor, applied to certain Scotchmen who came from the west in the summer to buy corn at Leith; and that the term was given them from a word whiggam, which was employed by those men in driving their horses. A march to Edinburgh made by the Marquis of Argyll and 6,000 men (in 1648) was called 'the whiggamor's inroad,' and afterwards those who opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs. The term had been applied previously (in 1667) to the Scottish Covenanters (Lingard). [There seems no reason to doubt this account, nor does there seem to be any foundation for an assertion made by Woodrow that Whigs were named from whig, sour whey, which is obviously a mere guess.] β. The Glossary to Sir W. Scott's novels has whigamore, a great whig; also whigging, jogging rudely, urging forward; Jamieson has 'whig, to go quickly; whig awa', to move at an easy and steady pace, to jog (Liddesdale); to whig awa with a cart, remarks Sir W. Scott, signifies to drive it briskly on.' I suspect that whig should be wig, and that these words are connected with Lowland Sc. wiggle, to wriggle (or rather to keep moving about) and with EFries. wiggen, Norw. vigga, to rock. Cf. Lowl. Sc. wig, to wag, shake, move (E. D. D.); and E. Wag. Der. whigg-ish, -ish-ly, -ism, -ery.

WHILE, a time, space of time. (E.) ME. whil, while, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 46. AS. hwil, sb. a time, Grein, ii. 120. + Icel. hvila, only in the special sense of a place of rest, a bed; Dan. hvile, rest; Swed. hvila, rest; G. weile, OHG. hwila; Goth. hweila, a time, season. β. The Teut. types are **hwilā*, f., **hwilōn*-, f., a time, rest, pause, time of repose. Prob. allied to L. qui-es, rest; see Quiet; and to Skt. chi-ra-, long-lasting. Idg. √QWEL. Brugmann, i. § 675. Der. while, adv., from some case of the sb., prob. from the acc. or dat. hwile; whil-es, Matt. v. 25, ME. whiles, Chaucer, C. T. 35 (in the Harleian MS.), where whiles is the gen. case (m. or n.) used adverbially, as in twi-es, twice, ned-es, needs, &c. [but note that the AS. genitive was hwile, the sb. being feminine]; hence whil-s-t, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 16, with added excrement t after s (as in among-s-t, amid-s-t). Also whil-om, spelt whylome in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 13, from AS. hwilum, instr. or dat. pl. of hwil, signifying 'at times.' Also mean-while, see Mean (3); while-ere, Temp. iii. 2. 127. Also whiling-time, the 'waiting a little before dinner,' Spectator, no. 448, Aug. 4, 1712; whence 'to while away time;' prob. with some thought of confusion with wile.

WHIM, a sudden fancy, a crotchety. (Scand.) 'With a whym-wham Knyt with a trym-tram Upon her brayne-pan;' Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 75. — Icel. hvima, to wander with the eyes, as a silly person; Norweg. kvima, to whisk or flutter about, to trifle, play the fool (Aasen); cf. Swed. dial. hvinmer-kantig, dizzy, giddy in the head; Icel. vim, Norw. kvim (Ross), giddiness, folly. β. This etymology is verified by the derived word whimsey, a whim, Ben Jonson, The Fox, iii. 1. 4, pl. whimsies, Beaum. and Fletcher, Women Pleased, iii. 2, last line; from the allied Norweg. kvimsa, Dan. vimse, to skip, whisk, bustle, Swed. dial. hvimsa, to be unsteady, giddy, dizzy. γ. All from a base **hwim*, to move briskly. Der. whim-wham, a reduplicated word, as above; whims-ey, as above; whims-ic-al, whims-ic-al-ly; whim-ling (Nares). Also wim-ble (2), q. v.

WHIMBREL, a bird, a sort of curlew. (E.) Willughby says the bird was described to him under this name by Mr. Johnson of Brignal (N. Riding of Yorkshire). See also Swainson, Provincial Bird-names, E. D. S., p. 199. It is easily analysed as standing for whim-b-r-el; where -b- is excrement after m, -r- is frequentative, -el is the suffix of the agent, and whim- (allied to whine) is imitative. It means the bird that repeats the cry imitated by whim; cf. Lowl. Sc. whimmer, E. whimper and whine, G. wimmern. See Whimper.

WHIMPER, to cry in a low, whining voice. (E.) 'Lieue in puling and whimpering and heuines of hert;' Sir T. More, p. 90 b. And in Palsgrave. A frequentative form, from whimpe. 'There shall be intractables, that will whympe and whine;' Latimer, Seven Sermons (March 22, 1549), ed. Arber, p. 77, last line. In both words, the p is excrement, as is so common after m; whimper and whimpe stand for whimmer and whim; cf. Scotch whimmer, to whimper. And further, whim is an imitative word allied to whine, so that Latimer joins the words naturally enough. See Whine. + Low G. wemern, to whimper; G. wimmern. Der. whimper-er.

WHIN (1), gorse, furze. (Scand.) 'Whynnes or hethe, bruiere;' Palsgrave. 'Whynne, Saliunca;' Prompt. Parv. 'With thornes, breres, and moni a quyn;' Ywain and Gawain, 159; in Ritson, Met. Romances, i. 8. Prob. from Norw. hvin, hven, purple melic grass, hvene, bent-grass, coarse grass (Larsen); cf. Norw. kvein, thin and stalky, kveinutt, stunted (Ross); kveina, used of grass-stalks and trees that are thin and stand alone (Ross); Swed. hven, bent-grass; Norw. kveinen, adj., said of birch-trees and branches with long thin twigs. Hence also (probably) W. chwyn, weeds; cf. Bret. chouenna (with guttural ch), to weed. Der. whin-bush.

WHIN (2), a kind of hard rock. (E.) G. Douglas has 'ane cald hard quhyn,' Lat. duris cautibus, Virgil's Æn. iv. 366. ME. quin, hard stone, Cursor Mundi, 7531. [AS. form not recorded.]

WHINE, to utter a plaintive cry. (E.) ME. whinen, said of a horse, Chaucer, C. T. 5968 (D 386). AS. hwinan, to whine, Grein, ii. 122. + Icel. hvina, to whiz, whirl; Dan. hvine, to whistle, to whine; Swed. hvina, to whistle. β. All from the Teut. base **hwein-*, **hwin-*, to make a discordant noise. Cf. Icel. kveina, to wail; Goth. kwainōn, to mourn. And see Whimper. Der. whine, sb., whin-er, whin-ing; also whinn-y, Drayton, The Moon-calf, l. 119 from end, which is a sort of frequentative. And see whimp-er.

WHINYARD, a sword. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) Nares, following Minshew, explains whinyard as a hanger, i.e. a kind of sword. Minshew, in 1627, spells it whinneard; but it is usually whinyard, as in the play of Edw. III, i. 2. 33; and in Ram Alley (1611), pr. in Hazlitt's Dodsley, x. 363. Cotgrave explains MF. braquemar as 'a wood knife, hanger, whineyard;' but Skelton has simply whynarde, Bowge of Court, 363. From Icel. hvina, to whizz, as an arrow or a gust of wind; Swed. hvina, Dan. hvine, to whistle, shriek; with a suffix which simulated E. yard, a rod. It really arose from the suffix -ard (as in drunk-ard), which is of F. origin. The sense is 'a thing that whizzes through the air,' or that cuts the air with a whizzing sound. Also called a whinger, from an imitative form whinge, which is a variant of whine; cf. whinger, a whining person; E. D. D. See Whine.

WHIP, to move suddenly and quickly, to flog. (E.) 'I whipt me behind the arras,' Much Ado, i. 3. 63; 'Whips out his rapier,' Hamlet, iv. 1. 10. This seems to be the orig. sense, whence the notion of flogging (with a quick sudden stroke) seems to have been evolved. [The AS. hweop, a whip, and hweopian, to whip, scourge, are given by Somner, but are unauthorised; the AS. word for 'scourge' being suipe, John, ii. 15.] Another sense of whip is to overlay a cord by rapidly binding thin twine or silk thread round it, and this is the only sense of ME. whippen noticed in the Prompt. Parv., which has: 'Whyppyn, or closyn threde in sylke, as sylke-womene [do], Obvolvo.' But G. Douglas has 'wyppit with bendis,' to translate L. uittā comptos in Virgil, Æn. viii. 128. The sb. whippe, a scourge, occurs in Chaucer, 5757, 9545 (D 175, E 1671); it is spelt quippe in Voc. 811, 36; wyppe, Voc. 665, 16; wippe, Nominale, ed. Skeat, 194, 886. All from the notion of rapid movement. The word is presumably English, and is preserved in the nearest cognate languages. Cf. Du. wippen, to skip, to hasten, also to give the strappado, formerly 'to shake, to wagge,' Hexham; Du. wip, a moment, a swipe, the strappado, MDu. wippe, 'a whipe or a scourge,' Hexham; Low G. wippen, wuppen, to go up and down, as on a see-saw; wips! quickly; Mid. Dan. hvip, a jump, hvippe, to jump, to whip (Kalkar); Dan. vippe, to see-saw, rock, bob, vips! pop! vipstiert, a wag-tail, lit. 'whip-start,' where start=tail; Swed. vippa, to wag, to jerk or give the strappado; vippgalge, a gibbet, lit. 'whip-gallows,' vips! quick! G. wippen, to move up and down, balance, see-saw, rock, to draw up a malefactor at a gibbet, and drop him again, to give the strappado; wipp-galgen, a gibbet. β. The Du. wippen, to skip, also to wag, is regarded as being a secondary verb allied to OHG. wifan, to turn round, to reel (G. weifen), Goth. weipan, to crown, wipja, a crown; which may be connected with L. uibrāre, to vibrate, swing. Cf. also Goth. bi-waiþjan, to wind round, which may be compared with Skt. vēp, to tremble, vibrate. Perhaps even the E. form ought to be wip (not whip). ¶ The Gael. cuip, a whip, W. chwip, a quick turn, chwipio, to move briskly or nimbly, are borrowed from English, and have taken up different senses of the E. word. Der. whip, sb., as above; whip-cord, -hand, -lash; whipper; whipp-er-in, one who keeps the hounds from wandering, and whips them to the line of chase; whipp-ing, -ing-post; also whip-ster, Oth. v. 2. 244; whip-stock, i.e. whip-handle, Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 28, and in Palsgrave; and see whipp-le-tree. And see wisp, wipe. Cf. whisk, for wisk.

WHIPPLE-TREE, a swing-bar, to which traces are fastened for drawing a carriage, &c. (E.) In Forby's Norfolk Glossary (1830). Spelt whypple-tree in Palsgrave, where it is left unexplained. As in the case of swingle-tree, the word means 'piece of swinging wood,' and is composed of tree in the sense of timber (as in axle-tree, &c.) and the verb whipple, frequentative of whip, to move about quickly, to see-saw. See Whip and Tree; and see Swingletree. ¶ ME. whippeltree, in Chaucer, C. T., A 2923, is the cornel-tree; cf. Mid. Low G. wipel-bom, the cornel-tree, Low G. wepe (Lübben).

WHIR, to buzz, whirl round with a noise. (Scand.) In Shak. Pericles, iv. 1. 21. ME. (Northern), whirr, quirr, to rush out, hurl; Wars of Alexander, 1556, 2226. Probably to some extent imitative, like whiz. — Dan. hvirre, to whirl, twirl; Swed. dial. hvirra, to whirl (Rietz). Cf. Icel. hverfa, to turn round; the frequentative is Whirl. And see Whiz.

WHIRL, to swing rapidly round, to cause to revolve rapidly, to rotate quickly. (Scand.) ME. whirlen, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 80. In Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 24, the earlier version has 'whirle-puff of wind,' and the later version 'whirlyng of wind.' This word is not a mere extension of whir (which is not found till a later date), but is a contraction for whirf-le, frequentative of the verb equivalent to ME. wherfen, to turn (Stratmann); and it is of Scand. origin rather than directly from AS. hweorfan. — Icel. hvirfla, to whirl, frequent. of hverfa (pt. t. hvarf), to turn round; Mid. Dan. hvirle, the same as Dan. hvirule, to whirl; Swed. hvirfla, to whirl; cf. hvarf, a turn; MDu. wervelen, 'to whirle,' Hexham; G. wirbeln, to whirl; also, to warble. β. But the verb is really a denominative one, from the sb. found as ME. whirl, as in the compounds whirl-bone (Prompt. Parv.), whirl-wind (below); cf. Icel. hvirfill, a ring, Dan. hvirvel, Mid. Dan. hvirlen, a whirl, a whirlpool, Swed. hvirvel (the same), Du. wervel, a hasp, wervel-wind, whirlwind, G. wirbel, a turning round, OHG. wirbil; Teut. type **hvirfiloz*, m.; with i-mutation of e to i. From Teut. base **hwerf*, as in AS. hweorfan, Goth. hwairban, to turn; see Wharf. Der. whirl-wind, spelt whyrlle-wynde, Prompt. Parv., from Icel. hvirfilvindr, a whirlwind, Dan. hvirvelvind, Swed. hvirvelvind, Mid. Dan. hvirrelvind; whirl-pool, spelt whirl-pole in Palsgrave, and applied to a large fish, from the commotion which it makes. Also whirl-i-gig, spelt whirly-gigge (toy to play with) in Palsgrave; see Gig. Doublet, warble.

WHISK, to sweep round rapidly, to brush, sweep quickly, move quickly. (Scand.) The proper sense is merely 'to brush or sweep,' esp. with a quick motion, then to flourish about as when using a light brush; then (as in our phrases to brush along, to sweep along) to whisk is to move quickly, esp. with a kind of flourish. The h is intrusive, and probably due to confusion with whiz, whirl, &c. It should rather be wisk. 'He winched [winced] still alwayes, and whisked with his taile;' Gascoigne, Complaint of the Grene Knight, Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 403. 'The whyskyng rod;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 1161. 'Whisking his riding-rod;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Noble Gentleman, Act ii (Gentleman). 'As she whisked it' [her tail]; Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 897. Cf. prov. E. whisk, to switch, beat, wisk, to switch, move rapidly (Halliwell). G. Douglas translates Virgil's bacchatur (Æn. iv. 301) by 'She wisks wild.' The verb is from ME. wisk, sb., a swift stroke, Barbour, Bruce, v. 641. The sk (as in many words) indicates a Scand. origin. — Dan. viske, to wipe, rub, sponge, from visk, sb., a wisp, a rubber; Swed. viska, to wipe, to sponge, also to wag (the tail), from viska, a whisk. Widegren's Swed. Dict. gives viska, 'a small broom, whisk;' and the example hunden viskar med swansen, 'the dog wags his tail,' which precisely shows the sense of the E. word in old authors. The sb. appears further in Icel. visk, a wisp of hay or the like, lit. something to wipe with. + G. wischen, 'to wipe, wisk (sic), rub,' Flügel; from the sb. wisch, 'a whisk, clout, wisp, malkin,' id. β. The sb. which thus appears as Icel. and Dan. visk, Swed. viska, G. wisch, meant orig. 'a wisp;' and perhaps wisk is a related form to wisp. See Wisp. Cf. also AS. weoxian (for **wiscian*), to wipe. Der. whisk, sb. (as above, really a more orig. word). Hence whisk-er, sb., from its likeness to a small brush; 'old Nestor put aside his gray beard and brush'd her with his whiskers,' Dryden, Troilus and Cressida, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); whisker-ed. Also whisk-y, a kind of light gig, from its being easily whisked along; it occurs in Crabbe, Tales of the Hall, b. viii (R.). ¶ Note MDan. hviske, for Dan. viske.

WHISKEY, WHISKY, a spirit distilled from grain, &c. (Gaelic.) In Johnson's Dict. Spelt whisquy-beath in Sinclair's Statistical Acct. of Scotland (1791-9), iii. 525; Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 285. — Gael. uisge-beatha, water of life, whisky; the equivalent of F. eau de vie. We have dropped the latter element, retaining only uisge, water. See Usquebaugh.

WHISPER, to speak very softly, or under the breath. (E.) ME. whisperen; 'Whysperyn, mussito;' Prompt. Parv. In Wyclif, Eccles. xii. 19, 'whispering' is expressed by whistrende or whistringe. ONorthumbrian hwisprian; the L. murmurābant is glossed by hwispredon in the Rushworth MS., and by huuwestredon in the Lindisfarne MS.; Luke, xix. 7. Again, the L. murmur is glossed by hwisprunge in the Rushworth MS., and by huustring in the Lind. MS.; John, vii. 12. We see, then, that hwisprian and hwæstrian were parallel forms, and hwæstrian is evidently closely allied to AS. hwistlian, to whistle. Whisper and whistle are allied words, both of an imitative character; further, they are frequentatives, from the bases whisp- and whist- respectively; and these are extended from an imitative Teut. root **hweis-* (weak grade **hwis-*). Cf. wheeze, which is likewise imitative; also whiz. + MDu. wisperen, wispelen, to whisper, Hexham; G. wispeln. So also (from the base whisk or hwisk) we have Icel. hviskra, Swed. hviska, Dan. hviske, to whisper. Der. whisper, sb., whisper-er.

WHIST, hush, silence; a game at cards. (1. Scand.; 2. E.) The game was at first called whisk by Taylor the Water-poet in 1630, who is said to be the earliest writer to mention it; see Nares. It was so named from the sweeping up or whisking off the cards from the table; see Whisk. β. But about 1709, whisk was corrupted into whist (Compleat Gamester, p. 86); and a new etymology was found for it, viz. that it was so named from the silence requisite to play it attentively. The old verb whist, to keep silence, also to silence, had whisted for its past tense, but whist for its pp. 'So was the Titanesse put down and whist,' i.e. silenced; Spencer, F. Q. vii. 7. 59. 'All the companie must be whist,' i.e. silent; Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland, ed. 1808, p. 67. 'They whisted all' = they all kept silence, Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. 1. ME. whist, interj., be silent! Wyclif, Judges, xviii. 19 (earlier version), where the later version has Be thou stille, and the Vulgate has tace. It is thus seen to have been orig. an interjection, commanding silence. See Hist and Hush. Cf. L. st! hist! G. st! bst! pst! hist, hush, stop! 'The orig. intention of the utterance is to represent a slight sound, such as that of something stirring, or the breathing or whispering of some one approaching. Something stirs; listen; be still;' Wedgwood. By way of further illustration may be quoted: 'I... made a contenance [gesture] with my hande in maner to beeen huisht,' i.e. to enjoin silence; Test. of Love, b. ii. ch. vii. 122. ¶ Whisk occurs in Pope, 2nd Epist. to Mrs. Blount (1715), l. 24, and in Thomson's Autumn (1730), l. 524; modern editions have whist.

WHISTLE, to make a shrill sound by forcing the breath through the contracted lips. (E.) ME. whistlen, P. Plowman, B. xv. 467. AS. hwistlian, to make a hissing noise (Toller); also found in derivatives; as hwistlere, a whistler, piper, Matt. ix. 23; 'Sibillatio, hwistlung,' Voc. 162. 44; 'Fistula, wistle,' id. 406. 23. A frequentative verb, from a base hwist-, meant to imitate the hissing sound of whistling, and extended from the Teut. base **hweis-*, weak grade of **hweis-*; see Whisper. + Icel. hvisla, to whisper; hviiss, whew! to imitate the sound of whistling; Dan. hvisle, to whistle, also to hiss; Swed. hvissla, to whistle. Der. whistle, sb.; whistl-er, AS. hwistlere, as above.

WHIT, a thing, a particle, a bit. (E.) The h is in the wrong place; whit stands for wiht = wight, and is the same word as wight, a person. We find 'neuer a why?' in Palsgrave, p. 881, col. 1. ME. wight, a person; also a thing, a bit. 'For she was falle aslepe a little wight' = for she had fallen asleep a little whit; Chaucer, C. T. 4281 (A 4283). 'A lutewiht' = a little bit, for a short time, Ancrén Riwle, p. 72, l. 24. AS. whit, (1) a wight, person, (2) a whit, bit; see abundant examples in Grein, ii. 704. The latter sense is particularly conspicuous in āwht = aught, i.e. 'one whit,' and nāwht = naught, i.e. 'no whit.' See further under Wight (1). Der. ought, q. v.; naught, q. v.; not.

WHITE, of the colour of snow, very pale. (E.) ME. whit (with long i), why; pl. white, Chaucer, C. T. 90. AS. hwit; Grein, ii. 122. + Du. wit; Icel. hvitr; Dan. hvid; Swed. hvit; Goth. hweits; G. weiss; OHG. hwiz. β. All from Teut. type **hweitoz*, **hwitoz*, white, shining; further allied to Skt. ṣvêta-, white, ṣvit, ṣvind, to be white, to shine. The Skt. ṣvêta is from **KWEIT*, to shine, whence also Russ. svietluii, light, bright, svietit (e), to shine, give light, OLithuan. szweitu, later form szweiczui, I make white, I cleanse. Brugmann, i. § 319; as to the final dental, cf. § 701, note 2. Der. white-ly; white-ness, spelt whytnesse in Prompt. Parv. Also white, verb, ME. hwiten, used intransitively, to become white, Ancrén Riwle, p. 150, l. 7; whit-en, ME. whitenen, to make white, Early Eng. Psalter, Ps. l. 9, but properly intransitive, from Icel. hvítina, to become white (see note on Waken). Also whit-ing, a fish with delicate white flesh, spelt whytyng in Prompt. Parv.; it also means ground chalk. Also whit-ish, whit-ish-ness; white-bait, a fish; white-faced, K. John, ii. 23; white-heat; white-lead, spelt whyte led in Prompt. Parv.; white-limed, spelt whitlymed, P. Plowman, B. xv. 111; white-livered, i.e. cowardly, Hen. V. iii. 2. 34; white-wash. Also whit-leather, leather dressed with alum; Beaum. and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, v. 1; whit-ster, a bleacher, Prompt. Parv.; whit-tawer, a worker in white leather. And see wheat, wheat-ear, Whit-sunday, whitt-le (3). But not whit-low.

WHITHER, to what place. (E.) ME. whider; spelt whidir, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 12, whidur, id. xiv. 14. (Cf. ME. fader for father, moder for mother.) AS. hwider, hwyder, Grein, ii. 120. +Goth. hwadrē, whither, John, vii. 35. Closely allied to Whether, and formed from the Teut. base **hwa-*, who, with a compar. suffix allied to Idg. **ter-*; see Whether. Cf. hither, thither. Der. whitherward, MÆ. whiderward, Chaucer, C. T. 11814 (F 1510); whither-so-ever.

WHITLOW, a painful swelling on the fingers. (Scand.) Nothing but a careful tracing of the history of the word will explain it; it seems to be an alteration of quick-flaw, i.e. a flaw or flaking off of the skin in the neighbourhood of the quick, or sensitive part of the finger round the nail. The word is properly Northern, and of Scand. origin. It is still preserved in the North E. whickflaw, a whitlow (Halliwell). Here whick is the well-known (and very common) Northern form of quick, in the sense of 'alive' and 'quick' part of the finger. This is why the sore was called paronychia. 'Paronychia, a preternatural swelling or sore, under the root of the nail, in one's finger, a felon or whitlow;' Phillips, ed. 1706. [Der. from Gk. παρ-, for παρά, beside, and ὄνυχι-, from ὄνυξ, the nail.] And this is also why horses were subject to whitlows; in farriery, it is a disease of the feet, of an inflammatory kind, occurring round the hoof, where an acrid matter is collected (Webster); the hoof of the horse answering to the nail of a man. Cf. 'Quick-scab, a distemper in horses,' Bailey, vol. i. (1735). β. If so, quick was replaced by whit-, understood as white; 'some doth say it is a white flaw under the nayle;' A. Boorde, Breviary of Health, c. 265 (Palmer). Cotgrave explains poil de chat by 'whitlow;' but Palsgrave has: 'Whitflowe in ones fyngre, poil de chat.' The spelling whitflaw occurs repeatedly in Holland's tr. of Pliny (see the index), and is once spelt white-flaw, showing that the former syllable was already confused with the adj. white. 'Whitflawes about the root of the nails,' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 4. § 1; &c., &c. 'Paronychia . . by the vulgar people amongst it is generally called a whitflaw;' Wiseman, Surgery, b. i. c. 11 (R.). Both parts of the word are properly Scandinavian. — Icel. kvika, 'the quick under the nail or under a horse's hoof;' otherwise kvikva, 'the flesh under the nails, and in animals under the hoofs;' and Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach, also a flake, Icel. flagna, 'to flake off, as skin or slough.' See Quick and Flaw; and see White. ¶ Whick easily turned to whit, which was naturally interpreted as white (from the words whit-tawer, whitster), the more so as the swelling is often of a white colour; the true sense of the word was thus lost, and a whitlow was applied to any similar sore on the finger, whether near the quick or not. Low may have been suggested by prov. E. low, 'fire;' with the idea of 'inflammation.'

WHITSUNDAY, the seventh Sunday after Easter, commemorating the day of Pentecost. (E.) Lit. white Sunday, as will appear. The word is old. In the Ancien Riwle, p. 412, l. 13, we have mention of hwitesunedei immediately after a mention of holi þursdei. Again, we find: 'þe holi goste, þet þu on hwite sune dei sendest' = the Holy Ghost, whom thou didst send on Whit-sunday; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 209, l. 16. In Layamon, l. 31524, we already have mention of white sune tide (= whit-e sun-e tid-e, in six syllables), i.e. Whitsun-tide, which in the later version appears in the form Witson-time, showing that even at that early period the word White was beginning to be confused with wit; hence the spelling witsondai in Wycliffe's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 158, 159, &c., is not at all surprising. In the same, p. 161, we already find witson-weke, i.e. Whitsun week. In the Cursor Mundi, the word 'white' is written wijt (where the ij = i); and, accordingly, we there find the form wijt sundai, 18914. Cf. Wit-sonentid, S. Legendary, p. 115, l. 297. AS. hwita Sunnan-dæg; only in the dat. case hwitan sunnan dæg, A. S. Chron. an. 1067. However, the AS. name is certified, beyond all question, by the fact that it was early transplanted into the Icelandic language, and appears there as hwitasunnudagr. In Icelandic we also find hwita-daga, lit. 'white days,' as a name for Whitsun week, which was also called hwitadaga-vika = whitedays week, and hwitasunnudags-vika = Whitsunday's week. β. All these names are unmistakable, and it is also tolerably certain that the E. name White Sunday is not older than the Norman conquest; for, before that time, the name was always Pentecoste (see Pentecost). We are therefore quite sure that, for some reason or other, the name Pentecost was then exchanged for that of White Sunday, which came into common use, and was early corrupted into Wit-Sunday, proving that white was soon misunderstood, and was wrongly supposed to refer to the wit or wisdom conferred by the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, on which theme it was easy for the preacher (to whom etymology was no object) to expatiate. Nevertheless, the truer spelling has been preserved to this day, not only in English and in modern Icelandic, but in the very plainly marked modern Norwegian dialects, wherein it is called Kvitsunn-dag, whilst Whitsun-week is called Kvitsunn-vika, obviously from kvit, white (Aasen). See, therefore, White and Sunday. B. But when we come to consider why this name was given to the day, room is at last opened for conjecture. Perhaps the best explanation is Mr. Vigfusson's, in the Icel. Dict., who very pertinently remarks that even Bingham gives no reference whatever to Icelandic writers, though, from the nature of the case, they know most about it, the word having been borrowed by Icelandic whilst it was still but new to English. He says: 'The great festivals, Yule, Easter, and Pentecost, but esp. the two latter, were the great seasons for christening: in the Roman Catholic church especially Easter, whence in Roman usage the Sunday after Easter was called Dominica in Albis; but in the Northern churches, perhaps owing to the cold weather at Easter-time, Pentecost, as the birth-day of the church, seems to have been esp. appointed for christening and for ordination; hence the following week was called the Holy Week (Helga Vika). Hence, Pentecost derived its name from the white garments,' &c. See the whole passage, and the authorities cited. The W. sulguyn, Whitsuntide, is translated from English; cf. W. sul, sun, and gwyn, white. Hexham's MDu. Dict. has: 'Witten Donderdag, Holy Thursday; Witten Sondagh, Palme Sunday; Witte-brodt, white bread;' ed. 1658. Kalkar's Mid. Dan. Dict. has: 'Hvidesøndag, (1) the first Sunday after Easter; (2) the first Sunday in Lent; from hvid, white, and søndag, Sunday. It is clear that white Sunday was a name not confined to the day of Pentecost. ¶ It deserves to be recorded, as a specimen of English popular etymology, that many still prefer to consider AS. hwita sunnan (occurring in the A. S. Chronicle) as a corruption of the mod. G. pfingsten (which is acknowledged to be from the Gk. πεντηκοστή). Seeing that pfingsten is a modern form, and is an old dative case turned into a nominative, the MHG. word being pfingeste, we are asked to believe that pfingeste became hwita su, and that nnan was afterwards luckily added! Comment is needless. Der. Whitsun-week, a shortened form for Whitsunday's week (as shown by Icel. hwitasunnudags-vika); and similarly, Whitsun-tide. Also Whit-Monday, Whit-Tuesday, names coined to match Whit-Sunday; formerly called Monday in Whitsun-week, &c.; Wycliffe, Works, ii. 161. ¶ Cf. Palmson, Lowsun, as contractions of Palmsunday, Lowsunday. See Oxford Dict.

WHITTLE (1), to pare or cut with a knife. (E.) In Johnson's Dict. A mere derivative from the sb. whittle, a knife, Timon, v. 1. 183. And whittle is the same as ME. þwitel, thwitel, a knife, Chaucer, C. T. 3931 (A 3933). Lit. 'a cutter,' formed, with suffix -el of the agent, from þwit-, weak grade of AS. þwitan, to thwite, to cut, to pare; whence the verb which is spelt by Palsgrave both thwyte and whyte. See Rom. of the Rose, l. 933. ¶ The alleged AS. hwitel, a knife, is a mere myth; see Whittle (3).

WHITTLE (2), to sharpen. (E.) Used as a slang term; 'well whittled and thoroughly drunk;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 387 (R.). 'Thoroughly whittled' = thoroughly drunk; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 22. The lit. sense is, sharpened like a whittle or knife; see Whittle (1). It may have been confused with whet, the frequentative of which, however, could only have been whettile, and does not occur.

WHITTLE (3), a blanket. (E.) ME. whitel, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 76. AS. hwitel, a blanket, Gen. ix. 23. Lit. 'a small white thing' = AS. hwit, white. See White. + Icel. hwitill, a whittle, from hvitr, white; Norweg. kvitel, from kvit, white (Aasen). Cf. E. blank-et, from F. blanc, white. ¶ Somner gave 'knife' as one sense of AS. hwitel; he was clearly thinking of whittle (1), which happens to be a corruption of thwitel; see Whittle (1). His mistake has been carefully preserved in many dictionaries.

WHIZ, to make a hissing sound. (E.) 'The woods do whiz;' Surrey, tr. of Æneid, b. ii, l. 534. An imitative word, allied to Whistle, q. v. Cf. Icel. hvissa, to hiss, to run with a hissing sound, said, e.g., of a stream; and cf. E. whis-per, hiss, whir.

WHO, an interrogative and relative pronoun. (E.) 'Formerly who, what, which, were not relative, but interrogative pronouns; which, whose, whom occur as relatives [misprinted interrogatives] as early as the end of the twelfth century, but who not until the 14th century, and was not in common use before the 16th century;' Morris, Hist. Outlines of E. Accidence, § 188. AS. hwā, who (interrogatively), masc. and fem.; hwæt, neuter; gen. hwæs, for all genders; dat. hwām, hwæm, for all genders; acc. masc. hwone, fem. hwone, neut. hwæt; instrumental hwī, hwȳ (mod. E. why); Grein, ii. 113; Sweet, A. S. Reader. We now have who = AS. hwā; what = hwæt; whose = hwæs, with a lengthening of the vowel, to agree with the vowel of other cases (seldom used in the neuter, though there is nothing against it); whom = dat. hwām, but also used for the accusative, the old acc. hwone being lost; why = inst. hwī; see Why. + Du. wie, who; wat, what; wiens, whose; wien, whom (dat. and acc.); Icel. hverr, hver, who; hvat, what; hvers, whose; hverjum (masc.), whom; pl. hverir, &c.; Dan. hvo, who; hvad, what; hvis, whose; hvem, whom (dat. and acc.); Swed. hvem, who, whom (nom. dat. and acc.); hvad, what; hvems, hvars, whose; G. wer, who; was, what; wessen, wess, whose; wem, to whom; wen, whom (acc.); Goth. nom. huas, hwō, hwa (or hwata); gen. hweis, hwizōs, hweis; dat. hwamma, hwizai, hwamma; acc. hwana, hwō, hwa (or hwata); instr. hwē; pl. hwai, &c.; Irish and Gael. co; W. puw; L. quis, quæ, quid; Russ. kto, chto, who, what; Lithuan. kas, who; Skt. kas, who (masc.), kim, what; kam, whom (acc.). β. All from the Idg. interrogative base QO (Teut. HWA), who? The neuter has the characteristic neut. suffix -d (L. qui-d), Teut. -t (E. wha-t, Goth. hwa-ta), as in the words i-t, tha-t. Brugmann, ii. § 411. Der. who-ever, who-so, who-so-ever. Also we-n, we-re, we-ther, whi-ch, whi-ther, why. Also quidd-i-ty, qua-li-ty, qua-nti-ty, quillet.

WHOLE, hale, sound, entire, complete. (E.) The orig. sense is 'hale,' or in sound health; hence the senses entire, complete, &c., have been deduced. The spelling with initial w is curious, and points back to a period when a w-sound was initially prefixed in some dialect and afterwards became general; this pronunciation is now again lost. We have other examples in whot=hot, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 58, ii. 9. 29, &c.; in whore=hore; in whoop=ME. houpen, where the w is still sounded; and in mod. E. win as the pronunciation of one, where the w is not now written. I believe the spelling with w is hardly older than about A.D. 1500; Palsgrave, in 1530, still writes hole. 'A wholle man;' Golden Booke, c. 29; first printed in 1534. 'The whole neade not the visicion;' Tyndale, tr. of Matt. ix. 12 (1526). Richardson cites the adv. wholly from Gower; but Pauli's edition (i. ii. p. 4, l. 21) has holy (for holly); so also in Macaulay's edition, i. 303, l. 91. ME. hol, hool, Wyclif, John, v. 6. AS. hāl, whole; whence ME. hool by the usual change from AS. ā to ME. long o, as in AS. stān>ME. stoon, a stone; Grein, ii. 6. +Du. heel; Icel. heill; Dan. heel; Swed. hel; G. heil; Goth. hails. β. All from Teut. type **hailōz*, Idg. type **kailos*, hale, whole; allied to W. coel, an omen; OSlav. cělu, wholly, Russ. tsel-it(e), to heal. See Stokes-Fick, p. 88. Der. whol-ly, ME. holly, holy, in Gower, as above, Chaucer, C. T. 601 (A 599); whole-ness (modern). Also whole-some, ME. holsum, holsom, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 947, spelt halsum in the Ormulum, 2915, not in AS., but suggested by Icel. heilsamr, salutary, formed from heill, whole, with suffix -samr corresponding to E. -some; hence whole-somely, whole-some-ness. Also whole-sale, used by Addison (Todd), from the phrase by whole sale, for which see Hakluyt, Voy. i. 471 (l. 6 from bottom), as opposed to retail. Also heal, q.v.; hol-y, q.v. Doublet, hale. ☞ If we write whole for hole, we ought to write wholy for holy: 'For their wholy conversacion;' Roy, Rede Me and be not Wroth, ed. Arber, p. 75, l. 24.

WHOO, to shout clearly and loudly. (F.—Teut.) Here, as in the case of whole, whot for hot (Spenser), and a few other words, the initial w is unoriginal, and the spelling should rather be hoop. The spelling with w dates from about A.D. 1500. Palsgrave, in 1530, has: 'I whoope, I call, je huppe;' yet Shakespeare (ed. 1623) has hooping, As You Like It, iii. 2. 203. [The derivative whoobub is, conversely, now spelt hubbub; see HUBBUB.] ME. houpen, to call, shout, P. Plowman, B. vi. 174; Chaucer, C. T. 15406 (B 4590). —F. houper, 'to hoop unto, or call afar off;' Cot. From F. houp! an exclamatory interjection. Of Teut. origin; cf. EFries. hup! up! Pomeran. hup-hei! a cry of joy (Schambach); G. hopsa, heyday! (Flügel). Der. whoop, sb.; whoop-ing-cough or hoop-ing-cough; hubbub. Doublet, hoop (2), which is a mere variation of spelling, and exactly the same word.

WHORE, a harlot. (Scand.) As in the case of whole, q.v., the initial w is not older than about A.D. 1500. Palsgrave, in 1530, still has hore. 'The whoores beleved hym;' Tyndale, tr. of Matt. xxi. 32 (1526). In Bale's Kynge Johan, ed. Collier, p. 26, l. 21, we find horson, but on p. 76, l. 12, it is whoreson. [It is remarkable that the word hoar, white, as applied to hair, also occurs with initial w at perhaps an earlier period. 'The heere of his hedd was whore' = the hair of his head was hoar; Monk of Evesham, c. 12; ed. Arber, p. 33. Spelt also whore in Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 400.] ME. hore, King Alisaunder, l. 1000; P. Plowman, B. iv. 166. The word is not AS., but Scandinavian. [The AS. word was miltestre, Matt. xxi. 31.] In the Laws of Canute (Secular), § 4, we find hōr-cwene, an adulteress, where the Danish word has the AS. cwene (a quean) added to it; Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 378. —Icel. hōra, an adulteress, fem. of hōrr, an adulterer (we also find hōr, neut. sb., adultery); Dan. hore; Swed. hōra. +Du. hoer, G. hure, OHG. huora; Goth. hōrs, masc., an adulterer, Luke, xviii. 11. β. The Teut. types are **hōroz*, m., and **hōrā*, f.; Idg. types **qāros*, m., and **qārā*, f. [The Church-Slavonic kurwa, an adulteress, Polish kurwa, are from Teutonic.]

Cf. L. cārus, dear, orig. 'loving'; Irish caraim, I love, Skt. chāru-, agreeable, beautiful, &c. γ. If this be right, the word prob. meant at first no more than 'lover,' and afterwards descended in the scale, as so often happens. Brugmann, i. § 637. ☞ Not allied to the verb to hire. Der. whore-dom, ME. hordom, Ancræn Riwe, p. 204, l. 20, from Icel. hōrdōmr, Swed. hordom; whor-ish, Troil. iv. 1. 63, whor-ish-ly, -ness; -master, K. Lear, i. 2. 137, spelt hore-maister in Palsgrave; -monger, Meas. for Meas. iii. 2. 37; -son, in Bale, Kynge Johan (as above).

WHORL, a number of leaves disposed in a circle round the stem of a plant. (E.) It is closely allied to wharl, which is the name for a piece of wood or bone placed on a spindle to twist it by. The latter is also called a wharrow, a picture of which will be found in Guillim, Display of Heraldry, 1664, p. 289: 'The round ball [disc] at the lower end serveth to the fast twisting of the thread, and is called a wharrow.' The likeness between a wharl on a spindle and a whorl of leaves is sufficiently close. Palsgrave has: 'Wharle for a spyndell, peson.' Wharl, whorl are contracted forms for wharvel, whorvel. —'Whorlwyll, whorwhil, whorle of a spyndyl, Vertebrum, Prompt. Parv.; where whorlwyll is clearly an error for whorwyl (= whorvil). The AS. name for a wharrow was hweorfa; we find 'Vertellum [sic], hweorfa' in a list of spinning-implements, Voc. 294.6; this is clearly an allied word, but without the suffix -el, and the etymology is from the strong verb hweorfan, to turn; see WHIRL and WHARF. β. The particular form whorl may have been borrowed from MDu., and introduced by the Flemish weavers; cf. MDu. worvel, 'a spinning-whirle,' Hexham; also worvelen, 'to turne, to reele, to twine,' id.; these words are from the weak grade of the same root, and help to account for the vowel o. Cf. AS. hworf-en, pp. of hweorfan.

WHORTLE-BERRY, a bilberry. (E.) 'Airelles, whurtle-berries;' Cot. But the w seems to be unoriginal, as in whole, whoop, whore (above). Older form hurtilberye, J. Russell, Book of Nurture, 1. 82 (ab. 1460). Again, hurtil-berye is an extension of hurt-berye, also (simply) hurt. 'Strawberyes or hurtes;' Boorde, Dyetary, xiii. (1542, ed. 1870) 267 (N. E. D.). The last form answers to AS. horta, a whortle-berry, pl. hortan; see Napier's Glosses, 2. 433 (note), and cf. 'Facinia [i. e. vaccinia], hortan, Voc. 234.37. ☞ In Dorsetsh., bilberries are called hart-berries, which answers to AS. heorot-bergan, pl. of heorot-berge; cf. 'Mora, heorotberge,' Corpus Gloss. 1333; but this is an unrelated name. The AS. form of ME. hurtil must have been **hyrtel*. In America, hurtleberry has become huckleberry.

WHY, on what account. (E.) Why is properly the instrumental case of who, and was, accordingly, frequently preceded by the prep. for, which (in AS.) sometimes governed that case. ME. whi, why, Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 26; for whi=on which account, because, id. viii. 9. AS. hwī, hwȳ, hwiġ, instr. case of hwā, who; for hwiġ, why; Grein, ii. 113. See WHO. +Icel. hvī, why; allied to hverr, who, hvat, what; Dan. hvi; Swed. hvi; Goth. hwē, instr. case of huas, who. β. The word how is closely related. See HOW.

WI-WY

WICK (1), the cluster of threads of cotton in a lamp or candle. (E.) Spelt weeke, in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 30. ME. wicke, P. Plowman, C. xx. 205; weyke, id. B. xvii. 239; wueke, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 47, l. 30. There seem to be at least two distinct forms. E. wick=ME. wicke; and ME. weke, Voc. 592.30, whence Spenser's weeke. The ME. wicke answers to AS. wice (Sweet), and weke to AS. weoce, Voc. 126. 29, 439.36; cf. 'Funalia, vel funes, candel-weoca;' Voc. 154.14; pl. candel-weocan, id. 404.22. +MDu. wiecke, 'a weeke of a lampe, a tent to put into a wounde;' Hexham; Low G. weke, lint, to put to a wound; whence Dan. væge, a wick; Norw. veik; Swed. veke, a wick, Widegren. +Bavarian wichengarn, wick-yarn, Schmeller, 835; he also gives various G. forms, viz. OHG. wieche, weche, with a reference to Graff, i. 728; Schade gives OHG. wioh and wike. The orig. sense was prob. 'twist,' or 'thing woven;' cf. Irish fig-im, I weave (base **weg-*); Stokes-Fick, p. 268; and Skt. vāg-urā, a net.

WICK (2), a town. (L.) AS. wic, a village, town; Grein, ii. 688. Not E., but borrowed. —L. uicus, a village; see VICINITY.

WICK (3), WICH, a creek, bay. (Scand.) In some place-names, as in Green-wick, &c. —Icel. vík, a small creek, inlet, bay; OIcel. **wik*. From vík-ja, to recede; see WEAK. ☞ It is not easy, in all cases, to distinguish between this and the word above. Ray, in his Account of Salt-making (E. D. S., Gloss. B. 15, p. 20), mentions Nant-wich, North-wich, Middle-wich, Droit-wich; here wich = brine-pit, apparently a peculiar use of Icel. wik above. See Wych, a salt-work, in Nares.

WICKED, evil, bad, sinful. (E.) The word wicked was orig. a past participle, with the sense 'rendered evil,' formed as if from a verb **wikken*, to make evil, from the obsolete adj. wikke (disyllabic), evil, once common. Again, the adj. wikke is allied to AS. wicca, masc., a wizard [wicce, fem., a witch]. Hence the adj. wikke is allied to Weak, q.v. From the weak grade **wic-*, of AS. wican (Icel. wikja, G. weichen), to yield, give way. And see Witch. We also find ME. wikked, as in the adv. wikked-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 8599 (E 723); spelt wikkede, def. form of wicked, Layamon, later text, 14983, where it takes the place of swicfulle (deceitful) in the earlier text. This is prob. the earliest instance of the word. β. The shorter form wikke is common; it occurs in Havelok, 688; P. Plowman, B. v. 229; Chaucer, C. T. 1089, 5448, 15429 (A 1087, B 1028, 4613); cf. **wicci ræd*, i.e. wicked counsel, A. S. Chron. an. 1140; as if for **wicc-ig*, an adj. from wicca, a wizard. It became obsolete in the 15th century as an adj., but the fem. sb. is still in use in the form witch. Der. wicked-ly; wicked-ness, ME. wikkednesse, P. Plowm. B. v. 290.

WICKER, made of twigs. (Scand.) 'A wicker bottle,' Oth. ii. 3. 152 (folios, twiggen bottle). Wicker is properly a sb., meaning a pliant twig. ME. wiker, wikir; 'Wykyr, to make wythe basketys, or to bynde wythe thyngys [i.e. to make baskets with, or bind things with], Vimen, vituligo,' Prompt. Parv. 'Wycker, osier,' Palsgrave. The AS. form does not appear; and perhaps E. wicker may have been borrowed from Scandinavian. We find MSwed. wika, to bend, whence weck, a fold, wickla, to fold, wrap round (Ihre); also Swed. dial. vekare, vekker, wikker (which is our very word), various names for the sweet bay-leaved willow, Salix pentandra, lit. 'the bender,' from veka, to bend, to soften, allied to Swed. vika, to fold, to double, to plait (Widegren). Wicker-work means, accordingly, 'plaited work,' esp. such as is made with pliant twigs, according to the common usage of the word. The word is closely allied, in the same way, to Dan. veg, pliant (with g for k, as usual in Danish), in connexion with which Wedgwood cites, from various Danish dialects, vøge, vøgger, vegre, a pliant rod, a withy (lit. a wicker), vøgrekurv, vegrekurv, a wicker-basket, væger, vægger, a willow (= Swed. dial. vekare above); cf. Skt. vāg-urā, a net. Cf. Weak, Wick (1), Wick (3). And see Witch-elm.

WICKET, a small gate. (F.—Teut.) ME. wiket, P. Plowman, B. v. 611; Rom. of the Rose, 528.—AF. wiket, Tristan, ed. Michel, ii. 101; cf. Supp. to Godefroy, s. v. guichet; he also has guischet, and Littré's quotations give us the forms wisket and viquet; mod. F. guichet, a wicket. Littré also cites the Walloon wichet, Norman viquet, Prov. guisquet, all of them deduced from the common form wisket. It is supposed that the s is radical; and it has been derived from OHG. wisk-en, to wipe, to whisk; and intr., to move quickly, to slip aside. Hence, perhaps, it meant a postern-door, to slip out at. It was esp. used of a small door easily opened and shut. Cf. MDu. wicket, a wicket, Hexham; also wincket, 'a wicket,' id.; prob. from OF. Cf. EFries. wisken, to wipe, also to move quickly; Norw. viska (the same); Swed. dial. viska, to throw, to swing; also Norw. viskjen, light and quick (Ross). See Whisk. Körtling, § 10171. B. In the game of cricket, the wicket was at first (A. D. 1700) lit. 'a small gate,' being 2 feet wide by 1 foot high; but the shape has so greatly altered that there is no longer any resemblance. See the diagrams in the Eng. Cyclop. div. Arts and Sciences, Supplement; s. v. Cricket.

WIDE, broad, far extended. (E.) ME. wid (with long i); pl. wide (disyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 28. AS. wid, wide; Grein, ii. 690. +Du. wijd; Icel. viðr; Swed. and Dan. vid; G. weit, OHG. wit. β. All from Teut. type **widōz*, wide; perhaps for **wi-ðōz*, orig. a pp. from **WEI*; cf. Skt. vi-taram, farther (Macdonell). Der. wide-ly, -ness; wid-en, verb, Cor. i. 4. 44, with which cf. ME. widen, Prompt. Parv., imperative wide, Palladius on Husbandry, iii. 923, though the mod. suffix -en is not the same as the ending of the ME. infin. widen (see this explained under Waken). Also wid-th, not an old word, used in Drayton's Battle of Agincourt, st. 142, as equivalent to the older sb. wideness; formed by analogy with leng-th, bread-th, &c.; cf. Icel. viðd, width.

WIDGEON, the name of a kind of duck. (F.—L.) 'A wigion, bird, glaucea,' Levins, ed. 1570. Spelt wygeon, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Health, b. ii. ch. 13. The suffix and form of the word show that it is certainly French; and it is clear that the E. word has preserved an older form (presumably **wigion*) than can be found in French. Littré gives the three forms vigeon, vingeon, gingeon, as names of the 'whistling duck' (canard siffleur). Prob. from L. uipionem, acc. of uipio, used by Pliny, bk. x. c. 49, to mean a kind of small crane. Cf. Ital. vipione, a small crane (Torriano). There is a by-form bibio; probably bibio, uipio are of imitative origin, like L. pīpio. (For the letter-changes, cf. E. pigeon from L. acc. pīpionem.)

WIDOW, a woman whose husband is dead. (E.) ME. widewe, widwe, Chaucer, C. T. 255, 1173 (A 253, 1171). AS. widwe, weodurwe; also wudwe, wuduwe, wydwewe, Grein, ii. 692. +Du. weduwe; G. wittwe, OHG. wituwa, witewa, witiwa; Goth. widuwō, widowō. β. The Teut. types are **widewā*, **widowā*, fem. sb., a widow; Idg. types **widhewā*, **widhowā*. Further cognate with L. uidua, fem. of uiduus, deprived of, bereft of (which gave rise to Ital. vedova, Span. viuda, F. veuve, a widow); also with Irish feadh, OIrish fedb, W. gwedd, Russ. vdova, Skt. widhāvā, a widow. γ. Here the L. d, as in other cases, answers to Skt. dh, and the root is √WIDH, to lack, want, hence, to be bereft of. This root is preserved in the Skt. vindh, to lack (not in Benfey), for which see the St. Petersburg Dict. vol. vi. 1070. Brugmann, ii. § 64. Cf. also Gk. ῥήθεος (for **ῥ-θ-ε-ος*), a bachelor, one who is unmarried. Der. widow, verb, Cor. v. 6. 153; widow-hood, ME. widwehad, Holi Meidenhad, p. 23, l. 20; widow-er, ME. widewer, widwer, P. Plowman, A. 10. 194, B. 9. 174, formed by adding -er; cf. G. wittwer.

WIELD, to manage, to use. (E.) ME. welden, to govern, also to have power over, to possess, Wyclif, Matt. v. 4, Luke, xi. 21, xviii. 18. AS. geweldan, gewyldan, to have power over, Gen. iii. 16; Mark, v. 4. This is a weak verb, answering to ME. welden, and mod. E. wield, which are also weak verbs; all are derivatives from the strong verb wealdan (pt. t. wēold, pp. wealden), to have power over, govern, rule, possess. +Icel. valda, to govern (pt. t. olli); G. walten, OHG. waltan, to dispose, manage, rule; Goth. waldan, to govern. β. The Icel. pt. t. olli is for **wolþi* (Noreen, § 215), and the Idg. base was **walt*, whence Celtic **wlat-is*, OIrish flaith, dominion (Stokes-Fick, 262). Hence it is supposed that Russ. vladiet(e), to reign, rule, possess, make use of, Lithuan. waldyti, to rule, govern, possess, are early loans from Teutonic. But W. gwlad, a region, is a cognate word. Some connect it with the √WAL, to be strong; cf. L. ualere, to be strong. See Valiant. Der. wield-er, un-wield-y.

WIFE, a woman, a married woman. (E.) ME. wif (with long i), wyf, Chaucer, C. T. 447, 1173 (A 445, 1171); pl. wyues (wywes), id. 234. AS. wif, a woman, wife, remarkable as being a neuter sb., with pl. wif like the singular. +Du. wijf, woman, wife, fem.; Icel. vif, neut. a woman; only used in poetry; Dan. viv, fem.; G. weib, neut. a woman; OHG. wip. β. The Teut. type is **wiðom*, n. The form of the root is **weib* = Idg. √WEIP; in accordance with which we find OHG. weibōn, weipōn, to waver, be irresolute, L. uibrare, to quiver, Skt. vep, to tremble; but the real origin of the word remains obscure. ¶ It cannot be allied to AS. wefan, to weave. Der. wife-like, Cymb. iii. 2. 8, fish-wife, i.e. fish-woman; mid-wife, q.v.; house-wife (see House); wive, v., AS. wifian, Luke, xx. 34. Also wo-man, q.v.

WIG, a peruke. (Du.—F.—Ital.—L.) Wig occurs frequently in Pope; Moral Essays, iii. 65, 295, &c., and is merely a shortened form of periwig, which is much older, and occurs in Shakespeare. Cf. bus for omnibus. See further under Periwig and Peruke. Der. wigg-ed.

WIGHT (1), a person, creature. (E.) ME. wijt, wight, Chaucer, C. T. 848 (A 846). AS. wiht (very common), a creature, animal, person, thing; also spelt wuht, wyht, and used both as fem. and neut.; Grein, ii. 703. +Du. wicht, a child; Westphalian wicht, a girl; Icel. vættir, a wight; vætta, a whit; Dan. vætte, an elf; G. wicht; Goth. waihts, fem., waiht, neut., a whit, a thing. β. It is probable that the fem. and neut. sbs. were orig. distinct, but they were early confused. The Teut. base **weh-t-* may perhaps be connected with AS. weg-an, to move; if so, it may have meant a moving object; orig. 'a thing carried' (L. uectum); or (in the imagination of the spectator), an elf or demon. Cf. the Celtic type **wektā*, f., a movement, a course, a time; as in Irish feachd, OIrish fecht, a course, turn, time, W. gwaith (the same); Stokes-Fick, p. 266. Whit is nothing but another spelling of wight. Doublet, whit.

WIGHT (2), nimble, active, strong. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight,' Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. ME. wight, wijt, valiant, P. Plowman, B. ix. 21; Layamon, 20588.—Icel. vigr, in fighting condition, serviceable for war; the final t seems to have been caught up from the neut. vigt, which was used in certain phrases; 'þeir drāpu karla þā er vigt var at' = they smote the men that might be slain, i.e. the men who were serviceable for war; referring to the rule not to slay women, children, or helpless men. See Icel. Dict. For similar instances of final t from Icelandic, see Want, Thwart. The same word as Swed. vig, nimble, agile, active (whence vigt, nimbly), allied to AS. wiglic, warlike. β. From the sb. which appears as Icel. vig, AS. wig, war. The Icel. vig, war, is derived from Icel. vega, to fight, smite (quite distinct from vega, to move, weigh), allied to Goth. weigan, weihan (pt. t. waih, pp. wigans), to fight, strive, contend.—Teut. base WEIH, to fight; Fick, iii. 303. Allied to L. uincere, to fight, conquer; see Victor. Also to OIrish fich-im, I fight, Lith. wik-rus, active, wight, wėkà, strength, OSlav. věku, strength, Russ. viek', life.

WIGWAM, an Indian hut or cabin. (N. American Indian.) In books relating to N. America. 'They built a long wigwam;' I. Mather, Remarkable Providences (1684); repr. by Oflor, p. 31. In Eliot's Indian Grammar, 1666, p. 11, Eliot gives the pronominal forms of the Massachusetts word for 'house' as follows: 'Week, his house; Weekou, their house; weekit, in his house, wekuwoomut, in his [read their] house. Against wekuwoomut he has a note—hence we corrupt this word wigwam.'—J. Platt (in N. and Q., 9 S. x. 446). S. T. Rand, in his Dict. of Micmac (a language of the Algonkin family) has: 'wigwom, a house.' Cuoq gives Algonkin mikiwam, also wikiwam, a house (pp. 221, 438).

WILD, self-willed, violent, untamed, uncivilised, savage, desert. (E.) In Barbour's Bruce, we find will of red = wild of rede or counsel, at a loss what to do, i. 348, iii. 494, xiii. 478; will of wane = wild of weening or thought, at a loss, i. 323, ii. 471, vii. 225. The form will, here used as an adj., is simply due to the fact that the Icel. form for 'wild' is villr, which stands for **vilþr* by the assimilation so common in Icelandic. By themselves, these passages would not by any means prove any connexion between wild and will; nevertheless, the connexion is real, as appears from a consideration of the words cognate with wild. (See further below.) ME. wilde, rarely wielde, though we find 'a wielde olyue-tre' in Wyclif, Rom. xi. 17; spelt wylde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 57, l. 1322. AS. wilde (Toller). Grein gives the examples: se wilda fugel = the wild bird; wilde deor = wild deer or animals. + Du. wild, proud, savage; Icel. villr (for **vilþr*), wild; also astray, bewildered, confused; Dan. and Swed. vild; G. wild, OHG. wildi; Goth. wiltheis, wild, uncultivated, Mark. i. 6; Rom. xi. 17. β. All from Teut. type **welthjoz*, astray, wild; the Goth. form wil-theis is important, because the Goth. -th- answers to L. -t-, used as a suffix with pp. force (cf. L. rectus, right, orig. a pp. form). The orig. sense is perhaps indicated by the Icel. villr and by the common E. use of the word, viz. 'actuated by will;' to act wildly is to act wilfully. Cf. the Celtic type **wel-tos*, as in W. gwylt, wild; Stokes-Fick, p. 277. Perhaps from √WEL, to will, to wish. See Will (1). Cf. W. gwyllys, the will. Others connect Goth. wiltheis with Russ. vil-iat(e), to run hither and thither. Der. wild, sb., Merch. Ven. ii. 7. 41, ME. wilde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 553, l. 11539; wild-ly; wild-ness, spelt wyldnesse in the Prompt. Parv.; wild-fire, ME. wylde fur, Rob. of Glouc. p. 410, l. 8485; wild-ing, a wild or crab-apple, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 17. Also be-wild-er, q. v.; wild-er-ness, q. v.

WILDERNESS, a wild or waste place. (E.) ME. wilder-nesse, Ancrén Riwe, p. 158, l. 18. Wilder-nesse first appears in Layamon, 30335; and stands for wildern-nesse. It is formed by adding the ME. suffix -nesse to the shorter word wildern, which was used in the same sense. Thus, in the Ancrén Riwe, p. 160, l. 7, one MS. has wilderne in place of wilder-nesse. So also in Layamon, l. 1238: 'þar is wode, þar is water, þar is wilderne muchel' = there is wood, there is water, there is a great desert. This ME. wilderne, a desert, is formed with the adj. suffix -n (-en) from the AS. sb. wilder, wildor, a wild animal (Grein), a neuter sb. answering to Teut. type **wilthos*, allied to wild (Teut. **welthjoz*). See Sievers, § 289. + MDu. wildernisse. And see be-wilder.

WILE, a trick, a sly artifice. (E.) ME. wile (dissyllabic), Chaucer, 3403. AS. wil, a wile, A. S. Chron. an. 1128. This AS. wil is late; it prob. represents AF. **wile*, answering to OF. guile, guile; see Guile. Modern E. wile is rather a shortened form of AS. wigl, 'divination,' in Napier (see the note on p. 159, l. 165). Cf. His [the devil's] wizeles, deceits, Ancrén Riwe, p. 300. The AS. wilung (for **wiglung*), divination, occurs in the Kentish Glosses, 554. Divination was regarded as heathen, and a deceit of the devil. The verb is AS. wiglian, to divine; cf. MDu. wijchelen (Hexham), Du. wigchelen, wichelen, to divine, practise augury; whence OF. guiler. A primary form occurs in AS. wig, a sanctuary, allied to Goth. weihs, holy. Cf. L. uictima. Der. wil-y, ME. wili, wely, Cursor Mundi, 11807; wil-i-ness. Doublet, guile; whence be-guile. ¶ Note the spelling wyhyll in the Play of Mary Magdalen, l. 377 (15th c.).

WILFUL, obstinate, self-willed. (E.) ME. wilful, Life of Beket, ed. Black, l. 1309 (Stratmann). Formed with suffix -ful (=full) from AS. will, will; see Will (2). Der. wilful-ly, ME. wilfulliche, in the sense 'willingly,' O. Eng. Homilies, i. 279, l. 8; wilful-ness, ME. wilfulnesse, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 73.

WILL (1), to desire, be willing. (E.) ME. willen, infin.; pres. t. wol, Chaucer, C. T. 42; pt. t. wolde (whence mod. E. would), id. 257. AS. willan, wyllan, Grein, ii. 708. Pres. sing. 1 and 3 p. wile, wyle (whence ME. wul, wol), wille, wylle; 2 p. wilt; pl. willað, wyllað; pt. t. wolde, 2 p. woldest, pl. woldan, woldon, or woldun. + Du. willen; Icel. vilja, pt. t. vilda; Dan. ville; Swed. vilja; G. wollen, pr. t. will, pt. t. wollte; Goth. wiljan, pt. t. wilda. Teut. type **weljan-*. + Lithuan. weliti; L. uelle, pr. t. uolo, pt. t. uolui; Skt. vr, to choose, select, prefer. β. All from √WEL, to choose; whence also G. wahl, choice, E. well, adv., will, sb., &c. The Goth. waljan, to choose, is a causal form, from **wol*, 2nd grade of √WEL. Der. will-ing, orig. a pres. part.; will-ing-ly; will-ing-ness. Also will (2), q. v. Also will-y-nill-y, answering either to will I, nill I, i. e. whether I will or whether I nill (will not), or to will he, nill he, i. e. whether he will or whether he nill (will not), as in Hamlet, v. i. 18; we also find will we, nill we, Udall, on 1 St. John, cap. 2; will you, nill you, Tam. Shrew, ii. i. 273; cf. AS. nillan (short for ne willan), not to wish, Grein, ii. 296, cognate with L. nolle (short for ne uelle); and see Hobnob. From the same root are well (1), wil-ful, weal, wild, vol-unt-ar-y, vol-upt-u-ous.

WILL (2), sb., desire, wish. (E.) ME. wille, Wyclif, Luke, ii. 14. AS. willa, will, Grein, ii. 706. — AS. willan, verb, to wish; see Will (1). + Du. wil; Icel. vili; Dan. vilje; Swed. vilja; G. wille; Goth. wilja. Teut. type **weljan-*, m. + Russ. volia. Cf. L. voluntās. Der. wil-ful, q. v.

WILLOW, a tree, with pliant branches. (E.) ME. wilow, wilwe, Chaucer, C. T. 2924. AS. welig; 'Salix, welig;' Voc. 269. 36. + Du. wilg; MDu. wilge (Hexham); Low G. wilge (another Low G. name is wichel); MHG. wilge; OLow G. wilgia. β. The Low G. wichel is clearly allied to E. wicker and to AS. wican, to give way, bend; the tree being named from the pliancy of its boughs. Perhaps the name willow has a similar origin, as prov. E. willy not only means a willow, but also a wicker-basket, like the weele or fish-basket of which an illustration is given in Guillim, Display of Heraldry (1664), p. 316. The AS. wel-ig may be from the √WEL, to turn, wind, roll, appearing in G. welle, a wave (lit. that which rolls), and in Gk. ἐλ-ίσσειν, as the willow-twigs can be wound to form baskets; cf. Gk. ἐλ-ένη, a wicker-basket. It may therefore have meant 'pliant.' See Helix. γ. A much commoner name for the tree in AS. is widig, mod. E. withy, with a like sense. See Withy. And cf. Wicker.

WIMBERRY, the same as Winberry, q. v.

WIMBLE (1), a gimlet, an instrument for boring holes. (E.?) ME. wimbil, spelt wymbyl in the Prompt. Parv., where we also find the verb wymbelyn, or wymmelyn, to bore. 'A Frenssh wymble,' Palladius, xi. 85; spelt wymbul, Nominale, ed. Skeat, 517. Of E. or Low G. origin; cf. MDu. wemelen, 'to pearce with a wimble,' from weme, 'a wimble,' Hexham; Low G. wemel, wemmel, a wimble, whence wemelen, to bore (Lübben). Also Dan. vimmel, an augur, tool for boring; borrowed from Low G. Apparently from a Teut. base **wem-*, to turn; see Wimble (2). Cf. Shropsh. wim-wam, a turn-stile. Der. gimlet.

WIMBLE (2), active, nimble. (Scand.) 'He was so wimble and so wight;' Spenser, Shep. Kal. March, 91. Cf. North E. wheamow, nimble (Ray). The true sense is full of motion, skipping about. Spenser perhaps picked up the word in the North of England. The b (as often after m) is excrement, and due to stress. — Swed. vimmel, in comp. vimmelkantig, giddy, whimsical; Swed. dial. vimmla, to be giddy or skittish; cf. Swed. dial. vimmra, the same, whence vimmrig, skittish, said of horses. The verbs vimmla, vimmra, are frequentatives of Swed. dial. vima, to be giddy, allied to Icel. vim, giddiness, from **wim*, by-form of **whim*; see Whim. So also Dan. vimse, to skip about, vims, brisk, quick. + Du. wemelen, to move about, or 'to remove often,' Hexham; a frequentative verb from a Teut. base **wem-*, perhaps meaning to turn. See Wimble (1). Cf. MG. wimmen, to stir oneself quickly (Schade).

WIMPLE, a covering for the neck. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 22; hence wimpled, id. i. 1. 4; Shak. L. L. L. iii. 181. ME. wimpel, Chaucer, C. T. 151; Rob. of Glouc. p. 338, l. 6941; hence ywimpled, Chaucer, C. T. 472 (A 470). AS. winpel, the same. 'Ricinum, winpel, vel orl,' Voc. 107. 37; 'Anabola, winpel,' id. 125. 8. + Du. winpel, a streamer, a pendant; Icel. vimpill; Dan. and Swed. vimpel, a pennon, pendant, streamer; G. wimpel, a pennon (whence F. guimpe, E. gimp). β. The AS. win-pel was doubtless a compound; prob. for **wind-pel*, where **wind-* is from windan, to wind; and perhaps -pel is for AS. pell, pæll (Latin pallium), a covering. Cf. OHG. wim-pal, a summer garment, head-dress, pennon. And see Gimp.

WIN, to gain by labour or contest, earn, obtain. (E.) The orig. sense was to fight, struggle; hence to struggle for, gain by struggling. ME. winnen, pt. t. wan, won, Chaucer, C. T. 444 (A 442); pp. wonnen, id. 879 (A 877). AS. winnan, to fight, labour, endure, suffer; pt. t. wann, pp. wunnen, Grein, ii. 715. + Du. winnen, pt. t. won, pp. gewonnen; Icel. vinna, pt. t. vann, pp. unninn, to work, toil, win; Dan. vinde (for vinne); Swed. vinna; G. gewinnen, OHG. winnan, to fight, strive, earn, suffer; Goth. winnan, pt. t. wann, pp. wunnans, to suffer. β. All from Teut. type **wennan-* (pt. t. **wann*), to work, suffer, strive. — √WEN, to desire, hence to strive for; whence Skt. van, to ask, beg for, also to honour, L. Ven-us, desire, love, uen-er-ārī, to honour; W. gwên, a smile. Der. winn-er, winn-ing; also win-some, q.v. From the same root are wean, ween, won-t, wi-sh; also ven-er-e-al, ven-er-ate.

WINBERRY, WIMBERRY, a whortleberry. (E.) Whortleberries are called, in some parts, wimberries or wimberries. The latter form, in Halliwell, is the more correct. ME. winberis, grapes, Cursor Mundi, 4468. AS. win-berie, win-berige, a grape; lit. a wineberry, Matt. vii. 16; Luke, vi. 44. See Wine and Berry.

WINCE, WINCH, to shrink or start back. (F.—MHG.) ME. wincen, winsen, winchen. 'It is the wone of wil to wynse and to kyke' = it is the wont of Will (wilfulness) to wince and to kick, P. Plowman, C. v. 22. 'Wyncyn, Calcitro;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt wynche, Allit. Morte Arthure, 2104.—OF. **wencir*, not found, but necessarily, the older form of OF. guincir (Godefroy); (note AF. guincer, Toynbee, x. 96, to escape); North F. variant of OF. guenchir, to flinch, wince (Godefroy), MF. guinchir, 'to wrigle, writhe, winche a toe-side' [i.e. on the one side, aside]; Cot. Roquefort gives guincher, guinchir, to wince; also guencher, guenchir, guencir, the same; Burguy gives ganchir, guenchir, guencir.—OSax. wenkian; cf. MHG. wenken, wenchen, to wince, start aside; cf. also wanken, OHG. wankōn, weak verb, the same. Teut. type **wankjan-*, a causal form.—Teut. **wank*, 2nd grade of **wenkan-*, as in MHG. winken, to move aside, to nod, the same as G. winken, to nod; cognate with E. Wink, q.v. Wince is, in fact, merely the causal verb formed from wink. Cf. G. wanken, to totter, waver, stir, budge, flinch, shrink back.

WINCH, the crank of a wheel or axle. (E.) ME. winche; spelt wynche, Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. l. 426. [Cf. prov. E. wink, a periwinkle, also a winch; Halliwell. E. Cornwall wink, 'the wheel by which straw-rope is made'; E. D.S.] AS. wince. 'Gigrillus, wince,' Voc. 416. 6; here Gigrillus is an error for girgillus, a winch; see Ducange. The connexion with winkle is obvious (see Winkle); and both winch and winkle are derivatives from Teut. base WENK, to bend sideways, nod, totter, &c.; see further under Wink. A winch was simply 'a bend,' hence a bent handle; cf. AS. wincel, a corner (Somner); MHG. wenke, a bending or crooking; Lithuan. winge, a bend or turn of a river or road. And cf. Norman dial. vinche, 'guindeau'; Le Héricher. And see Winkle, Wench.

WIND (1), air in motion, breath. (E.) ME. wind, wynd, Wyclif, Matt. xiv. 24. AS. wind, Grein, ii. 712.—Du. wind; Icel. vindr; Dan. and Swed. vind; G. wind, OHG. wint; Goth. winds, winths. β. All from the Teut. type **wendōz*, m., wind. Cognate with L. uentus, W. gwynt, Breton gwent, wind. Orig. a pres. part., Idg. **wēnto-*, signifying 'blowing.' From √AWĒ, to blow. Hence also Skt. vā, to blow, vāta-s, wind, Goth. waian, to blow; Russ. viēat(e), to blow, viēter, wind, Lithuan. vėjās, wind; as well as L. uentus and E. wind. See Brugmann, i. § 420. And see Weather. Der. wind, to blow a horn, pp. winded, Much Ado, i. 1. 243, oddly corrupted to wound (by confusion with the strong verb to wind), Scott, Lady of the Lake, i. 17. 1; &c.; wind-age, a coined word; wind-bound, Milton, Hist. of Britain, b. ii, ed. 1695, p. 44; wind-fall, that which falls from trees, &c., being blown down by the wind, hence, a piece of good fortune that costs nothing, Beaum. and Fletcher, The Captain, ii. 1 (Fabritio), also used in a bad sense (like downfall), Bacon, Essay 29, Of Kingdoms; wind-mill, ME. wind-mulle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 547, l. 11383; wind-pipe, spelt wyndpype in Palsgrave; wind-row, a row of cut grass exposed to the wind, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xviii. c. 28; wind-ward; wind-y, AS. windig, Grein, ii. 713; wind-i-ness. And see wind-ow, winn-ow, vent-il-ate.

WIND (2), to turn round, coil, encircle, twist round. (E.) ME. winden, pt. t. wand; wond, pl. wonden, P. Plowman, B. ii. 220, pp. wunden, spelt wunden, Havelok, 546. AS. windan, pt. t. wand, wond, pp. wunden; Grein, ii. 713.—Du. winden; Icel. vinda, pt. t. vatt (for vand), pp. undinn; Dan. vinde, Swed. vinda, to squint; G. winden, pt. t. wand, pp. gewunden; OHG. wintan; Goth. -windan, only in compounds such as biwindan, dugawindan, uswindan; pt. t. -wand; pp. -wundans. β. All from Teut. type **wendan-* (pt. t. **wand*, pp. **wundanoz*), to wind or bind round, hence to turn. Perhaps ultimately allied to √WEI, to twine; see Withy. Streitberg, §§ 68, 203, note 2. Der. wind-ing, sb.; also wind-lass, q.v.; wend, q.v.; wand-er, q.v.; wond-er, q.v.; wand, q.v.

WINDLASS (1), a machine with an axle, for raising heavy weights. (Scand.) The spelling windlass is a by-form, encouraged by popular etymology (as if the word were from wind, verb, and lace), of the shorter word below. ME. windelas, windlas, Prompt. Parv., p. 529.—Icel. vindil-áss, a windlass (still in use, see Notes on E. Etym., p. 321).—Icel. vindill, a winder; and áss, a beam. β. But the commoner ME. form was windas, Chaucer, C. T. 10498 (F 184); Rich. Cœur de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 103. 'Wyndace for an engyn, guyndas,' Palsgrave.—Icel. vindáss, a windlass; lit. a winding-pole, i.e. a rounded pole (like an axis) which can be wound round.—Icel. vind-a, to wind; and áss, a pole, main rafter, yard of a sail, &c. γ. Here vinda is cognate with E. wind; see Wind (2). The Icel. áss is cognate with Goth. ans, a beam, Luke, vi. 41 (the long ā showing a loss of n). The root of áss is not known; it has nothing to do with axis or axle, as some suggest.—Du. windas, a windlass; MDu. windaes, 'a windlass or an engine,' Hexham; where aes (Icel. áss, a beam) is distinct from MDu. asse (mod. Du. as), an axis.

WINDLASS (2), a circuit, circuitous way. (F.—Teut.?) Shak. has windlasses, Hamlet, ii. 1. 65. 'Bidding them fetch a windlasse a great way about;' Golding, tr. of Cæsar, fol. 206 (R.). 'And fetched a windlasse round about;' Golding, tr. of Ovid (see Wright's note on Hamlet). 'I now fetching a windlesse,' Lyly, Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 270. Apparently compounded of wind (verb) and lace; but it was prob. a popular alteration of ME. wanlace, a trick, subtlety, artifice. Golding has the form winlas, for L. gyrum, Ovid, Metam. vii. 784. Wanlace is used by Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 4378, 12010.—OF. wanelace, perfidy, deceit (Godefroy); also spelt wenelat (id.). Hence the ME. wanelasour, wandlessour, one who drives game (Stratmann). Prob. a hunting term, of Teut. origin. See Gloss. to Toynbee's Specimens of Old French. Perhaps allied to MHG. wandelāt, change, alteration, OHG. wantalōn, G. ver-wandeln, to change, OHG. wanta, a turning, a small (green) path; all connected with Wind, verb, and Wander.

WINDOW, an opening for light and air. (Scand.) The orig. sense is 'wind-eye,' i.e. eye or hole for the wind to enter at, an opening for air and light. [The AS. word was ēgþyrl (=eye-thrill), Joshua, ii. 15; also ēagdura (=eye-door), according to Bosworth.] ME. window, Cursor Mundi, 1683; windoge, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 602; windohe, Ancrén Riwe, p. 50, note a; windowe, P. Plowman, B. iii. 48; Wyclif, Acts, xx. 9.—Icel. vindauga, a window; lit. 'wind-eye.'—Icel. vindr, wind; and auga, an eye, cognate with AS. ēage, an eye; Dan. vindue, a window; (cf. vind, wind, and ōie, an eye); but Dan. vindue is from a Low G. **wind-ooge* (wind-eye). See Wind (1) and Eye. ¶ Butler has windore, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 214, as if from wind and door; but this is nothing but a corruption.

WINE, the fermented juice of the vine. (L.) ME. win (with long i), Chaucer, C. T. 637 (A 635). AS. win, Grein, ii. 712.—L. vinum, wine (whence also Goth. wein, G. wein, OHG. win, Du. wijn, Icel. vin, Swed. vin, Dan. viin).—Gk. oīvos, wine, allied to oīvη, the vine.—√WEI, to twine; see Withy. β. 'The Northern names, Goth. wein, G. win, &c. are undoubtedly to be regarded (with Jac. Grimm, Gramm. iii. 466) as borrowed; so also OIrish fīn, wine, &c. Pott very appropriately compares the Lith. apwynys, hop-tendrill, pl. apwynei, hops. The Skt. vēni-, a braid of hair, also belongs here. We cannot see why the fruit of the twining plant should not itself have been called originally 'twiner.' The Lith. word offers the most striking analogy. The fact is, therefore, that the Indo-Germans had indeed a common root for the idea of winding, twining, and hence derived the names of various twining plants, but that it is only among the Græco-Italians that we find a common name for the grape and its juice,' Curtius, i. 487. See Brugmann, i. § 204, ii. § 66. ¶ Not of Semitic origin; rather, the Heb. yayin, wine, Arab. waynat, black grape, are borrowed from the Idg. type **woino-*. The early L. vinum meant 'vine.' Der. wine-bibber, Matt. xi. 19; see Bib.

WING, the limb by which a bird flies, any side-piece, flank. (Scand.) ME. winge (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1966 (A 1964); the pl. appears as hwingen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 130, last line, Layamon, 29263; we also find wenge, whenge (dat. case), P. Plowman, B. xii. 263; 'wenge of a fowle, Ala,' Prompt. Parv.; pl. wenges, Ormulum, 8024. It is clear that the form wenge is Scand.; and, as there does not seem to be any authority for an alleged AS. winge, it is simplest to suppose winge to result from wenge. [The AS. word for 'wing' is feðer.]—Norw. vengja (for ON. **wengja*); Icel. vængr, a wing; Dan. and Swed. vinge; North Fries. winge. Teut. type wāngi-, allied to Goth. waian, to blow (cf. Du. waaijer, a fan); Skt. vā, to blow, vājīn-, winged (Macdonell); from √WE, to blow. Der. wing, verb, to fly, Cymb. iii. 3. 28; wing-ed, Chaucer, C. T. 1387 (A 1385); wing-less.

WINK, to move the eyelids quickly. (E.) 1. ME. winken, pt. t. winked, P. Plowman, B. iv. 154. AS. wincian, to wink. 'Conniveo, ic wincige,' Voc. 140. 17. 2. But winken also occurs as a strong verb, pt. t. wank, Ancient Met. Tales, ed. Hartshorne, p. 79 (Stratmann); also wonk, Lancelot of the Laik, ed. Skeat, l. 1058; and we may certainly conclude that there was also a strong verb, viz. AS. **wincan*, with pt. t. **wanc*, pp. **wuncen*. This is verified by AS. wancol, wavering, and E. wench, q.v.; as well as by the cognate forms.—MDu. wincen (Hexham); also wencken, 'to winke, or to give a signe or token with the eyes'; id. Allied to MDu. wanck, 'a moment, an instant,' id. (lit. the twinkling of an eye); wanckel, unsteady; Icel. vanka, to wink, to rove; Dan. vinke, to beckon; cf. vanke, to rove, stroll; Swed. vinke, to beckon, wink; cf. vanka, to rove, vankelmodig, fickle-minded; G. winken, to nod, make a sign; OHG. winkan; strong vb., to move aside, stir, waver (see Schade). β. Teut. type **wenkan-*, pt. t. **wank*, pp. **wunkanoz*. Further allied to Lithuan. wengti, to shirk work, to flinch, wingis, a bend of a river, wangus, idle. Der. wink, sb., Temp. ii. 1. 285. Also (from the same root) wench, wince, winch, winkle, peri-winkle (the sea-snail). Cf. vacillate.

WINKLE, a kind of sea-snail. (E.) Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. ix. c. 32, uses winkles to denote shell-fish and also snails. AS. -wincla, occurring in wine-wincla, a winkle; see A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 240; misprinted pinewincla, as a gloss to torniculi in Ælfric's Colloquy; Voc. 94. 14. Named from the convoluted shell; allied to Winch, q. v., and to Wink. Der. periwinkle (2), q. v.

WINNOW, to fan grain, so as to separate the chaff from it. (E.) Winnow stands for window, if we may so write it; nn being put for nd (but without reference to the sb. window). ME. windewen, Wyclif, Jer. xlix. 36, to translate L. uentilāre; some MSS. have wynnewen, showing that the d was being lost just at this time. AS. windwian, less correctly wyndwian, Ps. xliii. 7, ed. Spelman; to translate L. uentilāre. — AS. wind, wind; with formative suffix -w-. See Wind. Cf. Goth. winthi-skaurō, a winnowing-fan; diswintjan, to disperse, grind to powder; from **winths*, collateral form of winds, wind. So also OHG. wintōn, to winnow, from wint, wind; Icel. vinza, to winnow, from vindr, wind; L. uentilāre from uentus; see Ventilate. Der. winnow-er, winnow-ing-fan.

WINSOME, pleasant, lovely. (E.) ME. winsom, with the sense 'propitious,' Northumb. Psalter, Ps. lxxviii. 9; also 'pleasant,' id. Ps. lxxx. 3. AS. wynsum, delightful, Grein, ii. 759; formed with suffix -sum (E. -some) from wynn, joy, id. ii. 757. Wynn is formed (by vowel-change from u to y), from wunn-, weak grade of winnan, to desire, win; see Win. Cf. OSax. wunnia, G. wonne, joy (from winnen); Icel. unadr, joy, unadsamr, winsome; Skt. vani-, desire.

WINTER, the cold season, fourth season of the year. (E.) ME. winter, orig. unchanged in the plural; 'a thousand winter' = a thousand winters, i.e. years; Chaucer, C. T. 7233 (D 1651). AS. winter, a winter, also a year; pl. winter, or wintru. + Du. winter; Icel. vettr; Olcel. vettr, vittr, assimilated form of vintr; Dan. and Swed. winter; G. winter, OHG. wintar; Goth. wintrus. β. All from Teut. type **wintruz*, for older **wentruz*, winter, Fick, iii. 284; where -ru- is evidently a suffix. Origin doubtful, but the suggestion in Fick is a good one, viz. that it meant 'wet season,' and is a nasalised form allied to E. wet. This is made more probable by the fact that we find nasalised forms of this root in L. unda, a wave, Lithuan. wandū, water, Skt. und, to wet, moisten; whilst, on the other hand, we find E. water with a similar suffix, but without the nasal sound. See Wet, Water. Der. winter, verb, to pass the winter; wintr-y (for winter-y); winter-ly, Cymb. iii. 4. 13; winter-quarters.

WIPE, verb, to cleanse by rubbing, to rub. (E.) ME. wipen, Chaucer, C. T. 133. AS. wīpian, to wipe; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 426, l. 30; 'Tergo, ic wīpige,' Ælfric's Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 172, l. 8. This is a weak verb, meaning to rub over with a wisp, or to use a wisp of straw; formed, with the usual casual suffix -ian, from a sb. **wīp*, a wisp of straw, which does not occur in AS. But it is preserved in EFries. wīp, Pomeranian wīp, Hamburg wype, a twist or wisp of straw, and in Low G. wiep, a wisp of straw, or a rag to wipe anything with, Bremen Wörterbuch, v. 269; and the common E. wisp is related to it. Cf. Goth. waip-s, a wreath, from the strong verb weipan, to crown (orig. to twine); cf. OHG. wīfan, to wind round. See Wisp. Der. wipe, sb., sometimes in the sense of sarcasm or taunt, Shak. Lucrece, 537; wip-er.

WIRE, a thread of metal. (E.) ME. wir, wyr (with long i); dat. wyre, P. Plowman, B. ii. 11. AS. wīr, a wire, Grein, ii. 717. + Low G. (Hamburg) wyren, pl., wires; Icel. virr, wire; cf. Swed. vira, to wind, twist. Cf. OHG. wiara, MHG. wiere, an ornament of refined gold. Orig. a thread of metal, properly a 'twisted' thread or an ornament of twisted metal-wire; cf. Icel. viravirki, filagree-work, lit. 'wire-work'; L. uiria, armlets of metal. Formed with suffix -ro- from **wēi*, to twist, twine; see Withy. Der. wire-draw, verb, to draw into wire; wire-drawing; wire-work; wir-y. And see ferrule.

WIS; for this fictitious verb, see Ywis.

WISE (1), having knowledge, discreet, learned. (E.) ME. wis (with long i), wys, Chaucer, C. T. 68. AS. wīs, wise; Grein, ii. 718. + Du. wijs; Icel. viss; Dan. viis; Swed. vis; G. weise, OHG. wīs; Goth. -weis, in comp. unweis, unwise. β. All from Teut. type **wisoz*; for **wītsoz*; from Teut. base **wīt-*, answering to Idg. **weid-*, to know; see Wit (1). Thus wise = 'knowing'; cf. unning, adj.; Brugmann, i. §§ 759, 794. ¶ Otherwise explained as for **wisoz* < **wītsoz*; formed from **wit-*, Idg. **wid-*, weak grade of **weid* (as above). Der. wise-ly; wis-dom, AS. wisdōm, Grein, ii. 719 (where dōm = E. doom, i.e. judgement); wiseman (one word), As You Like It, i. 2. 93, &c.; wise-ness, Hamlet, v. i. 286. Also wise (2). (But not wiseacre, q. v.)

WISE (2), way, manner, guise. (E.) ME. wise (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 1448 (A 1446). AS. wise, Grein, ii. 719. + Du. wijs; Icel. -vīs, in the comp. öðruvīs, otherwise; Dan. viis; Swed. vis; G. weise; OHG. wīsa (whence, through French, E. guise). β. All from Teut. type **wīsōn-*, f. Allied to AS. wīsan, to show the way, direct, orig. 'to make wise,' to instruct; from wīs, adj. wise. See Wise (1). Cf. L. uīsus, sb., appearance. Der. like-wise, otherwise. Doublet, guise.

WISEACRE, a wise fellow (ironically), a fool. (Du. — G.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. — MDu. wijs-segger, as if 'a wise-sayer,' whence wijs-seggen (Hexham), a verb wrongly used as if equivalent to the more usual MDu. waerseggen, 'to sooth-say,' id., whence waersegger, 'a diviner, or a soothsayer,' id. (from MDu. waer, true). But the MDu. word is merely borrowed from G. weissager, a soothsayer, as if it meant 'a wise-sayer;' cf. weissagen, to foretell, prophesy, soothsay. β. Not only is the E. form a travesty of the G. word, but the latter has itself suffered from the manipulation of popular etymology, and is a corrupt form, having originally nothing to do with the verb to say, nor even precisely containing the word wise. This appears from the older forms; the G. weissagen is the MHG. wizagōn, to prophesy, corrupted to wizsagen, wissagen, by confusion with sagen, to say. This MHG. verb was unoriginal, being formed from the sb. wizago, a prophet, which was itself afterwards corrupted into weissager. γ. Now wiz-ag-o is exactly parallel to AS. wit-eg-a or wit-ig-a, a prophet (Grein, ii. 726); both words are formed (with adj. suffix -ag (-ig) and sb. suffix -o (-a), denoting the agent) from the verb which appears as OHG. wizan, AS. witan, to see; from **weid-*, to know; see Wit. δ. It follows that the s is for G. z, the equivalent of E. t; whilst the unmeaning suffix -acre is no worse than the corrupt G. suffix -sager. Moreover, the sense 'wise-sayer' is merely an erroneous popular interpretation; the true sense is simply seer (= see-er).

WISH, to have a desire, be inclined. (E.) ME. wisshen, wischen; P. Plowman, B. v. 111. AS. wyscan, to wish; Grein, ii. 766; less correctly wiscan, id. The long y shows a loss of n, and wyscan represents Teut. type **wunskjan-*, to wish; a verb formed from the Teut. sb. **wunsko-*, a wish. Cf. Du. wenschen; Icel. æskja, with the usual loss of initial v, and written for æskja; Dan. önske; Swed. önska; G. wünschen; OHG. wunscan. β. The AS. sb. is wūsc, a wish, very rare, in Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. v. c. 19, ed. Smith, p. 638, l. 40, where it is misprinted wūsc; whence wyscan, vb., with the usual change from ū to y. Cognate words to the sb. are found in MDu. wunsch (Hexham); Icel. ösk; G. wunsch; OHG. wunsc; the Teut. types being **wunskoz*, m., **wunskā*, f. All from Teut. **wunsk-*, weak grade of **wen-sk-*, formed with verbal suffix -sk- (L. -scō) from **wen-*, to desire, strive after, appearing in Skt. van, to ask, and in E. win; see Win. Cf. Skt. vāñchh, to desire, wish, from van, to ask. Der. wish, sb., merely from the verb, and not the same as the more orig. ME. wusch, Prompt. Parv. p. 535, which answers to AS. wūsc, as above. Also wish-er, well-wish-er; well-wish-ed, Meas. for Meas. ii. 4. 27; wish-ful, i.e. longing, 3 Hen. VI. iii. 1. 14; wish-ful-ly, wish-ful-ness. And see wist-ful.

WISP, a small bundle of straw or hay. (E.) ME. wisp, wips; spelt wispe, wips, P. Plowman, B. v. 351; wysp, wesp, wips, id. A. v. 195; the Vernon MS. has 'Iwipet with a wesp' = wiped with a wisp. As in other cases where sp and ps are interchanged, the spelling with ps is the older; cf. hasp, clasp, &c. The AS. form would be **wips*, but it does not occur; and the final s is formative, wip-s being closely connected with the verb to wipe. We find also Low G. wiep, a wisp; Norweg. wippa, a wisp to sprinkle or daub with (also a swape, or machine for raising water); Swed. dial. wipp, an ear of rye, also a little sheaf or bundle; Goth. waips, a crown, orig. a twisted wreath (where -s is merely the suffix of the Goth. nom. case). β. Thus the Teut. base is **wip-*, weak grade of **weipan-*, as seen in Goth. weipan, to crown, to wreath, OHG. wīfan, to wind round (hence, to twist). See Wipe. It has probably been confused with whisk, as in Dan. visk, a wisp, a rubber; but the two words are from different roots; see Whisk. Cf. MSwed. wisp, a wisp; mod. Swed. wisp, a whisk, a twirling-stick.

WIST, knew, or known; see Wit (1).

WISTFUL, eager, earnest, attentive, pensive. (E.) The word appears to be not very old, and it has almost supplanted the word wishful, which was once common. The orig. sense seems to have been 'silent' or 'hushed,' as in 'the sweet dale and the wistfull hill,' W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii. song 2. 544 (see Cent. Dict.). If so, it stands for whist-ful, from whist, silent, hushed; see

Whist. It would naturally be associated with the adv. wistly, attentively, earnestly, used 4 times by Shakespeare, which may likewise have arisen from whist, silent. The quartos read wishtly (whistly?) for wistly in Rich. II, v. 4. 7; see also Venus and Adonis, 343, Lucrece, 1355, Pass. Pilgrim, 82. β. As regards wishful, &c., we find wishful in 3 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 14; 'There be certain Women that can kill with their eye-sight whom they look wishfully upon;' Ady, Discovery of Witches (1661), p. 97. 'O. Hoard. I long to have a smack at her lips. Hoard. And most wishfully, brother, see where she comes;' Middleton, Trick to Catch the Old One, A. v. sc. 2. 'I sat looking wishfully at the clock,' Idler, no. 67 (R.); 'We looked at the fruit very wishfully,' Cook, First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7; 'I was weary of this day, and began to think wishfully of being again in motion,' Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides, p. 98 (Todd); 'I looked at them wishfully,' Boswell, Life of Johnson, Sept. 1, 1773. γ. Examples of wistful occur in: 'Lifting up one of my sashes, [I] cast many a wistful melancholy look towards the sea,' Swift, Gulliver, bk. ii. ch. 8; 'Why, Grubbinol, dost thou so wistful seem? There's sorrow in thy look,' Gay, Pastorals, Friday, l. 1. δ. Note that wishly (= wishfully) occurs in the Mirror for Magistrates, p. 863 (Todd). Also, that Sir T. More seems to use wishely nearly in the sense of ME. wisly, certainly, which suggests a possibility that wis(t)ly arose from that form: 'To putte on his spectacles, and pore better and more wishely with his olde eyen vpon Saynt Iohns ghospell;' Sir T. More, Workes, p. 1134 (R.). Der. wistful-ly.

WIT (1), to know. (E.) This verb is ill understood and has suffered much at the hands of grammarians and compilers of dictionaries. Wit is the infin. mood; to wit (as in 'we do you to wit') is the gerund; wot is the 1st and 3 pers. of the present indicative, the 3rd person being often corruptly written wotteth; wost (later form wottest) is the 2nd pers. sing. of the same tense; wiste, later wist, is the pt. t.; and wist is the pp. [The adv. ywis or lwis, certainly, was often misunderstood, and a verb wis, to know, was evolved, which is wholly unsanctioned by grammar; see Ywis.] ME. witan, infin.; pres. t. wot, wost, pt. witen; pt. t. wiste, pp. wist; see Chaucer, C. T. 1142, 1158, 1165, 8690, 9614 (A 1140, 1156, 1163, E 814, 1740), &c. [There was also ME. witan, to see (with long i); see Stratmann, who puts wot under this latter verb, as if I have seen = I know. It makes little difference, since AS. witan, to know, and witan, to see, are closely connected; I follow the arrangement in Grein.] AS. witan, to know; pres. t. ic wāt, þū wāst, hē wāt, pl. witon; subj. sing. wite, pl. witon; pt. t. wiste (sometimes wisse), 2 p. wisses, pl. wiston; pp. wist; Grein, ii. 722. Allied to AS. witan, to see; pt. t. wāt, pl. witon; id. ii. 724. It is clear that ic wāt is really an old past tense (of witan) used as a present; causing the necessity of creating a new past tense wisse or wiste, which is, however, of great antiquity. Similar anomalous verbs are found in E., viz. can, may, shall, &c. The gerund is tō witanne, whence mod. E. to wit. The form weet, in Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 6, is nothing but a corruption of wit. +Du. weten, pt. t. wist, pp. geweten; Icel. vita, pr. t. veit, pt. t. vissa, pp. vitaðr; Dan. vide, pr. t. veed, pt. t. vidste, pp. vidst; Swed. veta, pr. t. vet, pt. t. visste, pp. veten; G. wissen, pr. t. weiss, pt. t. wusste, pp. gewusst; Goth. witan, pr. t. wait, pt. t. wissa. β. All from Teut. type **witan-*, to know, pr. t. **wait*, the base being **weit-*, orig. 'to see.' Further allied to Lithuan. weizdėti, to see, Russ. vidiet(e), to see, L. uidēre, to see, Gk. idēiv, to see, oida, I know, Skt. veda, I know, orig. I have seen (= E. wot), Skt. vid, to perceive, know, orig. to see. -✓WEID, to see, perceive, know. Der. wit (2), q.v., wit-ness, q.v., t-wit (for at-wit); witt-ing-ly, knowingly, Haml. v. 1. 11. Also, from the same root, wise, guise; vis-ion, vis-ible, &c. (see VISION); id-ea, id-ol, and the suffix -id in rhombo-id, &c.; ved-a. And see wiseacre, wizard.

WIT (2), understanding, knowledge, the power of combining ideas with a happy or ludicrous effect. (E.) ME. wit, Chaucer, C. T. 748 (A 746). AS. witt, knowledge, Grein, ii. 722. -AS. witan, to know; see Wit (1). +Icel. vit; Dan. vid; Swed. vett; Goth. -witi, in comp. un-witi, n., lack of wisdom; allied to G. witz. Teut. type **witjom*, n. Der. wit-less, wit-less-ly, wit-less-ness; wit-l-ing, a pretender to wit, with double dimin. suffix -l-ing; witt-ed, as in blunt-witted, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 210; witt-y, AS. wittig or wittig, Grein, ii. 726; witt-i-ly, witt-i-ness. Also witt-i-c-ism, used by Dryden in his pref. to the State of Innocence, with the remark that he asks 'pardon for a new word' (R.); evidently put for witty-ism, the c being introduced to avoid the hiatus, and being suggested by Galli-cism, &c.

WIT (3), a wise man, witty fellow. (E.) ME. wite; AS. wita, lit. 'one who knows.' -AS. witan, to know. Der. witena gemōt, a meeting of 'wits,' a parliament.

WITCH, a woman regarded as having magical power. (E.) Formerly used also of a man, Comedy of Errors, iv. 4. 160, Antony,

i. 2. 40; but this is unusual. ME. wicche, applied to a man, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 69; also to a woman, Sir Percival, l. 826 (in the Thornton Romances). AS. wicca, masc. a wizard; wicce, fem. a witch. 'Ariolus, wicca,' Voc. 183. 31. 'Phytonyssa, wyccē,' Voc. 313. 5. The pl. wiccan, occurring in the Laws of Edward and Guthrum, § 11, and Laws of Cnut, Secular, § 4 (Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 172, 378), may refer to either gender. β. Wicce is merely the fem. of wicca; and wicca is a sb., denoting the agent, allied to wiccian, to practise sorcery, EFries. wikken. +MDu. wicker, 'a sooth-sayer,' Hexham; Low G. wikken, to predict (see wicken, to practise sorcery, in Schade). Cf. Norw. wikja (1) to turn aside, (2) to conjure away, exorcise. This links it with Icel. wikja (pp. wik-inn), to move, turn, push aside; Dan. vige, as in vige bort, Satan! 'get thee behind me, Satan!' Cf. AS. wican, to give way; whence E. weak. Perhaps wiccian meant 'to avert,' and wicca, 'an averter.' B. Also explained as a variant of AS. witga, shortened form of witega, a wise man, a prophet, a soothsayer; cf. Icel. witki, a wizard, allied to vita, to know. For AS. witega, see Wiseacre. Der. witchcraft, AS. wiccecraft, Levit. xx. 27, from wicce, a witch, and craft craft, art. Also witch, verb, AS. wiccian, Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 274, sect. 39; hence witch-er-y, a coined word, Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1. l. 412. Also be-witch, q.v.

WITCH-ELM, WYCH-ELM, a kind of elm. (E.) Spelt weech-elm, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 475. There is also a witch-hazel. ME. wyche, wiche; 'Wyche, tre, Ulmus,' Prompt. Parv. AS. wice, occurring in a list of trees. 'Virecta, wice; Cariscus, wice,' Voc. 269. 16, 19. The sense is 'drooping' or 'bending'; and it is derived from AS. wic-, weak grade of wican, to bend; see Wicker. The t in the word is superfluous, and due to confusion with the word witch above. 'Some varieties of the wych-elm have the branches quite pendulous, like the weeping-willow, thus producing a most graceful effect;' Our Woodlands, by W. S. Coleman.

WITH, by, near, among. (E.) ME. with, Chaucer, C. T. 1. AS. wið, governing gen., dat., and acc.; Grein, ii. 692. It often has the sense of 'against,' which is still preserved in to fight with = to fight against, and in with-say, with-stand. +Icel. við, against, by, at, with; Dan. ved, by, at; Swed. vid, near, at, by. β. From Teut. type **wi-th-*, against, shortened from AS. wi-ðer, against; see WITHERS. ¶ We must observe that with has to a great extent taken the place of AS. and ME. mid, with, which is now obsolete. Der. with-al, with it, with, Temp. iii. 1. 93, ME. withalle, Chaucer, C. T. 14130 (B 3314), compounded of with, prep., and alle, dat. case of al, all, and used in place of AS. mid ealle, with all, wholly, Grein, i. 238, l. 12. Also with-in, ME. with-inne, Wyclif, Matt. ii. 16, AS. wiðinnan, on the inside, Matt. xxiii. 26; with-out, ME. with-uten, with-outen, Chaucer, C. T. 463 (A 461), AS. wiðutan, on the outside of, Matt. xxiii. 25; and note that AS. innan and utan are properly adverbial formations, extended from in and ut respectively. And see with-draw, with-hold, with-say, with-stand; also with-ers.

WITHDRAW, to draw back or away, to recall. (E.) ME. withdrawen, to draw back, take away, Ancrén Riwe, p. 230, last line. Not found in AS. From With and Draw; where with has the old sense of 'towards,' hence towards oneself, and away from another. Der. with-draw-al, with-draw-ment, late and coined words. Also withdrawing-room, a retiring-room, esp. for ladies (see example in Todd's Johnson, and in Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ch. ix.), now unmeaningly shortened to drawing-room!

WITHE, WITH, a flexible twig; see Withy.

WITHER, to fade. (E.) Palsgrave has: 'I wydder, as a floure dothe;' and 'I wydder, I drie up.' ME. widren, not an old form. 'Now grene as leif, now widderit and ago;' Test. of Creseide, l. 238. This ME. widren is nothing but a variant of ME. wederen, to expose to the weather, so that widred = wedered, exposed to weather. 'Wederyn, or leyn or hangyn yn the weder, Auro;' Prompt. Parv. And the verb wederen is from ME. weder, weather; see Weather. For the i, cf. AS. ge-wider, weather, temperature; Icel. haf-viðri, a sea-breeze. Cf. G. ver-wittern, to decay by exposure to the atmosphere; from wetter, weather, storm. ¶ It follows that wither is properly transitive, as in 'Age cannot wither her,' Antony, ii. 2. 240; but the intrans. use is much more common.

WITHERS, the ridge between the shoulder-blades of a horse. (E.) In Hamlet, iii. 2. 253. Skelton has: 'Ware gallyng in the widders;' i. 24. So called because it is the part which the horse opposes to his load, or on which the stress of the collar comes in drawing. Cf. Cleveland withers, the barbs of an arrow-head, which oppose its being drawn backwards (Atkinson). The lit. sense is 'things which resist;' formed from ME. wider, resistance. 'Wider com to-zenes' = resistance (or an adverse wind) came against me; Layamon, 4678. Hence widerful, full of resistance, hostile, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 51, l. 19; wideren, widerien, to resist, id. ii. 123, last line; and see Stratmann. Cf. AS. wider (only in gen. widres), resistance; Beowulf, 2953.—AS. wider, against, Grein, ii. 697; common in composition. Sometimes shortened to wid, against, also used in the sense of 'with'; see With. The AS. wider, also widere, is cognate with Du. weder, Icel. viðr, Dan. and Swed. veder, G. wieder, Goth. withra, signifying against, or again. This very prefix is represented by guer- in Guerdon, q. v. β. The Goth. withra is to be divided as wi-thra, a comparative form; cf. Skt. vi-taram, away, further, from vi, away, apart. Brugmann, ii. § 75. The above etymology is verified by the similar word found in G. widerrist, the withers of a horse, from wider, old spelling of wieder, against, and rist, which not only means wrist or instep, but also an elevated part, the withers of a horse.

WITHHOLD, to hold back, keep back. (E.) ME. withholden, pp. withholdē, Chaucer, C. T. 513 (A 511); and see Ancren Riwle, p. 348, l. 22. From With, in the sense of 'back,' or 'towards' the agent, and Hold. Cf. with-draw.

WITHIN, WITHOUT; see under With.

WITHSAY, to contradict. (E.) ME. withseien, Chaucer, C. T. 807 (A 805); withsiggen, Ancren Riwle, p. 86, l. 7.—AS. wið, against; and seegan, to say; see With and Say.

WITHSTAND, to stand against, resist. (E.) ME. withstonden, Wyclif, Rom. ix. 19. AS. wiðstandan, to resist, Grein, ii. 699.—AS. wið, against; and standan, to stand; see With and Stand.

WITHE, WITHE, a flexible twig, esp. of willow. (E.) Spelt witthes or witths, pl., Judg. xvi. 7. ME. wiði, wiðde, &c.; spelt wythe, witthe, wywith, Prompt. Parv. p. 531; withthe, K. Alisaunder, 4714; wiði, Ancren Riwle, p. 86, l. 15. AS. wiðig, a willow, also a twig of a willow. 'Salix, wiðig,' Voc. 139. 30. Also AS. wiðde, a thong; Voc. 183. 16.—MDu. wiede, 'a twigge, a willowe,' Hexham; Icel. viðja, a withy; við, a with (showing the different forms); viðir, a willow; Dan. viðje, a willow, osier; Swed. vide, a willow, viðja, a willow-twig; G. weide, a willow; OHG. wida. β. All from a Teut. base **with-*, **weith-*, Idg. base **weit-*. We find allied words in Lithuan. žil-wittis, the gray willow (used for basket-work), Gk. iréa (for firéa), a willow, a wicker-shield; also in Russ. uitsa, a withe, Lith. wytis, a withe, W. guden, a withe, L. witis, a vine. The application is to plants that twine or are very flexible; and all these words are from the WEL, to twine, plait, as in Russ. wit(e), to twine, plait, L. ui-ère, L. ui-men, a twig, wi-tis, a vine, wi-num, wine (orig. vine). Brugmann, ii. §§ 685, 789. From the same root we have vetch, wire, ferrule (for virole), wine, vine.

WITNESS, testimony; also, one who testifies. (E.) Properly an abstract sb., like all other sbs. in -ness. ME. witnesse, Ancren Riwle, p. 68, l. 3. AS. witnes, testimony, Luke, ix. 5; also gewitnes, Mark, i. 44. [The use of the word in the sense of 'witnesser' is unoriginal; it occurs in Wyclif, Matt. xxvi. 60; so also ONorthumb. gewitnes, Mark, xiv. 63; and in AS.]—AS. wit-, as in wit-an, to know; with suffix -nes; see Wit (1); thus the orig. sense was 'knowledge' or 'consciousness.' Cf. ME. witnen, to testify, Ancren Riwle, p. 384; for **witen-en*, from witen; pp. of witan, to know; cf. Icel. viðna, Dan. vidne, to testify. Also Goth. weit-wōds, a witness. Der. witness, vb., ME. witnessen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 191.

WITTOL, a cuckold. (E.) In Merry Wives, ii. 1. 3. Not an old word in this sense. It occurs also in Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act v. sc. 1 (Mosca); and in Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of Malta, iii. 2 (Gomera). 'Jannin, a wittall, one that knows and bears with, or winks at, his wife's dishonesty;' Cotgrave. (It does not mean 'know-all.') It has been explained as equivalent to ME. witele, knowing, a rare word, occurring once in Layamon, 18547. And this again has been supposed to represent the AS. witol, adj., wise, sapient; formed with suffix -ol (as in spreo-ol, talkative), from wit-an, to know. In that case, the word would mean wise or knowing; or, ironically, a simpleton, a gull. β. But all this is due to popular etymology; the AS. witol is rare, occurring in the comp. un-wittol, Liber Scintillarum, p. 80, l. 12; fore-witol, A. S. Chron. an. 1067; and is hardly known in ME. Hence Wedgwood's suggestion is worth notice; viz. that a wittol is the bird commonly called in olden times a witwall. Indeed, Bp. Hall uses this very form: 'Fond wit-wal, that wouldst load thy witless head With timely horns, before thy bridal bed;' Satires, i. 7. 17. Florio explains Ital. godano by 'the bird called a witwal or woodwall;' ed. 1598. In a later edition, according to Wedgwood, this appears as: 'Godano, a wittal or woodwale;' and Torriano has 'Wittal, becco contento,' i. e. a cuckold. The corruption from witwall to wittal is easy and natural. γ. An older spelling is wetewold; for which see Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 187; Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 710. With this form compare MDu. weduwael, 'a kinde of a yellow bird,' Hexham; OHG. witewal, a woodwale. δ. Witwall itself is the same word as wodewale, an old name usually given to the green woodpecker, but also to the oriole; in any case, it appears that the witwall (like the cuckoo and the Late L. curruca) were the subjects of ribald jests. 'Curruca est avis, vel ille qui, cum credat nutrire filios suos, nutrit alienos;' Supp. to Ducange, by Diefenbach. On which Wedgwood remarks: 'the origin of this name [wittol] is undoubtedly from the fact that the bird known under the name of curruca is one of those in the nest of which the cuckoo drops its egg.' See further under Woodwale. Cf. gull, (1) a bird, (2) one who is deceived.

WIVERN; see Wyvern.

WIZARD, WISARD, one who practises magic, a magician. (E.; with F. suffix.) ME. wisard; spelt wysard, wysar, Prompt. Parv. It was simply formed by adding the AF. suffix -ard, as in cow-ard, lagg-ard, to the ME. wis, wise. Thus it merely meant 'wise-like.' The F. suffix -ard, due to OHG. suffix -hart, is merely G. hart, i. e. strong, confirmed in (=E. hard).

WIZEN, to shrivel or dry up. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson. ME. wisenen, to become shrivelled; see quotation in Halliwell, s. v. wisened. AS. wisnian, to become dry, John, xv. 6 (in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS., both Northumbrian). We find also AS. for-wisnode, to translate L. emarcuit, Voc. 394. 5.—Icel. visna, to wither. β. This is an intransitive verb, with formative -n-, giving it the sense 'to become;' so that the orig. sense was 'to become dry;' see this suffix explained under Waken. The Icel. vis-n-a is derived from vis-inn, wisened, withered, dried up, which, by its form, is the pp. of an old lost strong verb **wisa* (pt. t. **weis*, pp. visinn); cf. risa, to rise (pt. t. reis, pp. risinn). The Icel. visinn is cognate with Dan. and Swed. vissen, withered; cf. also Swed. vissna, to fade, OHG. wēsanēn, to dry up. All from a lost Teut. strong verb **weisan-*, **wisan-*, pt. t. **wais*, pp. **wisanoz*; from Idg. WEL. Hence also L. uir-us (for **uis-us*), poison, Gk. lós, Skt. wish-a-, poison; see Virulent. Cf. also AS. weornian, to pine away; from the same root; answering to a Teut. type **wiznōn* (see Learn). Der. wizen, adj., dried up, orig. the pp. of the strong verb.

WO, WOE, grief, misery. (E.) ME. wo, Chaucer, C. T. 353, 1458 (A 351, 1456). AS. wā, wo, used as interj. and adv., sometimes with dat. case, Grein, ii. 635; wā, wo, sb., id. 668.—Du. wee, interj. and sb.; Icel. vei, interj., used with dat. case; Dan. vee, interj. and sb.; Swed. ve, interj.; G. weh, interj. and sb.; Goth. wai, interj. β. Further allied to L. uae, wo! W. gwae, wo. Orig. an exclamation; hence, a cry of pain, a pain, &c. Idg. types **wai*, interj., **waiwa*, sb. (whence AS. wā, wāwa, wo, OHG. wēwa, wo). Der. wo-ful, ME. woful, Chaucer, C. T. 2058 (A 2056); wo-ful-ly, -ness. Also wo-begone, spelt woe-begon, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 20, i. e. surrounded with wo, from ME. wo begon, Chaucer, C. T. 5338 (B 918), where begon is the pp. of ME. begon, to go about, surround, equivalent to AS. begān, compounded of be, prep. (E. by) and gān, to go; see further in Stratmann, s. v. bigān. Also wo worth, wo be to; for which phrase see Worth (1). Also wai-l, q. v.

WOAD, a plant used as a blue dye-stuff. (E.) ME. wōd (with long o), Chaucer, Ætas Prima, l. 17, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. Skeat, vol. i. AS. wād, waad; 'Sandix, wād; Fucus, waad;' Voc. 136. 25, 26. The OF. name is spelt waide in a Vocab. of the 13th century; id. 556. 14; cf. F. guède.—Du. weede; [Dan. vaid, veid, Swed. veide, from German]; G. waid, MHG. weit; whence OF. waide, waide, gaide, mod. F. guède. Root unknown; allied to L. uitrum, woad, Gk. isáris (<**fītisáris*) woad. ¶ Distinct from weld (2).

WOLD, a down, plain open country. (E.) Spelt old in Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 125; wolde, woulde in Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. wold, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 938; the dat. case is spelt walde in one text of Layamon, 20842, but wolde in the other; it is thus seen to be the same word as ME. wald, a wood, which was, however, more commonly used in the sense of waste ground, wide open country (as in Norse); in Layamon, 21339, where one text has wald, the other has feld, field, in the sense of open country. AS. weald, wald, a wood, forest, Grein, ii. 669.—OSax. and OFries. wald, a wood; NFries. wold; G. wald, OHG. walt; Icel. völlr, gen. vallar (<**valthar*), a field, plain; Du. woud. β. All from Teut. type **walthuz*, m., a wood. It has been compared with Skt. vātā-s, an enclosure; and with E. wild. Neither connexion is at all certain. Doublet, weald, q. v. Der. vole.

WOLF, a rapacious beast of prey. (E.) ME. wolf; pl. wolues (=wolves), Wyclif, Matt. x. 16. AS. wulf, pl. wulfas, Grein, ii. 750.—Du. and G. wolf; Icel. úlfr (for vulfr); Dan. ulv; Swed. ulf; Goth. wulfs. β. All from Teut. type **wulfoz*, m. Further allied to Lith. wilkas, Russ. volk, Gk. λύκος, L. lupus, Skt. vṛka-, a wolf; the common Idg. type being **walgos*. γ. The sense is 'tearer,' or 'render,' from his ravenous nature.—WELQ, to tear; Lithuan. wilkti, to pull, &c. ¶ The suggested connexion with L. vulpēs, a fox, is doubtful. Brugmann, ii. § 60. Der. wolf-ish, wolf-ish-ly; wolf-dog. Also wolv-er-ene, or wolv-er-ine, a coined word; apparently suggested by MHG. wölfelin, a little wolf; spelt wulverin in Hakluyt, Voy. i. 477, and in Cotgrave, s. v. louvre; a name given to an American animal resembling the glutton, a name sometimes incorrectly given to the wolverene also.

WOMAN, a grown female. (E.) That woman is an altered form of AS. wifman, lit. wife-man, is certain; and it must be remembered that the AS. man (like L. homo) was used of both sexes. To show this, it is best to trace the word downwards. The AS. form is wifman, a woman, Grein, ii. 700. By assimilation, this form became wimman in the 10th century. In Judges, iv. 17, we have the dat. sing. wifmen, but in the very next verse (and in verse 22) Jael is called sēo wimman=the woman. [Similarly, the AS. hlāfmæsse (loaf-mass) became lammas; see LAMMAS.] By way of further illustration, see Mark, x. 6, where the various MSS. have wyfan, wifmon, wimman. β. The pl. of wifman was wifmen, which was similarly reduced to wimmen, as in Gen. xx. 17, and this form has held its ground, in the spoken language, to the present day. γ. But the sing. form suffered further alteration; we still find wifmon (later text wimmon) in Layamon, l. 1869, wimman, Havelok, l. 1168, wyfan, Avenbite of Inwyrt, p. 11, l. 1 [as late as A.D. 1340; the pl. being both wyfmēn, p. 10, last line but one, and wymmen, according to Morris]; but we also find wummon, Ancrēn Riwe, p. 12, l. 11, wumman, Rich. Cœur de Lion, 3863; wommon, Rob. of Glouc. p. 9, l. 211, P. Plowman, B. i. 71, ii. 8; so also in Chaucer, C. T. Group D, 66 [l. 5648], where 5 MSS. have womman, and one has woman; after which the spelling woman is common. Thus the successive spellings are wifman (wifmon), wimman (wimmon), wumman (wummon), womman; and lastly woman, as at present. In some dialects, the pronunciation wumman [glossic wum'un] is still heard. Some have thought that popular fancy connected the word with womb, as if the word were womb-man; but the change of vowel was due to the preceding w, just as in AS. widu, later form wudu, a wood; see WOOD. For further discussion, see Wife and Man. ¶ Note also the word leman, which was successively lēof man, lemman, leman; here we have a similar assimilation of fm to mm, and a considerable change in sense; see LEMAN. Der. woman-hood, ME. womanhede, wommanhede, Chaucer, C. T. 1750 (A 1748), the corresponding AS. word being wifhād, Gen. i. 27; woman-ish, K. John, iv. 1. 36; woman-ish-ly, -ness; woman-kind, Tam. Shrew, iv. 2. 14; women-kind, Pericles, iv. 6. 159; woman-like, woman-ly, ME. wummonlich, Ancrēn Riwe, p. 274, l. 9; woman-li-ness.

WOMB, the belly, the place of conception. (E.) Lowl. Sc. wame, the belly; Burns, Scotch Drink, st. 5. ME. wombe, Wyclif, Matt. xv. 17; wambe, Pricke of Conscience, 4161. AS. wamb, womb, the belly, Grein, ii. 637. 'Venter, wamb;' Voc. 306. 34. + Du. wam, the belly of a fish; Icel. vömb, the belly, esp. of a beast; Dan. vom; Swed. våmb, våmm; G. wampe, wamme, OHG. wampa; Goth. wamba. β. The Teut. type is **wambōn*-, f., the belly, paunch. Root unknown. ¶ Quite distinct from L. uentē.

WOMBAT, a marsupial mammal, found in Australia. (Australian.) In Webster. A corruption of the native Australian name womback or wombach. 'The wombat, or, as it is called by the natives of Port Jackson, the wombach;' Collins, New South Wales (1802), quoted in the Penny Cyclopædia. 'The mountain natives call it wombach;' letter from Governor Hunter, dated Sydney, 1798; in Bewick's Quadrupeds. See E. E. Morris, Austral English.

WON, to dwell, remain. (E.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 457. Practically obsolete, though occurring in Sir Walter Scott, Lady of the Lake, iv. 13. ME. wonen, Chaucer, C. T. 7745 (D 2163). AS. wunian, to dwell. + Icel. una, to dwell; see further under WONT.

WONDER, a strange thing, a prodigy, portent, admiration. (E.) ME. wonder; pl. wondris, Wyclif, Mark, xiii. 22. AS. wundor, a portent, Grein, ii. 751. + Du. wonder; Icel. undr (for **wundr*); Dan. and Swed. under; G. wunder, OHG. wuntar. β. The Teut. type is **wundrom*-, n., a wonderful thing. Perhaps allied to AS. wandian, lit. to turn aside from, but usually to turn from through a feeling of fear or awe, to respect, to revere. 'þū ne wandast for nānum men' = thou respectest, or darest, no man; Matt. xxii. 16; Luke, xx. 21. Grein explains wandian by 'præ metu sive alicujus reverentiā omittere, cunctari;' ii. 638. Hence ME. wonden, to conceal through fear, to falter, &c.; Will. of Palerne, 4071; Gower, C. A. i. 332, bk. iii. 1569; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 1187. Perhaps further allied to Wend and Wind (2). Der. wonder, verb, AS. wundrian, Grein, ii. 753; wonder-ful, ME. wonderfol, Layamon, l. 280, later text, used in place of AS. wunderlic, lit. wonder-like, Grein, ii. 753; wonder-ful-ly, -ness. Also wondr-ous, q. v.

WONDROUS, wonderful. (E.) Spelt wonderouse in Palsgrave, and prob. not found much earlier; it is a corrupt form (like righteous for rightwise), and took the place of the older word wonders, properly an adv., but also used as an adj. 'Ye be wonders men' = ye are wondrous men; Skelton, Magnificence, 90. 'Where suche a solempne yerely miracle is wrought so wondersly in the face of the worlde;'

Sir T. More, Works, p. 133 h. Earlier as an adv., as 'wonders dere,' i. e. wonderfully dear, Test. of Love, b. ii. ch. 3, l. 45-β. Wonders is formed by adding s (an adv. suffix, as in need-s) to wonder used as an adv. or adj.; Chaucer has 'wonder diligent,' C. T. 485 (A 483); Gower has 'such a wonder syhte,' C. A. i. 121, bk. i. 235. Wonder became an adj. through the use of the AS. wunderlic, adj., wonderful, as an adverb; thus Chaucer has 'wonderly deliver,' C. T. 84; so also 'so wonderly sore,' Tale of Gamelyn, 266 (late editions, wondrously). γ. Hence the history of the word is clear; the AS. wunderlic, adj., became ME. wonderly, adv., whence ME. wonder, adj. and adv., lengthened to wonders, adv. and adj., and to wondersly, adv.; the double use of -ly, both as an adjectival and adverbial suffix, being a lasting cause of confusion. ¶ The spurious poem called Chaucer's Dream has the word wondrous, l. 1898, but the MSS. are of late date. Hence wondrous-ly, wondrous-ness.

WONT, used or accustomed. (E.) In Anglia, xi. 493. Hupe suggests that the phr. wont to (accustomed to) arose from the ME. phr. wone to, where wone was properly an adj. (AS. gewun, adj., gewuna, adj.), with the sense of 'accustomed.' This ME. wone occurs (without to) in Genesis and Exodus, 1530, Havelok, 2297; but in Cursor Mundi, 3646, where 3 MSS. have wont to, the Cotton MS. has wonto (sic). At the same time, it is clear that ME. wone, adj., was confused with ME. woned, the pp. of wonen, to dwell, to be used to. We also find that wont came to be used as a sb.; and then, by way of distinction, a new form wont-ed was evolved, to keep up the pp. use. Hence wont-ed (= won-ed-ed) has the suffix -ed twice over! [For wont, sb., and wont-ed, see the end of the article.] 'As they were wont [accustomed] to dooe;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1195 g. 'She neuer was to swiche gestes woned' = she was never accustomed to such guests, Chaucer, C. T. 8215 (E 339). 'Thou were ay wont eche lover reprehende;' = thou wert ever wont to reprehend each lover, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 510. Woned is the pp. of ME. wonen, wonten, to dwell, be accustomed to; in Chaucer, C. T. 7745 (D 2163), it means simply 'to dwell,' but the sense 'to be accustomed' was easily (in AS. times) introduced from the related adj. wone (above). Cf. AS. wunod, pp. of wunian, to dwell, remain, continue in, Grein, ii. 753; also gewunian, to dwell, to be accustomed to. 'Swā swā he gewunade' = as he was accustomed (lit. as he wont), Mark, x. 1; cf. 'whom we wont to fear,' 1 Hen. VI, i. 2. 14. A weak verb, allied to the sb. wuna, custom, use, wont, commonly spelt gewuna, Luke, i. 9, ii. 27. Allied to AS. wunn-, weak grade of winnan, to strive after, orig. to desire; see WIN. Wont, sb., is 'a thing desired,' a habit due to acquiescence in what seems pleasant. β. Cf. Icel. vanr, adj., accustomed, used (to a thing), vani, a usage, whence vandi, a custom, habit, venja, to accustom (pt. t. vandi, vandi, pp. vandr, vannin) = E. wean; see WEAN. So also (in connexion with MHG. gewinnen) we find MHG. gewon, OHG. giwon, adj., accustomed to, MHG. gewon, OHG. giwona, usage, MHG. gewonen, to be used to, gewonlich, customary; G. gewohnen, to be used to, pp. gewohnt, wont, wohnen, to dwell, see Fick, iii. 287. Der. wont, sb., Hamlet, i. 4. 6, employed in place of ME. wone, sb., by confusion with wont above. Also wont-ed, used as a pt. t. by Surrey instead of wont; 'Of me, that wonted to rejoice,' Complaint of the Absence of her Louer, l. 5, in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 15; so also Palsgrave gives wont as a verb, 'I wonte or use; it is no wysdome to wont a thing that is nat honest;' and hence wonted as a pp. or adj., Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 113, iii. 2. 369.

WOO, to sue, court, ask in order to marriage. (E.) Spelt wu in Palsgrave; but Spenser retains the old spelling woue, F. Q. vi. 11. 4. ME. wojen, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 546; later wowen (by change of j to w), P. Plowman, B. iv. 74. AS. wōgian, to woo, occurring in the comp. āwōgian, to woo, Ælfric's Saints' Lives, vii. 14 (E. E. T. S.). Hence the sb. wōgere, a wooer; 'Procus, wōgere,' Voc. 171. 6. The lit. sense is simply to bend, incline; hence to incline another towards oneself. = AS. wōh (declensional stem wōg-, pl. wōge), bent, curved, crooked; Grein, ii. 731. Cf. wōh, sb., a bending aside, turning aside, iniquity; wōh-bogen, bowed in a curve, bent; id. β. The AS. wōh (Teut. type **wanhoz*), bent, is cognate with Goth. wāhs, bent, only occurring in un-wāhs, straight, blameless, Luke, i. 6. = ✓ WANK, to go tortuously, be crooked; whence also Skt. vañk, to go tortuously, be crooked; cf. also vakra, crooked, L. uacillare, to vacillate, and perhaps OSax. wāh, evil, W. gwaeth, worse. See VACILLATE. Der. woo-er, ME. wowere, P. Plowman, B. xi. 71, AS. wōgere, as above.

WOOD (1), a collection of growing trees, timber. (E.) ME. wode, Chaucer, C. T. 1424 (A 1422). AS. wudu, Grein, ii. 745; but the orig. form was widu; id. 692. + Icel. viðr, a tree, wood; Dan. ved; Swed. ved; MHG. wite, OHG. witu. β. The Teut. type is **widuz*, wood. Cf. also OIrish fíd, Irish fíodh, a wood, a tree; fíodais, shrubs, underwood; Gael. fíodh, timber, wood, a wilderness, fíodhach, shrubs, W. gwýdd, trees, gwyddeli, brashes, brakes. See Stokes-Fick, pp. 265, 280. Der. wood-bine or wood-bynd, spelt wodbynde in Palsgrave, wodebynde in Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, 1508 (1510 in Tyrwhitt), AS. wudebinde, used to translate hedera nigra in Voc. 137. 5; so called because it binds or winds round trees; cf. AS. wuduwinde, lit. wood-wind, used to tr. vivorna, id. 270. 16. Also wood-coal; wood-cock, AS. wuducoc, Voc. 258. 5 (note Guernsey vidco, a woodcock); wood-craft, ME. wodecraft, Chaucer, C. T. 110; wood-cut; wood-dove, ME. wode-douue, Chaucer, C. T. 13700 (B 1960); wood-engraving; wood-land, ME. wodelond, Layamon, 1699; wood-lark; wood-man, Cymb. iii. 6. 28, spelt wodman in Palsgrave; wood-nymph; wood-pecker, Palsgrave; wood-pigeon; wood-ruff, q. v. Also wood-ed; wood-en, i. e. made of wood, K. Lear, ii. 3. 16; wood-y, Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 18.

WOOD (2), mad, furious. (E.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 192. ME. wood, wōd (with long o), Chaucer, C. T. 184. AS. wōd, mad, raging, Grein, ii. 730; whence wēdan (<wōdian), to be mad, 653. + Icel. ōdr, raging, frantic; Goth. wōds, mad. And cf. Du. woede, G. wuth, MHG. wuot, madness. β. The Teut. type is **wōdoz*, adj., wood, frantic. Perhaps allied, as Fick suggests (iii. 308), to L. uātes, a prophet, poet, one who is filled with divine frenzy, OIrish fāith, a prophet. Hence (perhaps) the name Wōden, applied to the highest of the Teutonic divinities. Der. Wed-nes-day, q. v.

WOODRUFF, the name of a plant. (E.) Spelt woodrofe in Palsgrave. ME. wodruffe, Voc. 712. 28; woderofe, 566. 20. AS. wuderōfe, id. 133. 30; also wudurōfe. See Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 412, where it is shown that it was not only applied to the Asperula odorata (as at present), but also to Asfodelus ramosus; and it is also called astula (hastula) regia in glosses. The former part of the word is AS. wudu, a wood; the sense of rōfe is uncertain, but the ō was long; compare the sound of blood from AS. blōd, and note the form woodroof in Britten's Plant-names. As AS. ō answers to OHG. uo, the AS. rōfe is equivalent to OHG. ruofe, adj. fragrant. Hence the probable sense was 'fragrant wood-plant'; well answering to the L. name Asperula odorata, which alludes to its sweet scent. So does the F. name muguet.

WOODWALE, the name of a bird. (E.) Also called witwall and even wittal; see Wittol. Cotgrave explains F. oriol or oriot as 'a heighaw or witwall.' [The form witwall was not borrowed from G., but stands for widwall; the old form of AS. wudu being widu.] ME. wodewale, the same as wodehake (i. e. wood-hatch or wood-hack, a woodpecker), Prompt. Parv.; Rom. of the Rose, 658; used to translate OF. oriol, W. de Bibbesworth, in Wright, Voc. i. 166 (13th century); Owl and Nightingale, 1657. Not found in AS. + MDu. weduwael, 'a kinde of a yellow bird'; Hexham; G. wittewal, a yellow thrush; MHG. witewal, an oriole (Schade). β. The former element is certainly AS. widu, wudu, ME. wode, a wood; just as MHG. witewal is from MHG. wite, a wood. Cf. ME. wodehake, above, and E. woodpecker. But the sense of the latter element has not been explained; it may mean 'stranger,' from AS. wealh. Schade suggests the same sense of 'stranger in the wood from the South' for the OHG. name. The MDu. wedu-wael may be compared with MDu. Wael, a Celt, the same word as AS. Wealh, and therefore 'stranger.' Doublet, wittol, q. v.

WOOF, the weft, the threads crossing the warp in woven cloth. (E.) In Shak. Troil. v. 2. 152. A corruption of ME. oof, due to a supposed connexion (which happens to be right, but not in the way which popular etymology would suggest) with the vb. to weave and the sb. weft. 'Oof, threde for webbynge, Trama, stamen, subtegmen;' Prompt. Parv. So also in Wyclif, Levit. xiii. 47, earlier version (cited in Way's note). AS. ōwef, a woof. 'Cladica, wefl, vel ōwef;' Voc. 13. 23 (8th century). Cladica is the dimin. of Late L. clada, a woven hurdle, and wefl is clearly a variant of weft; so that there can be no doubt as to the sense of ōwef. Somewhat commoner is the parallel form ōweb or āweb, frequently contracted to āb; and this word has precisely the same sense. 'Subtinen, āweb' immediately follows 'Stamen, wearp,' i. e. the warp, in Voc. 262. 20; 'Trama, vel subtinen, ōweb, vel ōb;' id. 188. 12; 'Linostema, linen wearp, vel wyllen [woollen] āb;' id. 151. 18; where Mr. Wright adds the note: 'the yarn of a weaver's warp is, I believe, still called an abb.' [For warp we should doubtless read woof.] β. The words ōwef, and ōweb or āweb are compounds, containing the prefix ā (as in ā-wefan, to weave, see A- (4) and Weave) or ō-, short form of on, prep. Also wef and web are both sbs., meaning 'web,' from wefan, to weave. Thus the word woof, for oof, is short for ō-wef or on-wef, i. e. on-web, the web that is laid on or thrown across the first set of threads or warp. See On and Weave.

WOOL, the short thick hair of sheep and other animals. (E.) ME. wolle, P. Plowman, B. vi. 13. AS. wull, wul. 'Lana, wul;' Voc. 294. 19; wull, id. 190. 25. + Du. wol; Icel. ull (for vull); Dan. uld (for ull or wull); Swed. ull; G. wolle, OHG. wolla; Goth. wulla. β. The Teut. type is **wollā*, f., which is certainly an assimilated form for **wollnā*, with Idg. suffix -nā, as shown by the cognate words, viz. Lithuan. wilna, Russ. volna, Skt. ūrṇā, wool; cf. also OIrish olann, W. gwlân; and perhaps Gk. λῆνος (for Flῆνος), L. lāna, wool. Brugmann, i. §§ 317, 524 (2); Stokes-Fick, p. 276. The same assimilation appears in L. uillus, shaggy hair, uellus, a fleece. Der. wooll-en, ME. wollen, P. Plowman, B. v. 215, AS. wyllen (with the usual vowel-change from u to y), Voc. 151. 17; wooll-y, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 84; wool-monger, ME. wolmongere, Rob. of Glouc. p. 539, l. 11173; woolpack, ME. wolpak, same page, l. 18; wool-sack, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 148; ME. wollesak, Gower, C. A. i. 99; bk. i. 1692. Also wool-gathering (Halliwell), idly roving (said of the thoughts), as if gathering wool scattered on the hedges. Also woolward, q. v.

WOOLWARD, clothed in wool only. (E.) 'I have no shirt, I go woolward for penance;' L. L. L. v. 2. 717; on which Dr. Schmidt says: 'Woolward, in wool only, without linen, a dress often enjoined as a penance by the church of Rome.' ME. wolward, wolleward, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 1; Pricke of Conscience, 3514; P. Plowman's Crede, 788. See four more examples in Nares, and his note upon the word. 'To goo wulward and barfott;' Arnold's Chron. ed. 1811, p. 150. Palsgrave has, in his list of adverbs: 'Wolwarde, without any linnen nexte ones body, sans chemyse.' I have elsewhere explained this as 'with the wool next one's skin;' I should rather have said 'with the skin against the wool,' though the result is practically much the same. This is Stratmann's explanation; he gives: 'wolwarde, cutis lanam uersus.' Cf. home-ward, heaven-ward. See Wool and Ward. A like phrase occurs in French. 'Assez sovent lessa le linge Et si frota le dos au lange;' i. e. Very often she left off her linen [chemise], and rubbed her back against her woollen garment; Rutebuef, ii. 157, cited by Littré, s. v. lange. ¶ To the above explanation, viz. that wool-ward=against the wool, with reference to the skin, which agrees with all that has been said by Nares and others, I adhere. In an edition of books iii and iv of Bede's Eccl. History, by Mayor and Lumby, Cambridge, 1878, p. 347, is a long note on this phrase, with references to Bp. Fisher's Works, ed. Mayor, pt. i. p. 181, l. 13; Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, pt. iii. sect. 4. memb. 1. subsect. 2, and subsect. 3; Christ's Own Complaint, ed. Furnivall (E. E. T. S.), l. 502; Myroure of Our Lady (E. E. T. S.), p. lii, where we read of St. Bridget that 'she neuer vsed any linnen clothe though it weer in tyme of sykenes but only vpon hir hed, and next hir skyn she weer euer rough and sharpe wolen cloth.' The note further corrects my explanation 'with the wool towards the skin,' because this 'would only suit with a clothing made of the fleece as it came from the sheep's back;' and I have amended my explanation accordingly. It then goes on: 'ward is wered, the pp. of AS. werian, to wear, and woolward means "wool-clad," just as in Beowulf, 606, sweglwered means "clad in brightness;" scirwered and ealdawered may be cited as other examples of this pp. in composition. It has fared with woolward, when it became a solitary example of this compound, as it did with rightwise under similar circumstances. The love for uniform orthography made this latter word into righteous, and woolwered into woolward to conform to the shape of forward, &c. The use of go is the same as in to go bare, naked, cold, &c. This is ingenious, but by no means proven, and I beg leave to reject it. The suffix -wered is extremely rare; sweglwered and scirwered each occur only once, and only in poetry, and even Grein can only guess at the sense of them; whilst ealdawered has nothing to do with the matter, as it means 'worn out by old age,' Ettmüller, p. 4. There is no such word as wullwered in AS., or wolwered in ME.; and it is a long jump of many centuries from these doubtful compounds with -wered in AS. poetry to the first appearance of wolwarde (always so spelt) in the 14th century.

WOON, a governor, officer. (Burmese.) Burm. wun, a governor, or officer of administration; lit. 'a burden,' hence presumably the 'bearer of the burden' (Yule).

WORD, an oral utterance or written sign, expressing thought; talk, message, promise. (E.) ME. word, pl. wordes, Chaucer, C. T. 315 (A 313). AS. word, neut. sb., pl. word, Grein, ii. 732. + Du. woord; Icel. ord (for **word*); Dan. and Swed. ord; G. wort; Goth. waurd. β. The Teut. type is **wordom*, n. Cognate with Lithuan. wardas, a name, L. uerbum (base uerdh), a word, a verb; the Idg. type being **wardhom*, n. From ✓WER, to speak; whence Gk. εἶπεν, to speak; so that the lit. sense is 'a thing spoken.' Cf. Gk. ῥῆ-τωρ, a speaker, from the same root. Der. word, vb., to speak, Cymb. iv. 2. 240, ME. worden, P. Plowman, B. iv. 46; wordless, Lucrece, 112; word-ing; word-y, ME. woordi, Wyclif, Job, xvi. 21 (earlier version); word-i-ness. Also word-book, a dictionary, prob. imitated from Du. woordenboek, G. wörterbuch. And see rhetoric. Brugmann, i. § 589. Doublet, verb.

WORK, a labour, effort, thing done or written. (E.) ME. werk, Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 481 (A 479). AS. weorc, werc, Grein, ii. 677. +Du. werk; Icel. verk; Dan. værk; Swed. verk; G. werk, OHG. werch, werah. β. All from Teut. type **werkom*, n., work; which from Teut. base WERK, Idg. ✓WĒRG, to work. Hence also Gk. ἔργον, I have wrought, πέρειν (= φέρειν), to do, work, ἔργον, a work, ὄργανον, an instrument, organ, ὄργια, orgies; Zend vareza, a working, varezāna, a making (cited by Fick); cf. Pers. warz, gain, profit, acquisition, habit, warzad, he studies or labours, warz-kār, a ploughman (lit. work-doer), warz-gāw, an ox for ploughing (lit. work-cow), warzakh, agriculture; Rich. Dict. p. 1638. Der. work, verb, ME. werchen, wirchen, Chaucer, C. T. 2761 (A 2759), pt. t. wroughte, id. 499 (A 497), pp. wrought, id. 16800 (G 1332), from AS. wiercan, wyrcan (with the usual vowel-change to ie or y), pt. t. worhte, pp. geworht, Grein, ii. 759; cognate with Goth. waurkjan, Teut. type **work-jan*, from Idg. **worg*, second grade of ✓WĒRG; cf. Organ. Also work-able (from the verb); and (from the sb.) work-day, ME. werk-dei (trisyllabic), Ancrén Riwe, p. 20, l. 7, AS. weorc-dæg, Wright's Voc. i. 37; work-house, AS. weorc-hūs (L. officina), Voc. 185. 3; work-man, ONorthumb. wercmonn, Matt. x. 10 (Lindisfarne MS.); work-man-like; work-man-ship, ME. werkemanship, P. Plowman, B. x. 288; work-shop. Also wright, q. v. And see en-erg-y, lit-urg-y, metall-urg-y, chir-urg-eon, s-urg-eon, organ.

WORLD, the earth and its inhabitants, the system of things, present state of existence, a planet, society. (E.) ME. werld, Genesis and Exodus, l. 42; world, worlde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 19; also spelt wordle, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 7, l. 10; werd, Havelok, 1290; ward, Lancelot of the Laik, 3184. AS. weoruld, weorold, woruld, world, world, Grein, ii. 684. +Du. wereld; Icel. veröld (gen. veraldar); Dan. verden (for verld-en, where en is really the postposed def. article); Swed. verld; G. welt, MHG. werlt, OHG. weralt. β. The cognate forms show clearly that the word is a composite one. It is composed of AS. wer, cognate with Icel. verr, OHG. wer, Goth. wair, a man, L. uir, a man; and OMer. aldū (AS. iēldu), cognate with Icel. öld, Goth. alds, an age; see Virile and Eld. Thus the sense is 'age of man' or 'course of man's life,' whence it came to mean lifetime, course of life, experience of life, usages of life, &c.; its sense being largely extended. The sb. eld is a derivative from the adj. old, as shown s. v.; and is well exhibited also in the curious Dan. hedenold, the heathen age, heathen times, from heden, a heathen. γ. We may compare AS. weoruld with wer and aldū; Icel. veröld with verr and öld; OHG. weralt with wer and a sb. formed from alt, old; hence the word is a very old one, formed in times previous to all record of any Teutonic speech; really from a Teut. type **uer-aldi*. Der. world-ly, AS. weoruld-lic, Grein, ii. 687; world-li-ness; world-ly-mind-ed, world-ly-mind-ed-ness; world-l-ing, with double dimin. suffix, As You Like It, ii. 1. 48.

WORM, a small creeping animal. (E.) Formerly applied to a snake of the largest size; cf. blind-worm. ME. worm; pl. wormes, Chaucer, C. T. 10931 (F 617). AS. wyrm, a worm, snake, dragon; Grein, ii. 763. +Du. worm; Icel. ormr (for **wormr*); Dan. and Swed. orm (for **worm*); G. wurm; Goth. waurms. β. The Teut. type is **wurmiz*, Idg. type **warmis*; cf. L. uermis, a worm. Brugmann, i. § 371; ii. § 97. Prob. allied to Gk. ῥόμος (for **φρόμος*), an earth-worm. Der. worm, verb; worm-y. Allied words are verm-ine, vermicular, verm-icelli. (But not wormwood.)

WORMWOOD, a very bitter plant. (E.) The suffix -wood is corrupt, due to confusion with wood, in order to make it sound more intelligible. We find the spelling wormwod as early as the 15th century. 'Hoc absinthium, wormwood;' Voc. 711. 24. But only a little earlier (early 15th century), we find wermod, id. 645. 35. AS. wermod; 'Absinthium, wermod,' in a glossary of the 8th century; Voc. 2. 15. +Du. wermoet, 'worm-wood'; Hexham; G. weremuth, MHG. wermuote, OHG. werimuota, wermuota. β. It is thus evident that the word is doubly corrupt, and has no more to do with worm than it has with wood; the G. forms show clearly that the division of the AS. word is wer-mōd. [It is quite distinct from AS. wyrmwyrt, worm-wort, Sedum album or villosum; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 411.] Mr. Cockayne, Leechdoms, i. 217, supposes AS. wermod to mean 'ware-moth,' i. e. that which keeps off moths; but mōd is not 'a moth,' and words like 'ware-moth,' in which the former part is verbal, are not found in AS. γ. The fullest forms are AS. were-mōd, Voc. 296. 24; OHG. weri-muota, weri-muot, as if the sense were 'manly courage;' see Werwolf. But the orig. sense remains unknown.

WORRY, to harass, tease. (E.) The old sense was to seize by the throat, or strangle, as when a dog worries a rat or sheep. ME. worowen, wirien; also wery, Rom. of the Rose, 6264; also wyruyn or worowen, and explained by 'strangulo, suffoco,' Prompt. Parv.; worow, used of lions and wolves that worry men, Pricke of Conscience, 1229; pp. werewed, wirwed, Havelok, 1915, 1921. The theoretical ME. type is **wurzen* (Stratmann), which passed, as usual, into wurwen, worwen, or wirwen, and other varieties; the second w is usually due (in such a position) to an older z, and answers to AS. g. The various vowels point back to AS. y, so that the AS. form must have been wyrgan. AS. wyrgan, found in the gloss: 'strangulat, wyrgeð;' Corpus Gloss. 1926. +Du. worgen, to strangle, whence worg, quinsy; OFries. wergia, wirgia, to strangle; Low G. worgen; G. würgen, OHG. wurgan, to strangle, suffocate, choke; as in Wölfe würgen die Schafe, wolves worry the sheep, Flügel. β. These verbs are secondary forms, due to the Teut. str. verb **wergan*-, found in MHG. wergen, ir-wergan, to strangle. The Teut. base is **werg*, from Idg. ✓WĒRGH; as in Lithuan. wersz-ti, to strangle, to oppress; cf. Slav. base verz-, to bind fast, in Miklosich. Brugmann, i. § 624. Cf. Wring.

WORSE, comp. adj. and adv., more bad; WORST, superl. adj. and adv., most bad. (E.) 1. ME. wurs, wors, wers, adv.; wurse, worse, werse (properly dissyllabic), adj. 'Now is my prison wersē than before;' Chaucer, C. T. 1226 (A 1224). [Hence perhaps the suggestion of the double comp. wors-er, Temp. iv. 27.] 'Me is the wrs' = it is the worse for me; Owl and Nightingale, l. 34. We find also ME. werre, worse, spelt also worre, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1588; this is a Scand. form, due to assimilation. AS. wyrs, adv.; wyrsa, wirsa, adj.; Grein, ii. 765. +OSax. wirs, adv.; wirsa, adj.; OFries. wirra, werra, adj. (for **wirsa*, **wersa*, by assimilation); Icel. verr, adv.; verri, adj. (for **vers*, **versi*); Dan. værre, adj.; Swed. värre, adj.; MHG. wirs, adv.; wirser, adj.; Goth. wairs, adv.; wairsiza, adj. β. In Gothic, -iza is a common suffix in comparatives, as in hard-iza, hard-er, from hard, hard; and it answers to mod. E. -er. The common Teut. type is **wersizon*-, adj., where -izon is the comparative suffix. The base is **wers*-, perhaps to twist, entangle, confuse; whence also OHG. werran, G. wirren, to twist, entangle. See War. γ. The same base **wers* (assimilated to **werr*) occurs perhaps in L. uerrere, pt. t. uerri, pp. uersus, to whirl, toss about, drive, sweep along, sweep; cf. Lucretius, v. 1226. 2. The superl. form presents no difficulty. ME. worst, werst, adv.; worste, werste, adj., Gower, C. A. i. 25; prol. 641. AS. wyrst, adv., wyrsta, adj. (Grein); this is a contracted form of wyrsesta, which appears as wyrresta (by assimilation) in Matt. xii. 45. +OSax. wirsista, adj.; Icel. verst, adv., verstr, adj.; Dan. værst; Swed. värst; OHG. wirsist, wirset, contracted form wirst. The Teut. type is **wers-ist-oz*.

¶ It is now seen that the s is part of the base or root; worse really does duty for wors-er, which was in actual use in the 16th century; and wors-t is short for wors-est. Der. worse, verb, Milton, P. L. vi. 440, ME. wursien, Ancrén Riwe, p. 326, AS. wyrsian, properly intrans., to grow worse, A. S. Chron. an. 1085; wors-en, verb, to make worse, Milton, Of Reformation in England, b. i (R.); wors-en, to grow worse (Craven dialect). Also worst, verb, to defeat, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 878; this answers to ME. wursien above (AS. wyrsian), and is a form due to the usual excrement t after s (as in among-st, whil-st, &c.) rather than formed from the superlative.

WORSHIP, honour, respect, adoration. (E.) Short for worth-ship; the th was not lost till the 14th century. Spelt worschip, P. Plowman, B. iii. 332; but worþssipe (= worþshipe), Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 8, l. 8 (A. D. 1340). AS. weorðscipe, wyrðscipe, honour; Grein, ii. 683. Formed with suffix -scipe (E. -ship) from AS. weorð, wurð, adj., worthy, honourable; cf. L. dignitās from the adj. dignus. See Worth (1). Der. worship, verb, ME. worthschipen, spelt wurðschipen in St. Katharine, l. 55 (so in the MS., but printed wurðschipen); not found in AS. Also worship-ful, spelt worþssipuol, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 80, l. 22; worship-ful-ly.

WORST, adj. and verb; see under Worse.

WORSTED, twisted yarn spun out of long, combed wool. (E.) ME. worsted, Chaucer, C. T. 264 (A 262). So named from the town of Worsted, now Worstead, not far to the N. of Norwich, in Norfolk. Probably not older than the time of Edward III, who invited over Flemish weavers to improve our woollen manufactures. It is mentioned as early as 1348; see Archæologia, xxxi. 78. Chaucer is perhaps the earliest author who mentions it. 'Worsted: these first took their name from Worsted, a village in this country;' Fuller, Worthies; Norfolk (R.). β. Worstead stands for Worthstead; this we know from Charter no. 785 in Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, iv. 111, where the name appears as Wrðstede, and w = wu, as in other instances. The AS. wurð, weorð, worð, value, was also used in the sense of 'estate' or 'manor,' and appears in place-names, such as Sawbridge-worth, Rickmans-worth; however, in the sense of 'estate,' the usual form is weorðig, and this may suit the AF. form Wrðstede, if the former e represents an earlier -ig. The AS. stede = mod. E. stead, or place. Hence Worstead means 'the place of an estate;' see Worth and Stead.

WORT (1), a plant. (E.) Orig. the general E. name for 'plant;' plant being a Latin word. ME. wort; pl. wortes, Chaucer, C. T.

15227 (B 4411). AS. wyrt, a wort; Grein, ii. 765. +OSax. wurt; Icel. urt (for \**wurt*); also spelt jurt, borrowed from Low G.; Dan. urt; Swed. ört; G. wurz; Goth. waurts.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type \**wurtiz*, f.; Idg. type \**wardis*. Allied to W. gwreiddyn, a root; OIrish frem, a root; also to Icel. röt, a root, L. radix, Gk. ρίζα, a root; πάδ-αμνος, a young shrub. Brugmann, i. §§ 350, 529; a plant, herb, Fick, iii. 294. See further under Root (1). Der. mug-wort, and other plant-names in which wort is suffixed; also wort (2). Allied to radix, liquorice, &c.

WORT (2), an infusion of malt, new beer unfermented or while being fermented. (E.) ME. wort or worte, Chaucer, C. T. 16281 (G 813). 'Hoc idromellum, Anglice wurte;' Voc. 772. 2. AS. -wyrt, in the comp. māx-wyrt, lit. mash-wort, an infusion of worts; A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 216, 399. Here wyrt seems to be a peculiar use of the wyrt given under Wort (1); but the G. würze (below) is derived from wurz, a wort. Cf. also MDu. wort, 'wort, or new beere before it be clarified,' Hexham; worte, 'a root or a wort,' id.; Low G. wört. Also Icel. virtr; Norweg. vyrt, vört, Aasen; Swed. vört; G. bier-würze, beer-wort, allied to wurz, a wort, herb, whence würze, seasoning, spice, würzsuppe, spiced soup, &c.  $\beta$ . The Icel. virtr, MHG. wirz, which differ in the vowel, are from a Teut. base \**werti-*, which differs in gradation from \**wurtiz*, a wort, but is closely related to it.

WORTH (1), equal in value to, deserving of; as sb., desert, price. (E.) ME. wurð, worþ, worth, adj., worthy, honourable, Will. of Palerne, 2522, 2990; Rob. of Glouc. p. 364, l. 7547. Also wurþ, worþ, ill-spelt worthe in P. Plowman, B. iv. 170; but wurþ in Rob. of Glouc. p. 373, l. 3674. AS. wyrðe, adj., a mutated by-form of weorþ, adj., valuable; wyrð, by-form of weorþ, sb., value. +Du. waard, adj.; waarde, sb.; Icel. verðr, adj.; verð, sb.; Dan. værd, adj. and sb.; Swed. vård, adj.; värde, sb.; G. werth, MHG. wert, adj. and sb.; Goth. wairths, adj. and sb.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type \**werthoz*, adj., valuable. This word is probably to be divided as \**wer-thoz*; note also Lith. wer-tas, worthy (probably borrowed from Teutonic). Also cf. W. gwerth (type \**wer-tos*), value, price; allied to L. uer-ēri, to respect. Prob. from  $\checkmark$ WER, to guard, keep; see Ware (1). Der. worth-y, spelt wurþi, Ormulum, 2705, wurþiz, id. 4200, AS. wyrðig, adj., Alfred, tr. of Orosius, vi. 2 (the AS. weorðig or worðig only occurs as a sb. meaning an estate); hence worthi-ly, worthi-ness; worth-less, worth-less-ly, -ness. Also wor-ship.

WORTH (2), to become, to be. (E.) Now only in the phr. wo worth the day != evil be to the day. ME. worþen, to become; formerly common. In P. Plowman's Crede, a short poem of 850 (long) lines, it occurs 8 times; as 'schent mote I worþen' = I must be blamed, l. 9; 'wo mote þou worþen' = may evil be (or happen) to you; and see P. Plowman, B. prol. 187, i. 186, ii. 43, iii. 33, v. 160, vi. 165, vii. 51. AS. weorðan, to become, also spelt wurðan, wyrðan; pt. t. wearð, pl. wurdon; Grein, ii. 678. +Du. worden, pt. t. werd, pp. ge-worden; Icel. verða, pt. t. varð, pp. orðinn, to become, happen, come to pass; Dan. vorde; Swed. varda; G. werden, OHG. werdan; Goth. wairthan, pt. t. warth, pp. waurthans.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type \**werthan-* (pt. t. \**warth*, pp. \**wurthanoz*), to become, turn to; allied to L. uertere, to turn, uertū, to turn to. - $\checkmark$ WERT, to turn; see Verse. Der. wierd, q. v.

WOT, I know, or he knows; see Wit (1). Der. not (2).

WOULD; see Will (1).

WOUND, a hurt, injury, cut, bruise. (E.) ME. wounde, Chaucer, C. T. 1012 (A 1010). AS. wund, Grein, ii. 750. +Du. wond, or wonde; Icel. und (for \**wund*); Dan. vunde; G. wunde; OHG. wunta.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type \**wundā*, f., a wound. We find also an older type in the Teut. adj. \**wundoz*, wounded, appearing in G. wund, OHG. wunt, Goth. wunds, wounded.  $\beta$ . The type \**wun-dōz* seems to answer to an Idg. type \**wən-tōs*, formed with a pp. suffix from \**wun(n)-*, weak grade of Teut. \**winnan-* (for \**wennan-*), a verb signifying 'to fight' or 'suffer,' represented in AS. by winnan, to strive, fight, suffer, pp. wunnen. See Win. Der. wound, verb, AS. wundian, Grein, ii. 751. Cf. wen.

WOURALI, OURALI, OORALI, OURARI, CURARI, a resinous substance, extracted from the Strychnos toxifera, used for poisoning arrows, &c. (Guiana). 'The hellish ooralis;' Tennyson, In the Children's Hospital, l. 10. And see Waterton's Wanderings. From 'ourali, written also wourali, urali, urari, curare, &c., according to the pronunciation of the various tribes;' W. H. Brett, Indian Tribes of Guiana, 1868, p. 140. It is spelt wourara in Stedman's Surinam (1796), i. 395; ourari in Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 689, last col.

WRACK, a kind of sea-weed; shipwreck, ruin. (E.) Wrack, as a name for sea-weed, merely means 'that which is cast ashore,' like things from a wrecked ship. This is well shown by mod. F. varech, which has both senses, (1) sea-weed cast on shore, and (2) pieces of a wrecked ship cast on shore; this F. word being merely borrowed from English. Cotgrave has F. varech, 'a sea-wrack or wreck, all that is cast aland by chance or tempest.' Shak. has wrack, shipwreck, destruction, ruin. Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 110; Macb. i. 3. 114, &c. ME. wrak, a wreck, Chaucer, C. T. (Six-text edition), Group B, l. 513; where Tyrwhitt prints wrecke, l. 4933. AS. wrac, 'what is driven,' Lat. 'actuarius;' O. E. Texts, p. 37; cf. wrac, banishment, exile, misery, Grein, ii. 738. From **wrak*, 2nd grade of Teut. **wrek-an-*; the sense is immediately due to the orig. verb, AS. wrecan (pt. t. wrac), to drive, expel, cast forth; so that wrac is here to be taken in the sense of 'that which is driven ashore.' The AS. wrecan also means to wreak, punish; see Wreak. And see Wreck. +Du. wrak, sb., a wreck; adj., cracked, broken; cf. wraken, to reject; cf. Icel. rek (for wrek), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore, from reka (for wreka), to drive. Cf. Dan. vrag, wreck, vrage, to reject, Swed. wrak, wreck, refuse, trash; all from Dutch. Doublets, wreck, rack (4).

WRAITH, an apparition. (E.) 'Wraith, an apparition in the likeness of a person, supposed to be seen soon before, or soon after death. . . . The apparition called a wraith was supposed to be that of one's guardian angel;' Jamieson. He adds that the word is used by King James I (Demonology; Works, p. 125). G. Douglas translates figūras (Æn. x. 641) by 'wraithis of goistis;' and umbrae (Æn. x. 593) by wraithis (also written wrethis). Note that the wraith of Æneas was formed of a cloud (Æn. x. 636); and wraith or wreth may be the same word as wreath; cf. prov. E. snow-wreath, a mass of drifted snow. Cf. Milton, P. L. vi. 58. See Wreath.  $\beta$ . The Ayrshire warth, an apparition, may be a different word, and allied to the curious Norw. vardyle [= ward-evil?], a guardian or attendant spirit, a fairy or sprite said to go before or follow a man, also considered as an omen or a boding spirit (Aasen); which seems to be allied to E. ward, to guard. But there is also a prov. E. swarth, with the same sense.

WRANGLE, to dispute, argue noisily. (E.) ME. wranglen, a various reading for wraxlen (to wrestle), in P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80. The sb. wranglyng is in P. Plowman, B. iv. 34. A frequentative formed from AS. wrang, 2nd grade of Teut. **wreng-*, as seen in AS. wringan, to press. Thus the orig. sense was to keep on pressing, to urge; hence to argue vehemently. Cf. Low G. wrangeln, to wrestle (Schambach); G. ringen, to wrestle; Dan. vringle, to twist, entangle; Norw. rangla, to begin to quarrel. See Wring. Der. wrangle, sb.; wrangl-er, a disputant in the schools (at Cambridge), now applied (till 1909) to a first-class man in the mathematical tripos; wrangl-ing.

WRAP, to fold, infold, cover by folding round. (E.) ME. wrappen, Chaucer, C. T. 10950; Will. of Palerne, 745. [We also find a form wlappen, Wyclif, Luke, ii. 7, John, xx. 7, now spelt lap; see Lap (3).] Cf. Prov. E. wrap, to wrap up, Somersetshire (Halliwell), also to weave; also, to lace together the ends of a fishing-net (E. D. D.); wraple, to entangle, id. Not found in AS. Cf. North Friesic wraffe, to press into, to stop up.  $\beta$ . The form of the word suggests a connexion with Warp, q. v. G. Douglas has warpit about (L. cingit) to translate Virgil, Æn. i. 112; warpit (L. euinctus), Æn. v. 774; warpit my head = wrapped up my head, Prol. to Æn. vii. 95. Perhaps the sense was due to the folding together of a fishing-net; cf. Icel. varp, the cast of a net, varpa, a cast, also the net itself; skövarp, lit. 'a shoe-warp,' the binding of a shoe; Swed. dial. varpa, a fine herring-net (Rietz). Der. wrapp-er, sb.

WRATH, anger, indignation. (E.) ME. wraþe, wratthe, P. Plowman, B. iv. 34; wraiththe, Wyclif, Eph. iv. 31. Properly dissyllabic. AS. and ONorthumbrian wræðo, wræððo, Mark, iii. 21; Luke, xxi. 23; John, iii. 36 (both in the Lindisfarne and Rushworth MSS.). Teut. type **wraithithā*, f., from the adj. **wraithoz*, AS. wrāð. The sb. is somewhat rare, but the adj. wrāð, wroth, from which it is formed, is common; see Wroth. +Icel. reiði (for **wreiði*), wrath, from reiðr, adj., wroth; Dan. and Swed. vrede, from vred, adj. Der. wrath-ful, King John, ii. 87; wrath-ful-ly, -ness.

WREAK, to revenge, inflict (vengeance) on. (E.) ME. wreken, Chaucer, C. T. 963 (A 961); formerly a strong verb; pt. t. wrak, Tale of Gamelyn, l. 303; pp. wroken, wroke, wreken, P. Plowman, A. ii. 169, B. ii. 194. AS. wrecan, to wreak, revenge, punish, orig. to drive, urge, impel, Grein, ii. 741; pt. t. wrac, pp. wrecen. +Du. wreken, to avenge; Icel. reka (for \**wreka*), pt. t. rak, pp. rekinn, to drive, thrust, repel, toss, also, to wreak vengeance; G. rächen, to avenge; OHG. rechen; Goth. wrikan, to wreak anger on, to persecute.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type \**wrekan-*, pt. t. \**wrak*; orig. to press, urge, drive; Fick, iii. 308. Further allied to Lithuan. wargti, to suffer affliction, wargas, affliction; Russ. vrag, an enemy, foe (persecutor); L. urgere, to press, urge on, Gk. ἐργεῖν, for \**ἐφέργειν*, to shut in. All from  $\checkmark$ WERG, to press, urge; Fick, i. 773. Der. wrack, q. v.; wreck, q. v., wretch, q. v.

WREATH, a garland. (E.) ME. wrethe, Chaucer, C. T. 2147 (A 2145). AS. wræð, a twisted band, a bandage; gewriðen mid wræðe = bound with a bandage, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet, cap. xvii. p. 122, l. 16. Formed (with vowel-change from ā to æ) from AS. wrād, 2nd grade of wriðan, to writhe, twist; see Writhe. Der. wreathe, verb; 'together wreathed sure,' Surrey, Paraph. of Ecclesiastes, c. iv. l. 34.

WRECK, destruction, ruin, remains of what is wrecked. (E.) Formerly wrack, as in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 26. ME. wrak, Chaucer, C. T. 4933 (Group B, l. 513), where Tyrwhitt prints wrecks. In a glossary of E. Law-terms, written in the 13th c., and pr. in Reliq. Antiquæ, i. 33, we find: 'Wrec, truvure de mer,' i.e. what is cast up by the sea; also wrek, Stat. Realm, i. 28 (anno 1275); also ship-wrek, Thorpe, Cod. Diplom. p. 382. AS. wrac, expulsion, banishment, misery; Grein, ii. 738. The peculiar use may be due to Scand. influence; see Wrack. +Du. wrak, wreck; cf. wrak, adj., broken; Icel. rek (for **wrek*), also reki, anything drifted or driven ashore, from reka, to drive; [Dan. vrag, wreck; Swed. wrak, refuse, trash, wreck, from] Low G. (Hamburg) wrack, a broken bit, a battered ship (Richey); Guernsey wrec. β. The lit. sense 'that which is drifted or driven ashore,' hence it properly meant pieces of ships drifted ashore, also wrack or sea-weed. Secondly, as the pieces thus driven ashore were from ships broken up by tempests, it came to mean fragments, refuse, also destruction, or ruin caused by any kind of violence, as in Shakespeare and Milton. The orig. sense of AS. wreca was to impel, drive, persecute, expel, wreak; hence wrac in AS. poetry commonly means banishment or misery such as is endured by an exile. Der. wreck, verb; also wrack, Temp. i. 2. 236; wrack-ful, Shak. Sonnet 65; wreck-ful, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 36; wreck-er, one who plunders wrecks. And see wretch.

WREN, a small bird. (E.) ME. wrenne, Gower, C. A. iii. 349; bk. viii. 2227. AS. wrenna, wrænna; Voc. 131. 33; 286. 16. Cf. Icel. rindill, a wren; OLow G. wrendo, wrendil, a wren (Gallée).

WRENCH, a twist, sprain, side-pull, jerk. (E.) 'I wrench my foote, I put it out of joynt;' Palsgrave. He also spells it wrinche. ME. wrench, sb., in the metaphorical sense of perversion, guile, fraud, deceit. 'Withouten eny wrenche'=without any guile, Rob. of Glouc. l. 1264. Cf. wrenk, wrench, a trick, Cursor Mundi, 13336, 29307. AS. wrenc (dat. wrence), guile, fraud, deceit, Grein, ii. 742. β. It is obvious that mod. E. has preserved the orig. sense, and that the AS. and ME. uses are merely metaphorical. So also G. rank (pl. ränke), a cognate form, means an intrigue, trick, artifice, but provincially it means 'crookedness,' Flügel; hence MHG. renken, G. verrenken, to wrench. [On the other hand, mod. E. only uses the allied word wrong in the metaphorical sense of perverse, bad.] Teut. type **wränkiz*, lit. 'a twist.' From **wränk*, 2nd grade of **wrenk-*, for which see Wrinkle. Der. wrench, verb, AS. wrencan, to deceive, Grein, ii. 742; so also AS. bewrencan, to obtain by fraud, A. S. Apothegms, no. 34, pr. in Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 262.

WREST, to twist forcibly, distort. (E.) ME. wresten, in the sense to wrestle, struggle, Ancrén Riwe, p. 374, l. 7; Cursor Mundi, 19353. AS. wræstan, to twist forcibly, Grein, ii. 740; cf. Salomon and Saturn, ed. Kemble, p. 140, l. 191. We also find AS. wræst, adj., firm, strong (Grein); the orig. sense of which is supposed to have been tightly twisted, or rather (as I should suppose) tightly strung, with reference to the strings of a harp when tightened by the instrument called a wrest; see Shak. Troil. iii. 3. 23; and note that the word strong itself merely means strung. +Icel. reista, to wrest; MDan. wreste, to wrest, Dan. wriste. β. The form wræst is closely allied to wræð, a wreath or twisted bandage, and stands (probably) for Teut. **wraith-t-joz*; from Teut. **wraith*, as in AS. wrād, 2nd grade of wriðan, to writhe or twist; see Writhe. And see Wrist. Der. wrest, sb. (as above); wrest-le, q.v.

WRESTLE, to struggle, contend by grappling together. (E.) ME. wrestlen, Gower, C. A. iii. 350, bk. viii. 2240; wrastlen, Ancrén Riwe, p. 80, l. 7. The frequentative of Wrest, q.v. The AS. wræstlian, to wrestle, is rare; the form more commonly found is wræxlian, Gen. xxxii. 24, whence ME. wraxlen, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 80, where we also find the various readings wrasile, wraske. Still, we find: 'Luctatur [read Luctator], wræstlere; Luctatorum, wræstliendra;' Voc. 431. 25, 26. +MDu. wrastelen, worstelen, 'to wrestle or to struggle,' Hexham. Der. wrestl-er, wrestl-ing.

WRETCH, a miserable creature. (E.) Orig. an outcast or exile. ME. wrecche, Chaucer, C. T. 933 (A 931), where Tyrwhitt prints wretched wight, and omits which. AS. wrecca, an outcast, exile, lit. 'one driven out,' also spelt wracca, wreca, Grein, ii. 739. Cf. AS. wrac, exile.—AS. wreca, to drive out, also to persecute, wreak, avenge; see Wreak. Cf. Lithuan. wargas, affliction, misery. Der. wretch-ed, ME. wreched, Chaucer, C. T. 923 (A 921), lit. 'made like a wretch'; wretch-ed-ly, wretch-ed-ness.

WRETCHLESSNESS, a misspelling of recklessness, i.e. recklessness; see Reck.

WRIGGLE, to move along by twisting to and fro. (E.) 'With their much winding and wrigling;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxii. c. 2. § 1. The frequentative of wrig, to move about; 'The bore his tayle wrygges,' Skelton, Elinour Ruming, l. 177. Allied to ME. wrikken, to twist to and fro, Life of St. Dunstan, l. 82; see Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22. Not found in AS., but a Low G. word as well as Scand., and preserved in mod. E. wrick, to twist. β. We find the closely related AS. wrigian, to impel, move towards, but this became ME. wrien (with loss of g), whence mod. E. wry, adj.; see further under Wry and Wring. ME. wrikken and AS. wrigian are closely related forms. +Du. wriggelen, to wriggle; frequentative of wrikken, 'to move or stir to and fro,' Sewel; whence onwrikbaar, immovable, steady; Low G. (Westphalian) wriggeln, to wriggle, to loosen by moving to and fro; (Hamburg) wrickeln, to wriggle; Low G. wriggeln, to wriggle (Danneil); wrikken, to turn, move to and fro, wriggle; Dan. wrikke, to wriggle; Swed. wricka, to turn to and fro, whence wrickning, distortion. γ. The orig. sense seems to have been 'to bend' or 'turn,' and we may deduce the orig. sense of E. wriggle as having been 'to keep on bending or twisting about.' See also Rig (2). Der. wriggl-er. Also rick-ets, q.v.

WRIGHT, a workman. (E.) ME. wrighte, Chaucer, C. T. 3145 (A 3143). AS. wyrhta, a worker, workman, maker, creator; Grein, ii. 763; with the common shifting of r.—AS. wyrht, a deed, work; formed, with suffix -t, from wyrc-an, to work. (The AS. wyrht occurs in ge-wyrht, a work, Grein, i. 489, where the prefix ge- makes no appreciable difference; and it stands for **wyrc-t*, with the usual substitution of ht for ct). +OSax. wurhtio, a wright, from wurht, a deed; OHG. wurhto, a wright, from OHG. wuruht, wurht, a work, merit. β. The AS. gewyrht, OSax. wurht, OHG. wuruht, are all from Teut. **wurk-*, weak grade of **werk-*; see Work. Der. cart-wright, ship-wright, wheel-wright.

WRING, to twist, force by twisting, compress, pain, bend aside. (E.) ME. wringen; pt. t. wrang, wrong, Chaucer, C. T. 5026 (B 606); pp. wringen, wrongen. AS. wringan, to press, compress, strain, pt. t. wrang, Gen. xl. 11, pp. wrungeon. +Du. wringen; Low G. wringen, to twist together; G. ringen, to wring, wrest, turn, struggle, wrestle; a strong verb, pt. t. rang, pp. gerungen; OHG. hringan (for **wringan*), strong verb. β. All from Teut. type **wreng-an-*, pt. t. **urang*, pp. **wrungeanoz*; a nasalised form from a base **wreg*=**werg*; for which see Worry. And cf. Wriggle. Der. wrangle, wrong; probably allied to wrench, wrink-le, wrigg-le, wry.

WRINKLE (1), a small ridge on a surface, unevenness. (E.) ME. wrinkel or wrinkil. 'Wrynkyll, or rympyll, or wrympyl, Ruga; Wrynkyll, or playte [pleat] in clothe, Plica;' Prompt. Parv. [Here the spelling wrympyl stands for **hrympyl*; wrinkle and rimple are from different roots, as shown under ripple (2). Elsewhere, we find, in Prompt. Parv. p. 434, the spelling rympyl, given under R.] The pl. wrinclis occurs, in the various readings of the later version, in Wyclif, Gen. xxxviii. 14. Somner gives AS. wrinclian, to wrinkle; the pp. ge-wrinclod occurs in Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iv. 34; l. 9. From a sb. **wrincl*. β. Evidently a dimin. form from a base **wrenk*, prob. allied to Teut. **wreng-an-*, to wring, to twist. See Wring; and see Wrinkle (2). +MDu. wrinckel, 'a wrinkle'; wrinckelen, 'to wrinkle, or to crisper;' prob. allied to wringen, 'to wreath [i.e. writhe, twist]' or to wring; Hexham. Perhaps further allied to Goth. wraiqs, crooked, Luke, iii. 5; L. uerg-ere, to bend; Skt. vrj-ina-, crooked; Gk. βαβ-ός, crooked, πέβ-ειν, to revolve. Brugmann, i. §§ 371, 677. See Rhomb. ¶ Dan. rynke, a wrinkle, pucker, gather, fold, rynke, to wrinkle, Swed. rynka, both sb. and vb., and Icel. hrukka (for **hrunka*), a wrinkle, are all forms due to the weak grade of an old str. vb. **hrenkan-*, and are related rather to Ruck (1). Der. wrinkle, vb.; wrinkl-y.

WRINKLE (2), a hint, small piece of advice. (E.) Prov. E. wrinkle, a new idea (Halliwell). It means 'a new idea' imparted by another, a hint; but the lit. sense is 'a small trick,' or 'little stratagem.' 'Having learned . . . euery wrinkle;' Lyly, Euphues, p. 389 (ed. Arber). And see Polit. Poems, ed. Wright, ii. 45; l. 7. It is the dimin. of AS. wrenc, a trick; for which see Wrench. Allied to Wrinkle (1).

WRIST, the joint which turns the hand. (E.) The pl. is spelt wrestes in Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 6. ME. wriste or wrist; also wirst, by shifting of r. 'Wryst, or wyrste of an hande;' Prompt. Parv. AS. wrist. We find 'ōð þā wriste'=up to the wrist; Laws of Æthelstān, pt. iv. § 7, in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 226, l. 17. The full form was hand-wrist, i.e. that which turns the hand about. We find 'betwux elboga and handwyrste'=betwixt elbow and handwrist; Voc. 158. 10. Cf. 'geniculi, cneow-wyrste,' i.e. knee-joints, Voc. 160. 17. Prob. for **wrið-t*, and formed with suffix -t from wrið-, weak grade of wriðan, to writhe, to twist; see Writhe. Cf. Wrest, from the same verb. +OFries. wriust, wrist, werst; whence hondwriust, hand-wrist, foetwrist, foot-wrist or instep; Low G. wrist; Icel. rist, the instep; cf. rið-inn, pp. of riða, to twist; Dan. and Swed. wrist, the instep; cf. vide, vida, to twist; G. rist, instep, wrist. Cf. also Westphal. werste, the instep, wrist, the ankle; Low G. (Hamburg) wristen, pl., wrists, ankles. Der. wrist-band, the band of the sleeve at the wrist.

X

WRITE, to form letters with a pen or pencil, engrave, express in writing, compose, communicate a letter. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to score,' i. e. to cut slightly, as when one scores letters or marks on a piece of bark or soft wood with a knife; it also meant to engrave runes on stone. ME. writen, pt. t. wroot, Chaucer, C. T. 5310 (B 890); pp. writen (with short i). AS. writan, pt. t. wrāt, pp. writen, to write, inscribe (orig. to score, engrave), Grein, ii. 743. + OSax. writan, to cut, injure, also to write; Du. rijten, to tear, split; Icel. rita, pt. t. reit, pp. ritinn, to scratch, cut, write; Swed. rita, to draw, delineate; G. reissen, pt. t. riss, pp. gerissen, OHG. rizan, to cut, tear, split, draw or delineate. Cf. Goth. writs, a stroke made with a pen. β. All from the Teut. type **wreit-an-*, pt. t. **wrait*, pp. writ-anoz, to cut, scratch, hence to engrave, write. Der. writ, sb., AS. ge-writ, also writ, a writing, Grein, i. 486, ii. 743, from writ-, weak grade of writan, to write. Also writ-er, AS. writere, Matt. ii. 4; writ-er-ship, writ-ing.

WRITHE, to twist to and fro. (E.) Spelt wrethe in Palsgrave. ME. writhen, spelt wrythen in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. v. pr. 3, l. 15; pt. t. wroth (with long o), Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1200; pp. writhen (with short i), P. Plowman, B. xvii. 174. Cf. writhing in Chaucer, C. T. 10441 (F 127). AS. wriðan, to twist, wind about, pt. t. wrād, pp. wriðen, Grein, ii. 743. + Icel. riða (for **wriða*), pt. t. reið, pp. riðinn; Dan. vide; Swed. vida, to wring, twist, turn, wrest; OHG. ridan, MHG. riden, a strong verb, now lost. β. All from Teut. type **wreith-an-*, pt. t. **wraith*, pp. **writ-anoz*, to twist. Der. wraith, wroth, wreath, wri-st, wre-st.

WRONG, perverted, unjust, bad; also as sb., that which is wrong or unjust. (Scand.) ME. wrong, adj.; Will. of Palerne, 706; sb., P. Plowman, B. iii. 175. Late AS. wrang (a passing into o before n), occurs as a sb. in the A. S. Chron. an. 1124. Properly an adj. signifying 'a wrong thing,' a thing perverted or wrung aside; compare the use of wrong nose, for 'crooked nose,' in Wyclif, Levit. xxi. 19 (later version). Not E., but Scand. — ONorse **urangr*; as in Icel. rangr, awry, metaphorically, wrong, unjust; Dan. wrang, wrong, adj.; Swed. wrang, perverse. All from Teut. **urang*, 2nd grade of **wrengan-*, to wring, twist; see Wring. Der. wrong, verb, to injure, as in 'to wrong the wronger,' Shak. Lucrece, 819; wrong-er (as above); wrong-ly; wrong-ful, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 58 (earlier version); wrong-ful-ly, -ness; wrong-head-ed, i. e. perverse. Also wrong-wise, ME. wrongwis, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 175, l. 256 (Swed. wrangwis, iniquitous), now obsolete, but remarkable as being the converse of E. righteous, formerly right-wise; Palsgrave actually spells it wrongeous!

WROTH, full of wrath, angry. (E.) ME. wroth, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, l. 504. AS. wrād, wroth, Grein, ii. 737. — AS. wrād, 2nd grade of wriðan, to writhe; so that the orig. sense was twisted or perverted in one's temper. + Du. wreed, cruel; Icel. reiðr; Dan. ured; Swed. ured; OHG. reid, reidi, only in the sense of twisted or curled. All from Teut. **wraith*, 2nd grade of **wreithan-*. See Writhe and Wrath.

WRY, twisted or turned to one side. (E.) 'With visage wry,' Court of Love, l. 1162 (a late poem, perhaps 16th century). But the verb wrien, to twist, bend, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 17211 (H 262); and answers to AS. wrigian, to drive, impel, also to tend or bend towards. 'Hlāford mīn . . . wrigað on wonge' = my lord [i. e. master of a plough] pushes his way along the field; Codex Exoniensis, ed. Thorpe, p. 403 (Riddle xxii, l. 9). Of a bough bent down, and then let go, it is said: 'wrigað wiþ his gecyndes' = it moves towards its kind, i. e. as it is naturally inclined; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met. 2 (cap. xxv). This AS. base wrig- is preserved in the frequentative Wriggle, q. v. See further under Awry. Der. a-wry, q. v.; wry-neck, a small bird, allied to the woodpecker, so called from 'the writhing snake-like motion which it can impart to its neck without moving the rest of its body,' Engl. Cycl. Also wry-ness.

WYCH-ELM; see under Witch-elm.

WYVERN, WIVERN, in heraldry, a kind of flying serpent or two-legged dragon. (F.—L.) The final n is excrescent after r, as in bitter-n, q. v. ME. wivere, a serpent, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1010. — AF. wivre (also guivere); see Notes on E. Etym. p. 470; OF. wivre, a serpent, viper, esp. in blazon; see Roquefort and Burguy; mod. F. givre, a viper. Burguy says it was also formerly spelt wivre, and that it is still spelt voivre in some F. dialects. — L. uipeira, a viper; see Viper. ¶ The spelling with w in OF. was due to Germanic influence; as if from an OHG. **wīpera*, borrowed from L. uipeira. Doublet, viper.

XEBEC, a small three-masted vessel used in the Mediterranean. (Span.—Turk.) In Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. — Span. xabeque, a xebec. So also Port. zabeco, F. chebec. — Turk. sumbakī, written sunbakī, 'a kind of Asiatic ship;' Rich. Dict. p. 852. He also gives Pers. sumbuk, a small ship; Arab. sumbūk, a small boat, a pinnace. See Devic, Supp. to Littré, s. v. chebec, which is the F. form; he notes also Port. xabeco, Ital. zambeco, the latter form retaining the nasal m, which is lost in the other languages. He adds that the word sumbekī is given in the first ed. of Meninski's Thesaurus (1680); and that the mod. Arab. word is shabbāk; see Dozy, Glossaire, p. 352.

XYLOBALSAM, the wood (or dried twigs) of the balm-of-Gilead tree. (L.—Gk.) 'The Indians doe call it Xilo, and we do call the same Balsamo;' Frampton, tr. of Monardes, fol. 7, back. Evidently an error, as the word occurs in Pliny. Spelt xylobalsamum in Holland, tr. of Pliny. — L. xylobalsamum; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. xii. c. 25. — Gk. ξύλοβάλσαμον, the wood of the balsam tree. — Gk. ξύλο, for ξύλον, wood; and βάλσαμον, resin of the βάλσαμος, or balsam-tree, a word of Semitic origin; see Balsam. From ξύλον we also have xylo-graphy, engraving on wood.

Y

Y-, prefix. (E.) This prefix is nearly obsolete, being only retained in the archaic words y-clept (called), y-wis (certainly). The ME. forms are y-, i-; the latter being frequently written I (as a capital). — AS. ge-, an extremely common prefix, both of sbs. and verbs. [In verbs it was prefixed, not only to the pp. (as in mod. G. and in Middle-English), but also to the past tense, to the infinitive, or indeed occasionally to any part of the verb, without appreciably affecting the sense. In the word y-wis, certainly, many editors have ignorantly mistaken it for the pronoun I; see Ywis. It appears as e- in the word e-nough; and as a- in the word a-ware.] + Du. ge-, prefix; G. ge-; OHG. ka-, ki-; Goth. ga-. As regards usage, it resembles L. com-, con-, for cum, with; but the forms can hardly be reconciled.

YACHT, a swift pleasure-boat. (Du.) Pron. yot. 'One of his yachts;' Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 1, 1661. In Phillips, ed. 1706; also in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, where it is badly spelt yacht; Bailey has yatch. — Du. jagt, formerly spelt jacht; 'een Iacht, ofte [or] See-roovers Schip, a pinace, or a pirate's ship,' Hexham. 'Jagt, a yacht;' Sewel. Named from its speed; cf. Du. jagten (formerly jachten), to speed, to hunt; jagt (formerly jacht), a hunting. — Du. jagen, 'to hunt or to chase deere, hares, &c.;' Hexham. + G. jagen, to hunt. Der. yacht-er, yacht-ing.

YAK, the name of a bovine quadruped. (Thibet.) In a Thibetan Dict., by H. A. Jäschke, p. 668, we are told that the Thibet. word is gyag, a male yak, the female being called po-gyag. The symbol γ is used to denote a peculiar Thibetan sound.

YAM, a large esculent tuber, resembling the potato. (Port.—W. African.) Mentioned in Cook's Voyages (Todd); ed. 1777, i. 146; and by H. Pitman in 1689, in Arber's Eng. Garner, vii. 367. — Port. inhame, a yam; not given in Vieyra, but noted in Webster and in Littré. Littré gives the F. form as iguame, which he says is borrowed from the Port. inhame; and adds: 'it was the Portuguese who first found the yam used as an object of culture, first on the coast of Africa, afterwards in India and Malacca, and gave it its name; but the language whence it was taken is unknown.' It is really W. African; see Hakluyt's Voyages (1599), v. ii. pt. 2. p. 129; where the African name is given as inamia, in Benin; under the date 1588. Called ñames in Minshew's Span. Dict. (1623). See Notes on E. Etym. p. 323. 'The country [Benin] abounds with yams;' Voyages, 1745; ii. 707. The Malay name is ubi; Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 21.

YANKEE, a citizen of New England, or (later) of the United States. (Dutch?) The word occurs as early as 1765. Webster cites: 'From meanness first this Portsmouth Fankee rose, And still to meanness all his conduct flows,' Oppression, A Poem by an American, Boston, 1765. We also find in the same: 'Commonly considered to be a corrupt pronunciation of the word English, or of the F. word Anglais, by the native Indians of America. According to Thierry, a corruption of Jankin, a dimin. of John, a nickname given to the English colonists of Connecticut by the Dutch settlers of New York,' [which may be partly correct]. Note that a Captain Fanky, commanding a Dutch ship, is mentioned several times in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1699, i. 38, 39. Again, a Dutch boat seems to have been called a yanky by Smollett, Sir L. Greaves, ch. iii (Davies).  $\beta$ . Dr. Wm. Gordon, in his Hist. of the American War, ed. 1789, vol. i. pp. 324, 325, says it was a favourite cant word in Cambridge, Mass., as early as 1713, and that it meant 'excellent,' as, a yankee good horse, yankee good cider, &c. He supposes that it was adopted by the students there as a by-word, and, being carried by them from the college, obtained currency in the other New England colonies, until at length it was taken up in other parts of the country, and applied to New Englanders generally as a term of slight reproach. Cf. Lowland Sc. yankie, a sharp, clever, forward woman; yanker, an agile girl, an incessant speaker; yanker, a smart stroke, a great falsehood, a bounce; yank, a sudden and severe blow, a sharp stroke; yanking, active, pushing (Jamieson). Without the nasal, there is also Lowland Sc. yack, to talk precipitately and indistinctly, yaike, a stroke or blow.  $\gamma$ . The reference in 1765 may well be to Portsmouth in New Hampshire, not far to the N. of Boston; and Thierry may be right in supposing it to be a Dutch nickname. I accept the suggestion made by Dr. H. Logeman, that Yankee was formed (like Chinee from Chinese, &c.) from the Du. Jan Kees, a familiar form of John Cornelius. Both Jan and Kees are very common Du. names, and both were familiarly used as terms of contempt; see N. and Q. 10 S. iv. 509, v. 15. Cf. EFries. Jan, John, and Kēs, Cornelius (Koolman). The EFries. kēs also meant 'cheese,' and it is remarkable that Ascham uses John Cheese as a term of contempt; as in—'Away, good Peek-goos! hens, John Cheese!' The Scholemaster, ed. Arber, bk. i. p. 54.

YAP, to yelp, bark. (E.) 'The yapping of a cur,' L'Estrange, tr. of Quevedo, p. 243 (Todd). Yap is imitative; so also yaup, the Lowland Sc. equivalent of yelp (Jamieson). The Lowland Sc. yaff also occurs, which is a variant of yap. The F. japper, 'to bark, to yawl,' Cot., is of similar origin. Cf. EFries. and Low G. jappen, to gasp; Norm. dial. japer, to yap (Duméril).

YARD (1), an enclosed space. (E.) ME. yard, Chaucer, C. T. 15181 (B 4365). AS. geard, an enclosure, court; Grein, i. 493. + Du. gaard, a yard, garden; Icel. garðr (whence prov. E. garth); Dan. gaard; Swed. gård; Goth. gards, a house; allied to Goth. garda, a field, OHG. gart, garto, whence G. garten. + Russ. gorod, a town; L. hortus; Gk. χόρος, a court-yard, enclosure; OIrish gort, a field.  $\beta$ . From the Teut. type *\*gardo*, m.; Idg. type *\*ghortos*, a yard, court, enclosure. But the connexion with Gk. χόρος is uncertain. See GIRD (1). Der. court-yard, orchard. From the same root are garden, gird (1), gird-le; horti-culture; as well as cohort, court, curtain, &c. Doublets, garden, prov. E. garth.

YARD (2), a rod, an E. measure of 36 inches, a cross-beam on a mast for spreading square sails. (E.) ME. jerde, yerde, a stick, Chaucer, C. T. 149; also a yard in length, id. 1052 (A 1050). AS. gyrd, gerd, a stick, rod; Grein, i. 536. + Du. garde, a twig, rod; G. gerde, a rod, switch; OHG. gerta, kerta. Teut. type **gardjā*, f. Allied to O. Bulgarian žrūdī (Russ. jerde), a rod. But not to Goth. gards, a goad. See Streitberg, § 125 (4). Der. yard-arm, the arm (i. e. the half) of a ship's yard, from the mast to the end of it.

YARE, ready. (E.) AS. adj. in Temp. v. 224; as adv., readily, quickly, Temp. i. 1. 7. ME. fare, Will. of Palerne, 895, 1963, 3265; yare, Rob. of Glouc. p. 52, l. 1213. AS. gearu, gearo, ready, quick, prompt; Grein, ii. 493. + Du. gaar, done, dressed (as meat); gaar, adv., wholly; Icel. garr, adj., ready; görva, gerua, gjörva, adj., quite, wholly; OHG. garo, karo, prepared, ready; G. gar, adv., wholly.  $\beta$ . Teut. type *\*garwoz*, adj., ready (Pick, iii. 102). Allied to Gear. Der. yare-ly, adv., Temp. i. 1. 4; also gear, garb (1), gar (2). Also (perhaps) yarr-ow, q. v.

YARN, spun thread, the thread of a rope. (E.) ME. yarn, žarn; žarne, threde, Filum; Prompt. Parv. p. 536. AS. gearn, yarn, Voc. 238. 27. + Du. garen; Icel., Dan., and Swed. garn; G. garn.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. type *\*garnom*, n., yarn, string, Fick, iii. 101. Further allied to Gk. χορδή, a string, orig. a string of gut; cf. Icel. görn, or garnir, guts (i. e. strings or cords); Lith. žarnos, guts; L. haru-, in haru-spex, inspector of entrails. See Cord, Chord. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 605.

YARROW, the plant milfoil. (E.) ME. jarowe, jarwe; Prompt. Parv. p. 536. AS. gærwæ, explained by 'millefolium'; Voc. 133. 32; spelt gearwe, id. 32. 36. + Du. gerw; G. garbe; MHG. garbe, garwe, OHG. garawa.  $\beta$ . Perhaps there is a reference to the old belief in the curative properties of the yarrow, which was supposed to be a great remedy for wounds; in Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 195, we are told that Achilles was the first person who applied it to the cure of sword-wounds; hence, indeed, its botanical name of Achillea millefolium. If so, we might connect it with the verb gearwian, to make ready, from the adj. gearo, ready, yare; see Yare. Thus yarrow = that which makes yare, or restores. But this is uncertain.

YATAGHAN, ATAGHAN, a dagger-like sabre, with doubly curved blade. (Turk.) Spelt ataghan in Byron, Giaour; see note 27.

Spelt yataghan or ataghan in F. also. — Turk. yātāghān, a yataghan; see Devic, and Pavet de Courteille, Dict. du Turc Oriental; spelt yātāghān, yātāghān, Zenker's Dict. pp. 947, 958.

YAW, to go unsteadily, bend out of its course, said of a ship. (Scand.—Du.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 120. The sense is to go aside, swerve, bend out of the course; see Phillips. — Icel. jaga, properly, to hunt; but used in the peculiarly specialised sense 'to move to and fro'; see Vigfusson. For the sound aw, cf. the derivation of mod. E. awe from Icel. agi. Cf. Dan. jage, Swed. jaga, to hunt. — Du. jagen, to hunt, drive, chase. See further under Yacht.

YAWL (1), a small boat. (Du.) In Anson's Voyages, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). 'Barges or yauls of different kinds;' Drummond's Travels (Letter, dated 1744), p. 87 (Todd). 'Like our Deal yalls;' W. Dampier, A New Voyage, i. 429. The word is common at Lowestoft. — Du. jol, a yawl, skiff; Sewel explains jol as 'a Jutland boat.' Cf. Dan. jolle; Swed. julle, a yawl. Hexham records MDu. iolleken, 'a small barke or boate.' The mod. Icel. form is jula.  $\beta$ . Prob. of Low G. origin. The Low G. forms are jelle, jolle, jülle (Schambach); also gelle, gölle, jölle (Koolman, s. v. jülle); of which the forms gelle, gölle seem older than the rest. A borrowing from L. galea seems possible. See Galley.

YAWL (2), to howl. (E.) 'There howling Scyllas, yawling round about;' Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, b. iv. st. 5. Also spelt yole, yowl (Halliwell). ME. goulen, Havelok, 164; joulen, Chaucer, C. T. Group A, 1278 (Six-text ed.); Wyclif, Micah, i. 8; jaulen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1453. Of imitative origin. Cf. EFries. jaulen, Low G. jaulen, to yawl; Du. jolen, to groan. + Icel. gaula, to low, bellow; Norweg. gaula, to bellow, low, roar (Aasen); Swed. dial. göla, gjöla. Of imitative origin, like yell. See Yell.

YAWN, to gape. (E.) Spelt yane in Palsgrave. ME. geonien, Ancrén Riwe, p. 242; whence E. yawn, by lengthening of o to open long o; cf. E. frost, broth. [Cf. also ME. ganien, Chaucer, Six-text ed., Group H, l. 35; where Tyrwhitt (l. 16984) has galpeth.] AS. geonian; tr. of Bede, Hist. iv. 19; variant of ginian, tr. of Orosius, iii. 3. From gin-, weak grade of -ginan (pt. t. -gān), in comp. be-ginan, to yawn (Grein). Cf. AS. gānian, to yawn; Grein, i. 370. + OHG. ginēn, to yawn. Cf. Icel. gina, to gape, pt. t. gein; MDu. gienien, 'to yawne,' Hexham; Du. geeuwen, to yawn. From Idg.  $\sqrt{\text{GHEI}}$ , whence also L. hi-āre, to gape; Slav. root zi-, to gape, in Miklosich. Der. yawn-ing. From the same root, hi-at-us.

YE, the nom. pl. of the 2nd personal pronoun. (E.) The nom. pl. is properly ye, whilst the dat. and acc. pl. is you; the gen. pl. is properly your, now only used as a possessive pronoun. But in mod. E. ye is almost disused, and you is constantly used in the nominative, not only in the plural, but in the singular, as a substitute for thou. 'Ye in me, and I in you,' John, xiv. 20; this shows the correct use. ME. ye, je, nom.; your, jour, gen.; you, jou, yow, dat. and acc. AS. gē, nom.; eower, gen.; eow, dat. and acc.; Grein, i. 263, 375. + Du. gij, ye; u, you; Icel. ēr, ier, ye; yðar, your; yðr, you; Dan. and Swed. i, ye (also you); G. ihr; OHG. ir; ye, iwar, iower, your, iu, you; Goth. jūs, ye; izwara, your; izwis, you. We also have the AS. dual form git, ye two.  $\beta$ . The common Idg. base is yū-, whence also Lithuan. jūs, ye, Gk. ὑ-μεῖς, ye, Skt. yū-yam, ye. See Brugmann, ii. § 436.

YEA, an affirmative adverb; verily. (E.) The distinction between ME. je, ja, yea, and jis, jes, jus, yes, is commonly well marked; the former is the simple affirmative, giving assent, whilst the latter is a strong asseveration, often accompanied by an oath; see Will. of Palerne, &c. Spelt ye, Chaucer, C. T. 9219 (E 1345). OFries. jē, AS. gēa, geā, yea; John, xxi. 15. + Du., Dan., Swed., and G. ja; Icel. jā; Goth. ja, jai; W. ie; Gk. ῃ, truly. Der. ye-s, q. v.

YEAN, EAN, to bring forth lambs. (E.) 'The new-yeand lamb;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, iii. 1. Spelt ean in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 88; ME. enen; 'Enyn, or brynge forthe kyndelyngys, Feto;' Prompt. Parv. p. 140. The difference between ean and yea is easily explained; in the latter, the prefixed y represents the very common AS. prefix ge-, readily added to any verb without affecting the sense; see Y-, prefix, above. AS. ēanian, to ean, Lambeth Psalter, Ps. lxxvii. 70; ge-ēanian, to yea, of which the only clear trace appears to be in the expression ge-ēane eowa = the ewes great with young, Gen. xxxiii. 13.  $\beta$ . The AS. ēa answers to Germanic au, and the suffix -ian to Germ. -ōjan (Sievers, Gr. § 411); so that the Germ. type is *\*aunōjan*; a type which also appears in Dutch dial. oonen, to ean; see Franck. This appears to be derived from a form *\*au-no-*, meaning 'lamb;' which some consider as being allied to Goth. aw-is, L. ou-is, a sheep, AS. eowu, a ewe. See Ewe. Scheller, in his Bavarian Dict. p. 1, cites the forms āen, āuen, āuwen, to yea, produce lambs, which are immediately derived from ā, āu, āuw, a ewe. Cf. Kluge, s. v. Schaf.  $\gamma$ . But Kluge and Lutz (Eng. Etym.) consider Teut. *\*auno-* as equivalent to *\*agwno-*, corresponding to L. agnus, a lamb, and to Celtic type *\*ogno-*, a lamb, as seen in OIrish ūan, W. oan, Bret. oan, a lamb. So also Swed. dial. āna, ōna, to yearn; from ōn, a lamb (Rietz, p. 114). Also Manx eayney, to yearn, from eayn, a lamb. Thus the sense is merely 'to produce lambs.' Brugmann, i. §§ 671, 704. Der. yeen-ling, a new-born lamb; with double dimin. suffix -l-ing.

YEAR, the time of the earth's revolution round the sun. (E.) ME. jeer, yeer, jer, yer; Chaucer, C. T. 601, where it appears as a plural. This sb. was formerly unaltered in the plural, like sheep, deer; hence the mod. phrase 'a two-year old colt.' The pl. year is common in Shak. Temp. i. 2. 53, &c. AS. gēar, gēr, a year; pl. gēar; Grein, i. 496. +Du. jaar; Icel. ár; Dan. aar, pl. aar; Swed. år; G. jahr; OHG. jār; Goth. jēr. β. All from Teut. type **yērom*, n., a year. Further allied to Gk. ἔπος, a season, a year; ἔρα, a season, an hour. — √YĒ, to go, pass; an extension from √EI, to go; whence also Skt. yātu-, time. See Hour. Brugmann, i. § 308, ii. § 587. Der. year-ly, adj. and adv.; year-ling, an animal a year old, with double dimin. suffix -l-ing. Allied to hour.

YEARN (1), to desire strongly, be eager for. (E.) ME. jernen, P. Plowman, B. i. 35. Cf. AS. giernan, to yearn, be desirous; later gyrnan, Grein, i. 537; formed (by the usual change of eo to ie) from AS. georn, adj., desirous, eager, id. i. 500. Cf. also georndon, desired; A. S. Chron. an. 1011; which better agrees with the ME. form. +Icel. girna, to desire; from gjarn, eager; Goth. gairnjan, to long for, from -gairns, desirous, only in the comp. faihu-gairns, covetous, lit. desirous of money. β. The verb answers to a Teut. type **ger-njan-*, from the adj. **ger-noz*, desirous of. Again, the adj. is formed (with Idg. suffix -no) from the base GER, appearing in OHG. gerōn, kerōn, mod. G. be-gehren, to long for. — √GHER, to desire; whence also Gk. χαίρειν, to rejoice, χαρά, joy, L. hor-ior, I urge, Skt. hary, to desire. Der. yearning-ly. ⚡ Not connected with earnest (1), but with hor-tatory.

YEARN (2), to grieve. (E.) This verb, not often well explained, occurs several times in Shak.; and it is remarkable that Shak. never uses yearn in the sense 'to long for,' i. e. he never uses it in the sense of the verb yearn (1) above. It is often spelt earn or ern in old editions. The proper sense is intransitive, to grieve, mourn, Hen. V, ii. 3. 3, ii. 3. 6; Jul. Cæs. ii. 2. 129; it is also transitive, to grieve, vex, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 45; Rich. II, v. 5. 76; Hen. V, iv. 3. 26. Other authors use it besides Shakespeare; as in the following examples. 'I must do that my heart-strings yearn [mourn] to do;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 4 (Judas); and see Richardson. Nares gives yearnful, grievous, melancholy; so also prov. E. earnful (Halliwell, Pegge). β. In the form jern or yearn, it is prob. the same as yearn (1) above; with a change of sense from 'desire' to 'regret.' γ. In the form ern or earn it answers to AS. eorn- as found in eorn-igende, murmuring, eornfullnes, anxiety, Matt. xiii. 22. From a verb eornian, which seems to be a mere variant of geornian, to yearn for, desire. If so, yearn (2) is merely yearn (1) with a change of sense. Cf. 'His heart did earne (i. e. yearn) To proue his puissance;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 3. ⚡ Possibly influenced by ME. ermen, to grieve; see Gloss. to Chaucer.

YEAST, the froth of malt liquors in fermentation, a preparation which raises dough. (E.) ME. jeest. 'Jeest, berme, Spuma;' Prompt. Parv. p. 537. AS. gist; spelt gyst, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 118, l. 10. +Du. gest; Icel. jast, jastr; Swed. jäst; [Dan. gjær]; G. gäsch, gischt, MHG. jest, gest, gist. β. The Teut. type is **yes-t-*, formed (with suffix -t-) from the base YES; to ferment, appearing in MSwed. gäsa, OHG. jesan, MHG. jesen, gesen, gern, whence mod. G. gähren (causal). — √YES, to foam, ferment; whence Skt. nir-yāsa-, exudations of trees, Gk. ζέειν, to boil, ζεῖρός, fervent. Der. yeast-y, spelt yesty in Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 53, Hamlet, v. 2. 199, just as yeast is also written yest, Wint. Tale, iii. 3. 94; the sense is 'frothy.' [Not allied to AS. ýst, a storm.]

YEDE, went. (E.) Obsolete. Also spelt yode, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 2. Spenser, unaware that yede and yode are varying forms of the same past tense, and that the verb is only used in the past tense, wrongly uses yede or yed as an infinitive mood (!); F. Q. i. 11. 5; ii. 4. 2. ME. jede, yede, Chaucer, C. T., G 1141, 1281; yode, Sir Eglamour (Thornton Romances), 531; jeode, jede, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 381, 1025; eode, jeode, Rob. of Glouc. pp. 53, 79; ll. 1217, 1766. The proper form is eode (Stratmann); it is probable that the forms yede, yode answer rather to AS. ge-ēode, with prefixed ge-, as in the case of yeen and ean, see Yean. AS. ēode, went, only in the past tense; pl. ēodon; Grein, i. 256. β. The pl. ēodon may be compared with the Goth. pl. iddjēdon, they went. The Goth. iddja, sing., answers to Skt. ayāt, he went; from the base yā, to go, allied to √EI, to go, as in Gk. εἶ-μι, I shall go. See iddja in Uhlenbeck; Streitberg, § 190; Brugmann, i. § 309 (2); ii. § 478. Cf. Year.

YELK, the same as Yolk, q. v.

YELL, to utter a loud noise, to howl. (E.) ME. zellen, yellen, Chaucer, C. T. 2674, 15395 (A 2672, B 4579). AS. gellan, giellan, gyllan, to yell, cry out, resound; Grein, i. 423. +Du. gillen; Icel. gella; also gjalla (pt. t. gall); Dan. gjælle, gjalde (for gialle); Swed. gälla, to ring, resound; G. gellen, to resound. β. All from the Teut. type **gellan-*, pt. t. **gall*; allied to Teut. type **galan-*, to sing, as seen in Icel. gala, to sing (pt. t. göl, pp. galinn), AS. galan (pt. t. göl), OHG. galan, to sing; see Nightingale. Der. yell, sb., Oth. i. 1. 75; also stan-iel, q. v.

YELLOW, of a bright golden colour. (E.) ME. yellow, Chaucer, C. T. 2168, 2172 (A 2166, 2170). Also spelt zelu, zeoluh, &c.; Stratmann. AS. geolō, geolu (acc. fem. geolwe), Grein, i. 497. +Du. geel; G. gelb, OHG. gelo. β. The Teut. type is **gelwoz*; Idg. type **ghelwos*, Fick, iii. 103. Further allied to L. heluus, light yellow; Russ. zelenii, green, Gk. χλόη, young verdure of trees, χλωρός, green, Skt. hari-, green, yellow. Further allied to Gall (1). Der. yellow-ness; yellow fever, a malignant fever that often turns the skin yellow; yellow-ish, spelt yellowyshe in Palsgrave; yellow-ish-ness. Also yellow-hammer, q. v.; yel-k, yol-k.

YELLOW-HAMMER, YELLOW-AMMER, a song-bird, named from its yellow colour. (E.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Spelt yellow-hamer, Harrison, Desc. of England, bk. iii. ch. 2 (end). Beyond doubt, the h is an ignorant insertion, due to substitution of a known for an unknown word, irrespective of the sense. Yet the name is E., and very old. The former part of the word (yellow) is explained above; the latter part is the AS. amere. In a list of birds, we find: 'Scorellus, amere,' Voc. 260. 27. Much older forms are AS. omer, Corpus gloss., 1810; emer, Epinal gloss., 909. Cognate words occur both in Du. and G. +MDu. emmerick, emmerlinck, 'a kind of merlin or a hawk,' Hexham; Low G. geel-merken, a yellow-ammer; G. gelb-ammer, gold-ammer, yellow-ammer, gold-ammer; also emmerling, a yellow-ammer; OHG. amero, an ammer.

YELP, to bark, bark shrilly. (E.) ME. zelpen, gelpen, only in the sense to boast, boast noisily; but it is the same word. 'I kepe not of armes for to yelpe;' Chaucer, C. T. 2240 (A 2238). AS. gilpan, gielpen, gylpan, to boast, exult; orig. to talk noisily; Grein, i. 509. A strong verb; pt. gealp, pp. golpen; whence gilp, gielp, gelp, gylp, boasting, arrogance, id. +Icel. gjálpa, to yelp; cf. gjálfra, to roar as the sea; MHG. gelfen. β. From a base GELP, to make a loud noise, allied to Yell. And cf. Yap. Der. yelp, sb.

YEOMAN, a man of small estate, an officer of the royal household. (E.) ME. zeman, yeman, zoman; in Chaucer, C. T. 101, the Lansdowne MS. has zoman, whilst the rest have zeman or yeman. In Sir Amadas (pr. in Weber's Met. Rom. vol. iii), l. 347, it is written yomon; but the usual spelling is zeman, as above, and as in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 534 (or 535). In Will. of Palerne, l. 3649, however, we have zomen, pl.; and zoman, yoman, sing., Cursor Mundi, 3077, 7822. I know not where to find an example earlier than the 13th century. β. The variation of the vowel in the ME. forms is curious, but we find other examples almost as remarkable; thus we find ME. chēsen, to choose, from AS. cēosan, and mod. E. choose, answering to AS. cēosan, with the stress on ō, instead of ē. So also AS. gēar, E. year, as compared with AS. geāra, E. yore. And the AS. scēotan gives both ME. shēten and mod. E. shoot.

γ. The word does not appear in AS.; but it would (judging by the foregoing examples) take the form **gēa-man*, regularly corresponding to OFriesic gā-man, a villager; and, as the AS. ēa (OFr. ā) answers to G. au, the first syllable is cognate with G. gau, Goth. gawi. [The alleged AS. gā is incorrect. Kemble, Saxons in England, b. i. c. 3, treats of the gā or district, though he gives no reference to show where the word occurs; Leo (A. S. Glossar) gives gā, a district, as in Ohigagā, Noxgagā, but we cannot draw such an inference from these examples.] It will be observed that the AS. assumed form **gēa* would produce ME. yē-, whilst the form **geā* would produce yō-; as in year, yore. δ. And in fact, we find AS. Sūðr-gēa, i. e. Southern district, in the A. S. Chron. an. 836, 855; as well as other examples, for which see H. M. Chadwick's Studies in O. English, p. 147, in Trans. Camb. Phil. Soc. 1899, vol. iv. pt. 2. Cf. OFriesic gā, gō (nom. pl. gāe), a district, village; whence gāman, a villager; gāfolk, people of a village. Also Du. gouw, gouwe, a province; MDu. gouwe, 'a hamlet where houses stand scattered, a countrie village, or a field; goograve or gograef, a field-judge; goy-lieden or goy-mannen, arbitratours, or men appointed to take up a businesse between man and man;' Hexham. Also Low G. goē, gohe, a tract of country, go-grüve, a judge in one of the 4 districts of Bremen, Brem. Wörterbuch; Bavarian gäu, whence gäumann, a peasant. Cf. also G. gau, a province, OHG. gowi, gewi, Goth. gawi. Der. yeoman-ry, where -ry is used as a collective suffix; spelt yomanry, Dictes of the Philosophers, pr. by Caxton, fol. 42 b.

YERK, in Shak. Hen. V, iv. 7. 83; equivalent to Jerk, q. v.

YES, a word denoting affirmation. (E.) A much stronger form than yea, and often accompanied, in old authors, by an oath. ME.

jus, jis, P. Plowman, B. v. 125; 'jis, be marie,' Will. of Palerne, 1567; 'jis, bi crist,' id. 5149. AS. gise, gese; 'gise, lā gese'=yes, O, yes; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 6; cap. xvi. § 4. Probably contracted from gēa swā, yea, so; cf. AS. nese, a form of denial, for ne swā, not so.

YESTERDAY, the day last past. (E.) ME. yistirdai, Wyclif, John, iv. 52. AS. geostra, giestra, gystra (yester-), Grein, i. 501; and dæg, a day; commonly in the acc. geostran dæg, yesterday. + Du. gisteren, dag van gister; G. gestern; Goth. gistra-dagis, tomorrow. β. Cf. L. hester-nus, adj. belonging to yesterday, where the syllable hes- is cognate with Icel. gær, Dan. gaar, Swed. gär, L. heri, Gk. χθής, Skt. hyas, yesterday. The suffix -ter- is a comparative form, as in in-ter-ior, ex-ter-ior, &c. Brugmann, i. §§ 624, 923. Der. Similarly, yester-night.

YET, moreover, besides, hitherto, still, nevertheless. (E.) ME. yit, yet, yet, Chaucer, C. T. 565 (A 563). AS. git, gēt, giet, gyt; Grein, i. 511. + OFries. ieta, eta, ita, yet; mod. Fries. jietje (Rich-tofen); MHG. iezuo, ieze; whence G. jetzt, now. Origin obscure.

YEW, an evergreen tree. (E.) Spelt yowe in Palsgrave. ME. ew, Chaucer, C. T. 2925 (A 2923). AS. iū, to translate L. taxus, Voc. 138. 14; spelt iū, 49. 38. + Icel. yr; G. eibe; OHG. iwa. β. The Teut. type is **iūwā*, f., or iūwō, m. The Celtic type is **iwo-*, as in Olrish eo, W. yw, Corn. hiuiz, Bret. ivin, yew (Stokes-Fick, p. 46). Of unknown origin. ¶ Distinct from ivy.

YEX, to hiccough. (E.) Prov. E. yex (Halliwell); spelt yeske in Palsgrave. ME. yexen, yesken, yoxen, Chaucer, C. T. 4149 (A 4151). '3yxyn, yexen, Singulcio, Singulto'; Prompt. Parv. p. 539. AS. giscian, to sob, sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. i. met. 1. c. 2. Cf. OLow G. geskon, to yawn (Gallée). Probably an extension from the Teut. base **gi-*, weak grade of **gei-*, base of gi-nan, to gape; just as L. hiscere, to yawn, gape, is extended from L. hi-äre. See Yawn, Hiatus.

YIELD, to resign, grant, produce, submit, give way. (E.) The orig. sense was 'to pay.' ME. gelden, yelden, yelden; a strong verb; pt. t. yald, pp. yolden. Chaucer has un-yolden, C. T. 2644 (A 2642). In P. Plowman, B. xii. 193, we have both yald (strong) and yelte (weak), as forms of the pt. t. AS. gielðan, geldan, gildan, to pay, restore, give up; pt. t. geald, pl. guldon, pp. golden, Grein, i. 508. + Du. gelden; Icel. gjalda, pt. t. galt, pp. goldinn; Dan. gjelde; Swed. gälla (for **gälda*), to be of consequence, be worth; G. gelten, to be worth, pt. t. galt, pp. gegolten; Goth. -gildan, only in the compounds fra-gildan, ūs-gildan, to pay back. β. All from Teut. type **geld-an-*, to be worth, to pay for, repay. Allied to Olrish gell, a pledge; gell-aim, I promise, engage (Stokes-Fick, p. 113). Der. yield, sb., yield-ing, -ly; also guild or gild; but hardly guilt.

YOKE, the frame of wood joining oxen for drawing, a similar frame for carrying pails, a mark of servitude, a pair. (E.) ME. yok, yok, Chaucer, C. T. 7989 (E 113). AS. geoc, gioc, ioc, a yoke; Grein, i. 497. + Du. juk; Icel. ok; Dan. aag; Swed. ok; Goth. juk; G. joch, OHG. joh. Teut. type **yokom*, n.; Idg. type **yugom*, n. + W. iau; L. iugum (whence Ital. giogo, Span. yogo, F. joug); Russ. igo; Lithuan. jungas; Gk. ζυγόν; Skt. yuga-, a yoke, pair, couple. β. All from the Idg. type **yug-om*, a yoke; lit. 'that which joins.' From **yug-*, weak grade of **YEUG* (Teut. YEUK), to join; see Join. Der. yoke, verb, Two Gent. i. 1. 40; yoke-fellow, companion, K. Lear, iii. 6. 39.

YOKEL, a country bumpkin. (E.) 'This was not done by a yokel'; Dickens, Oliver Twist, ch. 31. Lowl. Sc. yochel, a stupid, awkward person (E. D. D.); prov. E. yokel, the plough-boy who does the day's ploughing or yoking; W. Yksh. (id.); from yoke, the time during which a ploughman and his team work at a stretch (id.). Cf. ME. yok, to attach a team to a cart, Barbour's Bruce, x. 215. Note yokelet, an old name (in Kent) for a little farm or manor; noticed by Somner in his A. S. Dict., s. v. Iocelet.

YOLK, YELK, the yellow part of an egg. (E.) Spelt yelke in Palsgrave. ME. zolke, Morte Arthure, 3283; jelke, Prompt. Parv. p. 537. AS. geolca, giolca, the yolk; Grein, i. 497. Lit. 'the yellow part.' - AS. geolu, yellow; see Yellow.

YON, at a distance. (E.) Properly an adj., as in prov. E., in which such phrases as 'yon house' and 'yon field' are common. Common in Shak., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 188, &c. ME. yon, P. Plowman, C. xxi. 149 (also yeon, and even yond, yeond, see the footnote). AS. geon, yon; 'tō geonre byrg'=to yon city; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, ed. Sweet, p. 443, l. 25; where geon-re is the dat. fem. + Icel. enn, the (orig. that), used as the def. art., and often miswritten hinn; see Vigfusson's remarks on hinn; Goth. jains, yon, that; G. jener, MHG. gener, yon, that. β. The Teut. types appear to be **yainoz, *yinoz*; which render difficult a relation to Skt. yas, who, that; cf. Brugmann, i. § 308. Der. yond, adv., Temp. i. 2. 409 (also incorrectly used instead of yon, Temp. ii. 2. 20), from AS. geond, adv., but often used as a prep., Grein, i. 497; cf. Goth. jaind, adv., there, John, xi. 8. Hence be-yond, q. v. Also yond-er (not in AS.), ME. yonder, adv., Chaucer, C. T. 5438 (B 1018); cf. Goth. jaindrē, adv., yonder, there, Luke, xi. 37.

YORE, in old time, long ago. (E.) ME. zore, yore, Chaucer, C. T. 4594 (B 174). AS. geāra, formerly (with the usual change from ā to long o, as in stān>stone); Grein, i. 496. Orig. geāra, gen. pl. of gēar, a year, so that the sense was 'of years,' i. e. in years past; the gen. case being often used to express the time when, as in dāges=by day, &c. See Year.

YOU, pl. of second pers. pronoun; see Ye. Der. you-r, q. v.

YOUNG, not long born, new to life. (E.) ME. jong, yong, yung. In Chaucer, C. T. 79, we have the indef. form yong (misprinted yonge in Tyrwhitt); whilst in l. 7 we have the def. form yongē (dissyllabic). AS. geong, giung, iung (and even geng, ging), young; Grein, i. 499. + Du. jong; Icel. ungr, jungr; Dan. and Swed. ung; G. jung; OHG. junc; Goth. juggs (written for jungs). β. All from a Teut. type **yungoz*, a contracted form of **yuwungoz*, answering to the cognate Olrish dac, W. ieuanc, young, and to the L. form iunencus, an extension (with Idg. suffix -kos) from iunien-is, young. γ. The base **yuwen-*, young, occurs in L. iunienis, young, Skt. yuvan, young, Russ. iunui, young, Lithuan. jaunas, young. [The lit. sense is perhaps 'protected,' from **YEU*, to guard; cf. Skt. yu, to keep back, L. iunūre, to aid, help; Fick, i. 732.] Brugmann, i. § 280. Der. young, sb.; young-ish; young-ling, Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 57, ME. jonglyng, Wyclif, Mark, xvi. 5, with double dimin. suffix -l-ing; young-ster, as to which see Spinster. Also younker, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 1. 11, and in G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. viii. l. 11; borrowed from Du. jonker, also written jonkheer, compounded of jong, young, and heer, a lord, sir, gentleman; Hexham has MDu. jonck-heer or joncker, 'a young gentleman or a joncker' (sic). Also you-th, q. v.

YOUR, possess. pron. of 2nd person. (E.) Properly the possess. pron. of the 2nd person plural, but commonly used instead of thy, which was considered too familiar, and has almost passed out of use in speech. ME. your, your, Chaucer, C. T. 2251 (A 2249). Orig. the gen. pl. of the 2nd pers. pronoun; a use which occurs even in ME., as: 'ich am joure aller hefd'=I am head of you all, P. Plowman, C. xxii. 473; where aller=AS. ealra, gen. pl. of eall, all. AS. eower, your; orig. gen. of gē, ye; see Ye. Der. your-s, ME. yours, Chaucer, C. T. 13204 (B 1464), from AS. eōwres, gen. sing. masc. and neut. of eower, poss. pronoun; Grein, i. 263. Also yourself (see Self).

YOUTH, early life. (E.) ME. youth, Chaucer, C. T. 463 (A 461); older forms juweðe, Ancrén Riwe, p. 156, l. 22; juzeðe, Layamon, 6566; jeozede, id. 19837. AS. geogud, giogud, youth, Grein, i. 502. [The middle g first turned to w or 3, and then disappeared.] + OSax. juguð; Du. jeugd; G. jugend, OHG. jugum; we also find OHG. jungedi. Cf. Goth. junda, youth. β. The AS. geogud stands for **geogud*<**geogund*, Teut. type **yugundiz*, for **yuwunþiz*, f.; from Idg. base **yuwan-ti-*, which is from **yuwen-*, young; see Young. Cf. L. iumenta, Skt. yuvatā, youth. We also find a later ME. form jungthe, youth, Prompt. Parv. p. 539, jongthe, Wyclif, Mark, x. 20. Der. youth-ful, -ly, youth-ful-ness.

YOWL; a variant of Yawl (2); q. v.

YUCCA, a genus of American liliaceous plants. (Span.—Caribbean). 'They have also another kynde of rootes, whiche they call Iucca;' R. Eden, First Three E. Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 67; where they refers to the people of Hayti. Spelt yuca, tr. of Acosta, bk. iv. c. 17.—Span. yuca, yucca. From the old (Caribbean) language as spoken in Hayti. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 346.

YULE, Christmas. (E.) 'Yu-batch, Christmas batch; yu-block or yule-block, Christmas block; yu-gams or yule-gams, Christmas games;' Ray's Gloss. of N. Country Words. Here yu is short for yule. ME. zole; 'the feste of zole,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 65, l. 6; whence zole-stok, a yule-stock or yule-log, Voc. 657. 6. AS. iula, geōla. Spelt iula, Grein, i. 148. Spelt geōla in the following: 'Se mōnað is nemned on Leden Decembris, and on ūre geðeode se ærra geōla, forðan ða mōnðas twegen syndon nemde anum naman, oðer se ærra geōla, oðer se æftera, forþan ðe hyra oðer ganged beforan ðæra [read ðære] sunnan ærþon þe heo cyrre hig tō ðæs dæges lenge, oðer æfter,' i. e. This month is named Decembris in Latin, and in our tongue the former Yule, because two months are named with one name; one is the former Yule, the other the after Yule, because one of them comes before the sun, viz. before it turns itself about [at the winter solstice] to the lengthening of day, whilst the other [January] comes after; MS. Cotton, Tib. B. 1, quoted in Hickes, Thesaurus, i. 212. Bede, De Temporum Ratione, cap. 13, has the same account (but in Latin), and calls the Yule-months Menses Giuli; i. e. he Latinises Yule as Giulus. Spelt geol, gehol, gehel, Laws of Ælfred, § 5, and § 43; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 64, note 54; i. 92, note 4; geohol, tr. of Bede, bk. iv. c. 19. The AS. form appears to represent a Teut. type **yeh-ol-oz*, or **yehw-loz*, m. + Icel. jöl; Dan. jul; Swed. jul. We may also note that, in a fragment of a Gothic calendar (pr. in Massmann's Ulfilas, p. 590), November appears to be called fruma jiuileis, which seems to mean 'the first Yule'; a name not necessarily inconsistent with the AS. use, since November may once have also been reckoned as a Yule-month. This Goth. form answers to Icel. jölir, December. ¶ Origin unknown; for guesses, see Uhlenbeck, Goth. Dict. The usual attempt to connect this word with E. wheel, AS. hwēol, Icel. hjöl, with the far-fetched explanation that the sun turns at the winter solstice, cannot be admitted, since an initial h or hw makes all the difference. Besides Yule did not denote the shortest day, but a season. Brugmann, i. § 681. Der. jolly.

YWIS, certainly. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 19. ME. ywis, Chaucer, C. T. 3277; iwis, Ancren Riwe, p. 270, l. 11. AS. gewis, adj., certain, gewistice, adv., certainly, Grein, i. 483. The adj. came to be used adverbially. + Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly; Icel. viss, certain; Dan. vis, certain; vist, certainly; Swed. viss, certain; visst, certainly; G. gewiss, certainly. β. The ge- is a mere prefix; see Y-. The adj. answers to a Teut. type **wissoz*, Idg. type **wid-tos*, an old pp. signifying 'known,' hence 'sure'; from **wid-*, weak grade of WEID, to know. See Wit, verb. Cf. Goth. wissa, I knew. Brugmann, i. § 794 e. ¶ It is particularly to be noted that the commonest form in MSS. is iwis, in which the prefix (like most other prefixes) is frequently written apart from the rest of the word, and not unfrequently the i is represented by a capital letter, so that it appears as I wis. Hence, by an extraordinary error, the I has often been mistaken for the 1st pers. pron., and the verb wis, to know, has been thus created, and is given in many dictionaries! But it is a pure fiction, and the more remarkable because there actually exists a ME. causal verb wissien, or wissen, but it means to teach, show, instruct. We should distinguish between the ME. words wit, wot, wistē, wist, I wissē, and i-wis.

Z

ZAMINDAR, ZEMINDAR, a land-holder, occupant of land. (Hind.—Pers.) Spelt zemindar in 1778 (Yule). Hind. zamindār, vernacularly jamindār, corruptly zemindār, an occupant of land, a land-holder; Wilson, Ind. Terms, p. 562.—Pers. zamīn, earth, land, soil; dār, holding, possessing, Rich. Dict. pp. 782, 646. Here Pers. zamīn is allied to L. humus, ground; and Pers. dār to Skt. dhr̥, to hold; see Homage and Firm.

ZANANA, ZENANA, female apartments. (Hind.—Pers.) Spelt zunana in 1761 (Yule). Hindustāni zanāna, vernacularly janāna, incorrectly zenana, the female apartments; sometimes, the females of a family.—Pers. zanān, women; pl. of zan, a woman. Allied to Gk. γυνή, a woman, and E. quean. H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 564; Rich. Dict. p. 783; Horn, § 668.

ZANY, a buffoon, a mimic. (Ital.—Gk.—Heb.) In L. L. L. v. 2. 463; and in Beaum. and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, ii. 6 (Bacha).—Mital. Zane, 'the name of Iohn, also a sillie Iohn, a gull, a noddie; used also for a simple vice, clowne, foole, or simple fellowe in a plaie'; Florio. Mod. Ital. Zanni; cf. OF. zani (Godefroy). Zane and Zanni are familiar forms of Giovanni, John.—Gk. ἰωάννης; John, i. 6.—Heb. Yōkhānān, i. e. the Lord graciously gave.—Heb. Yō, the Lord; and kānan, to show mercy. Der. zany, verb, Beaum. and Fletcher, Qu. of Corinth, i. 2 (Crates).

ZARIBA, ZAREEBA, ZEREBA, a temporary camp, fenced round with bushes, &c. (Arab.) Chiefly used in the Soudan.—Arab. zariba(t), 'a fold, a pen; an enclosure for cattle; den, or haunt of wild beasts; lurking-place of a hunter'; Rich. Dict. p. 775.

ZEAL, fervour, ardour. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt zele in Palsgrave; zeele in Caxton, Godfrey of Bologna, prol. p. 2, l. 8.—MF. zele, 'zeale,' Cot. Mod. F. zèle.—L. zēlum, acc. of zēlus, zeal.—Gk. ζῆλος, zeal, ardour. Doric ζᾶλος; Idg. type **yālos*; perhaps from yā, to drive, as in Skt. yā-tr̥, a driver (Prellwitz). Der. zeal-ous, L. L. L. v. 2. 116; zeal-ous-ly. Also zeal-ot, Selden's Table-Talk, s. v. Zealot, from MF. zelote, 'jealous, or zealous,' Cot., from L. zēlōtēs, Gk. ζηλωτής. And see jealous.

ZEBRA, a striped animal of the horse kind. (Port.—W. African.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Described in Purchas's Pilgrimage (1617), bk. vi. ch. i. § 2.—Port. zebra. (Also Span. zebra, cebra.) The animal is a native of S. Africa, and the name originated in Congo; see N. and Q. 9 S. v. 480. According to Littré, it is Ethiopian; he cites: 'Pecora, consensibus zebra, dicta,' Ludolph, Histor. Ethiop. i. 40. But Littré is mistaken as to the true source.

ZEBU, the humped domestic ox of India. (F.—Thibet.) See Zebu in Yule.—F. zébu, a name taken by Buffon from the exhibitors of such a beast at a French fair. A perversion of zobo, a name for a male hybrid between a yak-bull and a hill-cow (Yule).—Thibet. mdzo-po, the male of madzo, a mongrel bred of a yak-bull and a common cow; the female mongrel is called mdzo-mo.

ZECCHINO, a gold coin of Venice. (Ital.—Arab.) The pl. zecchins occurs in Sandys, Travels (1632), p. 3.—Ital. zecchino, a sequin.—Ital. secca, a mint (Florio).—Arab. sikka(t), pron. sikkah, a die for coins. Doublet, sequin.

ZED, the name of the letter Z. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. K. Lear, ii. 2. 69.—F. zède.—L. zēta.—Gk. ζῆτα. Doublet, izzard, q. v.

ZEDOARY, an East-Indian root resembling ginger. (F.—Low L.—Pers.) 'Zedoary, a spicy root, very like ginger, but of a sweeter scent, and nothing near so biting; it is a hot and dry plant, growing in the woods of Malabar in the E. Indies;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt zedoari, Hakluyt, Voy. vol. ii. pt. 1. 277; col. 1. [In old F., the name was corrupted to citoal, citoual, citouart (Roquefort); whence the ME. cetewale, Chaucer, C. T. 13691 (B 1951), on which see my note.]—MF. zedoaire, 'an East-Indian root which resembleth ginger'; Cot.—Low L. zedoaria.—Pers. zadwār, zidwār, zedoary; Rich. Dict. p. 771; or jadwār, zedoary, id. p. 794. The initial letter is sometimes the 13th, sometimes the 14th letter of the Pers. alphabet; see Palmer, Pers. Dict., col. 314.

ZEMSTVO, a local elective assembly. (Russ.) Russ. zemstvo, collective sb., the county-courts (Reiff).

ZENITH, the point of the heavens directly overhead. (F.—Span.—Arab.) ME. senith, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, i. 18. 4.—OF. cenith (Littré); mod. F. zénith.—Span. zenit, formerly written zenith, as in Minshew's Span. Dict.—Arab. samt, a way, road, path, tract, quarter; whence samt-ur-ras, the zenith, vertical point of the heavens, also as-samt, an azimuth; Rich. Dict. p. 848. Samt was pronounced semt, of which Span. zenith or zenit is a corruption; in the sense of zenith, it is an abbreviation for samt-ur-ras or semt-er-ras, lit. the way overhead, from ras, the head, Rich. Dict. p. 715. The word azimuth, q. v., is from the same source. See Devic, Supp. to Littré.

ZEPHYR, a soft gentle breeze. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Cymb. iv. 2. 172. Chaucer has the form Zephyrus, directly from the Latin, C. T. 5.—MF. zephyre, 'the west wind,' Cot.; F. zéphyr.—L. zephyrum, acc. of zephyrus, the west wind.—Gk. ζέφυρος, the west wind.

ZERO, a cipher, nothing, denoted by o. (F.—Ital.—Low L.—Arab.) A late word, added by Todd to Johnson.—MF. zero, 'a cypher in arithmetick, a thing that stands for nothing,' Cot.; F. zéro.—Ital. zero, 'a figure of nought in arithmetike'; Florio. A contracted form of zefiro or **zifro*, parallel form to zifra, 'a cifre; i. e. cipher; Florio.—Low L. zephyrum (Devic).—Arab. sifr (with initial sad), a cipher; Rich. Dict. p. 937. See Cipher. See Devic, Supp. to Littré; he explains that the old Latin treatises on arithmetic wrote zephyrum for Arab. sifr, which became, in Italian, zefiro, and (by contraction) zero. Doublet, cipher.

ZEST, something that gives a relish or a flavour. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. Phillips explains zest as a chip of orange or lemon-peel, used for flavouring drinks.—MF. zest, 'the thick skinne or filme wherby the kernell of a wallnut is divided'; Cot. Mod. F. zeste, a piece of the skin of a citron or lemon, whence zester, 'to cut up lemon rind'; Hamilton. The E. sense is due to the use of lemon or citron-peel for flavouring.—L. schistos (schistus), cleft, divided, used by Pliny [bk. xix. c. 6]; according to Diez, who notes that L. schedula became, similarly, F. cédule; there must have been a transference of sense from 'divided' to 'division.'—Gk. σχιστός, divided.—Gk. σχίζειν, to cleave. See Schism. (Very doubtful; but no other solution has been proposed.)

ZIGZAG, having short, sharp turns. (F.—G.) In Pope, Dunciad, i. 124.—F. zigzag.—G. zickzack, a zigzag; whence zickzack segeln, to tack, in sailing. [We also find Swed. sicksack, zigzag (Widegren, 1788).] Reduplicated from zacke, a tooth, with reference to zacken-werk, notched work; so that zickzack means 'in an indented manner.' Cf. EFries. takken, to notch (whence tack, in sailing). See Tack. Der. zigzaggy-ery, Sterne, Tristram Shandy, bk. iii. c. 3.

ZINC, a whitish metal. (G.) In Locke, Elements of Nat. Philosophy, c. 8 (R.).—G. zink, zinc; whence also F. zinc, &c. Origin uncertain; see Schade. The name der Zinck occurs in Paracelsus (died 1541); see Weigand.

ZIRCON, the name of a mineral. (Arab.—Pers.) The F. form is jargon. Zircon represents the Arab. zarqūn, not a true Arab. word, but from Pers. zargūn, of the colour of gold; Rich. Dict. p. 774.—Pers. zar, gold (allied to Skt. hari-, yellow, and E. yellow); and gūn, colour; id. pp. 771, 1247. See Devic.

ZITHER, a cittern, kind of guitar. (G.—L.—Gk.) A modern form; from G. zither.—L. cithara.—Gk. κιθάρα, a kind of lyre. See Cithern, Cittern, Guitar, Kit (2).

ZODIAC, an imaginary belt in the heavens, containing the twelve constellations called signs. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. zodiac, zodiak, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, prol. 70.—F. zodiaque, 'the zodiack,' Cot.—L. zōdiacus.—Gk. ζωδιακός, adj., of or belonging to animals, whence ὁ ζωδιακός, the zodiac circle; so called from containing the twelve constellations represented by animals.—Gk. ζῶδιον, a small animal; dimin. of ζῶον, a living creature, an animal. β. Gk. ζῶον is from ζῶς, adj., living; allied to ζωή, life, and ζάειν, ζῆν (Ionic ζάειν), to live. Allied to Zend ji, to live; from √GwEI, to live. See Victuals. Brugmann, ii. § 488. Der. zodiac-al, adj.

ZONE, a belt, one of the great belts into which the earth is divided. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Hamlet, v. i. 305. 'Their zone is milde;' Higgins, Mirror for Mag., Fulgentius, st. 4.—F. zone, 'a girdle, zone;' Cot.—L. zōna, a girdle, belt, zone.—Gk. ζώνη, a girdle. Put for **ζώνη*.—Gk. ζώννυμι (= **ζωσ-νυμι*), I gird.—√YÖS, to gird; whence also Lithuan. jōsta, a girdle, jōsti, to gird (Nesselmann). Brugmann, i. § 167. Der. zon-ed.

ZOOLOGY, the natural history of animals. (Gk.) See Pennant's

British Zoology, London, 1766. Coined from Gk. ζῶο-, for ζῶον, a living creature; and -λογία, allied to λόγος, a discourse, from λέγειν, to speak. See Zodiac and Logic. Der. zoologi-c-al, zoolog-ist. ¶ Pronounced zo-o-, the o's being separate.

ZOOPHYTE, an animal plant, a term now applied to corals, &c. (F.—Gk.) In Johnson's Dict.—F. zoophyte, pl. zoophytes, 'such things as be partly plants, and partly living creatures, as sponges, &c.;' Cot.—Gk. ζωόφυτον, a living being; an animal-plant, the lowest of the animal tribe, Aristotle, Hist. Anim. xviii. i. 6.—Gk. ζῶο-, for ζῶς, living; and φυτόν, a plant, that which has grown, from φύειν, to produce, also to grow, from √BHEU, to grow, exist, be. See Zodiac and Be.

ZOUAVE, one of a body of soldiers in the French service, orig. Arabs, but now Frenchmen in Arab. dress. (F.—N. African.) Modern; since the conquest of Algeria by the French in 1830; Haydn, Dict. of Dates.—F. Zouave.—N. African Zuawa, a tribe of Kabyles living among the Jurjura mountains in Algeria (Mahn, Littré).

ZYMOTIC, a term applied to diseases, in which a poison works through the body like a ferment. (Gk.) Modern.—Gk. ζυμωτικός, causing to ferment.—Gk. ζυμῶω, I leaven, cause to ferment.—Gk. ζύμη, leaven. Allied to L. iūs, broth; see Juice.

- L- (1); in l-one. (E.) Short for all; l-one = al-one. See Al- (1).
- L- (2); in l-ute. (Arab.) Short for Arab. al, the, def. art. See Al- (4).
- Male-, Mal-, Mau-, badly. (L.; or F.—L.) L. male, badly, ill; whence F. mal, which becomes also mau- in mau-gre.
- Me-; in me-grim; see Hemi-.
- Meta-, Meth-, Met-, among, with, after; also used to imply change. (Gk.) Gk. μετά, among, with, after. + AS. mid, G. mit, Goth. mith, with. It appears also as meth- in meth-od, met- in met-empsychosis, met-eor, met-onymy.
- Min-; in min-ster; see Mono-.
- Mis- (1); in mis-deed, mis-take, &c. (E. and Scand.) AS. mis-, wrongly, amiss. + Icel. Dan. Du. mis-; Swed. miss-; Goth. missa-, wrongly. Allied to miss, vb.
- Mis- (2), badly, ill. (F.—L.) OF. mes-, from L. minus, less; used in a depreciatory sense. Appearing in mis-adventure, mis-alliance, mis-chance, mis-chief, mis-count, mis-creant, mis-nomer, mis-prise, mis-prison. Quite distinct from Mis- (1).
- Mono-, Mon-, single. (Gk.) Gk. μόνο-, single, sole, alone. Hence mon-k, min-ster.
- Multi-, Mult-, many. (L.; or F.—L.) From L. multus, much, many.
- N- (1); in n-ewt, n-ickname, n-once, n-uncle. (E.) A newt = an ewt, where the prefixed n is due to the indef. article. A n-ickname = an eke-name. My nuncle = mine uncle, where the n is due to the possessive pronoun. In n-once, the prefixed n is due to the dat. case of the def. article, as shown.
- N- (2), negative prefix. (E. or L.) In n-aught, n-ay, n-either, n-ever, n-o, n-one, n-or, n-ot (1), and in hob-n-ob, the prefixed n is due to AS. ne, not. In n-ull, it is due to the cognate L. ne, not. See Ne-.
- Ne-, Neg-. (L.) L. ne, not; neg- as in neg-ligare, not. In ne-farious, neg-ation, neg-lect, neg-otiate, ne-scient, ne-uter. See N- (2).
- Non-, not. (L.; or F.—L.) L. non, not; OLat. noenum, for **ne oinum*, i. e. ne unum, not one; see above. It appears as um- in um-pire, for numpire.
- O-; in o-mit; see Ob-.
- Ob-. (L.; or F.—L.) L. ob, near; allied to Gk. ἐπί, upon, near; Skt. api, moreover; Oscan op. See Epi-. The force of ob- is very variable; it appears as o-, ob-, oc-, of-, op-, also as extended to os- (for ops); as in o-mit, ob-long, oc-cur, of-fer, op-press, os-tensible.
- Oc-; in oc-casion, oc-cident, oc-ciput, oc-cult, oc-cupy, oc-cur; see Ob-.
- Of- (1); in of-fal. (E.) AS. of, of, off, away. This word is invariably written off in composition, except in the case of offal, where its use would have brought three f's together. + L. ab, Gk. ἀπό; see Ab- (1), Apo-. It appears as a- in a-down, a-kin, a-new, a-thirst; see A- (1).
- Of- (2); in of-fend, of-fer; see Ob-.
- Off-; see Of- (1).
- On-, on, upon. (E.) AS. on, on. + Gk. ἀνά. From a pronominal base. See Ana-. It often appears as a-, as in a-foot, a-sleep, &c. See A- (2).
- Op-; in op-pilation, op-ponent, op-portune, op-pose, op-posite, op-press, op-probrious, op-pugn; see Ob-.
- Or- (1); in or-deal, or-ts. (E.) AS. or-; cognate with Du. oor-, OSax. and G. ur-, Goth. us, away, out of.
- Or- (2); in or-lop. (Du.) Short for Du. over, cognate with E. over; see Over-.
- Os-; in os-tensible; see Ob-.
- Out-. (E.) AS. ūt, E. out, prep. + Goth. ut, G. aus, Skt. ud, out. Shortened to utt- in utt-er; and to ut- in ut-most.
- Outr-; in outr-age. (F.—L.) F. outré = L. ultrā, beyond; see Ultra-.
- Over-. (E.) AS. ofer, E. over, prep. + Goth. ufar, L. s-uper, Gk. ὑπέρ, Skt. upari, above. A comparative form from Up, q.v. See Hyper-, Super-, Or- (2).
- Pa-; in pa-lsy; see Para-.
- Palin-, Palim-, again. (Gk.) Gk. πάλιν, back, again. It becomes palim- in palim-psest.
- Pan-, Panto-, all. (Gk.) Gk. πᾶν, neut. of πᾶς, all; παντο-, declensional form of the same, occurring in panto-mime.
- Par- (1); in par-amount, par-amour, par-boil, par-don, par-son, par-terre, par-venu; see Per-.
- Par- (2); in par-agon, par-allel, par-egoric, &c.; see Para-.
- Par- (3); in par-get. (F.—L.) OF. par-, por-; from L. prō; see Pro- (1).
- Para- (1), beside. (Gk.) Gk. παρά, beside. Allied to E. for, L. per, also to Gk. περί. See Per-, Peri-, and For- (1). It becomes pa- in pa-lsy; par- in par-ody, &c. ¶ Quite distinct from para- in para-chute, para-pet, para-sol, from F. parer.

Para- (2); in para-dise. Zend pairi = Gk. περί. Shortened to par- in par-vis.

Pel-; in pel-lucid; see Per-.

Pen-; in pen-insula, pen-ultimate, pen-umbra. (L.) L. pæn-e, almost.

Per-, through. (L.; or F.—L.) L. per, through. Allied to Para- and For- (1). It appears also as par- in par-son, par-don, &c.; as pel- in pel-lucid; and as pil- in pil-grim. See Par- (1).

Peri-, around. (Gk.) Gk. περί, around. + Skt. pari, round about. Allied to Para-, &c.

Pil-; in pil-grim; see Per-.

Po-, in po-sition, po-sitive. (L.) L. po-, short for **apo*, allied to L. **ap*, original form of ab (Walde). See Ab- (1).

Pol-; in pol-lute; see Por- (1).

Poly-, many. (Gk.) Written for Gk. πολύ-, decl. form of πολύ-s, much, many. Allied to E. full.

Por- (1); in por-tend. (L.) L. por-, allied to L. per, through (Walde). It appears as pol- in pol-lute. The origin of pos- in possess is doubtful; but may be allied.

Por- (2); in por-trait; see Pro- (1).

Pos-; in pos-sess; see Por- (1).

Post-, after. (L.) L. post, after, behind. Hence F. puis, appearing as pu- in pu-ny.

Pour-; in pour-tray; see Pro- (1).

Pr- (1); in pr-ison, pr-ize (1); see Pre-.

Pr- (2); in pr-udent; see Pro- (1).

Pre-, Præ-, before. (L.) L. pre-, for præ, prep., before; for **prai*, an old locative case. Allied to Pro-. This prefix occurs also in pr-ison, pr-ize (1); and is curiously changed to pro- in pro-vost.

Preter-, beyond. (L.) L. præter, beyond; comparative form of præ, before. See above.

Pro- (1), before, instead of. (L.; or F.—L.) L. prō-, before, in front, used as a prefix; also L. prō, for prōd, abl. case used as a preposition, which appears in prod-igal. Allied to Gk. πρό, before, Skt. pra, before, away; also to E. for. See below; and see For- (1). It appears also as pour-, por-, pur-, pr-, in pour-tray, por-trait, pur-vey, proffer, pr-udent; where pour-, por-, pur- are due to the F. form pour.

Pro- (2), before. (Gk.) Gk. πρό, before; cognate with Pro- (1). In pro-boscis, pro-blem, pro-em, pro-gnostic, pro-gramme, prolepsis, pro-logue, pro-phet, pro-scenium, pro-thalamium, &c.

Pro- (3); in pro-vost; see Pre-.

Prod-; in prod-igal; see Pro- (1).

Pros-, in addition, towards. (Gk.) Gk. πρός, towards. Allied to Forth-.

Proto-, Prot-, first. (Gk.) From Gk. πρωτο-s, first; superl. form of πρό, before; see Pro- (2). Shortened to prot- in prot-oxide.

Pu-; in pu-ny; see Post-.

Pur-; in pur-chase, pur-loin, pur-port, pur-pose (1), pur-pose (2), pur-sue, pur-vey, pur-view. (F.—L.) See Pro- (1).

R-; in r-ally; see Re-.

Re-, Red-, again. (L.) L. re-, red- (only in composition), again, back. Red- occurs in red-eem, red-integrate, red-olent, red-ound, red-undant, red-dition; and is changed to ren- in ren-der, ren-t. In re-ly, re-mind, re-new, it is prefixed to purely E. words; and in re-call, re-cast, to words of Scand. origin. It appears as r- in r-ally (1); and as ru- in ru-nagate. 2. Re- is frequently prefixed to other prefixes, which sometimes coalesce with it, so that these words require care. For example, rampart = re-em-part; cf. also re-ad-apt, re-col-lect, re-con-cile, re-sur-rection, &c. Also ransom, rascal.

Rear-; see Retro-.

Red-, Ren-; see Re-.

Rere-; in rere-ward; see Retro-.

Retro-, backwards, behind. (L.) L. retrō-, backwards, back again; a comparative form from re-, back; see Re-. The prefixes rear-, rere-, in rear-guard, rere-dos, rere-ward, are due to L. retrō, and are of F. origin.

S- (1); in s-ure; see Se-.

S- (2); in s-pend, s-pite, s-play, s-tain; see Dis-.

S- (3); in s-ample; see Ex- (1).

S- (4); in s-ombre; see Sub-.

Sans-, without. (F.—L.) F. sans, without. — L. sine, without; see Sine-.

Se-, Sed-, away, apart. (L.) L. sē-, apart; OLat. sēd-, apart, which is probably retained in sed-ition. The orig. sense was probably 'by oneself.' It appears as s- in s-ure; cf. sober.

Semi-, half. (L.) L. sēmi-, half. + Gk. ἡμί-, half; see Hemi-. It appears as sin- in sin-ciput.

Sin-; in sin-ciput; see above.

Sine-, without. (L.) L. sine, without; lit. if not. — L. si, if; ne, not. Hence F. sans, without.

So- (1); in so-journ; see Sub-.

So- (2); in so-ber. (L.) L. sō-, apart, allied to sē-, apart; see Se-.

Sover-, Sopr-; see Super-.

Stra-; in stra-nge; see Extra-.

Su-; in su-dden, su-spect; see Sub-.

Sub-, under. (L.) L. sub, under, (sometimes) up. Allied to Gk. ὑπό, under; Skt. upa, near, under; also to E. up and of. See Hypo-, Of-, Up-. Sub also appears as s-, so-, su-, suc-, suf-, sug-, sum-, sup-, sur-, in s-ombre (?), so-journ, su-dden, su-spect, suc-ceed, suf-fuse, sug-gest, sum-mon, sup-press, sur-rogate. It is also extended to sus- (for sup-); as in sus-pend. And cf. suzerain.

Suc-, Suf-, Sug-, Sum-, Sup-; see Sub-.

Super-, above, over. (L.) L. super, above; comparative form of L. sub, under, also up. + Gk. ὑπέρ, over, beyond; AS. ofer, E. over. See Hyper-, Over-; also Sub-. Hence suprā, beyond, orig. abl. feminine. Reduced to supr- in supr-eme. Note also sover- in sover-eign, which is a F. form; and sopr- in sopr-ano, which is an Ital. form. Also F. sur < L. super; see Sur- (2).

Supra-, beyond; see above.

Sur- (1); in sur-reptitious, sur-rogate; see Sub-.

Sur- (2); in sur-cease, sur-charge, sur-face, sur-feit, &c.; see Super-.

Sus-; in sus-pend; see Sub-.

Sy-, Syl-, Sym-; see Syn-.

Syn-, with, together with. (Gk.) Gk. σύν, with. Allied to L. cum, with; see Com-. It appears as sy-, syl-, sym-, and syn-, in sy-stem, syl-logism, sym-metry, syn-tax, &c.

T- (1); t-wit. (E.) Twit is from AS. æt-witan, to twit, reproach; thus t- is here put for E. at.

T- (2); t-awdry. (F.—L.) Tawdry is for Saint Awdry; thus t- is here the final letter of sain-t.

T- (3); t-autology. (Gk.) Here t- represents Gk. τό, neuter of the def. article.

Thorough-, through. (E.) Merely another form of E. through.

To- (1), in to-day, to-morrow. (E.) AS. tō, to.

To- (2), intensive prefix. (E.) Obsolete, except in to-brake. AS. tō, apart, asunder; prob. allied to L. dis, apart. See Dis-.

¶ Some connect it with Gk. δύς; see Dys-.

Tra-, Tran-; see below.

Trans-, beyond. (L.) L. trans, beyond. Shortened to tran- in tran-scend; and to tra- in tra-duce, tra-verse, &c. Hence F. tres-, occurring in tres-pass; and tre- in tre-ason. And see tran-e, trans-om, tres-tle.

Tre- (1), Tres-. (F.—L.) See above.

Tre- (2); in tre-ble. (F.—L.) See below.

Tri- (1), thrice. (L.) L. tri-, thrice; allied to trēs, three. Hence tri-ple, tre-ble, &c.; also (perhaps) tra- in tra-mmel.

Tri- (2), thrice. (Gk.) Gk. τρι-, thrice; allied to τρία, neut. of τρεῖς, three. Hence tri-gonometry, &c.

Tw-, double, doubtful. (E.) AS. twi-, double; allied to twā, two. Hence twi-bill, twi-light.

U-; in u-topian. (Gk.) Gk. οὐ, not; see p. 682.

Ultra-, beyond. (L.) L. ultrā, beyond; allied to OLat. ulter, adj., appearing in ulter-ior, which see in Dict. Hence F. outr-, beyond, appearing in outr-age; also in E. utter-ance (2), corruption of F. outr-ance.

Um-; in umpire; see Non-.

Un- (1), negative prefix to nouns, &c. (E.) AS. un-, not; cognate with L. in-, not, Gk. ἀν-, not. See An- (2), In- (3).

Un- (2), verbal prefix, signifying the reversal of an action. (E.) AS. un-, verbal prefix; allied to Du. ont-, ent-, G. ent-, OHG. ant-, Goth. and-, and E. an- in an-swer; see An- (5), Anti-.

Un- (3); in un-til, un-to. (E.) See un-to in Dict., p. 680.

Un- (4), Uni-, one. (L.) L. un-us, one; whence uni-vocal, with one voice; un-animous, of one mind; &c. Cognate with E. one.

Under-. (E.) AS. under, E. under, prep.

Up-. (E.) AS. up, E. up, prep. Allied to Of-, Sub-, Hypo-.

Ut-, Utt-. (E.) See Out-.

Utter-. (F.—L.) Only in utter-ance (2). F. outr-, L. ultra; see Ultra-.

V-; in v-an (1), vanguard. (F.-L.) See Ab- (1).

Vice-, Vis-, in place of. (L.; or F.-L.) L. uice, in place of, whence OF. vis, the same. The latter appears only in vis-count.

Wan-, negative prefix; see wan-ton in Dict.

With-, against. (E.) A shortened form of AS. wiðer, against; see withers in Dict. The sense is preserved in with-stand. In with-hold, with-draw, it signifies 'back.'

Y-; in y-wis, y-clept. (E.) AS. ge-, prefix; ME. i-, y-. This prefix appears as a- in a-ware; as i- in i-wis (the same as y-wis); and as e- in enough. See A- (11), E- (2).

A. Summary. A few of the Prefixes given above, such as al- in al-mighty, are rather true words that can be used alone; for al- is merely a spelling of all. Omitting these and some forms that are mere variants, the list may be reduced to the following.

A- (with several values), ab-, abs- (see Abscond), ad-, al- (Arabic), ambi- or amb- (see Ambidextrous), amphi-, an-, ana-, ante-, anti- or ant-, aph- or apo-, be-, bi- or bis-, cata-, circum-, co- (com-, con-), contra-, counter-, de-, di-, dia-, dis-, dys- (see Dysentery), e-, em- (see Embark), en-, endo-, epi-, eso-, ex-, exo-, extra-, for- (2), for- (3), fore-, forth, fro-.

Gain- (see Gainsay), hemi-, hyper-, hypo-, i-, il- (1), il- (2), im- (1), im- (2), im- (3), in- (1), in- (2), in- (3), indi-, inter-, intra-, intro- (see Introduce), ir- (1), ir- (2), juxta- (see Joust).

Meta-, mis- (1), mis- (2), ne- (see No (1)), non-, ob-, on-, or- (see Ordeal, Ort, Orlop), out-, over-, palin- (see Palindrome), pan- (panto-), para-, per-, peri-, pol- or po- (see Pollute, Position), por- (see Portend), post-, pre-, preter-, pro-, pros-, pur-, re-, red-, retro-.

Se- (sed-), semi-, sine- (see Sinecure), sub-, sub-ter, super-, supra-, sur- (1), sur- (2), sus-, syn-, to- (1), to- (2), trans-, ultra-, un- (1), un- (2), un- (3), under-, up-, with-, y-.

B. Some of these prefixes assume various shapes in accordance with phonetic laws. Of these, the most important are the following:—

(a) The Lat. prep. ad appears as a-, ab-, ac-, ad-, af-, ag-, al-, an-, ap-, ar-, as-, at-.

(b) The Lat. prep. cum appears as co-, col-, com-, comb-, con-, cor-. Also (through F.) as co-, coi-, cou-, coun-, cu-, cur-.

(c) The Lat. prefix dis- appears as de-, des-, di-, dif-, dis-, and even s-.

(d) The Lat. prep. ex appears as a-, as-, e-, ef-, es-, ex-, and even iss- and s-.

(e) The Lat. prep. in appears as am-, an-, em-, en-, il- (1), im- (1, 3), in- (2), ir- (1).

(f) The Lat. negative prefix in- appears as en-, i-, il- (2), im- (4), in- (3), ir- (2).

(g) The Lat. prep. ob appears as o-, ob-, oc-, of-, op-; we even find os-.

(h) The Lat. prep. sub appears as s- (in s-ombre?), so- (in so-journ), su-, sub-, suc-, suf-; sug-, sum-, sup-, sur-.

(i) The Greek prefix apo- (ἀπό) also appears as aph-; cata- (κατά), also as cat-, cath-; eu- (εὐ), also as em-; epi- (ἐπὶ), also as ep-, eph-; hypo- (ὑπό), also as hyp-, hyph-; syn- (σύν), also as sy-, syl-, sym-.

These very common variations should be observed and learnt. For this purpose. I suggest a study of the following words:—

(a) A-chieve, ab-breviate, ac-cede, ad-mire, af-fix, ag-gress, al-lude, an-nex, ap-pend, ar-rogate, as-sign, at-tract.

(b) Co-agulate, col-lect, com-mute, comb-ustion, con-nect, cor-rode; also co-st, coi-l, cou-ch, coun-cil, cu-ll, cur-ry (1).

(c) De-feat, des-cant, di-verge, dif-fuse, dis-pel, s-pend.

(d) A-mend, as-tonish, e-normous, ef-fect, es-cape, ex-tend, iss-ue, s-ample.

(e) Am-bush, an-oint, em-bellish, en-close, il-lude, im-mure, im-merge, in-clude, ir-ritate.

(f) En-emy, i-gnoble, il-legal, im-mortal, in-firm, ir-regular.

(g) O-mit, ob-long, oc-cur, of-fer, op-press, os-tensible.

(h) S-ombre, so-journ, su-dden, sub-mit, suc-ceed, suf-fuse, sug-gest, sum-mon, sup-press, sur-rogate.

(i) Apo-logy, aph-eresis; cata-logue, cat-echism, cath-olic; en-ergy, em-phasis; epi-logue, ep-och, eph-emera; hypo-thesis, hyp-allage, hyph-en; syn-onymous, sy-stem, syl-logism, sym-metry.

It may be noted here that more than one prefix may be placed at the beginning of a word, as in re-im-burse, ram-part (= re-em-part), in-ex-act, &c.

C. Some prefixes exhibit such unusual forms in certain words that they can only be understood upon a perusal of the etymology of the word as given in the Dictionary. I note here a few curious examples.

A- replaces e- (Lat. e, for ex) in a-mend.

Al-, the Arabic definite article, appears at the beginning of al-cohol, a-pricot, ar-tichoke, as-segai, el-ixir, l-ute. But the al- in al-ligator is the Span. el, Lat. ille.

The Latin ab has actually become adv- in the word adv-antage; whilst in v-an-guard it appears as v-. But, in ab-breviate, the prefix is ad-. The Latin cum appears in co-st, co-stive, coi-l, cou-ch, cou-sin, cur-ry (1), cu-ll, cu-stom.

The dea- in dea-con represents the Greek διά; so also de- in de-vil.

The e- in e-lope represents the AF. a-, OF. es-, L. ex.

The e- in e-squire, e-scutcheon, &c., is purely phonetic, as explained.

The eu- in eu-angelist is for Gk. eu-, as in eu-logy.

The or- in or-deal and or-t is a Teutonic prefix.

The outr- in outr-age represents the Latin ultrā; cf. utter-ance (2).

The s- in s-ure (Lat. sē-cūrus) represents the Latin sē-.

The t- in t-wit represents the AS. æt; but in t-awdry it is the last letter of saint.

D. Numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; such are Lat. ūnus, duo (adverbially, bis), trēs, &c.; hence un-animous, du-et, bin-ary, bi-sect, bis-cuit, ba-lance, dou-ble, tre-ble, tri-ple, &c.

Other noteworthy Latin words are dimidium, male, pæne, sēmi-, vice; whence demi-, mal-treat, mau-gre, pen-insula, semi-circle, vice-admiral, vis-count.

As in Latin, the Greek numerals are peculiarly liable to sink into apparent prefixes; hence di-cotyledon, from dis, twice; tri-gonometry, tetra-hedron, penta-gon, hex-agon, hepta-gon, octa-gon, nona-gon, deca-gon, &c. Other noteworthy Greek words are ἀρχι-, chief (archi-pelago, arche-type, arch-bishop); αὐτός, self (auto-graph, auth-entic, eff-endi); ἡμι-, half (hemi-); ἕτερος, other (hetero-); ὅλος, entire (holo-); ὁμός, same (homo-); μόνος, single (mono-); πᾶν, all (pan-, panto-); πολύς much, many (poly-); πρῶτος, first (proto-).

II. SUFFIXES

The number of suffixes in modern English is so great, and the forms of several, especially in words derived through the French from Latin, are so variable that an attempt to exhibit them all would tend to confusion. The best account of their origin is to be found in Brugmann, Grundriss der Vergleichenden Grammatik der Indogermanischen Sprachen. An account of Anglo-Saxon suffixes is given at p. 119 of March, Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language. Lists of Anglo-Saxon words, arranged according to their suffixes, are given in Loth, Etymologische Angelsächsische Grammatik, Elberfeld, 1870. Simple accounts of English suffixes in general are given in Morris, Historical Outlines of English Accidence, pp. 212-221, 229-242; in Nesfield, Historical English and Derivation, pp. 185-252; and in the two series of my Principles of English Etymology; to which the reader is referred. See also

Koch, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache, vol. iii. pt. 1, pp. 29-77. It is clearly established that the Indo-germanic languages abound in suffixes, each of which was originally intended slightly to modify the meaning of the root to which it was added, so as to express the radical idea in a new relation. The force of many of these must, even at an early period, have been slight, and in many instances it is difficult to trace it; but in some instances it is still clear, and the form of the suffix is then of great service. The difference between lov-er, lov-ed, and lov-ing is well marked, and readily understood. One of the most remarkable points is that most of the Indo-germanic languages delighted in adding suffix to suffix, so that words are not uncommon in which two or more suffixes occur, each repeating, it may be, the sense of that which preceded it. Double diminutives, such as parti-c-le, i.e. 'a little little part,' are sufficiently common. The Lat. superl. suffix -is-simus is an example of the use of a treble suffix, which really expresses no more than is expressed by -mus alone in the word prī-mus. The principal Indo-germanic suffixes, omitting feminine forms, are these: -o, -i, -u, -yo (written -jo), -wo, -mo, -ni, -men (-mon), -meno, -no, -ino, -ni, -nu, -en (-on), -ent (-ont), -lo, -li, -lu, -ro, -ri, -ru, -er (-or), -es (-os), -to, -men-to, -ti, -ti-ōn, -tū-ti, -tu, -tū-ti, -ter (-ior, -ir), -tūro, -tro, -ilo, -id, -d, -d-en (-d-on), -tū-den, -go, -go, -ko, -k, -sko, -bho. But these can be readily compounded, so as to form new suffixes; so that from -men-to was formed -mento (as in E. argument).

One common error with regard to suffixes should be guarded against, viz. that of mis-dividing a word so as to give the suffix a false shape. This is extremely common in such words as logi-c, civi-c, belli-c-ose, where the suffix is commonly spoken of as being -ic or -ic-ose. This error occurs, for instance, in the elaborate book on English Affixes by S. S. Haldemann, published at Philadelphia in 1865; a work which is of considerable use as containing a very full account, with numerous examples, of suffixes and prefixes. The truth is that civi-c (Lat. civicus) is derived from Lat. civī-, declensional stem of civīs, a citizen, with the suffix -cus (Idg. -ko); and logi-c is from Gk. λογικός, from λογι-, for λογο-, declensional stem of λόγος, a discourse, with the suffix -κος, as before. Compare Lat.

civī-tas, Gk. λογο-μαχία. Of course, words in -ic are so numerous that -ic has come to be regarded as a suffix at the present day, so that we do not hesitate to form Volta-ic as an adjective of Volta; but this is English misuse, not Latin etymology. Moreover, since both -i- and -ko are Indo-germanic suffixes, such a suffix as -i-cus, is possible both in Greek and Latin; but in the particular words above cited it is clearer to take the -i- as due to the declensional stem.

One more word of warning may perhaps suffice. If we wish to understand a suffix, we must employ comparative philology, and not consider English as an absolutely isolated language, with laws different from those of other languages of the Indo-germanic family. Thus the -th in tru-th is the -ð of AS. trēow-ð, gen. case trēow-ðe, fem. sb. This suffix answers to that seen in Goth. gabaur-ths, birth, gen. case gabaur-thais, fem. sb., belonging to the -i- stem declension of Gothic strong substantives. The true suffix is therefore to be expressed as Teut. -thi, cognate with Idg. -ti, so extremely common in Latin; cf. dō-ti, dowry, men-ti, mind, mor-ti, death, mes-si (<met-ti), harvest, that which is mown. Hence, when Horne Tooke gave his famous etymology of truth as being 'that which a man troueth,' he did in reality suggest that the -ti- in Lat. mor-ti- is identical with the -t in mori-t-ur or in ama-t; in other words, it was a mere whim.

III. LIST OF HOMONYMS

Homonyms are words spelt alike, but differing in use. In a few cases, I include different uses of what is either exactly, or nearly, the same word, at the same time noting that the forms are allied; but in most cases, the words are of different origin.

IV. LIST OF DOUBLETS

Doublets are words which, though apparently differing in form, are nevertheless, from an etymological point of view, one and the same, or only differ in some unimportant suffix. Thus aggrieve is from L. aggrauāre; whilst aggravate, though really from the pp. aggrauātus, is nevertheless used as a verb, precisely as aggrieve is used, though the senses of the words have been differentiated. In the following list, each pair of doublets is entered only once, to save space, except in a few remarkable cases, such as cipher, zero. When a pair of doublets is mentioned a second time, it is enclosed within square brackets.

V. LIST OF INDOGERMANIC ROOTS

THE following is a brief list of the principal Indogermanic roots that have English derivatives. Those of which examples are either scanty or doubtful are not noticed. Many of the roots here given are of some importance and can be abundantly illustrated. I have added, at the end of the brief account of each root, several miscellaneous examples of derivatives; but these lists are by no means exhaustive, nor are they arranged in any particular order beyond the separation into groups of the words of Greek, Latin, and Teutonic origin.

Many of these roots (but given in forms which are no longer generally accepted) may be found in 'Fick, Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der indogermanischen Sprachen,' in Curtius, 'Greek Etymology, English edition, translated by Wilkins and England,' and in 'Vaniček, Griechisch-Lateinisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch, Leipzig, 1877.' More correct forms are frequently cited by Brugmann and Uhlenbeck, and are here adopted. The chief modern improvements are the substitution of e or o for a in many instances, of ei for i and of eu for u likewise in many instances, and in the treatment of the gutturals.

The account of each root is, in each case, very brief, and mentions only a few characteristic derivatives. Further information may be obtained in the above-mentioned authorities. The English examples are accounted for in the present work. Thus, under the word Agitate, a cross-reference is given to Agent; and under Agent is cited the ✓AG, to drive; with a reference to Brugmann, i. § 175.

Instead of giving Grimm's Law in the usual form, I omit the Old High German modifications, and use the word 'Teutonic' as inclusive of all other Germanic forms, thus reducing the number of varying bases, as due to 'sound-shifting' of the consonants, from three to two. This being premised, I give a short and easy method for the conversion of 'Indogermanic' roots into the corresponding 'Teutonic' ones; though it must be remembered that each language has ways of its own for representing certain original sounds. Some of these modifications are noticed below.

Let the student learn by heart the following scheme.

Dentals; viz. dh, d, t, th.

Labials; viz. bh, b, p, f.

Gutturals; viz. gh, g, k, h.

This is all that need be remembered; it only remains to explain what the scheme means.

It is to be read in the following manner. When a dental sound occurs (especially at the beginning of a word, for in other positions the rule is liable to exception), an Idg. dh becomes a Teut. d [for dh is followed in the scheme by d]; an Idg. d becomes a Teut. t

[for a like reason]; and an Idg. t becomes a Teut. th (as in English).

In practice, inevitable modifications take place, some of the principal ones being these (I do not give them all).

For dh, as above, Skt. has dh; Gk. has θ; Latin has f (or if the dh be not initial, d or b).

For bh, as above, Skt. has bh; Gk. has φ; and Latin has f (or if the bh be not initial, b).

For gh, as above, Skt. has gh or h; Gk. has χ; and Latin has f or h (or if the gh be not initial, g, gu, u).

Note the threefold value of the Latin f, which may stand, initially, for dh, bh, or gh. Also, that Latin uses c for k, but the c is always hard, having the sound of k before all vowels.

A few selected examples are here noted.

Dentals. Lat. facere, to do, to put, is allied to Gk. τίθημι, I place, and to E. do. From ✓dhē, to place, put; Sanskrit has dhā, to put. Skt. dva, Gk. δύω, Lat. duo, are cognate with E. two. Gk. τρεῖς, Lat. trēs, are cognate with E. three.

Labials. From the ✓bher, to bear, we have the Skt. bhar, to bear; Gk. φέρειν, Lat. ferre, to bear; E. bear. Examples of the change from the classical p to E. b are very scarce; compare the Lat. labium with the E. lip. Gk. ποῦς (stem ποδ-); Lat. pēs (stem ped-); E. foot.

Gutturals. From the ✓ghel, to be yellow, we have the Gk. χολή, gall; Lat. fel, gall, helvus, light yellow; E. gall. The Gk. γένος, Lat. genus, race, is allied to the E. kin; and the Gk. καρδία, Lat. cor, to the E. heart. It is now recognised, however, that there are really three series of gutturals, sometimes named the palatal gutturals, the middle gutturals, and the labialised velar gutturals. Some further information on the more elementary points of comparative philology will be found in my Primer of Classical and English Philology.

I denote the palatal gutturals by GH, G, K; the middle gutturals by G(w)H, G(w), Q; and the labialised velar gutturals by GwH, Gw, and Qw. They cannot always be distinguished, and I am not sure that I have always given them correctly.

The list of Roots given below is arranged in alphabetical order. They may be regarded as elementary bases (usually monosyllabic) which underlie all the various forms that are given by way of example. Each of them may be regarded, to use Brugmann's words, as 'the nucleus (so to speak) of a whole system of word-forms;' and are of much service in grouping words together. But they do not afford any very sure indications of what the primitive Indo-germanic was like; 'it must not (says Brugmann) be supposed that the roots, which we in ordinary practice abstract from words, are at all to be relied upon as representing the word-forms of the root-period.'

By way of further illustration, I give a fuller treatment of the first root on the list.

The form AG (AK) means that the Indogermanic root AG takes the form AK in Teutonic, by the 'sound-shifting' of g to k already noticed above. The sense of the root seems to have been 'to drive, urge, lead, conduct,' and the like. The Skt. form (originally ag) has been palatalised to aj, which is the base of the verb ajamī, 'I drive'; the third person singular is ajati, 'he drives'; and the form ajati is taken in Uhlenbeck's Etymological Dictionary of Sanskrit to represent this verb. The Greek infinitive is ἀγειν, and the Latin infinitive is agere. (It is further represented by the Old Irish agaim, 'I drive.') The chief representative of this root in Teutonic occurs in the Icel. aka, to drive (pt. t. ōk); the corresponding AS. form acan (pt. t. ōc) took up a new sense, viz. 'to give pain,' as in mīne ēagan acað, 'my eyes give pain,' or in modern English, ache. I give, as characteristic examples, the words agony and axiom, from Greek; agent, agile, and axis, from Latin; and acre, acorn, and ache, from Anglo-Saxon. How each of these words is connected with the root AG, is explained in the Dictionary.

But these are not the only English derivatives from this root. The Latin agere had the pp. actus, whence the E. act, active, actor, actual, actuate, actuary, counteract, enact, exact, transact; while from the base ag- we have also agitate, cogitate, ambiguous, coagulate, cogent, exigent, examine, prodigal. In connexion with the Gk. agony we may further cite antagonist. And it is very likely that another native English derivative is axle; for the addition of s to the base ag would give a base ags, which would necessarily become aks, accounting for the Gk. ἄξων and the Lat. axis (see AXIS); and this new base aks would become ahs in Teutonic, by the usual 'sound-shifting' from Idg. k to E. h. But the Teutonic hs becomes x in Anglo-Saxon, so that there is no difficulty in connecting the AS. eax, an axle, with the Latin axis; see further under AXLE.

Similarly, many other roots have often more derivatives than it seemed to me at all necessary to indicate.

AG (AK), to drive, urge, conduct. Skt. aj, to drive; Gk. ἀγ-ειν, L. ag-ere, to drive; Icel. ak-a (pt. t. ōk), to drive. Ex. agony, axiom, synagogue, hegemony; agent, agile, axis; acre, acorn, ache.

AGH (AG), to pull tight (?). Gk. ἀγ-ουαι, I am vexed, ἄγ-os, anguish; Goth. ag-is, fright, awe. Ex. ail, awe. Cf. ANGH.

AIDH (AID), to kindle. Skt. indh, to kindle; ēdh-as, fuel; Gk. αἰθ-ειν, to burn; αἰθ-ήρ, upper air; L. aed-ēs, orig. a hearth, aestus, heat; AS. ād, a funeral pile, āst, a kiln. Ex. ether; edify, estuary; oast-house.

AK (AH), to be sharp, to pierce. Gk. ἀκ-pos, pointed; ἀκ-όνη, whetstone; ἀκ-μή, edge; L. ac-us, needle, ac-uere, to sharpen, ac-iēs, edge; AS. ecg, edge. Ex. acacia, acme, aconite, acrobat, acrostic; acid, acumen, acute, acrid, ague, aglet, eager; ear (2), edge, awn, egg (2); and cf. paragon.

AL, to nourish, raise. L. al-ere, to nourish; ad-ol-escere, to grow up; al-tus, raised; Goth. al-an, to nourish; al-ds, an age. Ex. aliment, altitude, adolescent, adult, exalt; old.

AN, to breathe. Skt. an, to breathe; Gk. ἀν-εμος, wind; L. animus, spirit; Goth. us-anan, to breathe out, expire. Ex. anemone; animal, animosity, animadvert.

ANGH (ANG), to choke, strangle. Gk. ἀγχ-ειν, to strangle; L. ang-ere, to choke, anx-ius, anxious; Icel. angr, grief. Ex. quinsy (for quin-anc-y); angina, anguish, anxious; anger.

ANQ (ANH, ANG), to bend. Skt. añch, to bend, curve; Gk. ἀγκ-upa, an anchor; Gk. ἀγκ-ών, a bend; L. unc-us, curved, ang-ulus, an angle; AS. ang-el, a hook. Ex. anchor; angle (1); angle (2).

AR, to plough. Gk. ἀρ-εειν, L. ar-āre, AS. er-ian, to plough. Ex. arable; ear (3).

AR, to fit. Skt. ar-as, spoke of a wheel; Gk. ἀρ-μενος, fitted, ἀρ-θρον, joint; ἀρ-μός, joint, shoulder; L. ar-mus, ar-tus, a limb; ar-ma, arms, ar-s, art; Goth. ar-ms, an arm. Ex. harmony; arms, art, article; arm (1).

ARG, to shine. Skt. arj-unas, white (cf. raj-atam, silver); Gk. ἀργ-ός, white, ἀργ-upos, silver, L. arg-entum, silver, arg-illa, white clay; arg-uere, to make clear. Ex. argent, argillaceous, argument. Also Argonaut.

ARQ, to protect, keep safe. Gk. ἀρκ-ειν, to keep off; L. arc-ēre, to keep off, arc-a, a box. Ex. arcana, ark.

VI. DISTRIBUTION OF WORDS

The following is an attempt to distribute the words in the English language so as to show the sources to which they originally belonged. The words selected for the purpose are chiefly those given in large type in the dictionary, to the exclusion of mere derivatives of secondary importance. The English list appears short in proportion, chiefly because it contains a large number of these secondary words, such as happiness, heartly, helpful, and the like.

I have no doubt that, in some cases, the sources have been wrongly assigned, through ignorance. Some indulgence is requested, on account of the difficulty of making the attempt on a scale so comprehensive. The account of some words has been altered, by way of correction. Some words, not given in the ordinary lists, will be found among the Hybrid Words at the end.

ENGLISH. With the exception of some words of imitative origin, most of the following words (or their origins) can be found in Anglo-Saxon or in Middle English of the earliest period.

HYBRID WORDS. English abounds in hybrid words, i.e. in words made up from two different languages; and the two languages compounding the word are often brought into strange conjunction, as in the case of interloper, which is half Latin and half Dutch. The complexity thus caused is such as almost to defy classification, and, as the words are accounted for in the body of the work, each in its due place, I content myself with giving a list of them, in alphabetical order.

abroach, across, affray, affreightment, aitch-bone, allot, allure, aloof, altruism, ampersand, apace, apiece, appoggiatura, arblast, architrave, around, arouse, array, asafetida, astray, athwart, attorney, attune, avadavat (amadavat), awkward.

bailiwick, bandog, bandylegged, bankrupt, barbican, bashful, bay-window, becalm, because, bechance, beefeater, befool, beguile, begum, belabour, besiege, betake, betray, bewail, bicycle, biffin, bigamy, bilberry, blackguard, blaeberry, blunderbuss, boatswain, bressomer, briar-root, brickbat, bulk-head, bum-bailiff, butterfly.

calthrop, camelopard, candytuft, cannel-coal, castor-oil, cesspool, chamberlain, Christmas, cockloft, codling (2), colza oil, commingle, compose, contour, contradistinguish, contrive, co-parcener, costermonger, counteract, counterscarp, country-dance, court-cards, coxswain, cupboard, curmudgeon, curry (1).

Daguerrotype, darnel, dastard, daywoman, debar, debark, debase, debauch, debris, debut, decant, decipher, decompose, decoy, defile (1), demarcation, demean (2), depose, derange, detach, dethrone, detour, develop, disable, disabuse, disaffect, disannul, disappear, disapprove, disarrange, disarray, disband, disbelieve, disburden, disburse, discard, discharge, discommend, discommon, discompose, discontent, discredit, disembark, disembroil, disencumber, disengage, disenthral, disenfranchise, disguise, dishearten, disinherit, disinter, dislike, dislodge, dismask, dismay, disown, dispark, dispose, disregard, disrelish, disrepute, disrespect, disrobe, dissatisfy, dissimilitude, distaste, distrust, disuse, doleful, dormer-window, dormouse, ducimer.

ETYMOLOGY UNKNOWN. awning, bamboozle, beagle, coke, conundrum, culvert, dhow, dudgeon (1), dudgeon (2), jade (1), kelp, prawn, privet, Yankee.

Of many other words the ultimate origin is very obscure, and the solutions offered must be admitted to be doubtful.

SUPPLEMENT

I here subjoin a few corrections and additions. The words marked with an asterisk do not appear at all in the preceding pages.

*ADMIX, to mingle with something else. (L.) The vb. admix is no older than 1533 (N.E.D.), and is really a back-formation from the form admixt, which was used as a pp. much earlier, as it occurs in Palladius on Husbandry, bk. i. st. 9, l. 60 (ab. 1420). —L. admixt-us, pp. of admiscere, to mix with. —L. ad, to, with; and miscere, to mix. See Mix; and Commix (below).

ANON; line 7. For Grien read Grein.

ATTAINT. The N.E.D. explains the word fully, and notes how it was falsely Latinised as attinctus, as in Blackstone. I here make the note that an early example of the mistake occurs in the attainder of George, Duke of Clarence, in 1477. In the 17th Edw. IV, the order for his execution was made out, because he had been 'convictus et attinctus.' But the true pp. of L. attingere was attactus. Hence E. taint; see Taint (below).

BAMBOO. Of Malay origin; not from Canarese, as suggested at p. 45; the Canarese form is merely from the later Portuguese form bambu. But the quotations in Yule and in the N.E.D., s.v. mambu, show that the older form was mambu, both in Portuguese and English, the E. form being borrowed from the Port. mambu, which occurs in Garcia (1563); see Yule. There can be no doubt that this mambu is merely a clipped form of the Malay sāmāmbū, sēmāmbū, or s'māmbū, in which the first syllable is unstressed and was easily lost. This sāmāmbū is really a kind of rattan (not the grass Bambusa), but its superficial likeness to the ordinary bamboo is such that the difference would only be apparent to those familiar with the Malay region and its products. In fact, Yule notices the use of bamboo-cane, and Stedman, in 1796, speaks of a bamboo-rattan (N.E.D.).

BAWD. Prof. Weekley (Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909) shows that the ME. baud is, probably, merely a shortened form of ME. ribaud, and therefore a doublet of ribald.

BEAVER (2). Cf. 'the helme, the visere, the two bauiers,' &c.; Hall's Chron. (1548); King Henry IV, first year; § 9.

BOOTY. In the N.E.D. the earliest quotations for botye and butin are from Caxton. But in some Ordinances for the use of the English army made in 1419, printed in Excerpta Historica, p. 43, there is an ordinance 'for them that Sault [assault] . . . to make them boty.' It begins:—'Also that all men make them boty, vij or v to-gader, that alway iij of the vij, or ij of the v, be assigned to wayte, and not to departe from the standers' [standards], &c. Cf. 'il aura sa part du butin (v.r. butin);' Black Book of the Admiralty, i. 437.

BRANKS. Prof. Weekley (Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909) shows that brank answers to the OF. branque, the equivalent, in the Norman dialect, of OF. branche, whence E. Branch. See branch (iv. 11) in N.E.D.

CABRIOLET. Not (F.—L.), but (F.—Ital.—L.); as the etymology shows.

CHEEK. The N.E.D. duly gives cheek, 'insolence, jaw'; the earliest example being in 1840; at which date is also recorded the phrase to give cheek, 'to be insolent.'

The origin of this phrase is not quite obvious. Perhaps it becomes a little clearer if we note that the Bremen Wörterbuch, in the Supplement, p. 405, gives the equivalent keek, cheek, as a Lübeck word, in the phrase holt de keek, lit. hold your cheek, in the sense 'hold your mouth,' hold your jaw, shut up! The date is 1771; nearly 70 years earlier than the date above.

Thus the original idea was that of too much use of the cheek or mouth in talking; hence, chatter, prattle, unasked advice, and the like; exactly as in the case of 'jaw.'

COCKNEY. It is suggested by Prof. Weekley that there were two words of this form, which have coalesced. 1. It represents coken-ey, 'egg of cocks,' as explained at p. 118 (above), in P. Plowman, and in the Tournament of Tottenham; but this usage appears to be obsolete. 2. In the sense of 'an effeminate person,' it does not represent an OF. **coquiné* (as I proposed in the First Edition of the present work (viz. in the Supplement, at p. 785), but is to be taken as representing (with loss of initial a-, which is quite common) an OF. acoquiné, which actually occurs, and meant 'spoiled,' or 'self-indulgent.' Cotgrave has:—'Accoquiné, made tame, inward, familiar; also, grown as lazy, sloathfull, idle, as a beggar.' Also:—

'Accoquiner, to make tame, inward, familiar;' and 'S'accoquiner, to wax as lazie, become as idle, grow as sloathfull, as a beggar.' The OF. acoquiné, with loss of initial a, is closely represented by the ME. cokeney or cokenay. The original sense of this OF. word would be 'addicted to frequenting a kitchen,' or 'frequenter of a kitchen.' Allied to L. coquināre, to cook, coquinus, pertaining to a kitchen, and coquina, a kitchen (Lewis). All from L. coquere, to cook; see Cook. As to the ME. suffix -ey (-ay), we may compare attorney, from OF. atorné. As to the various senses of the word, see the exhaustive discussion by Prof. Weekley (Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909). Hence the word is to be marked as (F.—L.).

COMMIX. For (Hybrid; L. and E.) read (L.). The N.E.D. shows that commix was a back-formation from the earlier word commixt. Commix is not found before 1519; and commixt was taken immediately from L. commixtus, pp. of commiscere, to mix together; from com-, together, and miscere, to mix. See further under Mix (p. 380). And see Admix (above).

CONVEX. It is now held that L. convexus has nothing to do with the verb convohere; but rather answers to a compound of con- with **uacus*, from the root uac- which also appears in uac-illäre, to stagger. The sense would be 'bent;' cf. Skt. vak-ra-s, bent, crooked, vañch, to waver, totter, go crookedly. Closely allied to AS. wōh, bent, crooked, from a Teut. base **wanh* answering to Idg. **wank*, nasalised form of **wak*, to bend. See Woo, and Wench.

COSSACK. The earliest quotation for Cossack (spelt Cassack) given in the N.E.D. is dated 1598. The pl. Cassacks occurs three times in the Antiquarian Repertory (1808), vol. ii, 399, which quotes at length A Letter sent from the Great Turk to the Queenes Maiestee in anno 1590. The Letter speaks of 'the Theeues called Cassacks, and other like facinerosous persons.'

DANDLE. Cf. also Low G. dendeln, to sport; used as F. dandiner. It occurs in the Supp. to the Bremen Wörterbuch, with the note that it means, in particular, to dandle a child in one's arms. Berghaus gives the Low G. dündelken, dündeln, dännken, the same as G. tündeln.

DAWDL. Cf. also Low G. (Hamburg) daudeln, to waste one's time (Richey). Quoted in the Bremen Wörterbuch (Supplement). According to C. Schmidt, the Strassburg dialect has düdle, to dawdle, to lounge.

DODGE. Ross has the Norw. dogga, to maintain one's place in an open sea against wind or waves by small movements of sail or oar. This may very well be a related word. The E.D.D. gives dadge and dodge, to walk slowly and clumsily; and here again we may compare (from Ross) Norw. dagga, to go very slowly and easily.

DOG, a fire-dog, andiron. (E.) The form fire-dog is modern (1840). 'One paire of dogges in the chymly;' Unton Inventories, p. 5 (1596). Dogge is the ME. form of dog, an E. word. But the idea was suggested by MF. chenets, 'andirons;' Cot. The OF. chenet occurs in 1317, and is a dimin. of OF. chen, a dog (from L. canis). Hatzfeld says that the heads of andirons often represented the heads of dogs.

DUB. So also Low G. dubben, to knock at a door; Supp. to Bremen Wörterbuch. Berghaus has Low G. dubben, to beat; dubber, a knocker; dubbern, to strike repeatedly, to hammer.

FABRIC; 1.5. For DHAB read DHABH.

FERRULE. Spelt virole about 1410. 'La virole le mambre garde, The virole the haft kepeth;' i.e. holds fast the haft of a knife; Fémina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 48. 20.

FINIAL. It is remarked in the N.E.D. that finial is a variant of final, and, apparently, of English origin. The earliest quotation, from the Chester plays, is of uncertain date, but of about A.D. 1400. Whether it was, at the first, 'king's English' or not, we are at any rate sure that it was king's French. For in 1404 we find Henry IV using the expression 'a finiale destruccioun de son povre estat,' i.e. to the final destruction of his poor estate. See Royal Letters of Henry IV (Rolls Series), ed. Hingeston, i. 310.

FLANK. For (F.—G.) read (F.—OHG.).

FOLD (2). The orig. sense of AS. falod, falud, was a cowshed or ox-stall, or a shelter 'made with boards;' from the AS. fala, a board, plank, bar. This AS. fala is not explained in the Dictionaries, but it may be found in the Epinal Glossary. See the facsimile.

p. 27, col. 1, l. 11, which has: 'abula, fala.' This is the source of the glosses in which 'tabula' is misspelt 'tubolo'; as in 'tubolo, fala,' Voc. 52. 11; Corpus Glossary, ed. Hessels, p. 117, l. 321; Leiden Glossary, ed. Hessels, note on p. 208, s. v. tubolo. The AS. falaed is explained as 'bobellum' or 'stabulum.'

FOREHEAD. The oldest AS. form is foran-hēafod; see Sweet, O. E. Texts, p. 611.

FRAIL (2). AF. frael, W. de Bibbesworth, in Wright, Voc. i. 172; spelt ffrael in AF., and frayel in ME., in Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 79. 4-6.

FRIEZE (1). We find 'des draps appelez Friseware' in 1376-7; Statutes of the Realm, i. 398.

GAIN (2). The derivation of the OF. word from OHG. is well illustrated by the occurrence of the AF. weiner, to gain. Cf. 'chevaux et armes, or et argent weine;' i. e. they had gained horses and arms, silver and gold; Excerpta Historica, p. 71, l. 60.

GIBBON, a name for the long-armed ape. (E.) 'The Gibbon, or long-armed ape . . . is a native of the East Indies;' tr. of Buffon (1792), i. 327. The name was conferred on this ape by Buffon, who, according to Hatzfeld, had it from Dupleix. It was alleged to be an Indian word, but has not been found in any Indian language. Dupleix was in India from 1720 to 1754; and it is probable enough that he imagined gibbon to be the Indian name for the creature. I suggest that the 'Indian language' in which the name arose was certainly English, with whom the French at that time were in frequent contact and conflict. How the name came into existence we cannot tell, but that it was suggested by an Englishman (perhaps as a jest referring to a comrade) can hardly be doubted. The Prompt. Parv. has:—'Gybonn or Gylberde (Gybbon or Gylbert), propyr name, Gilbertus.' Hence Gibbon is merely an extension of Gib, the usual pet name for Gilbert. Gib was also a familiar name for a cat; cf. 'Gibbe our cat,' Romaunt of the Rose, 6204. And to this day Gib (with hard g, as in Gilbert) is a familiar name for a tom-cat in many E. dialects (E.D.D.). Any Englishman who knew this might easily suggest that, if Gib meant 'cat,' Gibbon would do for 'ape.'

GRAZE (2), to touch lightly, &c. The N.E.D. suggests that the right reading [in my l. 4] is 'like to the bullets grazing,' where bullets is plural; the sense being:—'like the bullets that graze the ground.' There can be no doubt that the original sense was 'to cut the grass,' or 'to score the grass.' Schambach gives, as a sense of Low G. grasen, 'to cut grass.' The quotations in N.E.D. show that the special sense arose from the ricocheting of cannon-balls along grass. There is a passage in Chapman, Revenge of Bussy D'Ambois, A. iv. sc. 1, that is particularly helpful:—'And as a great shot from a town besieged At foes before it flies forth black and roaring—But they too far, and that with weight oppress'd—As if disdainng earth, doth only graze, Strike earth, and up again into the air, Again sinks to it, and again doth rise,' &c.

HACKNEY. ME. hakeney is certainly from ME. Hakeney, i. e. Hackney, in Middlesex. The OF. haquenée and MF. haquenée (Cotgrave) and all the foreign forms are simply borrowed from English, which had the word first. See Fitzstephen's description of London, temp. Henry II, in Stowe's Survey of London, ed. Thoms, pp. 211, 212. The great horsemart was in Smithfield, which is still connected with Hackney by Hackney Road and Mare Street; and the pastures for horses were to the North of London (p. 209), of which Hackney Downs and London Fields are still remnants. The ME. Hakeney represents AS. Hacan iæg, 'Haca's settlement beside a stream.' Cf. Hacan pundfald, 'Haca's pound,' in a charter dated 961.

*HOG-MANAY, an old name for New Year's Eve. (L.) The N.E.D. says: 'Hogmanay corresponds exactly in sense and use to the OF. aguillanneuf, the last day of the year, new year's gift, the festival at which new year's gifts were given and asked with the shout of aguillanneuf. Of this Godefroy gives many variants.' See also the E.D.D. From the OF. hoguinané, hoguino (Godefroy); also aguilan, guillanneu, aguilloneu, haguillennef, aguillanneuf, &c.—L. hoc in anno, lit. 'in this year,' which was the original burden or chorus sung upon the occasion. In the Norman Glossary by Édélestand and Duméril (Caen, 1849), we find hoguinnètes, new year's presents, or rather, presents given on new year's eve; called hoguillanno at Caen, and hoguillanne at Saint-Lo. De Brieux has preserved for us a sort of song, without rime, which was still sung, in his time, when les hoguinnètes were asked for, hoc in anno.

Si vous veniés à la depense . . .

On vous serviroit du rost—

Hoguino !

Donnez-moi mes haguignètes . . .

Mais il est encore à payer

Haguino !

Here, in the very song itself, we first find hoc in anno spelt hoguino, and then repeated in the corrupt form haguino; as it was sung by children ignorant of Latin. Thus hoc in became aguin-, and further corruption was easy; anno was supposed to mean an neuf (new year). Hoguinané is for hoc in année; and so on. The Spanish form (borrowed from F.) is aguilando, otherwise aguinaldo. The form hogmanay may be due to the F. form hoguinané, shortened to hog'nané, with a stress on the last syllable. Jamieson quotes the Scotch form as being so pronounced; as in—'The cottar weanies, glad and gay, Wi' pocks out owre their shouter, Sing at the doors for hógmandy.'

HOGSHEAD. I find an early spelling not noted in the N.E.D. 'In duobus hogsheveds vini albi,' occurring in 1437; see Brand, Pop. Antiquities (1849), ii. 75, note. The spelling heved affords a clear proof that the latter element is really the mod. E. head.

HUZZA! The earliest quotation in the N.E.D. is dated 1573. There is an instance twelve years earlier in the second edition (1807) of Grose's Antiquarian Repository, vol. i, p. 236. We there find a speech made at a dinner given at Norwich in 1561. It is said that on that occasion one Johnny Martin, of Norwich, proposed the health of the mayor whilst he could still 'speak plain English,' and before the beer, which 'is pleasant and potent . . . catch us by the caput, and stop our manners. And so huzza for the Queen's Majesty's grace, and all her bonny-browed dames of honour! Huzza for Master Mayor, and our good dame Mayoress!'

ISING-GLASS. The earliest quotation in the N.E.D. is dated 1545. It occurs in 1528 in some accounts printed in Excerpta Antiqua, by J. Croft, p. 84; and again in 1530, in the same, p. 91. The same substance is mentioned by the name of husglass (which is nearer to the original) as early as 1371 (N. and Q. 10 S. x. 411).

KERSEY. The statement in the N.E.D. that there is nothing to connect cloth-making with Kersey, in Suffolk, is due to oversight. The fact is, rather, that there was once a large cloth-trade carried on in the south of Suffolk. In A Breviary of Suffolk, by Robert Reyce, written in 1618, and edited by Lord F. Harvey, stress is laid upon 'the excellent commoditie of clothing, which of long time hath here flourished . . . hee who maketh ordinarily twenty broad clothes every weeke, cannot sett so few a-woke as 500 persons.' In Hall's Chronicle (Henry VIII, year 17, § 8) we read how an attempt to raise a heavy subsidy failed, owing to the opposition of the 'riche Clothiers' of Suffolk, who told 'their Spinners, Carders, Fullers, Weavers, and other artificers' that they would be unable to pay them wages if the subsidy was granted; so that the men of 'Lanam [Lavenham], Sudbury, Hadley, and other townes aboute' (which would include Lindsey and Kersey) rebelled to the number of 'four thousand men.' In Skelton's Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 128, he refers to 'a webbe of lylse-wulse' (see note on Linsie-Woolsey below); and at l. 930, he speaks of 'Good Sprynge of Lanam,' i. e. Lavenham, who 'must counte what became Of his clothe makynge.' Dyce's note on the latter line refers to Stowe's Annales, ed. 1615, p. 525, where we read that 'the rich clothiers, Spring of Lanam and other, had given over occupying,' i. e. had ceased to employ men, when the disturbances arose in 1525 (as above).

LASCAR. Not directly from Persian; but Portuguese from Persian. The Port. form is lascar or lascarim (Vieyra).

LECHER. The OF. lecheor (Godefroy) was Latinised as leccator, lit. 'a lick of dishes,' hence a 'ribald' or ruffian, one of the unscrupulous hangers-on who attached themselves to medieval households and were of ill repute. Cotgrave has lescheur, 'a lick, a licorous companion.' Cf. MDu. leckaert, 'a lick of dishes'; lecker, 'a liquorish or a daintie-mouthed man'; Hexham. See leccator in Ducange.

LINSIE-WOOLSEY. Probably named after the stuff called Linsey, spelt lynese as early as 1435-6. In any case, linsie-woolsey (and probably also linsey) was really named from the place now called Lindsey, in Suffolk, which is but two miles from Kersey, whence Kersey cloth took its name. This is proved by the fact that Skelton, in Why Come ye Nat to Courte, l. 128, has the form Lylse-wulse; and Dr. Copinger, in his Collections for Suffolk, gives Lynsey, Lylsey, and Lelesey as old forms of Lindsey. The form Lelesey occurs in Inquis. post Mortem, anno 1314-15. See note just above, on Kersey.

MAKE, verb. The AS. macian, a weak verb, seems to be a derivative from an adj. of which the Teut. type is **makoz*, 'suitable, fitting,' or 'joined together,' as seen in AS. gemæc, Icel. makr, suitable; whence also AS. maca, a companion, and E. match. See Match (1).

MALL (2). For (F.—L.) read (F.—Ital.—L.).

MANCHET. Also spelt mainchet; Caxton, in his Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 68, has 'a copel of maynchettis.' I accept the etymology proposed in N.E.D., viz. from maine, an epithet of bread of the finest quality, and chet, an epithet of bread of second or ordinary quality; see Cheat, sb. (2) in N.E.D. Perhaps both forms are docked. Maine is short for demaine, as in pain demaine, representing L. pānis dominicus, 'lord's bread'; see my note on Chaucer, C. T., B 1915. Chet occurs in 'Manchet and chet bred'; Babees Book, p. 315, l. 501, and perhaps means 'bought bread,' as distinguished from home-made bread; from OF. achet, 'a bargain or purchase, or thing bought or purchased'; Cot. Thus 'manchet bread' may be the best quality of bought bread. See further under Demesne and Cates.

MARMALADE. The oldest quotation for marmalade in the N.E.D. is dated 1533; but there is a note to say that it is referred to in 1524. But we have a clear example of its occurrence in 1514. In the Rutland Papers (Camden Soc., 1842), at p. 27, we find, among the provisions made for the marriage of Princess Mary, daughter of Henry VII:—'Item, a boxe of Codignac charē de qwyne marmelade.'

MAT. See mattia in Walde's Lat. Etym. Dict., where it is suggested that the Semitic form is exemplified by the Heb. matīāh [where the t is teth], a portable bed, lit. 'a thing spread out'; from the verb nātāh, to spread out. The form of the root may account for the by-form nattia.

*MOUCH. to play truant, to loiter. (F.—Teut.) The N.E.D. quotes from Mabbe's tr. of Aleman's Guzman de Alfarache (1622), ii. 289:—'Wee . . . runne a-mouching eyther to our Aunts house, or to our grandfathers.'—ONorth F. muchier, mucher; MF. mucier, musser, 'to hide, keep close, lurke, skowke, or squat in a corner'; Cot.; mod. F. musser.—OHG. mūhhōn, to hide, to lie in wait for and steal; cf. prov. G. maucheln, to conceal, cheat, G. meuchel-mörder, a secret murderer. Idg. root **meug*, to hide; as in OIrish for-muigthe, hidden. See Mich.

MUMMER. The statement, in l. 6, that mommerye and mommyng occur in Trevisa, is mistaken. They occur in Caxton's translation of Higden, which is later than Trevisa's, viz. ab. 1482. However, mummyng occurs in the Prompt. Parv. (1440).

NESS. a promontory. The AS. ness or næss answers to a Teut. type **nas-joz*. The long grade occurs in L. nās-us, nose; the weak grade occurs in the Teut. type **nās-ā*, AS. nosu, nose. See Streitberg, Urgan. Gr., p. 69. See Nose.

NOTE. The etymology of L. nota is doubtful. Walde rejects all connexion with L. noscere, and, seeing that nota sometimes has an ill sense, as meaning 'a mark of infamy,' proposes to connect it (as Prellwitz does) with the Gk. ὀνοτός, ὀνοστός, blameworthy, and ὀνοτάζω, ὀνομαί, I blame.

OBLITERATE. The earliest example in N.E.D. is dated 1600. But it occurs in Hall's Chronicle (half a century earlier), according to Ellis's reprint. 'Neither fyre, rust, nor frettyng tynne [error for tyme] shal amongst Englishmen ether appall his honoure or obliterate his glorye.'—King Henry V, 10th year, last paragraph.

OBSCENE. Walde gives a simple derivation of the Latin obscaenus from obs-, prefix, 'near,' and caenum, 'mud'; so that it meant 'muddy,' or 'covered with mud.' The prefix obs- occurs in os-tendere, where os- stands for ops, the original form of obs.

OFFICE. Walde explains L. officium as from opi-ficium (for **opi-faciom*); from opi- (for opus), work, and fac-ere, to do. In fact, the spelling opificium occurs (Lewis and Short); as well as opificina (for officina); cf. opi-fex, a worker. See Operate.

ORIEL. a recess (with a window) in a room. (F.—L.—Gk.) From OF. oriol, a porch, gallery, corridor (Godefroy). Prof. Weekley (in Phil. Soc. Trans., 1909) makes the excellent suggestion that the OF. form represents the Late L. auleolum, which Ducange gives as a derivative from L. aula, a court of a house, and (in Late L.) a hall. Ducange explains auleolum as 'sacellum,' a small chapel. We might well suppose that auleolum could mean 'a recess in a hall'; and it would pass into OF. as oriol, by natural dissimilation from **oliol* or **oleol*. If this be right, oriel is ultimately from L. aula, which is not a true L. word, but borrowed from Gk. αὐλή, a courtyard, hence a court, a hall.

OSTRICH. The very form ostrichē occurs in Old French; see Poems of W. Mapes, ed. Wright, Camden Soc., p. 319, col. 1, st. 2.

PAINTER. (see p. 423). It seems certain, from the examples in the N.E.D., that painter is a mispronunciation, due to association with the ordinary word signifying 'one who paints.' The right form is penter, as in 1671. It is from the OF. pentoir, also spelt pentour; the latter form is given by Ducange under the L. form pentorium, which is short for Late L. penditorium, orig. a perch to hang clothes upon to dry (Ducange); from L. pendere, to hang. Godefroy gives OF. pendoir, pendoer, pentoir, a perch to hang clothes on, a suspender for keys, a suspender of a sword from a sword-belt, a pot-hook, a strong rope. Moisy gives Norm. dial. pentoir, one of two poles placed at the two sides of a window to hang clothes on that have just been dyed. That penter is the right E. form is corroborated by the fact that it is accurately represented (as a borrowed word) by the Norw. penta, a sprit with which a sail is spread out, a rope or a cord to fasten a sail with. This has the double sense, viz. of the Norm. dial. pentoir, and of the OF. pentoir, a strong rope; see Aasen. Ross explains Norw. penta as a rope attached to the side of a sail for keeping the sail close-hauled. Godefroy further gives, in his Supplement, under the heading pendeur (though both of his examples have pentoir), the explanation—a marine term, ropes supporting a pulley, tackle. Thus we see that the sense was transferred from that of 'clothes-perch' to 'clothes-line,' and thence to a cord for various uses. It is now the E. painter, commonly restricted in sense to the cord that hangs down from the bow of a boat, and is used for securing it. It has nothing to do with the ME. panter, as suggested at p. 423.

PATE. It has been suggested to me that the substitution of pate for plate may have been due to Walloon influence, since (near Lille) they say patel for platel; note that De Bo gives the W. Flemish form pateel for Du. plateel, a dish; and Remacle gives the Walloon form pu for F. plus. Hexham, on the contrary, gives MDu. plattijnen as a by-form of pattijnen, in the sense of 'wooden shoes or pattens.'

PIER. The AS. per, pere (nom. per, acc. peran), is in a late MS., and merely used to represent a Late L. pera (ab. 1150). The latter is merely the AF. pere, a stone, done into Latin. The statement in the N.E.D. that the derivation of pera from OF. piere does not satisfy the phonetics is beside the mark; for the AF. form is really pere, a stone, from L. petra. La pere means stones from a quarry; see Chardry, La Vie des Set Dormans, 1018. Cf. 'les murs de haut pere taile,' and again—'Et des gros peres qe urent assez plente,' Excerpta Historica, p. 73, ll. 121, 125. And the pl. peres, stones, occurs thrice on one page; see Langtoft, i. 124. See six more examples in the Vie de S. Auban.

POLONY. The derivation from Bologna is made quite certain by a passage in the old play entitled Lord Cromwell, A. iii. sc. 2; pr. in 1602. The scene is laid at Bononia, i. e. Bologna; and in the course of the scene Hodge reads out a letter:—'I am at this present writing among the Polonian sasiges.' Chapman refers to 'Bologna sausages' in A. iii. of his play called The Ball.

PONY. Well illustrated by comparing the MF. poulener, 'to fole as a mare'; Supplement to Palsgrave, p. 952, col. 3.

POUR. For (F.—L.) read (L.). The OF. pur would only give pure, not pour. The difficulty as to the vowel-sound is solved at once by the supposition that pour was not borrowed from OF., but taken immediately from the Late L. pūrāre; i. e. that it was a word of direct monkish origin. The monks were skilled in simple culinary arts. The development is precisely like that of E. dour from L. dūrus, hard (N.E.D.); or of E. sour from AS. sūr. Hence the old pronunciation of pour was really power, as in Pope and Gay (p. 469). So also scour, from L. excūrāre; see Scour (1).

PRIMROSE. Cf. 'Ou de quylor la primerole, other to gadere the primerose,' Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 47, 19.

PRIVET. The statement (in ll. 10–13) that the form primet occurs in the Grete Herball, turns out to be due to a mistake; for no such form occurs there. This leaves the etymology very uncertain; the word cannot be said to be satisfactorily accounted for.

PRUNE (1), to trim trees. The last section (§ 7) of the article is wrong. No doubt prune is derived (as said) from the OF. proignier (Godefroy), to prune, Norman dial. prognier (Moisy); but there we must stop. Godefroy is wrong in identifying these with F. provigner, as that is quite another word, with the very different sense of 'to extend by layers, to propagate'; from the F. sb. provin, as said at p. 487. Sir James Murray has pointed this out to me, and gives the probable origin of the OF. proignier in the N.E.D. Most likely, it represents a Late L. form **prōvineāre*, to tend a vineyard; from the prefix prō- and Late L. vineāre, to plant a vineyard (Ducange), from vineā, a vine-yard, a vine. See Vine.

QUILL (2). The note on in the quill is illustrated by the occurrence of the AF. qillir (written for quillir) as a variant of OF. cuillir, to collect. It occurs in the Assault of Massoura, l. 346; see Excerpta Historica, p. 80.

*RATHE, a cart-rail; see N.E.D. (E.) Also rade; and even rave (with v for voiced th). Cf. AS. wæn-gehrado, translating 'tabula plaustrī'; Voc. 267, 33. Probably allied to Hurdle and Crate.

RIME (1). The N.E.D. gives the earliest spelling with rh from Cooper's Thesaurus (1565), which has: 'Rhythmus, . . . meeter, rhyme.' The earliest example of the spelling rhyme is dated 1610; the spelling rythme occurs earlier, ab. 1557. All later than 1550. As late as 1660, an edition of Cotgrave translates F. rithme by 'Rime, or meeter'; and Sherwood's Index to the same has—'A rime or meeter, Rime, rithme, ryme,' and again—'To rime, rimer, rithmer, rymer, rimonner, rimoyer.'

RUSH (2). The common word rush, as the name of a water-plant, is of doubtful origin. I cannot accept the usual explanation, which quotes the AS. form as rysc, and tells us that it is no native word, but a mere adaptation of the Latin ruscum, which means 'butcher's broom.'

It is difficult to see why we should resort to Latin for the name of a plant so extremely common; nor is it at all easy to see why the butcher's broom should have been selected as a type of it.

But the fact is, that the AS. rysc, though it accounts for the modern rush, is by no means the only or the commonest form. The forms in the dialects are very variable; besides rush, we find also rash, resh, and rish, and the Southern forms rax and rex. There is no possibility of extracting rash, resh, and rish out of a single form such as ruscum. The very variableness of the forms suggests a Teutonic gradation, such as we find in the AS. brecan, to break, with its pt. t. bræc, pp. brocen, and the derivative which appears in ME. as brukel and brokel. I would propose to connect it with the adjective rash, and to explain it as 'the plant which quickly springs up and is of slender growth.' For it is very remarkable that this adjective likewise shows similar changes of form. The Ger. rasch appears in OHG. not only as rasc, but varies in MHG. to resch and risch, and even to rosch. The oldest form of 'rush' in AS. is actually risc (as in OE. Texts); and this I would set beside the E. Friesic adj. risk, which Koolman explains by 'risc, aufrecht, gerade, schlank, frisch,' i. e. quick, upright, straight, slender, fresh; the very qualities of the common rush. Cf. Hannover risc, a rush. Lübben actually gives the Low G. rusch, explained by 'rasch, schnell;' also rusch, a rush.

RUSTLE. Probably a native word; cf. OMerican ruxlende (or ruxlende), 'making a noise;' Matt. ix. 23 (Rushworth gloss). For **hruxlende*; allied to AS. hryscan (or hryscan), to roar; see under Rush (1). Cf. AS. gehruxl (or gehruxl), a tumult (Bosworth); also Goth. hrukjan, to crow; Gk. κρῆνῆ, clamor. See L. cornix in Walde. See the long note by Max Förster on AS. gehruxl, tumult; in Englische Studien, xxxix. 344.

SASH (2). But according to the N.E.D., the word is not of Persian, but of Arabic origin; viz. from Arab. shāsh, muslin, turban-sash (Dozy). Gesenius gives Heb. shesh, fine linen (Gen. xli. 42); which he supposes to be of Egyptian origin.

SCURF. The corresponding native E. word appears in ME. shorf, occurring as a gloss to AF. royne, F. rogne; Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 50. 5.

SHARK. A good example of the North F. cherquier or cherquer occurs in the future tense cherqueray, in the Vows of the Heron, pr. in Political Poems, ed. Wright, i. 16.

SKILLET (1), a small pot. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) The derivation of this word, as given at p. 566, is probably wrong, though it has been frequently given. Prof. Weekley points out that it was rightly explained by the editor of the Catholicon Anglicum (dated 1483). At p. 341 of that work we find:—'Skele, [h]emicadium;' and the note says that skele is the same as the prov. E. skeel, a milk-pail, a dairy-vessel (see E.D.D.): 'From this word we have the dimin. skillet, a little pot or pan, also still in use.' At p. 240 of the Catholicon we find:—'A milke-skele, mulgarium, multrale, multrarium.' The mod. E. ee (ME. ē) answers to AS. eo and Icel. jō; hence the derivation is from Icel. skjōla, a pail, bucket, of which Vigfusson notes that it is the same as 'the North E. and Scot. skeel or skell, a milk-pan.' Skillet (also skellet) is a diminutive; the F. dimin. suffix -et may easily have been suggested (as Prof. Weekley says) by association with the word posnet, also a dialectal word with the sense of 'iron pot' or 'saucepan.' The Icel. skjōla appears in the Swed. dialects as skjula and skyla (Rietz). The form of the root is SKEU; so that skeel cannot be in any way allied to scale and shell.

SKILLET (2), SKELLAT, a little bell, a hand-bell, an iron rattle. (F.—Teut.) See E.D.D. and Jamieson.—OF. esquilette (cited by Prof. Weekley), variant of eschelette, 'a little hand-bell, such as cryers use,' Cotgrave. Dimin. of OF. esquille, esquelle, eschele, a bell (Godefroy). Of Teut. origin; from OHG. scella, MHG. schelle, a bell, which is from the strong verb scellan, skellan, to resound; cf. MDu. schelle, 'a small bell' (Hexham), schellen, to ring a bell; Icel. skella, a rattle to scare horses, skella, to clash; allied to the Icel. strong verb skjalla, AS. scellan, to resound, clash. All from Teut. SKEL, to resound.

SQUASH. It is satisfactory to find that the AF. esquasser had the sense of crush or squash, and suffices to account for the modern form. In 'The Assault of Massoura,' l. 128, we read how the Saracens attacked some English knights, 'et des marteaux pesanz les noz esquasserent,' i. e. and beat our men down with heavy hammers. See the Excerpta Historica, p. 73.

SQUIRT. The quotation from de Bibbesworth, viz. bilaggid wit swirting, means, literally, dirtied with splashing. In the No-minale, l. 408, the corresponding passage has besquireid, a scribal error for besquirted; for there is also a corresponding passage in Femina, ed. W. Aldis Wright, 78. 13, which reads al by-squyr, and (four lines below) he hath many of squyrtis, i. e. of splashes.

*STALEMATE, a position (in chess) in which a player, whose king is not in check, is unable to move any piece. (F.—OHG.) First explained by me in Phil. Soc. Trans., 1906. 'They stand at a stay; like a stale at Chesse, where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stirre;' Bacon, Essay 12. 'For under cure I gat sik chek Quhilk I nicht nocht remuif nor nek [prevent] Bot [without] eythir stail or mait;' Montgomery, Cherrie and the Slae, 216 (1597). Cf. ME. stal, a fixed position; Layamon's Brut, l. 1671. From OF. estal, a fixed position, as in prendre estal, to take up a fixed position against attack; cf. en estal, à estal, in the same place, in a firm position, estre à estal, to stand firm. See Chanson de Roland, 1108, 2139.—OHG. stal, a stall, fixed place; cognate with E. stall; see Stall and Mate (2).

*STANIEL, a kestrel, a kind of hawk. (E.) It occurs in Lady Alimony, sign. B 1 (Nares); and has been proposed as a reading in Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 124. Prov. E. stannel, stanyel, stanchel, stone-gall (E.D.D.). Corruptly, stand-gale, from its hovering in the wind; for which reason it is also called wind-hover. AS. stān-gella, lit. 'yeller from the rock.' It frequents rocks, and has a resonant voice. See Stone and Yell.

STRAND (2), part of a rope. Add, that the spelling strand also occurs in Hakluyt, Voyages, iii. 847.

SULLEN. Prof. Weekley regards sullen as a doublet of solemn; for reasons which do not convince me. I can find no connexion of form between the ME. solein, soulein, solitary (as in 'In soulein place, be miselwe,' Gower, C. A., vi. 135) and the ME. solémpne, sollémpne (as in 'With a sollémpne sacrifice' in the same, vii. 4703). Nor do I regard the OF. solemne, solenne, 'solemn,' as a 'learned' form; cf. Ital. solenne, solemn, which could not have a doublet of the form solano. More light is, no doubt, desired; but I adhere (for the present) to a connexion between sullen and the L. sōlus, 'sole.' For examples of AF. soulein, solein, soulain (four times), meaning 'alone,' and soule, 'alone,' see Gower's French Works, ed. Macaulay.

TAINT, a stain; to stain, infect. (F.—L.) The various senses are best understood by observing the note upon Attaint in the N.E.D., in place of which taint was frequently used. 'Attaint, pp., ME. ateynt, ataynt, adapted from OF. ateint, ataint, pp. of OF. ateindre, to attain; formed like teindre, pp. teint, joindre, pp. joint, and not from L. attactus. Hence, erroneously Latinised in med. L. as attinctus, and referred (in England at least) to L. tinctus, "died, stained," an etymological fancy which warped the meaning of the word and its derivatives.' We may say that taint may almost always be ultimately referred to this Late L. attinctus, and is therefore from the verb to attain, i. e. from L. attingere, compounded of ad and tangere. But we cannot leave L. tinctus out of the account, because there is no instance in which the original verb attain has the sense 'to infect.' See the note on Attaint (p. 777).

TARN. Properly a 'separate' pool, without inlet or outlet. Cf. W. darn, a fragment, piece torn off, from the ✓DER, to tear.

*TARRIER, TERRIER, a kind of auger. (F.—C.) Halliwell gives 'Terrier, an auger.' In London, a tarrier (in the oil trade) is a kind of triple auger, resembling three tapering corkscrews united at the tops and arranged so that each is at an angle of 120 degrees from the other; used for extracting shives (or wooden bungs) from barrels of turpentine.—MF. tariere, 'an auger;' Cot.; terriere, 'a terrier, or auger;' id. Cf. OF. taredre, later tarere; tarere is in the Supplement to Godefroy; taredre is in 'Les Gloses Françaises de Gerschom de Metz,' par L. Brandin, Paris, 1902; no. 101, at p. 70. From Low L. taratrum (Ducange).—OIrish tarathar, 'terebra,' Windisch; cf. W. taradr, an auger. A genuine Celtic word, cognate with L. terebrā, Gk. τέρερον, a borer, from L. terere, to bore, Gk. τέλειν, to rub away.

TESTAMENT. The L. testis, a witness, has lost an r, and stands for **trestis*; as shown by the Oscan tristaamentud, 'testamento.' Allied to **tristos*, parallel to OIrish tress, 'third,' ordinal of tri, three. The orig. sense was therefore 'third man' or 'odd man;' see Umpire. (So Brugmann, Walde).

TOMAHAWK. 'From Renâpe of Virginia tāmāhāk, an apocopated form of tāmāhakan, (what is) used for cutting, a cutting utensil; from tāmāhakeu, he uses for cutting, from tāmāham, he cuts. A name applied by the Renâpe Indians, among whom the English settled in 1607, to a stone ax or hatchet employed as a weapon and as an implement for chopping wood.'—W. R. Gerard, in The American Anthropologist, Vol. 10, no. 2; 1908.

WORSTED. Mentioned as early as 1293. In the Camden Miscellany, vol. ii. p. 13, we find 'Pro xj. ulnis de wrsted,' under the date Friday, May 1, 1293.
